their recourse to the Fountaine (of the Scriptures) and keepe not the Rules giuen by the Heauenlie Teacher: For, saith he, that is not Peace, but Warre: neither is he ioined vnto the Church, which is seuered from the Gospel. As for these men they vse to make a Marchandize of the name of Peace. For that Peace, which they so faine would haue, is only a rest of idle bellies. They and we might easily be brought to attonement, touching all these matters, were it not that ambition, gluttony & excesse doth let it. Hence commeth their whining: their hart is on their halfepenny. Out of doubt their clamors and stirres be to none other end, but to maintaine more shamefully and naughtily ill gotten goods.

1. Tim. 6. Now adaies the Pardoners complaine of vs, the Dataries, the Popes Collectors, the Bawds, and others which think gaine to be godlines, and serue not Iesus Christ, but their own bellies. Many a day agoe, and in the old World, a wonderfull great aduantage grew heereby to these kindes of people. But now they reckon al is lost vnto them that Christ gaineth. The Pope himselfe maketh a great complaint at this present, that Charity in people is waxen cold. And why so, trow ye? Forsooth because his profits decay more and more. And for this cause doth hee hale vs into hatred, al that euer he may, laying load vpon vs with despightfull railings, and condemning vs for Heretikes, to the end, they that vnderstand not the matter, may thinke there be no worse men vpon Earth, then we be. Notwithstanding, in the meane season we are not ashamed in this behalfe: neither ought we to be ashamed of the Gospel. For we set more by the glory of God, then we doe by the estimation of men. We are sure, all is true that we teach, and we may not either goe against our owne conscience, or beare any witnesse against God. For if we deny any part of the Gospell of Iesus Christ before men, he on the other side will deny vs before his Father. And if there be any, that will still be offended and cannot endure Christs Doctrine, such say wee, be blinde and leaders of the blinde: the Truth neuertheless must be preached and preferred aboue all: and we must with patience wait for Gods iudgement.

Let these folke in the meane time, take good heed what they doe, and let them be well aduised of their own Saluation, and cease to hate and persecute the Gospel of the Sonne of God, for feare lest they feele him once a redresser & reuenger of his own cause. God will not suffer himselfe to be made a mocking stocke. The World espieth a good while agoe, what there is a doing abroad. This flame the more it is kept downe, so much the more with greater force & strength doth it breake out and flie abroad. The vnfaithfulnesse of men shall not disapoint Gods faithfull promise. And if they shall refuse to lay away this their hardnesse of heart, and to receiue the Gospel of Christ, then shall Publicanes, and sinners goe before them into the Kingdome of Heauen.

God and the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ, open the eies of them all, that they may be able to see that blessed hope, whereunto they haue been called: so as we may together in one, glorifie him alone, who is the true God, and also that same Iesus Christ, whom he sent downe to vs from Heauen: vnto whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, bee giuen all Honour and Glory Euerlastingly. So be it.

FINIS.

To M. Harding.

IT appeareth, M. Harding, by that yee haue lately ſent vs ouer, and ſpecially by the vnpleaſant verdure of your ſpeech, that my Reply hath ſomwhat diſordered your quiet minde. Which thing notwithſtanding I might eaſily haue gheſſed, was not vnlikely to come to paſſe, ſpecially, being before not vtterly vnskilfull of your affections: Yet as I haue neuer ſought to write any thing, that of purpoſe and iuſtly might offend you, (the right of the cauſe and defence of the truth euermore forepriſed) euen ſo am I now right ſorry, to ſee you ſo vnable to maſter your paſsions, and ſo vnaduiſedly to make them open to ſo many. If it grieue you in reſpect of your credit, for that I haue thus diſcouered your errors; that was your fault, it was not mine. If yee had not made your errors knowen, they ſhould neuer of my part, haue beene diſcouered. If you knew how ſorry I am in your behalfe, ye would not ſo impatiently be offended.

It miſliketh you, that I haue alleged ſo many Doctors and Councels, and as you ſay, haue ſo ambitiouſly painted my Margine with ſo many Authorities, both Greeke and Latine. Yet you for your part haue not ſpared, ouer and beſides theſe two tongues, to paint your Margine for a ſurcharge, with words in Hebrew: beſides other ſuch rankes of your Engliſh Scholies, ſo many, ſo thicke, and ſo cloſſe together, that it were a hard matter, to force in one word of Truth to ſtand amongſt them. It is no courteous dealing, M. Harding, to reproue that in others, that you ſo commonly doe your ſelfe.

If the number of Doctours haue offended you, I doe not maruell: A cowardly challenger would alwaies wiſh the Defendant to come vnarmed vnto the fight. If I had alleged either no Doctours at all, or nothing to purpoſe, as your wont commonlie is to doe, yee would haue borne it a great deale better. Howbeit my authorities of Doctours and Councels be they neuer ſo many, yet as you haue vſed them, are few enow. For of the whole number, by your good skill, more then three parts are left vntouched And indeed this was the wiſeſt way. Children where they cannot read thinke it beſt to skippe ouer.

Whereas I examine and lay abroad all the parts and branches of your Arguments, and ſhew how directly ye grow to your Concluſions, that your Reader may ſee, by what weapons ye ſeeke to maſter him, this you ſay, is a kind of ſcoffing. Yee tell me, I rake and alter, and abuſe your Arguments, and play with ſhadowes of mine own. But M. Harding, if ye will haue your Arguments to paſſe ſmoothly without controulement; then learne henceforth to make them better. Ye are ouer-tender, if ye looke to ſpeake what ye liſt, and yet to heare nothing but to your liking: and to ſend abroad ſuch ſimple wares to ſerue the people, and yet may ſuffer no man to tell you of it. Verily, where ye ſay, I haue of purpoſe changed your Arguments, if ye make them otherwiſe then I haue made them, hauing alwaies an eie vnto your Concluſion, ye ſhall be forced to make them worſe. Touching the Scoffes, wherewith ye finde your ſelfe ſo much agreeued, doubtleſſe, who ſo had that grace that is in you, as may well appeare thorowout all your Bookes, might ſoon deſerue to be called a Scoffer.

Where you ſay, you and your Fellowes haue eſpied a thouſand foule great lies in my writings: had not one of you been a great Father of Lies, yee could neuer haue hit ſo readilie vpon the number. Such an auditor, I trow, was hee that found vs out eleuen thouſand lies in Sleidans ſtorie. The verie true multitude heereof and the hugeneſſe of the heape, as it bewraieth well your ſtomacke, ſo in any indifferent iudgement, it decaieth the credit of your reckoning. A man may reſonablie thinke it is as poſsible to finde two hundred and fiftie Vntruths in your Booke, as in mine to finde a thouſand.

Laurent. Surius Carthuſian. in præfat. in Nauclerum.

Verilie,

Verily, as I neuer minded to defend any thing, whatſoeuer that in any my writings ſhall be found amiſſe, ſo I ſee by the view of your accounts, it were no hard matter with your eies to finde Vntruthes in the Goſpell. For whatſoeuer I ſay, be it neuer ſo true, yet if it like not your taſte, it is a lie. Whatſoeuer I allege or tranſlate, it is corupted. So euill is my lucke; I can touch nothing, but it is either too much or too little, or too ſhort or too long; or too blacke or too white; or one way or other it ſtandeth awrie. If I tranſlate

M. Harding, Reioinder, Fol. 203. b.

Nonnulli Sacerdotes, Sundrie Prieſts, ye cry out, a corrupter, a falſary. I ſhould haue ſaid, Certaine Prieſts: or Some Prieſts: but I ſhould not in any wiſe haue ſaid, Sundry Prieſts, for that were an Hereſie.

M. Harding, Reioinder, Fol. 115. b.

If I tranſlate ὁμοτρόφους, Vnà nutritos, Fed together, yee tell the World, it is falſhood it is foule corruption. Thus ye ſay, I ſhould haue tranſlated it, Eodem Cibo alitos: Fed with one kinde of Meat: as if ὁμοῦ in Greeke, were not Vnà in Latine, or had not relation to the place. Deale herein with your friends, M. Harding, as you may: the Greeke Reader will allow you no ſuch tranſlations. If I happen to ſay, M Harding ſaith, The thing that we receiue in the Sacrament is no Bread, ye cry Alarma; Looke, ye ſay, in my Booke, Reader: M. Iewel is an vntrue man: Here he is taken with a lie: Marke well: I ſay, it is not Bread: I ſay not, It is no Bread, Not Bread, ye ſay, No Bread, ye ſay not. As if there were ſo many miles diſtance betweene No and Not.

M. Harding, Reioinder, Fol. 163. b.

Theſe and ſuch like be the ſhamefull Vntruthes and horrible Lies, that you and your Fellowes with great ſeeking and diligence haue eſpied. And thus if a man happen to vſe Enſis for Gladius, or Nam for Enim, or Que for Et, ye thinke it cauſe ſufficient to make a Tragedie. Howbeit, I doubt not, but in my reply, being ſo long, and ſo full of neceſſaray allegations, ye may happen to find ſome ouerſights of greater importance. And in acknowledging and reforming of the ſame, ye ſhall finde me as ſharpe and eager as your ſelfe. But theſe few examples I haue touched by the way, that it might appeare, how inquiſitiue and fierce ye are to ſeeke occaſions: and that your Reader may ſee, ye hunt wantonlie and run riot, and open oft times without a cauſe. Yet notwithſtanding if ye can tell vs ſadlie, as your maner is, that M. Iewell bringeth trifling obiections and traſh, and pelfe, and nothing to purpoſe without learning, without reaſon, without wit; that he racketh, that he ſtretcheth, that he wringeth, that he wreſteth, that he nippeth and clippeth the Doctors and Councels: (for theſe be the words whereby ye thought yee might beſt vtter your pretty fanſies:) if ye can cry out falſe parts, falſe reports, falſe dealings, falſe Merchants, falſe ballance, falſe dice, and all is falſe: If yee can ſay, Lo, Sir Defender, ye wrangle, ye trifle, ye are taken tardy, ye haue proued nothing, ye haue nothing to anſwer: If ye can thus ſay, and ſay it boldly, it ſhall be ſufficient, all is ſafe: your friends will thinke ye haue ſaid ſomewhat, and that ye would neuer haue framed ſuch a countenance to ſay nothing.

Ye tell vs ful often, we are no Biſhops. I trow, for that we haue not ſworne our obedience to the Pope. And therefore ye giue the world to vnderſtand, we can conſecrate no Miniſters, we can hold no Synods, we can do nothing. Euen ſo certaine your Forefathers in Olde times told S. Paul, He was no Apoſtle, and others afterward by like authoritie told S. Baſil and S. Hilary, they were no Biſhops. But, M. Harding, they were Falſe Apoſtles, they were Arian Heretikes that ſo told them. It booteth not to trie our titles before you. We will onely ſay with S. Paul: By the grace of God we are that we are. And we truſt we haue not his Grace in vaine.

2. Cor. 9.

1. Cor. 15.

But ſpecially and aboue all other things, and that thorowout all your three Bookes yee ſay, that Sir Defender is vnlearned: that his beſt skill is in a few figures of Rhetorick: that he hath neither Greeke, nor Logike, nor Philoſophie, nor Diuinity: that hee hath read no kind of Doctours, nor New, nor Old, nor of his owne, nor of others: that all the furniture of his Booke was brought to his hand, ſome by Greeke Readers, ſome by Schoolemaſters, ſome by Ciuilians, ſome by Canoniſts, ſome by Summiſts, ſome by Gloſſers, ſome by others: that he hath nothing elſe but patched Note-bookes, huddled together by ſnaps and pecces. Some part heeerof, or rather the whole altogether, without exception, to doe you pleaſure, I would eaſilie haue granted you, M. Harding, vpon ſmal

M. Hard. Confutat. 214. a. & 259. a. And commonly in other places.

ſute,

ſute, with more fauour and leſſe adoe. Take from mee what learning ye liſt; diſtraine it and pound it at your pleaſure, I will neuer trouble you with Repleuin. Howbeit, if yee vtter all this of your indifferent iudgement and certaine knowledge, yet is it impertinent; for wee pleaded of Faith, and not of Learning; if otherwiſe yee ſpeake it of heat of minde, and abundance of choler, and thereupon thus proclaime it to the World, it is great folly. Truly yee neuer ſaw Sir Defenders Bookes, nor neuer ſet your foot within his ſtudy. A wiſe Iudge will ſeldome pronounce before hee know. If it ſhall pleaſe you, for triall hereof, to ſend your friend, hee may happily ſee that Sir Defender hath all theſe Summiſts, and Canoniſts, and Greeke-readers, and Schoolmaſters of his owne.

Notwithſtanding, it may become vs both to ſay, as a Heathen wiſe man ſometime ſaid: This onely thing wee know, that wee know nothing. Gods truth dependeth not of our knowledge. Our tongues ſhall ceaſe, and our knowledge ſhall faile: but the Glory of God ſhall ſtand for euer. For my part, I will ſay to you with S. Auguſtine: Quære doctiores: ſed caue præſumptores: Seeke others of more learning: but beware of them that preſume of learning. If any praiſe fall out in this reſpect, beſtow it freely vpon your Greeke-readers and Schoolemaſters, who in your iudgement haue beſt deſerued it. It ſhall be ſufficient for mee to haue ſaid the truth; which though it appeare neuer ſo ſimple, yet is able to remoone a Mountaine of Learning. But happie are your Brethren of Louaine, that are ſo ſpeedilie growen Learned vpon the ſudden, not by great ſtudie, I trow, but rather by deſtinie. As ſoone as they had once ſauoured the ſoile of that Countrey; they lookt onely vpon two poore Titles of the Law, De Maledicis, and De Clerico promoto per Saltum: and ſuddenly they were transformed, and now goe for Doctours. Socrates.

As for your learning, M. Harding, we neuer reproued it. Howbeit greatly to feare it, we haue no cauſe. God giue you grace, ye may wholly turne it to his glorie; leſt in the day of the Lord it bee laid againſt you. Hee is ouer well learned that bendeth his learning againſt God. But if we be ſo vtterly void of all maner of learning, painting, as you ſay, our Bookes and Margins, with the Names and Authorities of ſo many Doctors, what may your friends then thinke of you, that ſtanding ſo long in the Defenſe of your Priuate Maſſe, are not yet able to allege one Doctour, nor Greeke, nor Latine, nor one nor other? It ſeemeth great maruell yee ſhould haue ſuch abundance of Doctours, and ſhew ſo few, ſpecially where it ſtandeth you ſo much vpon to open your ſtore. Conſider, I beſeech you, your late Reioinder; wherein, as it is thought, nothing of your part is left vntouched. Of the ſeuen and twenty Articles contained in my Replie, yee haue taken vpon you onely to anſwer One. And yet of the ſame One, yee haue ſcarcelie touched the tenth part. Your purpoſe ſhould haue beene heerein by euident Examples and good Authorities, ſubſtantiallie to haue prooued your Priuate Maſſe. Extra. lib. 5.

Now conſider the order and plainneſſe of your dealing. Yee beſtow welneere the third part of your Booke about the Sacrifice: as though there were no Sacrifice without Priuate Maſſe. All the reſt ye conſume in idle diſcourſes, and needleſſe talkes, of Conſecration, of the Intention of the Prieſt, of mingling the water with the wine, of the name of the Maſſe, of Tranſubſtantiation, of Reall Preſence, of Church Feaſts, (which in Old time were called Agapæ) of Singuler Communion, of Communion of Faith, of our Vnion with Chriſt, of ſending abroad the Sacrament, of Prieſts Wiues, of Vowes, of Bigamie, of Good Workes, of Onely Faith, of Publike praier in a tongue vnknowne, of Ceremonies, of Formes, of Accidents, of the Epiſtles Decretall, of Clemens, Cletus, Anacletus, Abdias, Leontius, &c. Heereof yee haue told vs ſuch things, as perhaps we knew before, and were not hard to be known, and pertained full little to the purpoſe. Yee ſhould rather haue prooued, that within the firſt ſixe hundred yeeres after Chriſt, ſome one or other of the Holy Learned Catholike Fathers Miniſtred the Holy Communion openly in the Church, and receiued the Sacrament alone, not diuiding the ſame to any other, the whole multitude of the people ſitting or ſtanding by and looking on him. This was the matter that lay betweene vs. Heereunto ye ſhould haue laide your force. This was it, ye ſhould

haue

haue proued. For proofe of ſuch things as needed no proofe, yee haue brought foorth great ſhewes of learning. But as touching your Priuate Maſſe, which onely yee had taken in hand to proue, yee haue hitherto proued nothing. Your Reader, M. Harding, can neuer bee neither ſo ſimple, nor ſo partiall, but hee muſt needs haue an eie vnto your iſſue, and remember, what you had in hand. If amongſt ſo many and ſo learned words, hee finde not one word of that hee ſought for, may not hee thinke hee hath loſt his labour, and that there is ſome follie in your fardle? May he not ſay with himſelfe; Quo nunc ſe proripit iſte? What ſhall I make of theſe vagaries? What meaneth this man to ſhoot ſo faire beſide the marke? He muſt needs perceiue by your ſilence, that notwithſtanding your ſo many faire and liberall promiſes, yet the thing he ſought for cannot be found. Nay you your ſelfe, for excuſe hereof, by expreſſe words haue told vs plainly,

M.Hard.Reioind. fol.281. a & fol.88.a. It might be, that none receiued the Sacrament with the Prieſt. And againe, Whether the Prieſt had alwaies a company to receiue with him, or ſomtimes receiued alone, that is a circumſtance of a fact: the proofe whereof by manifeſt teſtimonies cannot with reaſon be demanded. Againe: It is contentious to put vs to proofe of the circumſtance. Againe; It forceth not, whether we bring forth Teſtimonies of the ſixe hundred yeeres, or no. Againe; Whether I can ſhew, that a Maſſe was ſaid without company preſent to receiue with the Prieſt that ſaid it, or no, what skilleth it? Againe, I muſt tell you, that I ſeeke not for Priuate Maſſe, which to finde, your ſcoffing pretendeth me to be deſirous. I ſeeke not for that which I acknowledge not. And againe; It forceth not greatly, whether it may be proued or no: Which is as much as if he had told vs in plainer wiſe, that for the ſpace of ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, ye can heare no tidings in any Doctor or Councel, of your Priuate Maſſe. Which thing thus of your part confeſſed, to our purpoſe is ſufficient.

M.Hard.Reioind. fol.281. a & fol.88.a. M.Hard. in his Reioinder, in the Preface to the Reader, &c. In the ſame Preface, &. ij. M.Hard.Reioin fol.210,a. Reioin. 219 a.

M. Harding in his Anſwer, fol.29.a. Reioinder, fol. 267.b.

Now touching the authority of your Amphilochius, not long ſithence, yee thought his force had been inuincible. And therefore ye ſtood vp aloft and braied aloud; Now M. Iewel and his Conſacramentaries doe ſtagger, I doubt not. And for that cauſe, as if it had been ſome great worthy Author, yee alleged him ſeuen times, with ſpeciall reuerence in your Booke. And yet now at the laſt, yee are content for ſhame to turne him ouer, and to let him goe. Perhaps ye thought for the while, a weake threed was ſufficient to lead the people; and that, as folkes vſe ſometimes to pleaſe children, yee might quench their thirſt with an empty Cup. Thus much hitherto, touching ſome parts of your Reioinder.

M.Hard.Confut.fol. 162.b. Con fol.162.a M.Har.Confut.fol.163. b. Confut.251.a. & deinceps. 2.Cor 4. M.Har.Confut. fol. 117.a Luke.22.

Concerning your Former Booke, which ye haue entituled, A Confutation, I need to ſay nothing. By the iudgement of the Wiſe it ſaith ſufficiently of it ſelfe. But what meant you, M. Harding, therein to make ſo large diſcourſe, I will not ſay, in the Defenſe, (for that word your friends may not beare) but at the leaſt, in fauour of Open Stewes; and to call the ſame, Malum neceſſarium, that is to ſay, although an ill thing, yet ſuch a thing, as no good Commonweale may be without it? What meant you to that purpoſe to ſhew vs the name and authority of S. Auguſtine? muſt wee thinke that S. Auguſtine, was a Proctour or Patron for your Stewes? What meant you thus to vpbraid vs in the end: In good ſooth Maſters, yee are too young to controle the Citie of Rome in her doings? what needed you to beſtow ſo fine eloquence in ſo foule a cauſe? Is vice growne ſo cold in Louaine, that it muſt now bee inflamed and authoriſed by open writing? What meant you to allege the Prophet Dauid, the Euangeliſt S. Matthew, and S. Paul the Apoſtle, for proofe of your Pardons? Will ye tell vs, that Dauid, Matthew, and Paul were Pardoners? Or if yee dare to tell vs ſo, muſt wee beleeue you? If you ſo manifeſtly mocke vs with open follies, how may wee truſt you in higher Myſteries? S. Paul ſaith; Though our outward man be corrupted, yet our inward man is renewed day by day. Heere you tell vs in great ſooth, that theſe words vndoubtedly ſerue to proue Purgatory. Chriſt ſaith vnto Peter, I haue prayed for thee, &c. Therefore ye ſay, Chriſt now requireth vs, not to bee obedient to Peter or Paul, but to the Pope that ſitteth in their Chaire. Chriſt ſaith; The

Sonne

Sonne of Man came not to deſtroy, but to ſaue: Ergo, ſay you, The Bread and Wine in the Sacrament loſe no part of their former vertues: but remaine in Formes and Accidents, euen as they were before: as if the Sonne of God had come downe from Heauen to ſaue Accidents. M. Har. Confut. fol. 192. b. M. Har. Confut. fol. 99. a.

Thus ye nip off the ſenſe and meaning of the Holy Scriptures, and feed vs onely with emptie words, as if yee would picke away the corne, and giue vs the chaffe: or conuey away the iewels, and throw vs the bagge. O M. Harding, be not wilfull: let your owne conſcience lead you. Was this the meaning of S. Paul? Was this the comming of Chriſt into the world? Was this the ſenſe of the Holy Ghoſt? I will not ſay, what Old Doctor or Ancient Father, but what Summiſt, what Canoniſt, what Child, what Heretike, euer either ſo vnaduiſedly or ſo vnreuerently vſed the Word of God?

I leaue the miſconſtruing and falſifying of ſo many Fathers: the allowing and ſoothing of manifeſt forgeries: the vpholding of abuſes and open errors: your weake proofes: your ſillie coniectures: your ſimple gheſſes: your great ouerſights: your bold affirmations: your heapes of vntruthes: your diſdainfull ſcornes: your immoderate ſcoffes: your vngentle and vnciuill words; as for example, Villaines, Theeues, Fooles, Diſards, Lourdaines, &c. I leaue other your vnmanerly and vncleanlie ſpeeches; Hungrie dogges eat dirtie puddings: As common as Lice with Beggers: They ſerue the belly, and the things beneath the bellie. Theſe bee your words, M. Harding; you may not deme them. Theſe be the flowers and ornaments of your Bookes. Confut. 318. b. Confut. 250. b.

But was this a Preſent, M. Harding, meet either for the modeſtie of a Virgin, or for the Maieſty of a Prince: ſpecially ſuch a Virgin, and ſuch a Prince, ſo Chaſt, ſo Graue, ſo Learned, ſo Wiſe, ſo Vertuous, ſo Godly, as Chriſtendome ſeldome hath ſeene the like? What? thought you that either her wiſdome could not eſpie your frauds and mockeries, or that her chaſt eares could quietly beare your loathſome talke? Or thought you by the weight of ſuch reaſons to mooue Mountaines, and to worke wonders, and to force her Maieſtie to leaue Chriſt and his Goſpell, and come to Louaine to follow you?

Yee threape her Maieſtie fondlie with kindneſſe, and, as yee would haue the world imagine, with good liking and fauouring of your ſide; as if her Maieſtie hauing beene brought vp from her cradle in the knowledge and feare of God, and through Gods great mercie, and according to his knowen Will, by the good aduice and counſell of the States of her Realme, hauing reformed the Houſe of God, from the filth and ſoile of your deuices, ſhee ſtood now in a mammering, and were not able to diſcerne either Falſhood from Truth, or Darkneſſe from Light; or as if your errours were not ſo groſſe, that a blind man may grope them with his fingers.

Ye tell her Maieſtie, ſhe hath neither Parlament, nor Law, nor Church, nor Clergy: The Church of England ye commonly call the Tower of Babylon, the Synagogue of Antichriſt, and the Schoole of Satan: ye charge her Maieſtie with diſordered proceedings, with maintenance of Infidelitie, of Sacrilege, of Schiſme, of Hereſie; For your poſſible power, yee diſhonour her Maieſtie both abroad and at home; where yee may get credit to your follies, yee ſlander the gouernment; yee diſquiet her Maieſties louing Subiects; ye breed ſeditions; ye procure rebellions; ye hazard her eſtate. And yet dare ye to powder all this poiſon with a few diſſembled and ſugred words, and to offer the ſame vnto her Maieſtie for a Preſent? Well, M. Harding, if yee had foreſeene the thankes that her Maieſtie moſt iuſtlie yeelded you for your trauels, ye would not haue beene ſo bold, ſo rudely to preſſe into her preſence. It behooued you to bee aduiſed, not onely what yee wrote, but alſo what Perſonage ſhould view your writings. Confut. fo. 42. a. & ſo thorow out the whole Booke. Confut. fo. 5. a 15. a. 38. a. 49. & ſo thorow the whole.

If ye ſhall happen to write heereafter, ſend vs fewer words and more learning. If ye ſhall deuiſe to talke any more of your Priuate Maſſe, leaue your vagaries, and goe directly to the purpoſe. Tell vs no more ſuch long tales, either of the Sacrifice, or of other matters ſo farre from the queſtion. It is no good Logike to ſhift off the thing yee haue in hand, and to mocke your poore Reader with another. Tread not ſo nicely and ſo gingerly, M. Harding; Say not your Maſſe is a circumſtance, and a matter of Fact, and ſtandeth only vpon ſuppoſals and gheſſes, and therefore needeth no further proofe. Reioin. 232. b. 233. a.

Why

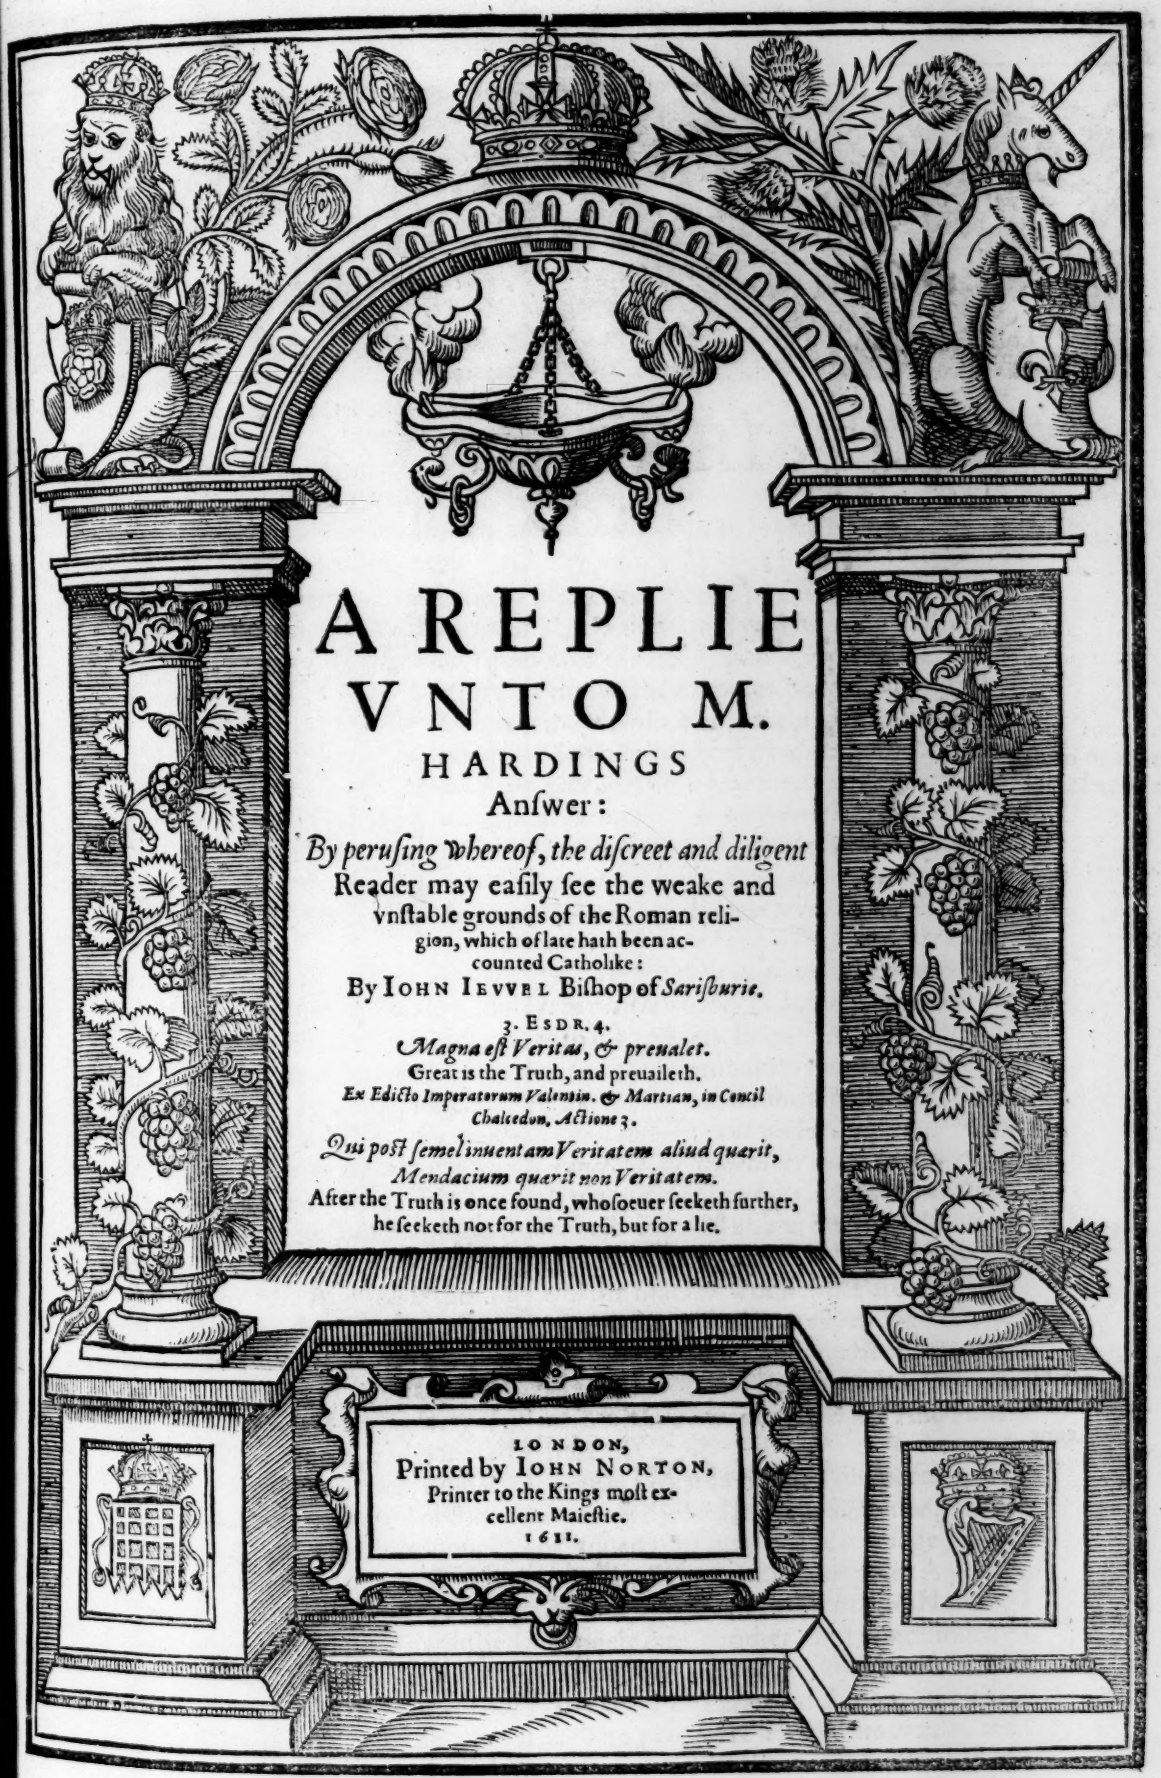
why ſhould yee ſo trifle with the ſimple? This is the iſſue that falleth out betweene vs; Whether any one of the Ancient Learned Fathers, &c. euer ſaid your priuate Maſſe, &c. This it is that is denied. If ye proue not this, what ſoeuer ye proue, ye proue nothing. Bring out ſome learned Father; ſhew ſome Catholike Doctor; keepe them no longer forth-comming. The world looketh ye ſhould deale plainly.

Deny no more the manifeſt Truth; auouch no more the open falſhood; let there bee ſome probability and likelihood in your ſayings. Leaue your immoderate and vncourteous talks. They are tokens of ſtomacke, and not of learning. Therein ye haue deſerued the honour aboue all others. In ſuch kind of Eloquence no man can match you, but your ſelfe. A good cauſe might haue been pleaded with better words. The more vntemperate and fiery ye ſhew your ſelfe without cauſe, the more in the end will appeare your folly. If yee haue hitherto taken any pleaſure in ſpeaking ill, at my hand, by hearing ill, ye ſhall not loſe it. If ye bring vs moe fables of your Pardons and Purgatories; If ye feed vs as yee haue done with Vntruths; If ye depraue the Scriptures; If ye falſifie the Doctours; If yee conclude without Premiſſes; If yee place your Antecedent at Rome, and your Conſequent at Louaine; If ye ſtuffe ſo much Paper, and blot ſo many leaues, and ſhew vs nothing: briefly, if yee write none otherwiſe then ye haue done hitherto, no wiſe man will greatly feare your force.

Deceiue not the ſimple. They are bought with price. They are the people of God, for whom Chriſt hath ſhed his Bloud. Your ſhifts be miſerable. Ye trouble your ſelfe as a bird in the lime. The more ye ſtirre, the faſter ye cleaue: the longer ye ſtriue, the weaker ye are. Ye cannot bridle the flowing Seas; ye cannot blind the Sun-beames. Kicke not ſtill againſt the ſpurre; Giue place vnto the glory of God. Will ye, nill yee, the Truth will conquer. God giue vs both humble hearts, and the people eies to ſee, that all fleſh may bee obedient to his will. Amen.

From London 27. Octobris, 1567.

Iohn Sarisbury.



A REPLIE VNTO M. HARDINGS Anſwer:

By peruſing whereof, the diſcreet and diligent Reader may eaſily ſee the weake and vnſtable grounds of the Roman religion, which of late hath been accounted Catholike:

By IOHN IEVVEL Biſhop of Sariſburie.

3. ESDR. 4.

Magna eſt Veritas, & preualet.

Great is the Truth, and preuaileth.

Ex Edicto Imperatorum Valentin. & Martian, in Concil Chalcedon. Actione 3.

Qui poſt ſemel inuentam Veritatem aliud quærit, Mendacium quærit non Veritatem.

After the Truth is once found, whoſoeuer ſeeketh further, he ſeeketh not for the Truth, but for a lie.

LONDON,
Printed by IOHN NORTON,
Printer to the Kings moſt excellent Maieſtie.
1611.

VNTO THE CHRISTIAN READER.

Eruſing a certaine Booke lately ſet foorth in the name of M. Harding; and weighing the ſubſtance, and parcels of the ſame, good Chriſtian Reader, I called to minde theſe wordes ſpoken ſometime by Socrates the Philoſopher, touching his accuſers, in his owne defence before the Iudges: My Lords, in what ſort your affections haue beene ſtirred with mine accuſers eloquence, while yee heard them ſpeake, I cannot tell. But well I wot, for mine owne part, I my ſelfe whom it toucheth moſt, was almoſt perſwaded to beleeue, that all they ſaid was true: yea, although, it were againſt my ſelfe. So handſomely they can tell their tale: and ſo likely, and ſo ſmoothly they conueigh their matters. Euery word they ſpake had appearance of trueth. And yet in good ſooth they haue ſcarcely vttered one word of trueth: Thus then ſaid Socrates to his accuſers. Euen ſo may I ſay now of M. Harding. For both in truth of matter, and alſo in probability of vtterance they are much alike. Ariſtotle, touching the darkneſſe, and doubtfulneſſe of naturall worldly things, ſaith thus, Quadam falſa probabiliora ſunt quibuſdam veris: Certaine falſehoods (by meanes of good vtterance) haue ſometimes more likelihood of Trueth, then Trueth it ſelfe. For Trueth is many times brought in ſimple, and naked, in poore aray. But Falſhood muſt needs apparell and attire her-ſelfe with all her furnitures. Thus, many times we are deceiued, and embrace Falſhood in ſteed of Trueth. And this is the miſerie of the ſimple. For neither are they able to teach themſelues: nor haue they, wherwith to diſcerne their teachers. There was neuer, neither error ſo horrible, but the Simple haue receiued it: nor poiſon ſo deadly, but the ſimple haue drunken it. In this ſort S. Hierome ſaith, Infidelitie was ſometime publiſhed among the Simple, vnder the name of Faith: And Antichriſt ſhall be adored, and honored in ſteed of Chriſt.

Plato in Apologia Socratis.

Hieron. contra Luciferianos.

Touching the ſtate and iſſue of the matter: whereas I, vpon iuſt occaſion offered, and onely in regard of the trueth, ſometime ſaid in great audience, that in any of theſe caſes heere mooued, our Aduerſaries are not able to allege, either any one ſufficient clauſe, or ſentence out of the Scriptures, Councels, or Ancient Fathers, or any certaine vſage, or example of the Primitiue Church; M. Harding hath heere alleged, and publiſhed, not onely one, or other, but as he himſelfe ſaith, and as it is thought of many, great numbers of ſuch Authorities of Scriptures, Councels, and Doctors, both Greeke, and Latine, and many ancient, and euident examples to the contrarie. The places are noted: the wordes are cleere: It cannot be denied: and, as it is ſuppoſed, all the world is not able to anſwer it. It ſeemeth now an vndoubted trueth, that as well theſe, as alſo all other the Doctrines and Orders of the Church of Rome, haue beene deriued directly from Chriſt himſelfe, and his Apoſtles: and haue continued the ſpace of fifteene hundred and thirtie yeeres at the leaſt. Therefore ſome haue wiſhed my wordes had beene more warily qualified, and vttered with more circumſpection. Euen this is it, that Ariſtotle ſaid, The ſhew of trueth beareth often more likelihood, then trueth it ſelfe. There is no way ſo eaſie, to beguile the Simple, as the name, and countenance of Ancient Fathers. The Arian Heretikes alleged for themſelues the ancient Father Origen: The Neſtorian Heretikes alleged the Councell of Nice: The Donatian Heretikes alleged S. Cyprian: the Pelagian Heretikes alleged S. Ambroſe, S. Hierome, and S. Auguſtine: Dioſcorus the Heretike alleged Gregorius, Cyrillus, and Athanaſius: and complained openly in the Councell, euen in like ſort, and as iuſtly, as M. Harding doth now: Ego defendo dogmata Sanctorum patrum. Ego illorum habeo teſtimonia, non obiter, nec in tranſcurſu, ſed in ipſorum libris poſita. Ego cum Patribus eijcior. I maintaine the Doctrine of the Holy Fathers. I haue their witneſſes, not vttered by chance, or by the way, but written in their Bookes. I am excommunicate, and caſt out, and baniſhed with the Fathers. If the Diuell can ſhew himſelfe, as the Angel of light: and if Falſe Prophets can come in the name of Chriſt: much more may ſome others come in the name, and vnder the colour of certaine Fathers.

In Conc. Chalcedo. Action. 1.

But good Chriſtian Reader, for thy better vnderſtanding, leſt happily thou be deceiued, it may pleaſe thee to know, that theſe Anthorities, alleged here by M. Harding, are neither new, nor ſtrange, nor vnknowne to any man of mean learning, but haue beene both often brought in, and alleged by others, and alſo weighed, and examined, and thorowly confuted long agoe. Indeed M. Harding hath added of himſelfe ſome beautie of his eloquence and maieſtie of words: and yet not ſo much, nor ſuch, but it may eaſily be anſweared, although not with like eloquence, whereof in theſe caſes there is no need, yet at leaſt with more trueth. I truſt, by indifferent conference heereof, thou ſhalt ſoone ſee the Ancient Fathers, Some that neuer were, by M. Harding ſurmiſed, and counterfeited: ſome vntruely alleged: Some corruptly tranſlated: Some peruerſly expounded: Some vnaptly, and guilefully applied. Their words ſometimes abridged: ſometimes enlarged: ſometimes altered: ſometimes diſſembled: Fabulous, and vnknowne Authorities newly founded: Childiſh arguments fondly concluded: To bee ſhort, infinite Vntruthes, and knowen Vntruthes boldely auouched. In conſideration heereof S. Auguſtine crieth out, O rerum Naturæ obſcuritas: quantum tegmen eſt Falſitatis? O the Darkeneſſe of Naturall things: What a couert haue lies to lurke in? Therefore Socrates ſaith: We may not beleeue euerie Argument that is ſhewed vs, vpon the ſight. But muſt open it, and ſearch it, and looke it through. For oftentimes it ſeemeth otherwiſe then it is. It ſeemeth ſtrong without, and is weake within. King Ageſilaus when hee withſtood his enemies, of policie, to couer the ſmalneſſe and weakeneſſe of their bodies, had bombaſted, and embоſſed out their coates with great quarters, that they might ſeeme bigge, and mightie men, and that his ſouldiers, therewith were much diſmaide, after hee had ouerthrowen, and ſlaine them in the field, pulled off their coats, and ſtript them, and left them naked: and when hee had cauſed his Souldiers to behold the poore, lither, ſlender, wearish bodies, nothing like that they ſeemed before, then ſaid hee vnto them: Lo, theſe bee they, of whom yee ſtood ſo much afraid: theſe bee their great bodies: theſe bee their mightie bones. Euen ſo, good Reader, if thou ſtande in feare of theſe M. Hardings Authorities, and Arguments, and thinke them terrible, and inuincible, for that they are embоſſed, and wrought out by arte: take them, rippe them, open them, ſearch them, weigh them, ſtrippe them naked, ſhake them out, conferre them with the places, from whence they were taken: consider the Causes, and the Circumstances, what goeth before, what commeth after: marke the Storie of the time: examine the Iudgement of other Fathers: and thou shalt maruell, wherefore thou stoodest so much afraid, or euer thoughtest them to be inuincible.

Auguſt. de mor. Manich. li. 2. ca. 16.

out

It were aboue all things to be desired of God, that his heauenly Trueth might passe foorth without these contrarieties and quarrels of iudgements: and manie godly wise men are much offended to see it otherwise. But thus it hath beene euer from the beginning. Cain was against Abel: Esau against Iacob: The kingdome of Darkenesse was euer against the Kingdome of Light: The Scribes, and Pharisees were grieued with Christ: Celsus, Porphyrius, Iulianus, Symmachus were grieued with the glorie of the Gospell. Christ himselfe is the stone of offence, laide to the Resurrection, and ruine of manie. But through these offences, and contentions the Trueth of God breaketh out, and shineth more glorious.

Blessed therefore be the name of God, that hath offered this occasion. For I haue no doubt in God, but of this necessarie conflict, through his mercy, there shall issue some sparkle, to the glory of his holy name. For as Moses Rodde deuoured the Roddes of the Sorcerers; euen so will the Trueth of God deuour Errour. Darknesse cannot stand before the Light. Tertullian saith, Scriptura diuina Hæreticorum fraudes, & furta conuincit, & detegit: The holy Scripture discloseth, and confoundeth the subtleties, and robberies of Heretikes. And Nehemias saith, Great is Veritie, and preuaileth. 3. Esdr. 4.

But M. Harding threatned aforehand, that mine Answer (bee it true, bee it false) shall soone bee answered. Howbeit, if he will not dissemble, but deale plainly, and laie out the whole, and answer the whole, as he seeth I haue dealt with him, perhaps it may require him some longer time. But if hee dismember my sayings, and cull out my words, and take choise of my sentences, without regard what goeth before, or what commeth after: or, if hee send vs ouer such pretie Pamphlets, as hee lately Printed together, and ioyned with the Turkish Newes of Malta, I warne him before hand, I may not vouchsafe, to make him answer.

Notwithstanding, before he addresse himselfe to his second Booke, I would counsell him, first, to consider better the ouersightes, and scapes of his former Booke: and further, to thinke, that, whatsoeuer he shall write, it will be examined, and come to triall. And let him remember, it is not sufficient to call vs Sacramentaries, and Heretikes: or to condemne our Books for pelfe, and trash, and fardles of lies, before he see them. For these things will now no longer goe for Arguments. But before all things, let him write no more vntruths: For thereof he hath sent vs enough already: Let him no more wrest, and racke the Scriptures: Let him no more neither misallege, nor misconstrue, nor corrupt, nor alter the holy Fathers: Let him no more imagine Councels, and Canons, that he neuer saw: Let him no more bring vs, neither his Amphilochius, nor his Abdias, nor his Hippolytus, nor his Clemens, nor his Leontius, nor any other like childish forgeries: nor his Ghesses, nor his Visions, nor his Dreames, nor his Fables: Let him no more bring one thing for an other. And, to bee short, let him bring no moe Contradictions in his owne tales, nor be found contrarie to himselfe. Otherwise, the more he striueth, the more he bewraieth his owne cause.

Now, good Christian Reader, that thou maiest be the better able, both to satisfie thine owne Conscience in these cases, and also to vnderstand, as well, what is said, as also, what is answered of either partie, I haue laide foorth before thee M. Hardings Booke without any diminution, fully, and wholly, as hee himselfe gaue it out. And to euery parcell thereof, according to my poore skill, I haue laide mine Anſwer: whether ſufficient, or inſufficient, thou maiſt be Iudge. To thee it is dedicated: and for thy ſake it is written. Heere muſt I ſay vnto thee, euen as S. Hierom ſaith to his Reader in the like caſe: Quæſo, Lector, vt memor Tribunalis Domini, & de iudicio tuo te intelligens iudicandum, nec mihi, nec Aduerſario meo faueas: néue perſonas loquentium, ſed cauſam conſideres; I beſeech thee good Reader, that, remembring the Iudgement ſeat of the Lord, and vnderſtanding, that as thou doeſt iudge, ſo thou ſhalt be iudged, thou fauour neither me, nor mine Aduerſarie that writeth againſt me: and that thou regard not the perſons, but onely the cauſe.

Aduerſus error. Iohã. Hieroſolymitani.

God giue thee the Spirit of Vnderſtanding, that thou maieſt be able to iudge vprightly: God giue thee eies to ſee, that thou maieſt behold the comfortable, and glorious face of Gods Trueth: that thou maieſt know the good, and mercifull, and perfit will of God: that thou maieſt grow into a full perfit man in Chriſt, and no longer be blowen away with euery blaſt of vaine Doctrine: but maieſt be able to know the Onely, the True, and the liuing God, and his only begotten Son Ieſus Chriſt: To whom both, with the Holie Ghoſt be all Honor, and Glory for euer and euer: Amen.

()

From London, the vi. of Auguſt. 1565.

IOHN IEVVEL Sarisburien.

AN ANSWER TO
M. HARDINGS Preface.

IT misliketh you much, M. Harding, that in so many and sundrie cases by me moued, wherein standeth the greatest force of your religion, I should say, You, and others of that part are vtterly void, not onely of the Scriptures, but also of the old Councels, and ancient Fathers: and that in such an Audience, I should so precisely, and so openly discouer the wants, and weakenesse of your side. And therefore, The greater my heape riseth, the lesse, say you, is mine aduantage.

Whereunto I may easilie replie, The larger is mine Offer, the more will your discréet Reader mislike the insufficiencie of your Answer: and the more enlarged is your liberty, the lesse cause haue you to complaine.

Wise men, ye say, would more haue liked greater modestie. Verily, the men, that you call wise, would haue thought it greatest modestie, to haue dissembled, and said nothing. But what may the same wise men thinke of your modestie, that hauing so often made so large, and so liberall offers, of so many Doctours, are not able in the end to shew vs one.

Neither looke we so fiercely, nor shake we the sword so terribly, as you report vs. This was euermore your, and your fellowes speciall, and peculiar commendation: Who besides your fierce, and cruell lookes, and besides the shaking, and terrour of your sword, haue also hewen, and cut, and slaine, and filled your hands with the blood of your brethren.

Wherefore, ye should not take it in such griefe, that, onely for distinctions sake, by so ciuill, and courteous a name we call you our Aduersaries. For, finding you armed with sword, and fire, and embrewed with our blood, we might well haue spared you some other name. That I said yée haue no such assurance of the ancient Fathers, as ye haue borne vs in hand, and as your friends vpon your credit haue beléeued, I said it not, neither of ambition as you expound it, nor of malice; but forced thereto by your importunity, and with great griefe of minde.

Therefore yée did mé the greater wrong, to say, I came vaunting, as Goliah, and throwing foorth my gloue, like a chalenger, and proclaiming defiance to all the world. In these words, M. Harding, Wise men may finde some want of your modestie. For, who so auoucheth the manifest, and knowen trueth, and saith, that you both haue béene deceiued your selues, and also haue deceiued others, ought not therefore to be called Goliah. And, notwithstanding you haue aduentured your selfe, to be the noble Dauid, to conquer this Giant, yet for as much as ye haue neither Dauids sling in your hand, nor Dauids stones in your scrippe, and therefore not likely to worke great maisteries, yée may not loke, that the Ladies of Israel with their Lutes, and Timbrelles will receiue you in triumph, or sing before you, Dauid hath conquered his tenne thousands. Ye rather is Goliah, that setteth his face against the heauens, and his foot in Emperous neckes: and openeth his mouth awide, to vtter blasphemies: That soundeth out these words into all the world, I cannot erre: I haue all lawes, both spirituall, and temporall in my breast: I am aboue all generall Councels: I may iudge all men: but all the world may not iudge mee, be I neuer so wicked: I am King of Kings, and Lord of Lords: I can doe, whatsoeuer Christ himselfe can doe: I am all, and aboue all: all power is giuen to mee, as well in heauen, as in earth. Yée know whose words these be, by whom they are spoken, by whom they are defended, and to whom they are applied. This seemeth to be the very expresse, and liuely image of Goliah: That Goliah, I say, whom now you se knockt in the forehead, and falling downe, not with force of worldly power, but onely with with that little rough deſpiſed ſtone of Gods euerlaſting and heauenly woꝛd. Touching, that moſt woꝛthy, and learned Father, ſometime your Maſter, D. Peter Martyꝛ, whom ye would ſeeme ſomewhat to commend, not foꝛ his Doctrine, from which you haue ſo ſuddainely fallen away, but onely foꝛ his modeſtie: it cannot bee doubted, but he, being at Poiſſy in that woꝛthy aſſembly, in the preſence of the King, and of other the Pꝛinces, and Nobles of that Realme, both did, and ſpake, that might ſtand with the truth of the cauſe, and alſo might well become his owne perſon. But being demanded his iudgement in theſe caſes, he would haue anſwered euen as we doe, and would much haue marueiled, that any learned man would ſay the contrarie. Not long ſithence ye made the Pulpits ring, that your Maſſe, and all other your whole Doctrine, was aſſured vnto you by Chꝛiſt, and his Apoſtles, and that foꝛ the ſame ye had the vndoubted continuance, and ſucceſſion of fifteene hundꝛed yeeres, the conſent of all the old Councels, Doctours, and Fathers, and all Antiquitie, and the Vniuerſall allowance of the woꝛld. Thus ye doubted not then to ſay, without feare of controlment of God, oꝛ man. Many thouſands thought ye dealt ſimply, and would not deceiue them: and thereforꝛe were eaſily led to beleeue you.

Extra. de Constitu. Licet. De Electio. & Elect. potestate Significasti. 9. qu. 3. Nemo. De Maiorit. & Obedient. Vnã Sanctam. In Glossa. In Concil. Laterã. Sub Iulio.

In this caſe, Chꝛiſtian duty, and charity required, that the truth, and certainty of your tales ſhould be opened, that the ſimple might vnderſtand ye had deceiued them, and that of all that your ſo large talke, and countenance of Antiquitie, you were, as you wel know, vtterly able to auouch nothing. Whereas it ſo much offended you, that I ſhould ſo pꝛeciſely auouch the Negatiue, and require you to pꝛoue your Affirmatiue, wherof ye would ſeeme ſo well aſſured, it may pleaſe you to conſider, that S. Gꝛegoꝛie writing againſt Iohn the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, that had intitled himſelfe the Vniuerſall Biſhop of the whole woꝛld, reſted himſelfe likewiſe vpon the Negatiue. His woꝛds be theſe: Nemo
Lib. 4. epiſt. 13 deceſſorum meorum hoc ſuperbo vocabulo vti conſenſit: Nemo Romanorum Pontificum hoc Singularitatis nomen aſſumpſit: None of my Predeceſſours euer conſented to vſe this arrogant Name: No Biſhop of Rome euer tooke vpon him this name of ſingularitie. S. Auguſtine, when he had reckened vp all the Biſhops of Rome, befoꝛe his time, added thereto by a
Aug. epiſt. 165 Negatiue, In hoc ordine ſucceſſionis, nullus Donatiſta Epiſcopus inuenitur: In this order of ſucceſſion there is found no Biſhop, that was a Donatiſt. Yet neither S. Auguſtine, noꝛ S. Gꝛegoꝛie was euer condemned foꝛ Goliath. By the like Negatiue, you, M. Harding, your ſelfe ſay, although vntruly, as you doe many other things beſides, That neither M. Iuel,
In the 3. Article, and in the 15. Diuiſion. nor any one of his ſide is able to ſhew, that the publike ſeruice of the Church in any nation, was euer for the ſpace of ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, in any other tongue, then in Greeke, or Latine. And yet we may not thereforꝛe call you, either Goliath, oꝛ Therſites, oꝛ by any other like vncourteous name. You ſay, I take preſumptuouſly vpon me, to haue read all things, and to bee ignorant of nothing: onely becauſe I ſay, you in theſe caſes can alledge nothing. And why ſo? Can no man diſcrie your wants, and diſcloſe your vntruthes, without pꝛeſumption? You ſay, ye haue the conſent of all Doctours, of all ages, and of all times, of your ſide: ſhall we thereforꝛe ſay, that you vaunt your ſelfe of your knowledge, oꝛ, that you know all things, and are ignoꝛant of nothing? You ſay, Ye haue all the Doctours. I ſay, and true it is, Ye haue not one Doctour. The difference of theſe ſayings ſtandeth only in this, that the one is true, the other vntrue: That your Affirmatiue cannot be pꝛoued: My Negatiue cannot be repꝛoued. But touching vaunt of reading and knowledge, there is no difference.

Howbeit, foꝛaſmuch as this Negatiue ſo much offendeth you of our ſide, let vs hardly turne it of your ſide: And let vs ſay ſo, as it may beſt like you to haue vs ſay: That it cannot appeare, by any ſufficient clauſe, oꝛ ſentence, either of the Scriptures, oꝛ of the old Doctours, oꝛ of the Ancient Councels, oꝛ by any example of the Pꝛimitiue Church, either that the Pꝛieſt then receiued the Holy Communion together with the people: oꝛ that the Sacrament was then miniſtred vnto the people vnder both kindes: oꝛ that the publike pꝛaiers were euer ſaid in the vulgar oꝛ knowen tongue: oꝛ that the whole people thereto ſaid Amen, within the ſpace of ſix hundꝛed yeeres after Chꝛiſt. Let vs ſay further, that Chꝛiſt himſelfe, and all his Apoſtles ſaid Pꝛiuate Maſſe, and receiued the holy Sacrament ſeuerally alone: that all the ancient Fathers miniſtred the halfe Communion only vnder One Kind: that all the common Pꝛaiers were euery where ſaid in a ſtrange learned tong, vtterly vnknowen vnto the people. This offer is frée and liberall. And what can you deſire moꝛe? But perhaps it ſhameth you to ſay ſo much. Foꝛ, albeit ſome of you haue often ſaid it, yet the vntruth thereof is manifeſt, and ſheweth it ſelfe.

Only yée wiſh, I had vſed ſome greater modeſtie. And would you, that I ſhould haue ſaid, Ye haue one ancient Doctour directly, and plainly of your ſide, and ſo in that place, and in that pꝛeſence, foꝛ Modeſties ſake, to haue auouched open vntruth, as you, and others had 11. quæſt. 3. Nolite. done befoꝛe? O M. Harding, in theſe caſes a meane way is no way. Accurſed is that Modeſtie, that diſpleaſeth the truth of God. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Veritatem negat, qui eam non

non liberè prædicat. He is a Renouncer of the Truth, that dareth not freely say the truth.

Ye say, I haue sought vp certaine small questions of light importance, wherein the ancient Doctours haue not trauelled, as not daring to enter into matters of greater weight. Howbeit, it séemeth ouer much for you, to limit, and appoint eche man, what he should preach at Pauls Crosse. Neither is it much materiall, whether these matters be great, or small: but, whether you, by colour of the same, haue deceiued the people.

But would ye haue vs now at last beléeue, that your Masse, your Transubstantiation, your Reall Presence, your Adoration, your Sacrificing of the Sonne of God, and your Supremacie of Rome be so small matters? Ye told vs not long sithence, there were no other matters so great, as these. And may we thinke, that your religion is now greater, now smaller: and increaseth, and vadeth: and waxeth, and waneth, as doth the Mone? Verily Pope Nicholas would haue ioyned your Transubstantiation to the Créed, & would haue made it the Thirtenth Article of our Faith. And Pope Boniface the eight saith, that to be subiect to the Church of Rome, is of the necessity of Saluation. And Pope Nicolas saith, Whosoeuer denieth the authoritie and preeminence of that See, is an Heretike. Extr. de Maiorit. & Obed. Vnã Sanctam. Dist. 22. Omnes.

Notwithstanding, how great, or small these matters be, it forceth not. Inuent, you had learned them in very small time: and, as now, ye auouch them with very small proufes. And, how small, and light soeuer you would now haue them to appeare, yet for the same, yee haue made no small adoe. Nothing ought to be taken for small, wherewith so great multitudes of Gods people may be deceiued.

The matters wherewith Christ charged the Pharisies, were not so great. Yet Christ saith vnto them, Ye straine a gnat, and swallow a Camell. S. Paul saith, A little leauen soureth a whole lumpe of dough. A haire is small, yet we read, it hath choked a bigge man. Plato saith, Robberie is no lesse in a small matter, then in a great. The Ciniphes were but small: yet are they reckened among the great plagues of God. Matth. 23. 1. Cor. 5.

They that first beganne to maintaine that arrogant presumptuous title, of Vniuersall Bishop, which now the Bishop of Rome challengeth wholly to himselfe, said it was but a small matter. But Gregorie saith, Alia sunt friuola, & innoxia: alia sunt friuola, & noxia: Some things are small, and doe no hurt: Some things are small, and doe great hurt. Gregor. lib. 6. epist. 30.

And comparing the same with the pride of Antichrist, who should call himselfe, Deus, (that is to say, God) hée saith thus: Si spectes quantitatem vocis, duæ sunt Syllabæ: Si pondus iniquitatis, est vniuersa pernicies: If ye weigh the quantity of the word, it standeth in two syllables: If the weight of the wickednesse, it is an vniuersall destruction. Ibidem.

Though these matters were small, yet the Vntruthes, and Errours that thereof haue risen, are not small. Remoue the same, and your greatest Religion will fall to nothing.

To conclude, if these matters bé Great, they are the more worthie to bé considered: if they be Small, there is the lesse hurt in leauing of them, and the more wilfulnesse, in defending of them: Verily, the whole World is weary of them. Christ saith: Qui in modico iniquus est, & in maiori iniquus est: Hee that is wicked in the Small, is also wicked in the Great. Luk. 16.

You say, Wee flie and forbeare the iudgement of the learned, and shake out these things with great admiration onely amongst the simple. As Alexander the King of Macedonia made himselfe a God, and had much talke of his father Iuppiter amongst the Barbarians: but amongst the Grékes that were wise and able to iudge, and knew him well enough, hée was content to talke of other matters.

This comparison, M. Harding, is odious, and sauoureth ouermuch of your choller. We hunt not for any admiration or opinion of Godhead among the people. We preach not our selues, but Christ Iesus.

But thus the Pearisies said of Christ himselfe: These rascals are accursed, they haue no learning, they know not the Law. Amongst them will hee be. There hee raigneth like a Prince. There he seeketh to be made a God. Hére might I eftsones put you in remembrance of him that hath so long abused, and mocked the whole World, both Princes and Subiects: aswell learned as vnlearned: accounting them all as wilde and barberous: and hath suffered himselfe openly to bé proclaimed and published by the name of God. The words be knowen: Dominus Deus noster Papa: Our Lord God the Pope: And againe: Constat Papam à pio Principe Constantino Deum appellatum: Et Deum ab hominibus iudicari non posse, manifestum est. Extra. Io. 22. Cum inter. In Glossa.

Alexander stood in some awe and reuerence of the Wise: but this man despiseth both Wise and Vnwise: Learned and Vnlearned, and all the World. Dist. 96. Satis euidenter.

It was somewhat out of season, for you in this place to intreat of the validitie of your Canon, and so earnestly to labour to proue it faultlesse, before any man had begunne to touch touch it, or to proue it faultie. It is supposed, that some part thereof was deuised by Leo: and afterward augmented by Gelasius: and after that, by one, whom S. Gregorie calleth Scholasticus: and after againe by Gregorius himselfe: and that at last, about eight hundred and fiftie yeares after Christ, it was brought to some perfection, and made vp by Pope Sergius. As now, it is more closely pronounced, and more reuerently vsed, then either the Epistle or the Gospell.

Gregor. lib. 7. epist. 63.

But, whether there be any fault therein, or none, I leaue that to you, M. Harding, to be better considered by your selfe. Your Doctour Durand saith thus: Cum Sacerdos orauerit pro Hostia Transubstantianda, eamque Transubstantiatam Patri obtulerit, orat pro ipsius acceptatione: When the Priest hath prayed for the Transubstantiation of the Hoste, and hath offered the same, being Transubstantiate, vnto God the Father, afterward he praieth, that God will fauourably accept it.

Durand. lib. 4. parte. 2.

S. Paul saith: Christ is the Mediatour betweene God and man. But here by your Canon, contrariwise, the Priest is made a Mediatour betweene God and Christ.

1. Tim. 2.

The Priest a Mediatour betweene God, and Christ.

And now your selfe M. Harding, at your Masse, and in the highest Secrets of your Canon, desire God the Father, to loke fauourably vpon Iesus Christ his owne Sonne, at your request. Your wordes be plaine, and euident: No interpretation, or shift is able to salue them. Now if it be meete you should intreat God the Father to be mercifull vnto Christ his Sonne, and to behold him fauourably for your sake, then may you say there is no fault in all your Canon.

You seeme to complaine that I leaue out prayer for the dead, and Inuocation of Saints: And that thing you amplifie largely with many words. And yet I thinke, you would not haue vs beleeue, that these points of your Religion be greater then your Sacrifice, or then your Masse.

Verily, touching the first, I heard once, when you your selfe blew downe the Paper Walles, as ye then called them, and vtterly quenched all the Painted Fiers of Purgatorie. For the other S. Chrysostome saith: Homines vtuntur Atriensibus. In Deo nihil est tale, Sine Mediatore exorabilis est: Men vse Porters, and Vshers. But in God, there is no such thing. Hee is easie to be intreated, yea without a Mediatour. Againe he saith: Nihil tibi opus est Patronis apud Deum. Neque enim tam facilè Deus audit, si alij pro nobis orent, quam si ipsi oremus, etsi pleni simus omnibus malis: Thou needest no Attourney to speake to God. For God doth not so soone heare vs, when others pray for vs, as when we pray for our selues: yea although we be full of all sinne. S. Ambrose likewise saith: Iste se non putant reos, qui honorem nominis Dei deferunt Creaturæ, & relicto Domino, conseruos adorant. Nam & ideo ad Reges per Tribunos, & Comites itur: quia homo vtique est Rex, & nescit quibus debeas Rempublicam credere. Ad Deum autem, quem nihil latet, omnium enim merita nouit, ad promerendum, suffragatore non est opus, sed mente deuota. Vbicunque enim talis loquutus fuerit ei, respondebit illi. These men thinke, they doe no ill, giuing the honour of God vnto a Creature: and leauing the Lord, adore their fellow seruants. For therefore we haue accesse to Kings by Knights, and Marshals, for that the King is a mortall man, and knoweth not to whom he may commit his kingdome. But God knowet h all mens merits, and there is nothing priuie from him. Therefore to obtaine his fauour, we need no spokes-man, but a deuout minde. Whersoeuer such a one shall speake, God will answer him.

In a Sermon preached in S. Maries Church in Oxford.

Chrysost. de Pœniten. hom. 4.

Chrysost. de profectu Euangelij.

Ambros. in 1. cap. ad Roman.

Whereas ye vntruly say, we lay on load of slanders, to deface the Church; you may remember, that there were sometime that charged S. Steuen, S. Paul, and Christ himselfe in like sort, for that they seemed likewise to speake vnreuerently against the Church. And against the Prophet Ieremie, they cried out, euen as you doe now, The Temple of God! The Temple of God.

Hieremy 7.

But he defaceth not the Church, that defaceth the defacers of the Church: and wipeth off the soile of your errours, that her face may shine, and appeare more glorious. When Christ mourned ouer the City and Temple of Hierusalem: or when he said: Ye haue made my Fathers house a denne of theeues. And when Esay said: O how is this beautifull Citie (that then was the Church of God) become an harlot? Or, when the Prophet Ieremie said: Who will giue abundance of water vnto mine eies, that I may mourne day and night for the sinnes of my people? We may not thinke, that Christ, Esay, and Ieremie were defacers of the Church. He hindreth not health, that sheweth the disease. He despiseth not the Church, that setteth Christ before the Church. The Church is our Mother: But Christ saith: Who so loueth his Father, or Mother more then mee, is not meet to be my Disciple. He despiseth not his Mother, that lamenteth the captiuitie of his Mother, and deliuereth her from the hands of theeues.

Esay 1.

Hieremy 9.

Matt. 10.

But we haue set vp Altar against Altar: Or rather, as yan say: We haue ouerthrown Altars, and all together: And so haue erected a new Church, a new Gospell, and a new religion of our owne. Verily, M. Harding, we haue ouerthrowne nothing, but that Gods good will was should be ouerthrowen. Christ saith, Euery plant, that my heauenly Father hath not planted, shall bee rooted vp. An Altar we haue, such as Christ, and his Apostles, and other holy Fathers had, which of the Grækes was called ἱερὰ τράπεζα, The holy table: And of the Latines, Mensa dominica; The table of the Lord: And was made, not of stone, but of Timber: and stood not at the end of the Quier, but in the middest of the people, as many waies it may appeare: And other, or better Altar, than Christ, and these holy Fathers had, wee desire to haue none: and specially any such Altar, as hath beene purposely set vp against the Altar of Christ. Matth. 15.

of

But you of your side, haue said, Heere is Christ, and there is Christ: And so haue erected vp, not only Altar against Altar: and Church against Church; but also Christ against Christ. So Leo seemeth to say of you: Ecclesiæ nomine armamini: sed contra Ecclesiam dimicatis: Ye arme your selues with the name of the Church: and yet ye fight against the Church. So saith Nazianzene: Ye striue for Christ, against Christ himselfe. Matth. 24. Leo in epist. ad Palestines. Nazianzenus In Apologeti.

But you seeme, to set light of mine age, and to disable my knowledge in Diuinity: as though it were much pertinent vnto these matters, either to calculate mine age, or els to examine the order of my studie. I may say with Origen: Gratias ago Deo, quod ignorantiam meam non ignoro: I thanke God, that I am not ignorant of mine ignorance. But whatsoeuer want either is, or is surmised to be in me, it ought not to preiudice the truth of God.

And yet I see no great cause, why any man should seeke so greatly to disaduantage mee in respect of mine age, or studie. For it is well knowen, that I, although vnworthy of that degree, proceeded Bachelar in Diuinity in the Vniuersity of Oxford one whole yeere, and more before M. Harding. Indeed, I grant, I could not read all the Councels, and old Fathers of the Church, both Grækes and Latines, in seuen daies, as M. Harding could. And yet, so much had I read, that I marueiled, M. Harding would euer enterprise, so much to abuse the names of the holy Fathers. Anno Domini 1551. anno Eduardi 6. quinto.

But knowledge oftentimes is vaine, and puffeth vp the minde. God make vs learned to the kingdome of God, that we may humble all our knowledge to the obedience of faith.

It reioyceth me much, that ye say, ye loue mee, and in respect of our old friendship, and loue haue thus written to me. Howbeit, our old priuate friendship needed not so many publike witnesses. Ye say, ye will follow the latter part of Chiloes counsell: Oderis, tanquam amaturus: Hate so, as afterward thou maist loue.

Betweene which your two sayings, of hating, and louing, I know not how, you include a plaine contradiction: Vnlesse ye will say, Ye can hate, and loue in one respect both together. But I take it in the best sense, wherein, I doubt not, but ye meant it.

Howbeit, touching your friendly aduice, I may answer you likewise, with another peece of Chiloes counsell: Obsequendum est amico vsque ad aras: A man may follow his friends counsell, so it be not, either against God, or against his conscience. The people of Alexandria said vnto Timotheus; Etsi non communicamus tecum, tamen amamus te: Although we communicate not with you, yet we loue you notwithstanding. Yee promise to deale herein, without either gall or bitternesse: For that, as you say, Glikes, Nippes, and Scoffes, Bittes, Cuttes, and Girdes (these bee your words) become not your stage. And doubtlesse, such kind of dealing, as it is most commendable in it selfe, so it seemeth most fitting for them that trauell in Gods cause. Christ saith, Learne of me, for I am meeke and gentle. Matth. 11. Liberatus. cap. 16.

But whose words then be these, M. Harding? From what spirite haue they proceeded? Vpon what stage were they spoken? These words, I say, wherewith ye seeme so much, and so often to solace your selfe, and to refresh your Spirits: Goliath, Therſites, Rash, Presumptuous, Wicked, Vnlearned, Ignorant, Peeuish, Lucians, Scoffers, Coggers, Foisters, Peart, Insolent, Vaunters, Braggers, Sectaries, Schismatikes, Heretikes, Sacramentaries, Newe masters, New Fanglers, False Reporters, Slaunderers of the Church, Terrible Seducers, The enemies of the Sacrifice, The enemies of the Church, The Ministers of the Diuell, Sitters in the Chaire of Pestilence, Monsters, Heathens, Publicanes, Turkes, Infidels, Antichrists, and Forerunners of Antichrist? Termes vsed commonly by M. Harding through his whole booke.

These words be yours, M. Harding, not only, for that they be vttered by you, but also, for that they pertaine directly, and properly vnto your selfe. With these, and other like pearles ye haue thorowly beset your whole Booke, that it might the more glitter in the eie of your Reader. Herewith your stage is fully fraught. Some man would thinke it were Vetus Comœdia. So faithfull ye seeme to be in keeping your promise. If ye vtter such words of pure loue, and friendship, what then may we looke for, if ye once begin to hate? They say, the Scorpion embraceth louingly with his feete: but smiteth his poison with his taile. Thus ye suffer the tempests of your affections sometime to blow you out, and to tosse you off from the shoare. In a man of professed grauity, reasons had beene more conuenient,

nient, then reproches. Such eloquence might better become ſome of your yonger Janniz-zers: who, as their friends ſay here, haue not yet learned to ſpeake otherwiſe.

As for theſe words, and theſe ſtages, they may not well chaſe vs away from the Goſpell of Chriſt. It is not needfull for vs, to heare your good reports: but it is moſt needfull for vs, to ſpeake the truth.

The aduertiſement, that you allege out of Salomon (There is a way that vnto a man ſeemeth right, but the end thereof leadeth vnto damnation) is common, and toucheth vs both, aſwell you, as me: or rather, ſomewhat more you, than me. Ye were once deceiued before, by your owne confeſſion. But they, that haue indifferently weighed the cauſes, and ſuddennelle of your change, haue thought, ye are as much, or rather much more deceiued now.

Marke, I beſeech you, M. Harding, what ye were lately, and what ye would now ſeeme to be: what way ye troad then: and what way ye tread now. The difference is no leſſe, then is betweene Light, and Darkeneſſe; Life, and death: Heauen, and Hell. So great a change would require ſome good time of deliberation.

But if you be thoroughly changed, as you ſay, and if ye be touched indeed, either with the zeale of God, or with the loue of your brethren, be not then aſhamed to tell vs, what things God hath done for you. Let your Reader vnderſtand, that you your ſelfe ſometime were that man, of whom Salomon ſpeaketh: That you ſomtime were in a way, that ſeemed right, and yet the end thereof led to damnation: That you ſometime bent your whole heart, and ſtudie to deface the Church of God: That you preached ſo many yeares together directly contrary to your conſcience: That you ſometime wittingly, and willingly, and of purpoſe, and malice, deceiued Gods people: That you ſometime were the Miniſter of the Diuel, a Turke, an Heathen, an Infidell, a forerunner of Antichriſt: and that from this ruefull ſtate ye were ſuddenly changed, not by reading, or conference of the Scriptures, or ancient Fathers, but only for that ye ſaw the Prince was changed.

Thus muſt ye deale, M. Harding, if ye deale truely. So will your friends thinke, ye diſſemble not now, as you did before: but are moued only of true zeale, and pure conſcience. Certainly either, as we ſay, ye are now deceiued: or, at the leaſt, as your ſelfe muſt needes grant, not long ſithence, ye were deceiued. And S. Auguſtine ſaith: Hoc eſt erroris proprium, vt quod cuique diſplicet, id alijs quoque oportere exiſtimet diſplicere: This is the very nature of Errour, that, whatſoeuer miſliketh any man, he thinketh all others ſhould likewiſe miſlike the ſame.

Auguſtin. De Gene. contra Manichæ.

Such is the miſerie of Adams children: their heart is euermore inclined vnto ill, and errour. Hereof falſe Prophets oftentimes take occaſion to ſay, Good is ill, and ill is Good: Light is Darkeneſſe, and Darkeneſſe is Light. And oftentimes the people is wilfully ledde away, and cannot abide to heare ſound doctrine: but turne their eares to heare fables.

Therefore Salomons counſell is wiſe, and good. And for that cauſe we truſt not our owne eies to chuſe our waie: but we call vnto God with the Prophet Dauid, O Lord, ſhew vs the way, that we may walke in: We ſeeke vnto him that ſaith, I am the way, the Truth, and the Life: I am the Light of the World: whoſo followeth mee, walketh not in darkeneſſe, but hath the Light of Life. And we thanke God, that with his Daie-ſpring from aboue hath viſited vs, and directed our feet into the way of peace: into the ſame way, that Chriſt hath ſhewed vs, and the holy Apoſtles, and ancient Catholike Fathers haue troden before vs.

Pſalm. 142. Iohn 14. Iohn 8.

Touching your exhortation to humility, and the deniall of my learning, which, I truſt, of your part proceedeth from a meeke, and humble ſpirit, I may ſafely deny that thing, that I neuer auouched. It cannot ſhame me to ſay, that S. Hierome ſaid: Dicam illud Socraticum, Hoc tantum ſcio, quòd nihil ſcio: I will ſay, as Socrates ſometime ſaid, This thing onely I know, That I know nothing. In theſe caſes, as I ſeeke no praiſe, ſo I feare no reproch. Whatſoeuer want is in me, there be others, that can ſupplie it. Howbeit, I neuer vnderſtood, but Verity, and Humility might well ſtand together.

Hieron. in præfa. in Abdiam.

Where you ſay, whatſoeuer ſkill, or knowledge I haue, or had, I haue euermore bent it onely to the reproch and ſlander of the Church, it is no great maſterie, M. Harding, to ſpeake ill. But I truſt, God himſelfe that iudgeth iuſtly, iudgeth otherwiſe. If there bee in me, I ſay not, any talent, but onely any mite of a talent, my prayer vnto God is, and euer was, it may be beſtowed wholy to the honour, and comfort of his Church.

And yet may not you, M. Harding, neither ſet ſuch ſtoare by your ſelfe, nor ſo much abaſe, and diſcredit others, as though beſides you, and your fellowes, there were no man meete to be counted learned. When the Iewes, in contempt of all others, boaſted themſelues to be the only ſtocke, and blood of Abraham, S. Paul by an humble kind of preſumption doubted not in all reſpects to compare with them in this wiſe: Hebrewes they be: and ſo am I. Iſraelites they be: and ſo am I: The ſeed of Abraham they be: and ſo am I. Againe he ſaith, Thus doe I, and thus will I doe, that in the things, whereof they glorie, they may be found to be

2. Corin. 11.

ly as we are. I will force this comparison no further. Such contention is but vaine. O M. Harding, this saying is common vnto vs both: By the grace of God we are that we are. O that his grace be not in vs in vaine. 1. Corin. 15.

For my part, both at your request, and also without your request, I vtterly denie my learning. And touching my Bishoprike, if that in any part happen to greeue you, I denie it to: I denie mine estimation: I denie my name: I denie my selfe. Only the Father of Christ, and the truth of God I cannot denie. Or with this Faith, or for this Faith, I trust I shall end. I cannot withstand the Spirit of God. I cannot say, the consent of all the Ancient Catholike Fathers was an heape of errours, and a linke of Heresies. Although you, M. Harding, could denie all together at an instant, and vpon the sudden, yet beare with others that cannot so easily doe the same.

Touching D. Fisher, I scoffed neither at him, nor at any others. Only I laid out the imperfection of certaine their arguments: which if they were weake, and many waies faultie, the fault was not mine: I made them not. D. Fishers Argument was this: We are sure, there is Purgatorie: Ergo, the Popes Pardons be good, and available. I shall be forced in perusing your Booke, to disclose many like infirmities and follies in your arguments, M. Harding. Yet notwithstanding I will not scoffe. But happy are you, that may call vs Gospellers, New Maisters, Patriarkes, and I know not what, and to write, what you list, without scoffing. In the end of your foretalke, which is before the shewing of your Booke, ye thinke all the world singeth Sanctus, Sanctus, and receiueth you with Ozanna. And therefore ye will euery body to come, and subscribe. Howbeit, it seemeth, this request is verie sudden, and out of season. You should first haue shewed vs, both whereunto we should subscribe, and also your Authorities, and Reasons, wherewith ye would force vs to subscribe. But the old learned Father Tertullian saith thus of the Valentinian Heretikes: Habent artificium, quo prius persuadent, quam doceant. Veritas autem docendo suadet, non suadendo docet: These Heretikes haue a kind of cunning, and a policie, whereby they perswade vs first, and teach vs afterward. But the Truth perswadeth vs by teaching: and not teacheth vs by perswading. Polydo. de Inuent. rer. lib. 8. cap. 1. Tertull. aduersus Valentinian. lib. 1.

King Agesilaus, the better to embolden his Souldiers to the fight, with a certaine iuice wrote this word, Victorie, in the palme of his hand: and afterward being at his Seruice, as the maner then of the Heathens was, he laid his hand so written, closely and secretly vpon the heart of the Sacrifice, and so printed it with the said word, Victorie: and immediately shewed the same vnto his Captaines, and Souldiers, as if it had beene written by the Gods. The simple Souldiers, not vnderstanding this policie, and thinking the whole matter had indeed beene wrought by miracle, grew full of courage, not doubting, but their Gods, that had written, Victorie, would also giue them Victorie.

By like policie, and to like purpose, it seemeth, you, M. Harding, would beguile your Reader: and, that you lacke in strength, would win by politie: and, that you want in reasons, would gaine in words: that the simple may thinke you haue the Victorie, because you haue written, Victorie, with your pen.

But you are not yet equall with the credit of Pythagoras. It is not sufficient for your Scholars to say, Ipse dixit: M. Harding hath said it. Euery man will not thinke it is so, because you can write it, or print it, or say it is so. As for my selfe, I will say with S. Hierome: Cupio discere, & Discipulum me profiteor, dummodo doceant: I would faine learne, and make a vow to be their Scholar, so they would teach mee. First ye should haue giuen vs leaue, to haue perused your whole Booke. And when we had well weighed your vntrue Allegations, your vaine Constructions, your new petite Doctours, your Corruptions, your Forgeries, your Dreames, your Fables, and the huge multitude of your vntruthes, then hardly ye should haue called vs to subscribe.

Howbeit, M. Harding, this is no force sufficient to subdue the world. It was not thought, ye had beene so weakely appointed. It is not enough for you, thus odiously to vpbraid vs in your anger, and to call vs new Maisters, and Heretikes. That lesson might haue serued you long ago, before ye were espied. It behoueth you now, to haue some stronger arguments, specially fighting against God.

For my part, notwithstanding I were thoroughly perswaded long before, yet am I now some deale the more satisfied by these your trauels. For, touching your want of Scriptures, Councels, Doctours, and Examples of the Primitiue Church, I am well, and fully confirmed by the slendernesse of your proofes.

And I doubt not, but some of these, that now be about you, being, I trust, not frowardly carried away with wilfull malice, but hauing the feare of God, and a reuerent zeale to doe the best, although perhaps not knowledge sufficient to iudge what is best, after they shall vnderstand some part of your dealing herein, will by Gods grace, begin somewhat to forethinke themselues of their iournie, and to cast some doubts of your credit. S. Augustine saith: Iuris forensis est, vt qui in precibus mentitus sit, illi ne prosit, quod impetrauit: The Law is this, that whoso hath made a false suggestion, shall lose whatsoeuer he haue gotten by the same.

August. in Iohan. tract. 7.

O M. Harding, Credit without truth, is no credit. Your worke is ouer weake: It hath no foundation: It cannot stand. Chrysostome telleth you, Such is the nature of error, It vadeth of it selfe, and will come to ground without resistance. Remember the place ye sometime stood in: Remember from whence ye are fallen: Remember the causes of your fall. It is no shame to rise againe. God is able to restore you. The wise man saith: There is confusion that bringeth grace, and glorie. God hath endued you largely with great gifts. Turne the same to the obedience of the faith of Christ. As there is wisedome in seeking the Victorie, so there is wisedome in giuing place. Follow the same Counsell ye giue others. Denie your owne learning: denie your owh estimation: denie your selfe. Giue the Glory vnto God.

Chrysostom. de laudibus Pauli hom. 5.

Ecclesi. 4.

Iohan. 9.

A TABLE OF THE PRINCIPAL

matters contained in this Booke.

A

ABdias M. Hard. great Doctour is a Legend of Fables. pag. 7. 8
Abdias lately found out by Wolphangus Zazius. 7
Abdias a shameleſſe lier. 7 8
Abdias ſet out with many gay titles to deceiue the people. 7
Abdias not preſent at the Apoſtles doings. ibid.
Abdias like to Iohannes de Temporibus. 7. who liued aboue 300. yeeres. ibid.
M Hardings Abdias, cannot be Abdias, vnleſſe he be a lyer. ibid.
Abdias booke, ſome part of it ſeemeth to be written by the Heretikes the Manichees: as may bee gathered by S. Auguſtine, and Pope Gelaſius. 7. 8.
M. Har. Abdias diſallowed by S. Auguſtine. ibid.
Abdias booke refuſed of the Church. 8
Theſe wordes, the abhomination of deſolation ſtanding in the holy place expounded. 396
Abuſes and errors in the Maſſe, by M. Hardings confeſſion. 3. 432
To miniſter the Sacrament as Chriſt commanded, is an accident Ceremoniall with M. Harding. 17
Accidence changed into Subſtance by M. Hardings ſhifting, and Subſtance into Accidence. 18
Accidents what they be by M. Hardings expoſition. 312 313
Accidents performe the Sacrament: a ſtrange doctrine of M Hardings. 317
Accidents without ſubiect, is the very high way into the old Heretikes errors. 323
Accidents without Subſtance of Bread and Wine neuer knowen nor written of in the primitiue Church. 324. 325
The ſame openly refuſed of the Greeke Church in the Councel of Florence. 324
Accidents without Subiect borne vp by Gods omnipotent power, as M Harding dreameth. 325
By M. Hardings Accidents without Subſtance in the Sacrament there is a white thing, and yet nothing is white: a round thing, and yet nothing is round. ibid.
The firſt light was not an Accident without a Subiect. 326
The breaking of the Accidents is a figure of Chriſts body breaking: as M. Harding diuiſeth. 337
That the Accidents are broken, and in breaking giue a cracke. ibid.
Holy outward Accidents. 338. 345
M. Hardings Accidents without Subiect ſprung out of Marcions Hereſie. 323. 338. 350. 444. 445
Accidents and outward formes are Chriſts Body it ſelfe: as M. Harding teacheth. 341
The holy outward Accidents are a figure of Chriſts Body by M. Hardings doctrine. 338. 345. 443
The outward Accidents & Formes neuer called the Sacrament of any of all the ancient Fathers. 443
That outward Accidents and Formes nouriſh both the Prieſt and Miſe, in M Hardings miracle. 461
Accidents and outward Formes by M. Hardings learning are the Sacraments of Chriſts Body and Bloud. 467. 468. 469
Accidents and outward Formes are not the Sacrament, but Bread and Wine. 467. 468
Adelſcane king of England cauſed the Bible to be tranſlated into the Engliſh tongue. 397. 542
Adoration. 282
Adoration made to Chriſt in Baptiſme. 167. 264. 303. 304
Adoration importeth not neceſſarie Reall preſence. 164. 299
Adoration to Chriſt ſitting in Heauen. 164
Adoration was the beautie of the Maſſe. 278
We Adore the Baptiſme of Chriſt. 282. 304
We Adore the word of God, in what ſenſe. 282
Adoration lately deuiſed by Pope Honorius. 283. 456
The petite Degree of Adoration. 305
Adoration increaſed by the new ſolemne Feaſt of Corpus Chriſti day. 283. 453
Adoration confirmed by Pope Clemens, with a monſtrous multitude of pardons. 283. 453
Adoration full of great dangers. 283. 284. 305. 306
This Terme Concomitantia, childiſhly applied by M. Harding for Adoration. 295. 296
Adoration not prooued by Scriptures, but by M. Hardings Concomitantia. 296
Adoration of the Croſſe. 296
Adoration of Oile. 296
Adoration of Gibbet, Water, and our Ladies Girdle. 296. 297
Adoration followeth not neceſſarily Inuocation. 296. 297
The Centurions words, O Lord, I am not worthy that thou enter vnder my roofe, expounded. 297
Chryſoſtome laboureth to withdraw the peoples mind from Adoration of the Sacrament. 298. 321. 322
Chriſts body Adored ſitting in Heauen. 298, 299 300. 301
Spirituall Adoration. 299. 300
No man eateth Chriſts fleſh but firſt he Adoreth the ſame. 300
The Heathens Adored Bacchus and Ceres, but they neuer adored Bread and Wine. 302
In what ſort Sacraments are to be Adored. 304
Adoration of Images in what ſenſe. 304
It was lawfull to hold againſt Adoration before Tranſubſtantiation came in. 305
To Adore the Sacrament, vnder a condition. 306
The good ſimple people miſerably mocked in Adoration. 306
The true Adoration of Chriſts Body. 306
We ought to Adore or honour God as he himſelfe hath appointed. 311
Fond reaſons for Adoration of Images. 367
Aequiuocationis fallacia what it is. 22
Adoes new found Heretikes. 41
Agatho Pope. 141
Agatha in France. 52
Ageſilaus anſwer to the Lacedemonians. 90. 91
Agnus Dei ſung at the diſtribution of the Sacrament deuiſed by Pope Sergius the firſt 328
King Alexanders reaſon of bearing rule. 150
Pope Alexander the third, ſet his foot in the Emperours necke. 215
Alexander Biſhop of Antioch an holy and good Father. 218
Alexius the Emperour praied for 500. yeeres before he was borne. 9. 263

THE TABLE.

To diſcerne Aliud and Idem, is a great part of wiſdome. 308
All, put for Some. All is not all. 120.121
King Aluredus cauſed the Pſalter to be turned into Engliſh. 440
S. Ambroſe neuer ſaid Maſſe but in his death bed being breatheleſſe: as M. Harding imageth. 43
S. Ambroſe the only Biſhop. 180
A notable ſaying of S. Ambroſe. 72
S. Ambroſes Death. 99
S. Ambroſe corrupted by Eutropius. 97
S Ambroſe wreſted by M. Harding. 228
Amen, what it meaneth. 126.146
The peoples anſwering of the Prieſt at Conſecration, Amen, expounded. 403.404.405
Amphilochius, M. Hardings great Doctor, is a vaine pecuiſh fable: full of lies, dreames, viſions, and conference with Diuels. 61.62.63.65.110.111.112
Amphilochius neuer nameth this word, Maſſe. 63
Amphilochius Text ſeuen times together falſified by M. Harding. 63
Amphilochius belieth S. Baſil. 63
Amphilochius vſeth blaſpemy. 63
Amphilochius writeth Thomas Beckets life ſeuen hundred yeeres before he was borne. 63.64
Amphilochius neuer wrote S. Baſils life. 64
Amphilochius prooueth that S. Baſil miniſtred the Communion, and ſaid no Maſſe. 65
Amphilochius condemneth Images. 376
M. Hardings Amphilochius conſecrated Biſhop of Iconium by Angels from heauen. 63
The true Amphilochius a worthy Archbiſhop of Lycaonia. 85
The Anabaptiſts reproued and condemned by D. Luther. 395
M. Hardings Anacletus a very counterfet. 50.166.167
Anacletus a corrupter of the Scriptures. 167
The true Anacletus an holy man. 167
Anaſtaſius a wicked Pope. 206
The Romanes Ancilia. 279
S. Andrew ſaid the Communion, and not the Maſſe 4
Angels at Maſſe. 1
An Angell miniſtred the Sacrament. 63
Angels anſwered Arnolphus the Monke at Mattins at midnight: Et os meum annunciabit laudem tuam. 63
Origens opinion of Angels. 156
Angels preſent at our praiers and other aſſemblies. 433
Angels and Archangels pray for mankind, in what ſenſe. 433
Antichriſts fore-runner is he, that vaunteth himſelfe aboue his brethren. 5
Antichriſt called Deus, is an vniuerſal deſtruction. 44
Antichriſt ruleth and is ouerthrown. 233
Antigonus painted by Apelles, with the half face. 309
Antioch had Deacons, Prieſts & other of the Quire to communicate, beſide the people. 67
Antioch called Head of the world. 232
Antioch called the Apoſtolike See. 171
Antiochus the wicked Prince burnt the books of God. 397
The antiquity of our Fathers without truth is no ſufficient rule of faith. 400.401
Apex taken for a Chronicler. 34
Aphrica ſpake Latine 134.135.136
Aphrica forbidden to appeale to Rome. 158.175.176.186.196.217.228
Aphrica miſerably afflicted and ſpoiled by the Vandales. 218
Apiarius a naughty Prieſt excommunicated in Aphrica, appealed to Rome. 175
The ſame Apiarius reſtored by Zoſimus Biſhop of Rome. 217
The Apoſtles neuer vſed this word, Maſſe. 5
The Apoſtles goe ſome into Italy, ſome into Aſia Minor, ſome into Scythia, ſome into India, ſome into Æthiopia. 7
The Apoſtles doctrine is the triall and rule of faith 182.183
The Apoſtles & other holy Biſhops had wiues. 184
The Apoſtles preeminence, wherin it ſtandeth. 184
The Apoſtles all equall. 230.231
Appeales to Rome condemned by Generall Councels. 197.198
Appeales to Rome condemned by S. Cyprian. 198
Appeales to Rome forbidden by the Emperors. 199
Appeales to Rome vtterly condemned by S. Bernard. 200
Appeales to Rome a Confuſion, a Death, a Poiſon, a Terror, a diſmembring of the Churches. 200
Appeales to Rome in mens miſeries. 200
Appeales from equall to equall. 203
Appeale from the Popeun cauſes of Religion to the Emperours lawful. 204
The Arke of God, called God himſelfe. 297
Argumentum ab Authoritate negatiue, in the Scriptures is good. 51.52
Arguments taken of Gods permiſſion prooueth not the things alwaies to be good. 233
Arguments taken of Gods omnipotent power a ready buckler for the old heretikes. 326
In theſe places following, Gentle Reader, thou maiſt view and behold the faſhion, the weakneſſe, the looſeneſſe, the errors, and the abſurdities committed by M. Harding in his Arguments, Sillogiſmes, and Concluſions. 5.13.15.16.17.18.19 22.23.24.25.26.32.33.35.37.38.40.41.42 44.45.46.48.49.56.59.60.66.68.69.70.74.75.76.78.84.85.86.87.92 93.94.95.96.97.98.99.100.101 102.104.105.115.116.117.118.119.120.121.122.123.124.126.127.128.130.131.136.137.139.140.141.144.148.150.151.152.154.155.157.158.159.160.161.171.172.180.181.182.183.184.185.188.189.190.191.192.194.229.231.232.233.237.239.241.242.248.249.254.255.256.258.261.262.267.270.273.274.286.287.290.291.292.299.310.318.319.325.326.328.329.334.335.336.337.338.339.342.348.349.360.387.389.390.393.401.402.406.407.409.417.419.428.430.443.444.445.446.449.
The aſcenſion of Chriſt maketh againſt the Carnall preſence in the Sacrament. 241.242
Aſia the Leſſe. 119.120
Aſterius had commiſſion to redreſſe the Churches in the Eaſt part of the world. 196
Auguſtine of England dead. 58
Auguſtine of England an hypocrite, cruell, bloody, ſuperſtitious, and proud aboue meaſure. 138.141.142
S. Auguſtine S. Ambroſes ſcholar. 167
A baſtard authoritie in S. Auguſtines name. 339
S. Auguſtine forged by M. Harding. 3
S. Auguſtine neuer vſed this word, Maſſe. 5
S. Auguſtines words corrupted and diſſembled by M. Harding. 16
S. Auguſtine vpon theſe words, Cætera quum venero, diſponam. 16
S Auguſtine falſified, and falſely expounded by M. Harding. 91.93
S. Auguſtine learned the Latine tongue of his nurſe. 134
S. Auguſtine violently falſified by M. Harding. 47
A notable ſaying of S. Auguſtine. 149
S. Auguſtines City of Hippo preſerued from the enemies. 218
S. Auguſtine accurſed, ſet on by the Diuell, liued out of the Church of God, and died a Schiſmatike, by M. Hardings iudgement. 216.217

S. Auguſtine

S. Auguſtine the greateſt diſcloſer of the Popes forgerie. 218
S. Auguſtine wilfully falſified. 230.231
S. Auguſtine regardeth not what hee ſaith: as M. Harding ſaith. 343
The Augurers profeſſion. 133
Auguſtus Cæſars ſaying to his ſonne in Law. 133
Auguſtus Cæſar called Tribunus plebis. 222
Auricular Confeſſion a racke of mens conſciences. 12

Athanaſius being at Praiers with the people in the Church, was beſet with an armie and band of ſouldiers. 200
Athanaſius baniſhed by Conſtantinus the Father: reſtored by Conſtantius the Sonne. 215
Athanaſius full of lies and flatterie. 224.379
A vaine fable fathered vpon Athanaſius. 372.373 375
Athens called Græcia of all Græcia. 220
Iohn the Aulmonar began to bee in eſtimation the yeere of our Lord ſixe hundred and tenne. 57
Iohn the Aulmonar ſaid no Priuate Maſſe. 58
No Altars, nor Chriſtian Churches built in the Apoſtles time. 145
Altars of wood. 145
Altars of ſtone: and why. 145
Altars in Aphrica of boords remooueable. 145
The Communion Table called an Altar, and why 145
Chriſt called our Altar. 145.440.441
Our Altar is in Heauen. 18.440.441
Our heart called our Altar. 145.425.428
One onely Altar or Communion Table in the Church. 362
The Altar or Communion Table ſtood in the midſt of the Church, and the people round about it, that they might heare. 144.145 146.362
The Altar or Communion Table called, Sancta ſanctorum. 145
Auxentius the Heretikes ſaying, agreeing with the ſaying of M. Harding. 440

B

BAcchus and Ceres were neuer worſhipped vnder the Formes of Bread and Wine. 302
Bacchus honoured with wine. 302
Barbarous tongue. 115
The Latine tongue Barbarous. 116
Barbarous Nations ſufficiently inſtructed by Tradition without bookes. 386.387
Bartholomew entred thorow, the doores being ſhut: as M. Hardings Abdias ſaith. 261
Baptiſme. 553
Theſe words, Baptized in the name of Chriſt, Only, inuerted and falſly placed, and wickedly wreſted by M. Harding. 115
To Baptize in the name of Chriſt, what it is. 116
Baptiſme reuerenced as much as the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt. 408.409
A miracle in Baptiſme. 164
Chriſts inuiſible power in Baptiſme. 242.249.250
The effect of Baptiſme. 20.21
In Baptiſme we are made partakers of Chriſts body and blood. 21.239.449
The water of Baptiſme receiueth God, in what ſenſe. 298.303 446
The liuing Baptized for ſuch as were dead. 434
The water in Baptiſme ſuddenly dried vp. 445
The grace of God conteined in Baptiſme, in what ſenſe. 488
Baptiſme receiued vnworthily is condemnation. 284
The water in Baptiſme, and Chriſts blood are both one thing, in what ſenſe. 285
By Baptiſme wee be Incorporate into Chriſt. 27 292
Baptiſme a Sacrifice, in what ſenſe. 287
Baptiſme called Chriſts Paſſion. 285.287
The water in Baptiſme is not bare and common water. 321.322
The water of Baptiſme called the Heauenly Bathe. 351
Chriſts Baptiſme is Chriſts Blood in what ſenſe. 422
Baptiſme of the liuing thought and taught Ex Opere Operato, auaileable for Remiſſion of Sinnes. 437.438
Baptiſme Ex Opere Operato onely, auaileth nothing, nor remitteth any ſinne. 442
Baptiſme miniſtred by theſe words: In nomine patria, & filia, & ſpirita ſancta. 149
S. Baſils Liturgie a Communion, and no Maſſe. 9 65.66
S. Baſil falſified by M. Harding. 36.37
S. Baſils life. 61
S. Baſils words wilfully depraued by M. Harding. 320.324
S Baſil ſhamefully belied of Amphilochius 63
A terrible ſentence of S. Baſils againſt halfe Communioners. 74
That fathered vpon S. Baſil, that was neuer written by S. Baſil. 376.380
S Baſil quite ouerthroweth M. Hard. Maſſe. 38
Thomas Beckets life written ſeuen hundred yeeres before he was borne. 63.64
Tho. Becket and S. Bernard liued at one time. 450
Beda being at Rome expounded theſe foure letters. S P Q R. 219
Iohannes Scotus ſcholar vnto Beda. 244
Beda turned S. Iohns Goſpell into Engliſh. 399.400
This word, Being in, may be taken diuerſlie. 226
One thing may Bee in, at one time in diuers things, in diuers reſpects. 326
Diuers examples of Being in. 447
Beor King in Æthiopia Chriſtned by S. Matthew as Abdias fableth. 7
Berengarius iudgement of the Sacrament. 424.425
Berengarius forced to recant, by Pope Nicolas the ſecond at Rome. 245
Benedicere Sancta, tranſlated to conſecrate the Sacrament. 58.59
S Benets fondneſſe. 63.437
Bek, in the Phrygians tongue ſignifieth bread. 121
Begnardi, and Beguinæ. 281
S Bernard. 169.267 449
S. Bernard complaineth of the Clergie in his time. 13.450
Bertramus. 244
Beſſarion the Cardinall miſtrufteth Clements bookes. 7
Beſſarions minde of conſecration. 14.17
Beſſarion a yoong Doctour yeelded and flattered the Pope. 162.404
Bethleem called, Head of the World, in what ſenſe. 232
Birds taught to ſpeake. 113.126
Birds ſing without vnderſtanding. 126.258
Chriſts Birth called a Sacrifice. 287
The Bible an holſome remedie for the Soule. 384 398
The whole Bible tranſlated into Engliſh about nine hundred yeeres paſt. 397.399
The Bible written out by the Emperour Conſtantinus, and ſent abroad into all his dominions. 397.398
Gabriel Biel. 17.73
The Biſhop of Rome roughly written vnto by Irenæus. 30
Biſhops of Rome, termed Prieſts, without any other Title. 30 41
One Biſhop, what it meaneth. 170.171

The order of electing, installing, confirming, and deposing of Bishops and Priests, and by whom it is done. 171.209.210.211

What Bishops are to bee obeyed and beleeued. 207

Bishops authority contemned breedeth Schismes. 170

Bishops of the Vniuersall Church, and Vniuersall Bishop are not one thing. 222.223.224

The Bishop of Rome neuer called Vniuersall Bishop: nor taken for Head of the Church. 209.221.223. 224.225.226.228.229.230

Euery godly Bishop may bee called Bishop of the Vniuersall Church. 171

The Bishop of Constantinople intitled the Vniuersall Bishop. 224

The Bishop of Alexandria intitled, Iudge of the whole world. ibid.

S. Iames Bishop of Hierusalem, and Bishop of Bishops, and of all Churches. ibid.

Bishops worldly. 390

Vniuersall Brotherhood, what it is. 171

All Bishops and Pastors haue like power to binde and loose. 178

Of Bishops, and of the Vniuersal Bishop looke more in this word, Pope.

The Bishop might not refuse to Communicate with the Priest. 355

Bishops onely are the Apostles Successors, by Anacletus limitation. 389

It is Blasphemie to breake the order of the Canons, as Damasus saith. 58

Blasphemie committed by M. Harding against God and his holy word. 314.387

The Blessing of Bread: what it meaneth. 96

Who be Blessed. 442

Marie the virgin Blessed: and why. ibid.

To drinke Christs Bloud, is to be partaker of his immortalitie. 248

Christs Bloud is of two sorts. 348

Christs Bloud called Spirituall, onely in respect of Spirituall receiuing. 348

Christ shed his Bloud verily and indeed at his last Supper, by M. Hardings construction. 410

Christs Bloud in Baptisme is Inuisible: in what sense. 334

Christ calleth his flesh and Bloud the whole mysticall doctrine of his Gospell, in what sense. 375

The flesh and Bloud of Christ is powred into our eares, when we heare his word. 337.421

The petite degree of the Bloud of Hailes. 373

Forbearing of Bloud, and strangled meates. 89

We do not receiue Christs Body bodily and grossly with our mouth into our Bodies. 28

Christs Body (in the Sacrament) is not of more efficacie then his word. 34.35

We our selues be made Christs Body. 21

Christs Body in the Sacrament Buried is horrible blasphemie. 63.64.100

Christs Body, and the Sacrament be not one thing. 64.282.283.286

Christ hath one Body in the Bread, and an other in the Wine by M. Hardings diuinitie. 73. 110.111

Christs Body is in Heauen: How we may come to it, and behold it. 298.299.447

The very presence of Christs Body and Bloud in the Masse, cannot be prooued by any Scripture. D. Fisher. 236

These words, This is my Bodie, diuersly glosed. 236

The same words expounded of the holy Fathers and Doctors figuratiuely. 237.238.239. 243.328. 331.332.338.342.343.344.345 346.352.354.

Twelue especiall causes, why the same words are to be expounded Figuratiuely. 353

The same words miserably handled by M. Harding, contrary to all learned men. 410.412 414

¶ This Pronoune, Hoc, in Hoc est Corp. me. diuisly wrested by the schoole Doctors. 463.464

Christs Body may be receiued, and eaten verily and indeed without the Sacrament. 238.239 255. 256.292.448.449

Christs Body Spiritually, truly, and verily, and by Faith onely eaten, and receiued in the Sacrament. 237.238 255.256.267.268

The true Doctrine of Christs Bodie and Blood in the Sacrament. 237.238

Abraham, Moses, Aaron, Phinees, receiued Christs Body. 229.350

The difference betweene the Sacramentall Bread, and Christs Body. 241

The grosse Bodily presence of Christ in the Sacrament improoued by his Ascension. 241.242

These words, This is my Body miserably mangled by M. Hardings strange glosses and monstrous figures. 243.267.341.342 354

Christs glorious Body. 246

Christs Body not yet fully glorified, A vaine fantasie. ibid.

Christs Body Deified, what it meaneth. 427

Christs glorious Body in substance is the same now it was before his resurrection. 247

Christs Body present before Consecration, by them of M. Hardings side. 463

These words, This is my Body, be not the words of Consecration, as Pope Innocentius saith. ibid.

Christs Body is laid, or placed vpon the Table, in what sense. 250.251.288.299

Christs Body dwelleth in vs naturally by the water of Baptisme. 286

Christs Body dwelleth in our Bodies foure waies, and that Naturally, Really, Substantially, &c. 254.256.257

Christs Body mingled with our bodies in what sense. 254

These termes Corporally, Naturally, expounded by the Fathers. 256 257.258

Christs Body is neither a Creator, nor a Creature, but a meane betweene both, as M. Harding imagineth. 259.266

Sundrie errors concerning Christs Body. 170.171 259.260

Christs Body ioined to the Godhead is still a Creature. 170.259 260.261

Christs Body can not bee in many places at one time. 260.454

Christs Body in many places: in what sense. 170.268

Christs Body entred, the doores being shut. 261

Christs Body inferior to the Godhead. 260.263

Christs Body in the Sacrament, neither bigge, nor little, nor long, nor short, as M. Harding dreameth. 170.262.469

Euery naturall Body is in a place. 262

Christ touching his Body in a place: touching his spirit without limitation of place. 263

Christs humane Body in one place, and in Heauen onely. 169 170 262.276.277

Iohn Baptist, Abel, and Esay held Christ in their hands. 265.299

The Sacrament of Christs Body is Christs Body, as Elias Coat is Elias. 265

Christs Body is meat for the minde, and not for the belly. 166.240.319.320.444

The Catholike faith of Christs Body. 171

Christ is not to be sought vpon the earth. 166.272 298

Christs Body not offered vp by vs: but it offreth vs vp daily vnto God the Father. 167

Christ full heere, and full there: in what sense. 268

Christs Body crucified in a thousand places at once. Holcot. 270

Christs Body might haue beene both quicke and dead at one time D Holcot. 270
Christs Body in the Sacrament: by the similitude of the sunne. 271.272
Christs Body in the Sacrament how. 340.447
Christ Borne in his owne hands, in what sense. 274. 275
Christs Body eaten, in what sense. 237.238
The Sacrament called Christs Body, and Christs Fleth, in what sense. 274.275.284 285
To be present in a mysterie, and to be present carnally be contraries. 276
The word of God is more truely the Body and Bloud of Christ then the Sacrament. 285
The Body of Christ it selfe is receiued of all men vnto life: and of no man vnto death. 64.241.289
Christ Sacrificed himselfe at his last Supper, in what sense. 287.417
Christ absent in Body. 298
The very Body of Christ is not conteined in the holy vessels. 35.298.309.438
The spirituall seeing of Christs Body. 299.300.301
These words, The Bloud is the Soule, and, this is my Body, resembled together as like speeches. 313.346
Manna made Christs Body. 323
Bread is Christs Body, in what sense. 298.299 303. 313 314.321.322.334.351.447.466
The Body of our Lord is of three Formes: a monstrous speech. 328
Christs Body inuisibly, in what sense. 334
Secretly or Couertly, hidden or couered, Visible and Inuisible. 250.333 334.340 349.350.351
The Bread made Christs Body, in what sense. 315. 316
Christs Body made of the Substance of Bread, by M. Hardings Glosses. 359
Tertullian vnderstandeth not these words, This is my Body, as M. Harding imagineth. 341
Christs Body made present before Consecration, by M. Hardings Diuinitie. 342
The very Body of Christ may not be called a Sacrament. 351.352
The Heauenly Bread is Christs Body, in what meaning. 351
The very Body of Christ is not verily, indeed, and aptly called the Body of Christ, but improprie, vnaptly, vnfitly, and after a maner. 352.354
The difference deuised by M. Harding betweene Christs Body in Substance, and the selfe same Body in respect of qualities, is a vaine Glose. 352
Christs Body, when he ministred the holy Communion, was earthly, visible, and mortall. ibid.
Christ hath two sorts of naturall bodies, by M. Hardings Glose. 353
Christs Body a Figure of the life to come, prooued by the Portuise. 335
Christs Body it selfe may be the Sacrament as M. Harding saith. 338
Christs Body inuisible, a Figure of Christs Body visible, is M. Hardings Glose. 345
The Body of Christ it selfe entreth not into our Bodies. 444
Christs Body is no corporall food. ibid.
The Doctrine of the Ancient Fathers touching Christs Body, and the eating of the same. 444. 445
The doubtfull doctrine of M Hardings side, touching the maner of Christs Body being in the Sacrament. 456.457
That a Mouse may eate the Body of Christ, is a vile asseueration, as M. Harding saith. 459
That a Mouse or Dogge eating the hoste or Sacrament, receiueth the Body of Christ, holden for Catholike doctrine. 459.460
Blasphemous, horrible, and lothsome speeches of Christs Bodie eaten of Mise and other beastes. 460 461
The wicked receiue not the Body of Christ. 461. 462
Great difference betweene Christs Body and the Sacrament. 64 65.240.241 443 448.462
That Christs Body lieth or sitteth in the forme of Bread, holden for Catholike doctrine 469.470
The Body of Christ in the Sacrament, as great in quantitie as he was vpon the Crosse, by M. Hardings Doctour. 469
After what maner Christs Body both is, and is not in the Sacrament, by M. Hardings strange doctrine. 470
The spirituall eating of Christs Body. 239 240.241. 242. 247. 248 249. 250.289. 290.291.292.298 299. 319.320 448.449 462
These words, Except yee eat the Fleth of the Sonne of man, pertaine not to the Sacrament. 77.78. 240.241. 291
The same words expounded by Origen. 332.344
That Christs Body is carnally eaten, is a doctrine of desperation. 238.291
Christs Body it selfe is a Figure, as M. Harding imagineth. 332.341
The breaking of the Accidents is a Figure of Christs Body breaking, by M Harding. 337
Christs Body more glorious in the Sacrament then in Heauen, by M. Harding. 262
Bohemia hath the Communion vnder both kindes granted by the Councell of Basil. 73
Bonifacius the Pope obteined of the Emperor Phocas that Rome was called the Head of all Churches. 58
Bonifacius fondly abuseth these words, In principio creauit Deus cœlum & terram. 190
Bonifacius blinde Glose vpon these words, Feede my sheepe. 228
Daily Bread. 18
Common Bread vsed to be sent from Bishop to Bishop, in token of consent in Religion. 30.31
Bread remaineth in the Sacrament still. 34.73.103 110. 284. 303 304.312. 313.314.318 319.321 322. 323 324 327.336.442.454 455.466.467
Bread is the Sacrament of Christs Body, the Wine of his Bloud. 75.74
The Bread changed into a stone. 101.102
The Bread of the Sacrament is materiall Bread. 284
Bread signifieth the Body of Christ. Chrysost. 446. 447
The Sacramentall Bread kept seuen yeeres. 63.64
The shewbread eaten. 85
These words, The Bread that I will giue, is my flesh expounded. 239 240.241.290.292
The Bread in the Sacrament is nothing in comparison of Christs Body that is represented. 320. 321.322
S. Cyprians words; The Bread changed not in Forme, but in Nature, expounded. 315.316
Bread is Christs Body, in what sense. 298.299.303. 313.314.321.322.335.351.447.466.467
The Sacramentall Bread round as a pennie: and why, Durande. 329
The Bread of such Bignesse, and Thicknesse, that it serued the whole people, and was cut with a great knife, called Sacra lancea, prouided for the same purpose. 327.329
Of the breaking of the Sacrament into three parts, diuers fond fantasies. 327
The Breaking of the Sacrament argueth Bread to remaine still. 327.330
The Breaking of the Sacramentall Bread in many peeces improoueth priuate Masse, and Sole receiuing. 327
The Breaking of the Mysteries into three onely parts parts not found in the Scriptures or ancient Doctors. 327.330

The Breaking, cutting, and diuiding of the Bread into parts, was, to the intent, to be distributed to the people. 330
These words of S. Chrysostome, The Bread is consumed by the force of the Diuine power, expounded. 465.466
The Sacrament called the Heauenly Bread. 352
Christ is the Bread, or food whereby we liue, in what sense. 445.448.449
These words of S. Augustine, The Flesh of the Lord couered in the Forme of Bread expounded. 468.469
Christ and his Apostles bring Bread from Heauen at S. Basiles Masse: as M. Harding auoucheth. 61
D Bucers meaning wrested by M Harding. 81.82
D. Bucers death. 252
S. Mathie desired to haue two stones Buried with him as M. Hardings Abdias saith. 101

C

CAbasilas a yoong Doctor of M. Harding. 320. 324
Iulius Cæsars theft. 357
Cetera quum vetero disponam, Construed for the foundation of the Priuate Masse by M. Hard. 17
Caligulaes feast. 149
Cancelli, or, the Chauncell in the middest of the Church. 146
To breake the Canons is blasphemie. 58
The Authoritie of the Canons. ibid.
The Canons of the Councell of Nice burnt at Alexandria. 174
Canopie. 307
M. Harding can not finde his Canopie in the primitiue Church. 308
Hanging vp of the Sacrament in a Canopie is accessorie to Idolatrie. 307
The Sacramentall Bread ought not to be shut vp in a pixe or Canopie. ibid.
Canopie breedeth Idolatrie. 309
Keeping of the Sacrament in a Canopie misliked of Lynwood. ibid.
Hanging of the Sacrament in a Canopie refused of the whole world, England only excepted. 311
The Capernaites grosse error: and the cause of the same. 240.241
Carnall vnderstanding, what. 240.290
Cardinals negligent in receiuing the Communion. 12
Carnevale with the Italians is the first weeke in Lent. 4
The duty of the Catechistes. 386
Catechumeni 9.12.56
Catechumeni sequestred as well from the presence of Baptisme, as from the Lords Supper. 508.509
Catholikes fewe in Rome Church. 53
Who be Catholikes. 53.54.55.182
Cednam an English Poet translated the Genesis, and Exodus, and diuers other stories of the Bible into English rime. 400 401
Ceres honored of the Heathens. 302
Moses Ceremonies be called the Elements of this world: and why. 25
Beggerly Ceremonies. ibid.
Ceremonies abused. ibid.
The Church oppressed with too many Ceremonies. 26
Ceremonies diuised, the causes thereof scarcely knowen, ought to be abolished. 33.279
Ceremonies to be vsed freely. 87
All Ceremonies in the Church ought to Edifie. 328.329.
Ceremonies broken by M. Harding. 329
Cherinthus an Heretike. 316
The Cherubines. 369.370
Christ praied for in the Masse. 430
Christ entreth vnder our roofe by two sundrie waies. 444
Christ hath two Bodies; one in the Bread, and another in the Cup, by M. Hardings doctrine. 109.110.111
Christ our Altar. 145
Christ hath two distinct and sundrie natures. 260.261.262.289
Christ is become all things vnto vs. 290
Christs godhead cannot be Eaten. 292.293
Christs humanitie may be eaten. 292.293
Christ entreth into the Faithfull two waies. 297
Christ called poore: in what sense. 301
Christ eaten of the Poore. 302
Christ only Head of the Church. 191
Christs Vicar. 192
Christ very God. 282
Diuers waies of comming to Christ. 446.447
Christ is the daily, and euerlasting food. 47
Chrysostome called the Teacher of the whole World. 228
Chrysostomes Liturgie or Communion. 8.9
Chrysostome nipped by M. Harding. 49
Chrysostomes words to them that stand by, and receiue not the Communion. 69
Chrysostome quite ouerthroweth the Priuate Masse. 66.67.68
Chrysostomes vehemency of speech. 66
Chrysostome misreported by M. Harding. 93.94
Chrysostome notoriously falsified by M. Harding. 200.201
Chrysostome neuer appealed to Rome. 201.202
The whole Church answereth the Priest, and receiueth together. 9
The Church of Rome and the Cardinals condemned by M. Harding. 18
The Church inferiour to Christ. 363
The authoritie of the Church. 167
In stead of this word, Churches, M. Harding translated, Martyrs Shrines. 39
The diuision of the Church into Greeke and Latine is vnperfect. 118
A Church with M. Harding signifieth a Priuate house. 41
S. Peters Church. 50
The Church is no Church without Christ and God. 74.75
The false Church. 273
The Church ought to be directed by Gods word. 88.89
The Church hath her light of Gods word. 88.89
The Church of Rome not Catholike. 88
The Church omnipotent, a dangerous doctrine. 89
No Christian Churches built in the Apostles time. 145
The difference betweene the Primitiue Church and the Church of Rome. 151
The East Churches miserably afflicted. 200
The Vniuersall Church, and the Catholike Church be one thing. 223
To rule the Church, what it meaneth. 228
The Church built vpon all the Apostles equally. 230.231
The determination of the Church variable, vncertaine, and sometimes vntrue. 363.364
The Church of God resembled vnto a vine, a cornfield, and vnto a flocke of sheepe. 365
The Church not to be beleeued, vnlesse it do agree with the Scriptures. 396
The new Latine Church disagreeth from the Old. 367

All

All Churches called the first and Apostolike Churches. 183
The Church kept in vnity not by Christ, but by the Pope: as M. Harding saith. 190.191
The Church or House of God, what it meaneth. 228.229
Ciuill policies necessary. 33
Circumcision omitted. 86
Circumcision onely Ex opere operato auaileth nothing. 442
Circumstances, and cases of necessity make that lawfull, which otherwise is vnlawfull. 44.86
Clemens, M. Hardings owne Doctour neuer vsed this word Masse. 5
Clemens, M. Hardings Doctour of what Authoritie. 6
Clemens had but one only Epistle worthy to be receiued which now is not extant. 6
Bookes abroad of vnpure Doctrine in the name of M. Hardings Clement. 6.7
Clement M. Hardings Doctour lately found in the Ile of Candie, by one Carolus Capellius. 6
Clemens Bishop of Rome, as it is supposed, next after S. Peter. 6
Clements eight bookes condemned by Pope Gelasius. 6
Clements bookes disallowed by Hierome, and Eusebius. 6.8
Clements bookes mistrusted by Cardinall Bessarion. 7
The Clergie void of deuotion. 13
The Clergie of Rome very great. 67
The Clergie of Rome receiueth not the Communion. 18
The Clergie abridged at Constantinople by Iustinian the Emperour. 67
Worldly cares in the Clergie. 390
The negligence of the Clergie breedeth the vndeuotion of the people, by M. Hard. confession. 46
Ioan. Cochlæus. 255
Cedrus Curtius. 247
M. Iohn Collets iudgement of Dionysius Ariopagita. 8
These Commandements, Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not steale. 8889.370
A blind Commentary contrary to the Text 538
The Communion is a common feast. 2
Poison ministred in the Communion Bread, in the Chalice. 2
The Communion ministred by S. Thomas 9
The Communion ministred by S. Matthew. 9
The Communion thorowly proued. 9.70.71
The Communion proued by S. Basils Liturgie, and by Ignatius. 9
The Communion proued by Dionysius Martyr, as it was in his time. 9
The Communion receiued in the Primitiue Church euery day, as M. Harding witnesseth. 11.13.48
The Councell of Bracara decreed Excommunication against non Communicants. 11
The Communion but once in a day in the Primitiue Church. 13
The holy Communion hath an oblation. 15
To the Communion is required a number, by Christs words, and the Fathers. 16.24.29. 32.38
Who may receiue the Communion. 18
The Communion neuer vntill this day in the Greek Church vnder one kinde. 101.102
The Communion taketh his name of Communicating together. 20.21.23
Diuers significations of this word Communio. 21. 22 23. 31
The Communion of the Church standeth in sundrie respects. 21.22
Communion after Supper. 24
The Communion not ministred to the Excommunicate. 24
Chrysostomes words to them that come and receiue not the Communion. 69
The Communion receiued euery day of the people in Rome. 359
Communion only vpon the Sunday. 46.48
Communion in Rome euery Sunday. 53.55
The Communion thrust into dead mens mouthes. 24.63.104
Communion without Wine. 25
Communion with water and wine. 32
The Communion is not the efficient cause of our Incorporation into Christ: but confirmeth or sealeth the same. 27.28
Often receiuing of the Communion, Ex opere operato only, auaileth nothing. 442
The Communion ioineth the faithfull both vnto God, and betweene themselues: how to be vnderstanded. 27.28
The Communion receiued with the peoples hand. 36.37.38
Communion foure times in the weeke. 38
Communion daily at Rome. 39.48.51.559
Communion receiued at home, reproued. 39.98
The Communion better than the Masse by M. Hardings confession. 45
Christs example and commandement is of the Substance of his Institution. 45.46
Communion greater than Consecration. 46
Communion in Rome vnder both Kindes. 53
They were not reckened for Catholike that Communicated not three times in the yeere. 53.54
Communion in all Cathedrall Churches. 54.55
Communion in priuate houses, and the same forbidden. 56
Offenders kept from the Communion. 56
In the Communion the people said the Lords Prair all together. 58
No Communicants thrust foorth of the Church. 59
A number of Deacons, Priests, and the Quire receiued the Communion together. 66.67
The Clergie and Quire not communicating, sufficient cause not shewed, stood Excommunicate. 67
He that doth not Communicate may not be present at the praiers. 69
The holy Communion called the vnbloody Sacrifice: in what sense. 426.427
Communion vnder one Kind proued by women, children, Infants, and madmen. 72 104
The Communion in Bohemia vnder both Kindes, granted by the Councell of Basil. 72
Communion vnder both Kindes by the Councell of Trident. 72
The beginning of the errour of the halfe Communion vncertaine. 72
The Halfe Communion sprang of the simplicitie and superstition of the people. 72.77
He that celebrateth the Communion otherwise than the Lord deliuered it, is vnworthy of the Lord, accursed, and committeth spirituall robberie. 72.74.79.87
In the Communion ought to be no difference made betweene the Priest, and the people. 73.75 102
The Communion vnder one Kinde of lesse efficacie: and an iniury vnto the people. 73.74
Whole Christ in either part. 73.74
Mens beards, feare of the palsie, and shaking, causes of the Halfe Communion. 74
These words, Drinke ye all of this, pertaine aswell to the people as to the Priests: The same words expounded. 76.77.88.90
The Communion ministred in both Kindes to the people by Clement. 76

The

THE TABLE.

The Communion miniſtred in both Kinds to the people by Chriſts inſtitution: and the Apoſtles. 77.79 87.88

The Communion in diuers Churches in both Kindes by the ſpace of a Thouſand and three hundred yeeres without controlment. 77

The words of S. Iohn, Except ye eat the fleſh of the Sonne of man, &c. pertaine not directly to the Sacrament. 78

The deliuery of the Cuppe to the people is part of Chriſts Inſtitution. 79.105

Com. in all Churches through the world in both Kindes, ſauing in the Church of Rome. 82

The Danger of breaking Chriſts Inſtitution, and ordinance. 82

The Halfe Communion falſely fathered vpon D. Bycer, and Melancthon, by M. Harding. 82

M. Hardings Halfe Comunion ſtandeth vpon an Hereſie that was neuer holden nor heard of. 83 84

Norwey had a diſpenſation to miniſter the Communion without Wine. 10.11.25.363.364

M. Hardings proofes, that Chriſts inſtitution in the Communion may be broken. 86

Each man receiueth the Communion for himſelfe, and not one for an other. 433 434

Children admitted, or kept backe from the Communion. 90

Theſe words of S. Paul, Haue ye not houſes to eat and drinke in, how to be taken by Eraſmus. 40

The great inconueniences of the Communion in both Kindes. 91

Chriſt miniſtred no Communion at Emaus. 91.92

The Communion carried about to others in both Kindes. 96.97

What Companie required at the miniſtration of the Communion. 57.58

Children, and Infants receiued the Communion in both Kindes. 103.104

Abuſes about the Communion. 105

M. Hardings proofes for halfe Communion briefly collected. 105.106

The Halfe Communion is Sacriledge. 108

The Cup, or Blood of Chriſt caſt away. 169

Heretikes the firſt authors of Halfe Communion. 109 110

Communion vnder both Kindes miniſtred to the people. 111

Communion vnder both Kindes miniſtred to William Conquerours whole army. 111.112

The Biſhop might not refuſe to communicate with the Prieſt. 355

Two Communions in one day: and the cauſe therof. 355.358.359

The ſame Communions miniſtred by one, and not by diuers Prieſts. 360

The Church filled with people communicating. 358 359

Theſe words, Doe this in Remembrance of mee, be of the ſubſtance of Chriſts inſtitution. 17

All Prieſts preſent did Communicate with the Prieſt that miniſtred. 355

The Communion Tables ſtood in the middeſt of the Church. 144.145.146

One Communion Table ſufficient: and that in the middeſt. 362

This Terme, Concomitantia, childiſhly applied by M. Harding for Adoration. 295

By Concomitantia, M. Hardings Figure, one is made two, and two are made one. 295.296.354

Auricular Confeſſion a racke of the Conſcience. 16

Without Auricular Confeſſion no way to Heauen. 12

Without Confeſſion Auricular no man ſuffered to be buried. 12

Auricular Confeſſion not exacted of the old Fathers. 12

Confeſſion onely to God, in the Greeke, and Eaſt Churches. 12

Confeſſion for one day once in a yeere, is childiſh, and Iewiſh. 13

A Confirmation of Faith, without words, or proofs, onely by bare names. M. Harding. 4.5

Confirmation miniſtred by the Biſhop only. 187

Cornelius wearie of his Biſhopricke of Rome 370

Contention in Diuine matters dangerous. 387

The Contentious man. 342.343

The Pax, or holy Croſſe. 114

M. Hardings Conſtancie. See more in this word, Harding. 288

Conſtantinople called new Rome. 180

Conſtantinople the Mother of the Chriſtian faith 180

Conſtantinus the firſt Chriſtened Emperour 317

Conſtantinus, his eies pulled out by his wicked Mother the Empreſſe. 314

Conſtantinus cauſed the Bible to be written out, and to be ſent into all his dominions. 397

Conſtantinus donation. 177

Conſtantinus the Father baniſhed Athanaſius. Conſtantinus the Sonne reſtored him, and not the Pope. 214.215

Conſecration. 14.15.16.17

The Aduerſaries be not yet reſolued wherein ſtandeth Conſecration. 14.15

The true doctrine of Conſecration. 14.15

Conſecration ſtandeth not in altering, and tranſubſtantiating of Natures. 15

Doubts concerning Conſecration. 305.306

No Conſecration vſed in Lent, but only vpon Saturdaies, and Sundaies. 19.102.389

Conſecration in two ſorts: one perfit, an other vnperfit, by M. Hardings iudgement. 320.324

Conſecration wrought in an inſtant: as the ſchoole men ſay. 324

Conſecration cloſely pronounced, or a loud, a ſmall keie of Religion, as M. Harding confeſſeth. 401

Chriſt Conſecrated vnder Silence. 401

Conſecration with a loud voice: and the people anſwer Amen. 403

M. Harding proueth Conſecration to be pronounced with a loud voice, contrarie to his owne aſſertion. 403.406

No decree made by the Fathers for cloſe Conſecration in the weſt Church: as M. Harding forgeth. 406

Theſe words, This is my Body, be not the words of Conſecration. Durandus, Innocentius. 463

The cauſe of Cloſe Conſecration. 407.408

Conſecration, before Conſecration; and Conſecration without Conſecration, by the Doctours of M. Hardings ſide. 463

The ſhepheards Conſecration in the field ouer their bread vpon a ſtone, is a fond fable. 407.408

The appurtenances due to the Roman Conſecration. 408

In old times the praier ouer the Oblation before Conſecration, was pronounced with a loud voice. 409

The Councell of Bracara decreed Excommunication againſt non Communicants. 11.48

The Councell of Agatha and Iliberis, againſt Priuate Maſſe. 53.55.56.360

Councels alleged by M. Harding that cannot be found. 52

The Councell of Gerunda. 54

The Councell of Matiſcona. 55

The Councell of Antiſiodorum. 55.361

The Councell of Gangra. 56

The Councell of Lateran not receiued generally. 314

Generall Councels. 153.154

The

The Church reformed without Generall Councels. 153
The vanities of the second Councell of Nice. 374 376.377.380.381 382
The first Councell of Ephesus falsified by M. Harding. 83
Councels inferiour to the Scriptures. 364
The Councell of Laodicea. 42.58.67
There are but twenty Canons of the Councell of Nice extant. 177.178
The Councell of Nice forged by the Pope. 176.217
The Canons of the Councell of Nice burnt at Alexandria. 174
A whole Councell giueth place to one man onely. 88
The Councell of Constance. 83
The Councell of Nice. 67
The Councell of Nice corrupted. 97.250
The Councell of Carthage. 67
The Councell of Toledo. 365
The Councell of Ephesus neuer moued to haue the Communion in one kind, as M. Harding vntruly reporteth. 83.84
Councels aboue God and his Word. 88 90.91
The Councell of Constantinople. 101
The Councell of Laterane determined Transubstantiation. 314
The credit of the Councell of Chalcedon. 221
The Emperour confirmed Councels. 213.214
Councels summoned by the Emperours only, and not by the Pope. 193
Councels ratified maugre the Popes beard. 214
The Councell of Basill refused as vnlawfull. 92.107
The Councell of Constance decreed against Nature, against Scriptures, against Antiquitie, and against the Faith of the Church. 92.107
Councell sought for of a woman in cases of Religion. 220
Plinies councell. 291
D. Cranmer. 318
D. Cranmer burnt at Rome in a Mummerie: at the same time arraigned in Oxford, and iudged afterward to be burnt. 358
The Title of the Crosse written in three sundrie languages, and why. 122
A wodden Crosse praied vnto. 296
The Crosse not worshipped of Helena, 372
The Crosse. 370.371.372
No Crosse set vp in the Church. 372
Cups of Gold and treen Cups. 13
The Cup, or Christs Blood consecrated cast away. 109
Custome. 37.72
Custome the best expounder of the Law. 76.89
Custome without truth the Mother of Errour. 37 72
Custome or continuance without truth, is no sufficient Rule of Faith. 400.401
S. Cyprians words, Vna est Dominj Ecclesia in qua agnus editur, expounded. 21
S. Cyprians words, The Bread changed not in shape or forme, but in nature, expounded. 315.316
M. Hardings Cyrillus Hierosolomitanus is an old author newly set foorth. 321

D

DAmascenus not without some follies and errours. 342
Damasus corrupted by M. Harding. 40
Damasus patched Doctour Ado. 41
Damasus. 50.58
Damasus a Bishop of Rome, called the Ruler of the Church or house of God, in what sense. 228
Deacons permitted to consecrate and minister the Sacrament vnto the people. 97
S. Laurence a Deacon consecrated the Lords Body. 97
Deacons forbidden by decree to consecrate. 97
The Deacons were woont to call vpon the people to pray. 132.133.146
The merit of Christs death applied to man by mean of the Masse. 436
Decius. 247
The Decrees and Decretall Epistles are not congrue Latine, depraue the Scriptures, and bee full of lies. 50.51.166.167.173.174
To Deifie, what it meaneth. 247
Demoratus saying to King Philip of Macedonie. 294
Deuotion cold in the Priests. 13
A good Lesson how to die well. 99
Dionysius one of M. Hardings witnesses sheweth euidently the order & ministration of the Communion in his time: and neuer speaketh word of the Masse. 9.20
M. Hard. concealeth and nippeth Dionysius words. 20
Dionysius alleged by M. Harding is not that Arriopagita that was S. Pauls Disciple, by Erasmus and M. Collets Iudgement. 8
Dissemblers. 222.367
Dissension for Easter day. 30
Dissension among the aduersaries for Christs presence. 236
Dissension among the Schoolemen of M. Hardings side. 294.463.464
Dissension among the Apostles, Doctours, Martyrs, and Christians. 294.295 396
In Dissension of Religion Gods word ought to bee Iudge. 396
Dishes prouided for the people to receiue in. 9
Disiunctiues sometime taken for Copulatiues: and Copulatiues for Disiunctiues. 95
A vaine Distinction of Substantia and Accidens. 17
The Diuell assaulteth the godly. 2.3
The Diuell sheweth not himselfe openly with his whole face, 309
The reading and knowledge of the Scriptures is a torment aboue all torments to the Diuell. 472
Diuersity in iudgement is cause of attention. 295
Of the Diuision of the Sacrament in three parts, fond fantasies. 327
The Diuision of the Sacrament improoueth priuate Masse, and sole receiuing. 327 328
Diuision of the Sacrament in three parts, and so receiued cannot bee prooued by the Scriptures or Doctours. 327.328.330
The Doctours brought in by M. Harding in a mummerie. 5
The people likened to Dogges by them of M. Hardings side. 383
Dominica Iudica is passion Sundaie by the Portuise. 4
The Dominicke Friars, an hundred yeeres before D. Luther. 52
Dominus vobiscum. 51
The Donastites Heretikes. 57
The Golden Dooue. 63.64
Golden and Siluerne Dooues. 312
A dead Dooue that had Spirit and Life. 312
A mathematicall Dooue. 312
The holy Ghost made a Dooue, in what sense. 315
Doulia, and Latria. 381.382.383
Drinking, and Quaffing ouer the dead, vsed as a religion to please God withall. 39
A Miraculous Drunkennesse. 461

E

The East Churches miserably afflicted. 200
Easter day kept after the Greeke Church here in this this Ile of Brittaine. 6.7.124.142.

Contention for the keeping of Easter day. 30
Eating of the Passeouer. 90
The sweet bread Eaten. 85.86
Eating of Blood. 88.89
The Spirituall Eating of Christs Body. 239.240 241. 242.247.248.249.250.290.291. 292.293.298. 299.319.320.448.449 450.462
The rich Eat Christ, and be not filled. 301.302
These words, Except ye Eat the flesh of the Sonne of man, &c. pertaine not to the Sacrament. 77 78.241.291.292
The same words expounded by Origen. 332.343
That Christs Body is carnally Eaten, is a doctrine of Desperation. 238.291
These words of S Paul, Haue ye not houses to Eat, and Drinke in, expounded by Eras. 40
To Eat Christ truely, what it meaneth. 251.454.555
To Eat. 292
We cannot Eat the Godhead of Christ. 292.293
We may Eat the Humanity of Christ 292.293
The poore Eat Christ and are filled. 302
Ebion an Heretike. 315
Ecclesia, with M. Harding, signifieth a priuate house. 41
Ecclesiasticall Iudges are often deceiued. 87
Edwine King of England. 40
We haue two sorts of Eies. 324
To pull out the Eie is an Allegorie. 100
Egypt extreme hoat. 102
Eleuation tyrannously maintained. 278 279
Eleuation no Article nor Keie of Religion, by M. Hardings confession. 278 279
When, where, and wherefore Eleuation was deuised not yet certainly knowen. 278.279
These words, Sancta Sanctis, make nothing for Eleuation. 280
Eleuation the cause of Adoration, by M. Hardings iudgement. 278
Diuers fond Mysticall significations of Eleuation. 278.279
Certaine Scriptures wrested, and falsified for Eleuation. 279
Eleuation neuer vsed in the Greeke Church. 281
Eleuation a matter of speciall meed. 279
Eleuation seemeth to take his beginning from the Iewes. 281
Eleuation of the Gospell: and other gifts for the poore. 281
Eleuation maketh vtterly against priuate Masse. 281
Pope Eleutherius letters for order of the Church to Lucius King of England. 142
Eleutherius being Pope called Lucius King of England Gods Vicar. 142.241
Elias called the Head of the Prophets. 231
Elias compared with Christ. 265
Elias coat called Elias. 265
Elias coat compared with the Sacrament. 265
Eliber is Granado. 52
The Emperour confirmed Councels. 213.214
The fall of the Empire. 181
The Emperours summoned the Councels, and not the Pope. 193
The Emperours tooke in hand the hearing of Ecclesiasticall causes. 200
Marcus Ephesus wilfully depraued S. Basiles words 320.324
Ephrems Homilies. 116.117
The Epicures fantasie of God, Nature, and the Gouernment of the world. 273
Epistles Decretall: and the authority thereof. 50. 51.166.167
Energumeni. 173.174
The Church of England receiued instructions of Seruice from the Grecians, and not from Rome. 125.142
England refused the Pope, and Augustine. 124.143
The first planting of Religion in England. 124.141 142
Of whom, when, and whence England receiued the Gospell. 42.124.142
England had no Latine Seruice within the first six hundred yeeres. 142
Erasmus iudgement of Dionysius called Ariopagita. 8
Erasmus receiued, and reiected with one breath. 38.
Erasmus falsly reported by M. Harding. 39
Errors in the Priuate Masse, by the confession of the aduersaries. 40
The errors of the Manichees, and Marcion, touching Christ, and his Body. 18.109.259.260. 270.271
The error of the Capernaites, and the cause of the same. 240.241
A new strange error of M. Hardings. 451
Errors of simplicity. 89
Et cum spiritu tuo, expounded by Chrysostome. 126
Euaristus. 50
Eubulus, a substantiall witnesse to S. Basils Masse. 65
This word Eucharistia, taken for common Bread. 51
Eucharistia, in the Punike tongue called Life. 134
Eucharistia, Englished by M. Harding, The Blessed Sacrament in forme of Bread. 278
Euchitæ. 64
Eusebius had commission ro redresse the West Churches of the world. 196
Eutiches errors concerning Christs Body. 246.247. 260.401
Eutiches the heretike said, euen as M. Harding now saith. 401
Eutropius depraueth S. Ambrose. 97
Excommunication. 24.29.30
Excommunication against no Communicants. 11. 12.53.67
Excommunication against Locusts, Snakes, Caterpillers, &c. 30
The Excommunicate receiued not with the Congregation. 35
Excommunication for Idolatry. 35
Exuperius Bishop of Tholouse in France. 97

F

This Latine word, Facere, in what sense the Fathers vse it. 316
Faith confirmed without words with M. Harding. 5
Faith doth incorporare vs with Iesu Christ. 87
Faith called the Altar of God. 428
Faith not necessary for him that will receiue the Sacrament, Cardinall Caietane. 438
The Faithfull receiue Christ into them two wayes. 297
Fallacia equiuocationis. 32
Fallacia ab Amphibologia. 397
Fallacia a secundum Quid ad simpliciter. 407
Familiar vse breedeth contempt. 156
The Old Fathers iudgement of the Sacrament. 451 452.453.454.455.464
A feast is not for one alone. 2
Caligulaes feast. 149
These words, Feed my Sheep, glosed by Pope Bonifacius the eight. 228
Figures: and Figuratiue speeches. 237.238.239
To take a Figure for the thing it selfe is a fruitles, and bondage of the Soule. 237.238
This word, Figura, signifieth a shew alone without any substance. 317
These words, Figura, Forma, and Species, signifie not only the outward shew, shape, or appearance, but sometimes ſometimes the very Nature, and Subſtance it ſelfe. 317. 323. 324. 350. 469

This word, Figure, ſcorned by M. Harding. 331

Figures. 331

The Sacrament is a Figure. 331. 332. 333. 335. 336 343. 344. 345. 352. 353

Chriſts Body it ſelfe is a Figure, by M Hardings Gloſſes. 332

M. Hardings ſtrange Gloſſes, of this word, Figure. 331. 333. 341. 344. 345. 346. 353. 354

Chriſts Body is a Figure of the life to come: is a new deuiſed doctrine. 335

The Breaking of the Accident is a Figure of the breaking of Chriſts body. 336. 337

A Figure defined. 341

D. Fiſher, Biſhop of Rocheſter, ſaith, that the very preſence of Chriſts Body and Bloud in the Sacrament cannot be prooued by the Scriptures. 236

Flauianus Biſhop of Antioch. 64

Flattery getteth more than violence. 357

The Folly of the Romane Prieſts. 18

This ſpeech, Forme, or Kinds of Bread, and Wine, is captious, dangerous, and deceiueable. 73. 75

The outward Formes are Chriſts Body, in M. Hardings fantaſie. 303

The outward Formes are the Sacrament with M. Harding. 332

Formoſus a Biſhop of Rome after he was dead, and buried, was taken out of his graue, and beheaded, and his Carkaſſe thrown into the Tiber. 328

France receiued not firſt the Faith from Rome, but from Hieruſalem. 42. 124. 136

The French King vntill this day receiueth in both kinds. 73

Good Friday. 101

The Sacrament not Conſecrated on good Friday. 101

Frier Stuppino whipped naked thorow the ſtreetes for ſaying many Maſſes in one day. 361

G

GElaſius determination of Councels. 92

Gelaſius againſt the halfe Communion. 108 110. 111

Gentiles ſpake Greeke. 123

Greekes called Gentiles. 123

Germanus. 18

The Holy Ghoſt ſent from Heauen to Remigius with a box of holy Oile. Paul. Æmilius. 63

The holy Ghoſt made a Doue: in what ſenſe. 315

The holy Ghoſt is Chriſts Vicar. Tertull. 192

Our Ladies Girdle praied vnto. 296. 297

The gift of the tongues, for what end. 115. 116

God is not to be ſpoken of without good aduiſement. 12

Gods word inferior to a Councell: and put to daying by M. Hardings iudgement. 81 90

Gods word is the Triall, and rule of Faith. 181. 182

Diuerſe opinions of God, and of his gournment of the world. 273. 274

God muſt be honoured as he himſelfe hath appointed. 310. 311

We cannot know, beleeue, or call vpon God, as he is in his diuine Maieſty: but by his Humanity. 292. 293

The Godhead of Chriſt cannot be eaten. 292. 293

Gods ſtollen from Laban. 308

God accepteth vs, and our Praiers in Chriſt his Son. 428. 429

Golden Cups. 13

Golden Miſe, and Golden Hemorrhoids. 435

The Goſpell ſcoffed at by M. Harding. 34. 191

S. Matthewes Goſpell tranſlated out of the Hebrew into Greeke, and Latine. 95

The Goſpell preached in Germany firſt by Lucius, S. Pauls companion. 124

The Goſpell preached in England by whom. 124

The Goſpell, and the Law. 347. 348

The Goſpell is the preſence of Chriſt: in what ſenſe. 348

The whole Goſpell called a Tradition, in what ſenſe. 386

Gordianus death and Graue blaſed with fiue ſundry languages. 121. 122

Gorgonia, Nazianzenes ſiſter ſkilfull both in the old Teſtament, and in the New. 388

To gouerne or rule the Church, how to be vnderſtanded. 228

The gouernment of the wicked prooueth not that their doings be good. 233

Gratian. 53

Gratian, a common falſifier of the Doctors. 302. 303

The Greeke and Latine tongue priuileged by M. Harding. 125

All the Eaſt ſpeaketh Greeke. 120. 121

The Greeke Tongue ſpred far. 122

The Greeke tongue written without accents. 390

S. Gregories additions to the Maſſe, which was a very Communion at that time. 139

S. Gregory preſſed with worldly cares. 390

Gregory Nazianzene Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 62

H

All Hallowes inferior to a Prieſt. 73

The Sacrament receiued with the Hand. 36. 37 38 98

M. Harding maketh his firſt entry with a Cauill. 1

M. Harding forgeth S. Auguſtine. 3

M. Harding allegeth S. Gregory nothing to the purpoſe. 3

M. Har. intemperate humor of ſpeaking euill. 3. 4

M. Hard. reporteth vntruth of the old Fathers. 3

M. Harding miſreporteth a number of the Fathers altogether. 5. 8. 9 10

M Har. confirmeth the Maſſe without proofes. 5

M Harding wreſteth the ſtory of Melchiſedech, and the words of Malachias the Prophet, to his priuate Maſſe. 5

M. Harding alleged vnknowne Doctors without credit. 6

M. Hardings witneſſes againſt himſelfe. 6. 8. 9

M. Hard. reformeth Truth by falſhood. 15

M. Hard. accuſeth the people vniuſtly. 13

By M. Hardings Logicke Chriſt himſelfe breake his owne Inſtitution. 15

M. Harding reſteth at Chriſts Inſtitution. 15

M. Harding ſaith, and vnſaith. 15

M. Harding bringeth Number, for Time. 16

M. Harding miſconſtrueth theſe words, Cætera quæm venero, diſponam, to build his priuate Maſſe. 16

M. Harding directly againſt himſelfe. 17. 18. 19. 37 38. 44. 45. 69

M. Hard. much forgetteth himſelfe. 64

M. Harding doth iniury to Dionyſius. 20

M Harding violently wreſteth S. Hierome. 21

M. Harding miſtaketh this word, Communio. 21. 22 23

M Harding miſconſtrueth Cyrill. 28. 29

M. Harding wilfully corrupteth Tertullian. 33. 34 344. 345

M. Hard. falſifieth S. Baſil. 36. 37

M. Harding falſifieth his owne Amphilochius ſeuen times together. 63

M. Har. corrupteth S. Hierome. 39

M. Hard. falſifieth Eraſmus. 38. 40

M. Harding heapeth gheſſe vpon gheſſe. 40 41

M. Hard. allegeth authorities without ſenſe or reaſon. 41

M. Hard. changed his religion twiſe, in the ſpace of two yeeres. 79. 80. 81. 305

M. Har. openly and earneſtly in ſchooles, and pulpits condemned condemned his Priuate Masse. 43

M. Harding altering in his Faith, 384.385.394
M. Harding falsifieth S. Augustines minde. 47
M. Hard. confesseth that the Communion is better than his Masse. 45
M. Harding fondly falsifieth Tertullian. 338.339
M. Harding nippeth S. Chrysostome. 49
M. Harding misreporteth Pope Damasius words. 40
M. Har. alleageth Councels that cannot be found. 52
M. Hard. misunderstandeth these words, Extrà, and Interiùs. 340
M. Hard. like to the Donatists. 57
M. Har. falsifieth his owne Leontius. 58.59
M. Har. alleageth Chrysostom against himselfe. 66 67. 68
M. Har. reporteth an vntruth of Irenæus. 30
M. Har. reporteth an vntruth of Iustinus Martyr. 30
M. Har. falsifieth Clement. 76
M. Har. chargeth the Apostles, and all the Fathers of the Primatiue Church with the breach of Christs Institution. 76
M. Har. calleth Christ & his Apostles new fangled. 77
M. Har. forgeth new Doctors, new decrees, and Heresies neuer heard of. 84
M. Har. vntruly reporteth the Councell of Ephesus. 83.84.292
M. Har. misreporteth Nestorius the Heretike. 83.84 292
M. Har. deprauеth S. Luke. 85.86. 91
M. Har. falsifieth S. Augustine and Beda. 91
M. Har. misreporteth Chrysostom. 93.94
M. Har. misreporteth S. Paul. 94
M. Har. misreporteth S. Hierom, and the Hebrew Gospell translated by him. 95.96
M. Har. contrary to himselfe. 103
M. Har. falsifieth Straboes minde. 118.120
M. Har. misreporteth Plinies word. 118.120
M. Harding guilefully falsifieth S. Augustine, and the godly Emperor Iustinians Constitution. 127.128 129.179.180
M. Har. falsifieth diuers Authors. 135
M. Har. plaine contrary vnto S. Paul. 150.151
M. Hard. abuseth and corrupteth S. Chrysostoms words. 151
M. Har. wresteth the words of Origen. 156.157.158
M. Har. corrupteth S. Gregories words. 167
M. Har. manifestly falsifieth S. Cyprian. 169.170
M. Har. misconstrueth Irenæus. 181.182
M. Harding vntruly translateth and addeth vnto S. Hilary. 184
M. Har. corrupteth S. Augustines words. 185.186
M. Har. wilfully causeth S. Augustine to speake false Latine, to serue his turne. 186
M. Hard. hath notoriously falsified S. Chrysostom in three places within the compasse of fiue lines. 200.201
M. Har. wilfully corrupteth the text of Tripartite history both in the Greeke and the Latine. 212.213
M. Har. falsifieth the Composition, or reconciliation of Alexander to Pope Innocentius. 218.219
M. Harding reporteth an vntruth of the Councell of Chalcedon. 220
M. Har. misreporteth S. Gregory. 221.222
M. Hardings authorities written after the Authors were dead. 224.
M. Har. vntruly translateth Theodoretus in Greeke 231
M. Har. wresteth S. Ambrose. 228
M. Hard. of a particular proposition concludeth an vniuersall. 228
M. Har. misallegeth S. Hieroms words, and dissembleth his meaning. 230
The occasion of M. Hardings Error in the Sacrament. 240
M. Hard. seemeth to haue forgotten the vse of Aduerbes. 243
M. Har. doubleth in his tale of the first beginners of the Sacramentary Heresie, as he termeth them. 244
M. Har. corrupteth the Nicene Councell. 250
M. Hard. vseth the Doctors, as Cacus vsed Hercules Kine. 254
The absurdities of M. Hardings Doctrine, touching the reall presence of Christs body. 258.259
M. Har. maketh two Christs. 261.262
M. H. misunderstandeth S. Augustine. 274.275.276
M. Hard. wresteth S. Augustine and S. Gregory. 276
M. Har. falsifieth Dionysius. 278.279
M. Harding vseth false Constructions. 278
M. Harding falsifieth Maximus. 280.281
M. Harding vttereth fiue vntruthes in the report of foure words. 284
M. Harding falsifieth Irenæus. 284.285
M. Harding both addeth words to S Augustine, and also falsifieth the same. 301.302
M. Harding misreporteth S. Chrysostom. 65
M. Harding holdeth with the Heretike in Theodoretus. 303
M. Hardings Glosse vpon Theodoretus quite ouerthroweth the whole Text. 304.305.319
M. Harding committeth hainous blasphemy. 314
M. Hard. misreporteth S. Ambrose. 317
M. Harding wilfully corrupteth Cyrillus. 320.323
M. Harding vseth the very same reason that Marcion the great Heretike vsed. 323
M. Har. violently forceth S. Basil to beare false witnesse. 325.326
M. Hardings Commentaries far beside the Text. 333
M. Harding corrupteth the words of the holy Father Ephrem. 336
M. Har. heapeth vp foure vntruths together. 378
M. Har. vseth the holy Fathers, as Procustes vsed his prisoners. 339
M. Har. alleageth a Bastard S. Augustine. 339
M. Harding wittingly misreporteth the old Fathers. 341.342
M. Har. saith, Tertullian vnderstood not Christs words. 241
M. D. Harding wilfully misexpoundeth Tertullians words. 341.342
M. Harding saith, Tertullian regardeth not the exact vse of his owne words. 342
M. Hard. accuseth Tertullian of Ignorance, and presumption. 344
M. Har. is driuen into miserable shifts, and foule absurdities by his corrupt construction of these words of Tertullian, Hoc est Figura corporis mei. 345 346
M. Hard. holdeth contrary to his fellows. 342.345
M. Har. saith, that S. Augustine hath no regard what he say. 346
M. Hard. allegeth, Origen, Nazianzene, and Oecumenius. 346.347.348.349
M. Harding falsly reporteth the Councell of Chalcedon. 358.360
M. Hardings Commentary contrary to the Text. 358
M. Harding like vnto an Alcumist. 359
M. Har. reasoneth, à non Causa, vt Causa. 358.360.361
M. Harding falsifieth Leos words. 360
M. Har. misunderstandeth his owne Authors. 366
M. Har. vseth the same defence for his Images, that the old Idolaters vsed for their Idols. 369
M. Harding reporteth an open vntruth of the godly Father Prudentius. 370.372
M. Har. maketh Christ, the Apostles, and all the old Fathers Sectaries and heretikes. 385
M. Hard. saith, The word of God offereth occasion of euill thoughts. 387
M. Har. wilfully abuseth and falsifieth the word of God. 388
M. Har. falsifieth S. Hilary. 389
M. Har. misreporteth Gods diuine prouidence. 389 390

M. Har-

M. Hard. wresteth S. Bernard. 390
M. Hard. calleth the euerlasting word of God, Heresie. 391.392
M. Har. quite contrary to himselfe. 406
M Har. foully wresteth S. Basils words from the right sense: and altogether against himselfe. 406.407
M Hard. vntruely reporteth the Fathers. 406.407
M. Har. purposely maimeth, and drowneth S. Augustines words. 410.411
M. Har. prooueth a truth not denied, by an open and manifest error. 397
M. Harding vntruly reporteth S. Cyprian. 422
M. Hard. vnreuerently scoffeth at the Scriptures of God, and at S Paul. 423
M. Har. ashamed of his owne Doctors doctrine, concerning the Masse. 435.436.439
M. Har. falsly construeth S. Augustine. 440.441
M. Har. clippeth Origens word. 440.441
M. Har. misconstrueth S. Augustine and Irenæus. 443
M. Hardings Doctors. 439
M. Har. falsly corrupteth Origen. 443.444
M. Har. auoucheth three sundry vntruthes with one breath. 445
M. Har. falsifieth S. Cyprian. 445
M. Har. falsifieth S. Chrysostom. 446.447
M. Har. falsifieth S. Ambrose. 447.448
M. Har. is a false witnesse, by S. Hieroms iudgement. 450
M. Hard. ashamed of his scholasticall Catholike Doctors. 455.456.464
M. Har. maketh a guilefull Glosse vpon Cyrillus Alexandrinus. 457.458
M. Har. vtterly misliketh his owne Doctors, and condemneth them of villany. 459.460
M. Hardings doctrine prooued by Perhaps. 461
M. Hardings doctrine altogether vncertain. 461.462
M. Harding falsifieth S. Augustine. 466.467
M. Hardings strange resemblance betweene the Sacrament, and the thing of the Sacrament. 466,467
M. Har. vnderstandeth not S. Augustine, and therefore mistaketh his meaning. 469
M. Har. and the old Heretike Abbat Eutiches, hold all one Heresie. 247.260.261.262
The Paralogismes, fallacies, weakenesse, loosenesse, and absurdities of M. Hardings Arguments, and Conclusions. 6.13.16 21.24.27.33.35.37.38.41 44.45.46.48.49.56.59.60.67.74.75.76 78.84.93 94.96 97.98.100.101.102.103.104.116.117.118 119.120 123.124.126.128.129.130.131,136.137 138.139.140.141.148.150.151.152.159.160.161 171.172.180.181.182.183.184 185.189.190.192 194.225.228.229.231.232.237.241.242 248.255 258.261.267.270.274.286.290.300.310.319.325 326.329.334.335.336.337 338.339.342.349 360.387.390.391.393.401.406.407.409,416. 419.420.430.443.444.445.448.449
M Hardings vntruthes, or ouerlights, vpon better aduise to be redressed, two hundred fifty and fiue: our Heart called our Altar. 145
To heare Masse, is a speech that the old Fathers and Doctors were neuer acquainted withall. 53.54
Hearing, is no Hearing, without vnderstanding. 53 54.130
By Hearing the word of God, Christs flesh & blood are poured into our eares. 337.421
This word, Head, what it signifieth, and how it is vsed. 186.230.231.232
This title, Head of the Church, neuer attributed to the Pope. 225.226.230
S. Iames, Head of the Church, by M. Hardings reasoning. 195
Christ only Head of the Church. 191
Heathens and Publicanes by M. Hardings iudgement. 366.367
The first inuention of the Hebrew pricks, vncertain. 389
The Hebrew tongue both written and read of the common people of the Iewes. 389.390
Common schooles in the Country of Israel for the Hebrew. 390
Hebrew words vsed in prayers to amaze the people. 148
In Hierusalem there were 400. schooles. 390
S. Hilary not skilfull in the Hebrew. 389
Helena, wife vnto Constantius the Emperour notably praised. 142
The golden hemorrhoides of the Philistines. 435
Henry the Emperour poisoned in the Communion Bread. 2
Heracleon the Heretike. 148
Heresies concerning Christ and his Body. 259.260
Heretikes neuer proceed in due order. 358
The very cast and property of Heretikes 95.168.464
Heretikes presse the letter, and leaue the meaning. 332
An Heretike by Pope Nicolas iudgement. 399
S. Hierom vnderstood seuen languages. 123
S Hierome neuer vsed this word, Missa. 5
S. Hierom disalloweth M. Hardings Clement. 16
S. Hierome speaketh many times vnseemely of the state of Marriage. 39
S. Hierome maketh his purgation. 39
S. Hieroms translation. 117.118
S. Hieroms words to S. Ambrose. 147
Hierusalem the mother of all Churches.
S. Hilary a married Bishop. 423
Hildebrand the Pope wrought Necromancy with the Sacrament. 2
The same Hildebrand a wicked man. 206
Pope Hildebrand threw the Sacrament into the fire because it would not answer him to certaine demands. 453
The City of Hippo preserued from the enemies during S. Augustines life. 218
Hippolytus, a little booke of small price, and lesse credit, lately printed, full of lies and heresies. 10
Hippolitus Martyr a Lay-man receiued the Communion of Iustinus a Priest, carried it home, and ministred it to his wife, his children, & family. 57
Hoc age, the Paganes saying to their Priest. 12
This Pronoune Hoc, strangely vsed by M. Harding. 339.341.342
An endlesse dissension about this Pronoune Hoc. 463 464
The Holy Ghost is Christs Vicar. Tertul. 192
The sense of these words: Homousios, Humanatio: is found in the Scriptures, and vsed of the ancient Fathers. 295
Honorius a Pope and an Heretike. 405
God ought to be honoured, as he himselfe hath appointed to be honoured. 310.311

I

IAcob lay with Rachel in stead of Lea. 305
S. Iames Liturgy or Communion. 89
S. Iames neuer dranke Wine but at the Lords Supper. 96
S. Iames Bishop in Hierusalem thirty yeeres. 96
S. Iames, either neuer said Masse, or if he did he consecrated in one kind, which to doe is Sacrilege. 96
S. Iames Bishop of Bishops & Bishop of all Churches. 224
S. Iames Head of the Church by M. Hardings reason. 195
The reward of Idolaters is euerlasting death. 183
The Iewes were very Christians: in what sense. 347
The state of the Iewes compared to a Candle. 348
In Ignorance the Papists would keepe the people. 11
Wilfull Ignorance the cause of all ill, and vnexcusable. 154.155
Ignorance the mother of error. 161.471.472

Ignorance called knowledge. 471
Ignorance called the mother of Deuotion. 471
Ignorance of the Scriptures the Cause of all euil. 391
Ignorance of the Scriptures bringeth Heresies. 392. 401.402
Ignorance of the Scriptures is the ignorance of Christ. 472
Ignorance is the possession of the Diuell. 472
An Image in the Church resembling God to an old man, is an abomination. 368
Images adored or honored, in what sense. 304
Images in the Church contrary to Gods word. 368
Images set vp in the Church to be worshipped, but not specially to be worshipped, M. Harding. 368
The Heathens and Infidels were the first Fathers of Images. 369. 373. 374
Images first drawne out to keepe the countenance of the dead in remembrance. 369
The Image of Christ in a painted cloth, torne and rent by the holy Father Epiphanius. 368. 374. 383
Images vsed of the Heathens for the maintenance of their Religion. 369
Images broken in peeces by Serenus the Bishop. 374. 375
The Inuention of Images came of ill. 368. 375
The Iewes could neither abide Images in their Temples, nor painter nor grauer to dwell among them. 369
The Image of the Cherubins. 369. 370
The Brasen Serpent. 370. 375. 376
The Image of the Crosse. 370. 371. 372
The cause why the Crosse was magnified and extolled. 371. 372
A peeuish vnsauory fable of the Image of Christ fathered vpon Athanasius. 372
No Images in the Primitiue Church. 145. 376
Images defended by the wicked Empresse Irene. 374
An Image better than praier: Nicene Councell. 374
M. Hardings Images prooued by Fabulars and forged writers. 374. 375. 376. 377
Images vsed, but not set vp in Churches to be worshipped. 374. 376
The Heathen man maketh his Image to shine with siluer and gold to deceiue the simple. 374
These words, The Image of Christ: in what sense. 375
These words, The Image of the beast expounded. 375
Fond reasons whereby Images were erected and adored with godly honour. 373. 380. 381
No true religion where as Images be. 377
Generall proclamations by the Godly Emperors against the Image of Christ. 377. 383
Imagery compared with Poetry. 377 378
Images the lore of lying. 378
Priests are Images: and Images are Priests. 378
More learned in a short while by an Image, than by long study in the Scriptures. 378
M. Harding prooueth the commodity of Images, by Ouid, Virgil, Appian, &c. 378. 379
Images oftentimes moone the minde vehemently. 378. 379
The Lacedemonians would not suffer any Image or picture to stand in their Councell house. 379
The sight of an Image in the vnwise stirreth vp concupiscence. 379
Holy Images worshipped without offence. M. Harding. 379
Holy Images by M. Hardings owne Confession are worshipped without spirit and truth. 379
None of the Ancient Fathers either Greeke or Latine taught the people to kisse, kneele, or bow downe to an Image. 318
Images set vp in the Church, dangerous. 381
Dead Images forced to sweat, to weepe, to laugh, to speake, to becke, and to moone. 381
Godly honour giuen to Images. 381. 382
The Image of our Lady able to watch and attend hir owne candle. 381
The imagined difference of worshipping Images called Latria and Doulia. 382
Images worshipped with the same honour, that is due to the holy Trinity. 382
The dissension of the Schoole Doctors about Latria and Doulia. 382
No man can worship God, and an Image both together. 382
Worshipping of Images condemned both of the Heathens, and of the old godly Fathers, for feare of Idolatry. 382
We be incorporate into Christ by Baptisme. 17. 252
Individuum vagum. 243. 342. 353. 462. 463
The Institution of Christ, and the Masse be contraries. 15. 16
What words be of the Substance of Christs Institution. 17. 28. 45. 46
M. Hardings proues that Christs Institution may be broken. 85. 86
The danger of breaking Christs Institution. 83
The intention of the Priest not knowen. 26. 305. 306
Intention not agreed vpon by the Church. 26
Intention of the Priest a dungeon of vncertainty. 26
The vse of this word, Instrumentum, vnbloody, among the Fathers. 427
Inuisible. 350. 351
Inuocation of the Crosse, and water. 296
Inuocation implieth not Adoration. 296. 297
Inuocation to our Ladies girdle. 296. 297
Dame Ioane the woman Pope. 8. 374
Iohannes de Temporibus. 7
Iohn the Almonar. 57. 58. 59
Iohannes Scotus a famous learned man, and scholar vnto Beda. 243
S. Iohn aboue Peter. 230
Ioseph of Arimathea preached the Gospell first in England. 124
Iosias sent to a woman for councell in great cases of Religion. 220
Iphigenia, one of Abdias fables. 8
Irenæus Bishop of Lions in France. 30
Irenæus wrested and falsified by M. H. 284. 285
Isidorus, a Bishop of Russia deposed, for bearing and inclining to Transubstantiation. 321
This Article IT, violently and falsly turned into Him. 33. 34. 344. 345
This word, Iteratur, implieth one person, and not diuers, as M. Harding abuseth it. 360
Ite, Missa est, in what sense. 365
Eccle siasticall Iudges often deceiued. 88
The fantasticall Imagination of Iulianus the Emperour in his phrensie. 232
Julianus the Renegate. 373. 395. 397
Iulianus President of the East, plagued of God in the secret parts. 373
Iuppiter called Papa. 18
Iustinian the Emperours Constitution for Service to bee said with a loud voice, toucheth aswell the Church of Rome, as the Church of Grecia. 404
Iustinians Constitution. 127. 128. 129

K

The Key is the word of knowledge of the Scriptures. 159
Keies giuen to others aswell as to Peter. 171. 178. 230. 231. See more in this word, Pope.
A King seeketh counsell of a woman in matters of Religion. 220
King Lucius called Christs Vicar. 231

King of Perſia intituled himſelfe, Frater Solis, & Lunæ 207. 208

Kneeling, bowing, ſtanding, &c. commendable geſtures. 151

Knowledge puffeth vp the minde, an old ſlothfull quarrell againſt the knowledge of God. 391

The ſame words of S. Paule, expounded. 391

L

LAbarrum, the Emperiall ſtandard among the old Romanes. 371. 372

Laboremus, a watch word. 371

Our Lady inferiour to a Prieſt. 73

Our Ladies girdle praied vnto. 296. 297

Sacra lancea: what it is. 327

The new Latine Church diſagreeth from the old. 363. 364

The Latine Tongue, Barbarous. 15

The vulgar tongue in Italy was the Latine Tongue. 125

The Latine Tongue priuileged by M. Harding. 125

The learned Latine Tongue. 148

The Latine Church. 159

Latine in Rome ſpoken naturally. 167

Falſe Latine putteth the Popes owne writ out of credit. 167

Latine ſpoken in Aphrica. 134. 135. 136

S. Laurence a Deacon Conſecrated the Sacrament. 97

The Law and the Goſpell. 347. 348

Lazarus preached the Goſpell at Merſiles in France. 42

Pope Leo neuer called himſelfe vniuerſall Biſhop. 220

Leoes words falſified by M. Harding. 360

M. Hardings Leontius, an Author vnknowne, and a childiſh Fable. 57. 60

Leontius falſified by M. Harding. 57

Leontius peeuiſhly tranſlated. 57. 59

S. Pauls words, let a man examine himſelfe, &c. expounded. 12

Liberius a Pope, and an Arian Heretike. 205

Chriſtian liberty. 25. 26

Lidford Law. 358

The cauſe of the lifting vp of the Sacrament, not yet agreed vpon. 278. 279

The firſt light at the beginning was not an Accident without a ſubiect. 326. 327

Limina Petri. 50

Liquor kept in a linnen Cloth. 103

This word Litera, taken for the plaine ſtory. 156. 275

Litera, taken for the literall ſenſe and bare ſound of the words as they lie, which ſomtime killeth. 243. 290. 293

Liturgia Iacobi. 8

Liturgia Chryſoſtomi. 8. 9. 67

The ſame forged. 373 374

Liturgia Baſilij. 9. 38. 65

Longinus the blind knights Genealogy. 34

Lucius King of England Baptized. 141. 142

S. Luke a Phyſition and not a Painter, as M. Harding maketh him. 374

D. Luther malicioufly ſlandered. 2. 87. 88. 232

D. Luthers iudgement of Councels, ſincerely ſet foorth. 80

D. Luther tempted by the Diuell. 2. 3

D. Luthers doctrine concerning the Maſſe, according to the Goſpell of Chriſt. 3

D. Luthers Conſtancy. 79

D. Luther reprooued, and condemned the Anabaptiſts. 395

The Lycaonicall Tongue. 122

The Lycaonians made their praiers to their Idols in their owne Tongue. 122

Lyſanders pikery and theft applied. 357

M

MAkarius accuſed of breaking the Communion Cup. 46

Mahomet firſt ſpred his Religion in Arabia. 58

The place in Malachie the Prophet, of the pure Sacrifice, expounded by the Fathers. 5. 6. 420. 421

The Error of the Manichees. 109. 110. 259. 260. 262

Manipulus Curator, a booke of corrupt doctrine and lies. 438

Man aboue God. 81

A man Mediator is Antichriſt. 361

Manna made Chriſts body. 322

Manna called the ſpirituall Bread: in what ſenſe. 351. 352

Marcellina, a woman Heretike. 382

Marcions Hereſie. 338. 344

Marcions Hereſie, and M. Hardings Accidents without ſubſtance are built both vpon one foundation. 338. 344. 345. 350

Mary the Virgin bleſſed, whereby. 442

Mary could not touch Chriſt. 272

Marcus an Heretike. 148

Marcus Epheſius, as the prouerb goeth. 320. 324

The ſame M. Epheſius wilfully corrupteth S. Baſils words. 320

Marcus the Monke receiued the Sacrament of an Angell. Sozom. 63

The forbidding of Marriage is the doctrine of Diuels. 128. 129

Marriage of Prieſts, forbidden by Pope Hildebrand. 453

Marriage honorable in all perſons. 422. 423

Mariage hindereth not Martyrdome. ibid.

Holy Martyrs married. ibid.

Martialis, lately found in an arch of ſtone, vnder the ground corrupted, defaced. 8

S. Martin. 29

S. Martin, a ſimple man, choſen Biſhop of Tours in France. 137

Martyrdome in England. 422

Martyrs made of Theeues. 39

Priuate Maſſes rob the people of all Comfor. 3

This word Maſſe, very ſeldom found in the old Catholike writers. 3

Maſſe Common, and priuate. 1. 2. 3. 4

S. Andrew ſaid the Communion, and not the Maſſe, as M. Harding confidently auoucheth. 4

This word, Maſſe, neuer vſed of M. Hardings owne Doctors, Clement, Abdias, Hippolytus, Amphilochius, &c. 5. 6. 8. 63

This word, Maſſe, neuer vſed of Chriſt, his Apoſtles, Tertullian, Cyprian, Origen, Dyonifius, Lactantius Hierom, Auguſtine, &c. 5. 8

Maſſe confirmed without prooſes by M. Harding. 5

The ground of the priuate Maſſe. 11. 16. 17. 355. 357

No Maſſe priuate in the Primitiue Church, as M. Harding confeſſeth. 11

Priuate Maſſe the Crowne of the Popes kingdom. 11

The Maſſe hath no Communion, nor Conſolation. 15

The Maſſe, and the Inſtitution of Chriſt, be contraries. 15

The priuate Maſſe, no part of Chriſts Inſtitution, by M. Hardings owne Confeſſion. 15

M Hardings Maſſe vtterly defaceth the remembrance of Chriſts death. 19

The daily Sacrifice kept, although M. Hardings Maſſe were loſt. 19

Maſſe prooued by women, children, infants, lay folke, mad men, and boies. 33. 35. 45. 72

M. Hardings Maſſe ouerthrown by S. Baſil, Ambroſe and Auguſtine. 38. 47. 48

No priuate Masse at Rome. 39.40.59
Masse prooued by an heape of Ghesses. 40.41
Priuate Masse, and sole receiuing is not one. 45
Masse is a meere iniury to the Sacrifice of the Newe Testament. 43
Masse prooued by Abuses. 44.45
Masse not without two. 50.52.53
Masse with one alone. 52
Angels answer the Priest at Masse. Pope Innocentius. 51
Masse spoken aloud. 52
To heare Masse, a speech vnknowen to the learned Fathers. 53.54
The substance of the Masse. 54
Masse prooued by the Pater Noster. 58
Priuate Masse prooued, by a priuate place: with M. Harding. 59
Masse neuer said in Alexandria. 57.60
Priuate Masse quite ouerthrowen by Chrysostome. 66.67.68.69
No Communion or Masse celebrated, but the Deacon receiued with the Priest. 67.68
The Masse is not the daily Sacrifice. 68
Daily Massing not exacted. 68
A Priest that would neuer say Masse while he liued. 68
All M. Hardings proofes for priuate Masse. 70
The priuate Masse effectually ouer throwen. 70.71
No man may be present at the Masse of an aduouterous Priest. 206
No priuate Masse in the Primatiue Church. 327
M. Harding offereth to prooue two Masses in one day and no more: and yet the same are found Communions. 355.358.359
All the Priests, and the people that were present at Masse, did Communicate together with the Minister. 335
Pope Leo said 7. or 8. Masses in some one day. 355
The outrage of Masses forbidden. 355
Three Masses in one day, for what cõsiderations 346
The causes of many Masses in one day. 355
Masse no propitiatory Sacrifice, &c. 357
Masse, the erectrix of Chauntries, Monasteries, Pardons, and Superogations. 357
Marchandise made of Masses. 357
The wickednesse of the Soule Masse Priests. 357
One Masse, or Communion in one day in the primatiue Church. 359
The Priuate Masse is to the people spirituall blindenesse. 360
A fantasticall Glosse of three Masses, or Communions in one day. 359.360
A tot quot of Masses ouerthrowen. 360.361
One Priest may say but three Masses in one day. 355.361
One Masse sufficient for one Priest in one day. 361
Plurality of Masses first brought in by the Pope Deus dedit. 359.362
One Masse or Communion, more profitable for the people. 362
One Communion or Masse in one day in Rome. 362
One Communion or Masse, once or twice a weeke at the most in Millain. 362
One Priest to say many Masses in one day, and not to Communicate himselfe. 365
Neither M. Hardings priuate Masse, nor his Cheuisance, or plurality of Masses found within the 600. yeeres. 367
The vertue of Christs death applied to man by meane of the Masse. 435.436
The Priest in his Masse receiued the Sacrament for others, as if he were the mouth of the people. 434
Masse auaileable vnto whomsoeuer the Priest applieth it. Biel. 435
Masse applied thorowout all the Cases of declenson. 436
The Masse is no meane of remission of sins, but only Christs blood: and that onely by the meane of faith. 436
In the Masse the Priest receiued the Sacrament for others. 433.434
Priuate Masses without the presence of the people are an abhomination. 281.361
The Greek church neuer vsed any priuate Masse. 363
The Priest praieth in his Masse, that the Body of Christ may be carried vp by the hands of Angels. 435
The people taught, that the Masse, ex opere operato, onely is meritorious. 436.437
How, and after what sort the Masse is auaileable ex opere operato, by M. Harding. 436.437
M. Harding saith, The Masse sometime signifieth the Body of Christ. 439
The masse is not meritorious ex opere operato by M. Hardings owne proofes. 439
The Masse was borne of the Virgin Mary, crucified, dead and buried: by M. Hardings reason. 439
The worke of the Priest in his Masse is propitiatory, albeit not specially, as M. Hard. addeth. 439.440
The wicked Priests Masse as meritorious as a good Priests Masse: in what sense. 400
The shewing or bringing foorth of the Sacrament to the people argueth a Communion, and no priuate Masse. 289
S. Matthew the Apostle, desired to haue two of the first stones buried with him. Abdias. 101
Mattins at Midnight. 63
Maximinus burnt the books of God. 397
Strangled Meates. 89
Medæa painted. 45
Medius Terminus. 44
Melancthon mistaken and falsified by M. Harding. 81
Melchisedech meeting of Abraham maketh nothing for the Masse. 56
Melciades Bishop of Rome. 97
Men Deified: in what sense. 247
S. Mercury being dead, and a Saint in heauen, slew Iulian the Emperor. Amphiloch. 62
Messaliani Heretikes, and the first founders of idle Monkes. 64
Methonensis a yong D. of M. Hardings, yet enemy to his Transubstantiation. 320.324
Michael Palæologus the Emperour of the East parts not suffered to be buried by his Clergy. 208
Mingling of Water, and Wine not necessary. 26
Fained myracles wrought by the Priest in the church to deceiue the people. 1
Miracles wrought by dead Carkasses. 39
Miracles inducements to Errors. 39
No miracle in the Sacrament. 259.260
What S. Chrysostome calleth a Miracle, in the Sacrament. 264
A maruellous miracle in Baptisme. 264.265
Fained Miracles. 381
Missarum solemnia. 51
Missa signifieth the Communion. 9. 55.71.359.365
Missa, vsed for any holy assembly or meeting of the people. 55.56
Missa, neuer taken with the Fathers for priuate Masse. 55.56.365
The Antiquity, and true meaning of this word, Missa. 365.366
The Modesty of Alexander. 115.116
Momus the controller of all the gods. 308
Momus found fault with Vulcan. 308
Monasteries dens of Theeues burnt vp by Amphilochius. 64
Montanus the blind Senator. 244
A Mouse may eat the Body of Christ: holden for Catholike doctrine. 459.460
The Golden Mise of the Philistines. 435
How mysteries ought to be considered. 249.250.333

N

These words, In the Name of Christ onely falsified by M. Harding. 85. 86
Nathaniel preached in France. 42
Two Natures or Substances in Christ. 260. 261 289. 290
These words of Plato, Nature is that thing that God will: expounded. 273
Nature, compared to a Horse. 274
Nature, obedient to God. 273. 274
Nature ruleth not the world. 273. 274
These words of S. Cyprian, The Bread changed, not in Forme, but in Nature, expounded. 315
Nazianzenes Monodia altered and peruerted by Volateran. 64
Necessity caused the Communion to be consecrated without Wine 25
Necessity altereth Cases. 44. 85. 86
Necromancy wrought with the Sacrament by Pope Hildebrand. 2
An Argument ab Authoritate, Negatiue, is good in the Scriptures. 51
This word, Nemo, put for few. 66. 67 68
The Negligence of the people was the ground of Priuate Masse. 11. 17
Negligence of the people in receiuing the Communion punished by Excommunication. 11. 12
The Negligence of the Pope, and the Cardinals in receiuing the Communion. 12. 13
The Cause of the peoples Negligence. 12
Nestorius a wicked Heretike. 83. 332
Nestorius heresie misreported by M. Harding. 83 84. 292
Pope Nicolas praied for fiue hundred yeeres before he was borne. 8
Nouatus Comming into Italy. 50
Nouatus an Heretike. 170
Nouatius deuided the people of Rome into sects. 170
Nurses in Aphrica spake Latine. 134
In Norway the Priest consecrated without Wine. 25. 84

O

Oathes. 88. 89
Oile kept in a linnen cloth. 103
Oile. 320. 321
Oile called the Grace of God: in what sense. 321
Oile is Christ, in what sense. 322
The Omnipotency of Christ appeareth in Baptisme, as in the Sacrament. 242
The Omnipotency of God abused to vaine fantasies. 266
The Omnipotency of God worketh in Baptisme, and in all Sacraments. 315. 316. 322
Arguments taken of Gods Omnipotent power, were a ready buckler to serue the old Heretikes. 326
Origen. 145
Origens error touching Mariage. 34
Origen gelded himselfe. 88
Origens opinion of Angels and Heauenly powers. 156
Origen called the Master of the Churches. 328
Origen was a Catechist. 386
Orate pro me fratres. 51
Opus operatum: Opus operans: Opus operantis, strange and Barbarous termes: and the deuisers of the same not yet agreed vpon the meaning thereof. 457. 438
Opus operatum holden auaileable for remission of sin. 437. 438
Opus operatum, what it is, expounded. 438
At Orleance in France Wine kept from sowring for the space of fifteen hundred, and thirty yeeres. 103

P

Painters, and Poets likened together. 378
Paphnutius being one alone was heard against a whole Councell. 88
The Papists say nowadaies, euen as the old Heretikes Eutiches, and Auxentius were wont to say. 400 401
Papa, in the old time in Greek signified a Father. 180
Iupiter the great Idoll called Papa. 180
Arsenius writing to Athanasius, saith: Dilecto Papæ, beloued Pope. 171. 172.
This name Papa, giuen to all Bishops generally, and not only to the Bishop of Rome. 180
The Papists vse the people, as the Philistines vsed Sampson. 471
παροικία, a Parish. 41
παροικία, a Bishopricke or Dioceese. 41
Parochia, neuer taken for a Priuate house. 41
Mysticum Pascha, is the Communion. 24
The Passeouer eaten, of whom. 90
Passion Sonday. 3. 4
S. Paul charged with Sacrilege by M. Harding. 94
S. Paul Married. 423
S. Paul wickedly belied. 94. 95
S. Pauls words, We haue redemption by his blood, expounded. 248
S. Paul brought the Gospell into England. 124. 141
S. Pauls words, Haue ye not houses to eat and drink in, expounded. 40
Paulinus Historicus a corrupter of the Fathers. 99
The Pax, or Peace. 114
The Pelagian Heretikes. 332
Penitents commanded foorth of the Church at the Communion time. 56
Petitio principij: what it is in Logike. 13. 242
S. Peters Body buried, and taken vp againe. 50
S. Peters Church. 50
S. Peter married. 423
No Prince in S. Peters time Christned. 178
S. Peter put to death seuen yeeres after S. Iames. 166
The King of Persia intitled himselfe, Frater solis, & lunæ. 208. 167
The people deceiued by fained miracles in the Church. 2
The people receiued the Communion in Cups and dishes. 9
The people receiued euery day in the Primitiue Church. 11
The people disdainfully called Dogs, and Swine, &c. 11. 383. 390 406
The people Excommunicate for withdrawing themselues from the Communion. 11. 12
The people negligent: and why. 12. 13
The people vniustly accused of M. Harding. 13
The people better disposed than the Priest. 18
The people receiued the Communion with their owne hands. 36. 37. 38.
The people at Rome Communicated daily. 39 51 53
Of the peoples simplicity and superstition, grew first the Communion vnder one kind. 72
The people vnciuilly called rash, rude, beasts, void of reason, &c. 394. 396. 401. 406
The people know not the Articles of the Faith. 150 151
The people answering the Priest Amen, at Consecration, expounded. 403. 404. 405
The people offer the Sacrifice as well as the Priest. 358 360. 365. 366
The Lay people willed to haue the Bible in their houses, and to read the Scriptures. 383. 384. 394 401. 402
The Lay people of the Iewes not suffered to read certaine Chapters of the old Testament, before yeeres of iudgement. 387. 390
The Lay people hauing the Scriptures more to be credited than the Pope, or a general Councel 389

The People not forbidden to read the Scriptures by M. Hardings confeſſion. 383.384
The Lay People called Curious buſie bodies of the vulgar ſort. 391.394
The People better than the Prieſt. 394.395
The People ought to haue recourſe to the Scriptures aboue all things, in time of diſſenſion in Religion. 396
The vndeuotion of the People groweth of the negligence of the Clergy, by M. Hard. confeſſion. 45
The People kept in miſerable blindneſſe in the Church of Rome. 406
Phocas the Emperour granted firſt the Biſhop of Rome to be called Head of all Churches. 58.181
The Treaſons, Murthers, & Miſchiefs of Phocas. 181
The death of the ſame Phocas. 181
Perſecution in the Primitiue Church, 35.100.200
M. Harding ſhifteth, Place, in ſtead of Number. 26
Platoes opinion of Nature, and God. 273
Plinies Counſell. 291
Plurima, taken for two only, and no moe. 366
Poets haue liberty to lie. 378
Poets baniſhed for their lying. 378
The Poets in many places be ſchooles of ſin. 241.242
Poiſon miniſtred in the Communion Bread. 2
Poiſon miniſtred in the Communion Cup. 2
A Popiniay taught to ſay the Creed. 126
The Almighty power of God. 242.266.274
Pope Ione the woman Pope. 8.374
Pope Nicolas praied for, fiue hundred yeeres before he was borne. 8
The Pope with his Cardinals as negligent as the people. 12
The Pope ſeuen and fifty times greater than the Emperor. 29.215
Popes called Prieſts without any other Title of ſuperiority. 30.41
What authority the Pope hath claimed, and had. 80
The Pope aboue God, and the Scripture. 81
The Popes decrees equall with S. Peters. 141
The Pope taketh his holineſſe of his Chaire. 141.206
Pope Bonifacius firſt deuided the Prieſt from the people. 145
Pope Hildebrand threw the Sacrament in the fire, becauſe it would not ſpeake. 453
Pope Deus dedit, firſt brought in plurality of Maſſes. 359.362
The Pope had not the ſupreme power within ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt. 164
Pope Syluester a Coniurer had a familiar. 205.206
Pope Sergius the firſt, deuiſed Agnus Dei to be ſung at the diſtribution of the Myſteries. 328
Pope Sergius the ſecond, called Os Porci. 220
Pope Sergius the third tooke vp his predeceſſor after he was dead, beheaded him, and threw his carkaſſe into the Tiber. 328
This name or Title, Vniuerſall Biſhop, expounded. 164
Who ſo calleth himſelfe Vniuerſall Prieſt, is the forerunner of Antichriſt. 164.168
Pope Zoſimus neuer alledged Scripture for his ſupremacy: the Councell of Nice he alleged, which he himſelfe had falſified. 164
Pope Meleiades claimeth the ſupremacy not by Scriptures, but by Cuſtome, and preſcription only 164.175
Certaine Scriptures forced, and falſely wreſted, to maintaine the Popes ſupremacy.. 164.165.167 188 193.196
No man can be ſaued vnleſſe he be ſubiect to the Pope. 165
Theſe words, vpon this Rock I wil build my Church expounded. 165.184.195
M. Hardings Anacletus is counterfetted: and corrupteth the Scriptures. 166.167
Falſe Latine putteth the Popes rite out of credit. 167
The true Anacletus a holy man. 169
Peter not called Vniuerſall Apoſtle. 167.183
To agree to this Title, Vniuerſal Biſhop ouerthroweth the faith of the whole Church. 168
Vniuerſall Biſhop, a wicked, & horrible title, againſt the Goſpel, and vtterly renounced by S. Gregory. 168.169.221.360
Due, and apt names for this Title, Vniuerſal Biſhop, 168.169.174.221.360
Pope ſaluted by the name of Brother, and Fellow ſeruant. 170.187.196
All Biſhops haue equall authority, one with another. 170.171.172
All Biſhops rule the Church together in one. 194
S. Cyprians words, Vnus Sacerdos, vniuerſa fraternitas, expounded. 170.172
The Pope ſometimes no member of the Church. 164
The See of Rome openly flattered. 173.174
The Pope inferior to the Emperour. 174
The pride of Deacons in Rome, and of Pope Nicolas the firſt. 174.176
Who ſo abridgeth the Authority of the Church of Rome, ought to be called an heretike. 398
The Biſhop of the firſt See might not be called the chiefe of Prieſts, or hieſt Prieſt. 175.185
All Paſtors and Biſhops haue like power to bind, And to looſe. 178
The Popes power in diuiſion of his Pardons. 335
The Pope a Forger, a Foiſter, a Cogger, a Bumbaſter of the decrees, and the holy Fathers. 175.176 177.207.208.217
The Pope holdeth his authority by burnt Euidence. 174.176.177.178
The Popes ſuperiority not found in the Nicene Councell. 176.177.178
The Pope rebuked of pride, and forgery by S. Auguſtine. 175.176.178
S. Peter had no more power, honour, or preeminence than the reſt of the Apoſtles. 178
Peter not preferred before Paul. 183.188.189 225.226
The kies giuen to others, as wel as to Peter. 171.230
None of all the Patriarches haue dominion ouer others. 179
Paul Head of all Nations. 226
Councels againſt the Popes Supremacy. 179
No Biſhops like a Biſhop, but only S. Ambroſe. 180
The Biſhop of Rome called firſt of Biſhops in what ſenſe 180.181
Conſtantinople beareth the Title of new Rome. 180
The Biſhop of Iuſtiniana in as high Authority, as the Biſhop of Rome. 180
Conſtantinople enioyed the prerogatiue of old Rome. 180
The Biſhop of Conſtantinople called Vniuerſall Patriarch. 181
The Popes ſupremacy, and Mahomets Religion began at one time. 181
Not one of the Doctours call the Biſhop of Rome, Vniuerſall Biſhop. 181
The mighty power, and dominion of the City of Rome: and Rome the principall Church, in what ſenſe. 181.182.184
Biſhops of Rome had neither lands nor rents. 182
Peters power wherein it ſtood. 185
All Churches the firſt and Apoſtolike Churches: in what ſenſe. 183
The error of the Popes Supremacy grew of the miſunderſtanding of this word, Primatus, Primacy. 182.183
M Hardings Athanaſius, counterfet, full of lies, and flattery. 101.102.183
The Preeminence that Peter had, and the reſt of the Apoſtle, what it is. 183.184
Peter was but an eie in the Head. 185
Peter neuer claimed the Primacy. 186

Great

Great reuerence giuen to the See of Rome in old time and wherefore. 185
Rome head of the Apostolike See, and had the preeminence, in what sense. 185. 186
The Bishop of Rome but the Emperors delegate. 186
The Bishop of Rome heard appeales by the Emperors authority. 203. 204
The Bishop of Rome put out of Commission by the Emperor. 186
Euery seueral Bishop within his owne Dioceese is called the highest Priest. 186. 187
The Pope head of all Bishops, &c. of whose fulnesse all they receiue. D. Durand. 188
The Pope intitled, Our Lord God the Pope. 188. 453
This word, Princeps, how it is vsed of good Authors. 186. 226
Paul went vp to Hierusalem to visit Peter, in what sense. 188. 189
Paul equall with Peter. 188. 189
Paul checked and withstood Peter. 188. 195
Bishops & Archb. made vowes to visit the Pope. 189
The Popes supremacy proued by Philosophy, Homer, and naturall reason. 189. 190
The Pope like vnto Phaeton. 190
The Church is one not because of Christ, but because of the Pope that keepeth it in one. Roffensis. 190
Christ only Head of the Church. 191
Bishops greater than Priests, by order and custome only, not by Gods word. 191
Christs vicar, who is. 192
The Pope vsurpeth Titles proper to Christ only. 196
The Pope equall with Christ. 193
The Pope Doctour of both lawes by authority, and not by knowledge. 193
Popes haue beene Heretikes, rennegates from the faith, and sorcerers. 144. 205. 206
The prouidence of God abused by M. Hard. to maintaine the Popes tyranny. 193
Many Popes vtterly ignorant of their Grammar. 193
The Pope the expounder of the true sense of the Scriptures. 193
The best learned, sought and sent to for counsell in doubtfull places of the Scriptures, and not the Bishop of Rome. 193. 194
The Emperours summoned Councels, and not the Pope. 193
Matters of variance betweene Bishops taken vp not by the Bishop of Rome only, but also by other. 194
The licentious lewdnesse of Rome. 194. 409
The Popes vnity is vile subiection, seruitude, and infidelity. 194
Neither did S. Peter beare himself, nor did the Apostles vse him as the head of the vniuersal church. 195
Aphrica might not appeale to Rome. 175. 179. 185. 196. 217
The Emperors tooke in hand the hearing of Ecclesiasticall causes. 200
Chrysostome appealed not to Rome. 200. 201
Appeale from the Pope to the Emperour lawfull. 204
All the right of a Prince is deriued from the Pope. Clemens. 204
The Popes compared to Balaam and Caiaphas, by M. Harding. 205
Bishops of Rome lamps without light. 205
Bishops of Rome woorse than the Scribes, Pharisees, and Manichees. 205
Bishops of Rome likened vnto false Prophets. 205
Bishops of Rome like to the Valentinian heretiks. 206
The Pope aboue the whole world. 206
S. Peter first sat at Antioch, & after at Rome. 207. 218
S. Peter dwelleth in the Pope. 206
The Pope Prince of all Lands and Countries. 207
The Pope had no supremacy in the East Churches. 196. 201. 202. 207. 208
The Patriach of Constantinople equall with the Pope. 208
The Pope excommunicated, and was excommunicate. 209
Diuers Popes deposed, some by the East Bishops, some by Counsels, some by the Emperours. 209
The Pope confirmed Bishops but within his owne Prouence. 211. 212
The Pope had no power to summon Councels. 212. 213. 293
The Bishop of Rome fell vpon his knees to the Emperour, and obtained not. 213
The Bishop of Rome was not president in all Councels. 213
The Pope confirmeth Counsels, euen as other Bishops doe. 214
The Emperours confirmed Councels. 213
Councels ratified, maugre the Popes will. 214
Pope Alexander the third set his foot in the Emperours necke. 215
The Emperor Constantius restored Athanasius, and not the Pope. 215
As the Popes power increased, so the Emperors power abated. 216
The Pope confirmed by the Emperour. 216
The Pope not able to depose nor restore Bishops without the Emperours authority. 215. 216
Reconciliation is no necessary token of primacy or subiection. 216. 217. 218. 219
Pope Innocentius calleth Alexander Bishop of Antioch his schoole-fellow. 218
Pope Leo, neuer called the Vniuersal Bishop. 220. 221. 222
Seruus Seruorum Dei, an Hypocriticall title. 222
Bishop of Rome not Vniuersall Bishop. 222. 223. 224
Bishop of the Vniuersall Church, and Vniuersall Bishop be not one thing. 220. 223. 224
Saint Iames, Bishop of Bishops, and Bishop of all Churches. 226
Peter called Head of the Church before he came to Rome. 225. 227. 230. 232
The Pope neuer called Head of the Church. 225. 226. 239
The Pope could not be Head of the Church. 227
S. Peter is diuersly called of the old Fathers. 226
Peter Prince, and Head of the Apostles: in what sense. 226. 230. 231. 232
Paul Head as wel as Peter. 232
Euery Priest ruler of Gods Church. 228
S. Iohn aboue Peter. 230
The Pope called God. 231
The Popes madde imagination. 232
The Pope called Abel, Elias, Dauid, Peter, Christ: in what sense. 231
The Pope, and Augustine refused in England. 124. 138. 142
Peter taken into the fellowship of the indiuisible Trinity. Bonifacius. 232
Peter not Head of the Church. 232
The pride, and arrogancy of the Pope. 233. 234
Papa non est purus homo: The Pope is no bare man. 321
The priuate Praiers of the people for the most part, vnder the Popes subiection, be in Latine. 113
Praiers in a strange tongue, against the Scriptures, and against the sense of nature. 118
Praiers in a knowen tongue not misliked of M. Harding, but thought necessary. 113. 130. 142. 143. 149. 150
An vnperfit distinction of priuate, & common Praiers. 113
The Priest Praieth for Christ in his Masse. 430
The whole people sing in their owne tongue the Psalmes together in the Church. 114. 409
The Priest forbidden singing in the Church. 114
Al people and nations had their common Praiers in a knowen tongue. 114
The people sung the Psalmes, in the Hebrew, Greek, Latine, and Syrian tongue. 116

The

The Praiers of Angels and Archangels for mankind
Of Praiers see more in this word Seruice. 432
Praxeas the Heretikes argument. 266
Reall presence neuer taught in the Primitiue Church. 219. 235. 236. 237. 245
The very Presence of Christs Body and Blood cannot bee gathered by S. Matthewes words, or by any Scripture. Roffensis. 236
S. Pauls words, The Rocke was Christ, expounded. 237. 337
The Real Presence improoued by Christs ascension. 241. 242
The Omnipotent power of God appeareth as much in Baptisme, as it doth in the Sacrament. 242. 446
The cause whereof the Capernites error grew. 240. 241. 242
Visibly, inuisibly. 250
Christ laid Present vpon the Table, how to be taken. 250. 251
Christ dwelleth in vs naturally, but not so in the Sacrament. 253. 254
Of Christs very Presence, or dwelling in vs, comfortable doctrine. 254
By hearing Christs word, his Blood is powred into our eares. 337
Christ seene and Present to the spirituall eie of our faith and fruition of the minde. 266
Figuratiue speeches of Christs Presence. 447. 450. 455. 465. 466
The Priest holdeth God in his hands, in what sense. 450
Christ spirituall Presence. 266. 267. 300. 301. 319. 320. 333. 334. 350. 444. 446. 447
Christ Present in sundry places at one time, in what sense. 268
Christs Presence in the Sacrament learned by the similitude of the Sonne. 271. 272
As Christ is Present in Baptisme, so is hee Present in the Sacrament. 276

Presence.

Real Presence not knowen among the Grecians. 278
Real Presence is not of the necessity of the Sacrament. 283
Christs body Present in the Sacrament before Consecration, by M. Hardings Diuinity. 342
The Gospell is the Presence of Christ, in what sense. 348
The Presence of Angels. 432
Christ Present at the Communion, in what sense 431
These words, Corporally, Naturally, expounded by the Fathers. 256. 257. 258
Secretly, couertly, hidden, couered, visible, inuisible. 250. 340. 344. 350. 351
Christ not Corporally Present. 263. 266. 302
Christ Present with vs by his holy Spirit. 263. 266.
By Faith. 263. 266. 267
Christ Present in his holy word. 263
Christ Present by his grace, by his diuinity, and maiesty. 263. 266
Christ Present by Baptisme. 263. 264 266
Christs body not Present in the Sacrament according to Quantity, by M. Hard. Doctrine: which is contrary to some of his schoole Doctors. 261. 262
The dark doctrine of them of M. Hardings side, concerning the maner of Christs Presence in the Sacrament. 456. 457
After what maner Christs Body both is, and is not in the Sacrament, by M. Hard. strange doctrine. 470
Carnal vnderstanding. 240. 290
Of Christs Body and Presence with vs, see more at large before in these letters B. and E. and heereafter in this word Sacrament, and in these places following. 265. 266. 267. 268. 272. 297. 444. 445. 446. 447. 450

Priests.

Preparatiō of the mind before holy things. 12. 48. 132
Presbyterium. 146
Pride in Priests. 233. 239
The Priest prepareth in the Masse for himselfe, and not for others. 2
Priests cold in deuotion, & worse than the people. 13
Treen Priests. 13
No Priest can bee Excommunicate by M. Hardings reason. 30
The Priest knoweth not his owne intention. 26
The Priests intention a dungeon of vncertainty. 26
A Priest aboue our Lady and All Hallowes. 73
The Priest is the maker of his owne maker, by M. Hardings teaching. 452. 453
The Priest in his Masse receiueth the Sacrament for others, and praieth for Christ. 430. 434
Priests ignorant of the Latine tongue. 149. 152
The Priest blinde, the people blinde. 150. 152
Euery Priest a ruler of Gods church, in what sense. 229
The Priest holdeth God in his hand, in what sense. 450
Few Priests in old time. 355
All Priests that were present did Communicate together with the Priest that ministred. 355
A Priest that would neuer say Masse. 68
The Priests deceiue the people with fained miracles for lucres sake. 381. Of Priests looke more in the word Clergy.
The vse of these words in Latine, Princeps, Principatus, and Caput. 186. 226
The authority and duty of a godly Prince. 129. 154
No Prince in S. Peters time Christned. 178
Priuate, what it is M. Harding is not well resolued. 1
Priuate is Common, and Common is Priuate with M. Harding. 1
Priuate receiuing at home abolished. 33
Procustes a Giant. 339
Prudentius a godly Father openly falsified by M. Harding. 370. 372
Psalliani, Heretikes, and Monkes. 64
Psalmes. 159. 160
Psalmes driue away Diuels, in what sense. 157
Psalmes sung by children. 159
Psalmes sung at the Plough. 159
Psalmes sung of the Artificers in their shops. 159
Psalmes learned of Children in the schooles. 159
The Psalmes caused to be turned into English by King Aluredus. 400. 401
Publicanes and Heathens, by M. Hardings iudgement. 366. 367
Pythagorus saying of God. 12

Q

The Quire in the body of the Church, in the middest of all the people. 362

R

The Rabbines restrained the Lay people of the Iewes from reading of certaine Chapters of the Old Testament vntill a certaine time. 387. 390
A Rauen taught to say, Aue Cæsar Imperator. 126
A Rauen taught to say, Salue victor Antoni. 126
Receiuing of the Sacrament with the Hand 36. 37 38
Sole receiuing abolished. 37
Priuate receiuing at home reproued. 39
The same abolished. 33. 98
Sole receiuing, and Priuate Masse be diuers things. 43
He that receiued the Sacrament, and eat it not presently in the Church, accursed. 98
The receiuing of the Sacrament causeth not a man to die well: nor remoueth sinne. 99. 442
Reconciliation properly is betweene equall friends. 217. 218. 219
Reconciliation made to the Church of Rome. 218
Reconciliation is no necessary proofe of primacy, or subiection. 216. 217. 219
Regeneration a maruellous Sacrament. 264
Vrbanus Regius booke of common places. 83

Relikes worshipped, and Martyrs bones. 39
Remigius had a box of Oile sent from Heauen by the holy Ghost. P. Aemilius. 63
Remission of sinnes commeth by no outward action, but onely by Christ Blood: not by meane of the Masse, but only by the meane of faith. 436. 439
Repentance ought to continue all our life long: and not for one day only. 12

Reseruation.

Reseruation of the Sacrament displeaseth God. 37
Reseruation of the Sacrament, in both Kindes in the Primatiue Church. 98
The Remnants of the Sacrament were burnt immediately in the fire. 307
The Remnants of the Sacrament giuen to yongue Scholars to be eaten presently in the Church. 307
Reseruation of the Sacrament, is an abuse of the Sacrament. 308
Reseruation vnder a Canopy not yet found. 308
The Sacrament reserued not to be adored, but to be receiued of the people. 309. 458
The Sacrament reserued so long, that it bred wormes: and that one worme eat vp another. 309
The Sacrament reserued, abused to worke wicked deedes. 309
The Sacrament reserued for the space of seuen yeres. Amphilochius. 63
The rich eat Christ, and be not filled. 301. 302
Reuerence to be vsed in holy things. 12. 34. 35
Like reuerence due to Baptisme, to the Scriptures, and to the Sacrament. 408. 409
These words, The Rocke was Christ, expounded. 237. 313. 314

Rome.

These words, vpon this Rocke I wil build my Church, expounded. 165. 184. 195
Rome the eldest Church in the West part of the world. 42
Rome had sound doctrine: and the Gospell flourished there. 42. 182. 184
Rome comforted the Churches of France with doctrine. 42
Rome receiued her light and Faith from Græcia, Hierusalem, Antioche, &c. 42. 124. 208. 220
Rome gaue not first the West Churches their Faith, nor order of Seruice. 42. 123. 124. 141. 142. 173
Rome the mother of errour. 42
In the Church of Rome few Catholikes. 53
Rome had no Priuate Masse 600. yeeres after Christ. 59
Rome had a great number of the Clergy. 67
The Church of Rome is not Catholike, but particular. 88
Rome spake Latine naturally. 167
Rome proud, Contentious, and ambitious. 174. 175
All churches ought to agree to the Church of Rome, in what sense. 182
Rome sought vnto of the East Churches in their miseries. 200
The licentious liberty of Rome. 194
Rome six times sackt within the space of one hundred and forty yeeres. 216. 218
Rome called the Apostolike see. 218
Rome called Epitome orbis terrarum: the abridgement of the whole world. 219
Clergy of Rome, Pollers, Pilotes, Deceiuers. 42
Rome in her ruff, when Beda expounded these foure letters, S. P. Q. R. 219
Many great, and doubtfull questions neuer remooued to Rome. 219. 220
Rome the Head of superstition. 220
Rome the Head City: in what sense. 220
It is not found that the Bishop of Rome is called Head of the Church. 225. 228
Rome head, and principall City of the world. 227. 228
The pride of the See of Rome. 233. 234
Rome with her Clergy fowly corrupted. 30. 42. 363. 364. 450
Great disorders, and horrible abuses growen into the Church of Rome. 362
Who so abbridgeth the authority of the Church of Rome, ought to be holden for an Heretike. Pope Nicolas. 399
The Church of Rome kept the people in miserable blindnesse. 550. Of the See, and Church of Rome see more in this word, Pope. 406
Romulus, and Theseus reckened to be the children of the Gods. 279
To Rule the Church or house of God, what it meaneth. 228
This one word, Rule, diuersly taken. 231
M. Hardings generall Rule of Law is not alwaies true in Diuinity. 363
Ruffinus reprehended for his translation of Eusebius by M. Harding. 30

S

Sabbath day broken. 85. 86
The Sabbath day is euery day. 18. 19

Sacrament.

The definition of a Sacrament. 82. 244. 283. 331. 351
The definition of a Signe. 82. 244. 283. 341
Sacraments be not bare Signes, and tokens. 237. 238. 282. 283. 318. 321. 322
The Cause, and vtility why Sacraments are ordained. 331. 332
The true doctrine of the Sacrament. 237. 238
Sacrament generally taken. 86
What is required in a Sacrament. 87
Sacraments haue two effects, and ends. 20. 21
Sacraments auaileable to the receiuer only. 21
Sacraments be seales that we be ioyned to God: but not properly the causes of our coniunction. 21
Sacraments to be vsed with reuerence: but not with godly honour. 34. 281. 283. 304. 305
The Sacrament reserued displeased God. 35
The Sacrament sent to the excommunicate only at home. 35
The Sacrament turned into ashes. 36
The meaning, and sense of the same. 444. 445. 461
Sacraments consist of two things: the one Heauenly the other Earthly. 284 285. 333. 334. 443
What is to be considered in Sacraments. 283. 303. 317. 322. 323. 324. 333. 334
The Sacrament neuer called our Maker, our Lord, or God, of any of the old Fathers, or doctours. 33. 447. 451. 452. 453
The Sacrament receiued in the Hand. 36. 37. 38
In the Sacrament there remaineth still Bread, and Wine. 34. 73. 103. 110. 284. 285. 303. 304. 312. 313. 314. 318. 319. 321. 322. 323. 324. 325. 327. 336. 337. 343. 344. 345. 465. 466. 467. 468
Receiuing of the Sacrament at home abolished 33. 39.
The sending of the Sacrament abroad abolished. Conc. Laodicen. 42
Sacrament receiued euery day. 47. 48
Sacrament called the daily Bread. 48
Sacrament euermore ministred to a Monke by an Angell. 63
Sacrament laid vpon a dead mans breast. 63
Sacrament thrust into dead mens mouthes. 24. 63. 362
Sacrament buried. 63. 64
The Lords Supper must be common to al. Hierom. 2
The Sacramentall Bread kept seuen yeeres together, and giuen to a sicke man vpon his death bed. Amphiloch. 63. 64. 100. 312
The Sacrament of Christs body is no greater than his Word. 34
The Sacrament vnto some, Life: vnto some, Death: but Christs body it selfe is life vnto all men that be partakers thereof. 64. 241. 443 Difference between Christs Body, & the Sacrament of of the same. 64. 240. 241. 443. 448. 462

The fruit of the Sacrament. 73
The full Sacrament is not vnder one Kind. 74
The Sacrament ministred to the people vnder both kindes. 71. 72. 74. 75. 76. 77. 102
These words, Except yee eat the flesh of the Son of man, &c. pertaine not to the Sacrament. 77. 78 241. 291
The same words expounded by Origen. 332. 343
Ech man receiueth the Sacrament or Communion for himselfe, and not one for another. 433. 434
The Priest receiueth the Sacrament for others. 434
The Sacrament called a Mystery. 283
That Christ is carnally eaten in the Sacrament is a doctrine of desperation. 238. 291
The Sacrament diuersly named of the ancient Fathers and Doctours. 129. 243. 244. 245. 287 304. 332. 344. 345. 353. 404
The receiuing of the Sacrament causeth not a man to die well, nor remooueth sinne. 99. 442
The Sacrament not Cõsecrated on good Friday. 101
The Sacrament turned into a stone. 102
To take the Signe (or Sacrament) for the thing it selfe signified, is death, and miserable bondage of the Soule. August. 237. 243. 283. 331
Abuses of the Sacrament. 105. 284. 308
Sacrament not ministred at Emaus. 91. 92
Christ giueth his Body to be Eaten, not onely in the Sacrament. 239. 256. 292
The Holy Fathers and ancient Doctours be Sacramentaries, by M. Hardings learning. 249. 250
In the Sacrament there is no myracle. 259. 260
God with his power assistant vnto the Sacrament of his Supper, as he is also vnto the Sacrament of Baptisme. 446
What S. Chrysostme calleth a miracle in the Sacrament. 264
The Sacrament throwne into the fire because it would not speake. 453
Elias Coate compared with the Sacrament. 265
Diuers fond mysteries of the holding or lifting vp of the Sacrament ouer the Priests head. 279. 287
The Sacrament in one whole loafe or cake, diuided vnto the people. 279. 280
The shewing or bringing foorth of the Sacrament to the people, argueth a Communion, and no Priuate Masse. 280. 281
These words, Sancta Sanctis, make against sole receiuing. 280
Sancta Sanctorum, is Christs owne Body, and not the Sacrament. 287
A Sacrament requireth no Reall presence. 283
Sacrament turned into the nourishment of our Body. 283. 285. 319. 320. 464
The bread of the Sacrament is materiall bread, and but a Sacrament of that bread that came downe from heauen. 284
The Sacrament called the body and flesh of Christ in what sense. 274 275. 285
Sacraments scorce their names with the things wherof they be Sacraments. 285. 337. 343
The Sacrament, a description or examplar of Christs death. 287
The same called a Sacrifice, in what sense. 287
The Sacrament is a thing vnsensible. 296
Christs body in the sacrament, as it was in Mãna. 303
Sacrament is a Creature. 285. 304. 452
Sacraments are visible words. 304
Sacraments are the flesh of Christ, in what sense. 304
Infidels did weare the Sacrament about them. 309
Sacramentall changing. 303. 315. 317. 318. 319
In the Sacrament there is a white thing, yet nothing is white: and a round thing, yet nothing is round, by M. Hardings Diuinity. 325
Diuers fond fantasies of the breaking of the Sacrament. 327
The difference betweene the Sacraments of the Old Testamẽt & of the new. 339. 344. 345. 347. 348 349
The things signified by the same Sacraments, are one and the selfe same. 339. 411
The Sacrament is a Sacrament before Consecration, by M. Hardings Diuinity. 342
Vehement and firy speeches of the Sacrament. 223 287. 298. 304. 318. 333. 344. 350. 477
Christ present in the Sacraments of the New Testament, as he was in the Old. 349
Christ dieth in the Sacrament, in what sense. 350 351
Christ is in the Sacrament, in what sense. 447
The Sacrament is the heauenly bread. 351. 352
S. Augustine calleth the Sacrament Panem Dominj, but Christ himselfe, Panem Dominum. 448
The Sacrament is a Sacrament before it bee a Sacrament: and a figure before it be a figure, by M. Harding, and his new Doctours. 333
An errour in the administration of the Sacrament in one kind. Latomus. 367
The Sacrament laid in the mouthes of the dead, and vpon the breast of a dead woman. 437
The only receiuing of the Sacrament of the liuing, thought and taught to be auaileable against sinne. 437. 438
The Sacrament so receiued, giueth no grace, nor remitteth any sinne. 441. 442
The Sacrament entreth into the belly, and passeth into the draught. Origen. 451. 452
The Sacrament inferiour to Gods word. 451. 452
The iudgement and doctrine of the old ancient Fathers, touching the Sacrament of Christs, body. 451. 452. 453. 454
The old ancient order & vsage of the same. 452. 453
The Sacrament is God no longer than vntill the Accidents begin to mould and putrifie, by M Hard. doctrine. 455. 456
The darke doctrine of M. Hardings, concerning the maner of Christs being in the Sacrament. 456. 457
A resemblance or likenesse between the Sacrament, and the thing signified by the Sacrament. 457. 466
The grace of God is in the Sacrament, in what sense. 458
A mouse eating the Sacrament, receiueth the Body of Christ, by M. Hard. Doctors doctrine. 459. 460
The mouse inioyned punishment for eating of the Sacrament, and the keeper of the hosts. 460
Sundry Sacraments in one Sacrament, by M. Hardings drift of reason. 467
Sacraments and mysteries hidden from the Infidels. 408. 409
The remnants of the Sacrament immediately burnt, or giuen to yong scholars to be eaten. 307
The Sacrament kept vntill it bred wormes, and one worme eat vp another. 309
The Sacrament reserued, hath been abused to worke wicked and horrible deeds. 309

Sacrifice.

The Sacrifice that is common, may not haue priuate Titles. 2
A common Sacrifice must be offered by the whole Church. 2
The holy and propitiatory Sacrifice. 5. 15
The pure sacrifice prophesied by Malachy expounded. 5. 6. 412. 413. 420. 421
The Sacrifice of the new Testament. 15
The daily Sacrifice. 18. 19. 46
Christ daily Sacrificed in the holy Supper, in what sense. 424
Daily Sacrifice may continue without the Masse. 19
The Sacrifice not daily offered. 69
The daily Sacrifice can be only offered vp by a Virgin. Origen. 39
Sacrifice two waies taken. 248
Sacrifices of the Law compared with the Sacrifices of the Gospell. 49

The Sacrifice of praise and thanksgiuing. 279.280
Sacrifice of the Church, standeth in two things. 244
Baptisme a Sacrifice, in what sense. 287
Christ sacrificed himselfe at his last Supper, expounded. 287
Christs birth called a Sacrifice. 287
The people ought to offer the Sacrifice of the new Testament, no lesse than the Priest doth. 358.360 365.366
The daily Sacrifice is Christ himselfe, being both the Priest and the Sacrifice. 365.422.427
The cause why subtile men wrought their Sacrifices and Sacraments in silence. 407
These words: To Sacrifice: a Sacrificer: a Sacrifice, or oblation: in what sense, and how the Fathers vsed the same. 409 410.411.424.425.429
The Sacrifice of thanksgiuing is the Sacrifice of the new Testament. 267.411.415
No mortall man can offer vp, or sacrifice the immortal Son of God vnto his father. 409.411.412.429.438
Christ is now Sacrificed in the new Law, as hee was in the old. 411.424 425
The Sacrifice of remembrance, or praise, or thanksgiuing, a figure. 411.417.428.429.430
The Sacrament or ministration of the holy Communion called a Sacrifice, in what sense. 411 412 418 419 421.422
The absurdities that follow of vsing this word dare, for sacrificari, 414
Christ made a bloody Sacrifice at his last Supper, as M Harding saith. 414.415
The Sacrifice called dreadfull, and why dreadfull. 414.416.418
Christ was sacrificed at his last Supper, in what sense 287.417
The difference betweene the Sacrifice of the Table, or Communion, and the Sacrifice of the Crosse. 417.418.419
That Christ was inuisibly offered or Sacrificed in heauen, is a vaine fantasie of M. Harding. 417.418
M. Harding saith, the Sacrifice made vpon the Crosse and his Sacrifice in his Masse is all one. 418
The Sacrifice of Bread and Wine. 287.288.419
The Sacrifices of the Old Testament, and of the New, and why called new Sacrifice. 420.421.424
Christ Sacrificed in the Sacrament of Baptisme in what sense. 422.423
The Sacrifice or present that Melchisedeck offred & brought forth vnto Abraham expounded. 425.429
The Sacrifice for sin was Christ himselfe alone, and that vpon the Crosse once for all; which Sacrifice lasteth for euer, he being both the Sacrificer and the Sacrifice it selfe. 5 415 417.418.436
The bloody Sacrifices of the Heathens, and in the time of Moses Law. 426.427
The vnbloody Sacrifice, & why vnbloody. 419.420 428
The daily & vnbloody spiritual Sacrifice of the new Testament ought to be offered of euery Christian man, as well as of the Priest. 358.360.366.416 429 430.434
The Sacrifice of the son of God compared with the Sacrifice of brute Cattell, by M. Harding. 430

Scriptures.

The Scriptures forged in the name of the Apostles are to be burnt. 6
Scriptures aboue the Church. 88
A notable rule for the expounding of the Scriptures 95
Scriptures aboue Councels. 364
Canonical Scriptures, and matter of good authority read in the Church. 114.117
The Scriptures translated into the Slauon tongue, by S. Hierome. 117.118.385.399
The people exhorted to reade the Scriptures at home in their houses. 117
The Scriptures are to be read of the ignorant people 152.153.388
To read the Scriptures profiteth much, although we attaine not to the full sense thereof. 156.157
The reading & knowledge of the Scriptures is a torment aboue all torments, to the diuels. 156.157.472
The Scripture or a piece of the Gospel superstitiously hanged about mens neckes. 157
The Angels of God delight in seeing vs read the Scriptures. 157
In exposition of the Scriptures we may not stand vpon the bare word. 322
Scriptures are to be vnderstanded by Scriptures: and not by drift of reason. 190.191
The discord of the Doctors and Schoolemen about the expounding of the Scriptures 193.194
The Scriptures being doubted of, the best learned were sought vnto, and not the Pope. 193.194
The pith of the Scriptures, is the sense thereof. 236
The holy Scriptures doe deifie or make vs Gods, what it signifieth. 246
The Scriptures to be reuerenced, as much as the Sacrament. 409.410
In the Primitiue Church the Scriptures commanded to be read of the vulgar people, at home in their houses. 383 384.385
Women forced to learne euery day some part of the Scriptures. 184.188
Three opinions concerning the Scriptures to be had in the vulgar tongue. 384.385
That the Scriptures be in any knowen tongue to the people, it is condemned by the Church of Rome. 384.385.399
The iudgement of Christ, the Apostles, and the old Fathers was, to haue the Scriptures in a knowen tongue to the common people. 384.385.386
The Scriptures rather to be read of the Lay people than of the Monkes and Priests. Chryso. 385. 390
To read and withdraw the people from reading of Scriptures, commeth from the Diuel, &c. 385. 386
The whole Scriptures called a Tradition, in what sense. 386
The Scriptures of God offereth occasion of euill thoughts, as M. Hard. saith. 387
Contentious disputation of the Scriptures of God and diuine things, is dangerous. 387
Scriptures are not all of one sort. 387
The Scriptures to be read of all persons. 388
The Scriptures sometimes hidden from the Scribes, Pharisies, Doctors, and Bishops, and reuealed to the little ons, euē the Lay people 388.389.393.394
Some part of the Scriptures of the old Testament not suffered to be read of the people vntil they were of good yeeres. 387.390
The Scriptures read and written of the people of Israell in the Hebrew tongue. 389.390
Reading and knowledge of the Scriptures, breedeth humblenesse and meeknesse of heart. 391
Ignorance of the Scriptures the cause of all euill. 391
Reading of the Scriptures make yong men vertuous and godly. 391
Knowledge of heauenly things behoouefull for a Prince. 391
The holy Scriptures called Heresie. 392
The Scriptures to be read for the auoiding of heresies. 391
By the Scriptures the lawfull coine is knowen from the Copper. 392
The Scripture is the candle whereby the thiefe is espied. 392
The Scriptures hard to some, to some easie. 393
The Scriptures plaine and easie. 393
The Scriptures not vnderstanded by flesh and blood, but by speciall reuelation. 394
The holy Scriptures called flesh, bread, milke, &c. 445

The

The Scriptures ought to be ſought and ſearched in the time of deſſenſion in Religion. 396
Churches not to be beleeued, vnleſſe they agree with the Scriptures. 396
The Scriptures be the triall. 397
The holy Scriptures ſuperiour to the Sacrament 451
Adelſtane King of England cauſed the whole Bible to be tranſlated into the Engliſh tongue. 397. 403
The Scriptures tranſlated into the Gotthian tongue by Vlphilas the Arrian Biſhop. 385. 397. 398
The Scriptures in the Syrian, Paleſtine, Thebane, Phenike, Arabike, Libike, French tongue, and in all Chriſtian tongues. 398. 399
Sundry partes of the Scriptures tranſlated into the Engliſh tongue, by King Aluredus, by Cedman, and Beda. 399. 400

Seruice.

The common Seruice in a common knowen tongue 124. 125. 126
The Scriptures read openly, as Leſſons to the people in the Church. 125. 126
The Pſalmes ſung in the Syrian tongue. 39
The Syrians had their common Seruice and Homilies in their Syriacall tongue. 117
The Slauons had their common Seruice in their own tongue. 117. 118
The common Seruice in the Primatiue Church, in the common vulgar tongue. Lyra. Tho. Aqui. 130
The Iewes that were Chriſtned, had their Seruice in the Hebrew tongue. Durandus. 130
The Prieſt forbidden to ſing in the Church. 114
Singing in the Church fitter for the people than the Prieſt. 114
Examples of the common Seruice in a common knowen tongue. 130. 131. 132. 152. 153
The Seruice in a common knowen tongue not miſliked of M. Harding, but thought neceſſary and good. 313. 114. 130
Silence and attention at Seruice commanded by the Deacon. 132
Seruice ſaid with a loud voice that the people might heare. 128. 404. 405
The common Seruice at Hippo in Latine, where the people ſpake Latine. 134. 135
The Seruice in France read in a tongue knowen to the common people. 136. 137
No Latine Seruice in England within the firſt ſix hundred yeeres. 140. 141
The Seruice in England. 139 140. 141. 142. 143
The Seruice in England furthered and ordered by the Greeke Church. 142
The place of S. Paul maketh for Seruice in the vulgar knowen tongue. 1. Cor. 14. 144
The Seruice in Latine is incongrue, void of reaſon, & full of Fables. 148. 149
The Latine Seruice like to Caligulaes feaſt. 149
M. Hardings proofes for his Latine Seruice. 159
Seruice in a knowen toong increaſeth deuotion. 160
Seruice in the vulgar tongue, is cauſe neither of ſchiſme nor of hereſie. 161
The Angell of God Author of the Seruice in the vulgar tongue in Ruſſia, and Morauia. 162
The cõmon Seruice in Englãd in the Engliſh tong is agreeable to Gods word, the Catholike Faith, and the order of the Primatiue Church. 162. 163
Saints made of Infidels and theeues. 39
Samona a yongue Docteur of M. Hardings. 320. 324
Saturninus brought the Goſpell into France before S. Petr came to Rome. 42
Shiſmes and ſects grow where the Biſhops authority is condemned. 170. 171. 217
S. Auguſtine a Schiſmatike by M. Hardings iudgement. 217
Schooles in Hieruſalem. 390
Shepheards in the fields conſecrate their bread vpon a ſtone, a fooliſh fable. 407 408
Iohannes Scotus ſcholar to Beda. 244
M. Harding in ſtead of this word Churches, hath tranſlated thus, Martyrs Shrines. 39
Serapion excommunicated for Idolatry. 35
Pope Sergius the firſt, deuiſed Agnus Dei to be ſung at the diſtribution of the myſteries. 328
Pope Sergius the ſecond called Os Porci. 328
Pope Sergius the third tooke vp his Predeceſſour out of his graue, beheaded him, and threw his carkeſſe into the riuer Tiber. 328
M. Hardings praier called, Oratio Secreta, or Miſſa, 409. 410
The Emperour Seuerus, his watchword. 371
Signes, be not the truth it ſelfe. 283
Signum, what it is. 283
Simon Zelotus preached in England. 141
Simeones the founder of the Meſſalians. 100
Chriſtian and true ſimplicity pardonable. 83
Simeon Metaphraſtes, a vaine Fabler. 374
This word Species, taken for the ſubſtance it ſelfe. 334. 349. 467
Spiritus vbi vult ſpirat. 88
Spiridion a godly married Biſhop. 433
Solemnia Miſſarum. 51
Soter. 5. 49. 50. 51
The bondage of the ſoule. 233
Staphylus a vile Renegate. 2
Two Stones buried with S. Mathia. Abdias. 101
The Stoickes opinion of God, of Nature, and of the gouernment of the world. 373
Stuppino a Frier in Rome whiped naked thorow the ſtreets for ſaying too many Maſſes in one day. 381
Subſtance changed into Accidents, with M. Har. 38
Surſum corda, expounded by S. Auguſtine. 132. 330
The Supper of the Lord ought to be common to all. S. Hierome. 2
Swearing. 88. 89
Syluester the Pope had cõference with the diuell. 5
Synecdoche, a figure of ſpeech commonly vſed in the Scriptures. 98

T

THe Communion Table, called by the name of Altar. 145
Tertullian wilfully corrupted by M. Harding. 33. 34
Tertullian a maried Prieſt, and a Martyr. 33. 422
Tertullian vnderſtandeth not the Grammaticall ſenſe of Chriſts words, as M. Hard ſaith. 341. 345
Tertullians expoſition agreeth both with the Scriptures, and with the ancient Fathers. 342. 345
Teutonicus corrupteth S. Auguſtine. 104
Iulius Cæſars theft. 357
Lyſanders theft or pikery. 357
The property of Theeues. 357
Theeues taken for Martyrs. 39
Theodoretus condemned for an heretike. 188
Theodoretus falſly Tranſlated by M. Harding. 217
Theodoretus refuſed in Oxford as an Heretike, now embraced of M. Harding for Catholike. 318
Theodoſius the Emperour willed to depart the Quire, by S. Ambroſe. 146
Theodoretus a Biſhop of Canturbury. 13
Theophylact no old Doctor, nor without errors. 342
Themiſtocles argument of himſelfe, his wife, and his childe. 232
Theſeus father not knowen. 279
Chriſt ſpake to Thomas of Aquine by a viſion in his dreame, Bene ſcripſiſti de me Thoma. 459
The ſame Thomas therefore was called, Angelicus Doctor. 459
Euil thoughts moued by reading or hearing of Gods holy word. M. H. 387
Timotheani, were Heretikes. 316
Titles of mockery and diſſimulation. 222
The people anſwer the Prieſt by Saint Iames Liturgie

gie, or communion, in their owne tongue. 9
The gift of Tongues: and why. 116. 123. 143 144
The title of the Crosse in three principall Tongues: and the cause thereof. 122
Threescore & twelue sundry languages or Tongues in the world. 146
The whole Religion and Gospell of Christ, called a Tradition in what sense. 386
The vse of this word, Tradition, among the Fathers 386
Transubstantiation neuer receiued of Grecia or Asia vnto this day. 295. 314. 323. 324
Transubstantiation a very yoong childe, and lately. brought in to the world. 294. 295. 306. 313. 402
The first inuentors therof not yet resolued vpon the same. 295
The same not prooued by Gods word. 313. 324 402
The same refused as an error or heresie. 313. 314
The vse and signification of these words, Transubstantiari, and Transelementari. 322
Transubstantiation receiued no where but in the Church of Rome. 324
Transubstantiation hath lost his old name. 359
Isidorus a Bishop deposed for bearing and inclining to Transubstantiation. 323
Transubstantiation prooued by this word, Amen. 404. 405
Treen Priests. 13

V

The Iudgement of Valdo the Merchant in some matters of Religion. 397
Tho. Valois taketh this word Apex, for a Chronicler. 34
The Vandales miserably afflicted Aphrica. 219
The Valentinian Heretikes. 206
Very, and verily. 251
Verus, called Ἐωσφὸρ a Sauiour. 222
Victor the Pope poisoned in the Chalice. 2
Christs Vicar. 192
Visibly: Inuisibly. 249 250
Vlphilas an Arian Bishop, translated the Scriptures into the Gothian tongue. 385. 397. 399
Carnall Vnderstanding, what. 240. 290

W

WAter and Wine mingled, not necessary in Communion. 66
Water in Baptisme called Christs blood. 285
Water in Baptisme is not bare, and Common Water. 321
Water in Baptisme called the Diuine or Heauenly bath. 351
The Water of Baptisme receiueth or conceiueth God: in what sense. 298. 446
The Water in the Font suddenly dried vp. 445
Water worshipped. 296
Washing of feete: and what it signifieth 78
The wicked sometime by Gods will and permission rule and raigne. 233
William Conquerors whole army Communicated in both kinds. 111. 112
Wine kept long. 103
Great Wisedom to discerne, Aliud & Idem Plato. 283
A Woman sought to for Councel in cases of Religion. 220
The word of God is the Triall and rule of Faith. 181 182
The Word of God diuersly named. 260
The Word of God worshipped. 282
The Word of God called the Body and blood of Christ. 285
The Word was made Flesh, expounded. 315. 316
The Word of God called heresie. 391. 392
Certaine Words and termes of the old Law vsed of the old Fathers, although the Ceremony of the same were out of vse. 410. 411
When we heare the Word of God, the Flesh of Christ and his blood is poured into our eares. 337 421
The Word of God called Flesh, Bread, Milk, &c. 445
The Word of God Superior to the Sacrament. 451
The reading & knowledge of Gods Word is a torment aboue all torments, to the Diuell. 472
God worketh mightily by his Word. 318
Wormes burnt, and their Ashes buried in the Altar. 309
The World gouerned not by nature or naturall causes, but by God. 273. 274
The World is the schoole of our soules to lead vs to God. S. Basil. 274
The Soule of the World is the power of God. Origen. 274
Worship giuen to Images and Graues. 39
We worship the Sacrament, &c. in what sense. 282
We worship Baptisme. 282. Looke in Adoration.

THE

The Table of the Articles treated on in this Booke.

1 That there was any Priuate Masse in the world at that time, for the space of six hundred yeres after Christ. Pag. 1

2 Or that there was then any Communion ministred vnto the people vnder One kind. 71

3 Or that the people had there common praier in a straunge tongue that they vnderstood not. 112

4 Or that the Bishop of Rome was then called an Vniuersall Bishop, or the head of the Vniuersall Church. 163

5 Or that the people was then taught to beleeue that Christs Body is Really, Substantially, Corporally, Carnally, or Naturally in the Sacrament. 235

6 Or that his body is, or may be in a thousand places or moe at one time. 259

7 Or that the Priest did then hold vp the Sacrament ouer his head. 277

8 Or that the people did then fall downe, and worship it with godly honour. 282

9 Or that the Sacrament was then, or now ought to be hanged vp vnder a Canopie. 307

10 Or that in the Sacrament after the wordes of Consecration, there remaine only the accidents and shewes, without the substance of Bread and Wine. 312

11 Or that the Priest then diuided the Sacrament in three parts, and afterward receiued himselfe all alone. 327

12 Or that whosoeuer had said, the Sacrament is a figure, a pledge, a token or a remembrance of Christs Body, had therefore beene iudged for an Heretike. 331

13 Or that it was lawfull then to haue rrr. rr. rv. r or v. Masses said in one day. 355

14 Or that Images then were set vp in the Churches, to the intent the people might worship them. 367

15 Or that the Lay people was then forbidden to read the word of God in their owne tongue. 383

16 Or that it was then lawfull for the Priest to pronounce the wordes of Consecration closely, and in silence to himselfe. 402

17 Or that the Priest had then authority to offer vp Christ vnto his Father. 410

18 Or to Communicate and receiue the Sacrament for another, as they doe. 428

19 Or to apply the vertue of Christs death and passion to any man by the meane of the Masse. 435

20 Or that it was then thought a sound doctrine to teach the people that Masse Ex opere operato, that is, euen for that it is said and done, is able to remoue any part of our sinne. 437

21 Or that then any Christian man called the Sacrament his Lord and God. 443

22 Or that the people was then taught to beleeue that the body of Christ remaineth in the Sacrament, as long as the Accidents of the Bread remaine there without corruption. 454

23 Or that a Mouse or any other worme or beast, may eat the body of Christ (for so some of our Aduersaries haue said & taught.) 459

24 Or that when Christ said, Hoc est corpus meum. This word Hoc, pointed not the Bread, but Individuum vagum, as some of them say. 462

25 Or that the Accidents or Formes or Shewes of Bread and Wine, be the Sacraments of Christs Body and Blood, and not rather the very Bread and Wine it self. 465

26 Or that the Sacrament is a signe or token of the Body of Christ that lieth hidden vnderneath it. 468

27 Or that ignorance is the mother and cause of true Deuotion and Obedience. 471

OF PRIVATE MASSE.

THE FIRST ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

IF any learned man of our aduersaries, or if all the learned men that be aliue, be able to bring any one sufficient sentence out of any olde Catholike Doctour or Father, or out of any olde Generall Councell, or out of the holy Scriptures of God, or any one example of the Primitiue Church whereby it may clearely and plainly be proued, that there was any Priuate Masse in the whole World at that time for the space of six hundred yeres after Christ, &c. The conclusion is this: As I said before, so say I now againe, I am content to yeld and to subscribe.

M. Harding. The First Diuision.

EVery Masse is publike, concerning both the Oblation and also the Communion, and none priuate. For no man offereth that dreadfull Sacrifice priuately for himselfe alone, but for the whole Church of Christ in common. The Communion likewise of the Sacrament, is a publike feast by Christ through the ministery of the Priest in the same, (1) prepared for euery faithfull person; from partaking whereof none is excluded, that with due examination hauing before made himselfe ready, demandeth the same. And so being common by order of the first institution, and by (2) will of the ministers, it ought to be reputed for common, not priuate.

That others doe so commonly forbeare to communicate with the Priest, it is through their owne default and negligence, not regarding their owne Saluation. Whereof the godly and carefull rulers of faithfull people haue sithence the time of the Primitiue Church, alwaies much complained.

The 1. vntruth. For there is no such preparation

The 2. vntruth. There appeareth no such will in the Minister.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

THere appeareth small hope that M. Harding will deale plainely in the rest, that thus maketh his first entrie with a cauil. For whereas the matter is knowen and agreed vpon, it is great folly to picke quarrel vpon the word. Euery Masse (saith he) is common, and none priuate. If it be so, then hath hee already concluded fully on our side, For if there be no Priuate Masse at all, then was there no Priuate Masse in the Primitiue Church, which was my first assertion.

But, M. Harding, as may be gathered by his maner of prowes, is not yet well resolued, neither what is Priuate, nor what is Masse. For in the 22. Article of his Booke, intreating of the Accidents of Bread and Wine, to the intent to auoid the grosse absurdities that follow Transubstantiation, he saith: These matters were neuer taught in open audience, but priuately disputed in the Schooles, and set abroad by learned men in their priuate writings. There he calleth that thing priuate, that is disputed in open audience, in the hearing of fiue hundred or moe, and is set abroad to the knowledge of the World: and here the thing that is done by the Priest and his boy alone in a corner, he calleth common. Thus he maketh words to sound, what him listeth, sometime common to be priuate, sometime priuate to be common, at his pleasure.

Pag. 182. b.

M. Harding maketh common priuate, and priuate common.

And as touching Masse, sometime he maketh it the Sacrifice: sometime the Communion: sometime the Prayers: and so semeth not yet well to know vpon what ground to stand.

These reasons be answered afterward more at large.

His first reason is this: The Sacrifice of the Priest is common: therefore the Masse is common. Here might be demanded, Who gaue the Priest authoritie to make his Sacrifice: and, without authoritie, how can he make it? But if his Sacrifice be common, why doth he giue it these priuate titles; This for the liuing: This for the dead: This for a friend: This for himselfe?

His second reason is this: It is a feast: and therefore it is common: and thus he inducth one errour with an other. For if it be a feast, how is it receiued by one alone? If it be receiued by one alone, how can it seeme to be a feast? But he saith, it is prepared for all. Verily it is but small prouision to serue so many. The Priest himselfe knoweth this is vntrue. He prepareth for himselfe, and not for others: He speaketh to himselfe, and not vnto the congregation: He receiueth himselfe alone, and not with his brethren. Therefore in this respect we must nods say, the Masse is priuate, and not common.

Hermannus Contractus. Nicolaus Lyra in 14. cap. Danielis.

The third reason touching the will of the Minister, is very vncertaine. For neither can the Priest, by his working, alter natures or make that thing common, which is priuate: nor can any man certainly know, what thing the Priest willeth. For what if his will be to worke Necromancie or Sorcerie, as it is reported of Pope Hildebrand? Or what if his will be to poison some body, as Henry the Emperor was poisoned in the Communion bread: Pope Victor in the Chalice? Or what if his will be to worke fained miracles, as Lyra saith, many are wrought in the open Church by the Priest to mocke the people? Doubtlesse if the Priests will may be known, either by his words or by his doings, or by his gesture, or by his prouision, or by the quantity of his Bread and Wine, or by his whole vsage and practise, it may soone be seene, his will is to make a priuate banket, and not a common.

Ambros. 1. Cor. 11.

These be very weake foundations to build vpon. Of the same M. Harding might rather and far better haue gathered the contrary. For if it be the common Sacrifice of the whole Church, it should be offered by the whole Church, as S. Ambrose saith: Vt multorum oblatio simul celebretur: That the oblation of many may be made together.

Hier. 1. Cor. 11.

If it be a common feast of the whole Church, it should be receiued commonly of the whole Church. And therefore S. Hierome saith: Dominica cœna omnibus debet esse communis: The Lords Supper must be common to all: and that not for these simple shifts that M. Harding and his fellowes haue deuised. S. Hieromes reason is this: Quia Dominus omnibus Discipulis, qui aderant, æqualiter tradidit Sacramenta: Because the Lord gaue the Sacraments equally to all the Disciples that were present. These words be plaine: Equally and To all the Disciples. And therefore saith S. Hierome, according to this example, the Lords Supper must be common.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuision.

The 3. vntruth.

Therefore in this respect wee doe not acknowledge any priuate Masse, but leaue that terme to Luthers Schoole where it was first deuised, and so termed by Satan himselfe, seeking how to withdraw his Nouice Luther from the loue and estimation of that most blessed sacrifice, by reasoning with him against the same in a night vision, as himselfe recordeth in a little booke which he made, Dimissa angulari & vnctione Sacerdotali.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

This tale against that godly man Doctour Luther, is scornefull and slanderous, blazed abroad by Pigghius, Hosius, Staphylus the runnagate, and such others, only of wilfull malice and hatred of the truth, and therefore not worthy to be answered. Doctour Luther sheweth what terrible tentations the Diuell laieth to trappe man withal, taking occasion sometime of well doing, sometime of euill: sometime of truth, sometime of falshood. And for example, he sheweth that the Diuell on a time assaulted him, not in visible forme, but by dreadfull suggestions in his conscience, as it were, thus calling him to remembrance: These many yeeres thou hast said Masse, thou hast shewed vp Bread and Wine to be worshipped as God, and yet now thou knowest it was a Creature and not God, Thereof followed Idolatrie, and thou wert the cause thereof. All these things he saw to be true by the testimony and light of his owne conscience, and therefore confessed he had offended, and yelded himselfe vnto God. The Diuels purpose was to lead him to despaire: but God mercifully deliuered him. And this is Doctour Luthers whole, and onely meaning in that place, that no man of himſelfe is able to withſtand ſuch aſſaults and tentations of the enemie, but onely by the power and mercy of God. This (good Reader) is that Schoole of Satan: This is that wonderfull Tragedie, whereat M. Harding maketh ſuch horrible exclamations. If hée thinke it ſo hainous a matter for a godleſſe man to be vexed by the Diuel, perhaps he will alſo find ſome fault with Chriſt, that was carried by the Diuell into the mount: or with S. Paul, that had the Angell of Satan to buffet him: or with a great number of his Poſtuiſe Saints, whoſe Legends are full of viſions of Diuels, with other like childiſh fables. As for Luther, the Doctrine that he taught in his Schole touching this point, is the very Goſpell of Chriſt, and therefore it increaſeth and entreth into the hearts of men, and the lies and ſlanders of the enemies ſhall neuer be able to preuaile againſt it. Matth. 4. 2. Cor. 12.

of

M. Harding. The 3. Diuiſion.

Yet we denie not but the Fathers of ſome ancient Councels, and ſithence likewiſe S. Thomas, and certaine other Schoole Doctors haue called it ſometimes a Priuate Maſſe, but not after the ſenſe of Luther and his ſcholars, but onely as it is contrary to publike and ſolemne, in conſideration of place, time, audience, purpoſe, rites, and other circumſtances. The variety and change of which, being things accidentary, cannot vary or change the ſubſtance or eſſentiall nature of the Maſſe. M. Iewel, an earneſt profeſſor of the new doctrine of Luther, and of the Sacramentaries, calleth as they doe, that a Priuate Maſſe whereat the Prieſt hauing no company to communicate with him, receiueth the Sacrament alone.

2. Concil. Valen. cap. 4. Concil Tiburien. Decretal. lib. 3. tit. 41. cap. 2. de conſecrat. diſt. 1. ex Aug. quod quidam Greg. tribuunt. Greg. ex Regiſt. lib. 2. ad Caſſerium cap. 9. & 3. Parte Summæ quæſt. 83.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

M. Harding by a Rhetoricall Correction vpon better aduice, putteth himſelfe in remembrance that there is mention made of Peculiar and Priuate Maſſes, as he ſaith, In certaine ancient Councels, and in the Schoole Doctours. He might haue named Steuen Gardiner, and Albertus Pighius, that wrote the defenſe of Priuate Maſſe, and he himſelfe acknowledgeth abuſes and errours in the ſame. Yet will he not, I trow, confeſſe that either of them both was the Diſciple of Satan. In the Biſhops Booke. Alb. Pighius in locis communib. de Priuata Miſſa.

Here M. Harding ſtandeth vpon termes and ſaith, The Maſſe is called Priuate in reſpect of place, time, audience, and other circumſtances. And euen ſuch hée their priuate Maſſes for the moſt part ſaid in ſide Iles, alone, without company of people, only with one boy to make anſwere, ſo priuate, that the people of God is thereby depriued and robbed of all comfort. And thus it ſéemeth Thomas vnderſtandeth the Priuate Maſſe. For thus he ſaith: In Miſſis priuatis ſufficit, ſi vnus ſit præſens, ſcilicet Miniſter, qui populi totius perſonam gerit: In Priuate Maſſes it is ſufficient if there be one preſent, I meane the Clerke that ſtandeth in ſtead of the whole people. Part. 3. quæſt. 83. art. 5.

Touching the allegations in the margine, the Schole Doctours are all of very late yéres: The place of S. Auguſtine is forged and not S. Auguſtines: the place of S. Gregory nothing to purpoſe, not once naming priuate Maſſe: the Councels that are called ſo ancient, were all at the leaſt ſeuen hundred yéres after Chriſt, and ſo without the reach of my compaſſe.

But to agrée vpon termes, and not to ſtie the name of Maſſe, although it be very ſeldome, and for the moſt part neuer found in the Old Catholike Writers: that we call the Common or Publike Maſſe, whereas the Prieſt and people receiue the holy Communion together, which was the ancient order of the Apoſtles and holy Fathers in the Primitiue Church. But whereas the Prieſt receiueth the Sacrament himſelfe alone, without diſtribution made vnto others, that we call the Priuate Maſſe, yea although the whole parith be preſent and loke vpon him. For a thing may be priuate, although it be done by the publike Miniſter, and for the people, and in the middes of all the people. And thus Thomas of Aquine ſéemeth to take theſe words Priuate and Common. Firſt (ſaith he) the people is prepared to receiue by the Common praier of all the people, which is the Lords Praier: and alſo by the Priuate Praier, which the Prieſt offereth ſpecially for the people. Here the Praier is called priuate, notwithſtanding it be made by the Prieſt, for the people and in the mids of the Congregation. Publike Maſſe Priuate Maſſe 3. Part. q. 183. ar. 4. In explanatione Miſſæ Romanæ.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuiſion.

Againſt this Priuate Maſſe, as he termeth it, he inueigheth ſore in his Printed Sermon which he preached at Pauls Croſſe the ſecond Sunday before Eaſter in the yeere of our Lord 1560. as hee intituleth it; ſhunning the accuſtomed name of Paſſion Sunday, leſt (as it ſeemeth) by vſing the terme of the Catholike Church hee ſhould ſeeme to fauour any thing that is Catholike. In which Sermon he hath gathered together, as it were, into one heape, all that euer he could finde written in derogation of it, in their bookes by whom it hath beene impugned.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Marke (gentle Reader) how small occasions this man taketh hold at, contrary to this promise, to serue his intemperate humour of speaking euill. What, thinketh he, that all folke are Heretikes that name the daies otherwise than they be named in his Portuise? So may he some condemne the Greekes, and (the Church of Rome onely excepted) all other Christians throughout the World, who, as I reckon, neuer had the name of Passion Sunday in their Calender, or vse of speaking. So may he condemne all such as call Parasceue, good Friday, or the Italians, that contrary to the Portuise call the first weke in Lent the Carneuale. Indeed the Portuise calleth that day not only Passion Sunday, but also the Sunday Iudica, and taketh the one name to be as Catholike as the other. God be thanked we are not ashamed of Christs Passion, as hauing nothing to glory in but only the Crosse of Christ, and his Passion: neither doe we refuse your fantasies because they be Catholike as you surmise, but because they be your owne, deuised by your selfe of late daies; many of them contrary to Gods holy word, and are not Catholike.

Dominica Iudica. Galat. 6.

Inuectiues I made none, neither doe we vse the Pulpit to that purpose, but soberly & far otherwise than M. Harding seemeth to vse his pen. I spake of the abuses of Christs last Supper, hauing thereto occasion of these words of S. Paul: The thing that I receiued of the Lord, the same haue I deliuered vnto you: who in his time seemeth to finde fault with the Corinthians for the same. Neither is the Supper of Christ so priuileged, but it may be abused, as appeareth by the very confession of our aduersaries, who denie not, but that there be abuses and errours cropen into the Priuate Masse.

1. Cor. 11.

Albertus Pighius de priuata Missa.

The 4. vntruth. For the old Fathers neuer commonly called it so.

The 5. vntruth. For Christ speaketh not one word of any Sacrifice.

The 6. vntruth. For S Andrew said the Communion and not the Masse.

The 7. vntruth. For this Abdias neuer saw Christ in the flesh; it is a very Legend of lies.

The 8. vntruth. For there is no maner token or shew of priuate Masse.

The 9. vntruth. For it is the very forme of the Communion, & nothing like the priuate Masse.

* Faith cõfirmed without words. S. Paul saith, faith commeth by hearing.

The 10. A burde of vntruthes.

The 11. vntruth. For they contain the very order of the Cõmunion.

The 12. vntruth. For it is the very expresse order of the Cõmunion. It is no priuate Masse.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuision.

Although hee pretend enmity against priuate Masse in word, yet indeed whosoeuer readeth his Sermon, and discerneth his spirit, shall easily perceiue that he extendeth his whole wit and cunning vtterly to abolish the vnbloudy and daily Sacrifice of the Church, (4) commonly called the Masse. Which as the Apostles themselues affirme in Clement their Scholar and Fellow, being vnbloudy, hath succeeded in place of the bloudy Sacrifices of the old Law, and is by Christs commandement frequented and offered to remembrance of his passion and death, and to be vsed all times vntill his comming. But whatsoeuer he or all other the forerunners of Antichrist, speake or worke against it, all that ought not to ouerthrow the faith of good and true Christian men, hauing for proofe therof beside many other places of holy Scripture, the figure of Melchisedech that was before the Law, the prophesie of Malachy in the Law, and lastly and most plainly the (5) institution of Christ in the New Testament. Which he left to the Apostles, the Apostles to the Church, and the Church hath continually kept and vsed thorow the whole World vntil this day.

Pro Sacrificio crucem, vinum & panem. Eucharistiam & mysticum sacrificium, quod in memoriam Domini per Symbola corporis & sanguinis ipsius celebratur. Clemens Constitutionum Apostolicarum lib. 6. cap. 23. Abdias lib. 7. Historiæ Apost. Concilium Constantinopol. in Trullo, cap. 32. Epist. ad Bur. degal. Concil. Apostol. S. cap. 28. In Euseb. Hierarch. cap. 3. Act. 17. Lib. 4. contra hæres. cap. 32.

Touching Doctours, they haue with one consent in all ages, in al parts of the World, from the Apostles time forward, both with their example, and also testimony of writing, confirmed the same faith. They that haue been brought vp in learning, and yet through corruption of the time stand doubtfull in this point, let them take paines to trauell in study, and they shal find by good ancient witnesse of the Priests and Deacons of Achaia, that (6) S. Andrew the Apostle, touching the substance of the Masse, worshipped God euery day with the same seruice as Priests now do, in celebrating the externall Sacrifice of the Church. They shall find by witnesse of Abdias first Bishop of Babylon, who was the Apostles scholar (7) and saw Christ our Sauiour in flesh, and was present at the passion and martyrdome of S. Andrew, that S. Matthew the Apostle celebrated Masse in Ethiopia a little before his Martyrdome. They shall find by report of an ancient Councell general, that S. Iames wrote a Liturgie or a forme of the Masse. They shall find that Martialis one of the LXXII. Disciples of Christ, and Bishop of Burdeaux in France, sent thither by S. Peter, serued God in like sort. (8) They shal find in Clement the whole order & forme of the Masse, set forth by the Apostles themselues, and the same celebrated by them after our Lord was assumpted, before they went to the ordering of Bishops, Priests, and the vij. Deacons, according to his institution, and the same right so declared by Cyrillus Bishop of Ierusalem In Mystagogicis orationibus. They shal find the same most plainly treated of, (9) and a forme of the Masse, much agreeable to that is vsed in these daies in writing set foorth by S. Dionyse, whom S. Paul conuerted to the Faith, of whom it is mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles, who had conference with S. Peter, Paul and Iohn the Euangelist, and much acquaintance with Timothy.

* Thus doe I giue thee, good Christian Reader, but a taste as it were of proofes without allegation of the words, for confirmation of thy faith concerning the Blessed Masse out of the Scriptures, Apostles, and Apostolike men. (10) I do further referre thee to Iustinus the Martyr and Philosopher, to Ireneus the Martyr and Bishop of Lions, who liued with the Apostles scholars. To the old Bishop and Martyr Hippolytus, that liued in Origens time, who in his oration De consummatione mundi, extant in Greek, maketh Christ thus to say at the generall iudgement vnto Bishops: Venite Pontifices, qui puré mihi Sacrificium die noctéque obtulistis, ac pretiosum corpus & sanguinem meum immolastis quotidie: Come ye Bishops that haue purely offered Sacrifice to me day and night, and haue Sacrificed my pretious Body and Blood daily. (11) Finally, I referre them in stead of many, to the two worthy Fathers, Basil and Chrysostome, whose Masses be left to the posterity at this time extant. (12) Amongst all Cyrillus Hierosolymitanus is not to be passed ouer lightly, who at large expoundeth the whole Masse vsed in Hierusalem in his time, the same which now we find in Clement, much like to that of Basil and Chrysostome, and for the Canon and other principall parts, to that is now also vsed in the Latine Church.

In mystagogicis orationibus.

As for the other Doctours of the Church that followed the Apostles and those Apostolike men, many in number, excellent in learning, holy of life, to shew what may be brought out of their workes, for proofe of this matter, that the oblation of the Body and Bloud of Christ in the Masse is the Sacrifice of the Church, and proper to the New Testament, it would require a whole volume; and therefore not being mooued by

M. Iewels

M. Iewels challenge to ſpeake ſpecially therof, but as it is priuate after their meaning, and many good treaties in defenſe of this Sacrifice being ſet foorth already in print; at this preſent I will ſay nothing, thinking heereof as Saluſt did of Carthago that great Citie, that it were better to keepe ſilence, than to ſpeake few.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

God grant vnto all his people the ſpirit of wiſdome and vnderſtanding, that they may be able to diſcerne the ſpirits, whether they be of God, or no, that they may take hæd of falſe Prophets, and giue care to the voice of the Prince of Paſtours, and flie the voice of ſtrangers, and beware of blinde guides that ſo often haue deceiued them. Eſay 11. 1. Iohn 4. Matth. 7. Iohn 10. Matth. 23.

Hære M. Harding a little ouermuch inflameth his choler, and whom he liſteth he calleth the enemies of the Sacrifice, and the forerunners of Antichriſt, and what not? euen with the ſame ſpirit that the Phariſeis ſometime ſaid: Stæuen had ſpoken againſt the holie Temple: or Chriſt had vttered blaſphemie againſt God. I will not anſwer heat with heat, but in ſuch kind of eloquence will rather giue place. Forerunners of Antichriſt. Act. 7. Matth. 26.

As touching the matter, M. Harding knoweth that S. Gregory calleth him the forerunner of Antichriſt, not that ſaith, Chriſt hath made a full Sacrifice for ſinne once for all vpon the Croſſe, but that vanteth himſelfe aboue his brethren, as did Lucifer, and nameth himſelfe an Vniuerſall Biſhop ouer the whole Church of Chriſt. Such a one S. Gregory calleth the forerunner of Antichriſt. Ad Conſtantiã Aug. ep. 78. l. 4 Ad Mauritium Imperat. l. 7. epiſt. 197.

And whereas he calleth vs at his pleaſure the enemies of the holy Sacrifice, woe were vnto vs, if we had not that Sacrifice. We know that Chriſt is that Lambe of God, that hath taken away the ſinnes of the world, and that there is no name or Sacrifice vnder Heauen, where by wee can be ſaued, but onely the name and Sacrifice of Jeſus Chriſt. And becauſe wee know that this Sacrifice is ſufficient, therefore we flie to no Sacrifice made by man. Iohn 1. Act. 4.

The Sacrifice, ſaith M. Harding, commonly called the Maſſe. But why ſheweth hee not, of whom it is ſo called? Verily, neither the Hebrewes in their tongue, nor the Greekes in their tongue, nor Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles, nor Tertullian, nor S. Cyprian, nor Origen, nor Lactantius, nor S. Hierome, nor S. Auguſtine in any Bookes vndoubtedly knowen for theirs, nor his owne Doctors, Clement, Abdias, Hippolytus, euer vſed the name of Maſſe. Therefore it is maruell that hee would ſay the Sacrifice is ſo commonly called the Maſſe. If it might haue pleaſed him to ſay, that he himſelfe and his fellowes ſo call it, he had done right. Commonly called the Maſſe.

But hære is brought in a whole troupe of Doctors in a ranke: Melchiſedech, Malachias, Clemens the Apoſtles fellow, the Deacons of Aſia; Abdias the Apoſtles Diſciple, and Biſhop of Babylon, that ſaw Chriſt in the fleſh; S. Andrew, S. Iames, Martialis, Dionyſius, who had conference with Peter, Paul, and Iohn; Iræneus, Iuſtinus Martyr, Hippolytus Martyr, Baſil, Chryſoſtome, Cyril of Ieruſalem, and all the reſt of the Doctors in all ages, and in all parts of the World. And who would not be afraid to ſee ſuch an armie come againſt him? Howbeit (gentle Reader) be of good chære. All this is but a camiſado: Theſe be but viſards: they bee no faces. They are brought in like Mummers for a ſhew, and ſay nothing. That M. Harding lacked in weight, hee would nœds make vp in tale: and ſo vſeth this onely as a flouriſh before the fight: and as a ſtreame blowen vp with winde and weather carrieth with it much froth and filth by the very rage and drift of the water: euen ſo M. Harding in this place flowing and wandring ouer the bankes with Copia verborum, by the violence and force of his talke, carrieth a great deale of errour and vntruth along before him. Notwithſtanding, thus hath hee giuen thee, good Chriſtian Reader, as hee ſaith, a taſte of his proofes without allegation of any words for confirmation of thy faith concerning the Maſſe. Miſerable is that faith, that in ſo weightie matters can bee confirmed with bare names by bearing nothing. I marueil that M. Harding euer durſt either to allege ſuch authorities, as hee knoweth the moſt hereof be, or thus openly to mocke the World. For briefly to touch Melchiſedech, Malachias, and the inſtitution of Chriſt, what weight can there appeare in theſe reaſons? Melchiſedech brought forth Bread and Wine to banket Abraham, and his armie, being weary of the chaſe: Or Malachias Prophecied that all the Nations of the World ſhould be turned vnto God, and ſhould offer vnto him a pure Sacrifice: Or, Chriſt ordained his laſt Supper amongſt his Diſciples, and bade them doe the ſame in his remembrance: Ergo, there was Priuate Maſſe in the Church. Who euer made any ſuch arguments in any Schoole? What, will M. Harding make folke beleeue, that Melchiſedech, Malachias, or Chriſt, ſaid Priuate Maſſe? Or doth he thinke that theſe reaſons muſt be taken becauſe he ſpeaketh the word? For confirmation of Faith. Geneſ. 14. Malach. 1. Matth. 26.

But hee will ſay, Melchiſedech and Malachias, ſignified the Sacrifice of the New Clemens.

Testament. Wee denie it not. But did they signifie a Sacrifice done by one man alone, in a strange language, the people loking on him, and no man knowing what hee meaneth? Why may wee not thinke rather they signified the Sacrifice of the Holy Communion, whereas the whole people doth lift vp their hands and hearts vnto Heauen, and Pray, and Sacrifice together, reioycing in the Crosse of Christ, and so celebrating the Lords death vntill hee come? For the Sacrifice that is Prophesied by Malachie, as it is expounded by Tertullian, S. Hierome, and other Holie Fathers, is the Sacrifice of Praier, and contrite heart, as hereafter in the Seuententh Article it shall further appeare.

Touching the witnesses here alleged, first I marueil that M. Harding would euer bring them forth, but much more that he would thus set them out, with such circumstances of commendation, as that they saw Christ in the flesh, or that they were the Apostles fellowes. For he knoweth well, that many of them are little worthy of such credit, as partly being euer doubted of, and suspected to be written, not by them whose names they beare, but by Heretikes, to whom M. Harding seemeth now to flie for aid: partly also obscure, vnknowen, vnacquainted, not read, not seene, not heard off in the World before this time. But most of all I marueil that he would euer hazard his cause on these witnesses, who, as he himselfe very well knoweth, will speake against him. And therefore he hath here cunningly suppressed their words, and hath only made a muster of their names, but would suffer them to say nothing.

Clement.

And that thou (good Reader) maist haue a taste hereof, and see the faithfulnesse of their dealing, let vs first consider Clemens, who as it is reported here, was the Apostles fellow. The title of the booke seemeth to be De Apostolicis traditionibus: that is, Of Orders taken & deuised by the Apostles of Christ, for the better gouernment of the Church. A worthy booke, no doubt, and in all ages to be had in great price, if men had bene perswaded it had bene written indeed by Clement. But S. Hierome by the report of Eusebius maketh mention only of one Epistle of Clements, that he thought worthy to be receiued, which Epistle notwithstanding is not now to be found. One other Epistle of Clements he speaketh of, but he saith it was neuer allowed by the Church. And further S. Hierome saith: Certaine other Bookes there are reported to be abroad in the name of Clement, as the disputation of Peter and Appion, which bookes were neuer in vse amongst our Fathers, neither contain they pure and Apostolicall Doctrine. Thus much S. Hierome.

Hier. de Eccles. script. orib.

Books counterfeited in S. Clements name.

Now whence then commeth M. Hardings Clement? It was found very lately in the Ile of Candie, by one Carolus Capellius, a Venetian, written in Greeke, and in their Countries, neuer heard off nor seene before.

Petrus Crab in 1. Tom. Concil.

Here the Reader, be he neuer so simple, yet must he thinke thus much with himselfe: Clemens was Bishop of Rome, as it is thought next after S. Peter: And were the Bishop of Romes Bookes, and such Bookes, so strange, so holy, and of such weight, kept in Candie so farre off from Italy, in an Iland in the Sea, and not in Rome? written in Greeke, and not in Latin? And could such a worthy worke deuised by all the Apostles, and set forth by the Apostles fellow, be laid vp in secrecie for the space of a thousand, fiue hundred yeares and more, and no man misse it? Thus much the Reader may soone consider with himselfe, be he neuer so simple.

But what if this Booke were neuer written by S. Clement? What if it were written by no honest man? What if it were written by an Heretike? Verily, it was a common practise in old times, to set wicked bookes abroad vnder the names and titles of the Apostles, and other godly Fathers. Leo sometime Bishop of Rome, writeth thus: Apocryphæ Scripturæ, quæ sub nominibus Apostolorum multarum habent seminarium falsitatum, non solùm interdicendæ, sed etiam penitus auferendæ, atque ignibus tradendæ sunt: Secret Scriptures, which bearing the names of the Apostles, containe a nurcery, and occasion of much falshood, are not onely to be forbidden, but also vtterly to be taken away, and to be committed to the fire. By this we see, that the Apostles names were borrowed sometimes to auouch Heresies and wicked Doctrine.

Decretal. Leon. 1. Can. 15.

As touching Clemens, Gelasius writeth thus, and for that he was Bishop of the same See, it is the more likely he should know the truth: Pauca quæ ad memoriam venerunt, & Catholicis vitanda sunt, decreuimus esse subdenda. Inprimis, Ariminensem Synodum à Constantino Cæsare Constantini filio congregatam mediante Tauro præfecto, extunc, & in æternum, confitemur esse damnatum. Item Itinerarium nomine Petri Apostoli, quod appellatur sancti Clementis, libri octo Apocryphi: We haue thought good (saith Gelasius) to note certaine Bookes which are come to knowledge, and ought to be auoided of Catholike people. First, the Councell holden at Ariminum, gathered by Constantius the Emperor, the son of Constantinus, by meane of Taurus the Lieutenant from thencefoorth, & for euer we iudge worthy to be condemned.

Dist. 15. Sancta Romana.

condemned. Likewise the Iournall of Peter the Apostle, bearing the name of Clement, eight bookes are secret (vnlawfull) writings. Thus we see diuers bookes of Clement condemned by name, and but one Epistle onely allowed for good; and this Volume, here alleged by M. Harding, conteining eight bookes, as it is noted by Peter Crab, fully agreeing in number of bookes with the other condemned by Gelasius. To be short, Cardinall Bessarion alleging a parcell of the same booke of Clement, that hath bene hidden so long, writeth thus of it: Licet hæc Clementis verba inter Apocryphas Scripturas commemorari soleant, placet tamen eis in præsentiarum tanquam veris assentiamur: Albeit the words of Clement be accounted amongst secret (vnlawfull) writings, yet for once we are content to receiue them, as if they were true. Thus M. Hardings Clement is disallowed by Eusebius, and by S. Hierome, mistrusted by Bessarion, condemned by Gelasius, kept forth-comming in close prison for the space of a thousand and fiue hundred yeres: yet must we now, without refusall, stoope vnto him, and take him as the Apostles fellow.

Abdias.

Petrus Crab. 1 Tom. Concil.

Bessar. de Sacrament. Eucharistiæ.

One other of these Witnesses is Abdias, and he is brought in with all his Titles: the Bishop of Babylon, planted there by the Apostles: one that was conuersant with Christ, and heard him preach, and saw him in the flesh: and was present at the martyrdome of S. Andrew. With all other circumstances that may gather credit among the simple. Of this Abdias somewhat must be spoken, and so much the more, for that his name is so glorious. He was sought out, and found, and set abroad of very late yeres, vnder the name of Abdias, by one Wolphgangus Zazius, a man that taketh great paines to force men to beleeue it is the very selfe same Abdias that he maketh himselfe to be: and therefore he saith, he was one of the Lxij. Disciples, ordered Bishop by the Apostles, and that S. Luke the Euangelist, writing the Acts of the Apostles, borrowed many whole stories, word by word, out of him. Then was S. Luke very vnthankfull, that neuer once made mention of his Author.

Abdias.

But whosoeuer, or whatsoeuer this Abdias were, his owne words doe so bewray him, that a blinde man may see it was not he. He maketh many shamelesse lies, that he was present with Christ, and at the most part of the Apostles doings: and yet were the Apostles then, according to Christs commandement, gone into the whole World, some into Italie, some into Asia minor, some into Scythia, some into India, some into Æthiopia, and were many thousand miles asunder. In his Fable of Iphigenia he saith that the people tooke her brother Beor, being then Christened by S. Matthew, and made him King, and that he reigned afterward in Æthyopia the space of lxiij. yeres: and further maketh mention of Egesippus, that liued aboue one hundred and threescore yeres after Christ. If Abdias were aliue all this while, he might be likened to Iohannes de temporibus, who, as the French storie recordeth, liued in France aboue three hundred yeres. A lier must be circumspect, and mindfull what he say. If he saw Christ in the flesh, it is not likely he euer saw Egesippus, that was so long after Christ: If he saw Egesippus, it is not likely he euer saw Christ. Thus if he report truth in the one, he lieth in the other: and so, whether he lie, or say truth, he cannot be Abdias.

Marci 16.

Abdias in vita Matthæi.

Gaguinus. Paul. Æmil.

Touching the substance of his booke, it is nothing else, for the more part of it, but a vaine parish tale, laid out with falshood, wicked Doctrine, and curious conference and talke with Diuels: things farre vnmeet for that grauity and Maiesty of the Apostles of Christ, as it may soone appeare vnto the Reader.

It may be gathered by S. Augustine in sundrie places, that some part of this booke was written by certaine Heretikes, named the Manicheis, and auouched by them as the very true storie of the Apostles. For he reporteth the Fables of S. Thomas, of S. Matthew, of S. Andrew, of the Lion that slew the man that had striken S. Thomas, of the Dogge that brought the same mans hand vnto the Table, of Maximilla wife vnto Egis, and other like tales, euen in such order as they be set forth by this Abdias.

August. contra Faustum, li. 11. & li. 22. ca. 80.

Against one Adimantus he writeth thus: They (that is, the Manicheis) read Secret Scriptures, which they themselues say are pure and perfect: in which Scriptures it is written, that S. Thomas cursed a man, and that afterward a Lion slew him, &c. And in another place he saith: Attendite qualia sint quæ scribuntur de Maximilla, vxore Egetis: illam noluisse viro debitum reddere: donasse & suppositisse Euclam ancillam, & alias similes fabulas: Behold what things they be that be written of Maximilla, wife vnto Egis: that shee (being once Christened) would no more yeeld dutie vnto her husband: but set Euclia her maid in her owne place, and other like Fables.

August. contra Adimantum, cap. 16.

Aug. de Fide, contra Manichæos, cap. 30.

All these, and such like tales, thus disallowed by S. Augustine, are reported by M. Hardings Abdias in great sooth. I thought it not amisse to speake hereof the more at large, for that I saw a Booke so full of Tales, so lately found out, without any good shew of Credit, to be fathered vpon the Apostles Disciple, and sent into the World with such a countenance.

Abdias. Martialis.

nance. S. Augustine seemeth in diuers places to haue giuen his iudgement of the same. Writing against the Aduersarie of the Law and Prophets, he hath these words: He hath brought forth Witnesses out of Secret Scriptures, vnder the names of the Apostles, Iohn and Andrew; which writings, if they had bene theirs, they had bene receiued of the Church. The like iudgement hereof seemeth to be giuen by Gelasius, who also saith, that such writings, according to an ancient custome, and by a singular prouision, were not read in the Church of Rome, for that they were thought to be written by Heretikes.

August. contra Aduersarium Legis & Prophetarum, Lib. 1. Cap. 20.

Dist. 15. Sancta Romana.

Thus is this Abdias a Booke, as it is apparent, full of manifest lies, and, as it may be supposed by S. Augustine and Gelasius, written and fauoured by Heretikes, and refused of the Church: Vpon such a one, good Reader, M. Harding will haue thee to stay thy Faith.

As for the rest of these new Witnesses, although I minde to take no great exception against them, yet M. Harding knoweth there is scarcely one of them, but may be doubted of.

Martialis.

Martialis was lately found in France, in the Citie of Lemouica, in an arch of stone vnder the ground, so corrupt and defaced, that in many places it could not be read, and was neuer seene in the world at any time before.

Dionysius. Erasm. contra Parisienses.

Dionysius, although he be an ancient Writer, as it may many waies well appeare, yet it is iudged by Erasmus, Iohn Colet, and others many, graue and learned men, that it cannot be Areopagita, S. Pauls Disciple, that is mentioned in the Acts.

Liturgia Iacobi.

S. Iames Liturgie hath a speciall prayer for them that liue in Monasteries: and yet it was verie rathe to haue Monasteries built in all S. Iames time.

Liturgia Chrysostomi, edita à Claudio du Sanctes.

Chrysostomes Liturgie prayeth for Pope Nicolas by these words: Nicolai Sanctissimi & Vniuersalis Papæ longa sint tempora: We pray God send Nicolas that most Holy and Vniuersall Pope, a long time to liue. But Pope Nicolas, the first of that name, was the second Pope after Pope Ioane the woman, in the yeare of our Lord eight hundred fifty and seuen, almost fiue hundred yeares after Chrysostome was dead: And likewise in the same Liturgie, there is a prayer for the Empire and victorie of the Emperor Alexius. And the first Emperor of that name was in the yeare of our Lord a thousand and foure score, after the decease of Chrysostome seuen hundred yeares. Now it were very much for M. Harding to say, Chrysostome prayed for men by name seuen hundred yeares before they were borne. I trow that were Prophecying, and not praying.

Pope Ioane.

Thou seest, Christian Reader, what Doctors here be brought, as M. Harding saith, to ground thy Faith and Saluation vpon. If he could haue brought any better, I trow he would haue spared these. But such Doctrine, such Doctors. These doubtfull Authorities, I trust, will set mens consciences out of doubt.

Now, notwithstanding it be something troublesome, yet shall it not be from the purpose, for triall of these mens faithfull dealing, to examine some of M. Hardings owne Witnesses, and to heare what they will depose. All these, as it is said, auouch the Sacrifice, otherwise called the Masse: and not onely these, but also all others, of all ages and times, and that, in a maner, in the selfe same order and forme that now is vsed.

Fol. 11. a. lin. 1.

Here M. Harding much abuseth both his owne learning, and also the trust and credit that many haue in him. For he knoweth well, that the Apostles had neither the forme, nor the order, nor the name of Masse.

Dumbe Witnesses.

Howbeit, if all these beare witnesse to the Masse, why speake they not? Why come they forth so dumbe? What, haue they nought to say in this behalfe; or is their word not worth the hearing? Or are they so old that they cannot speake? Or must we needs beleeue M. Harding without euidence?

M. Hard. alleageth Witnesses against himselfe.

But what if neither Clement the Apostles fellow, nor Abdias, nor S. Iames, nor Basil, nor Chrysostome, nor any other of all these here alleged, speake one word of Priuate Masse? What if they haue not so much as the name of Masse? What if they testifie plainly against M. Hardings Masse? What if they testifie fully and roundly with the Holy Communion? It were great shame for M. Harding, to flie from his owne Witnesses, and very much for me to stand to be tried by them that are brought in such a thing to depose against me.

Liturgia Iacobi.

And to begin first with S. Iames, the order of his Liturgie, which M. Harding calleth Masse, standeth thus: Sacerdos ait, Nullus eorum qui orare non possunt, nobiscum ingrediatur. Diaconus ait, Cum timore, & fide, & dilectione, accedite: Populus respondet, Benedictus qui venit in nomine Domini. Deinde impertit Clero: Cum autem attollunt Diaconi Discos & Calices, ad impertiendum populo, Diaconus ait, Domine benedic: Which words may be turned thus: The Priest saith, Let not one of them that may not pray, enter enter in with vs. The Deacon saith, With reuerence, and faith, and loue, approch ye neere. The people answereth, Blessed is hee that commeth in the name of the Lord. After this he ministreth vnto the Clergie. But when the Deacons take vp the Dishes and Cups, to minister vnto the people the Deacon saith, Lord blesse. Here, by the order of S. Iames Masse, the people answereth the Priest in their owne tongue: prouision is made for the whole Congregation in Dishes and Cups: they be called to receiue the Communion: and they doe receiue all together. Now let M. Harding be Iudge, whether S. Iames leaue record to the Priuate Masse, or to the Communion.

M. Hard. Witnesses against himselfe.

Dishes and Cups.

Abdias, although he report many vntrue tales, yet he reporteth not one word of Priuate Masse, but much to the contrarie. Writing the life of S. Thomas, and shewing in what sort he ministred the holy Communion, he saith thus: Eucharistiam diuisit his quos supra memorauimus, id est, populo: He diuided the Sacrament vnto the people, of whom we spake before. And againe, in the life of S. Mathew, who, as M. Harding beareth vs in hand, without all question, said Masse in Æthiopia, he writeth thus: Cumque respondissent, Amen, & mysteria Domini celebrata essent, & Missam suscepisset omnis Ecclesia: When they had answered, Amen, and the mysteries of the Lord had beene celebrate, and the whole Church had receiued the Communion. Where the whole Church answereth the Priest, and receiueth the Communion together, I reckon, M. Harding will hardly call that a Priuate Masse.

Abdias in vita S. Tho. Apost.

Abdias in vita S. Mat. Apost.

Iustinus Martyr, another of M. Hardings Witnesses, in his second Apologie vnto the Emperor Antoninus, declaring the Innocencie of the Christian people that then liued vnder great persecution, and shewing the maner of their assemblies, writeth thus: Before the end of our praiers wee kisse each of vs one another. Then is there brought vnto him that is the chiefe of the Brethren, Bread, and a Cup of Wine and Water mingled together: which hauing receiued, he praiseth God, and giueth thankes a good space: and that done, the whole people confirmeth his praier, saying, Amen, After that, they that among vs be called Deacons, giue vnto euery of them that be present, part of the Bread, and likewise of the Wine and Water that are consecrate with thanksgiuing, and carry the same home vnto them that happen to be absent. Here is a full Communion, and no Priuate Masse.

Iustin. Martyr in 2. Apologia.

ἐπευφημεῖ.

Dionysius, another of the Witnesses, and, as M. Harding saith, the Apostles scholar, openeth the whole order of the Ministration in his time, writing namely and purposely of that matter. The Priest (saith he) beginneth the holy Psalmodie, and the whole body of the Church singeth with him. Then followeth in order the reading of the holy Scriptures, which is done by the Ministers. After that the Catechumeni, that is, they that are newly come vnto the Religion of Christ, and are not yet baptized, and Energumeni, that is, such as are molested with euill Spirits, and such others as are inioyned to penance, are commanded foorth. And so there remaine such as are meet to haue the sight and Communion of the holy things.

Dionys. Eccles. Hierar. cap. 3.

It followeth: And shewing foorth the gifts of the holy Sacraments, he goeth to the Communion himselfe, and likewise exhorteth others. And a little after that: The Priest, vncouering the bread that came couered, and in one cake or loafe, and diuiding the same into many portions, and likewise diuiding the vnitie of the Cup vnto all, Mystically, and by way of a Sacrament, he fulfilleth and diuideth vnitie.

τὸς ἄρτους τῶν θεουργιῶν ὑποδίξας.

συμβολικῶς.

It followeth againe: Then the Minister receiuing himselfe, and distributing the holy Communion vnto others, in the end concludeth with holy thanksgiuing, together with all the whole holy companie of the Church. I beleeue M. Harding himselfe will say here is yet but bare witnesse for his Priuate Masse.

τῆς θεουργικῆς κοινωνίας μεταδούς.

In the Liturgie of S. Basil, which is also brought for a witnesse in this matter, the Priest praieth thus: All we receiuing of one Bread, and of one Cup, &c. It followeth: The Priest diuideth the Holy Bread into foure parts: the Quire singeth the Communion, and so they Communicate all.

Liturgia Basil. Et sic communicant omnes.

Another witnesse is Chrysostome: His Liturgie, or, as M. Harding delighteth to speake, his Masse, is thus ordred: After that the Priest hath Communicate with the Ministers, then the great doore is set open: The Priest sheweth forth the Cup vnto the people, saying, With the feare of God, and faith, and loue, approch ye neere. The Deacon saith: Come ye neere in peace. The people answereth: In the name of the Lord. Againe, The Deacons receiue the Communion. Afterward the Mysteries be carried vnto a place, where the people must communicate.

Liturgia Chrysostomi.

Ignatius, another Witnesse, writing vnto the people of Philadelphia, hath these words: Vnus Panis Pro omnibus fractus est, & vnus Calix omnibus diuidebatur: One Bread was broken for all, and one Cup was diuided vnto all.

Ignatius ad Philadelphien.

What needeth it me to discourse further of the rest: By these few, I doubt not, it may some appeare, how faithfully these men allege the Catholike Fathers, only amasing the Reader

Hippolyt. Martyr.

Reader with naked names. Here we se, such as cannot Communicate, are commanded forth: The whole Church prayeth, singeth, and receiueth the holy Sacraments all together. Such Masses they be that the old Catholike Fathers can witnesse of. And of other Masse they know none. M. Harding himselfe confesseth that in the Primitiue Church the people receiued the Communion euery day.

Yet notwithstanding, for his priuate Masse he alledgeth the names of Doctors of the Primitiue Church. And so, like a craftie Apothecarie, in his markes or papers he hath the Masse: but in his boxes he hath the Communion.

But he will say, he alledged all these Doctours by way of digression, to an other purpose, to prooue the Sacrifice. First, there is very small proofe in such Witnesses as say nothing: and besides that, it is a simple kinde of Rhetoricke, to vse so large digressions from the matter, before ye once enter into the matter. And as touching the Sacrifice, if you haue any at all, you haue it onely of the institution of Christ: otherwise you haue none. But we are sure, we haue Christs institution. Wherefore it followeth, we haue the Sacrifice that Christ appointed.

Hippolytus Martyr.

Touching Hippolytus, the Bishop and Martyr, that, as M. Harding saith, liued in Origens time, and is now extant in Greeke, it is a very little booke, of small price, and as small credit, lately set abroad in print, about seuen yeres past; before neuer acquainted in the World. Such be M. Hardings ancient Authorities for his Masse. It appeareth, it was some simple man that wrote the booke, both for the Phrases of speech in the Greeke tongue, which commonly are very childish, and also for the truth and weight of the matter. He beginneth the first sentence of his booke with, Enim, which a very child would scarcely doe. He hath many vaine gheses of the birth and life of Antichrist: He saith, and sothly auoucheth, that Antichrist shall be the Diuell, and no man, and shall onely beare the shape of a man: Yet S. Paul calleth Antichrist, The man of Sinne. Besides this, he hath a further fantasie, that Antichrist shall subdue the Kings of Egypt, Aphrica, and Æthiopia, and that he shall build vp againe the Temple of Hierusalem: And that S. Iohn, that wrote the Bookes of Apocalyps, or Reuelations, shall come againe with Elias and Enoch, to reproue Antichrist. And all this saith he, without either warrant of the Scriptures, or Authoritie of the Church. And writing that booke, namely vpon the Prophet Daniel, he allegeth the Apocalyps of S. Iohn, in the stead of Daniel, which is a token either of great ignorance, or of maruellous obliuion. Moreouer he saith, that the Soules of men were from the beginning, which is an Heresie, with other dreames and fantasies many moe. This is M. Hardings Catholike Doctour. Concerning the place of him here alledged, Venite Pontifices, qui purè mihi Sacrificium die noctéque obtulistis, ac pretiosum Corpus & Sanguinem meum immolastis quotidiè; If he will precisely build vpon the words, then must all other Priests stand backe, & haue no place in Heauen, but Bishops only. For although they offer vp, as M. Harding saith, the daily Sacrifice, yet it is well knowen, according to the nature and vse of the word, they are Priests only, and not Bishops. If he will make reckoning of this word, Quotidiè, Daily, then where shall the Bishop of Rome and his Cardinals stand, that scarcely haue leasure to Sacrifice once thorow the whole yere? And if it be Christ himselfe that they offer vp vnto the Father, as they say, how is the same Christ offered vp vnto Christ himselfe? How is Christ both the thing that is offered, and also the partie vnto whom it is offered? But there is no inconuenience to a man in his dreame. And if it be the Masse that Hippolytus here speaketh of, how is it offered both day and night? For Hostiensis saith, It is not lawfull by the Canons, to say Masse in the night season, sauing only the night of Christs Natiuity.

Hippolyti Martyris Fragmenta.

2. Thessal. 2. Reuelabitur homo peccati.

Hostiē. in summa, de celebratione missarum.

But the meaning of Hippolytus seemeth to be this, that all Faithfull people in this respect be Priests and Bishops, like as S. Peter also calleth them, and that euery of them by faith, maketh vnto God a pure Sacrifice, and both day and night, as it were, renueth and applieth vnto himself that one and euerlasting Sacrifice of Christs pretious Bodie, once offered for all vpon the Crosse. Thus are the words of Hippolytus plaine and without cauill, and thus shall Christs calling be very comfortable.

1. Petri 2.

M. Harding. The 6. Diuision.

Now this presupposed, that the Masse standeth vpon good and sufficient grounds for the stay of all true Christian mens beleefe: let vs come to our speciall purpose, and say somewhat of Priuate Masse, as our Aduersaries call it.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The grounds he here speaketh of, be his Doctours, such as he hath already brought forth, laid vp in great secresie, and hidden from all the world, by the space of one thousand yeres, yeares and more, and now of late found out by chance: ſome in Iſlands in the Sea: ſome in Arches vnder the ground: ſome ſo defaced with mould and canker, that it was hard to gheſſe their meaning: ſome full of impudent lies and fables, one parcell not agreeing with another: ſome deuiſed and written by Heretikes, and euer miſtruſted and condemned of the Church: yet euery of theſe, as M. Harding well knoweth, fully reporting the Holy Communion, and manifeſtly teſtifying againſt Priuate Maſſe. Theſe be M. Hardings great grounds. Now iudge thou gentle Reader, what worthy building may ſtand vpon the ſame. Doubtleſſe this beginning is very ſimple.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuiſion.

The chiefe cauſe why they ſtorme ſo much at Priuate Maſſe, is, for that the Prieſt receiueth the Sacrament alone: which thing they expreſſe with great villanie of words. Now in caſe the people might bee ſtirred to ſuch deuotion, as to diſpoſe themſelues worthily to receiue their houſell euery day with the Prieſt, as they did in the Primitiue Church, when they looked hourely to be caught, and done to death in the perſecution of Paynims, that they departed not hence ſine viatico, without their voiage prouiſion: what ſhould theſe men haue to ſay? In this caſe perhaps they would finde other defaults in the Maſſe, but againſt it in this reſpect only, that it is priuate, they ſhould haue nothing to ſay at all. So the right of their cauſe dependeth of the miſdoing of the people, which if they would amend, theſe folke ſhould be driuen either to recant, or to hold their peace. To other defaults of the Maſſe, by them vntruly ſurmiſed, anſwer ſhall be made hereafter. Now touching this.

Where no fault is committed, there no blame is to be imputed.

Priuate Maſſe proceeded firſt of the negligence and miſdoing of the people.

That oftentimes the Prieſt at Maſſe hath no compartners to receiue the Sacrament with him, it proceedeth of lacke of deuotion of the peoples part, not of enuie or malice of his part.

The feaſt is common: (13) all be inuited: they may come that liſt: they ſhall be receiued that be diſpoſed and prooued: None is thruſt away that thus commeth: it may be obtruded to none violently, ne offered to none rathly. Well, none commeth. This is not a ſufficient cauſe why the faithfull and godly Prieſt, enflamed with the loue of God, feeling himſelfe hungry and thirſty after that heauenly food and drinke, ſhould be kept from it, and imbarred from celebrating the memorie of our Lords death, according to his commandement; from his dutie of giuing of thankes for that great benefit; from taking the Cup of Saluation, and calling vpon the name of God: for theſe things be done in the Maſſe.

Lacke of deuotion cauſe of Priuate Maſſe. The 13. vntruth. For they inuite no man.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

God be thanked, both our life, and maner of teaching, notwithſtanding theſe ſlanderous reports, is void of villanie. Or if there had beene any defect in vs, this man, of his courteſie, ſhould not haue ſupplied it with another villanie.

M. Hard. confeſſeth, that in the Primitiue Church there was no Priuate Maſſe.

Here M. Harding granteth, that the people in the Primitiue Church receiued the holy Communion euery day, and ſo conſequently vnalwares he confeſſeth, that in the Primitiue Church was no Priuate Maſſe; which, as he ſaith, came in afterward by the negligence and vndeuotion of the people. It is great pitie that ſo good a thing, as it is ſuppoſed, ſhould haue no better beginning. One ſpeciall principle of theſe mens Doctrine, is, to imbarre the people from reading and vnderſtanding of the Scriptures, and to ſuffer them to know nothing; for that, as ſome of them haue ſaid, they be Dogs and Swine, and therefore ſhould not pretious ſtones be laid before them. Yet now muſt their negligence be the rule of Chriſts Religion. This is laid as the ground and foundation of the whole cauſe, and therefore it ought the better to be conſidered.

M. Hard. Articul. 15. Diuiſ. 7. Fol. 155. b.

Eckius, Pigghius, Hoſius, and others, haue often cried out amaine in their Bookes and Pulpits, Where was your Religion, before Luther firſt began to preach? So may we likewiſe ſay, And where was your priuate Maſſe, which is the Crowne of your Kingdome, before your people firſt began to grow negligent, and to want deuotion? Some haue ſaid, the Church is gouerned by the Pope: ſome, by the General Councels: ſome, by the holy Ghoſt. M. Harding ſaith better, it is not amiſſe that the Church be gouerned by the negligence and vndeuotion of the people.

Charity (ſay they) is cold, and the people is careleſſe. But therefore hath God appointed Paſtours and Miniſters to ouerſee and controle the people, and not to ſuffer them to periſh in their negligence. Were it a matter of tithes, or other paiments, the people ſhould be called vpon, and not ſuffered in any wiſe to be negligent: neither ſhould their negligence ſtand for excuſe. How much leſſe ſhould it be ſuffered, when the caſe toucheth God? The Biſhops and Fathers in the ſecond Councell holden at Barcara in Spaine, decreed thus: If any man reſort vnto the Church, and heare the Scriptures, and for negligence or wantonneſſe withdraw himſelfe from the Communion of the Sacrament, and in the reuerend myſteries do breake the rule of diſcipline: we decree, that ſuch a one be put out of the Catholike Church, vntill he haue done penance, and ſhewed the fruits of his repentance, that hauing obteined pardon, he may be receiued againe to the holy Communion.

Ex editamento Conc. Brac. 2. cap. 84. Sen ex Synod. Graco collectio. Proluxuria ſua Chryſoſt. Epiſt. ad Epheſ. hom. 3.

Thus the Godly Fathers in old time did not flatter and fauour the peoples negligence in this caſe, as M. Harding and his fellowes doe; but exhorted, warned, reproued, rebuked buked them, called them malapert, and impudent, that would be present, and not receiue: and excommunicated them for their negligence. But these men contrariwise turne away their faces from their brethren, and suppresse their voice, and will not be heard, and speaking nothing, but in an vnknowen tongue, and find no fault with the people, but rather make them beleeue, that they receiue for them, and apply Christs death vnto them by their Masse, and that the very hearing thereof is sufficient for them, and meritorious: and thus, as much as in them lieth, they increase the negligence of the people, and discourage them from the holy Communion.

The cause of the peoples negligence.

The people is taught nothing, they vnderstand nothing, they heare nothing, and, hauing only a few childish and vnseemely gestures, they see nothing, neither comfort, nor memorie of Christ, nor benefit of his passion. And this is the cause of their negligence: therefore they stand thus backe, and withdraw themselues.

The Pope and his Cardinals as negligent as the people.

Howbeit, what needeth M. Harding thus to charge the people with negligence and vndeuotion? The Pope himselfe, and his Cardinals, doe scarcely Communicate once in the yeere, but are as negligent, and as vndeuout therein, as the most part of the people.

The feast (saith M. Harding) is common: All are inuited: They shall be receiued that be disposed and prooued. If this Feast be common, it must needs be common to very few: for the prouision is very little to serue many. That all be called in the Latine Masse, it is a great and manifest vntruth. For neither the Priest, nor the Deacon, either by word, or by gesture, calleth them: nor haue they any preparation for them, if they were called. Yet are these men not ashamed to say, They shall be receiued that be disposed and prooued.

Preparation of the minde, before the Communion.

Euery man ought humbly to prepare and dispose his heart, before he presume to heare or receiue any thing that toucheth God. For God is Spirit, and we are Flesh: God in Heauen, and we in Earth. Pythagoras, being but an Heathen, was wont to say: Non loquendum de Deo, sine lumine: we ought not to speake of God, without light, that is, without premeditation and good aduisement, who it is, of whom we speake. And the Pagans, in their Sacrifices, were wont to remember their Priest with these words: Hocage: the meaning whereof was, Dispose thy minde: It is God vnto whom thou speakest. The wise man saith, Before thou pray, prepare thine heart, and be not as a man that tempteth God. Likewise in old times, they that were called Catechumeni, were warned afore hand to prepare their hearts, that they might worthily receiue Baptisme, as it is decréd vnder the name of Clement, whose words be these: Let him prepare himselfe in all things, that after three moneths ended, vpon the holy day he may be Baptized. S. Augustine also exhorteth the Catechumeni, likewise to dispose their minds against their time of their Baptisme. Thus ought euery man to examine and prepare himselfe, before he heare Gods word: before he presume to open his mouth to pray vnto God: before he receaue the sacrament of Baptisme: and namely before he come to the holy Communion. And therfore the Priest giueth warning vnto the people with these words: Lift vp your hearts: which words, as S. Augustine saith, were commonly vsed in the holy Mysteries.

Eccles. 18.

Clem. Epist. 3. August. Tract. 10. & 11. in Iohan.

August. de bono Perseuerantiæ, Lib. 2. Ca. 13.

But I thinke M. Harding heere by these words, prepare and dispose, meaneth Priuie Confession, which many haue vsed, as a racke of mens consciences, to the maintenance of their tyrannie. [a] Peter Lombard saith, without it there is no way to Heauen. [b] Innocentius the third commandeth, that whosoeuer is not confessed, neither be suffred to come into the Church being aliue, nor to be buried when he is dead. Hugo writeth thus: I am bold to say, whosoeuer commeth to the Communion vnconfessed, be he neuer so repentant and sorry for his sinnes, certainely he receiueth vnto his iudgement. So violent the late Writers haue beene in erecting things of their owne deuices. Otherwise the old Fathers, notwithstanding sometime they speake of Confession, yet they require it with more modestie, and many of them require no such thing at all.

[a] Sent. lib. 4. Dist. 17.

[b] Innocent. 3. in Concil. Lateran. Cap. 21. Hugo, de potestate Ecclesiæ.

Chrysostom. de Pœnitentia.

Chrysostome saith: Let the Court (where thou yeeldest thy selfe guiltie) be without witnesse: Let God alone see thee. And againe: If thou be ashamed to shew thy sinnes to any man, then vtter them euery day in thy heart. I say not, goe, confesse thy sinnes vnto thy fellow seruant, that may vpbraid thee with them: but confesse them vnto God, that is able to cure them. And againe thus he imagineth God to speake vnto a sinner: Mihi soli dic peccatum tuum priuatim, vt sanem vlcus: open thy sinne priuately to me alone, that I may heale thy wound. And Theodorus, sometime Archbishop of Canturburie, saith: Græci, & totus Oriens confitetur soli Deo: The Greekes, and all they of the East, confesse themselues only to God. Thus much I thought good to touch heereof, lest it should be thought there is none other way for a man to prouue and dispose himselfe, but onely by Auricular Confession. The meaning of these words of S. Paul, Let a man examine himselfe, standeth in two points, in Faith and Repentance. Faith conteineth the truth of our beleefe: Repentance concerneth the amendment of our life: which kinde of examining endureth all our life long. But to say, or thinke, we are Ἁμάρτυροι ἐστὸ διάγνωσμα.

Chrysostom. in Psal. 50. Ho. 2. Chrysostom. de Lazar. hom. 4. De Pœnitentia, Dist. 1. Quidam Deo.

all

all examined, and diſpoſed one onely day in the yeare, and that of cuſtome, not of Holineſſe, and not one day before, nor one day after, it is childiſh, it is ſuperſtitious, it is Jewiſh, it is no perſwaſion meet for the people of God. If Chryſoſtome were aliue, hee would crie out: O præſumptionem! O conſuetudinem! O what preſumption! O what a cuſtome is this! And S. Ambroſe would ſay: If thou be not worthy euery day to receiue, then art thou not worthy once in the yeere.

The negligence of the people

Chryſ. ad pop. Antioch. ho. 61
Ambroſ. de Sacram. li. 5. c. 4.
Leo Epiſt. 81.

But grant it, that charity and deuotion is fainted in the people: May wee yet thinke, that the ſame reſteth whole and ſound in the Clergie? Or that the deuotion of the Prieſts aboundeth more now, than it did in the Primitiue Church? For then the Prieſt miniſtred the holy Communion but once in a day, vnleſſe the multitude of the Communicants had beene ſo great, that it required double miniſtration. But now the Prieſt may ſay two, three, or moe Maſſes in one day, yea although hee haue no man to receiue with him. I would it were not as the Prophet ſaith: Qualis populus, talis Sacerdos: As the people is, ſuch is the Prieſt. Verily Bonifacius talking of the change of the holy Cups, which in the Old times had beene Treene, and in his time were made of Gold: Then, ſaid hee, wee had Treene Cuppes and Golden Prieſts: but now wee haue Golden Cuppes, and Treene Prieſts. S. Bernard complaineth thus of the ſtate of the Clergie in his time: O Lord, wickedneſſe hath proceeded from the Elder Iudges thy Vicars, which ſeeme to rule thy people. Wee cannot now ſay, As the people is, ſo is the Prieſt: for the very people is not ſo (wicked) as is the Prieſt. And the ſame S. Bernard in the Synod holden at Reimes in France, in the preſence of the Pope ſpake theſe words: Nunc non habemus mercenarios pro paſtoribus: nec lupos pro mercenarijs: ſed pro lupis habemus Diabolos: Now haue wee not Hirelings (to rule the flocke) inſtead of Shepheards: nor Wolues inſtead of Hirelings: but inſtead of Wolues we haue Diuels.

Eſay 24.

Bonifacius de Con. diſt. 1. vaſa.
Bernardus de conuerſione Pauli.
Bernardus in Concilio Remenſi.

Iohannes Vitalis, a Cardinall of Rome likewiſe complaineth: And of the Prieſts of this age (ſaith he) The Prophet Eſay hath written thus: The Paſtours themſelues are void of vnderſtanding, they haue all followed their owne way, euery one, euen from the higheſt to the loweſt. Wherefore if want of deuotion and looſeneſſe of life may breed negligence in the people, why may not the like want, and as great looſeneſſe, breed the like negligence in the Prieſts? And if negligence be excuſe ſufficient, to warrant the people to communicate but once in the yeare, why may not the ſame negligence cauſe the Prieſts to ſay Maſſe but once in the yeare? For it is not the loue of God, as you ſurmiſe, neither the hunger or thirſt of Heauenly food, that maketh the Prieſt ſay Maſſe, but order of foundation, cuſtome, hire or wages for his labour.

Iohan. Vitalis Cardinalis, in Speculo.
Eſay 50.

Now let vs view the weight of M. Hardings reaſons: The people is negligent and vndeuout; Ergo, The Prieſt may ſay Maſſe alone. This argument is very weake. But the next that is gathered of the ſame is much weaker: The people is negligent now; Ergo, there was Priuate Maſſe in the Primitiue Church. For this only was my deniall: and this hath M. Harding taken in hand to proue. It is called Petitio principij, whereas one weake thing is proued by another, as weake as it. So might M. Harding ſay; The people will not heare the word of God; Ergo, the Prieſt may go into the Pulpit, and Preach alone. For Chriſts Supper (as S. Auguſtine ſaith) is a Sermon, and the Prieſt therein Preacheth and vttereth the death of the Lord.

Aug. de Trinit. lib. 3. cap. 4.

Againe, if onely the negligence of the people haue enforced Priuate Maſſe, how then came it into Colleges, Monaſteries, Cathedrall Churches, yea, euen into the very holy Church of Rome, whereas be ſuch numbers of Clerkes, Vicars, Monkes, Prieſts, and Prebendaries, that the Emperor Iuſtinian was faine to ſtay the increaſe of them, all idle, all in ſtudy and contemplation, all void from worldly cares, all confeſſed, all in cleane life, all prepared? Wherefore haue they Priuate Maſſe? Yea wherefore haue they ſo many Maſſes ſeuerally, at diuers Altars, and many of them at one time? Wherefore doe not they communicate together, as it appeareth they did in the Primitiue Church. Doubtleſſe this groweth not of the negligence of the people.

Authen. Collat. prima vt determinatus ſit numerus Clerico.

As for the people, they are not ſo negligent nor vndeuout as M. Harding heere chargeth them. They are Gods people, glad to bee inſtructed, and deſirous to follow, and whereſoeuer the Goſpell is receiued, ready to giue teſtimony thereof, and to increaſe the ſame by the holy Communion of Chriſts Bodie and Blood, in great companies, and whole congregations all together.

But what ill lucke is this, that they whom M. Harding ſo often condemneth for Heretikes can be ſo deuout: and he and his Catholikes thus remaine without deuotion? Let the people be taught: let them heare the holy Miniſtration in their owne tongue, that they may vnderſtand the holy myſteries, and feele comfort and ſweetneſſe in the ſame: let them ſee examples of diligence in the Clergy; then will they be no longer negligent. Then ſhould M. Harding perforce giue ouer his Priuate Maſſe, as ſaying that the whole right of his cauſe hangeth only of the negligence and miſdoing of the people.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuiſion.

The 14. vntruth. The Sacrifice is ſpecially named in the Communion booke. And in the Maſſe it ſelfe Conſecration is not named.

But the enemies of this holy Sacrifice ſay, that this is againſt the Inſtitution of Chriſt. God forbid, the Inſtitution of Chriſt ſhould not be kept.

But it is a world to ſee, how they crie out for the Inſtitution of Chriſt, by whom it is moſt wickedly broken. For whereas in Chriſts Inſtitution concerning this Sacrament, three things are contained, which he himſelfe did, and by his commandement gaue authority to the Church to doe the ſame, the Conſecration, the Oblation, and the Participation; wherein conſiſteth the ſubſtance of the Maſſe: they hauing quite abrogated the other two, (14) and not ſo much as once naming them in their Bookes of Seruice, now haue left to the people nothing but a bare Communion, and that after their owne ſort; with what face can they ſo buſily cry for Chriſts Inſtitution, by whom in the chiefe points the ſame is violated?

The 15. vntruth. For S. Baſil thinketh the number is part of Chriſts Inſtitution; Exercitationis ad pietatem, Sermone 4.

Of Conſecration and Oblation, although much might be ſaid heere a gainſt them, I will at this time ſay nothing. Concerning Participation, the number of Communicants together in one place that they tangle ſo much of as a thing ſo neceſſary, that without it the Maſſe is to be reputed vnlawfull, (15) is no part of Chriſts Inſtitution. For Chriſt ordained the Sacrament after Conſecration and Oblation done, to be receiued and eaten. And for that end he ſaid; Accipite, manducate, bibite; Take, eat, drinke: heerein conſiſteth his Inſtitution.

* The Apoſtles vſed & ordained the Communion of a number, & neuer any priuate receiuing of the Prieſt alone.

Now as for the number of Communicants, how many ſhould receiue together in one place, and in what place, what time, ſitting at table (as ſome would haue it) ſtanding or kneeling, faſting, or after other meats; and whether they ſhould receiue it in their hands or with their mouthes, and other the like orders, maners, and circumſtances; all theſe things pertaine to the ceremonie of eating, the Obſeruation whereof dependeth of the Churches ordinance, and not of Chriſts Inſtitution. And therefore S. Auguſtine writing to Ianuarius, ſaith; Saluator non præcepit, quo deinceps ordine ſumeretur, vt Apoſtolis, per quos diſpoſiturus erat Eccleſiam, ſeruaret hunc locum: Our Sauiour gaue not commandement in what order it ſhould bee receiued, meaning to reſerue that matter * vnto the Apoſtles, by whom hee would direct and diſpoſe his Church. Epiſt. 118.

The 16. vntruth. Chriſt appointed a number, although no certaine fixed number.

Wherefore the receiuing of the Sacrament being the Inſtitution of Chriſt, and the maner, number, and other rites of receiuing, (16) not fixed nor determined by the ſame, but ordered by the Churches diſpoſition; whether many or few, or but one in one place receiue; for that reſpect, the Miniſtration of the Prieſt is not made vnlawfull.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

It liketh M. Harding to call vs wicked, and the enemies of the Sacrifice; and to ſay, wee iangle of the Inſtitution of Chriſt, and yet our ſelues breake Chriſts Inſtitution. I muſt heere proteſt in the name of many: We are not enemies of the Sacrifice and Croſſe of Chriſt, but of the errours, abuſes, and ſacrilege of the Maſſe, which now are maintained to the open derogation of the Sacrifice, and Croſſe of Chriſt.

As touching Chriſts Inſtitution, forget not, good Chriſtian Reader, that M. Harding confeſſeth, there are three things therein contained, which, as he ſaith, Chriſt himſelfe did, and by his commandement gaue authoritie to his Church to doe: the Conſecration, the Oblation, and the Participation. Heere he leaueth quite out the Annunciation of Chriſts Death, thinking perhaps, it is no matter eſſentiall of Chriſts Inſtitution. Of theſe three (he ſaith) we haue broken two: the Conſecration and Oblation, and ſo haue onely a bare Communion.

1. Cor. 11. Ye ſhall ſhew foorth the Lords death.

But whereby may it appeare to M. Harding, that wee haue thus broken Chriſts Inſtitution? Is it becauſe we communicate together with the people? or becauſe wee miniſter the Sacrament vnder both kindes? or becauſe wee ſhew forth the death of Chriſt? or becauſe we doe that Chriſt did, and commanded vs to doe?

Conſecration.

Concerning Conſecration, he doth great wrong to charge vs with the breach thereof, before he himſelfe and others of his ſide be better reſolued wherein ſtandeth Conſecration. For Scotus and Innocentius tertius, and certaine others ſay, that this word Benedixit, He bleſſed, worketh Conſecration. The common opinion is, that it is wrought by theſe words, This is my Body. Some thinke that Chriſt ſpake theſe words twice, firſt ſecretlie to himſelfe, and afterward openly, that the Apoſtles might vnderſtand him. Cardinall Beſſarion Biſhop of Tuſculum, writeth thus: The Latine Church following Ambroſe, Auguſtine and Gregory, thinketh that Conſecration ſtandeth in theſe words, This is my Body: But the Greeke Church thinketh the Conſecration is not wrought by theſe words, but by the Praier of the Prieſt, which followeth afterward: and that according to S. Iames, S. Chryſoſtome, and S. Baſil. By theſe it appeareth, that they themſelues of that ſide, are not yet fully agreed vpon their owne Conſecration.

Tho. & Bonauen. in 4. Sent. Beſſar. de Sacramento Euchariſtiæ.

In the tenth Article.

Howbeit, by whatſoeuer words Conſecration is made, it ſtandeth not in the abolliſhing of natures, as M. Harding teacheth: nor in preciſe and cloſe pronouncing of certaine appointed words: but in the conuerting of the naturall Elements into a godly vſe: as wee ſee in the water of Baptiſme. For Chriſt ſaid not, Say yee this, or by theſe these words go and Transubſtantiate or change natures: But thus he ſaith, Doe this in my remembrance. And ſo, The Bread that we breake, is the Communication of Chriſts Body: and as often as we eat of that Bread, we do declare and publiſh the Lords death. This is well noted and opened by S. Auguſtine: Put the words of God (ſaith he) vnto the Element, and it is made a Sacrament. For what power is there ſo great of the water (in Baptiſme) that it toucheth the Body and waſheth the heart, ſauing by the working of the word? Not becauſe it is ſpoken, but becauſe it is beleeued: and this is the word of Faith, which wee Preach. The word of Faith, which wee Preach, ſaith S. Auguſtine, not the word which wee whiſper in ſecret, is the word of Conſecration. 1. Cor. 10. 1. Cor. 11.

Conſecra.

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 80. Accedat verbum ad Elementum, & fit Sacramentum.

With what honeſt countenance then can M. Harding ſay, that wee haue no Conſecration? We pronounce the ſame words of Conſecration that Chriſt pronounced: wee doe the ſame that Chriſt bade vs doe: wee proclaime the death of the Lord: we ſpeake openly in a knowne tongue, and the people vnderſtandeth vs: wee Conſecrate for the Congregation, and not onely for our ſelues: wee haue the Element: wee ioine Gods Word vnto it: and ſo it is made a Sacrament. Yet ſaith M. Harding wee haue no Conſecration. And can hee thinke, that a Prieſt of his ſide doth Conſecrate, that whiſpereth his words cloſely, and that in a ſtrange tongue, in ſuch ſort as no man heareth or vnderſtandeth him: that often times himſelfe knoweth not neither the words of Chriſt, nor the ſenſe of the words: nor the vſe, nor the end of the Sacrament: that exhorteth no man: that ſpeaketh to no man: that if hee doe Conſecrate, doth Conſecrate onely for himſelfe, and not for others: that doth neither that Chriſt did, nor that Chriſt commanded to be done? If we Conſecrate not, can he thinke that ſuch a one doth Conſecrate?

And whereas he ſaith further, that wee haue no maner of Oblation in our Communion, he ſhould not himſelfe ſpeake manifeſt vntruth, hauing taken vpon him as he ſaith, to reforme falſhood. For he knoweth wee offer vp vnto God in the Holy Communion, our ſelues, our Soules, our Bodies, and Almes for the poore: Praiſes and Thankſgiuing vnto God the Father for our Redemption: and Prayer from a contrite heart, which, as the Old Catholike Fathers ſay, is the Sacrifice of the New Teſtament. To conclude, wee offer vp as much as Chriſt commanded vs to offer. Indeed wee offer not vp Chriſts Bodie to bee a Propitiatorie Sacrifice for vs vnto his Father. For that Sacrifice is once wrought for all vpon the Croſſe, and there is none other Sacrifice left to bee offered for ſinne. Tertull. contra Marcionem, li. 4. & aduerſus Iudeos. Euſebius de Demonſtratione, lib 1. Hebr. 10.

But, ſaith M. Harding, we make no mention of any Sacrifice in all our Miniſtration: Therefore wee breake Chriſts Inſtitution. This reaſon impeacheth Chriſt himſelfe as well as vs: for Chriſt himſelfe in his whole Miniſtration ſpake not one word of any Sacrifice, no more than we doe. Therefore by M. Hardings Logicke, Chriſt himſelfe brake his owne Inſtitution.

Whereof he concludeth, that we haue nothing but a bare Communion: which concluſion is as true as the premiſſes. Gods name be bleſſed, we haue a holy Communion to the great comfort of the godly. But in M. Hardings Maſſe there is neither Communion, nor any other conſolation at all: but only a number of light and bare geſtures and ceremonies, farre vnmeet for ſo graue a purpoſe. But what ſhould moue this man thus ſcornefully to ieſt at the holy Miniſtration, and to call Chriſts ordinance, A bare Communion? Others call it the Myſticall Supper: others the holy Diſtribution: Bare or naked, no man, I trow, durſt euer to call it, but M. Harding. One of his owne Doctours comparing Conſecration and Communion together, ſaith thus: Communio ſacra maior eſt in effectu ſanctitatis, quàm Conſecratio: The holy Communion in effect of Holineſſe is more than Conſecration. And againe: Conſecratio eſt propter Communionem: Ergo, Communio maius eſt Conſecratione; Conſecration is for Communion. Therefore is Communion greater than Conſecration. M. Harding ieſteth at the ordinance of Chriſt. Alexander de Hales, 4. q. 35. mem. 2. Ibid. ſolu. 2.

A little before M. Harding ſaid, in Chriſts Inſtitution three things are contained: Conſecration, Oblation, Participation. Immediately after, as a man that had ſuddenlie forgotten himſelfe, he ſaith, The number of the Communicants together in one place, that they iangle ſo much of as a thing ſo neceſſary, is no part of Chriſts Inſtitution. It is no marueil though he can ſo ill agree with the old Catholike Doctours, that falleth thus out ſo ſuddenly with himſelfe. For if Participation be not neceſſarie, how is it a part of Chriſts Inſtitution? If it be a part of Chriſts Inſtitution, how is it not neceſſarie? He would faine conueigh Chriſts Inſtitution, and his Maſſe both vnder one colour. But they are contraries, the one of them bewraieth the other. As for the Prieſt, hee taketh no part of the Sacrament with others, which is the nature and meaning of this word Participation, but receiueth all alone. Thus it appeareth by M. Hardings owne confeſſion, that Priuate Maſſe hauing M. Harding hath forgotten himſelfe.

no Participation of the Priest with others, and therefore no Participation at all, is no part of Christs Institution.

I grant, certaine circumstances, as fasting, sitting, standing, knéling, and other like Ceremonies about the holy Ministration, are left to the discretion of the Church. But this is a very simple argument: Certain Circumstances may be altered; Ergo, The Priest may receiue alone. Christ himselfe hath already determined the case. For albeit hée haue appointed no certaine number of Communicants, yet hath hée by speciall words appointed a number. For these very words: Take ye: Eat ye: Drinke ye all: Diuide ye among your selues: Do ye this in my remembrance: Ye shall set foorth the Lords death: These very words, I say, cannot be taken of one singular man, but necessarily import a number.

Matth. 26. Luke 22. 1. Cor. 11.

Aug. epist. 118. ad Ianuarium.

Yet saith M. Harding, S. Augustines words be plaine: Saluator non præcepit, quo deinceps ordine sumeretur: vt Apostolis, per quos dispositurus erat Ecclesiam, seruaret hunc locum: Christ gaue no commandement, in what order it should be receiued: to the intent he might leaue that matter to his Apostles, by whom he would dispose his Church. Therefore saith M. Harding, The number of Communicants is at libertie, and the Priest may receiue alone.

S. Augustine in that place speaketh not one word of any number, but only of the time of receiuing, whether it might séeme conuenient to Minister the Communion after Supper, as Christ did to his Disciples, and some vsed then to doe, as appeareth by the words that follow: Nam si hoc ille monuisset, vt post cibos alios semper acciperetur, credo quòd eum morem nemo variasset: For if Christ had commanded that the Sacrament should euer be receiued after other meats, I beleeue no man would haue changed that order. It is wrong dealing to bring one thing for another: to allege number in stead of time: and of S. Augustines words to conclude that S. Augustine neuer meant. For that S. Augustine requireth a number of Communicants, it appeareth by that immediately in the same place he allegeth the words of S. Paul: Quapropter fratres, cùm conuenitis ad manducandum, inuicem expectate: Wherefore brethren, when ye meet together to eat (the Communion) wait one for another. Which words M. Harding thought best cunningly to dissemble. In other places S. Augustine, like as also S. Hierome and others, witnesseth that the whole people daily receiued together, and generally intreating of the holy Communion, he speaketh euermore of a number, and neuer of one alone.

Aug. in eadem epist. ad Ianuarium. 118.

1. Cor. 11.

Inuicē expect. Aug. de Serm. Dom. in monte 12. in Iohan. tract. 26. Hieron. ad Lucinium. Idem in Apolog. aduers. Iouinian.

Now whereas M. Harding saith, Christ left such matters to the determination of the Church, and to that purpose séemeth to allege, as others doe, these words of S. Paul: Cætera cum venero disponam: Touching the rest, I will take order when I come: This kinde of Doctrine vnto the Old Fathers séemed very dangerous. For S. Augustine saith: Omnes insipientissimi Hæretici, qui se Christianos vocari volunt, audacias figmentorum suorum hac occasione Euangelicæ sententiæ colorare conantur, vbi Dominus ait, Adhuc multa habeo vobis dicere, sed ea non potestis portare modò: The most peeuish Heretikes that bee, that would faine be called Christians, doe colour the bold enterprises of their fantasies, by occasion of this saying of the Gospell, whereas the Lord saith, Yet haue I many things to say vnto you, but yee are not able now to beare them.

1. Cor. 11.

Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 97.

But if the Church haue determined this matter for Priuate Masse, as M. Harding saith: In what Councell, at what time within fiue hundred yéeres after Christ, and in what place was it determined? Who was witnesse of the doing? Who was President? Who was present? This is it that the Reader would faine learne. And M. Harding thinketh it best to proue it by silence. Howbeit it is already confessed, that Priuate Masse came in, not by Christ, or by any of his Apostles, or by the authoritie of the Church, but onely by the deuotion and negligence of the people.

It is wonderfull to sée how handsome constructions these men make of these words of S. Paul: Touching the rest I will take order when I come. For vpon these words they build their Priuate Masse, euen in such forme as it is now vsed in. As if S. Paul should say thus: At my comming I will take order, that ye shall haue Masse in a strange tongue: that ye shall receiue alone: that ye shall not looke and wait one for another, notwithstanding any my former commandement: that ye shall not need to meet together: that one shall receiue for all the rest: and so at my comming I will vndoe whatsoeuer hitherto I haue ordained.

M. Hardings argument.

I may not now dissemble the value of M. Hardings argument: Christ (saith he) ordained the Sacrament after Consecration and oblation done, to be receiued and eaten; Ergo, the number of Communicants together is no part of Christs Institution.

What, thought M. Harding that none but children and fooles should read his Booke? For how lowsely hang these parts together? The Sacrament must be receiued after Consecration: Ergo, The number of Communicants is not necessary. There is not one péece hereof that either is true in it selfe, or agréeth with other.

For touching Consecration, if hee will precisely follow the words of the Euangelists, which which wrote the ſtory, Chriſt firſt tooke the Bread, and bleſſed it: and brake it: and gaue it, and ſaid, take ye: Eate ye: and afterward, this being ſaid and done, he added the words of Conſecration, This is my Body. Thus the Euangeliſts witneſſe contrary to M. Harding, that the receiuing was firſt, and the Conſecration afterward. Matth. 26. Luke 22. 1. Cor. 11.

Concerning the force of M. Hardings argument, it concludeth directly againſt himſelfe. For if Chriſt inſtituted the Sacrament to the intent it ſhould be firſt Conſecrate, and then receiued of a company, it muſt needs follow, that receiuing with company is part of Chriſts Inſtitution: as it is alſo auouched by Cardinall Beſſarion the Biſhop of Tuſculum. His words be theſe: Hoc ipſe ordo rerum poſcebat: primum Conſecrare, deinde Frangere, poſtea Diſtribuere: quod nos in præſentia facimus: This the very naturall courſe of things required: firſt to Conſecrate, then to Breake, and after to Diſtribute: which thing wee alſo doe at this day. And Gabriel Biel: Conſecratio ad vſum, qui eſt manducatio, tanquam ad finem quodammodò proximum ordinatur. Quia Chriſtus accepit panem, benedixit, & dedit Diſcipulis, vt manducarent: Conſecration is ordained for a vſe, which is the eating, as it were for an end. For Chriſt after he had taken the Bread, bleſſed it, and gaue it to his Diſciples to eat. M. Harding concludeth againſt himſelfe. Beſſar. de Sacrament. Euchariſtiæ. Biel. lect. 26.

And againe: Conſecratio non eſt ſemper finis Conſecrationis, ſed potius vſus fidelium. Ad hoc enim Conſecratur Corpus & Sanguis Chriſti, vt fideles illis vtantur manducando: Conſecration is not the end of Conſecration, but rather the vſe of the faithfull. For to that end is the Body and Blood of Chriſt Conſecrate, that the faithfull may vſe them in eating. Thus M. Harding frameth arguments againſt himſelfe. Biel. lect. 38.

M. Harding. The 9. Diuiſion.

But if they allege againſt vs the example of Chriſt, ſaying that he receiued not it alone, but did Communicate with his twelue Apoſtles, and that wee ought to follow the ſame: I anſwer, that wee are bound to follow this example, Quoad Subſtantiam, non quoad externam Ceremoniam: For the Subſtance, not for the outward Ceremony, to the which pertaineth the number and other rites, as is aforeſaid. Chriſts example importeth neceſſity of receiuing only: (17) the other rites, as number, place, time, &c. bee of congruence and order. (18) In which things the Church hath taken order, willing and charging that all ſhall Communicate that be worthy and diſpoſed. And ſo it were to be wiſhed as often times as the Prieſt doth celebrate this high Sacrifice, that there were ſome, who worthily diſpoſed, might receiue their rites with him, and bee partakers Sacramentally of the Body and Blood of Chriſt with him. But in caſe ſuch doe lacke, as wee haue ſeene that lacke commonly in our time, yet therefore the continuall and Daily Sacrifice ought not to bee intermitted. For ſith this is done in the remembrance of Chriſts oblation once made on the Croſſe for the Redemption of all mankinde, therefore it ought daily to bee celebrated thorowout the whole Church of Chriſt, for the better keeping of that great benefit in remembrance: and that though none receiue with the Prieſt. And it is ſufficient in that caſe, if they that bee preſent, be partakers of thoſe holy Myſteries ſpiritually, and Communicate with him in Praier and Thankſgiuing, in Faith and Deuotion, hauing their minde and will to Communicate with him alſo Sacramentally when time ſhall ſerue. M. Hard. refuſeth Chriſts example. The 17. vntruth: For number is not only of congruence, but alſo of Inſtitution. The 18. vntruth. The Church of Rome hath take no ſuch order. *A weak reaſon. This is onely M. Hard. Gloſſe.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Here is great paine taken, to proue that Chriſtian men in the miniſtration of Chriſts Supper are not bound to follow the example of Chriſt; all learning alſo ſhewed to beguile the ſimple with a vaine diſtinction of Subſtantia and Accidens. S. Hilary writing of the leaud dealing of the Arians vſed in racking of the Scriptures, ſaith thus of them; Aut ita ſcribuntur fides, vt volunt: aut ita vt volunt, intelliguntur. Their Faiths muſt either bee ſo written as they will: or elſe they muſt be conſtrued and taken as they will. Hilar. ad Conſtant. Auguſt.

The queſtion that lieth betweene vs ſtandeth not in this point, Whether wee ought to doe euery thing that Chriſt did; but, Whether we ought to do that thing that Chriſt both did himſelfe, and alſo commanded vs to doe, and was afterward practiſed by the Apoſtles and holy Fathers that had the Spirit of vnderſtanding and knew Chriſts meaning, and was neuer broken vntill the negligence and vndeuotion of the people, as M. Harding confeſſeth, brought in the contrary.

Chriſt ſaid not, Do this in Hieruſalem, or in this parlar, or after ſupper, or at this table, or being ſo many together, or ſtanding, or ſitting, but he ſaid thus, Do yee this: that is, Take ye Bread: bleſſe it: breake it: giue it in my remembrance. This is not a Ceremoniall Accident; but the very end, purpoſe, and ſubſtance of Chriſts Inſtitution. And therefore S. Paul ſaith: The Bread that we breake is the participation of the Lords body: and all we are one Bread and one Body, as many as are partakers of one Bread. Matth. 26. Luke 22. 1. Cor. 10.

Yet ſaith M. Harding, We are bound to follow Chriſts example in things that bee of the ſubſtance of the Sacrament, not in things that be of order and congruence. Here vnawares he ſeemeth to confeſſe that his Maſſe whatſoeuer ſubſtance it beare, yet is void both of good order and alſo of congruence. But what wicked wilfulneſſe may this be? To miniſter the Sacraments of Chriſt, as Chriſt himſelfe did, and commanded to be done, is called an Accident Ceremoniall,

Daily Sacrifice.

Ceremoniall, that may well be changed: But for the Priest to speake in a strange vnknowen tongue; to turne his face from the people; to minister vnto himselfe alone; and to vse an infinite sort of childish ceremonies, which neither Christ, nor his Apostles euer either vsed or thought of: all these are holden for things substantiall, and of importance, and be defended as necessary and may not be changed. Such power haue these men to change Accidence into Substance, and Substance into Accidence when they list.

The Church (saith M. Harding) hath charged and ordered, that no man that is worthy and disposed, shalbe refused. O miserable is that Church, whereas no man, no not so much as one, is well disposed! Heere in few words he condemneth the whole Church of Rome, euen the whole College of Cardinals: amongst whom, as he saith, there is not one well disposed and worthy: and therefore they all withdraw themselues from the Communion. But Chrysostome saith: If thou be not worthy to receiue the Communion, then art thou not worthy to be present at the Praiers. Therefore M. Harding should driue his vnworthy people from the Church, and not suffer them to heare his Masse.

Chrysostom. ad popul. Antiochen. Homil. 61

They imagine that any man, be he neuer so great a sinner, may pray to God, and haue free accesse to the throne of Maiesty. Only they thinke a sinner may not receiue the holy Communion. But it is written: Let him depart from his wickednesse, whosoeuer calleth vpon the name of the Lord. Whosoeuer is a member of Christ, and may boldly call God his Father, may also be bold to receiue the Communion.

Hebr. 4. 2. Tim. 2.

If M. Harding wish indeed that the people would prepare themselues, and Communicate with the Priest, as he pretendeth; Why doth he not exhort and moue the people? Why doth he not prouide for them? Why doth he rather defend his sole receiuing contrary to his owne wishing, and contrary to the example of Christ, as he himselfe confesseth? Doubtlesse there are many godly men among the people, and oftentimes more vertuously disposed a great deale than the Priest. Neither is it of their vnworthinesse, that they abstaine so often; nor of their worthinesse, that they receiue once in the yere, but only of custome.

But if the people be slacke, yet must the Priest doe the Daily Sacrifice, saith M. Harding, that is, he must offer vp Christ vnto his Father for the sinnes of the World. Herein appeareth the wanton follie of this people. That they may doe, and are commanded to doe, they will not doe: but that they cannot doe, that they will needs doe. The matter being so weighty, and not yet throughly beleeued, it had beene good for M. Harding to haue made proofe thereof by the authority of S. Augustine, S. Hierome, or some other old Catholike Doctour, within the compasse of six hundred yeres: but he bringeth forth only an Article or Decree of his owne making. Sith this is done (saith he) in the remembrance of Christs oblation once made on the Crosse for the Redemption of Mankinde, Therefore it ought daily to be celebrated thorowout the whole Church.

Lest any errour grow hereof, it is to be noted, that these words, Daily Sacrifice, and Daily Bread, are sometimes vsed in the holy Fathers, and both applied vnto the Body of Christ: but farre otherwise, and to other purpose, than M. Harding meaneth, as it shall soone appeare. The old Fathers call that the Daily Sacrifice that Christ made once for all vpon the Crosse: for that as Christ is a Priest for euer, so doth the same his Sacrifice last for euer: not that it is daily and really renued by any mortall creatures, but that the power and vertue thereof is infinite in it selfe, and shall neuer be consumed. So saith S. Augustine: Tibi hodiè Christus est, tibi quotidiè resurgit: To thee this day is Christ: and to thee daily he riseth againe. So likewise saith S. Hierome: Quotidiè nobis Agnus occiditur, & Pascha quotidiè celebratur: Vnto vs euery day the Lambe is slaine: to vs euery day the Easter Feast is kept. And in like sort writeth Germanus a later writer: Panis quotidianus est Christus, qui, est, & antè fuit & manet in sæcula: Our daily Bread is Christ, which is now, and was before, and endureth for euer. Thus in Christs behalfe is that most pretious Sacrifice euerlasting.

Daily Sacrifice. Daily Bread.

De verb. Dom. in Euan. secundum Lucam. Serm. 28.

Hieron. in 1. ad Corint. cap. 5.

Germanus in Eccles. rerum Theoria.

Likewise the same one Sacrifice is euerlasting, not only in it selfe, for that the vertue thereof is daily effectuall in vs, and endureth for euer, but also of our behalfe, in that we doe daily offer vp vnto God our Sacrifices of praises and thanksgiuing for that so mercifull and wonderfull worke of our redemption. And this kinde of daily Sacrifice, beside a great number of other old Doctours, the godly Father Irenæus hath taught vs to make: His words be these: Sic & nos quotidiè offerre vult munus ad Altare frequenter sine intermissione. Est ergo Altare in Cœlis: Illuc enim preces & oblationes nostræ diriguntur: Euen so hath God willed vs daily to offer vp our Sacrifice at the Altar without ceassing. Therefore our Altar is in heauen: for thither our praiers and oblations are directed. Thus is that Sacrifice once offered vpon the Crosse rightly called our Daily Sacrifice, in like phrase of speach as is this of Tertullian: Nos Sabbatum non septeno quoque die celebramus, sed omni die:

Irenæus li. 4. cap. 34.

Tertull. aduersus Iudæos.

We

We keepe the Sabbath, not euery ſeuenth day, but euery day. But M. Hardings fantaſie, that is, that the Miniſtration of the Sacraments is the Daily Sacrifice, includeth a manifeſt vntruth. For afterward he graunteth himſelfe, that vpon Good Friday there is no ſuch Oblation made, and that (as he ſaith) by the order of the Apoſtles. And againe he knoweth, that the Grecians in the Lent time neuer vſed to Conſecrate, but onely vpon Saturdaies and Sundaies, as it appeareth by the ſixth Councell holden at Conſtantinople, and by the Councell of Laodicea. And of the vſe of the Latine Church therein in his time, S. Ambroſe writeth thus: Omni hebdomada offerendum eſt, etiamſi non quotidiè peregrinis, incolis tamen vel bis in hebdomada: Euery weeke we muſt celebrate the oblation, although not euery day vnto ſtrangers, yet for the inhabitants, yea ſometimes twice in the weeke. I trow M. Harding will not ſay, that the thing that is one day left vndone, or that is only done vpon the Saturdaies and Sundaies, or, as S. Ambroſe ſaith, twice in the weeke, is notwithſtanding done euery day.

Daily Sacrifice.

Articul. 2. Diuiſ. 23. fo. 44. b. Sexta Synod. Cõſtant. c. 52. Concil. Laodic. Can. 49. Ambro. in 1. ad Timoth. cap. 2. Non quotidiè,

Yet it is well to be thought, that both S. Ambroſe, and other learned Biſhops in the Latine Church, and the Fathers in the Councell of Conſtantinople, and Laodicea for the Greeke Church, vnderſtood what was the Daily Sacrifice.

Verily that Sacrifice that Chriſt once made vpon his Croſſe, endureth for Good Friday, and all daies in the Lent, and euery day in the yeere, and for euer: and therefore is iuſtly called our Daily Sacrifice.

M. Hardings reaſons.

Chriſts death muſt be kept in remembrance; Ergo, The Prieſt is bound to ſay daily Maſſe, yea although there be no man to receiue with him. Alas how holdeth this poore argument? Or how may we make it good? Is there none other meane to remember Chriſts death, but onely by ſaying Priuate Maſſe? Or is not euery one of the people bound to remember the ſame, as dayly, and as often as the Prieſt? It is a very ſimple ſequele, onely vpon remembrance of Chriſts Death to found the Maſſe. Doubtleſſe the Maſſe, as it is now vſed, vtterly drowneth and defaceth all maner remembrance of the Death of Chriſt.

But to put a little more weight to this ſilly reaſon, whereas M. Harding ſaith, The Prieſt ought daily to Sacrifice, yea although there be no man to receiue with him; I will ſay further in his behalfe: If this Sacrifice be ſo neceſſarie, as it is ſuppoſed, then is the Prieſt bound to Sacrifice euery day, yea although he himſelfe receiue not. For the Sacrifice and the Receiuing are ſundry things, as it is alſo noted in a late Councell holden at Toledo in Spaine: Quidam Sacerdotes vno die plurima offerunt Sacrificia, & in omnibus ſe oblationibus à Communione ſuſpendunt: Certaine Prieſts there be, that euery day offer many Sacrifices, and yet in euery Sacrifice withhold themſelues from the Communion. Thus hath M. Harding found his Daily Sacrifice, and loſt his Priuate Maſſe.

De Con. diſt. 2. Relatum eſt.

Another reaſon.

The receiuing with compahie is no ſubſtantiall part of Chriſts Inſtitution; Ergo, Wee are not bound therein to follow Chriſts example. Firſt, this Antecedent is falſe, as it is already proued. And if it were no part of the ſubſtance of Chriſts Inſtitution, yet are we neuertheleſſe bound to his example, becauſe he hath commanded vs ſo to doe.

If Chriſts example haue no more weight of our ſide, let vs turne the ſame to M. Hardings ſide, and ſee how handſomely it will conclude: Chriſt miniſtred the Communion to his Diſciples all together; Ergo, The Prieſt may receiue alone.

Conſider, good Reader, what credit theſe men deſerue to haue, that are thus faine to ſhun and flie the example of Chriſt. S. Paul, to rectifie the Corinthians, thought no way better, than to call them backe to Chriſts example. For thus he ſaith: That I receiued of the Lord, the ſame haue I deliuered vnto you. Likewiſe ſaith S. Hierome, Dominica Cœna omnibus debet eſſe communis: quia ille omnibus Diſcipulis ſuis qui aderant, æqualiter tradidit Sacramenta: The Lords Supper muſt be common to all. And that hee proueth by Chriſts example, Becauſe Chriſt gaue the Sacraments equally to all his Diſciples that were preſent.

1. Cor. 11. Hieron. in 1. Cor. 11.

But whoſe example followeth M. Harding, when he ſaith his Priuate Maſſe? When did either Chriſt, or any of his Diſciples, or any one of the old Catholike Doctors, minſter in that ſort? If he follow none of theſe, let him not blame others, if they refuſe to follow him.

M. Harding. The 10. Diuiſion.

M. Iewell, and many other of that ſide, thinke to haue an argument againſt Priuate Maſſe of the word Communio, as though the Sacrament were called a Communion in conſideration of many receiuers together. And therefore in his Sermon oftentimes he maketh an oppoſition betweene Priuate Maſſe, and the Communion, and alleging diuers places where mention is of a Communion, interreth of each of them an argument argument against Priuate Masse. But this argument is weake, and vtterly vnlearned, as that which proceedeth of ignorance. (19) For it is not so called because many, or, as M. Iewell teacheth, the whole Congregation Communicateth together in one place; but because of the effect of the Sacrament, for that by the same we are ioyned to God, and many that be diuers, be vnited together, and made one Mysticall Body of Christ, which is the Church, of which Body, by vertue and effect of this holy Sacrament, all the faithfull be members one of another, and Christ is the head. Thus diuers ancient Doctours doe expound it. And specially Dionysius Areopagita, where speaking of this Sacrament, he saith: Dignissimum hoc Sacramentum, sua præstantia reliquis Sacramentis longè antecellit, atque ea causa illud meritò singulariter Communio appellatur. Nam quamuis vnumquodque Sacramentum id agat, vt nostras vitas in plura diuisas, in vnicum illum statum, quo Deo iungitur, colligat, attamen huic Sacramento Communionis vocabulum præcipuè ac peculiariter congruit: This most worthy Sacrament is of such excellencie, that it passeth all other Sacraments; and for that cause it is alonely Called the Communion. For albeit euery Sacrament be such as gathereth our liues, that be diuided asunder many waies, into that one state, whereby we are ioyned to God, yet the name of Communion is fit and conuenient for this Sacrament specially and peculiarly, more than for any other. By which words, and by the whole place of that holy Father, we vnderstand that this Sacrament is specially called the Communion, for the speciall effect it worketh in vs, which is to ioine vs neerely to God, so as wee bee in him, and he in vs; and all we that beleeue in him, one body in Christ. And for this indeed wee doe not Communicate alone. For in as much as the whole Church of God is but one house, as S. Cyprian saith, Vnus est domus Ecclesiæ, in qua omnis editur: There is one house of the Church, wherein the Lambe is eaten: And S. Paul saith to Timothie, that this house of God is the Church of the liuing God: whosoeuer doth eat this Lambe worthily, doth Communicate with all Christian men, of all places and Countries, that bee in this house, and do the like. And therefore S Hierome a Priest, shewing himselfe loth to contend in writing with S. Augustine a Bishop, calleth him a Bishop of his Communion. His words be these: Non enim conuenit, vt ab adolescentia vsque ad hanc ætatem in monasterio cum sanctis fratribus labore desudans, aliquid contra Episcopum Communionis meæ scribere audeam, & cum Episcopum, quem ante cœpi amare, quàm nosse: It is not meet (saith he) that I, occupied in labour from my youth vntill this age, in a poore Monasterie with holy brethren, should be so bold, as to write any thing against a Bishop of my Communion, yea and that Bishop, whom I began to loue ere that I knew him. Thus wee see, that S. Hierome and S. Augustine were of one. (20) Communion, and did Communicate together, though they were farre asunder: The one at Bethlehem in Palestina, the other at Hippo in Aphrica. Thus there may be a Communion, though the Communicants be not together in one place.

Communio.

The 19. vntruth. For of communicating together, it was called Communio.

Eccles. Hierar. cap. 3.

De Cæna Dom.

1. Tim. 3.

Inter Epist. Augustini, t. pag. 14.

The 20. vntruth, rising of the ambiguitie or doubtfull taking of this word, Communion.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Whereas of the nature of this word Communio, which is most commonly vsed in all the old Fathers, I toke occasion to say that the Priest ought to communicate with the people, for that otherwise it cannot iustly be called a Communion, M. Harding maketh answer, as a man well broking his owne learning, That this reason is weake and vnlearned, as proceeding altogether of ignorance. Here to leaue all contention of learning, and only to haue regard vnto the truth, if the very nature of this word, Communio, import not a thing to be common, as it is supposed, much lesse may it, as I iudge, import a thing to be priuate.

Communio.

It is named Communio, saith M. Harding, of the effect that it worketh in vs, because by the same we are ioined vnto God, not because many communicate together in one place. And for proofe hereof, he allegeth the authoritie of Dionysius: wherein he doth great wrong to that good old Father, alleging his authoritie for the Masse, that neuer spake word of the Masse.

It is granted of all, without contradiction, that one end of all Sacraments is to ioine vs vnto God, as Dionysius saith here of the Holy Communion, and Paul likewise of the Sacrament of Baptisme: Ye are all the children of God by Faith in Christ Iesus: For as many of you as are Baptized in Christ, haue put on Christ. And Chrysostome saith, That by baptisme we are made bone of Christs bones, and flesh of Christs flesh.

Galat. 3.

Chrysostom. in Epist. ad Ephes. Homil. 20.

Another end is to ioine vs all together. And so likewise writeth S. Paul of Baptisme: Nos omnes in vnum Corpus Baptizati sumus: All we are Baptized into one Body. And therefore saith S. Augustine: In nullum nomen Religionis, seu verum, seu falsum, coagulari homines possunt, nisi aliquo signaculorum, vel Sacramentorum visibilium, consortio colligentur: Men cannot be brought into any name of Religion, be it true or false, vnlesse they be ioined together with the band of visible Signes or Sacraments.

1. Cor. 12.

Contra Faust. Manich. li. 19. cap. 11.

And notwithstanding Dionysius speaketh plainly of both these ends, yet it pleaseth M. Harding in his allegation only to name the one, and to conceale the other, and by the affirmation of the one, vntruly to conclude the denial of the other. And as touching the latter of these two ends, the same Dionysius, in the same Chapter that M. Harding here allegeth, writeth thus: Sancta illa vnius & eiusdem Panis, & poculi communis, & pacifica distributio, vnitatem illis diuinam, tanquam vnà enutritis, præscribit: That holy, common, and peaceable distribution of one Bread, and one Cup, preacheth vnto them a heauenly vnity, as being nan fed together. And Pachymeres the Greeke Paraphrast, expounding the same place, hath these words: τὸ γὰρ ὁμοδίαιτον καὶ ὁμόσιτον ἐπ' εἰς μνήμην ἄγει τὸ κυριακὸν δεῖπνον: For that common diet and consent farther bringeth vs into the remembrance of the Lords Supper.

Dionys. Eccles. Hierar. cap. 3. ὁμοσιτίαν, ἀυτοῖς ἐνθεον ὡς ὁμοτραπέζοις νομοθετεῖ.

Pachymeres Paraphrastes.

Whatsoeuer

Communio.

Whatsoeuer M. Harding haue said, I reckon it will hereby appeare vnto the indifferent Reader, that these words doe sufficiently declare both the common receiuing of the Sacrament, and also the knitting and ioining of many together.

Now let vs examine this reason: The Communion hath his name of the effect, for that it ioineth vs vnto God: Ergo, saith M. Harding, it signifieth not the Communicating of many together. Surely this Argument is very weake: I will not say, It is vnlearned, or proceedeth of ignorance. Hee should need a new Logicke, that would assay to make it good.

Nay, it may much better be replied: What effect can this Sacrament haue, or whom can it ioine to God, but only such as doe receiue it? Or, What effect can the Sacrament of Baptisme worke, but only in them that receiue Baptisme? Without all question, the effect that Dionysius meant, standeth not in this, that one man saith a Priuate Masse, and receiueth the Sacrament alone: but in this, that the people praieth, and receiueth the Holy Communion together, and thereby doth openly testifie, that they bee all one in Christ Jesus, and all one amongst themselues. And therefore Chrysostome saith: Propterea in Mysterijs alter alterum amplectimur, vt vnum multi fiamus: For that cause in the time of the Mysteries we embrace one another, that being many, we may become one. Chrysostom. ad popul. Antioch. Homil. 61.

Howbeit, in plaine speech, it is not the receiuing of the Sacrament that worketh our ioining with God. For whosoeuer is not ioined to God before hee receiue the Sacraments, he eateth and drinketh his owne iudgement. The Sacraments bee Seales and Witnesses, and not properly the causes of this coniunction. Otherwise our children that depart this life before they receiue the Communion, and all the godly Fathers of the Old Testament, should haue no coniunction with God. Wherefore S. Augustine saith: No man may any wise doubt, but euery faithfull creature is then made partaker of Christs Body and Blood, when in Baptisme he is made the member of Christ: and that he is not put off from the fellowship of that Bread and that Cuppe, although before either hee eat that Bread, or drinke of that Cuppe, he depart this world, being in the vnitie of Christs Bodie. For he is not depriued from the partaking and benefit of the Sacrament, so long as he findeth in himselfe that thing that the Sacrament signifieth. Likewise S. Cyprian: Nos ipsi Corpus Christi effecti, & Sacramento, & re Sacramenti, Capiti nostro coniungimur & vnimur: Wee our selues being made the Bodie of Christ, both by the meane of the Sacrament, and also by the thing it selfe of the Sacrament, or represented by the Sacrament, are ioined and vnited vnto our Head. Roman. 4. Aug. in Serm. ad Infantes. Beda 1. Cor. 10 Cypr. de Cœna Domini.

But S. Cyprian saith: The whole Church is but one house, in which the Lambe is eaten. And S. Hierome, notwithstanding he dwelt in Bethlehem, so many miles off from S. Augustine, being then at Hippo in Aphrica, yet hee calleth him a Bishop of his Communion: Ergo, saith M. Harding, The Priest that saith Masse alone in Rome, Communicateth together with another Priest that saith Masse alone in India. Here S. Cyprian and S. Hierome are violently drawen in, and forced to witnesse the thing that they neuer knew: and so M. Harding, as his maner is, concludeth a falshood. Cypr. de Cœna Domini. Inter Epistolas Aug. Epist. 14.

The Holy Communion was so often and so generally frequented amongst all Christians in the Primitiue Church in all their Assemblies and Congregations, that at length the very companie and fellowship of them was called Communio, taking name of that action that was most solemnly vsed among them at their meetings. And therefore to giue somewhat more credit to M. Hardings words, S. Augustine saith: Mulier illa est Communionis nostræ: That woman is of our Communion. Likewise againe: Donatus non nisi in sua Communione Baptismum esse credit: Donatus thinketh there is no Baptisme, but only in his Communion. And S. Hierome, writing vnto Damasus Bishop of Rome, hath these words: Ego nullum primum, nisi Christum sequens, beatitudini tuæ, id est, Cathedræ Petri, Communione consocior: I following no chiefe, but onely Christ, am ioined by Communion to thy holinesse, that is to say, to Peters Chaire. In these places this word, Communio, signifieth not the Ministration of Sacraments, but a side, a part, or a fellowship, or consent in Articles of Religion. And in this sense S. Hierome called S. Augustine a Bishop of his Communion: that is, of his Faith, of his Minde, of his Doctrine, of his Religion. Aug. in Epist. ad Eusebium. Aug. Retract. Lib. 1. Cap. 21. Hieronym. ad Damasum.

Here may be noted by the way, that S. Hierome saith not, S. Augustine is a Bishop of my Masse, but of my Communion. For M. Harding knoweth, that neither of them both euer said Priuate Masse, and therefore could not Communicate the one with the other in saying Masse.

But for clearer answer to the words of S. Hierome, the Communion or fellowship of the Church standeth in sundry respects: For wee Communicate together, either in consent of minde, as it is written of the Apostles, They had all one Heart, and one Minde: Or in knowledge of God, as Christ praieth for his Apostles vnto his Father, That they may be one, as thou and I be one: And S. Paul to the Philippians, I thanke my God alway, that yee Actor. 4. Iohan. 17. Philippen. 2.

are

Galat. 3. are come to the Communion of the Gospell: Or in one Christ, as Paul saith, There is now no bondman: there is now no freeman: but all are one in Christ Iesus. To be short, wee Communicate in Spirit, in Praiers, in Loue: Wee are all washed with one Bloud: wee are all fed with one Body: wee haue all one hope of our Vocation: and all together with one heart and one voice, be wee neuer so farre asunder, doe glorifie God, the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Communio.

Roman. 15. Cypr. de Cœna Domini. And this is that only house wherein the Lambe is eaten, grounded vpon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets. In this house we dwell, M. Harding: Heere we walke together with consent: Heere we eat that Lambe of God, being all brothers, and members of one body, and all one in Christ Iesus. God restore you once againe into the same

Psalm. 54. house, that you may open the eies of your heart, and see from whence you are fallen.

Apocalyp. 2. Where you say, two diuers Priests saying Masse, may Communicate together, notwithstanding they be in sundry Countries, it may some be granted. For they Communicate together in wickednesse, in breaking of Gods Commandement, and in deceiuing of the people: euen in like sort as the wicked children Communicate in wickednesse with

Matth. 23. their wicked fathers: as Christ seemeth to say to the Phariseis: At your hands shall be sought for all the iust Blood that hath beene spilt, from the Blood of Abel the iust, vnto the Blood of Za-

Luke 11. charie. Fill ye vp the measure of your Fathers.

Now these things noted, wee may the better take the view of M. Hardings Arguments.

1 The whole Church (saith he) thorow the world is but one house: Ergo, The Priest may say Priuate Masse.

2 The faithfull that be farre asunder, doe Communicate together in consent of minde: Ergo, They doe Communicate in receiuing the Sacraments.

3 S. Augustine and S. Hierome did Communicate in Faith and Doctrine: Ergo, They did Communicate together in saying Masse. If S. Paul might haue had some conference with M. Harding, and haue found out these reasons, he would neuer haue found such fault with the Corinthians, neither would he haue written thus vnto them: Inuicem expectate: Wait ye all, one for another. Which words euen Hugo Cardinalis expoundeth thus: Vt vna sit mensa: Non habeat quilibet mensam suam: Let there be one Table for all: and let not euery man haue his sundry Table.

Hugo Cardinalis.

But who can better expound S. Hieromes words than S. Hierome himselfe? Thus he writeth vnto Theophilus against Iohn Bishop of Hierusalem: Quod scribit, nos tecum pergere Romam, & Ecclesiæ Communicare ei, à qua videmur Communione separati, non necesse est ire tam longè: Et hîc in Palæstina eodem modo ei iungimur. Et ne hoc quod procul sit: In viculo Bethlehem Presbyteris eius, quantum in nobis est, Communione sociamur: Whereas he writeth that I am going with thee to Rome, to Communicate with the Church there, from which wee be diuided by Communion, it is nothing needfull to goe so farre. For being heere in Palestine, wee are ioined to the same Church in like maner. And let him not make matter, that it is so farre off. For being heere in the little Towne of Bethlehem, as much as in vs lieth, wee ioine in Communion with the Priests of Rome. He saith, As much as in vs lieth, whereby he excepteth only the vse of the Sacraments together. For otherwise they had Communicated thoroughly in all things, and these words, As much as in vs lieth, should not haue néeded.

Hieron. aduersus Iohan. Hierosolymitan.

As much as in vs lieth.

The errour of these M. Hardings reasons is called Fallacia æquiuocationis, that is, a falshood in reasoning, rising by the craftie handling of one word that hath two or moe significations, whereby one thing is laid forth in shew, and another is concluded. This word Communio, being one, importeth two things, Consent in Religion, and the Ministration of the Holy Mysteries: The one is spirituall, the other corporall: The one requireth circumstance of place, the other requireth no place. Therefore to say, S. Hierome and S. Augustine, being so farre asunder, did Communicate in Religion: Ergo, They did Communicate in breaking and receiuing the Sacrament, hath no more order in sequele, than if M. Harding would reason thus: S. Hierome and S. Augustine did Communicate in Spirit: Ergo, They did also Communicate in Body: Or thus: Their Spirits were together: Ergo, Their Bodies were together. So might he as well say, The

4 Reg. 5. Spirit of Elizæus was with Giezi his man vpon the way: Ergo, The Bodie of Elizæus

1. Cor. 5. was with Giezi vpon the way: Or, The Spirit of Paul was with the Corinthians: Ergo, His Body was with the Corinthians.

By this Argument M. Harding might very direcly haue concluded against himselfe: The whole Church of God is but one house, and all the members of the same doe Communicate together in Faith and Spirit: Hereof wee may found the Maior: Euery particular Church ought to be a resemblance of the whole Church: and this particular Communion munion ought to bee a resemblance of that generall Communion: That generall Communion is common to all, and euery member receiueth his part: Ergo, The particular Communion ought to be ministred commonly vnto all, and euery member to receiue his part. Communio.

Or thus: The Ministration of the holy Communion representeth the coniunction and fellowship that we haue in Faith: And as S. Cyprian saith, That Christian men are ioined together with vnseparable Charitie, the Lords Sacraments doe declare. But Christian people being assembled in one Church, doe Communicate in Faith all together: Ergo, being so assembled, they ought to Communicate in Sacraments all together. Cyprian. ad Magnum.

But M. Harding of the nature of this word Communio, seemeth to fashion out sarre other Arguments.

It is called Communio, saith he: Ergo, It may be Priuate.

It is called Communio: Ergo, It may be receiued of one alone.

It is called Communio: Ergo, The Priest may receiue it without Communicants.

O, M. Harding, weigh your Arguments better, before you send them thus abroad. You shall lesse offend God and your owne conscience: you shall lesse deceiue your brethren: and children shall take lesse occasion to wonder at you.

Now to adde a little more hereunto touching the nature of this word Communio, wherein you so vncourteously charge all others with ignorance, and lacke of learning, as it pleaseth you to doe throughout your whole booke, I thinke it not amisse to shew you what certaine Writers, both old and new, haue thought and written in that behalfe. I need not here to allege the words that S. Paul vseth touching the Holy Communion: Wee are all one Bread, all one Body, as many as doe Communicate of one Bread: Neither that S. Hierome saith, The Lords Supper must be common: Neither that Chrysostome, The thing that is the Lords, they make Priuate: But the Lords things are not this seruants, or that seruants, but common to all: Neither that S. Augustine saith, Hunc cibum & potum societatem vult intelligi Corporis, & membrorum suorum: Hee would haue vs to vnderstand, that this Meat and Drinke is the fellowship of his Body, and of his members: Neither that Chrysostome saith, Quidnam appello Communicationem? Idem ipsum Corpus sumus. Quidnam significat Panis? Corpus Christi. Quid fiunt qui accipiunt? Corpus Christi. What call I the Communication, or Communion? Wee are all one selfe same Body. What signifieth the Bread? The Body of Christ. And what are they made that receiue it? The Body of Christ. Although these Fathers by these words doe manifestly declare, that the Holy Mysteries in their time were diuided commonly to the whole people; yet will I take no aduantage thereof, for that M. Harding will replie, They come not precisely to the nature of this word Communio. 1. Cor. 10. Hieron. 1. Cor. 11. Chrys. 1. Cor. Homil. 27. Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 26. Chrys. 1. Cor. Homil. 24. Significat.

Therefore I will note one or two others, and such as M. Harding cannot denie, but they speake directly to the matter. Pachymeres a Greeke Writer, the Paraphrast vpon Dionysius, hath these words: παύτην δὲ τὴν κοινωνίαν λέγει, διὰ τὸ τότε κοινωνεῖν τοὺς ἀξίους πάντας τῶν μυστηρίων: Therefore (saith hee) hath this Father Dionysius called it the Communion, for that then all they that were worthy, did Communicate of the holy Mysteries. Thus Pachymeres, a man of late yeeres, wrote vpon the same Booke of Dionysius: and we may safely thinke, he vnderstood his Authours minde as well as M. Harding. He saith, Communio is so called of that we doe Communicate together: but M. Harding thinketh otherwise, and constantly saith, it is not so. Pachymeres in Dionys. cap. 3. Κοινωνία. Dicitur Communio, quia omnes Communicant.

Haimo writing vpon S. Pauls Epistles, saith thus: Calix appellatur Communicatio, quasi participatio, quia omnes Communicant ex illo: The Cup is called the Communication, which is as much as participation, because all doe Communicate of it. Haimo in 1. ad Cor. 10.

Hugo Cardinalis saith thus: Post hoc dicatur Communio, quæ appellatur, vt omnes Communicemus: Afterward let the Communion be said, which is so called, that wee should all Communicate. And he saith further: Vel dicitur Communio, quia in Primitiua Ecclesia populus Communicabat quolibet die: Otherwise (saith he) it is called the Communion, for that the people in the Primitiue Church did Communicate euery day. Hugo Cardinalis in Speculo Eccl-sia.

Gerardus Lorichius: Dicitur Communio, quia concorditer de vno Pane & vno Calice multi participamus: Et Communio participationem & communicationem significat: It is called Communio, because we doe Communicate together agreeably of one Bread and one Cup: And this word Communio is as much as participation, or receiuing of parts. De missa publica proroganda.

Micrologus: Non potest propriè dici Communio, nisi plures de eodem Sacrificio participent. It cannot iustly be called a Communion, vnlesse many doe receiue together of one Sacrifice. If M. Harding will not beleeue vs, yet I hope hee will beleeue some of these. They be all his owne. It were much for him to say, they bee all ignorant and vnlearned, and not one of them vnderstood what he wrote. Certainly their age will giue it them, they are no Micrologus de Eccles. obseruationib. apud Cassand. de Liturgijs, cap. 22.

Basil. exercit. adpietat. Ser. 4 no Lutherans. S. Basil reporteth an Ecclesiasticall Decree, or Canon, that at the receiuing of the Holy Communion, which he calleth Mysticum Pascha, there ought to bee twelue persons at the least, and neuer vnder.

M. Harding. The 11. Diuision.

The 21. vntruth. M. Hard. saith, The Priest doth Communicate, and not Communicate both together: which is a contradiction in nature.

The 22. vntruth. This order was taken, not for euerie sicke party, but for persons excommunicate.

What if foure or fiue of sundry houses, in a sickenesse time, being at the point of death, in a parish, require to haue their rites ere they depart? The Priest after that hee hath receiued the Sacrament in the Church, taketh his naturall sustenance, and dineth, and then being called vpon, carrieth the rest a mile or two to the sicke, in each house none being disposed to receiue with the sicke; he doth that he is required. (21) Doth he not in this case Communicate with them? And doe not they Communicate one with another, rather hauing a will to Communicate together in one place also, if opportunitie serued? Else if this might not be accounted as a lawfull and good Communion, and therfore not to be vsed, the one of these great inconueniences should wittingly be committed: (22) That either they should be denied that necessarie victuall of life at their departing hence, which were a cruell iniurie, and a thing contrarie to the examples and godly ordinances of the Primitiue Church: Or the Priest, rather for companies sake than of deuotion, should receiue that holy meat after that he had serued his stomacke with common meats; which likewise is against the ancient Decrees of the Church. Euen so the Priest that receiueth alone at Masse, doth Communicate with all them that doe the like in other places and Countries.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

He that séeth no marke, must shoot by aime. What, saith M. Harding, if foure or fiue men of sundrie houses within one Parish bée at the point of death, and require their rights, and the Priest haue dined? Hereupon hee thinketh may be grounded an Argument inuincible for his Masse. But what if the Priest were fasting? Should hee then say foure Masses to serue all foure? And what if no man happen to be sicke? Then hath M. Harding lost a good Argument. Alas, must hee leaue all the old Doctours and Holy Fathers, and begge at deaths doore, to get somewhat to helpe his Masse? In this case, saith M. Harding, either the Priest must Communicate after hee hath dined, which is against the Canons: or the sicke man must receiue alone, which is proofe sufficient for the Masse: or else he must passe without that necessarie victuall, which were a cruell iniurie, and a thing contrarie to the Primitiue Church. To answer these points, if the Priest, notwithstanding his dinner, Communicate with the sicke, then hath M. Harding yet found no Priuate Masse. And it appeareth by S. Augustine, and certaine old Canons, that in the Primitiue Church both the Priest and people sometimes Communicated together after supper.

Aug. ad Ianuarium, Ep. 118. Conc. Carthagin. 3. Can. 6.

And why is this prouision thought so necessarie? Or why is it counted so cruell an iniurie, if the sicke man passe without it? Shall no man be saued that so departeth? Indeed that were a cruell iniurie. Infinite numbers of children, and others, depart this life in Gods mercie, without that victuall. In the Primitiue Church this order was thought expedient, not for the sicke, for they in their health receiued [a] daily, and in their sickenesse had the Sacrament ordinarily sent [b] home vnto them: but for persons excommunicate, and inioined to penance, who vpon great and notorious crimes could not bee suffered to Communicate with the rest of the faithfull, sometimes during their whole life, but onely when they should depart the world. This extremitie was vsed for terror of others, and such reconciliation was thought necessarie at the end, for solace of the party, that he should not vtterly be swallowed vp in despaire, but might perceiue hee was receiued againe amongst the faithfull, and so depart comfortably, as the member of Christ. And therefore it was decréed by the Councell of Carthage, That if any man after such Reconciliation had recouered his health again, he should neuertheless not be receiued to the Communion of the Church, but only be admitted to the common Praiers. Thus farre forth, and in this case, this prouision was counted necessary in the end.

[a] Aug. de Sermon. Domini in Monte, cap. 12.
[b] Iust. Martyr Apologia 2.

Concil. Carth. 6. Can. 13.

Howbeit, I confesse, sometimes it was otherwise vsed, and at last grew to such superstition, that it was thrust into mens mouthes after they were dead, as wee may see by the Councell of Carthage forbidding the same. But if the people would now Communicate euery day, as they did then, or at least oftener than they doe now, then should not this matter séeme so necessarie at the end as it is héere pretended: and so had M. Harding lost another Argument.

Concil. Carth. 3. Can. 6.

But let vs grant M. Harding his whole request: Let his Priest come and minister to the sicke. What maketh all this for his Priuate Masse? The members of these Arguments hang together like a sicke mans dreame, not one péece like another. For if héere be a Masse, which of the two is it that saith this Masse? Is it the sicke man, or the Priest? The Priest hath dined, and therefore may not: The sicke man is no Priest, and therefore cannot. Héere would M. Harding faine finde a Masse, but he can finde no man to say say his Masse: and so hath hitherto found no Masse at all. And thinketh hee to proue his Masse by that thing that is no Masse.

Againe, grant we this action of the Priest not only to be a Priuate Masse, but also the necessity of the sicke considered to be lawfull: Yet could not this President make it lawfull to bee done openly in the Church, whereas is no such case of necessitie. The circumstances of place, of time, of cause, of end, of maner of doing be not like. In case of necessitie a dispensation was granted to the Priests of Norwey to Consecrate the Mysticall Cup without Wine: for that Wine being brought into that Countrey, by meane of the extreme cold cannot last. Yet was it neuer thought lawfull for all other Priests in all Churches generally to doe the same. Volatter. lib. 7.

M. Harding. The 12. Diuision.

Now if either the Priest or euery other Christian man or woman, might at no time receiue this blessed Sacrament, but with moe together in one place, then for the enioying of this great and necessarie benefit, we were bound to condition of a place. And so the Church deliuered from all bondage by Christ, and set at libertie, should yet for all that be in seruitude and subiection vnder those outward things which S. Paul calleth, Infirma & egena Elementa, weake and beggerly ceremonies, after the English Bibles Translation. Then when S. Paul, blaming the Galathians, saith, Ye obserue daies, and moneths, and times; for this bondage hee might likewise blame vs and say, Yee obserue places. But S. Paul would not wee should returne againe vnto those which he calleth Elements, for that were Iewish. And to the Colossians hee saith, wee be dead with Christ from the Elements of this world. Now if wee except those things which bee necessarily required to this Sacrament by Christs Institution, either declared by written Scriptures, or taught by the Holy Ghost, (23) as bread and wine mingled with water for the matter, the due words of Consecration for the forme, and the Priest rightly ordered, hauing intention to doe as the Church doth, for the ministerie; all these Elements and all outward things be subiect vnto vs, and serue vs being members of Christs Church. In consideration whereof S. Paul saith to the Corinthians; Omnia enim vestra sunt, &c. All things are yours, whether it be Paul, either Apollo, either Cephas; whether it be the World, either life, either death, whether they be present things, or things to come, all are yours, and ye Christs, and Christ is Gods. Galat. 4. Euen so S. Paul calleth them; στοιχεῖα. The 23. vntruth. The mingling of wine and water together is neither Catholike nor necessarie. Scotus.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

If it bee lawfull neither for the Priest nor for any other Christian man or woman to receiue alone; then, saith M. Harding, wee must needs condition of a place to receiue together. Yéere these words, euery other Christian man or woman, that hee hath taken in by the way, are an ouerplus, and quite from the purpose. For the question is moued, not of any other man or woman, but of the Masse, and onely of the Priest that saith the Masse. Now, to condition of a place, saith M. Harding, were as bad as to obserue moneths and daies, which thing S. Paul vtterly forbiddeth: it were a very Iewish Ceremonie: it were an Element of this World, and so a miserable seruitude of the Church. But from such bondage Christ hath deliuered vs. Galat. 4.

I know not well whether M. Harding scoffe and dally herein for his pleasure, or speak soothly as he thinketh. If he dally, it becommeth not the matter: if he speake soothly and as he thinketh, then he hath not well aduised himselfe, neither from what seruitude Christ by his blood hath deliuered vs, nor of what libertie S. Paul speaketh. Certaine it is, Christ hath not deliuered vs from honest Ciuil Policies, without which no State, neither Ecclesiasticall nor Ciuill can be maintained: but from the curse of the Law, wherein wee rested vnder sinne: and from the ceremonies and ordinances giuen by Moses, which for that they were weake, according to the imperfection of that time, therefore S. Paul calleth them the Elements of this World. Galat. 3.

Héere M. Harding séemeth by the way to touch the English Translation of the Bible, which calleth such Elements Beggerly Ceremonies, himselfe being not able to translate it better. And yet if he were well apposed, I thinke hee would hardly yéeld any great difference betweene the Greeke word πτωχὰ and the Latine word Egena, and this English word Beggerly. Which word if it séeme to homely, yet S. Hierome in his exposition is as homely; calling it vilem intelligentiam Traditionum. And yet the Prophets abase it further. Hieremie calleth such Ceremonies so abused, and others deuised by men, Chaffe, Swill, Mosse and Dreames: Esay, Filth: Zachary, Curses: Ezechiel, Mans dung, and other like. Beggerly Ceremonies. πτωχὰ. Egena. Hieron. ad Galat. cap. 4.

From this seruitude, saith Paul, God hath deliuered you. Now are yée free, and no more bond: now are yee the children and heires of God. From this libertie the Galathians were fallen away to the seruile obseruation of Circumcisions, Washings, and other Ceremonies of the Law. Therefore of this liberty and of this bondage S. Paul speaketh, and of none other. Galat. 4.

To condition of a place, saith M. Harding, were méere Iewish: For as S. Paul saith to the Galathians, Ye obserue moneths and daies, so might he say vnto you, Ye obserue places. Thus he saith, as though he himselfe had no choice of place to say his Masse in. Yée moueth neth talke of place, whereof wee had no question: but the number of Communicants, whereof S. Paul so plainly speaketh, hée thought best to salue with silence. If these men account all vtter things to be Worldly Elements, then must they take away the Bread and Wine in the holy Ministration: the water in Baptisme: the words of the Gospell: the whole Ministerie, and all kinde of Ciuill policie. All these bée vtter creatures, giuen to vs by God to be vsed freely, without seruile obseruation or subiection of Conscience. For God hath appointed these things for vs, not vs for them.

Mingling of water and wine.

M. Harding shifteth number into place.

But will our aduersaries now at last defend the Libertie of the Church, or complaine of Bondage? O good Reader, they deale not simply: they dissemble: they meane it not. They haue defiled the Lords Sacraments with a multitude of superstitious and childish Ceremonies, and haue annexed vnto the same a déepe charge of Gods high displeasure, and burthen of conscience. They teach the people of God in this sort: O touch not this! O taste not this! They burden the peoples consciences with choice of meats. They restraine lawfull Matrimonie, the restraint whereof is a yoke intolerable, and a snare of mens liues, and as S. Paul calleth it, the Doctrine of Diuels. They heare S. Augustine complaine, that by meane of such traditions, which hée calleth mens presumptions, the Church of Christ was in worse case in his time, than euer was the Synagogue of the Iewes. They heare others of late yéres likewise complaine much of the same. Yet would they neuer, nor yet will they yéeld, that any one of all their vaine Ceremonies bee released, no not now, hauing had, as they call it, a Generall Councell for that purpose. And can these men stand forth to complaine of bondage? Or will they restore vs the libertie of the Church?

Coloss. 2.
1. Cor. 7.
1. Tim. 4.
Aug. ad Ianuarium, epist. 118
Bernardus Clarenallen.
Gerson Cancellari. Parisien.

M. Hardings Libertie.

Howbeit M. Harding hath well disclosed himselfe hérein, that this libertie is nothing else, but to doe what him listeth: and his bondage nothing else, but to bee subiect vnto God. For hé addeth immediately, that the mingling and blending of Water and Wine together, and the intention of the Priest, are things necessarily required to the Consecration of this Sacrament. Of the first héreof, the superstition onely excepted, no man maketh any great account. Indéed S. Cyprian, and certaine old Fathers speake of it, and force it much: and Iustinus Martyr calleth it, ποτήριον ὕδατος καὶ κράματος: The Cuppe of Water and mixture. But neither Christ, nor any of his Disciples euer gaue Commandement of it: neither was it at any time in the Church Vniuersally receiued, or accounted necessarie. For Scotus and Innocentius witnesse, that the Grécke Church in their time vsed it not. Wherefore it cannot bee iudged Catholike. And touching the necessitie thereof, Scotus saith in plaine words: Huic vino apponere aquam non est simpliciter necessarium de necessitate Sacramenti. Yéere wée sée, these Doctours agrée not. M. Harding saith: This mixture is necessary to the Sacrament. Scotus saith: It is not necessarie.

Cypr. contra Aquarios.
Iustin. in Apolog. 2.
Ioh. Scotus in 4. Senten. dist. 11. quæst. 6.
Innocentius de officio Miss. part. 3. cap. 4.

The mingling of wine and water is not necessarie.

Now to reueale the secrets of M. Hardings Mysteries touching the same: that one drop, or two must be powred on the ground; how much thereof must be put to the Wine, that there may be made a conuenient mixture; what becommeth afterward of the same Water; whether it bé turned into a thinne flegme, or into Christs bloud by meane of mixture, or into a Sacrament of Ablution, to wash the rest away, it would require longer talke, and not necessarie at this present. Neither would I now haue moued one word héreof, sauing that this man thus vanteth himselfe to be the restorer of Christian Libertie.

The Intention of the Priests.

Whereas hé saith: The Priest must haue Intention to doe that the Church doth: vnlesse hé be well assured of the Churches doing hérein, he cannot be sure of his owne Intention; and so must he say Masse with intention to doe, he knoweth not what. Now it appeareth that the Church is not yet resolued vpon one Intention. For the Intention of the Church of Rome is to worke the Transubstantiation of Bread and Wine: The Grécke Church had neuer that Intention, as is plaine by the Councell of Florence. The Intention of the Church of Rome is to Consecrate with Christs words: The Intention of the Grécke Church is to Consecrate with Prayers. And whether of these Churches shall the Priest follow with his Intention? This is the very dungeon of vncertaintie. The heart of man is vnsearchable. If we stay vpon the Intention of a mortall man, wee may stand in doubt of our owne Baptisme.

Concil. Florent. sessione vltima.
Bessarion de Sacramento Eucharistiæ.

M. Hardings arguments.

Christ hath deliuered vs from the Elements of this World: Ergo, the Priest may say Priuate Masse. We are forbidden to obserue moneths and daies: Ergo, the Priest may receiue alone.

Thus hé reasoneth, as if S. Pauls words were written that hé might thereby proue what himselfe listeth. Indéed, the Bread, the Wine, the Water, and the Priest himselfe are Worldly creatures, and therefore subiect vnto Christian Liberty no lesse than than place or time. Yet may not M. Harding therefore haue the Communion ministred without either Priest, or Bread, or Wine: neither Baptisme ministred without water. Christ hath deliuered vs from the subiection and superstitious vsing of the creatures, but not from the creatures themselues: Otherwise by the same forme of reason M. Harding might as well haue concluded thus: Apollo, Paul, Peter, Life, and things to come are Worldly creatures: for so saith S. Paul, euen as M. Harding hath alleged: All things are yours, whether it be Paul, or Apollo, or Peter, or the World, or Life, or things to come. But Christ hath deliuered vs from worldly creatures: Ergo, Christ hath deliuered vs from Paul, Apollo, Peter, from the World, from Life, and from things to come. Such arguments M. Harding hath brought to proue his Masse. Intention. 1. Cor. 3.

M. Harding. The 13. Diuision.

Againe, whereas the ancient and great learned Bishop Cyrillus teacheth plainely and at large, the marueilous vniting and ioining together of vs with Christ, and of our selues into one bodie by this Sacrament: seeing that all so vnited and made one bodie, bee not for all that brought together into one place, for they bee dispersed abroad in all the World; thereof wee may well conclude, that to this effect the being together of Communicants in one place is not of necessitie. His words bee these, much agreeable to Dionysius Areopagita afore mentioned: Vs igitur inter nos & Deum singulos vniret quamuis corpore simul & animo distemus, modum tamen adinuenit, consilio patris & sapientia sua conuenientem. Suo enim corpore credentes per Communionem mysticam benedicens, & secum, & inter nos, vnum nos corpus efficit. Quis enim eos qui vnius sanctiscorporis vnione in vno Christo vnita sunt, ab hac naturali vnione alienos putabit? Nam si omnes vnum panem manducamus, vnum omnes corpus efficimur: Diuidi enim atque seiungi Christus non patitur. Cyrill. lib. 11. cap. 16. That Christ might vnite euery one of vs within our selues, and with God, although wee bee distant both in Body and also in Soule, yet hee hath deuised a meane conenable to the counsell of the Father, and to his owne wisdome. For in that he blesseth them that beleeue, with his owne Body through the mysticall Communion, hee maketh vs one Bodie both with himselfe, and also betweene our selues. For who will thinke them not to bee of this naturall vnion, which with the vnion of that one holy Bodie, be vnited in one Christ? For if we eat all of one Bread, then are we made all one Body; for Christ may not be diuided nor done asunder.

Thus wee see after this ancient Fathers Learning grounded vpon the Scriptures, that all the faithfull blessed with the body of Christ, through the mysticall Communion bee made one body with Christ, and one body betweene themselues. Which good blessing of Christ is of more vertue, and also of more necessitie, than that it may be made frustrate by condition of place, specially where as is no wilfull breach, nor contempt of most seemely and conenable order.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

As I can easily yeld in part that these two Fathers Cyrillus and Dionysius agree together, as it is heere touched: So if M. Harding can proue that this same Cyrillus euer said Priuate Masse, or in any of all his works once vsed the name of Masse, I wil as gladlie yeld vnto the whole. But if Cyrillus neuer spake word of the Masse, how is he here brought in to proue the Masse? Howbeit these men know, it is an easie matter to mocke the ignorant with the glorious name of Catholike Fathers.

Cyrillus saith, that as many as beleeue in Christ, whether they be farre or neere, Iewes or Gentiles, Free or Bond, they are all one Body in Christ Iesus. This thing neither is denied, nor in any point toucheth the Priuate Masse. We confesse, that Christ by the Sacrament of Regeneration, as Chrysostome saith, hath made vs Flesh of his Flesh, and Bone of his Bones, that we are the members, and he is the head. We confesse also, that all the Faithfull are one Body, all indued with one Spirit. And be that distance neuer so great, yet are we one anothers members. Chrys. in epist. ad Ephes. hom. 20.

This marueilous Coniunction and Incorporation is first begun and wrought by faith, as saith Paulinus vnto S. Augustine: Per fidem nostram incorporamur in Christo Iesu Domino nostro: By our Faith wee are incorporate or made one Body with Iesus Christ our Lord. Afterward the same incorporation is assured vnto vs, and increased in our Baptisme: So saith S. Augustine: Ad hoc Baptisma valet, vt Baptizati Christo incorporentur, & membra eius efficiantur: To this auaileth Baptisme, that men being Baptized, may be incorporate into Christ, and made his members. And for that wee are very imperfect of our selues, and therefore must daily proceed forward, that we may grow into a perfect man in Christ, therefore hath God appointed, that the same incorporation should be often renued and confirmed in vs by the vse of the holy Mysteries. Wherein must be considered, that the said holy Mysteries doe not begin, but rather continue and confirme this incorporation. First of all, wee our selues must be the Body of Christ: and afterward wee must receiue the Sacrament of Christs Body: as it is well noted by S. Augustine: Corpus Christi si vis intelligere, Apostolum audi dicentem fidelibus: Vos estis Corpus Christi, & membra: Mysterium vestrum in Mensa Domini positum est: Mysterium Domini accipitis. Ad id, quod estis, respondetis, Amen. Audis, Corpus Christi, & respondes, Amen. Esto membrum Corporis Christi, vt verum sit Amen tuum: If thou wilt vnderstand the Body of Christ, heare what S. Paul saith to the faithfull: Ye are the Body and the members of Christ: Your Mystery Paulinus & Therasia ad Aug. epist. 31. Aug. de Baptismo parvulorum. De Con. Dist. 4 Ad hoc. Aug. in Sermone ad infantes. Citatur à Beda in 1. Cor. 10.

stery is set on the Lords Table: Ye receiue the Mysterie of the Lord. To that thing that ye are, ye answer, Amen. Thou heare'st, The Body of Christ, and saiest, Amen. Be thou a member of Christs Body, that thy Amen may be true.

Neither may wee thinke that Christs Bodie must grossly and bodily be receiued into our bodies. S. Cyprian saith: It is meat not for the belly, but for the minde. And S. Augustine saith: Crede, & manducasti: Beleeue in Christ, and thou hast eaten. And Cyrillus that is here alleged, writeth thus against the obiections of Theodoretus: Wee doe not maintaine the eating of a man vnreuerently, drawing the mindes of the faithfull vnto grosse and prophane imaginations: Neither doe wee submit these things vnto mans fantasie, that be receiued onely by pure and tried faith. Therefore saith Athanasius: It is spirituall meat, and spiritually is digested in vs.

Cypr. de Cœna Domini.
De Con. dist. 2. Vt quid Augustin.
Cyrillus contra obiectiones Theodoreti.
Athanasius in illa verba, Si quis dixerit verbum.

Thus is Christ set forth vnto vs in that most holy Supper, not to bee receiued with the mouth: For that, as Cyrillus saith, Were a grosse and prophane imagination: but to be embraced with a pure and a single faith: and as Athanasius saith, to be eaten as spirituall food, and spiritually to be digested into all his members. Thus are we all one Bodie, and one spirit in Christ, for that Christ is in all vs, and all wee in him. And because the holy Ministration representeth the same vnto our eies, therefore S. Augustine calleth it the Mysterie of vnity. Thus doth the holy Communion knit and ioine vs together, be we in number neuer so many, and in distance neuer so far asunder. For therein we professe that we are all seruants in one house, and resort all to one table, and feed all of one spirituall food, which is the flesh and bloud of the Lambe of God. Which thing Paulinus seemeth very well, and in plaine maner to open vnto S. Augustine by these words: Non mirum, si & absentes adsumus nobis, & ignoti nosmet nouimus, cùm vnius Corporis membra simus, vnum habeamus caput, vna perfundamur gratia, vno pane viuamus, vna incedamus via, eadem habitemus in domo: It is no marueil though we both being absent, are neuertheles present together: and being vnacquainted, yet know one another: seeing we be the members of one Bodie, and haue one head, and are powred ouer by one grace, and liue by one bread, and walke in way, and dwell in one house. I thought it good to accompany Cyrillus with these other ancient Fathers, for the better vnderstanding of his meaning.

Augustinus de Con. dist. 2. Quia passus.

Paulinus epist. ad August. 33.

Hereof M. Harding seemeth to reason thus: By the Communion all faithfull are ioined both vnto God, and also betweene themselues: Ergo, the Priest may say Priuate Masse. Little thought that good Father, that his words should euer bee thus vsed, or so violently forced to such Conclusions. But let vs driue this argument a little further, that the inconuenience and the errour may the better appeare.

Onely the Priests in their Priuate Masses receiue the Communion: Ergo, for that action and time only the Priests are made one Bodie of Christ. And then further, That Body of Christ is the whole Church: Ergo, The Priests by their Priuate Masses are made the whole Church.

But that thou maist plainly see, Christian Reader, wherein M. Harding was thus deceiued: thou must vnderstand, that Cyrillus taketh his reason, as farre as it toucheth the Communion of the Sacrament, as wee vse to say in Schooles, Ab effectis, and not A causis. But M. Harding turneth it quite contrary: as if it were taken A causis, and not Ab effectis. And that Cyrillus so reasoneth, it is soone seene. For the receiuing of the Sacrament is not the efficient cause that wee are made one Body in Christ, but a token and testimony, or as S. Paul saith, the Seale and Confirmation of that effect. For Iudas receiued the Sacrament as well as Peter did: yet was not Iudas a member of Christs Body as Peter was. And many infants and others faithfull and godly bee very members of that body: and yet by occasion of death, or otherwise, neuer receiue the Sacrament of Christs Bodie.

Rom. 4.
Signaculum.

And notwithstanding M. Harding hath thus altered his Authors meaning, yet shall hee very hardly thereof in good order conclude his Masse. But hee may of the same very well and directly conclude the Communion. For if the Communion in that it is receiued of many, be a testimonie and a declaration that all faithfull are one Body in Christ, as Cyrillus meaneth, then ought the same Communion to bee receiued together of many: otherwise it is no such testimonie, or declaration as is supposed. The Antecedent or first proposition hereof, is proued by sundry old Fathers. S. Cyprian saith: With what loue and concord all faithfull Christians are ioined together, the Lords Sacrifice doth declare. And Anselmus a man of latter yeres: Frangimus & diuidimus panem in multas partes, ad designandam vnionem charitatis accipientium: Wee breake and diuide the Bread into many parts, to declare the vnity of the loue of them that receiue it. Here note Anselmus saith, this declaration of vnity standeth in receiuing of the Sacraments, and not onely in looking on. Neither doth Cyrillus say, They that heare Masse, but they that receiue the Mystical Benediction,

Cyprian. ad Magnum.
Anselm. in 1. Cor. 10. Accipientium.
Cyril. in Iohan. lib. 11. cap. 26.

diction, are one Bodie with Chriſt, and alſo betweene themſelues. Like as S.Paul alſo ſaith: The Bread that wee breake is the Communication of the Lords Body. And we being many, are all one Bread and one Body, as many as be partakers of one Bread. 1.Cor.10.
Whereunto agree theſe words of S.Hierome ſpoken in the behalfe of Chriſt: Benedic hæreditati tuæ, quam per Corporis & Sanguinis mei Myſterium in Eccleſia congregaſti: Hier. in Eccleſiaſt.cap.3. Bleſſe thine inheritance which thou haſt gathered together in the Church, by the Myſterie of my Bodie and Bloud. And Dionyſius: De Eccleſiaſt. Hierar.cap.3. The common and peaceable diſtribution of one and the ſame Bread and Cuppe, preſcribeth a godly concord vnto them, as vnto men fed together with one food. And thus, as M. Harding hath truly ſaid, Cyrillus and Dionyſius agree in one: but both together againſt him; both vtterly condemning his Priuate Maſſe. ὡς ὁμοτεχνοις.

M. Harding. The 14. Diuiſion.

The 24. vntruth. For there appeareth no ſuch thing in any ancient Father.

And therfore that one may communicate with another, though they be not together in one place (which M.Iewel denieth, with as peeuiſh an argument of the vſe of excommunication, as any of all thoſe is, that he ſcoffeth at ſome Catholike writers for) (24) and that it was thought lawfull and godly by the Fathers of the ancient Church, neere to the Apoſtles time, it may be well prooued by diuers good authorities.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

I vſed the Pulpit as a place of reuerence, and not of ſcoffing. Only I thought good to lay out the weakneſſe of ſundrie reaſons alleged on your ſide, that the people might ſee vpon how ſlender grounds your Religion ſtandeth. And thus I did, hauing iuſt occaſion thereunto of the vniuſt reports moued in corners by you and others, whereby you beare the people in hand, that all our doctrine was light and childiſh, and not worthy the hearing. Therefore that the people hauing taken ſome taſte of the arguments on both parts, might be the better able to iudge of both, I ſhewed forth this argument of Pope Innocentius: The Sunne is greater than the Moone: Ergo, The Pope is greater than the Emperour: And the Gloſſe in the margin vpon the ſame: The Sunne is ſeuen and fifty times greater than the Moone: Ergo, The Pope is ſeuen and fifty times greater than the Emperour. And likewiſe the argument of Pope Bonifacius the eight: In principio creauit Deus Cœlum & Terram, non in principijs: In the beginning, and not in ſundry beginnings, God made Heauen and Earth: Ergo, The Pope hath the Soueraigntie ouer all Kings and Princes. Ye that ſheweth the weakneſſe of theſe arguments and ſuch other, deſerueth not therefore by and by to be called a ſcoffer. De Maiorit. & obedient. cap. Solitæ. De Maiorit. & obedient. Vnam Sanctam.

Further, touching Excommunication, I ſaid thus: If the Prieſt that ſaith Maſſe in Louaine may Communicate with the Prieſt that ſaith Maſſe in Calicute, (which is M. Hardings greateſt ground for his Priuate Maſſe) then hath the Church ſo farre forth as toucheth the Prieſts, loſt the whole vſe of Excommunication. For the party Excommunicate being a Prieſt, might ſay, hee would ſay Maſſe, and ſo receiue the Communion, euen with the Biſhop of whom hee were Excommunicate, whether hee would or no. This ſaying M. Harding hath condemned for peeuiſh, by his authoritie only, and not by reaſon. Excommunication.

Indeed the Church of Rome, as it hath loſt the whole vſe of the holy Communion, ſo hath it alſo the whole vſe of Excommunication. For theſe two words bee of contrary natures, and the one of them hath his name of the loſing of the other. In the Primitiue Church, as all the godly were freely receiued to the holy Myſteries, ſo by the authority of the Spirit of God, the apparent wicked and vngodly were remoued, and that with great diſcretion, according to the enormity and qualitie of the faults: as it is ſpecially noted by Gregorius Neocæſarienſis, in a Canon touching the ſame. The greateſt offenders were vtterly excluded from the Congregation, as men not meet to bee in the companie of the godly. Others were ſuffered to enter into the Temple, and to heare the Sermon, but at the beginning of the prayers they were remoued, as men not meet to pray with their brethren. Others were ſuffered to bee preſent at the prayers, but at the beginning of the Communion were willed to depart. The reſt were the godly that remained ſtill, and heard the Sermon, and continued in prayer, and receiued the holy Myſteries all together. The order hereof is declared by Caſſiodorus out of Socrates: Stant rei, & velut in lamentationibus conſtituti: & cùm ſacra celebratio fuerit adimpleta, Communionem non percipiunt: They ſtand wofully, and as it were men in lamentation and in heauineſſe: and when the holy celebration is ended, they receiue not the Communion. It followeth: Conſtituto verò tempore, velut quoddam debitum exoluentes, cum populo Communionem participant: At the time appointed, as if they had diſcharged a certaine debt, they Communicate together with the people. Thus the offenders were put from the Communion, and all the reſt receiued together. And therefore it is decreed by the Canons of the Apoſtles, That all Faithfull that enter into the Church, and heare the Scriptures, and doe not continue out the prayers, nor receiue the Communion, ſhould be excommunicate, as men working the trouble an diſ- Gregorius Neocæſarienſis. Lugentes. Audientes. Precantes. Hiſtor. tripar. lib.9.cap.35. Canon. Apoſt. Canon.9.

Excomunication.

order of the Church. And the people said vnto Timotheus being a Bishop of the Arians, and neuertheleſſe a man of milde and gentle nature, and ſhunning his companie for the one, and yet louing him for the other: Although we communicate not with thee, yet we loue thee notwithſtanding.

Now if M. Hardings principle ſtand for good, that the Prieſt ſaying his Priuate Maſſe may receiue the Communion with all others in other places that doe the like, then can no Prieſt bee Excommunicate. For notwithſtanding neither any other Prieſt, nor any of the people will receiue with him, yet may he ſay a Priuate Maſſe, and by M. Hardings new deuice ſtraightway communicate with them all.

But for better declaration of this matter, it is commonly taught in Scholes, that Priuatio præſupponit habitum, that is, that the leſing of a thing firſt preſuppoſeth the hauing of the ſame: for no man can loſe that thing that he hath not. Therefore to ſay there is excommunication from the Sacraments, whereas is no Communion of the Sacraments: or that he is put from the Lords Table, that neither is at, nor comming to the Table: or that he is Excommunicate, that is only forbidden to heare Maſſe: or that the people both ſufficiently receiue the Sacraments by the mouth of the Prieſt: Verily, this kinde of learning in the Primitiue Church would haue ſeemed not onely peeuiſh, but alſo phantaſticall and meere franticke. Thus the Bishop of Rome (as it is ſaid) vſeth to Excommunicate Locuſts, Snakes, Caterpillers, and other like Wormes: and Coniurers vſe to Excommunicate their Diuels: as though theſe Creatures, ſauing the force of their authoritie, were otherwiſe meet enough to receiue the Communion.

M. Harding. The 15. Diuiſion.

Irenæus writing to Victor Biſhop of Rome concerning the keeping of Easter, as Euſebius Cæſariensis reciteth, to the intent Victor ſhould not refraine from their Communion, which kept Easter after the cuſtome of the Churches in Aſia founded by S. Iohn the Euangeliſt, ſheweth, that when Biſhops came from forren parts to Rome, the Biſhops of that See vſed to ſend to them, if they had beene of the Catholike Faith, the Sacrament, to receiue; whereby mutuall Communion betweene them was declared. Irenæus his words be theſe; Qui fuerunt ante te Presbyteri, etiam cum non ita obſeruarent, Presbyteris Eccleſiarum (cum ad me accederent) Euchariſtiam mittebant: The Prieſts (by which name in this place Biſhops are vnderſtanded) that were afore thy time, though they kept not Easter as they of Aſia did, yet when the Biſhops of the Churches there came to Rome, did ſend them the Sacrament. (25) Thus thoſe Biſhops did Communicate together before their meeting in one place.

Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 24.

Gratianus. hoc: sine quibuſdam noſtris.

The 25. vntruth. For Irenæus ſaith not, they did Communicate together.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

This ſtorie is common and knowne to many. The Weſt Church in keeping of Easter day followed S. Peter: the Eaſt Church followed S. Iohn, and kept it otherwiſe. Hereof grew contention, and brake out into cruell heats. Victor the Biſhop of Rome on the one ſide, and Polycarpus the Biſhop of Smyrna on the other ſide; both godly men, and both Martyrs. Each part would haue the other to yeld. Victor being a man of a fiery nature, was minded to Excommunicate the whole Church of Aſia, and all others whatſoeuer, that in keeping of Easter day would not follow the Church of Rome. Irenæus the Biſhop of Lions hearing thereof, wrote vnto him a ſharpe letter out of France, willing him in any wiſe to proceed no further: for that it might tend to ſuch a breach, as would not afterward be recouered. Among other words he ſaith thus, as it is here alleged: The Prieſts that were (in Rome) before thee, notwithſtanding they kept not the Eaſter as they of Aſia doe, yet they ſent the Sacrament vnto the Prieſts of thoſe Churches when they came to Rome. Hereof M. Harding concludeth: Ergo, Theſe Biſhops did Communicate before they met together; and noteth alſo by the way in the margin, that the Greeke in Euſebius differeth from the common Tranſlation of Ruffinus. And yet is the ſame Tranſlation alleged and vſed in the Booke of Councels among the Decrees of Victor. But if M. Harding had marked the matter well, he ſhould haue ſeene that his owne Tranſlation in Engliſh varieth alſo ſomewhat from the Greeke.

Concil. tomo 1. inter decreta Victoris.

In this ſhort ſtorie three things ſpecially may be noted. Firſt, that Irenæus a Biſhop of France durſt to write ſo roughly to the Biſhop of Rome, without any ſtile of Superiority, only calling him and all others before him Biſhops of Rome, by the name of Prieſts.

Secondly, that ſo notable learned men and Martyrs of Chriſt, agreeing otherwiſe in the Subſtance of Religion, yet notwithſtanding in certaine ſmall matters of no great weight, contended and ſtriued ſo extremely, and ſo long, and could in no wiſe be reconciled. Which thing well conſidered, M. Harding hath leſſe cauſe to triumph, if God haue ſuffered any ſuch ſparkle of diſſenſion in the ſpeciall members of his Church in theſe daies.

Thirdly, where was then that great ſuperiorite of the Biſhop of Rome, when notwithſtanding his threats and commandements, the Church of this Iland of Britaine welneare vntill ſeuen hundred yeeres after Chriſt, in the keeping of Easter day followed the maner of the Greeke Church, without any regard therein had to the Church of Rome?

Beda Eccl. hiſt. lib. 3. cap. 25.

the

But to the matter: These Bishops (saith M. Harding) Communicated together before they met. If hee meane in Faith and Religion, it is not denied: if in the vse of the Sacraments, it is not proued. In my iudgement, this word Eucharistia, in this place of Irenæus, signifieth not the Sacrament already consecrate, but rather other common Bread, wherewith one Bishop vsed then to present another, as with a speciall token of consent in Religion, and Christian concord: which Bread the receiuer afterward, if he thought it good, might vse at the holy Ministration. In that sense it seemeth Paulinus wrote vnto S. Augustine: Panem vnum sanctitati tuæ charitatis gratia misimus, in quo etiam Trinitatis soliditas continetur. Hunc Panem tu eulogiam esse facies dignatione sumendi: In token of mutuall loue, I haue sent vnto thee one loafe of Bread, in which also the soundnesse of the holy Trinitie is contained. This loafe you shall cause to be a louing present of my behalfe, vouchsafing to receiue it. And in the next Epistle following: Quinque Panes misimus tibi, pariter & filio nostro Licentio. Non enim potuimus in benedictione secernere, quem cupimus eadem nobis gratia penitus annectere: Fiue loaues haue I sent vnto thee, and vnto my sonne Licentius. For I could not seuer him in blessing, whom I desire thorowly to ioine with vs in grace. Whereby it may appeare, that this Bread was not the Sacrament: and namely by that Paulinus writeth in another place: Panem vnum, quem vnanimitatis indicio misimus charitati tuæ, rogamus vt accipiendo benedicas: I pray you to take and blesse this one loafe, which I haue sent vnto you in token of vnitie. If it had beene already Consecrate, hee would not haue desired S. Augustine to haue blessed it.

Paulin. ad August. Epist. 35.

Paulin. ad August. Epist. 36.

Paulin. ad August. Epist. 31.

But Irenæus vseth this word Eucharistia, which is taken for the Sacrament. I answer: It might so be called, for that it was prepared for the Sacrament. Howbeit, herein I will not striue. Tertullian nameth it Hospitalitatis Contesseratio, and seemeth to speake it of the Sacrament: which thing being also granted in this place of Irenæus, let vs now see M. Hardings reasons.

Tertull. de prescriptione aduersus Hæreticos.

The Bishop of Rome, saith he, sent the Sacrament vnto them that came out of Asia: Ergo, There was Priuate Masse.

This conclusion is farre set, and hangeth losely. For I might demand, Which then of the three said Masse? He that sent the Sacrament, or hee that receiued it, or else the Messenger that brought it? It were a strange matter to see a Masse, and yet no man to say Masse. Verily Irenæus hath not one word, neither of the Communion, nor of the Masse: vnlesse M. Harding will say, that Mittere is Latine to Communicate: or Mittere Eucharistiam is Latine to say Masse.

Mittere Eucharistiam.

If it were Common Bread, then was it but a present: If it were the Sacrament, then was it to be receiued, not straight vpon the way, or perhaps late in the night, or in the Inne at the common table among other meats: but afterward at his pleasure in his Congregation. Thus wee see this place first is doubtfull: and being neuer so plaine, yet it proueth nothing for Priuate Masse. But immediately after followeth a manifest mention, in what order the Bishops vsed then to Communicate together: which thing M. Harding thought better to dissemble. Cùm res ita haberent, Communicabant inter se mutuo, & in Ecclesia Anicetus concessit Eucharistiam Polycarpo: The matters betweene them thus standing, they Communicated together, and Anicetus in the Church granted the Sacrament or the Ministration of the Sacrament vnto Polycarpus.

τῶν δὲ τῶν ἐχόντων, ἐκοινώνουν ἑαυτοῖς: καὶ ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ παρεχώρησεν ὁ Ἀνίκητος τὴν Εὐχαριστίαν τῷ Πολυκάρπῳ.

Here marke, good Christian Reader, then they Communicated, saith Irenæus, when they met in the Church: and not before they met together, as M. Harding saith. Anicetus, as Irenæus saith, receiued the Sacrament with Polycarpus in the Church, and not as M. Harding seemeth to say, in his Inne or Hostrie.

Now the truth of the matter standing thus, what hath M. Harding here found for his Priuate Masse?

M. Harding. The 16. Diuision.

Iustinus the Martyr likewise describing the maner and order of Christian Religion of his time, touching the vse of the Sacrament, saith thus: Finitis ab eo qui præfectus est, gratijs & orationibus, & ab vniuerso populo facta acclamatione; Diaconi, quos ita vocamus, vnicuique tunc temporis præsenti, Panis, & aqua, & vini consecrati, dant participationem, & ad eos qui non adsunt, deferunt: When the Priest hath made an end of thankes and Prayers, and all the people there to haue said Amen, they which wee call Deacons, giue to euery one then present, Bread, and water, and wine Consecrated, to take part of it for their housell: and for those that bee not present, they beare it home to them. Thus in that time they that serued God together in the common place of praier, and some others that were absent, letted from comming to their companie by sickenesse, businesse, or otherwise, (26) Communicated together, though not in one place; and no man cried out of breaking the Institution of Christ.

The 26. vntruth: for Iustinus speaketh not one word of Communicating together.

And because M. Iewell is so vehement against Priuate Masse, for that the Priest receiueth the Sacrament alone, and triumpheth so much, as though he had won the field, making himselfe merry with these words, indeed without a cause: Where then was the Priuate Masse? Where then was the Single Communion munion all this while? He meaneth for the space of six hundred yeeres after Christ, as there he expresseth: I will bring in good euidence and witnesse, that long before S. Gregories time that he speaketh of, yea from the beginning of the Church, faithfull persons, both * Men and Women, receiued the Sacrament alone, and were neuer therefore reproued, as breakers of Christs Institution. And ere I enter into the rehearsall of the places which I am able to shew for this purpose, one question I demand of M. Iewell: If they which remained at home, of whom Iustinus Martyr writeth, receiued the Communion by themselues alone lawfully, why may not the Priest doe the same in the Church, seruing God in most deuout wise in the holy Sacrifice of the Masse, lacking compartners without any his default? Haue the Sacramentaries any Religion to condemne it in the Priest, and to allow it in Lay folke? What is in the Priest, that should make it vnlawfull to him, more than to the people? Or may a Lay man or woman receiue it kept a long time, and may not a Priest receiue it foorthwith, so soone as he hath consecrated and offered? And if case of necessitie be alleged for the Lay, the same may no lesse bee alleged for the Priests also, wanting compartners without their default. For otherwise the memorie and recording of our Lords death should not according to his commandement be celebrated and done. Well, now to these places.

* M. Hard. bringeth one thing for another: Sole Receiuing in stead of Priuate Masse: men and women in stead of the Priest.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

God Reader, behold not the names of these Fathers here alleged, but rather weigh their sayings. M. Harding hath brought them for his Masse: but they witnesse clearely and fully against his Masse: and of all others, none more pregnant or plaine than Iustinus Martyr: wherof thou hast good occasion to consider how faithfully these men demeane themselues in the allegation of the Doctours. Iustinus, touching this matter, writeth thus: Towards the end of the prayers each of vs with a kisse salueth other. Afterward, vnto him that is the chiefe among the brethren, is deliuered Bread, and a Cup mingled with Wine and Water; which he hauing receiued, rendreth praise and glorie vnto the Father of all things, in the name of the Sonne and the holy Ghost, and yeeldeth thankes a great space, for that he is thought worthy of these things. Which being orderly done, the people blesseth or confirmeth his prayer and thanksgiuing, saying, Amen, &c. This ended, they that among vs be called Deacons, deliuer to euery of them that be present, the Bread, Wine, and Water, which are Consecrate with thanksgiuing, and carry of the same to them that be absent. Here is set forth the whole and plaine order of the Holy Ministration vsed in the Church at that time. The Priest prayeth and giueth thankes in the Vulgar tongue: The whole Congregation heareth his words, and confirmeth the same, saying, Amen: The Holy Communion is ministred to the people in both kindes: And all the whole Church receiueth together. I maruell much wherein M. Harding can liken any part hereof to his Priuate Masse, vnlesse it bee for that, as hee said before, euery Priuate Masse is common; so he will now say, euery Communion is Priuate.

Iustin. Martyr in Apologia 2.

πᾶς ὁ λαὸς ἐπιφωνεῖ λέγων, Ἀμήν.

The order of the Holy Ministration in Iustinus time.

Let vs a little compare Iustines Masse and M. Hardings Masse both together. And to passe by all other circumstances of difference, in Iustines Masse all the people did receiue: In M. Hardings Masse none of the people doe receiue. In Iustines Masse none abstained: In M. Hardings Masse all abstained. In Iustines Masse a portion was sent to the absent: In M. Hardings Masse there is no portion deliuered, no not vnto the present. With what countenance then can any man allege the Authoritie of Iustine, to proue the antiquitie of Priuate Masse?

Iustines Communion and M. Hardings Masse compared together.

M. Iewell triumpheth (saith M. Harding) and maketh himselfe merry, as if hee had won the field. No, no: M. Iewell triumpheth not: but giueth all triumph, victorie, and glorie, vnto God, that will subdue all them that withstand his Truth, and make his enemies his footstole.

Psalm. 110.

I will bring good euidence and witnesse (saith M. Harding) that from the beginning of the Church, faithfull persons, both men and women, receiued the Sacrament alone. I haue no great cause to doubt these Witnesses: for, excepting only the Fable of Amphilochius, and Iohn the Almonar, which were not worth the reckoning, I alleged all the rest in mine owne sermon. I knew them, and had weighed them, and therefore I alleged them. That certaine godly persons, both men and women, in time of persecution, or of sickenesse, or of other necessitie, receiued the Sacrament in their houses, it is not denied, neither is it any parcell of this question.

But if M. Harding could haue proued, that any man or woman in the Primitiue Church euer said Priuate Masse, then had he answered somewhat to the purpose.

He reasoneth to reason thus: Some receiued the Sacrament alone: Ergo, There was Priuate Masse.

The follie of this Argument will the better appeare by the like:

Women receiued the Sacrament alone: Ergo, Women said Priuate Masse.

But (saith M. Harding) it was lawfull for Lay men to receiue alone: why then was it not lawfull for the Priest? If he could haue proued his Masse by Priests, he would neuer haue sought helpe at Lay mens hands. Howbeit, this doubt is soone answered:

For

For he knoweth by his owne learning, that it is lawfull for a Priest to say Masse: Yet is it not lawfull for a Lay man to doe the same. Of the other side, it is lawfull (as he saith) for the Lay man to receiue in one kinde: yet is not the same lawfull for the Priest. But if hee will needs take a president of Lay men for Priests to follow, let him rather reason thus: This maner of Priuate receiuing at home, was not lawfull for the Lay men: for it was abolished by godly Bishops in Generall Councell: Ergo, it was not lawfull for the Priest to say Priuate Masse. Concil. Cesaraugustan. ca. 3.

M. Harding. The 17. Diuision.

Proofes for priuate Masse. In 2. ad vxorē.

Tertullian exhorting his wife, that if he died before her, she marry not againe, specially to an Infidell, shewing that if hee did, it would bee hard for her to obserue her Religion, without great inconuenience, saith thus: Non scies maritus quid secretò ante omnem cibum gustes? Et si scieris, Panem, non illum credis esse qui dicitur: Will not thy husband know what thou eatest secretly before all other meat? And if he doe know, he will beleeue it to be Bread, and not (27) him who it is called. Hee hath the like saying also in his Booke De Corona Militis: which place plainly declareth vnto vs the beleefe of the Church then in three great points, by M. Iewell and the rest of our Gospellers vtterly denied. The one, that the Communion may bee kept: the second, that it may be receiued by one alone, without other companie: the third, that the thing reuerently and deuoutly before other meats receiued, is not Bread, as the Infidels then, and the Sacramentaries now beleeue: but he who it is said to be of Christian people, or who it is called, that is, (28) our Maker and Redeemer, or, which is the same, our Lords Body. And by this place of Tertullian, as also by diuers other ancient Doctours, wee may gather, that in the times of persecution the maner was, that the Priests deliuered to deuout and godly men and women, the Sacrament Consecrated in the Church, to carrie home with them, to receiue a part of it euery morning fasting, as their deuotion serued them, so secretly as they might, that the Infidels should not espie them, nor get any knowledge of the holy Mysteries. And this was done because they might not assemble themselues in solemne Congregation, for feare of the Infidels amongst whom they dwelt. Neither should the case of necessitie haue excused them of the breach of Christs Commandement, if the Sole Communion had beene expressly forbidden, as we are borne in hand by those that vphold the contrarie Doctrine. And Origen, that ancient Doctour, and likewise S. Augustine, doe write of the great reuerence, feare, and warinesse, that the men and women vsed in receiuing the Sacrament in a cleane linnen cloth, to carry it home with them for the same purpose. S. Cyprian writeth of a woman that did the like, though vnworthily, after this sort: Cùm quædam arcam suam, in qua Domini sanctum fuit, manibus indignis tentasset aperire, igne inde surgente, deterrita est, ne auderet attingere: When a certaine woman went about to open her Chest, wherein was the holy thing of our Lord, with vnworthy hands, she was fraid with fire that rose from thence, that she durst not touch it. This place of S. Cyprian reporteth the maner of keeping the Sacrament at home, to be receiued of a deuout Christian person alone at conuenient time. The example of Serapion, of whom Dionysius Alexandrinus writeth, recited by Eusebius, confirmeth our purpose of the single Communion. This Serapion, one of Alexandria, had committed Idolatrie, and lying at the point of death, that hee might be reconciled to the Church before hee departed, sent to the Priest for the Sacrament. The Priest being himselfe sicke, and not able to come, gaue to the lad that came of that errant, Parum Eucharistiæ, quod infusum iussit sani præberi, A little of the Sacrament, which he commanded to be powred into the old mans mouth. And when this solemnitie was done (saith the Story) as though he had broken certaine Chaines and Giues, he gaue vp his ghost cheerefully.

In Serāt lapsis.

Eccles. lib. 6. cap. 44.

The 27. vntruth. For the translation is wilfully corrupted. It, violently turned into Him.

The 28. vntruth. For the Sacrament was neuer called our Maker or Redeemer by any of the old Fathers.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding shooteth faire, but farre from the marke. To proue Priuate Masse in the Primitiue Church, for lacke of Priests, he allegeth Tertullians wife, certaine women out of Cyprian, and Serapions boy: not the fittest people that might haue beene found to say Masse. And yet, that the follie might the more appeare, hee hath besides giuen a speciall note in the margin of his Booke, by these words, Proofes for Priuate Masse: whereof I conceiue some hope, that he minded no more to slip away vnder the colour of single Communion, as he hath done hitherto; but simply and plainly, as he hath here noted vnto the world, to stand vpon the bare termes of Priuate Masse. For else his note was not worth the noting.

As touching Tertullian, we must remember, that the faithfull in that time, for feare of the Tyrants vnder whom they liued, were often driuen to pray asunder. Wherefore when they might priuily assemble together, besides that they presently receiued there, they reserued certaine portions of the Mysteries, to be receiued afterward in their houses at home, to put them daily the better in remembrance, that they were the members of one Church.

This maner of the Church considered, Tertullian being a Priest, as S. Hierome writeth of him, and hauing a wife, wrote vnto her an exhortation, that if it chanced to please God to take him first from the world, that she would remaine still vnmaried, or at the least not match with any Heathen, shewing her the dangers that thereof might ensue; that she should be suffered neither to keepe the solemne feasts, nor to watch, nor to pray with the Congregation. Among other things he saith thus: And will not thy husband know what thou eatest before other meats? And if hee know it, hee will beleeue it to bee Bread, but not that Bread that it is called. Hieronymus de Eccles. Script. Tertullian a maried Priest. Tertull. Lib. 2. ad vxorem.

Here

Gospellers.

Here M. Harding, as if the Gospell of Christ were become odious vnto him, in scorne and disdaine calleth vs Gospellers, by the name of that Gospell that he so wilfully hath forsaken, returning to his old vomit. And out of these words of Tertullian, three things (he saith) he will teach vs: of which three things notwithstanding his Priuate Masse is none. Of the first we haue to speake otherwhere. Of the second there is no question. In the third M. Harding hath manifestly corrupted both the words and meaning of Tertullian. He saith, The thing that wee receiue, is no Bread: But so Tertullian saith not. His words be these: Thy husband will thinke it (onely) Bread, and not that Bread that it is called: That is to say, the Sacrament of Christs Bodie, or the Mysterie of any holy thing, as Christian men beleeue of it: like as Chrysostome also saith of the water of Baptisme:

Chrys. in 1. ad Cor. Homil. 7. Ethnicus cùm audit lauacrum Baptismi, persuadet sibi simpliciter esse aquam: A Heathen, when he heareth of the bath of Baptisme, beleeueth it is nothing else but plaine water.

But that the thing which our bodily mouth receiueth, is very Bread, both the Scriptures, and also the old Catholike Fathers haue put it out of doubt. S. Paul fiue times in one Chapter nameth it Bread.

1. Cor. 11.

Cyril. in Iohan. lib. 4. cap. 14. Cyrillus saith: Christ vnto his faithfull Disciples gaue peeces of Bread. And S. Augustine saith: The thing that ye see is Bread, as your eies beare you witnesse. I passe by Gelasius, Theodoretus, Chrysostome, Origen, Iustinus Martyr, Irenæus, Clemens, and others, who all together with one consent haue confessed, that in the Sacrament there remaineth the nature and substance of Bread. Wherefore it is much presumed of M. Harding, to say, there remaineth no Bread, specially hauing nothing to beare him in his Authour here alleged.

In Sermone ad Infantes: citatur à Beda.

1. Cor. 10.

Tertullian falsified by M. H. Ludou. Viues De Ciuit. Dei, lib. 2. cap. 13. Iohn 19. Petrus Crini. lib. 13. cap. 6. Codrus Vrceus Sermon. 8. Iudicum 12.

Yet for aduantage he hath also falsified Tertullian, Englishing these words, Illum Panem, Him, as if it were the person of a man: as Thomas Valois, writing vpon S. Augustine, De Ciuitate Dei, hath turned this word Apex, which was the tuft or creast of the Flamines hat, into a certaine Chronicler that wrote Stories: Or as the Diuines of late yeres, vpon the Gospell of S. Iohn, of this Greeke word Lonche, which signifieth a Speare, haue made Longinus, the Blinde Knight. If Tertullian had not meant Illum Panem, That Bread, he would not haue said Illum at all: but rather, Illud, referring the same vnto Corpus. A small difference betweene Him and It. So was there small difference betweene Sibboleth and Shibboleth. Yet was it sufficient to descrie the Traitour.

Cyrillus contra obiectiones Theodoreti.

And whereas M. Harding thus hardly and violently, contrarie to the phrase and manner of speech, and as it may be doubted, contrarie to his owne knowledge and conscience, hath translated Illum Panem, Him, so as, to my remembrance, neuer did man before, meaning it was the very person of a man that the woman had in her hand, and did eat before other meats; Cyrillus saith: Non asseueramus anthropophagiam: We teach not our people to eat the person of man.

Tertull. de Corona Militis. Tertull. contra Marcion. li. 1. Aug. ſt. contra Maximinum, lib. 3. cap. 22. Chrysost. in 1. Cor. Hom. 7.

But who can better expound Tertullians minde, than Tertullian himselfe? In his Booke, De Corona Militis, speaking of the same matter, he calleth it Sacramentum Eucharistiæ, The Sacrament of Thanksgiuing. And against Marcion he writeth thus: Christus non reprobauit Panem, quo Corpus suum repræsentat: Christ refused not the Bread, wherewith he representeth his Body. And S. Augustine likewise saith: In Sacramentis videndum est, non quid sint, sed quid significent: Touching Sacraments, wee must consider, not what they be indeed, but what they signifie. So also saith S. Chrysostome: Ego non aspectu iudico ea quæ videntur, sed mentis oculis Corpus Christi video: I iudge not those things which are seene, after the outward appearance: but with the eies of my minde I see the Body of Christ.

This is the thing that the husband, being an Heathen, could not see. For, beleeuing not in Christ, he could not vnderstand that the Bread should be the Sacrament or Mysterie of Christs Bodie.

Sine gemitu, sine suspicione panis, an veneni.

And that this was the very meaning of Tertullian, it may well appeare by the words that immediately follow: This husband (saith he) will doubt whether it bee poison or no, and therefore will dissemble, and beare for a while, that at length he may accuse his wife for poysoning, before a Iudge, and doe her to death, and haue her dowrie.

1. q. 1. Interrogo vos. Idem de temp. The word of Christ is no lesse than the Body of Christ.

Touching S. Augustine and Origen, the portion so taken was to bee vsed with reuerence, as being the Sacrament of Christs Body: and so ought we also reuerently to haue and to order the water of Baptisme, the Booke of the Gospell, and all other things that be of God: as the Iewes were also commanded to keepe their Manna reuerently in a golden pot. Tell me, (saith S. Augustine) Whether of these two things trow ye to be the greater, the Bodie of Christ (meaning thereby the Sacrament of Christs Bodie) or the word of Christ? If ye will answer truly, ye must needs say, that the word of Christ is no lesse than the Body of Christ. Therefore looke with what diligence yee take heed when the Body of Christ is ministred vnto you, that no part thereof fall vnto the ground, euen so with like diligence must ye take heed, that the word of God bring being once receiued, be not lost from a pure heart. Likewise S. Chrysostome touching the same: Si hæc vasa sanctificata ad priuatos vsus transferre sic periculosum est, in quibus non est verum Corpus Christi, sed Mysterium Corporis Christi continetur: If the matter be so dangerous, to put these sanctified vessels vnto priuate vses, wherein is contained not the very Body of Christ, but the Mysterie or Sacrament of Christs Body, &c. All these Authorities do declare, that the Sacraments of Christ ought discretly and reuerently to be vsed. Chrys. in opere imper. hom. 11. The very Body of Christ is not conteined in the holy vessels.

The Storie that S. Cyprian reporteth, as it sheweth the maner of keping of the Sacrament, so it semeth also to shew, that God was offended with the same: The like whereof hath often bene seene in the Water of Baptisme, and in other Holy things, as appeareth by Nicephorus, and others in sundry places. Therefore this Authoritie serueth M. Harding to small purpose, vnlesse it be to prowe, that as God was then displeased with Sole receiuing in priuate houses, so he is now displeased with Sole receiuing in the Halle. Cypr. de lapsis, Sermon. 5. Niceph. li. 14. cap. 17.

Concerning the Storie of Serapion, here are interlaced many faire words for increase of credit, that it was written by Dionysius Alexandrinus, and recited by Eusebius, as though the sicke man had only desired his Houseell before hee departed, and nothing else. But the speciall matter whereupon the Storie is grounded, is passed by. Eusebius recordeth in plaine words, that the Booke wherein Dionysius wrote this Storie, was intituled, De Pœnitentia. Whereby he giueth to vnderstand, that the Sacrament then was not generally sent home to all mens houses, but onely vnto them that were excommunicate, and might not receiue in the Congregation among the faithfull, and now lay in despaire of life.

The case stood thus: Serapion in the time of persecution, for feare of death, had offered Sacrifice vnto an Idoll. The faithfull being therewith sore offended, put him out of their Congregation, and gaue him ouer to Satan. He being thus left as an Heathen, and an Idolater, might neither resort to the common Church, nor Pray, nor receiue the Holy Communion, or any other Spirituall comfort among his brethren. So hard the Church was then to be intreated for them that had fallen backe into Idolatrie. After he had made all meanes, and had with teares besought his brethren, and was no way considered, through heauinesse of minde he beganne to drope, and fell sicke, and for three daies lay speechlesse, and without sense. The fourth day being somewhat reuiued, he said to them that were about him, O how long will ye keepe me here! Send for one of the Priests, (that I may be restored before I depart.) Euseb. Lib. 6. Cap. 45.

His minde was tormented with consideration of the state he stood in, for that he had forsaken God. The Priest being sicke himselfe, in token he was restored, and might depart as a member of Christ, sent vnto him the Sacrament by his boy. The rest that M. Harding addeth (And this solemnitie being done, saith the storie, as though hee had broken certaine Chaines and Giues, hee gaue vp the spirit cheerefully) All this is set to, either by Ruffinus, or by some other, I know not by whom, and is no part of the Storie. For neither doth Dionysius, nor Eusebius, in the Originall make any mention either of solemnitie, or of Chaines or Giues, or of cheerefulnesse of Serapions departing, but only thus: And swallowing downe a little, straightwaies he yeelded vp the ghost. As for his ioifull departure, I doubt nothing. But any great solemnitie there could not bee betweene a man in that case, and a boy alone, specially hauing no such outward pompe as hath bene vsed of late, to make it solemne. Ruffin. Lib. 6. Cap. 34. μικρὸν γευσάμενος, εὐθέως ἀπέδωκε τὸ πνεῦμα.

Now must I desire thee, gentle Reader, to haue an eie a little backward to M. Hardings note, giuen thee for a remembrance in the margin, by these words, Proofes for Priuate Masse: which note must néeds bee in the end and conclusion of all his Arguments. Therefore of these Stories here by him reported, wee must conclude thus: Tertullians wife, and the woman of whom Cyprian speaketh, receiued the Sacrament alone: Ergo, Tertullians wife, and the other woman said Priuate Masse. Or thus: Serapions boy ministred the Sacrament to his master: Ergo, Serapions boy said Priuate Masse. For if the conclusion be otherwise, we conclude one thing for another. And indeed M. Harding may as certainly say, This action was a Masse, as hee can say, Serapions boy was a Priest.

M. Harding. The 18. Diuision.

Of keeping the Sacrament secretly at home, and how it might be receiued of deuout persons alone without other companie, I weene none of the ancient Doctours wrote so plainly, as S. Basil in an Epistle that he wrote to a noble woman, called Cæsaria, which is extant in Greeke, where hee saith further, that this maner began not in his time first, but long before. His words be these: Illud autem in persecutionis temporibus necessitate cogi quempiam, non præsente Sacerdote aut Ministro, Communionem propria manu sumere, nequaquam esse graue, superuacaneum est demonstrare, propterea quòd longa consuetudine, & ipso rerum vsu confirmatum est. Omnes enim in Eremo solitariam vitam agentes, vbi non est Sacerdos, Communionem domi seruantes, à seipsis Communicant.

In

Receiuing with the hand.

In Alexandria verò, & in Aegypto, vnusquisque eorum qui sunt de populo, plurimum habet Communionem in domo sua. Semel enim Sacrificium Sacerdotis consecrante & distribuente, meritò participare & suscipere, credere oportet. Etenim & in Ecclesia Sacerdos dat partem, & accipit eam is qui suscipit, cum omni libertate, & ipsam admouet ori propria manu. Item igitur est virtute, siue vnam partem accipiat quisquam à Sacerdote, siue plures partes simul. As concerning this, that it is no greeuous offence for one to be driuen by neceſſitie, in times of perſecution, to receiue the Communion with his owne hand, no Prieſt nor Deacon being preſent, it is a thing ſuperfluous to declare, for that by long cuſtome and practiſe it hath beene confirmed, and taken place. For all they which liue a ſolitarie life in wilderneſſe, where no Prieſt is to be had, keeping the Communion at home, doe Communicate with (29) themſelues alone. And in Alexandria, and in Egypt, euery one of the people, for the moſt part, hath the Communion at home in his houſe. For when as the Prieſt hath once Conſecrate and diſtributed the Hoſt, it is reaſon we beleeue, that wee ought to be partakers of it: and he that taketh it, receiueth it without all ſcruple of conſcience, and putteth it to his mouth with his owne hand. And ſo it is of one vertue, whether any body take one part of the Prieſt, or moe parts together. Thus farre S. Baſil. In this ſaying of Baſil it is to be noted, Firſt, that neceſſitie heere hath reſpect to the lacke of Prieſt and Deacon, ſo as (30) in that caſe the Sacrament might bee receiued of a faithfull perſon with his owne hand. And that for the ratifying of ſo doing, he allegeth continuance of cuſtome, which for vs, in this point of the Sole receiuing, may in more ample wiſe be alleged. 1 2

Againe, that holy Eremites, liuing in wilderneſſe, apart from companie, and alſo the deuout people of Alexandria and Egypt, receiued the Communion alone in their Cels and houſes. Furthermore, that the Hoſt once Conſecrated of the Prieſt, is algates to bee receiued, whether of many together, or one alone, by him it ſeemeth not to force. 3 4

Finally, that whether a man take at the Prieſts hand the bleſſed Sacrament in one peece, or moe peeces, and receiue them at conuenient times, when deuotion beſt ſeruеth; the vertue, effect, and power thereof is one. By which authoritie, reſeruation is auouched. Doubtleſſe where he ſpeaketh ſo precisely and particularly of ſundry caſes touching the order of receiuing, if he had beene of M. Iewels opinion, that the Sacrament may not be receiued of one, without a certaine number of Communicants together, hee would not ſo haue paſſed ouer that matter in ſilence, much leſſe written ſo plainly of the contrarie. Now that the Communion thus kept in wilderneſſe and in Egypt, places of extreme heat, where wine in ſmall quantitie, as is for that purpoſe conuenient, cannot be long kept from ſowring, and changing his nature, was in the forme of Bread only, and not alſo of Wine; I deferre to note it heere, becauſe it pertaineth to the thretteenth of the next Article. 5

The 29. vntruth. For M. Harding hath corrupted the tranſlation. The words (with themſelues alone) are not in S. Baſil.

The 30. vntruth. For S. Baſil ſaith, The Communicant receiued with his owne hand, eateth in the preſence of the Prieſt.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

This place of S. Baſil we might haue ſafely paſſed ouer, without preiudice of our cauſe, as touching other things impertinent, and not once making mention of the Maſſe. Yet ſeeing it hath pleaſed M. Harding thus to colour and to emboſſe out this ancient Father, as if he alone of all others ſpake moſt plainly of his ſide, hauing notwithſtanding both in this very ſelfe ſame place, and alſo in other words immediately before, which M. Harding thought beſt of purpoſe to diſſemble, manifeſt record againſt Priuate Maſſe, I may not well vtterly leaue him in ſilence.

Firſt the caſe being ſuppoſed lawfull for the people, both men and women, to take ſome portion of the Sacrament home with them, and to receiue it alone ſecretly, and at their pleaſures: to make further doubt whether the partie ſo hauing it, might touch it, and receiue it with his owne hands, was a very nice queſtion, and meet for a Gentlewoman, as Cæſaria was, to demand. And ſo it ſeemed alſo to S. Baſil, as may appeare by his anſwer. For whoſoeuer hath conſidered the old Fathers, ſhall finde this matter fully debated by the continuall practiſe of the Church.

Cypr. Serm. 5. De Lapſis. S. Cyprian ſheweth that in his time the people receiued the holy Myſteries of the Deacons with their hands: and that one that had committed Idolatrie, and afterward came to receiue the Communion amongſt the faithfull, opened his hand, and found the Sacrament turned into aſhes.

Tertull. Lib. 2. ad vxorem. The like maner of receiuing is recorded alſo by Tertullian. Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria, hath theſe words in an Epiſtle vnto Siſtus the Biſhop of Rome, touching the ſame, ſpeaking of one that had receiued the Communion in the Church: After hee had heard the thankſgiuing, and had ſounded Amen with the reſt, and had beene at the Table, and had reached foorth his hand to receiue the holy Food, &c.

Euſebius lib. 7. Cap. 8. Reached foorth his hand. Clemens of Alexandria thus vttereth the maner of the Church there: When certaine haue diuided the Sacrament, as the order is, they ſuffer euery of the people to take part of it.

Clem. Alexan. Strom. Lib. 1. Nouatus the Heretike, when hee miniſtred the Communion to the people, vſed to ſweare them by that they had in their hands, that is to ſay, by the Sacrament, that they would no more returne to Cornelius.

Euſeb. Lib. 6. Cap. 42. S. Auguſtine writing againſt certaine letters of Petilian, ſaith thus: I ſpeake of him, whoſe Croſſe of peace ye receiued at the Miniſtration, and in whoſe hands ye laid the Sacrament. I leaue the Story betweene S. Ambroſe and the Emperour Theodoſius, and other ſundry like authorities to the ſame purpoſe.

Aug. contra literas Petiliani, lib. 2. cap. 23. Theodor. lib. 5. cap. 17. Yet becauſe many haue beene ſuperſtitiouſly led, and ſimply ſeduced herein, by the Doctrine of them that ſay, O taſte not this, O touch not this, which are nothing elſe (as S. Paul ſaith) but commandements and Doctrines of men, hauing a ſhew of wiſedome in ſuperſtition, and abaſing abasing of the minde; I thinke it not amisse to note one speciall place out of the Councell of Constantinople concerning the same. The words of the Councell be these: Wee doe in no wise admit them, that instead of their hand, make to themselues instruments of gold, or of any other matter, for the receiuing of the holy Communion, as men more regarding a dead mettall, than the Image of God. And if any Priest receiue such persons with such instruments vnto the Communion, let him be Excommunicate, and him likewise that bringeth them.

Ad Coloſſ. 2.

Receiuing with the hand.

Conc. Constantin. 6. cap. 101.

But if this Gentlewomans doubt were not, whether a Lay man might safely touch the Sacrament, but only whether it were lawfull for any such one to minister the same vnto his owne mouth, S. Basil saith it is no question. Custome already hath made it good. For saith he, both the Eremites in the Wildernesse, and euery of the people in Ægypt and Alexandria, for the more part, haue the Sacrament at home, and each of them both minister it vnto himselfe. Basilius ad Cesariam patritiam.

Yea, euen in the Church, after that the Priest hath distributed a portion of the Sacrament, he that hath receiued it, putteth it to his mouth with his owne hand, without any remorse or doubt of conscience: and whether he receiue one portion of the Priest, or more, the effect and strength thereof is all one. This is the very meaning of S. Basil: albeit, for plainnesse sake, reseruing the sense, I haue somewhat altered the words. But much I maruell how M. Harding can gather hereof his Priuate Masse.

Touching his fiue speciall notes, if we grant them thoroughly euery one, yet is he nothing neare his purpose. For his Masse is none of them.

The Eremites Sole receiuing, as it nothing hindereth vs that denie not the fact, so it nothing furthereth him, vnlesse he will haue Lay men and women to doe so still.

The reason that S. Basil maketh of custome and continuance, being well considered, is very weake, both for many other good and iust causes, and also for that the same custome, as it was neuer vniuersally receiued, so vpon better aduice, by order of the Church, it was cleane abolished. For wise men in Gods causes haue euermore mistrusted the authoritie of Custome.

The Heretikes in old time named Aquarij, that in the holy ministration vsed Water only and no Wine, notwithstanding they manifestly brake Christs Institution, as our Aduersaries do now, yet they vpheld their doings therein by long custome. But S. Cyprian being then aliue wrote thus against them: Victi ratione opponunt consuetudinem, quasi consuetudo sit maior veritate &c. Being ouercome with reason, they defend themselues by custome, as though Custome were better than the Truth. We may not prescribe of Custome, but we must ouercome with reason. Custome without Truth is the mother of errour. Ad Iubaian. De Hæreticis Baptizan. Cyprian. ad Quirinum. Cyprian. ad Pompeium contra Epistolam Stephani.

But be it that both the Reason were good, and the Custome that long sithence hath bin abolished, had remained still: Yet is not M. Harding able out of this place precisely and vndoubtedly to proue his Priuate Masse. For if a man should say, it may possibly be, that these Eremites did not Minister seuerall each man to himselfe alone, but one of them vnto the rest of the Eremites dwelling in the wildernesse, as it appeareth diuerslie, they had times to meet and to pray together: Or, that the houholders in Ægypt and Alexandria, ministred not onely to themselues, but also to their whole seuerall families, as it is written of Hippolytus Martyr, that being a Lay man, he receiued the Communion of Iustinus being a Priest, and bare it home, and Ministred the same to his Wife, his Children, and his seruants. If a man would thus say, perhaps M. Harding would better bethinke himselfe of his Conclusions. This sense may seeme to stand very well with S. Basils words: notwithstanding M. Harding in his Translation into English, hath openly falsified the same. For whereas it is written in the Greeke, and so likewise in the Latine, They receiue of themselues: Which may well be vnderstanded, that one of them receiued of another for want of a Priest, he hath otherwise wrested it to come to his tune, and hath turned it thus: They doe Communicate with themselues alone; Wherein albeit I will not greatly striue, yet neither this word Alone, nor these words with themselues, can be found either in the Greeke, or in the Latine. ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν μεταλαμβάνουσι.

This long allegation of S. Basils words, with all the furniture thereof, may shortly be gathered into this reason: These Eremites being no Priests receiued alone: Ergo, these Eremites being no Priests said Priuate Masse.

Further M. Harding saith, This sole receiuing was allowed by custome: Ergo, Priuate Masse likewise is lawfull by custome.

This reason goeth round against himselfe. For it may be well replied: This Sole receiuing was an abuse, and therefore was abolished by the Church notwithstanding custome: Ergo, Priuate Masse likewise is an abuse: and ought to be abolished notwithstanding custome.

Now let vs see, whether these very selfe words of S. Basil here alleged by M. Harding make any thing for the holy Communion. And what authoritie can be against vs, if M. Hardings owne authorities, yea as himselfe vanteth, The most manifest and plainest of all his authorities, be found with vs? For triall hereof we must resort, not into the wildernesse, whereas was neither Priest nor Deacon, as it is confessed, but vnto the Churches that were in S. Basils time. So shall we sone see, whether the Ministration then vsed were a Communion, or a Priuate Masse.

Basil. ad Cesariam patriciam.

S. Basil in the same place saith thus: Wee do Communicate foure times in the weeke: vpon the Sunday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. If we may found any thing vpon words, he saith, Wee Communicate: he saith not, Wee say Masse. And thus, saith S. Basil, wee doe foure times in the weeke. Then had they not the daily Sacrifice, whereupon Priuate Masse is grounded. He much misreckeneth himselfe, that saith, that thing is daily done, which is done but foure times in seuen daies.

No Daily Sacrifice.

πλειόνων &. ἐικότως.

Moreouer S. Basil saith: After the Priest hath once Consecrate and diuided the Sacrifice, we must thinke that wee ought to receiue and to be partakers of it accordingly. For in the Church the Priest giueth part, and the Communicant receiueth it with all freedome of conscience, and with his owne hand putteth it to his mouth. Therefore is the vertue all one, whether it bee one portion only that hee receiueth of the Priest, or moe together.*

Here marke well, good Reader, how many waies S. Basil ouerthroweth M. Hardings Masse.

1 S. Basil saith, Wee do Communicate: M. Harding in his Masse doth not Communicate.

2 S. Basil Diuideth and Distributeth: M. Harding diuideth indeed, but distributeth nothing.

3 In S. Basils Masse, The people receiueth: In M. Hardings Masse the people receiueth not.

4 In S. Basils Masse, Each man receiueth with his owne hand: In M. Hardings Masse no man receiueth, no not with the Priests hand.

5 In S. Basils Masse, the people, besides that they receiued presently there, Had portions also deliuered them to receiue at home: In M. Hardings Masse there is no portion deliuered vnto the people, no not so much as presently to be receiued in the Church.

6 In S. Basils Masse, Each man receiueth and eateth for himselfe: In M. Hardings Masse, the whole people eateth by the mouth of the Priest. O what meaneth M. Harding to bring such witnesses for his Masse, as doe so openly witnesse against his Masse! Who may trust him in the darke, that thus dealeth in the light?

M. Harding. The 19. Diuision.

It appeareth euidently by witnesse of S. Hierome also, that this custome of receiuing the Communion priuatly at home, continued among Christian men at Rome not only in time of persecution, but also afterward when the Church was at rest and peace, so as the case of necessity cannot heere serue them for maintaining of their strange negatiue in this point. These be his words: Scio Romæ hanc esse consuetudinem, vt fideles semper Christi Corpus accipiant, quod nec reprehendo, nec probo. Vnusquisque enim in suo sensu abundat. Sed ipsorum conscientiam commenio, qui eodem die post coitum Communicant, & iuxta Persium, noctem flumine purgant: Quare ad Martyres non audent? quare non ingrediuntur Ecclesias? An alius in publico, alius in domo Christus est? Quod in Ecclesia non licet, nec domi licet. Nihil Deo clausum est, & tenebræ quoque lucent apud Deum. Probet se vnusquisque, & sic ad Corpus Christi accedat: I know this custome is at Rome that Christian folke receiue the Body of Christ daily, which I doe neither reproue nor allow. For euery man hath enough in his owne sense. But I appose their conscience which doe Communicate that same day as they haue done wedlocke worke, and as Persius saith, Doe rince night filth with running water. Why dare they not goe to Martyrs shrines? Why goe not they into the Churches? What, is there one Christ abroad, and another Christ within the house? Whatsoeuer is not lawfull in the Church, neither at home is it lawfull. To God nothing is hidden: yea darkenesse also shineth before God. Let euery one examine himselfe, and so come to the Body of Christ. S. Hierome reproueth this in the Romans, that whereas S. Paul ordained that for cause of Praier married folke should at times forbeare their carnall embracings, they notwithstanding that, though they had doing with their wiues, yet receiued their rites neuertheless daily. And yet what day they had so done, they durst not goe to Churches where Martyrs tombes were, there to receiue our Lords Body. For it is to bee vnderstanded for better knowledge heereof, that such as knew themselues to haue done any vncleannesse were afraid in Old time to come to Martyrs Sepulchres. For there commonly by miracle such things were bewraied, and many times by open confession of the parties, whether they would or no. Erasmus in his scholies vpon this place of S. Hierome saith thus: Of this place we gather, that in the Old time euery one was wont to receiue the Body of Christ at home in his house, that would. Hee saith further: Idem videtur innuere Paulus, cum ait: An domos non habetis ad manducandum? S. Paul (saith hee) seemeth to meane the same thing where hee saith: Haue yee not houses to eat in? Thus Erasmus gathereth proofe of Priuate, or as M. Iewell ieereth, Single Communion, out of the Scriptures, and he was as well learned in them as M. Iewell is. Yet herein I leaue Erasmus to his owne defense. By this wee may vnderstand, that in the ancient times of the Church the receiuing of the Communion of one by himselfe alone, *was well allowed. And though it was done but by one faithfull person at once in one place, yet was it called a Communion both of S. Basil, and also of S. Hierome, cleane contrarie to M. Iewels sense. It is to bee iudged that they knew the Institution

In Apoc. cl. versu Iona.

Erasmus speaketh of priuate receiuing: but not one word of Priuate Masse.

* S. Hierome reproueth this custome. Thus he saith: That is not lawfull in the Church, is not lawfull at home.

Heerof speaketh S. Hierome ad Vigil. S. Aug. epistola 137. and Sulpitius Seuerus in vita S. Martini dial. 3. cap. 7.

tion of Christ, so well as hee, or any other of these new Masters, and that their conscience was such, as if Christs ordinance therein had beene broken, they would not haue winked at it, ne with their vngodly silence confirmed such an vngodly custome. Verily for excuse of this sole receiuing, necessity cannot iustly be alleged.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

How often will M. Harding allege the old Doctours against himselfe? Heere he bringeth in S. Hierome, and the first words that he could finde for his purpose, were these: I know the Custome at Rome is this, that the Christian people there receiue the Body of Christ euery day. It semeth this Custome grew first from Peter, and was planted in Rome. A man may heere well demand, when the custome was that the people should Communicate daily together, where then was the Custome of Priuate Masse? Hier. in Apologia aduersus Iouinianum. Where was then the Priuate Masse?

Besides this, M. Harding to proue the Custome of the peoples receiuing at home, hath alledged S. Hierome, that earnestly reproueth that Custome, & would not haue them receiue at home. S. Hieromes words be these: Why dare they not go to the Temples built in the remembrance of Martyrs? Why go they not to the Church? What, is there one Christ abroad, and another Christ at home? If the people did well, why doth S. Hierome thus reproue them? If they did ill, why doth M. Harding thus allow them?

Heere M. Harding interlaceth other matter of the office of wedlocke, the word of Persius the Pagan Poet, and the superstitious Ceremony of the Heathens, as I take it, little pertaining vnto his Masse. Wheras the whole people receiued the holy mysteries euery day, the man and wife remembring sometimes what they had done betweene themselues, and thinking themselues for the same not to be in so cleane state of life as the rest were, for that cause forbare the Church for the time: and hauing the Sacrament sent vnto them, receiued it priuately at home. Vnto this Superstition S. Hierome himselfe gaue great occasion, many times both writing and speaking vnsemely of the state of Mariage, in defense whereof S. Augustine wrote a Booke against Iouinian, entituled, De bono coniugij: And S. Hierome afterward was driuen to make his answer by way of purgation vnto Pammachius for the same. In this errour were diuers of the old Learned Fathers. Tertullian saith: I allow not Marriage: for fornication and that, stand both in one thing. Origen saith: No man can offer the continuall Sacrifice, that is to say, the Sacrifice of Praier, vnlesse he be a Virgin. S. Hierome saith: It is good not to touch a woman: therefore it is ill to touch a woman. Vpon occasion of which errour, the people sometime forbare the Churches where Martyrs were buried. Wherein M. Hardings Translation swarueth much from the Originall. For in stead of Churches he hath translated, Martyrs Shrines, as though the bones of holy men had then beene shrined, and offerings made vnto them, as of late yeres hath beene vsed. Tertull. in exhortatione ad Castitatem. Origen. in Numeros hom. 23. Hieron. aduersus Iouin. lib. 1. M. Harding corrupteth S. Hierome.

True it is, Almighty God for the testimony of his Doctrine and Truth, hath often times wrought great miracles, euen by the dead Carcases of his Saints, in witnesse that they had beene his messengers and the instruments of his will. But as these were good inducements at the first to lead the people to the truth, so afterward they became snares, to lead the same people into errour: and that euen in the time of the old Fathers aboue eleuen hundred yeres agoe. S. Augustine saith: I know many worshippers of Graues and Images, that drinke and quaffe disorderly ouer the dead, and offer meat vnto their Carcases, and bury themselues ouer the buried, and make account, that euen their very drunkennesse and gluttony is a Religion that pleaseth God. Gelasius saith: It is reported that with procession they furnish vp their Churches, built in the name of dead men, and the same, for ought that I can learne, while they were aliue not altogether good faithfull men. S. Martin on a time came to a Chapell built in the name of a holy Martyr. But afterward he learned by reuelation, that the same Martyr had beene sometime a common Theefe, and for a robbery had beene put to death, and by errour of the people was honoured for a Saint. Likewise S. Augustine saith: Some there be that carry about Martyrs bones to sale: and yet it may well be doubted, whether euer they were Martyrs or no. Aug. de morib. Eccles. & Manich cap. 34. Idem. Confession. lib. 6. cap. 7. Gelasius Can. 2 De Con. dist. 1. Placuit. Sulpitius in vita Martini. De opere Monachorũ. ca. 28.

Thus much briefly and by the way of the Reliques and miracles of Martyrs bones: for that M. Harding vpon so small occasion seemeth to touch them in such sort, as if he would haue them shrined and set vp againe.

As for the Matrimony of the godly, as S. Paul saith: It is cleane and honourable in all estates. And therefore S. Chrysostome saith: Vse thy Marriage with sobriety, and thou shalt bee the chiefe in the Kingdome of Heauen. And the same Chrysostome expounding these words of S. Paul, Marriage is honourable, writeth thus: Heere he toucheth the Iewes that reckon the Marriage bed to bee vncleane, and that a man rising from the same cannot bee in cleane life. But O you most vnkinde and most insensible Iewes! The thing is not filthy that God hath granted of nature vnto man, &c. Ad Hebræ. 3. Chrys. ad Hebræos, homil. 7. Chrys. ad Hebræos, homil. 8.

Touching Eraſmus, M. Harding hath already refuſed his authority, and turned him ouer to his owne defence. Where he ſaith, Euery man was woont in old times to receiue the Sacrament ſeuerally at home: it would much better haue ſounded of M. Hardings ſide, if Eraſmus had ſaid: Euery man was wont then to ſay Maſſe ſeuerally at home. And albeit in that ſhort note vpon S. Hierome hee ſeeme to vnderſtand theſe words of S. Paul, (haue yee not houſes to eat and drinke in) of the priuate receiuing of the Sacrament: yet otherwhere writing of purpoſe and good deliberation vpon the ſame, he ſaith, S. Paul meant it onely of common meats, and not of the Sacrament. In his Paraphraſe hee expoundeth it thus: Paraphraſis Eraſmi in 1. Corinth. 11. Hic vnanimitatis Chriſtianæ Myſterium agitur &c. Heere is practiſed the Myſterie of Chriſtian vnity, and not prouiſion made for the belly. For that ought ye to doe in your priuate houſes, and not in the publike Congregation. If ye would fill your bellies, haue ye not houſes, where ye may doe it by your ſelues alone? And againe: If any man be ſo greedy of meat that he cannot tarry, let him eat at home. Thus, ſaith M. Harding, Eraſmus gathereth the Priuate Maſſe out of the Scriptures. M. Harding is ouer quicke in his Concluſions. He maketh himſelfe ſure of the Conſequent, before he ſee the Antecedent. For Eraſmus hath not one word there, neither of Priuate Maſſe, nor of Single Communion. How then can he get that of Eraſmus, that Eraſmus himſelfe hath not? Neither is this any neceſſary forme of reaſon: Men receiued the Sacrament in their houſes: Ergo, they receiued the Sacrament alone. For they might receiue in their ſeuerall houſes with their wiues and families all together, as it is already proued by the example of Hippolytus Martyr. And S. Hierome ſaith: Hieron. in Apologia aduerſus Ioninianum. The Sacrament was ſent home to the man and wife. Otherwiſe it might be ſaid, God commanded that euery man ſhould eat the Eaſter Lambe in his houſe: Ergo, God commanded that euery man ſhould eat that Lambe alone. Howbeit I make ſmall account of this matter, as nothing touching the Priuate Maſſe: but onely ſhew the fableneſſe of theſe Concluſions.

The Communion. Yet ſaith M. Harding, both S. Hierome and S. Baſil call it the Communion, notwithſtanding it were priuately receiued: which is cleane contrary to M. Iewels ſenſe. But neither S. Hierome, nor S. Baſil euer called it the Maſſe, and that little furthereth M. Hardings ſenſe. They call it a Communion, not for that he that receiued it, communicated with others in other places, as M. Harding geſſeth: but for that it was a portion of the holy Communion miniſtred and diuided openly in the Congregation to be receiued of the faithfull.

The reaſon that M. Harding heereof gathereth muſt needs be this: The husband and his wife receiued the Sacrament at home: Ergo, the Prieſt ſaid Priuate Maſſe. He muſt needs bee very ſimple, that will be led by ſuch ſingle proofes. S. Hieromes plaine words neceſſarily import the contrary. For if this were the cuſtome in Rome for the ſpace of foure hundred yeares, that the people ſhould Communicate euery day, then muſt it needs follow, that during that time, there was no cuſtome there of Priuate Maſſe. No priuate Maſſe in Rome.

M. Harding. The 20. Diuiſion.

A heape of Simple geſſes without ſenſe or ſauour.

Damaſus Biſhop of Rome in S. Hieromes time writeth In libro Pontificiali, that Milciades Pope and Martyr, ordained that the Sacrament in ſundrie portions conſecrated by a Biſhop, ſhould be ſent abroad among the Churches for cauſe of Heretickes, that the Catholike people of the Churches (which word heere ſignifieth as the Greeke word παροικία doth, ſo as it is not neceſſary to vnderſtand that the Sacrament was directed only to the materiall * Churches, but to the people of the Pariſhes) might receiue the Catholike Communion, & not communicate with heretikes. Which doubtleſſe muſt be vnderſtanded of this priuate and ſingle Communion in each Catholike mans houſe, and that where Heretikes bare the ſway, and Prieſts might not be ſuffered to conſecrate after the Catholike vſage. Elſe if the Prieſts might without let or diſturbance haue ſo done, then what need had it beene for Milciades to haue made ſuch a prouiſion for ſending abroad hoſts ſanctified for that purpoſe, by the Conſecration of a Biſhop? The place of Damaſus hath thus: Milciades fecit, vt oblationes conſecratæ per Eccleſias ex conſecratu Epiſcopi (propter Hæreticos) dirigerentur: Milciades ordained that conſecrated hoſts ſhould be ſent abroad amongſt the Churches, prepared by the Conſecration of a Biſhop. The two words, propter Hereticos, for Heretikes, added by Ado, the Writer of Martyrs liues, openeth the meaning and purport of that Decree.

* A Church by M. Hardings iudgement ſignifieth a priuate houſe.

M. Hard. otherwiſe reporteth theſe words, than he findeth them.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

This geſſe is one of the weakeſt of all the reſt, and therefore M. Harding hath ſtaid it vp one euery ſide with other geſſes, that one geſſe might helpe another. The firſt geſſe is, what Damaſus ſhould meane by theſe words, Propter Hæreticos.

2 The next geſſe is, that this order was taken by Milciades, againſt certaine Heretikes, that in the holy Miniſtration kept not the Catholike Church.

3 The third geſſe is, that this word Eccleſia, muſt needs ſignifie the people of the Pariſhes, and not the materiall Church.

4 The fourth geſſe is, that the Sacrament was then Conſecrate in little round Cakes, as of late hath beene vſed.

The

The firſt geſſe is, that the Sacrament was ſent to euery ſeuerall houſe: which muſt haue beene an infinite labour to the Deacon that carried it and wonderous painfull.

The firſt geſſe is, that firſt euery huſband receiued the Sacrament in his houſe alone: and ſo the wife: and ſo the ſeruants: and ſo likewiſe the children, euery one ſeuerally by himſelfe alone. Which thing I reckon M. Harding himſelfe thinketh not very likely. So many geſſes are heere in a throng heaped together. Which if I denie altogether, M. Harding is hardly able to proue: If I grant him altogether without exception, yet all are not able to proue his Priuate Maſſe.

First in this place of Damaſus neither is there mention of any Maſſe, nor any perfect ſenſe or reaſon in the words. For thus it is written: Miltiades fecit vt oblationes conſecratæ per Eccleſias ex conſecratu Epiſcopi dirigerentur, quod declaratur fermentum: Miltiades cauſed that the Oblations Conſecrate by the Churches by the Conſecration of the Biſhop ſhould be directed, which is declared leauen. Neither is there any kind of thing either going before or following after, whereby we may geſſe the meaning. It is much to ſee ſo learned a man as M. Harding is, ſo ſtanked of authorities, that he is thus driuen to proue his Maſſe by ſuch places as be vtterly void of ſenſe and reaſon. But a man muſt vſe ſuch weapons as may be gotten.

In libro Concil. impreſſo Colon. Anno 1551.

M. Harding allegeth authorities without ſenſe or reaſon.

The two words, Propter Hæreticos, that are patched in by Ado, a man of late yeres, as they do nothing helpe the ſenſe, ſo haue they no helpe of the ſtorie of that time. For a man may well demand of Ado this new Doctor, what were theſe ſtrange vnknowen heretikes without name, that you at the laſt for a ſhift haue eſpied out? where began they? where dwelt they? what taught they? how long continued they? who maintained them? who confuted them? what Councels condemned them? For it ſeemeth ſomewhat ſtrange, that there ſhould be companies and routs of Heretikes in the World, that no man euer knew but Doctour Ado.

And whereas M. Harding putteth in of his owne, beſides his booke (for Damaſus hath no ſuch thing, nor any other thing like) that theſe new found Heretikes in the miniſtration kept not the Catholike vſage, he ſhould haue ſhewed for his credits ſake, what other vſage they kept that was not Catholike: for his word is not yet Canonized. The World will beléeue neither him nor Ado, without ſome proofe.

M. Harding addeth of himſelfe beſide his Authour.

Further to increaſe abſurdities, he ſaith, by theſe words, per Eccleſias, is meant, not the materiall Church, but the people of the Church: that is to ſay, in plainer termes, Eccleſia, is not a Church, but a priuate houſe. I grant the Greeke word παροικία, out of which our Engliſh word Pariſh, ſeemeth to haue beene taken, ſignifieth a congregation, or meeting of neighbours, or a company dwelling within ſome ſpace together, whether it be in compaſſe more or leſſe. So ſaith Euſebius: Dionyſius writeth vnto Baſilides the Biſhop of the diuiſions of Pentapolis. [a] Athanaſius ſaith, that Demetrius toke vpon him the Biſhoprick of Alexandria, and τῶν παροικιῶν, of the diuiſions in Ægypt. In theſe places and certaine others that might be alleaged out of Baſil, Nazianzene, and other Greeke Fathers, this word παροικία ſeemeth to ſignifie a Biſhoprick, or a Dioceſſe, and not a ſeuerall Pariſh. And therefore Irenæus thus writeth vnto Victor Biſhop of Rome: The Prieſts of Rome, meaning thereby the Biſhops there, ſent the Sacrament τοῖς ἀπὸ τῶν παροικιῶν, to them that came out of other Dioceſſes or Diuiſions. And Euſebius thus writeth of Hippolytus: ἐπίσκοπος ἄλλης τινὸς παροικίας: He being Biſhop of another diuiſion. Thus much touching this word παροικία, being moued therto by the ſtrange interpretation of M. Harding. Certainly, I thinke, he himſelfe will ſay, that ſithence the Church was once in peace, neither this word Eccleſia, nor this word Parochia, euer ſignified a priuate houſe, in any kinde of Writer, or in any time.

Eccleſia, a priuate houſe.

παροικία.

[a] Euſebius lib. 7. cap. 25. περὶ κατὰ πεντάπολιν παροικιῶν ἐπισκόπου.

[a] Athanaſius in epiſt. de ſententia Dionyſij ad verſus Arian.

[b] Euſebius hiſt. lib. 5. cap. 23.

But, ſaith M. Harding, Adoes Heretikes (for Damaſus ſpeaketh of none) bare all the ſway, and would not ſuffer the Catholike people to communicate in the Church. Therefore we muſt néeds vnderſtand heere priuate houſes. Alas, when did Heretikes euer beare ſuch ſway in the Church of Rome? Or if they did at any time, as it is vntrue, vnleſſe he meane the Soueraigne Heretikes, the Pope and his Cardinals, yet, May we thinke, that the Catholikes were ſo weake in the common Church being altogether, and ſo ſtrong in their owne houſes being alone? Or, Were theſe Heretikes able to withſtand a whole Congregation, and not able to withſtand one ſingle man by himſelfe?

Soueraigne Heretikes.

Marke well, good Reader, how handſomly M. Hardings arguments hang together. He muſt néeds thinke thee to be very vnſenſible, that hopeth thou wilt yéeld to ſuch geſſes.

To leaue a great number of other like abſurdities, M. Hardings arguments are framed thus: The Sacrament was receiued in Priuate houſes (albeit there appeareth no ſuch thing by Damaſus) Ergo, one man receiued alone. Surely then had that man a very empty house, hee might well sing, Tanquam passer solitarius in tecto. It is more likely that being a godly man, he would desire his wife and family to receiue with him, as I haue said before.

Againe, the Sacrament was sent among the Parishes: Ergo, there was Priuate Masse. The force of this reason may some be seene. But who said this Masse, whether it were the messenger or the receiuer, I leaue it to M. Harding to consider. He might better haue concluded thus; The Bishop sent the mysteries abroad for the people to Communicate; Ergo, he meant a Communion, and no Priuate Masse.

Further, he saith, this was done in time of necessitie, because of Heretikes, and yet by the same he defendeth the Masse vsed now without any such necessitie; and that in the Church of Rome, where, he saith, can be no Heretikes.

Concil. Laodicin. cap. 14. To conclude, this maner of sending abroad the Sacrament was afterward abolished by the Councell holden at Laodicea.

Thus is M. Harding driuen to goe by gesse; to imagine strange Heretikes; for shew of some antiquitie to allege vaine Decrees without sense; to auouch such orders as he knoweth were long sithence condemned; & to comment the same with his owne Glosses.

M. Harding. The 21. Diuision.

The 31. vntruth. For Rome is now become the Mother of Fornication. Apocal. 17.

Heere haue I brought much for priuate and single Communion, and that it hath not onely been suffered in time of persecution, but also allowed in quiet and peaceable times, euen in the Church of Rome it selfe (31) where true Religion hath euer beene most exactly obserued aboue all other places of the world, and (32) from whence all the Churches of the West haue taken their light; as the Bishops of all Gallia, that now is called France, do acknowledge in an Epistle sent to Leo the Pope, with these words; Vnde Religionis nostræ, propitio Christo, fons & origo manauit: From the Apostolike See by the Mercy of Christ, the fountaine and spring of our Religion hath come. Epist. Leonis.

The 32. vntruth. For the faith of the West church came not first from Rome.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding pretendeth priuate Masse, & concludeth Single Communion.

M. Harding vseth a strange kinde of Logicke: He pretendeth Priuate Masse, and concludeth single Communion. And why might he not aswell plainly and without colour, conclude his priuate Masse? Doubtlesse the wise Reader may some gather thus; If he could finde it, he would not conceale it.

This talke of the Church of Rome in this place was needlesse, as nothing seruing to priuate Masse. Yet is it generally confessed by all men, that Rome is the eldest Church that we know founded in this West part of the world; and that the Churches of France, and other Countries, at the beginning had both the confirmation of Doctrine, and also other great conference and comfort from thence: like as also the Church of Rome had from Hierusalem, and Antioch, and other great Churches in the East. But that the first that euer preached the Gospell in France, were sent from Rome, I reckon it not so easie to be proued. For some say, that Nathaniel, whom Christ commendeth to be the true Israelite, preached at Trire and Bituriges: Lazarus, whom Christ raised, at Marsiles: Saturninus at Tolouse, long before Peter came to Rome. S. Paul, as it is thought, after his deliuerie vnder Nero, went into Spaine, sent Titus into Dalmatia, and Crescens into Galatia, or, as Epiphanius readeth it, into Gallia: Ioseph of Arimathæa came into England. And yet it appeareth not that any of these were sent by Commission from Rome. But why doth M. Harding thus out of season rush into the commendation of the Church of Rome, that was so long agoe? It had beene more to purpose to haue viewed the state of the same Church, as it standeth now. But as one once said, Ye shall not now finde Samnium in Samnio, because the Citie of Samnium was sackt and raced vp, and vtterly ouerthrowen: euen so I heard M. Harding sometime say, He had sought for the Church of Rome in Rome it selfe, and yet could not finde the Church of Rome. The Bishops, Cardinals, and Priests do neither teach, nor exhort, nor comfort, nor any other part of their duties: The people, as it is already confessed, is careless and void of deuotion. S. Barnard saith: O Domine, Sacerdotes tui facti sunt tonsores: Prælati, Pilati: Doctores, Seductores: O Lord, thy Priests are become shearers: thy Prelates, Pilates: thy Doctours, Deceiuers. If a Church cannot erre, then may wee say of it, as Euripides sometimes said of the City of Athens: ὦ πόλις, πόλις, σὸς εὐτυχὴς εἰ μᾶλλον, ἢ κλεινῶς φρονεῖς: O City, City, thy lucke is far better than thy wit.

Nathaniel. Lazarus. Saturninus. 2. ad Timoth. 4 Ephiphanius contra Alogos.

M. Harding. The 22. Diuision.

More could I yet bring for confirmation of the same, as the example of S. Hilaria the Virgin in the time of Numerianus; of S. Lucia in Diocletians time done to Martyrdome; of S. Maria Ægyptiaca, and S. Ambrose, of which euery one, as ancient testimonies of Ecclesiasticall histories, and of Paulinus do declare, at the houre of their departure hence to God, receiued the holy Sacrament of the Altar for their voiage prouision alone. But I iudge this is enough; and if any man will not be perswaded with this, I doubt whether with such a one a more number of authorities shall any thing preuaile.

The

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Now M. Harding higheth himselfe vnto the end of his authorities: and for speed is content to passe by the stories of Hilaria, Lucia, Maria Ægyptiaca, and others written, I suppose, in Legenda Aurea, of whom, as it appeareth, he is certaine that they said Masse a little before their departure hence. The like is also auouched for certaine, of S. Ambrose lying in his death-bed. But this thing seemeth marueilous in my iudgement, that notwithstanding S. Ambrose were Bishop in Millaine two and twenty yeares and more, being also so holy a man, as few the like in those daies, yet M. Harding cannot learne, that euer he said Priuate Masse, but only when he lay breathlesse in his death-bed.

Paulinus in vita Ambros.

M. Harding. The 23. Diuision.

Now that I haue thus prooued the single Communion, I vse their owne terme, I desire M. Iewell to reason with me soberly a word or two. How say you sir? Doe you reproue the Masse, or doe you reproue the Priuate Masse? I thinke, whatsoeuer your opinion is heerein your answer shall be, you allow not the Priuate Masse. For as touching that the oblation of the Body and Blood of Christ done in the Masse, is the Sacrifice of the Church, and proper to the New Testament, (33) commanded by Christ to be frequented according to his institution: if you deny this, make it so light as you list, all those authorities which you deny vs to haue for proofe of your great number of articles, will be found against you: I meane Doctors, Generall Councels the most ancient, the examples of the Primitiue Church, the Scriptures: I adde further reason, consent vniuersall and vncontrolled, and tradition. If you deny this, you must denie all our Religion from the Apostles time to this day, and now in the end of the world, when iniquitie aboundeth, and charitie waxeth cold, when the Sonne of Man comming shall scarcely finde faith in the earth, begin a new. And therefore you, M. Iewell, knowing this well enough, whatsoeuer you doe in deed, in word, as it appeareth by the little booke you haue set foorth in print, you pretend to disallow, yea most vehemently to improoue the Priuate Masse.

The 33. vntruth. For Christ neuer commanded or named any such Sacrifice.

Great words without ground.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Hitherto M. Harding hath brought Doctours without Reason: now he bringeth Reason without Doctours. And how say you sir? (saith he) Doe you reproue the Masse, or doe you reproue Priuate Masse? I trust he hath not so soone forgotten whereof he hath discoursed all this while. Neither doth the matter rest vpon that point, what I list to allow, or disallow: but what he can proue, or not proue, by the Scriptures, and by the ancient Councels and Fathers.

But marke well, good Christian Reader, and thou shalt see how handsomely M. Harding conueigeth and shifteth his hands to deceiue thy sight. First he hath hitherto forborne both the name, and also the proofe of Priuate Masse, and onely hath vsed the words of Sole Receiuing, and Single Communion: and so hath taken paines to proue that thing that was neuer denied: and that thing that we denie, and wherein the whole question standeth, he hath left vtterly vntouched. Now he demandeth, whether I reproue the Masse, or the Priuate Masse? What meaneth this, that Priuate Masse, and Sole Receiuing, be so suddenly growen in one? Surely M. Harding well knoweth, that the nature of these words is not one. Neither whosoeuer receiueth alone, doth therefore of necessitie say Priuate Masse. This so sudden altering of termes may breed suspicion.

That he further interlaceth of the Sacrifice of the New Testament, is another conueiance, to blinde thy sight, as vtterly nothing making to this purpose.

For neither doth the Sacrifice import Priuate Masse: nor doth Sole Receiuing implie the Sacrifice. Yet for short answer, we haue that only Sacrifice of the New Testament, that is, the Body of Iesus Christ vpon the Crosse, that Lambe of God, that hath taken away the sinnes of the World: the vertue of which Sacrifice endureth for euer. To this euerlasting Sacrifice, the Sacrifice that is imagined in the Masse, is meere iniurious.

And whereas M. Harding saith, If you deny this, you must denie all our Religion, from the Apostles time vntill this day; These be but empty words, without weight, and proue nothing.

In my little booke (saith he) I disallow the Priuate Masse. If he finde fault with my Booke, for that it is little, he might consider, it is but a Sermon, and therefore no reason it should be great. Yet is it a greate deale longer than either Hyppolitus Martyr, or the Fable of his Amphilochius, of whom, notwithstanding their shortnesse, he maketh no small account. And where he saith, I disallow Priuate Masse, I disallow that thing that infinite numbers of godly and learned men haue disallowed, and that M. Harding himselfe, not long sithence, openly and earnestly disallowed, both in Schooles and Pulpits, vntill he was suddenly perswaded to the contrarie, only by the alteration of the State. Of these two words, Priuate uate Masse, I can no better say, than S. Gregorie sometime said of that Antichrist should Li.6.Epist.30. be called Deus, God: Si quantitatem vocis perpendimus, sunt duæ syllabæ: sin pondus iniquitatis, vniuersa pernicies: If we weigh the quantity of the word, they are but two syllables: but if we weigh the weight of wickednesse, it is an vniuersall destruction.

M. Harding. The 24. Diuision.

Vpon this resolution, that the Masse, as it is taken in generall, is to be allowed; I enter further in reason with you, and make you this argument: If Priuate Masse, in respect onely of that it is Priuate, after your meaning, be reproueable, it is for the single Communion, that is to say, for that the Priest receiueth the Sacrament alone: but the single Communion is lawfull yea good and godly: Ergo, the Priuate Masse in this respect, that it is Priuate, is not reproueable, but to be allowed, holden for good and holy, and to be frequented. If you deny the first proposition, or Maior, then must you shew for what else you doe reproue Priuate Masse, in respect only that it is Priuate, than for the single Communion. If you shew any thing else, then doe you digresse from our purpose, and declare that you reproue the Masse. The Minor you cannot denie, seeing you see how sufficiently I haue prooued it. And so the Priuate Masse, in that respect onely it is Priuate, is to be allowed for good, as the Masse is.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Out of all these former Authorities of Tertullians Wife, Monkes in the Wildernesse, Lay men, Women, and Boies, M. Harding gathereth this conclusion, which, as he would haue folke thinke, standeth so soundly on euery side, that it cannot possibly be auoided.

The Priuate Masse is single Communion:
Single Communion is lawfull:
Ergo, Priuate Masse is lawfull.

This Syllogisme vnto the vnskilfull may seeme some what terrible, as a visard vnto a childe, that cannot iudge what is within it. But M. Harding that made it, knoweth it is vaine, and worth nothing. And that it may the better appeare, I will open the errour by another like.

The ministration of Priuate Masse is a single Communion:
Single Communion is lawfull for a woman:
Ergo, The ministration of Priuate Masse is lawfull for a woman.

It is all one kinde of argument, of like forme, and like termes. And as this is deceitfull, so is the other likewise deceitfull. The errour is in the Second Proposition, which is called the Minor: and that shall ye soone see, if you turne the same Minor, and make it an vniuersall, and say thus in M. Hardings argument:

All maner Single Communions be lawfull:

Or in the other argument,

All maner Single Communions are lawfull for a woman. So shall ye soone finde out the follie.

Further, Medius Terminus, that holdeth and knitteth the argument, must agree with the Subiectum and Predicatum, in circumstance of time, of place, of person, of subiect, and part of subiect: with which circumstances a thing may be lawfull; and without the same may be vnlawfull. For example, It is thought lawfull for a woman to Baptize at home: but it is not thought lawfull for a woman to Baptize in the open Church: yet is the thing all one: but the circumstance of place being changed, changeth the whole. Againe, It is lawfull for a Priest to minister the Sacrament in the forenoone, and in the Church: but it is not lawfull for a Priest to minister the Sacrament after he hath dined, or in his bed: Yet was it lawfull for S. Ambrose and others so to receiue the Sacrament. We see therefore, there is great matter in alteration of the circumstance.

These things perhaps may seeme ouer curious, and therefore I passe them by, giuing thee neuertheless, gentle Reader, to vnderstand, that without consideration hereof, thou maiest be deceiued. Set the head in his naturall place betweene the shoulders, and there is a man: Set the same head in the breast, or otherwhere out of his place, and there is a monster.

Now touching M. Hardings Syllogisme, thou maiest see that the Minor, or Second Proposition is not true, as they terme it, Simpliciter, and without exception. For the Single Communion was neuer so taken for lawfull, but only in consideration of circumstances, and cases of necessitie: which cases being either remoued, or better examined, the same kinde of Single Communion is no longer thought lawfull. Therefore thou maist thus say to M. Harding: How say you sir? Doe you allow the examples that yee haue brought to proone your Masse by, or doe you not allow them? If you allow them, why then suffer ye not Women to carry home the Sacrament, and to keepe it in Chests and Napkins, kins, as they did of old? If you allow them not, becauſe they were abuſes, why then ſeeke you to proue your Maſſe by the ſame, and ſo to eſtabliſh one abuſe by another? Now let vs looke a little backe to the note that M. Harding ſet out in the Margin for our remembrance, by theſe words, Proofes for Priuate Maſſe. That it might ſeeme lawfull for a Prieſt to ſay Priuate Maſſe, he hath brought in examples of Lay men, Women, Sicke folke, and Boies. Alas, doth M. Harding thinke it was the maner in old times, that Lay people ſhould ſay Maſſe? Or was there no Prieſt all this while in the World, for the ſpace of 600. yeares, that Women and Children muſt come forth to proue theſe matters? Or was there no difference then betweene Sole Receiuing, and Priuate Maſſe? Or ſhall we thinke, that Women and Boies did then Conſecrate the Holy Myſteries, or offer vp Chriſts Body, or make Sacrifice for quicke and dead, or apply Chriſts death vnto others? Where is M. Hardings Logicke become? Where is the ſharpneſſe of his wit?

But marke, good Chriſtian Reader, how farre he ſwarueth from that he hath taken in hand. I demand of the open Church: He anſwereth me of Priuate Houſes. I demand of Prieſts: He anſwereth me of Women, Boies, and Lay men. I demand of the Maſſe: He anſwereth me of that thing that himſelfe granteth is no Maſſe. I demand of the right Vſe of the Holy Supper, that ought to ſtand: He anſwereth me of Abuſes, that be abolished. I demand of the vſage that then was ordinarie: He anſwereth of neceſſitie, and caſes Extraordinarie. Iudge thou therefore how well and ſubſtantially he hath hitherto performed his promiſe.

How aptly M. Harding anſwereth to the queſtion.

M. Harding. The 25. Diuiſion.

Marry I denie not, but that it were more commendable, and more godly on the Churches part, if many well diſpoſed and examined, would be partakers of the bleſſed Sacrament with the Prieſt. But though the Clergie be worthily blamed for negligence herein, through which the people may be thought to haue growen to this ſlackneſſe and indeuotion, yet that notwithſtanding, this part of the Catholike Religion remaineth ſound and faultleſſe. For as touching the ſubſtance of the Maſſe it ſelfe, by the ſingle Communion of the Prieſt, in caſe of the peoples coldneſſe and negligence, it is nothing impaired. Elſe if the publike Sacrifice of the Church might not be offered without a number of Communicants receiuing with the Prieſt in one place, then would the ancient Fathers in all their writings ſome where haue complained of the ceaſing of that, which euery where they call, Quotidianum & iuge Sacrificium, The daily and continuall Sacrifice: of which their opinion is, that it ought (34) daily to be Sacrificed, that the death of our Lord, and the worke of our redemption might alwaies be celebrated, and had in memorie, and wee thereby ſhew our ſelues, according to our bounden dutie, mindefull and thankfull. But verily the Fathers no where complaine of intermitting the daily Sacrifice, but very much of the ſlackneſſe of the people, for that they came not more often vnto this holy and wholſome baniket: and yet they neuer compelled them thereto: but exhorting them to frequent it worthily, left them to their owne conſcience.

The vndeuotion of the people groweth of the negligence of the Clergie.

The 34. vntruth. For the Fathers ſay not ſo, but plainly the contrarie.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

The Painter that purtraied out in colours Medea killing her owne childe, by the ſkill he had in painting, made to appeare in her face two contrary affections: For in the one ſide he expreſſed extreme Furie, that bade her kill: and in the other ſide motherly Loue and Pity, that bade her not kill. Such two contrarie affections wee may here ſee in M. Harding, both painted and ſet out in one face. For notwithſtanding, for his credits ſake, he aduance his Maſſe, and deface the holy Communion with all that he is able; yet here againe, for conſcience ſake, of the other ſide he confeſſeth, that the Communion is the better: and ſo rippeth vp all that he hath ſewed before, and willeth others to aſſent vnto him, before he can aſſent vnto himſelfe. Gods name be bleſſed, that is thus able to force out his truth, euen by the mouthes of them that openly withſtand his truth. But neither ſhould he in ſuch diſdaine, and ſo often, call vs new Maſſers and Goſpellers, for defending that himſelfe knoweth and confeſſeth to be the better: nor after the holy Communion was once reſtored, ſhould he haue drawen the people againe to the Priuate Maſſe: that is, by his owne confeſſion, from the better to the worſe.

Concil. Nicen. 2. Action. 4.

M. Hard. confeſſeth that the Communion is better than his Maſſe.

But, ſaith M. Harding, In caſe of negligence of the people, if the Prieſt receiue alone, the ſubſtance of the Maſſe is not impaired. This difference in termes of Subſtance and Accidents, in Chriſts Inſtitution, is newly found out, and hath no warrant, neither of the Scriptures, nor of the old Fathers. Howbeit, Chriſts example in doing, and commandement to doe the ſame, may not be taken for a ſhew or Accident, but for the effect and ſubſtance of his Supper. Doe this, ſaith Chriſt, the ſame that you haue ſeene mee doe: Take, Bleſſe, Breake, Diuide, in my remembrance. Which words S. Chryſoſtome expounded thus: Hoc facite in memoriam beneficij mei, ſalutis veſtræ: Doe this in remembrance of my benefit, and of your Saluation. This is no Accident, or light fantaſie, that may be left at our pleaſure, but the very ſubſtantiall point of that Sacrament, which we are ſpecially commanded, to continue

Matth. 26.

Ad populum Antiochen. Hom. 61.

1. Corint. 11. continue vntill he come: and for want whereof S. Paul saith, That Supper is not the Lords Supper.

Daily Sacrifice.

Certainly Alexander of Hales, and Humbertus, two of M. Hardings owne Scholastical Doctours, are full against him in this point. Alexander saith: Consecration is for the Communion: therefore of both the Communion is the greater. Humbertus saith: Hoc quotiescunque feceritis, id est, benedixeritis, fregeritis, distribueritis, in mei memoriam facietis. Quia quodlibet horum trium, sine reliquis fiat, perfectam memoriam Christi non repræsentat: As often as ye shall this doe, that is to say, as often as yee shall Blesse, Breake, and Distribute, yee shall doe it in my remembrance. For whatsoeuer one thing of these three things bee done without the rest, it representeth not the perfect remembrance of Christ. And thinketh M. Harding, that the Sacrifice whereof neither Christ nor his Disciples euer spake one word, is the Substance of his Supper? and the Mysticall Distribution in remembrance of his death, whereof he gaue vs such a strait commandement in so manifest and so plain words, is no part of the substance?

Par. 4 q. 35. m. 2. Solu. 2. Humbert. contra libell. Nicetæ Monachi. Ex Cassandro.

The allegation of which Sacrifice to this purpose is méere vaine. The old Fathers neuer complained of ceasing thereof, because they knew it could neuer cease. For the strength and vertue of Christs Sacrifice resteth in it selfe, and not in any diligence of doing of ours. Christs being a Priest after the order of Melchisedech, hath offered vp one Sacrifice for all vpon his Crosse: Full and perfect; therefore we need none other: One and euerlasting; therefore it needeth no renuing: By priuilege giuen to Himselfe Only; therefore it cannot be wrought by any other.

Heb. 7. & 10.

This Sacrifice notwithstanding is renued, and freshly laid out before our eies, in the Ministration of the holy Mysteries, as it is well recorded by sundry of the old godly Fathers. S. Augustine saith: Was not Christ once offered in himselfe? Yet that notwithstanding, by way of a Sacrament, he is offered euery day vnto the people, not at Easter onely, but also euery day: And he saith no vntruth, that being demanded the question, saith, Christ is offered. For if Sacraments had not a certaine likenesse of the things whereof they be Sacraments, then should they indeed be no Sacraments. And of this likenesse many times they beare the names of the things themselues: as the Sacrament of Christs Body, by a certaine maner of speech, is the Body of Christ.

Aug. Epist. 23. ad Bonifacium.

Likewise againe he saith: Cùm non obliuiscimur munus Saluatoris, nonne Christus quotidiè nobis immolatur? Ex ipsis reliquijs cogitationis, & ex ipsa memoria, quotidiè nobis sic immolatur, quasi quotidie nos innouet: When we forget not the gift of our Sauiour, is not Christ daily offered vnto vs? Through the remnants of our cogitation, and by way of our very memorie, Christ is so offered vnto vs euery day, as if hee daily renued vs. And againe likewise he saith: Holocaustum Dominicæ Passionis eo tempore offert quisque pro peccatis suis, quo eiusdem Passionis Fide dedicatur, & Christianorum fidelium nomine Baptizatus imbuitur: At that time doth euery man offer vp the Sacrifice of Christs Passion for his sinnes, when hee is indued with the Faith of Christs Passion, and being Baptized, receiueth the name of faithfull Christians.

Augustinus in Psalmum 75.

Aug. in Epist. ad Rom. sub finem.

Thus is the Sacrifice of Christs Passion expressed in the holy Ministration: and yet not as M. Harding imagineth, by any Action there done by the Priest alone, but by the Communion and participation of the people, as S. Augustine also otherwhere witnesseth: Dum frangitur hostia, & Sanguis in ora fidelium funditur, quid aliud quàm Dominici Corporis in Cruce immolatio designatur? While the oblation is broken, and the Blood (that is, the Sacrament of the blood) is powred into the mouths of the faithfull, what other thing is there expressed or signified, but the sacrificing of the Lords Body vpon the Crosse?

De Con. dist. 2. ex sententia Prosperi. Designatur.

This Sacrifice of Christ on his Crosse, is called the Daily Sacrifice, not for that it must be renued euery day, but for that being once done, it standeth good for all daies, and for euer. What force then is there in this reason: The Fathers neuer complained of ceasing of the Daily Sacrifice: Ergo, They had Priuate Masse? For it may be answered in one word, they had the Holy Communion euery day, and therefore they complained not. Howbeit, neither is the Holy Communion that Daily Sacrifice it selfe, but a memorie of the same: neither was the Communion then ministred euery day. For proofe whereof, I would with M. Harding to marke this Epistle, sent from the Councell of Alexandria, in the defense of one Macarius, who was charged by his enemies, that he had forcibly entred into the Church, and broken the Cup of the Holy Ministration. They make his defense in this maner: The place where they say the Cup was broken, was no Church, nor any Priest at that time neere thereabout: and touching the day, it was no Sunday. Seeing then there was no Church in that place, nor Ministration of the Sacraments, nor the day required the same, what maner Cup was it then, or when, or where was it broken? It appeareth plainly by these words of the Councell, that they had no Ministration of the Sacraments at that time in Alexandria, but only vpon the Sundaies. And yet no man euer complained of the Epistola Synodalis Concil. Alexandrini. Communion only vpon the Sunday.

the ceasing of the Daily Sacrifice notwithstanding. For they knew that the Sacrifice of Christs death is Daily, and for euer, and can neuer cease.

Daily Sacrifice.

M. Harding. The 26. Diuision.

S. Ambrose witnesseth that the people of the East had a custome in his time to be houseled but once in the yeere. And he rebuketh sharply such as follow them, after this sort: Si quotidianus est ille panis, cur post annum illum sumis, quemadmodum Græci in Oriente facere consueuerunt? If it be our daily meat (saith hee) why takest thou it but once in the yeere, as the Greekes are wont to doe in the East? S. Augustine writeth the same thing almost with the same words. And in the second Booke, De sermone Domini in Monte, the twelfth Chapter, expounding the fourth petition of our Lords Prayer, Giue vs this day our daily Bread, shewing that this may be taken either for materiall Bread, either for the Sacrament of our Lords Body, or for Spirituall meat, which he alloweth best; would, that concerning the Sacrament of our Lords Body, they of the East should not mooue question, how it might be vnderstanded to be their daily Bread, which were not daily partakers of our Lords Supper, (35) whereas for all that, this Bread is called daily Bread: There hee saith thus: Vt ergo illi taceant, neque de hac re sententiam suam defendant, vel ipsa authoritate Ecclesiæ sint contenti, quod sine scandalo ista faciunt, neque ab eis qui Ecclesijs præsunt, facere prohibentur, neque non obtemperantes condemnantur: Wherefore that they hold their peace, and stand not in defense of their opinion, let them bee content at least way with the authoritie of the Church, that they do these things without offense thereof taken, neither be forbidden of those that be ouer the Churches, neither be condemned when they disobey. Heere we see by S. Augustine, that they of the Orient, who so seldome receiued the Sacrament, were holden (for all that) Christian people, by the Authoritie of the Church: none offense thereof was taken, neither were they inhibited of their custome: and though they obeied not their spirituall gouernours, mooning them to receiue more often, yet were they not condemned, nor excommunicated.

The 35. vntruth. For S. Augustine saith, Hic in istis panibus non intelligitur quotidianus panis.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding findeth small force herein to proue that he seeketh for. S. Ambrose rebuketh the slacknesse of some of his people, that receiued so seldome, and wisheth them to Communicate daily all together. Wherein he quite ouerthroweth the Priuate Masse.

Ambr. lib. 5. de Sacram. ca. 4.

As for S. Augustine, I must néeds say he hath taken wrong, and is ill vsed at M. Hardings hand, as being by violence and perforce made both to suppresse that he would say, and also to say that he would not say: and yet in the end saith not one word for Priuate Masse, but plainly to the contrarie. First he would haue S. Augustine say, that the Sacrament of Christs Body, to them of the East, was their daily Bread, yea although they daily receiued it not. This matter of it selfe is not weighty. Yet S. Augustine saith farre otherwise, not in any other of his Bookes, but euen in the selfe same sentence, wherehence M. Harding had these words. For he addeth immediately: Vnde probatur, non hunc in illis partibus intelligi quotidianum Panem. Nam magni peccati crimine arguerentur, qui ex illo non accipiunt quotidiè: Whereby it appeareth, that they of the East vnderstand not the Sacrament to be their daily Bread. For then were they guilty of great sin, that do not daily receiue it. But touching Priuate Masse, he saith thus euen in the same place: Panis quotidianus potest accipi pro Sacramento Corporis Christi, quod quotidiè accipimus: The daily Bread may be taken for the Sacrament of Christs Body, which we receiue euery day. S. Augustine saith, the people then receiued the Sacrament euery day: whereof it followeth necessarily, that the Priuate Masse was then said neuer a day.

Aug. de Serm. Dom. in mont. cap. 12.

M. Hard. falsifieth S. Augustines minde.

The Sacramẽt is not the daily Bread.

The Sacramẽt receiued euery day.

But the Grecians custome was to receiue once only in the yeere: Ergo, The Priest at other times receiued alone. No, saith S. Augustine, this custome or negligence was not vniuersall among all the people of Græcia, but among a certaine of them only. For thus he saith: Plurimi in Orientalibus partibus non quotidiè Communicant: Many in the East parts doe not daily Communicate. Wherein may be well implied, that some daily did Communicate. Otherwise the exception of many had beene in vaine. And that the rest did daily Communicate, it may plainly appeare by these words of S. Augustine in the same place: Vel Authoritate Ecclesiæ sint contenti, quod sine scandalo ista faciant: Let them hold themselues content with the Authoritie of the Church, that they may thus doe without offense. These words doe necessarily import, that the rest receiued the Communion, and yet, that notwithstanding, were not offended with the negligence of their brethren that receiued not. For if the negligence had beene generall, and the whole people had abstained all together, as they doe now in the Church of Rome, there had bin no cause at all, why one of them in that respect should be offended with another.

Plurimi.

Augustinus. In the Greeke Church some receiued the Communion euery day.

Now touching the matter it selfe, Iesus Christ, the Sonne of God, is our daily, and euerlasting food, not to be remoued and renued after certaine daies, as the shew Bread of the Iewes, but to stand before the Mercy Seat of God for euer. Our daily Bread (saith Germanus) is Christ, that is, and was before, and continueth for euer. Likewise S. Augustine saith: Not the Bread that passeth into our body, but the Bread of euerlasting life, which sustaineth the substance of the soule.

Germã. in rerũ Eccl. theoria. Aug. de verbis Domin. secund. Luc. Serm. 28.

A Sacrament of this food is the Bread that Christ commanded to be blessed, broken, and and deliuered in his remembrance: which alſo may be called the daily Bread: not for that it is daily receiued, but for that there is no day excepted, but it may be receiued euery day. And that in ſuch places, where as the Sacrament was not daily receiued of the people, it was not receiued priuately and daily of the Prieſt, for continuance of the daily Sacrifice, as M. Harding ſurmiſeth, it appeareth well by ſundry good records. And to leaue [1] S. Baſil, Ad Cæſariam Patritiam: The [2] Councell of Laodicea: The [3] Councell of Conſtantinople holden in Trullo: and the Synodall [4] Epiſtle ſent from the Biſhops of the Eaſt part, in the defenſe of Macarius; S. Auguſtine ſaith: Huius rei Sacramentum alicubi quotidiè, alicubi certis interuallis dierum, in Dominico præparatur, & de Menſa Dominica ſumitur: The Sacrament of this thing is prepared, or conſecrate in the Church, and receiued of the Lords Table, in ſome places euery day, in ſome places vpon certaine daies. Likewiſe alſo ſaith S. Ambroſe: Euery weeke wee muſt celebrate the Oblation, although not euery day vnto ſtrangers, yet vnto the inhabitants at leaſt twice in the weeke. S. Auguſtine ſaith: the Sacrament was miniſtred at certaine daies: S. Ambroſe ſaith: ſometimes twice in the weeke: and not euery day. But what record hereof can be plainer than the Councell of Toledo? The words in Engliſh be theſe: There be ſundry Prieſts in Spaine, that touching the praier that the Lord taught, and commanded daily to be ſaid, ſay the ſame only vpon the Sunday, and vpon no day elſe. Hereof we may very well gather, that if the Prieſts in Spaine ſaid the Lords Praier only vpon the Sunday, for ſo much as the Communion is neuer miniſtred without the Lords Praier, therefore the Prieſts in Spaine miniſtred not the Communion, but onely vpon the Sunday.

Ambr. de Sacram. li. 5. ca 4 The Sacrament called the daily Bread.
[1] Baſil. ad Cæſariam.
[2] Conc. Laodicen. ca. 49.
[3] Conc. Conſtãtinopol. ca. 52.
[4] Concil. Alexandr. Epiſtola Synodalis.
Aug. in Iohan. Tract. 26.
Ambr. in epiſt. ad Tim. 1. c. 4.
Concil. Toletan. 4. ca. 9.
The Cõmunion miniſtred onely vpon the Sunday.

These things well conſidered, the weakneſſe of M. Hardings ghelles may the better appeare. For where his ſaith, Some of the people withdrew themſelues; Ergo, No man did receiue: Or, Many abſtained; Ergo, The Prieſt receiued alone: theſe reaſons be of no value, neither are worthy of any anſwer. For of the ſame premiſſes the contrary will rather follow. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Many in the Eaſt part abſteined: Hereof we may well gather; Ergo, Some abſteined not: Otherwiſe he ſhould haue ſaid, All abſteined, and not ſome. Then further, Some abſteined not; Ergo, Some receiued with the Prieſt. So did not the Prieſt receiue alone. And ſo hath not M. Harding yet found his Priuate Maſſe.

M. Harding. The 27. Diuiſion.

S. Chryſoſtome many times exhorting his people to prepare themſelues to receiue their rites, at leaſt at Eaſter, in one place ſaith thus: What meaneth this? The moſt part of you be partakers of this Sacrifice but once in the yeere, ſome twice, ſome oftner. Therefore this that I ſpeake, is to all, not to them only that be heere preſent, but to thoſe alſo that liue in Wilderneſſe. For they receiue the Sacrament but once in the yeere, and peraduenture but once in two yeeres. Well, what then? Whom ſhall we receiue? Thoſe that come but once, or that come often, or that come ſeldome? Soothly, we receiue them that come with a pure and a cleane conſcience, with a cleane heart, and to be ſhort, with a blameleſſe life. They that bee ſuch, let them come alwaies: and they that be not ſuch, let them not come, not ſo much as once. Why ſo? Becauſe they receiue to themſelues iudgement, damnation, and puniſhment. The ancient Doctours, ſpecially Chryſoſtome and Auguſtine, be full of ſuch ſentences. Is 10. 40. d Hō. 83.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

It is needleſſe to anſwer ſuch places as make no ſhew of proofe. Chryſoſtome, as M. Harding well knoweth, hath neither heere, nor elſewhere, either the name, or the ſenſe of Priuate Maſſe. Onely he exhorteth the people to examine and prepare themſelues, and ſo to come worthily to the Lords Supper. Now if M. Harding thinke he may ſound his Maſſe vpon this place, he may alſo preſume the like of S. Paul, that where he ſaith, Probet ſeipſum homo, Let a man examine himſelfe: he meant to erect Priuate Maſſe.

M. Harding. The 28. Diuiſion.

Now to this end I driue theſe allegations, leauing out a great number of the ſame ſenſe. Although many times the people forbare to come to the Communion, ſo as many times (36) none at all were found diſpoſed to receiue, yet the holy Fathers, Biſhops, and Prieſts, thought not that a cauſe why they ſhould not daily offer the bleſſed Sacrifice, and celebrate Maſſe. Which thing may ſufficiently be prooued, whether M. Iewell, that maketh himſelfe ſo ſure of the contrarie, will yeeld and ſubſcribe, according to his promiſe, or no. Of the daily Sacrifice, theſe words of Chryſoſtome be plaine: Quid ergo nos? Nonne per ſingulos dies offerimus? Offerimus quidem, ſed ad recordationem facientes mortis eius: & vna eſt hoſtia, non multa, &c. Then what doe we? Doe we not offer euery day? Yes verily we doe ſo. But we doe it for recording of his death. And it is one hoſt, not many. Heere I heare M. Iewell ſay, though againſt his will, I grant the daily Sacrifice, but I ſtand ſtill in my negatiue, that it cannot be ſhewed there was euer any ſuch Sacrifice celebrated, without a Communion, that is, as they will haue it, without ſome conuenient number to receiue the Sacrament in the ſame place with the Prieſt. For proofe of this, theſe be ſuch places as I am perſwaded withall. The better learned men, that be of more reading than I am, haue other, I doubt not.

The 36. vntruth. M. Harding is able to ſhew no ſuch caſe.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Heere M. Harding notably betraieth himſelfe, laying forth, for a countenance, a few of Chryſoſtomes words, and the ſame nothing to the matter, hewing and mangling them as

as him liſteth beſt, requiring alſo ſubſcription, as vpon ſufficient proofe: and yet in the ſame place and with one breath, himſelfe ſecretly confeſſing the inſufficiencie and weakeneſſe of his proofe.

Theſe words of S. Chryſoſtome, as they make nothing for Priuate Maſſe, ſo do they very well declare what the old Fathers meant by theſe words, Oblation and Sacrifice, in the Holy miniſtration. Chryſoſtome compareth the Sacrifices of the Iewes in the Law, with the Sacrifice of Chriſt in the Goſpell. Hee ſaith, the Sacrifices of the Law were many and vnperfect, and therefore daily renued: This of the Goſpell is one and perfect, and therefore euerlaſting. And reſembleth the ſame vnto a ſouereigne ſalue, which being once laid on the wound, healeth it by thoroughly, and needeth no more laying on. Chryſoſtom. ad Hebr. hom. 17.

He ſaith further, that we of the Goſpell haue a Sacrifice alſo, and that daily, but in remembrance of that Sacrifice once made vpon the Croſſe. And although we Sacrifice in ſundrie places, yet, ſaith he, the Sacrifice is but one, becauſe it hath relation vnto that one Sacrifice of Chriſt. And therefore he addeth: Quomodò vna eſt hoſtia, & non multæ? Quia ſemel oblata eſt, oblata eſt in ſancta ſanctorum. Hoc autem Sacrificium exemplar illius eſt: How is it one oblation and not many? Becauſe it was once offered, it was offered into the holy place: but this Sacrifice (meaning the miniſtration of the Sacrament) is an example of that. And what he meaneth by this word Exemplar, he ſheweth a few lines before: Quæ formam tantùm alicuius habent, Exemplar oſtendunt, non autem virtutem. Sicut in Imaginibus exemplar hominis habet imago, non etiam virtutem: The things that beare onely a likeneſſe, ſhew the ſamplar of ſome other thing, but not the power of the ſame: as an Image ſheweth the paterne of a man, but not the power of a man. Hereof S. Chryſoſtome concludeth thus: The thing that we doe, is done in remembrance of that thing that was done before. For Chriſt ſaid, Do this in my remembrance. Hereby it appeareth in what ſenſe the old Fathers vſed theſe words, Oblation and Sacrifice. Chryſoſtom. ad Hebr. hom. 17. Exemplar.

But what doth all this further M. Hardings Priuate Maſſe? Or if it further it not, what doth it heere? It is but a faint concluſion to ſay,

Chryſoſtome had the daily Sacrifice:
Ergo, Chryſoſtome had Priuate Maſſe.

Soothly (good Reader) if it had liked M. Harding to haue giuen thée leaue to reade the next lines following in Chryſoſtome, thou mighteſt eaſily haue ſeene the whole order of the holy Miniſtration in his time. For thus hee ſaith vnto the people: Per ſingulos dies intras in Eccleſiam: Thou commeſt daily to the Church. Whereby wee ſee, the Prieſt was not in the Church alone. Then touching the receiuing, he ſaith: The Deacon at that houre calleth the Holy, and by that voice, as it were beholdeth the peoples ſpots. For like as in a flocke where as bee many ſound ſheepe, and many infected, the one muſt needs be ſundred from the other: euen ſo fareth it in the Church. For ſome are ſound, and ſome are ſicke. And by that voice the Deacon diuideth theſe from them. For that voice of his falling into our eares, as it were a hand, remoueth and ſhutteth foorth ſome, and other ſome it taketh in, and preſenteth them to the Congregation. I ſend thée not vnto other places of Chryſoſtome, which be both many moe, and farre plainer than this: but only vnto this ſame place, out of which M. Harding hath picked as much as he thought good. M. Harding nippeth Chryſoſtomes words. Vocat ſanctos. Sancta ſanctis.

Chroſoſtome ſaith: The people reſorted daily to the Church: The Deacon ſundred them with his voice, the ſound from the ſicke: the one part to receiue, the other to abſtaine: the one part he ſhut out at the time of the holy Communion: the other he brought in, and preſented to the Congregation. This was the ordinary practiſe of the Church in Chryſoſtomes time: where we ſee plainly by his owne report, that he receiued not alone.

Yet ſaith M. Harding, For proofe of this, theſe following bee ſuch places as I am perſwaded withall. By this cold concluſion, hee cutteth off credit from all that hee hath hitherto ſaid, as not making ſhew ſufficient to winne his purpoſe, and ſo condemneth his note made in the Margin, which was, Proofes for Priuate Maſſe: and laieth al the burden of his grounds vpon theſe other ghelles that hereafter follow. Verily hitherto, for any thing that may appeare by his Booke, notwithſtanding his long time, his much reading, and great conference with all his fellowes, hee hath not yet found either the name of Priuate Maſſe, in any Old Catholike Writer, or the Sole Receiuing of the Prieſt. If hee will haue the world to beléeue him, and ſubſcribe, hee muſt leaue his ghelles and bring ſome ſound and ſubſtantiall proofes.

M. Harding. The 29. Diuiſion.

Soter Biſhop of Rome, about the yeere of our Lord 170. who ſuffered Martyrdome vnder Antoninus Verus the Emperor, for order of celebrating the Maſſe, made this Statute or Decree; Vt nullus Presbyterorum ſolemnia

Epistles Decretall.

solennia celebrare præsumat, nisi duobus præsentibus, sibique respondentibus, & ipse tertius habeatur: quia cum plenarie ab eo dicitur, Dominus vobiscum, & illud in secretis, Orate pro me: apertissimè conuenit, vt ipsius respondeatur salutationi: This hath beene ordained, that no Priest presume to celebrate the solemnitie of the Masse, except there be two present, and answer him, so as he himselfe be the third. For whereas he saith (as by way of speaking to many) Our Lord be with you, and likewise in the secrets, Pray you for me: It seemeth euidently conuenient, that answer be made to his salutation accordingly. Which ancient Decree requireth not that all people of necessity be present; (37) much lesse, that all so often times should Communicate Sacramentally: which thing it requireth neither of those two that ought to be present. If of the bare words of this decree a sufficient argument may not be made for our purpose, inducing of the affirmation of that one thing there specified, the deniall of that other thing we speake of, which maner of argument is commonly vsed of our aduersaries; then more weight may bee put vnto it in this case: for that whereas the receiuing of Christs Body is a farre greater matter, than to answer the Priest at Masse, if that holy Bishop and Martyr had thought it so necessarie, as that the Masse might not be done without it; doubtlesse of very reason and conuenience hee would and should haue specially spoken of that, rather than of the other. But for that hee thought otherwise, he required only of necessitie the presence of two, for the purpose aboue mentioned.

De Cons. dist. 1. can. Hæc quæ statuta.

The 37. vntruth. For all that were present, were willed either to Communicate, or to depart. A bare collection.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Polydorus de inuentoribus rerum.

Some say, this Decrée was made by Pope Anacletus: some others say, by Soter, and so they séeme not to bée yet throwly resolued vpon the Authour. But if wée had not good cause to doubt of the authoritie of these Decrées and Epistles Decretall, we would the lesse doubt of their Doctrine. It was euermore the common practise of deceiuers to blaze their doings by the names of such as they knew to bée in estimation in the World. For to passe by Homer, Hesiod, Cicero, Plautus, and such others counted learned and famous among the Heathens, in whose names many counterfet bookes were set abroad, S. Paul himselfe willeth the Thessalonians not to suffer themselues to be drawen from their faith, Neither by spirit, nor by talke, nor by letters as sent from him. By which last words he signifieth, that letters sometime were falsified and set abroad in his name. So were there giuen out Gospels in the name of Peter, Thomas, and other the Apostles: and other matters of small weight in the names of Augustine, Hierome, Ambrose, Cyprian, and other like. This was vnto some a common pastime: and many godly Fathers complaine much of it.

2. Thess. 2.

Wherefore wée ought the lesse to maruell, if the like haue happened vnto Anacletus, Euaristus, Soter, and such others, as followed immediately in Rome after the Apostles time.

Dist. 19. de Epistolis. Anno secundo Edwardi sexti.

Gratian sheweth that the Decretall Epistles haue béene doubted of among the learned. And Doctour Smith, although his authority be not great, declared openly at Pauls Crosse, that they cannot possibly be theirs, whose names they beare. And to vtter some reasons shortly for proofe thereof, these Decretall Epistles manifestly depraue and abuse the Scriptures, as it may soone appeare vnto the godly Reader vpon the sight. They maintaine nothing so much, as the state and kingdome of the Pope: and yet was there no such state erected in many hundred yéres after the Apostles time: they publish a multitude of vaine and Superstitious Ceremonies, and other like fantasies, farre vnlike the Apostles doctrine: They proclaime such things, as M. Harding knoweth to bée open and knowen lies.

Dist. 97. Iuxta Sanctorum.

Anacletus, that was next after Peter, willeth and straitly commandeth, that all Bishops once in the yéere doe visit the entrie of S. Peters Church in Rome, which they call Limina Petri. Yet was there then no Church yet built there in the name of Peter. For Pope Cornelius saith (as he is alleged) that he first toke vp S. Peters body, and buried the same in Apolloes Church in Rome, at the least one hundred and forty yéeres after that Anacletus was dead. Pope Antherus maketh mention of Eusebius Alexandrinus and Felix, which lined a long time after him, and therefore was it not possible for him to know them. Fabianus writeth of the comming of Nouatus into Italie; and yet it is cleare by S. Cyprian and by Eusebius, that Nouatus came first into Italie in the time of Cornelius, which was next after him. And to leaue a number of other coniectures, which may be hereafter more aptly touched some other where, neither S. Hierome, nor Gennadius, intreating of the Ecclesiasticall Writer, nor Damasus writing purposely of the liues of the Bishops of Rome before him, euer made any mention, either of such Epistles or of any such Decrées: which they would not haue dissembled, if there had bene any such extant, or knowen in their time. Thus haue I briefly giuen a taste of these Decretall authorities, that the Reader may the better vnderstand of what credit they ought to be.

In Decretal. Cornely.

Cypr. li. 1. ep. 3. Eusebius, li. 6. cap. 42.

Now touching the matter, that by this Decrée of Soter Bishop of Rome, it should then be lawfull for the Priest there to say Masse, hauing onely two others in his companie, the state and storie of the time considered, it séemeth very vnlikely. For both S. Augustine

1 ſtine and S. Hierome, who liued two hundred and fiftie yeeres after Soter, haue record- Aug. epiſt. 118 ad Ianuarium.
2 ded, that the people of Rome euen in their time, vſed to receiue the Communion together euery day: which practiſe can hardly ſtand with that is here imagined. The words alſo Auguſt. in Ioh. Tract. 26.
themſelues implie a manifeſt contrarietie. For this word Solennia, which here is vſed ſeemeth to import a ſolemne companie or reſort of the people. And yet this Soter requiring to this action onely the companie of three perſons, neuertheleſſe calleth it, Miſſarum Hieron. in Apologia aduerſus Iouinianum.
Solennia.

3 As touching the cauſes mentioned in this Decree, which are, that the Prieſt may ſeeme conueniently and aptly to ſay in the plurall number, The Lord be with you, and, Brethren pray you for me: It may well be doubted, whether Dominus vobiſcum, or Orate pro me Fratres, were any part of the Liturgie of Rome in Soters time. For Damaſus which was Damaſus in epiſt. ad Hieron.
Biſhop of Rome two hundred and fiftie yeeres after that, writeth vnto S. Hierome, that things were done with ſuch ſimplicitie in the Church of Rome in his time, that vpon the Sunday there was nothing elſe but ſome Epiſtle of the Apoſtle, or ſome Chapter of the Goſpell read openly vnto the people: which whether be meant of the holy miniſtration or no, I leaue further to be conſidered.

4 Further, this ſame Soter requireth, that both theſe two, and as many others as be preſent, make anſwer vnto the Prieſt: wherein is included both neereneſſe of place for the people to ſtand in, and to heare, and alſo a common knowen tongue: which both are contrarie to M. Hardings Maſſe.

5 Moreouer, touching theſe two, whoſe preſence is required, queſtion is moued by the De Con. diſt. 1. Hoc quoq;. In Gloſſa.
Canoniſts, whether they ought to be two Clerkes, or two Laymen: or one Clerke and one Lay man: or one man, and one woman. The Reſolution whereof is, that they muſt be two Clerkes.

6 Howbeit, the matter is otherwiſe determined, that if the Maſſe be publike, there muſt Summa Angeli Miſſa 38.
needs be two at the leaſt: but if it be a Priuate Maſſe, that then one is ſufficient.

7 Gerſon likewiſe ſaith, that the Prieſt may well ſay, Dominus vobiſcum, although Gerſon contra Floretum li. 4.
there be but one preſent at his Maſſe. For it may be preſumed, ſaith he, that the Prieſt ſpeaketh not only vnto that one, but alſo vnto the whole Church. Thus wee ſee notwithſtanding Soters determination, the number of two for a ſhift may well be abridged.

8 Pope Innocentius hath yet another ſetch to helpe the matter. Hee ſaith, Though there Innoc. lib. 2. ca. 20. de off. Miſſ.
be but one there, yet may the Prieſt neuertheleſſe ſay, Dominus vobiſcum: becauſe it may be thought, there be Angels there to ſupplie mens roomes.

9 Againe, that there were any ſuch ſecreſies in the Maſſe in the time of Soter, it were very hard for M. Harding to proue. For then euery peece of the Maſſe was ſpoken aloud, that the people might heare it, and ſay Amen. And indeed to ſay vnto the people, Pray for me Brethren and Siſters, as it is now vſed in the Maſſe, vnleſſe the people may heare and vnderſtand the ſame, it is a mockerie. And yet Durandus ſaith: Sacerdos ante ſecretellam Durand. lib. 4.
voluens ſe ad populum dicturus, Orate fratres, &c. debet dicere, Dominus vobiſcum ſub ſilentio: The Prieſt before the little ſecret turning himſelfe to the people to ſay, Brethren pray for me, muſt ſay, The Lord be with you, vnder ſilence.

Now ſaith M. Harding, Soters Decree is not that theſe two ſhould communicate with the Prieſt, but only requireth their preſence; Ergo, It is likely the Prieſt receiued alone; which is an argument much vſed among our aduerſaries. But what if theſe two will not come, neither to Communicate, nor to be preſent at all? Verily by M. Hardings minde the Prieſts deuotion ought not to ſtay for want of companie. For theſe be his very words a little before: Well, none Pag. 12.
commeth; This is not a ſufficient cauſe why the faithfull and godly Prieſt enflamed with the loue of God, feeling himſelfe hungrie and thirſtie after the heauenly food and drinke, ſhould bee kept from it, &c. This is a cauſe ſufficient, ſaith Soter: It is no ſufficient cauſe, ſaith M. Harding. The iudgement hereof I referre vnto the Reader.

Touching the force of the argument wherewith hee chargeth vs by the name of his aduerſaries, I truſt there doth already appeare ſome difference betweene our proues and his ghelles. But the argument that he meaneth, and not very plainly vttereth, is called in the Schooles, Argumentum ab authoritate negatiuè: which is thought to bee good, whenſoeuer proofe is taken of Gods word, and is vſed not only by vs, but alſo by S. Paul, and by many of the Catholike Fathers. S. Paul ſaith: God ſaid not vnto Abraham, in thy ſeeds all nations ſhall be bleſſed, but in thy ſeed, which is Chriſt. And thereof hee thought hee made a good argument. Ad Galatas 3.

Likewiſe ſaith Origen: The Bread which the Lord gaue vnto his Diſciples, ſaying vnto them, Take and Eat, he deferred not, nor commanded to bee reſerued vntill the next day. Such Orig. in Leuit. homil. 5.
arguments Origen and other learned Fathers thought to ſtand for good, whatſoeuer miſliking M. Harding hath found in them. This kinde of proofe is thought to hold in Gods Commandements, for that they bee full and perfect, and God hath specially charged vs, that we should neither put to them nor take from them: and therefore it saueth god vnto them that haue learned of Christ, Vnus est magister vester Christus: Christ onely is your Matth. 23. Master: and haue heard the voice of God the Father from heauen, Ipsum audite: Giue Matth. 17. eare vnto him. But vnto them that adde to the word of God what them liketh, and make Gods will subiect vnto their will, and breake Gods Commandements for their owne traditions sake, vnto them it saueth not good. To conclude, if this maner of reasoning be good, why doth M. Harding remoue it? If it be naught, why doth he vse it, and that euen in the same place where he doth remoue it?

But (saith M. Harding) Soter required only the presence of two, and these two were not commanded to Communicate: Ergo, the Priest did receiue alone, and so there was vndoubtedly Priuate Masse. But marke well a little (good Reader.) If these two were bound to Communicate with the Priest, then notwithstanding this Decree, M. Harding hath not yet found his Priuate Masse. Then consider this Decree written in the name of Pope Calixtus: Peracta De Con. dist. 2. Peracta. Consecratione, omnes Communicent, qui noluerint Ecclesiasticis carere liminibus. Sic enim & Apostoli statuerunt, & Sancta Romana tenet Ecclesia: The Consecration being done, De Con. dist. 1. Episcopus Deo. let all Communicate, vnlesse they will be remoued from the Church. For so the Apostles appointed, and so holdeth the holy Church of Rome. By this decree these two were bound either to Communicate with the Priest, or to depart forth of the Church. If they did Communicate, then hath M. Harding here no Priuate Masse: If they departed forth, then could the Priest say no Masse at all: for Soter at least requireth the presence of two.

Againe, the argument that M. Harding gathereth out of this Decree,

Three persons were present,

Ergo, Two of them did not receiue, is vtterly vnsensible and void of reason. Rather he might haue concluded thus:

Soter willeth that two be present;

Ergo, much more he willeth that the same two doe Communicate.

It may also stand with reason, and with the common practise of the Church at that time, that these two whose presence Soter requireth, were Priests or Deacons, or otherwise of the Clergy, and that ouer and beside the company of the people, as indeed it is determined by the Glosse. And so this Decree of Soter agreeth with another Decree of Anacletus made De Con. dist. 1. Hoc quoque. In Glossa. to the like purpose, that is, That the Bishop at the ministration haue about him a certaine num- De Con. dist. 1. Episcopus Deo. ber of Deacons, Subdeacons, and other Ministers, besides the common multitude of the Lay people. And likewise with another Decree of the same Soter, that is, That euery Priest making the De Con. dist. 1. Vt illud. Sacrifice, haue by him another Priest to assist him, and to make an end of the ministration, if any quame or sickneſſe happen to fall vpon him. And this assistance of the Priest is required notwithstanding the presence of others, either of the Clerkes, or of the Laity.

Now being Priests or Clerkes, and being present at the ministration, the Law specially constrained them to receiue the holy Communion with the Minister, as it appeareth by this Decree written in the Canons of the Apostles: If any Bishop, or Priest, or Deacon, or Canon. Apost. Can. 9. any other of the Clerkes, after the Oblation is made, doe not Communicate, either let him shew cause thereof, that if it be found reasonable he may be excused: or if hee shew no cause, let him bee Excommunicate.

Thus whosoeuer these two were, whose presence Soter required, whether they were of the Laitie or of the Clergie, the Law constrained them to receiue together with the Priest: and therefore M. Harding hath hitherto found a Communion, and no maner token or inkling of his Priuate Masse.

M. Harding. The 30. Diuision.

In a Councell holden at Agatha a Citie of France then called Gallia, about the time of Chrysostome, an old Decree of Fabianus Bishop of Rome and Martyr, and also of the Councell Elibertine, in the time of S. Syluester, Anno Domini 314. was renued, that all secular Christian folke should be houseled three times euery yeere, at Easter, Whitsontide and Christmas. It was there also decreed, that they should heare the whole Masse euery Sunday, and not depart before the Priest had giuen blessing. So they were bound to heare Masse euery Sunday, and to receiue the Communion but thrice in the yeere. The selfe same order was decreed in the Councell of Orleance. Then of like, specially in small Townes and Villages, they had Masse without the communion of many together sometimes.

Priuate Masse proued by likelihood.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding alleged Councels that cannot be found.

M. Harding knoweth well, that these Decrees which he here allegeth, could neuer be found written, neither in the Councell holden at Agatha in France, nor at the other Councell holden at Eliberis, now called Granado in Spaine, but were set forth many hundred yeeres after in the name of those Councels, by one Gratian, a man of great diligence, as may may appeare by his gathering; but of no great iudgement, as wée may sée by his choice. Yet hœre M. Harding shufleth a great many of them together, that the one may the better countenance the other. To heare Masse.

Ex Con. Agath. Can. 31. Missas de Dominica secularibus totas audire, specialiter diebus festiuis ita vt ante benedictionem sacerdotis egredi populus nō præsumat: quod si fecerint, ab Episcopo publicè confundantur. De Con. dist. 1. Cùm ad celebrādas Missas.

But let vs receiue the authoritie of these Decrées, and grant there was no errour committed by Gratian in his gathering: yet will they stand M. Harding in small stead. For as in many other matters they vtterly cast him, so they nothing relœue him for his Masse. For thus it is concluded by both these Councels: Qui in natali Domini, Paschate, & Pentecoste non Communicant, Catholici non credantur, nec inter Catholicos habeantur: They that receiue not the Communion at Christmas, Easter and Whitsontide, let them not be taken nor reckoned for Catholike people. It appeareth by these generall Councels, that in the whole Church of Rome, sauing only a few Masling Priests, there is not one man worthy to be accounted Catholike. De Con. dist. 2. Seculares.

And to draw nére to the purpose, who so will narrowly view the points of these Decrées, shall sone sée they cannot stand with the very forme and order of the Church of those daies. For besides that I haue already proued by the authoritie of S. Hierome, and S. Augustine, that the holy Communion was then ministred vnto the people in Rome euery day: Fabianus also Bishop of Rome, which is likewise brought forth hére for a witnesse, hath plainly decréed, not that the people should heare Masse euery Sunday, as it is sothly warranted by M. Harding, but that they should receiue the Communion euerie Sunday. His words bée plaine: Decernimus vt in omnibus Dominicis diebus Altaris oblatio ab omnibus viris, & mulieribus fiat, tam Panis, quàm Vini: Wee Decree that euery Sunday the oblation of the Altar be made of all men and women, both of Bread and of Wine. Hére besides that in these words is included the receiuing of the Communion euery Sunday, may be noted also by the way, that by this authoritie of Fabian, men and women made the Sacrifice of the Altar, and that of Bread and Wine, and therefore after the order of Melchisedech. Therefore S. Bernard saith: Non solus Sacerdos sacrificat, sed totus conuentus fidelium: Not onely the Priest sacrificeth, but also the whole companie of the faithfull. These things well considered, the sense, that M. Harding would so faine wring out of these Decrées, will séeme vnlikely. Inter Decreta Fabiani, ca. 7. Bernar. in Sermone in die Purific. tom. 2.

Moreouer, when did S. Augustine, S. Hierome, S. Chrysostome, or any other learned Father or Doctour of that age, euer vse this maner of speech, Audire Missas, To heare Masse? Certainly this phrase was so farre vnacquainted and vnknowen in that World, that the very Originals of these Decrées haue it not: but onely haue these words, Tenere Missas, To hold Masse: as may bee séene in the Booke of Councels, noted purposely in the Margin. The Italians this day séeme to speake farre better. For of them that heare Masse, and vnderstand not what they heare, they say, Videre Missas, that is, not to heare, but to sée Masse. Con. Agath. Can. 31.

And forsomuch as M. Harding séemeth to delight himselfe with this kinde of speech, To heare Masse, to the intent he may make some simple body beléeue, that the people hearing that they vnderstand not, are neuertheless well and deuoutly occupied, and therein follow the order of the Primitiue Church; I will also demand of him, what learned Doctour or ancient Father euer tooke Hearing, in that sense. Surely Christ in the godly, ioineth hearing and vnderstanding both together. Thus hée saith: Audite & intelligite: Heare yee and vnderstand yee. And the Wise man saith: If thou giue thine eare, thou shalt receiue knowledge. And God himselfe in the Deuteronomy saith: Thou shalt reade the words of this Law, in the presence of all the people of Israel, &c. That they hearing may learne, and feare the Lord your God, and may keepe and fulfill all the words of this Law. And in the Booke of Kings it is written thus: Loquere nobis Syriacè, nam audimus: Speake to vs in the Syrian tongue; for wee heare it. That is to say, For wee vnderstand it. And to that vse hath God endued vs with the sense of hearing, that thereby we might learne and attaine knowledge. And therefore Aristotle calleth hearing the sense of vnderstanding. For hearing void of all maner vnderstanding is no hearing. Cicero saith: In illis linguis quas non intelligimus, quæ sunt innumerabiles, surdi profectò sumus: In the tongues that we vnderstand not, which are innumerable, we are doubtlesse deafe and heare nothing. By this it appeareth, that the simple people hearing Masse in a strange language, is deafe, and heareth no Masse at all. To heare Masse. Hearing. Matth. 15. Eccles. 6. Deut. 31. 4. Reg. ca. 18. Cicero in Tusculanis quæst.

The Emperour Iustinian likewise saith: Non multum interest, vtrùm abfuerit Tutor, cùm negotium contraheretur, an præsens ignorauerit, quale esset quod contrahebatur: There is no great difference whether the Tutor were absent when the bargaine was made (in the behoofe of his Pupill) or being present vnderstood not the maner of the bargaine. Likewise also in another place he saith: Coram Titio aliquid facere iussus, non videtur præsente eo fecisse, nisi is intelligat: He that is commanded to doe a thing in the presence of Titius, seemeth De authoritate & consen. tuto & Cur. Non multum. De verbor. & rer significat.

To heare Masse.

not to doe it in his presence, vnlesse hee vnderstand it. Upon the which words Alciat writeth thus: Quid opus erat eius præsentiam adhibere, qui quod agatur non intelligat? Siquidem aiebat Epicharmus Philosophus, Mentem esse, quæ videt, non oculos. Qui igitur animo non adest, abesse videtur: What needeth his presence, that vnderstandeth not what is done? For the Philosopher Epicharmus saith, It is the minde that seeth, and not the eies. Therefore he that is not present with his minde (to vnderstand what is done) may be taken for absent.

Andr. Alciat.

I haue alleged these authorities rather than other, for that in them we may see the very light and sense of Nature. Now then can M. Harding thinke, he may steale away inuisible vnder the cloake of these words, of hearing Masse? Verily in the fauour and iudgement of common reason, it is as strange, and as fond a speech to say, I will heare Masse, as it is to say, I will see the Sermon. For what is there in the Masse that the vnlearned can heare? The oblation that they imagine, is an outward action or doing, and therefore is to be seene, and not to be heard: the Consecration, as they vse it, is spoken in silence, and may not in any wise be heard: their Communion is none at all, and therefore cannot be heard. These be the three substantiall parts, whereof, as M. Harding saith, the whole Masse consisteth. Now then can hee say, the vnlearned man heareth Masse, that heareth not one part of the Masse?

To heare Masse.

To see the Sermon.

Folio 12. b.

If by this word Masse, hee vnderstand the prayers that bee said in the Masse, the vnlearned vnderstandeth them not, and therefore heareth them not. Chrysostome speaking of him that heareth the prayers in a strange vnknowen tongue, saith thus: Tu recte orasti Spiritu, scilicet, concitatus sonas: sed ille nec audiens, nec intelligens ea quæ dicis, paruam ex ea re vtilitatem capit: Thou praiest well: for thou soundest out words being moued by the Spirit: but the vnlearned, neither hearing, nor vnderstanding what thou saist, hath thereby but small profit.

Chrysost. in 1. Cor. hom. 35.

Likewise saith S. Paul: Qui loquitur lingua, non hominibus loquitur, sed Deo: Nullus enim audit: He that speaketh with tongue, speaketh not vnto men, but vnto God: for no man heareth him. M. Harding saith, The vnlearned heareth the Masse and other prayers, yea although he vnderstand not one word that is spoken: But S. Paul and S. Chrysostome say, The vnlearned heareth not, because he vnderstandeth not. God saith vnto the wicked, and not vnto the godly, Ye shall heare with your eares, and shall not vnderstand.

1. Cor. 14.

Esay 9.

Matt. 13.

Now let vs see what M. Harding gathereth out of these two Councels. Then of like (saith he) specially in small townes and villages, they had Masse without the Communion of many together. Of like, was neuer good argument in any Schooles.

Of like.

Thou seest (good Reader) the best that here can be had is but a gheese, and as it shall afterward appeare, a very simple and a blinde gheese. It is a wonder to see so great a matter, and so single proofes. You haue taught the people that in your Masse Christ himselfe is Presently and Really Sacrificed for the sinnes of the World: that all that euer he did or suffered for our sakes, is liuely expressed in the same: and that all Kings, Princes and other estates must néeds stope vnto it. And yet was the same for the space of six hundred yeeres, to bee found onely in poore Townes and Villages, and that onely by gheese, and blinde coniecture, and none otherwise? Or could it neuer all that while once enter into any Citie or good Towne? And being so good a thing, can no man tell vs who published it and said it first?

Innoc. 3. in prologo de officio Missæ. Durandus li. 4. Rupertus de Missa.

But what if the very words of these Councels whereupon M. Harding hath founded his Masse, make manifest proofe against his Masse? The words be these: All Secular Christian folke be bound to receiue the Communion at the least thrice in the yeere. This Relaxation or Priuilege is granted only vnto the Secular Christians. Whereof it followeth necessarily, that all Ecclesiasticall persons, as Priests, Deacons, Clerkes, and others whatsoeuer of that sort were not excepted, but stood still bound to receiue orderly, as they had done before: and that was at all times whensoeuer there was any ministration. And so by the plaine words of these Councels the Priest receiued not alone: neither hath M. Harding yet found out his Priuate Masse.

But that the whole matter may the better appeare, not by gheese or aime, but by the very Ecclesiasticall order of that age, wee must vnderstand, that these, and such other like Decrées were made, not for the greatest part of the people, that in those daies vsed to Communicate in all their assemblies, but for a few, that were negligent and haled backe. For otherwise the generall order doth well appeare by all the Ecclesiasticall Records of that time.

And whereas M. Harding hath taken exception of small townes and villages, which he gheeseth had then the Priuate Masse, it was decréed and straitly ordered in a Councell holden at Gerunda in Spaine, that all little Churches in the Countrey should conforme themselues vnto the great Cathedrall Churches that were in Cities and Townes, aswell for for order of the Communion, as also for Singing, and other Ministration. But by M. Hardings owne grant, there was no Priuate Masse then in Cathedrall Churches. It followeth therefore necessarily (this Councell of Gerunda standing in force) that there was no Priuate Masse then in Townes or Villages.

Con. Gerunden. can. 1. De Con. dist. 2.

Missa signifieth the Communion.

And that the people did then commonly receiue the Sacrament euery Sunday, it appeareth by most certaine and vndoubted proues. The Councell holden at Matiscona in Italie hath this Canon: Decreuimus, vt omnibus Dominicis diebus Altaris Oblatio ab omnibus viris & mulieribus offeratur: Wee haue decreed, that euery Sunday the Oblation of the Altar be offered of all, both men and women. Likewise the Councell holden at Antisiodorum: Decernimus, vt vnaquæque mulier, quando Communicat, Dominicalem suum habeat. Quod si non habuerit, vsque in alium diem Dominicum, non Communicet: Wee decree, that euery woman, when shee doth Communicate, haue her Dominicall. If shee haue it not, let her not Communicate vntill the next Sunday. Likewise Carolus Magnus, a long while after, among other his Ecclesiasticall Lawes, writeth thus: Vt populi Oblationes Sacerdotibus in Ecclesia offerant, & in die Dominico Communicent: That the people offer their Oblations vnto the Priests in the Church, and receiue the Communion vpon the Sunday. By these Councels and Decrees it appeareth plainly, without Gheese or Glosse, that the people vsed commonly in all that time, and long after, to Communicate the holy Mysteries euery Sunday. Therefore M. Harding must yet seeke further for his Priuate Masse.

Concil. Matisconen. 2. ca. 4. Concil. Antisiodoren. Ca. 42.

Lib. 6. Ca. 162. Ex Cassandro.

M. Harding. The 31. Diuision.

In that Councell of Agatha we finde a Decree, made by the Fathers assembled there, whereof (38) it appeareth, that Priests often times said Masse without others receiuing with them. And thus much it is in English: If any man will haue an Oratorie or Chapell abroad in the Countrey, beside the parish Churches, in which lawfull and ordinarie assemblie is, for the rest of the holy daies, that he haue Masses there, in consideration of wearinesse of the household, with iust ordinance we doe permit. But at Easter, Christs birth, Epiphanie, the Ascension of our Lord, Whitsunday, and the Natiuitie of S. Iohn Baptist, and if there be any other speciall feasts, let them not keepe their Masses, but in the Cities and Parishes. And as for the Clerkes, if any will doe, or haue their Masses, at the aforesaid feasts, in Chapels, vnlesse the Bishop so command, or permit, let them be thrust out from Communion. By this Decree we learne, that then Masses were commonly said in priuate Chapels at home, at such times as the people were not accustomed to bee houseled. For when by commandement and common order they receiued their rites, as in the aforenamed Feasts, then were the Priests prohibited to say Masses in Priuate Oratories, or Chapels, without the Parish Churches. And heereof we may plainly vnderstand, that in such places, Priests customably said Masses of their owne, and of the housholders deuotion, when none of the household were disposed to receiue with them. The like Decree is to be found, Concilij Aruernensis, cap. 14. Concil. Constantinopol. Generalis in Trullo, ca. 31.

The 38. vntruth. For there appeareth no such thing: but rather the contrarie.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

This obiection being all one with the former, may the sooner be discharged by the former Answer.

Notwithstanding heere we may learne by the way, that the old Fathers, when they vse this word Missa, meane not thereby a Priuate Masse, as M. Harding would faine haue it taken, but a Communion. These be the words: At Easter, Christmasse, Epiphanie, the Ascension of our Lord, Whitsunday, and at the Natiuity of S. Iohn the Baptist, let them hold their Masses, Teneant Missas, in Cities or Parishes. Now it is knowen, and confessed by M. Harding, that in great Parishes and Cities, at their Solemne Feasts, they vsed to haue generall Communions for all the whole people, and no Priuate Masse.

Missa vsed for the Cõmunion.

Notwithstanding, for auoiding of errour, it is also further to be marked, that this same word Missa, in the old Writers, sometime signifieth no Masse at all, neither Priuate nor Common; but onely a resort and meeting of the people together in place and time of prayer, as it may sundrie waies appeare, and namely by old Translations out of the Greeke into Latine, touching the same. For that the Greeke Writer vttereth by the word that signifieth an assemblie, or meeting of the people, the same doth the Latine Interpreter often times translate by this word Missa. For example, Sozomenus in Greeke writeth thus: ἐκκλησιαζόντι τῷ λαῷ, that is, when the people came together: that doth Epiphanius Translate into Latine thus: Cùm populus congregaretur ad Missas: When the people came to Masse. Likewise Socrates writeth thus in the Greeke: καθ' ἑαυτοὺς ἐκκλησιάζειν: That is to say, To haue a Congregation or Assemblie by themselues: that doth Epiphanius Translate into Latine thus: Apud seipsos Missarum celebrare Solennia, that is, Among themselues to celebrate the solemnitie of the Masse. In these and many other like places, which I purposely passe by, it must needs be confessed, that Missa cannot any way bee taken for the Masse, but only for an Assemblie of the people. For which cause all maner of common prayers many times are called Missa, as may bee seene in Cassianus, an ancient Writer, and sometime Scholar to S. Chrysostome, In Canone Diuinarum Orationum, and Missa vsed for any assembly of the people.

Soz. li. 7. ca. 5. Epiphan. in tripart. hist. lib. 9. cap. 9. Socr. li. 5. c. 15. Epiph. in Trip. lib. 7. cap. 31.

Cassian. lib. 3. cap. 12.

and in Honorius, and others, sufficient only to be touched. But amongst all other significations, it cannot be found that this word Missa, in any old Writer was euer taken for the Priuate Masse, notwithstanding any thing by M. Harding yet alleged.

Missa in the old Writers neuer taken for Priuate Masse

Now if a man would say, that this Councell of Agatha, that is here brought in by this word Missa, meant nothing else but ordinarie praiers, in which signification the old Writers, as I haue proued, haue often taken it, and so dispensed with them that dwelt farre from the Church, only to haue such ordinarie praiers at home, and for the holy Communion to resort to the parish Churches, perhaps M. Harding should not finde much to replie against it. If he will say, I forge and raise this exposition only of my selfe, without president, it may please him to remember, that the same practise is yet continued vntill this day, in many parishes within this Realme: and that the Law it selfe determineth a difference betweene Ecclesia Parochialis, and Ecclesia Baptismalis.

16. Quæst. 1. Quidã Abbas.

But let this word Missa, in these Decrées bee taken for the Masse, that is to say, for the ministration of the Sacraments: yet is not M. Harding much therefore the nerer to proue his purpose. For, alas, what a simple reason is this, Vpon principall holy daies the Priest receiued the Sacrament solemnly in the Common Church, with all the whole parish: Ergo, at other times he receiued alone? Or how hangeth this argument, At certaine times all the people receiued together: Ergo, at other times the Priest receiued alone? Or this, The Priest ministred the Sacraments in a Chapell: Ergo, hee said Priuate Masse? What leadeth M. Harding thus to say? What, was there no companie at all in the Chapell to Communicate with the Priest? Verily it is prouided by the Decrée it selfe, that there should be a lawfull and an ordinarie companie. And that in such companies, yea and in mens seuerall houses they had the Communion ministred, it is euident by the Preface of the Councell of Gangra against the Heretike Eustachius. These bee the words: In domibus coniugatorum ne orationes quidem debere celebrari persuaserunt, intantum, vt easdem fieri vetent: & oblationibus, quæ in domibus factæ fuerint, minimè Communicandum esse decernant: They haue perswaded the people, that praiers may not be made in married mens houses: and that so farre forth that they forbid any such praiers to be made, and determine, that no man may Communicate of the oblations made in houses. Here we haue not only the Communion, but also the ordinarie vse of the Communion in Priuate houses.

Ca. 21. Inquibus est legitimus ordinarius q; conuentus. In Præfatione Con. Gangren.

Now let M. Harding shew vs as much for the ordinarie vse of Priuate Masse, or for any Priuate Masse at all, and that without his surmises and ghesses: and then let him hardly require Subscription.

Thou maist see, good Reader, these be but very poore helpes. In his former allegation he sought his Masse in little Townes and Villages: now hee hunteth for it in Priuate mens houses: and yet cannot finde it. They say, they haue had the vse and possession of their Priuate Masse these fiftéene hundred and threescore yéres, and more. Wherefore it is much to be marueiled, that of so long continuance of time, of so many Doctours and Councels, they haue so slender proofes to bring for it.

Yet for clérer answer vnto M. Hardings blinde ghesses, it appeareth by the plaine words of the same Councell of Agatha, that in those daies the people receiued the Holy Communion together with the Priest, and not the Priest by himselfe alone. The words are these: Lapsi in Hæresim, agentes pœnitentiam, cùm Catechumeni egredi commonentur, discedant: They that haue fallen into some Heresie, and doe penance for the same, when the Nouices (that be not yet Christened) be commanded to depart out of the Church, let them depart also. They were commanded forth, not to the intent they should not heare Masse, but that they should not Communicate with the rest. For it is well knowen both to M. Harding, and also to others, that all such as were newly entred into the Faith of Christ, but were not yet Baptized, and were called Catechumeni, after the Sermon was ended, were commanded out of the Church, before the Distribution of the holy Mysteries: and so likewise were the Penitents, that they should not Communicate with the rest of their brethren: which is a manifest and vndoubted proofe, that the rest of the brethren that remained still, did Communicate all together. And so it followeth in the same Canon: Hoc si obseruare voluerint, constituto tempore admittendis ad Altare obseruatio relaxetur: If they will doe thus, after a time appointed, their penance shall be released, and they shall be admitted againe vnto the Altar, (which was the Communion Table) there to receiue together with the Congregation, and no more to be commanded forth. Hereunto agreeth another Canon set forth in the name of Siricius, touching the same case, by these words: Certaine that after their penance haue gone backe again, like dogs vnto their vomit, we decree that they shall ioine in praier only with the faithfull within the Church: and that they may be present at the celebration of the Mysteries, although they bee not worthy: but that they be kept off from the banket of the Lords Table, to the intent, that by this aduertisement being corrected, they may both amend amend themselues, and also shew example vnto others. Here we may plainly see, that the rest receiued, and those that had offended sate by, and receiued not, for example vnto others. But what example could that haue bene, if they had all receiued altogether?

Con. Agathen. Can. 60.

Epist. Decretal. Siricij. Offenders kept from the Lords Table.

M. Harding. The 32. Diuision.

Now let vs see what examples of the old Fathers wee haue for the Priuate Masse. Leontius a Greeke Bishop of a Citie in the East Church called Neapolis, writeth the life of S. Iohn the holy Patriarke of Alexandria, who for his great charitie, was commonly called [a] Eleemosynarius, that is, the almes-giuer, telleth this storie, whereby it appeareth, that at that time Priuate Masse was vsed. Though the Translatour, through ignorance of the time he liued in, turned this life into Latine of meane eloquence, yet for truths sake, I will not let to recite that which I take for my purpose, as I finde it: Malitiam retinentem quendam induxit eum contra alium Principem, audiens hic magnus Iohannes, monuit eum sæpe, & suasit ad concordiam, & non potuit eum conuertere ad pacem. Statuit ergo ad eum mittit, & adducit eum sanctus, quasi pro publico, & facit Missas in Oratorio suo, nullum habens secum nisi ministrum suum. Cùm ergo Sancta benedixisset Patriarcha, & Orationem Dominicam inchoasset, cæperunt dicere tantum tres illi, Pater noster. Et cum peruenissent ad sermonem qui dicitur, Dimitte nobis debita nostra, sicut & nos dimittimus debitoribus nostris: innuit domestico Patriarcha, vt taceret. Siluit ergo & Patriarcha, & remansit Princeps solus dicens versum, Dimitte nobis, sicut & nos dimittimus. Et statim conuersus sanctus, dixit ei mansueta voce, Vide in quam terribilem vocem dixisti Deo, quoniam sicut ego dimitto, ita & tu dimitte mihi. Et tanquam ab igne flagitium cruciatum, ferens prædictus Princeps, cecidit in faciem ad pedes sancti, dicens, Quæcunque iusseris, Domine, faciet seruus tuus. Et reconciliatus est inimico suo cum omni veritate. This storie soundeth thus in English: This great Patriarke Iohn, hearing that a noble man bare malice to another noble man, warned him often times of it, and treated with him to be at accord: but he could not bring him to be at peace. Wherefore on a day this holy Father sent for the noble man, and caused him to come to him, as though it were about some matter of the Common Weale. At that time (39) he saith Masse in his Chapell, hauing none other body with him, but his seruant. When the Patriarke had consecrated the Sacrament, and had begun to say our Lords praier, they three only began to say, Our Father, and so foorth. When they were come to these words, Forgiue vs our trespasses, as we forgiue them that trespasse against vs, the Patriarke made a becke to his seruant to hold his peace. Then the Patriarke held his peace also, and the noble man remained alone saying foorth the verse, forgiue vs as wee forgiue. Then the holy Father turning himselfe towards him, by and by saith with a milde voice, Consider with how terrible words thou saist to God, that as I forgiue, so forgiue thou me also. Whereat the said noble man, as though he had felt the torment of fire, forthwith fell downe on his face at the holy Fathers feet, saying, My Lord, whatsoeuer thou biddest me thy seruant to doe, I will doe it. And so he was reconciled vnto his enemie without all dissembling.

M. Hard. proueth his Masse by a childish fable.

[a] Iohn the Almonar began to be in estimation in the yeere of our Lord 610.

The 39 vntruth. For there was neuer Priuate Masse said in Alexandria, neither before this time, nor at any time sithence.

Heere M. Iewell will grant, I trow, that this was a Priuate Masse. The place was priuate: the audience not publike, nor common: the purpose touching the noble man was priuate: the Communion also priuate, I meane for the Patriarkes part alone: for beside that the story maketh no mention of any other Communicants, hee could not be assured of that noble man to Communicate with him. For whereas hee could by no meanes before bring him to forgiue his enemie, he had but a small coniecture he should bring it to passe now. And againe, though he had conceiued no distrust of his reconciliation vpon this holy policie, yet we may doubt whether the Patriarke foorthwith, without further and more mature probation, and examination, which S. Paul in this case requireth, would haue admitted him to receiue our Lords Bodie so vpon the sudden. Now for the seruant, it is a strait case that so holy and so great a Patriarke, and Bishop of so populous a Citie, as Alexandria was, vnderstanding that Masse could not be celebrated without breach of Christs institution (as M. Iewell holdeth opinion) except hee haue a number to Communicate with him in the same place; should haue none of his spirituall flocke with him at so weighty a matter of conscience, but one only, and him his owne household seruant. He was not so simple, as not to thinke that the seruant might be letted from receiuing by some sudden pang comming vpon him, or with some cogitation and conscience of his owne vnworthinesse, suddenly comming to his minde. If either this, or any other let had chanced, in what case had the Patriarke beene then? Hee had beene like, by M. Iewels Doctrine, to haue broken Christs institution, and so Gods Commandement, through anothers defect, which were strange. But I iudge that M. Iewell, who harpeth so many iarring arguments against Priuate Masse, vpon the very word Communion will not allow that for a good and lawfull (a) Communion, where there is but one only to receiue with the Priest. Verily it appeareth by his Sermon, that all the people ought to receiue, or to be (b) driuen out of the Church. Now therefore to another example of the Priuate Masse.

Priuate Masse. Priuate Fable.

(a) Order was taken, that at the receiuing of the Communion there should bee twelue persons at the least, and neuer vnder. S. Basil, Exercitationis ad pietatem, Sermon 4.

(b) This Decree, as it is supposed, was made by Anacletus and Calixtus immediately after the Apostles time. De Con. dist. 1. Episcopus.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

This is the best proofe of all others. A short Answer may well serue it. For being but a little viewed, it is able to answer it selfe. There is neither authoritie in the tale, nor weight in the matter. The translation is peeuish: and all without the compasse of six hundred yeres.

S. Augustine saith, that certaine Heretikes in his time, named the Donatists, that they might the rather preuaile in disputation against S. Augustine, and other Christians, and that the world might vnderstand they had some companie of their side, therefore, for a shew, subscribed their articles with the names of certaine that were dead, and often times such as neuer were Donatists. Such a policie me thinketh M. Harding hath here begun to practise. For what is this Leontius that wrote this Storie? Or who euer heard of his name before? I trow he hath raised vp one of the seuen Sleepers to helpe him to Masse. Hee should haue shewed vs, as his maner is, what this strange Doctour was: what Bookes hee wrote: where, when, in what age, and in what credit he liued. If hee had said, This Iohn the Almonar liued aboue six hundred yeres after Christ, and this Leontius,

Aug. epist. 152.

M. Hard. rangeth without the compasse of 600. yeeres.

Iohn the Almonar.

tius, that wrote his life, a great while after that, this one circumstance would haue answered the matter wholly. For notwithstanding the rest of this tale were true, yet my assertion standeth still good, that within the space of six hundred yeres after Christ, M. Harding is not able to finde his Priuate Masse.

Vincent. in specul. li. 23. c. 17. Vincentius in his Booke that hee calleth Speculum, writeth thus: After Gregorie was dead, Bonifacius ruled the Church of Rome. This Bonifacius obtained of the Emperour Phocas, that the Church of Rome should be the head of all Churches, and that because the Church of Constantinople wrote it selfe by that Title. The next yeere after that, Augustine that was called the Englishmens Bishop, died. The yeere following, Iohn the Almonar was in great fame, at which time also Mahomet first spread his Religion in Arabia. The same computation of yeres appeareth in Freculphus, Sabellicus, Palmerius, and others. Wherefore M. Harding might well haue spared this tale, as nothing else but bewraying his want of better matter, and prouing that his Masse is of the very age of Mahomet.

An. Dom. 610.

But to leaue both the aduantage of the time, and also the exception against the Author, let vs consider the likelihood of the doing: and if Iohn the Almonar said this Priuate Masse in his Chapell, how safely he might so doe by the order of the holy Canons, which to breake, Damasus saith, Is blasphemie against the holy Ghost. M. Hardings Leontius saith, Iohn the Almonar said Masse in his Oratory at home, being sure of no more companie, but of one of his owne household seruants alone. But Pope Soter, as it is before alleged by M. Harding, 25. quæ. 1. Violatores.

De Con. dist. 1. Hoc quoque.

straitly commandeth, that no Priest presume to celebrate the Sacrament, without the companie of two together. [1] And againe, that no Priest dare to minister, without the companie of some other Priest. And in the [2] Councell holden at Orleance it is decreed thus: It is lawfull for euery Christian man to haue a Chapell in his house: but to haue Masse said there, it is not lawfull. And in the [3] Councell holden at Laodicea: It is not lawfull for Bishops or Priests to minister the Oblations at home. Likewise [4] Pope Felix: It is not lawfull to minister the Communion at home, but vpon exceeding great necessitie. The same order was taken in the Councell of Acon, and in sundry other Councels. Which Decrees being so many, and so strait, it is not likely that Iohn the Almonar, being so holy a man, would wilfully breake them all without cause.

[1] De Con. dist. 1. vt illud.

[2] De Con. dist. 1 vnicuique.

[3] Conc. Laodicen. Ca. 58.

[4] Inter Decret. Felicis Papæ, Decret. 4.

Neither indeed, if M. Harding will thoroughly behold the matter, shall he finde here any Masse spoken of at all, neither Bread, nor Wine, nor Consecration, nor Oblation, nor Eleuation, nor Altar, nor Vestiment, nor any other thing to the Masse belonging.

And if we agree there was Masse said there, yet may there grow another doubt, which of these three said that Masse: I meane, the Bishop, or the Gentleman, or the Seruant. For here is no more noted, but that they said the Lords praier all three together: which verily is not the maner of Priuate Masse. For there the Priest, as hee receiueth alone, so hee saith the Pater noster himselfe alone. But in the Communion, as the people said the Lords praier all together, as it is noted by S. Gregorie, so they receiued all together. Thus M. Harding bringeth a Witnesse for the Masse, that saith nothing for the Masse. The Law saith: Qui mutum exhibet, nihil exhibet: Hee that presenteth a dumbe body, presenteth no body.

Gregor. Lib. 7. Epist. 63.

De verbor. & rer. significat. Apud Labeon.

But hee will reply, here is the very name of the Masse: & facit Missas. And to make the more appearance, M. Harding helpeth it forth with a pretie false translation of his owne. For whereas it is written in the Latine, Cùm benedixisset Sancta; he translateth it thus: When he had Consecrate the Sacrament: And likewise these words, Post finem orationum, he translateth thus: After he had done the praier of Consecration: notwithstanding he knew right well, that in these words there is no mention at all, neither of any Sacrament, nor of any Consecration. And thus: Vocat ea quæ non sunt, tanquam sint: Hee calleth things that be not, as though they were: and yet is not afraid of Lex Cornelia de falsis.

M. Hard. corrupteth and falsifieth his translation.

Roman. 4.

But this, I trow, he himselfe will confesse, is no sincere nor plaine dealing. Yet will he say, here is the very word Missa. It is well knowen, that Missa is no Greeke word, and therefore Leontius, whatsoeuer he were, in his Greeke tongue could not vse it. As for the Translater, seeing he was not able to write true Latine, wee may well thinke he had simple skill in the Greeke.

But grant wee there be no errour in the word: yet will it not necessarily follow, that Missa in this place importeth the Masse. For, as I haue already proued by sundry authorities, Missa is often times vsed for any kinde of praier: as it may further appeare by an Epistle of Chromatius and Heliodorus, sent vnto S. Hierome, touching Gregorie the Bishop of Corduba: and by the words of the Councell of Cabilon. Which thing also very well agreeth with the custome and order of the Church of Alexandria at that time, whereof Nicephorus writeth thus: Quarta hebdomadis die, & ea quæ Parasceue dicitur, Alexandrini xandrini Scripturas legebant, Doctoribus eas interpretantibus: omniáque, quæ ad Synaxin pertinent, peragebant, præter Diuinorum Mysteriorum perceptionem. Atque eam illi antiquitùs habuere consuetudinem: At Alexandria they read the Scriptures vpon Wednesdaies and Fridaies, and the Doctors or Preachers expound the same. And they doe all things that appertaine vnto the Communion, saning onely the receiuing of the Holy Mysteries. And this custome there they haue had of old. Iohn the Almonar.

Chromatius. De Con. dist. 1. Solent plures.

Nicepher. lib. 12. cap. 34.

Touching these words, Benedicere Sancta, they doe no more signifie the Consecration of the Sacrament, as M. Harding hath translated it, than these words, Extollite manus vestras in Sancta, doe signifie the lifting vp of hands to the Sacrament. Chrysostome in his Liturgie vseth the same maner of speech to a farre other purpose. For after the Communion is ended, and the people ready to depart forth, he writeth thus: Sacerdos Benedicit Sancta, & exuit. Here if M. Harding will take Benedicere Sancta, for Consecration, there must needs follow a great inconuenience, that there were two Consecrations in one Communion: yea and one Consecration after all was ended. It may appeare that Chrysostome by these words meant a solemne prayer to conclude the whole. For it followeth immediately: O thou that art the fulfilling of the Law and Prophets, Christ our God, thou that hast fulfilled all the dispensation of the Father, fill our hearts with ioy and gladnesse now and for euer. This Chrysostome calleth Benedicere Sancta: and the same seemeth to bee the meaning of this Leontius, whatsoeuer he were. And notwithstanding all these things were granted, yet is not M. Harding able thereof necessarily to import his Priuate Masse. Benedicere Sancta. Chrysost. in Liturg. ad finem.

But saith hee, The place was Priuate, the audience was Priuate, the purpose was Priuate: only one noble man, only one seruant, all was Priuate. And further he saith: It was a very strait case, that so holy a Bishop, in so populous a Towne, could finde no man to Communicate with him, but his owne seruant only. Yea doubtlesse, it was a very strait case, that a noble man should be driuen to helpe the Priest to Masse: A strait case for M. Harding to run to Alexandria, a thousand miles beyond all Christendome, to seeke his Masse, and that not in open Church neither, but only in a Priuate Oratorie: A strait case, that for the space of six hundred yeares after Christ, and more, there was not one Priuate Masse to bee found in the whole Church of Rome: A very strait case, that M. Harding is thus forced to leaue S. Augustine, S. Hierome, S. Chrysostome, and all other the godly learned Fathers, and to take vp of the dust Hippolytus, Abdias, Leontius, and other like new Doctors, without name or credit, such as neuer were thought worthy to be alleged or named before.

Yet hee forceth his ghesses further: The noble man came vnlooked for: The seruant might haue had some sudden pangue, or some conscience of his vnworthinesse, and so the Priest perforce must haue receiued alone. Here to answer ghesse with ghesse, euen so might the Priest also himselfe haue had some sudden pangue or qualme: as indeed it is specially presumed by the Law, that it may so happen: or else some sudden conscience of his owne vnworthinesse: and so had there beene no Masse at all. Alas, these ghesses be too light in so great a matter. De Con. dist. 1. Vt illud.

Here further for his pleasure hee saith, M. Iewell harpeth many iarring arguments. Of my arguments I make no vaunt: If they sound well in Gods eares, they are well in tune: God be thanked, wee lead not the people by aimes and ghesses: we reare vp no new Doctors: wee cumber not the peoples eares with lies and fables, as M. Harding doth: wee bring forth neither women nor boies to proue the Communion, as these men are driuen to doe, to proue their Masse.

Moreouer, hee saith in scorne, as his maner is, that we would haue all the people, that will not receiue, to bee driuen out of the Church. O, M. Harding, how long will you thus wilfully peruert the waies of the Lord? You know, this is neither the Doctrine, nor the practise of our Church. Howbeit, the ancient Doctors haue both taught so, and also practised the same. Anacletus saith: After the Consecration is ended, let all receiue, vnlesse they will bee thrust from the Church. And Calixtus saith further: For so is it appointed by the Apostles, and so is it obserued in the Church of Rome. De Con. dist. 1. Episcopus. De Con. dist. 2. Peracta.

Now saith M. Harding, The place was Priuate: Ergo, There was a Priuate Masse. A Childe may soone see that this reason hath no hold. For touching that the place was priuate, S. Gregorie saith thus of one Cassius the Bishop of Narnium: He said Masse (which is, hee ministred the Communion) in an Oratorie within his Palace, and with his owne hand he gaue the Body of the Lord, and peace vnto them all. The like whereof we may see in the Preface before the Councell of Gangra. And in the Tripartite Story it is written thus: Gregorie Nazianzene at Constantinople in a little Oratorie, συναγωγὰς ἐποίει, made assemblies of the people. Here we see, the action was common, and a full Communion ministred, notwithstanding the place were priuate. Greg. hom. 37. in Euang. In præfatione in Concilium Gangren. Hist. Tripart. lib. 9. cap. 8.

Againe

Iohn the Almonar.

Againe he saith, There were but three:
Ergo, But one did receiue.

This reason holdeth as the former.

Consider now, gentle Reader, how aptly M. Harding answereth to the purpose. I demand the authoritie of S. Augustine, S. Hierome, or some other Catholike ancient Father: he answereth me with a childish Fable. I demand of the vsage of the open Church: hee answereth mee with a priuate Oratorie, as though at that time there had beene no Churches built. I demand what was done in the face and sight of the people: he answereth me what he supposeth was done in a corner. I demand of him vndoubted truth and certaintie: he answereth me by coniecture and blinde gheſſe.

I beleeue he would not willingly haue hindred his owne cause. If he could haue found better matter, doubtlesse hee would haue brought it forth. Is this the Antiquitie, is this the Universalitie, that they so much talke and glory of? Is this the common consent of all the World?

1 Thus then, gentle Reader, standeth my Answer to this tale. First, that it was forbidden by many Decrees, to minister the Sacrament in priuate houses: and therefore vnlikely that Iohn the Almonar, being a godly man, would presume to doe the contrarie.

2 Secondly, that this word Missa, vsed heere by the rude and vtterly vnlearned Interpreter, doth not necessarily import the Masse.

3 Thirdly, that M. Harding, the better to furnish out the matter, hath violently, and of purpose, falsified the Translation.

4 Fourthly, that notwithstanding heere were granted the celebration of the Sacrament, yet it cannot be forced thereof, that the Priest receiued alone.

5 Fiftly, that although this were proued a Priuate Masse, yet hath M. Harding vtterly misreckoned himselfe, and so gotten nothing. For it was without the compasse of fiue hundred yeeres.

6 Last of all, hereunto I adde, that the place where these things are imagined to be done, was ill chosen, and very vnlikely to serue this purpose. For M. Harding is not able to proue, that in the Citie of Alexandria was euer any one Priuate Masse said, either before that time, or euer sithence.

M. Harding. The 33. Diuision.

A fabulous tale vnder the name of Amphilochius.

Amphilochius Bishop of Iconium, the head Citie of Lycaonia, to whom S. Basil dedicated his booke De Spiritu Sancto, and another booke intituled Ascetica, writing the life of S. Basil, or rather the miracles through Gods power by him wrought, which hee calleth, worthy of record, true, and great miracles: specially such as were not by the three most worthy men, Gregory Nazianzene, Gregory Nyssene, and holy Effrem, in their Epitaphicall, or funerall treatises, before mentioned: amongst other things, reporteth a notable storie, wherein we haue a cleere testimonie of a Priuate Masse. And for the thing that the storie sheweth, as much as for any other, of the same Amphilochius he is called Cœlestium virtutum Collocutor, & Angelicorum ordinum Comministler: A talker together with the heauenly powers, and a fellow seruant with orders of Angels. The story is this: This holy Bishop Basil besought God in his praiers, he would giue him grace, wisdome, and vnderstanding, so as he might offer the Sacrifice of Christs blood-shedding, propriis seruandis, with praiers and seruice of his owne making; and that the better to atchieue that purpose, the holy Ghost might come vpon him. After six daies hee was in a trance, for cause of the holy Ghosts comming. When the seuenth day was come, hee began to minister vnto God, that is to wit, he said Masse euery day. After certaine time thus spent, through faith and praier, hee began to write with his owne hand, Mysteria manifestationis, the Masse, or the seruice of the Masse. On a night our Lord came vnto him in a vision with the Apostles, and laid Bread to be Consecrated on the holy Altar; and stirring vp Basil, said vnto him: Secundum postulationem tuam, repleatur os tuum laude, &c. According to thy request, let thy mouth bee filled with praise, that with thine owne words thou maist offer vp to me Sacrifice. He not able to abide the vision with his eies, rose vp with trembling, and going to the holy Altar, began to say that he had written in paper thus: Repleatur os meum laude, & hymnum dicat gloriæ tuæ, Domine Deus, qui creasti nos, & adduxisti in vitam hanc, & ceteras orationes sanctæ ministeriæ: Let my mouth bee filled with praise, to vtter an hymne to thy glorie, Lord God, which hast created vs, and brought vs into this life, and so foorth, the other praiers of the Masse. It followeth in the story: Et post finem orationum, exaltauit Panem, sine intermissione orans, & dicens, Respice Domine Iesu Christe, &c. After that hee had done the praiers of Consecration, hee lifted vp the Bread, praying continually, and saying, Looke vpon vs, Lord Iesus Christ, out of thy holy Tabernacle, and come to sanctifie vs, that sittest aboue with thy Father, and art heere present inuisibly with vs, vouchsafe with thy mighty hand to deliuer to vs, and by vs to all thy people, Sancta Sanctis, thy holy things to the holy. The people answered, One holy, one our Lord Iesus Christ, with the holy Ghost, in glory of God the Father, Amen.

The people answered: yet was there no people there.

The burying of the Sacrament. Seuen yeeres after he had seene this vision.

Now let vs consider what followeth, pertaining most to our purpose: Et diuidens panem in tres partes, vnam quidem Communicauit timore multo, alteram autem reseruauit consepelire secum, tertiam vero imposuit Columbæ aureæ, quæ pependit super Altare: He diuided the Bread into three parts, of which he receiued one at his Communion, with great feare and reuerence, the other he reserued, that it might be buried with him, and the third part he caused to be put in a golden pyx that was hanged vp ouer the Altar, made in the forme and shape of a Doue. After this, a little before the end of this treatise, it followeth how that S. Basil, at the houre that hee departed out of this life, receiued that part of the Host himselfe, which he had purposed to haue interred enterred with him in his graue, and immediately as he lay in his bed, gaue thanks to God and rendred vp the ghoſt.

That this was a Priuate Maſſe no man can denie. Baſil receiued the Sacrament alone, for there was no earthly creature in that Church with him. The people that anſwered him were ſuch as Chriſt brought with him. And that all this was no dreame, but a thing by the will of God done indeed, though in a viſion, as it pleaſed Chriſt to exhibite, Amphilochius plainly witneſſeth, declaring how that one Eubulus, and other the chiefe of that Clergy, ſtanding before the gates of the Church, whiles this was in doing, ſaw lights within the Church, and men clothed in white, and heard a voice of people glorifying God, and beheld Baſil ſtanding at the Altar, and for this cauſe at his comming foorth fell downe proſtrate at his feet. Here M. Iewell and his Conſacramentaries do ſtagger, I doubt not: for grant to a Priuate Maſſe they will not, whatſoeuer be brought for proſe of it. And therfore ſome doubt to auoid this authority muſt be deuiſed. But whereof they ſhould doubt, verily I ſee not. If they doubt any thing of the bringing of the bread and other neceſſaries to ſerue for Conſecration of the hoſt, let them alſo doubt of the Bread & Fleſh that Elias had in the pond of Carith. Let them doubt of the bread and pot of water he had vnder the Iuniper tree in Berſabee. Let them doubt of the pot of pottage brought to Daniel for his dinner, from Iewry into the Caue of Lions at Babylon, by Abacuk the Prophet. But perhaps they doubt of the authority of Amphilochius that wrote this ſtory. It may well be that they would be glad to diſcredit that worthy Biſhop. For he was that vigilant Paſtour and good Gouernour of the Church, who firſt with Letoius Biſhop of Melite, and with Flauianus Biſhop of Antioch ouerthrew and vtterly vanquiſhed the Heretikes called Meſſaliani, otherwiſe Euchitæ, the firſt parents of the Sacramentary hereſie; whoſe opinion was, that the holy Euchariſtie, that is, the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, doth neither good nor euill, neither profiteth ought nor hurteth. Euen as our Sacramentaries do aſcribe all to faith only, and (40) call the moſt worthieſt Sacrament none other but tokening bread, which of it ſelfe hath no diuine efficacie or operation. Therefore I wonder the leſſe, I ſay, if they would Amphilochius his authority to be diminiſhed. But for this I will match them with great Baſil, who eſteemed him ſo much, who loued him ſo intirely, who honoured him ſo highly with the dedication of ſo excellent workes. I will ioine them alſo with the learned Biſhop Theodoretus, who ſeemeth to giue him ſo ſoueraigne praiſe, as to any other Biſhop he writeth his ſtories of, neuer naming him without preface of great honour, now calling him Admirandum, the wonderfull; at another time Sapientiſſimum, the moſt wiſe; and moſt commonly Laudatiſſimum, moſt praiſe woorthy. If they doubt of Baſil himſelfe, whether he were a man worthy to obtaine by his praier of God ſuch a viſion, it may pleaſe them to peruſe what Gregorius Nyſſenus, what holy Ephrem of Syria, and ſpecially what Gregory Nazianzene wrote of him, which two Gregories be not afraid to compare him with Elias, with Moſes, with S. Paul, & with whoſoeuer was greateſt, and for vertue of moſt renowne. Whereby without all enuie hee hath obtained of all the poſterity to be called Magnus, Baſil the Great, much more for deſert of vertue and learning, than thoſe other for merit of Chiualrie, the Great Charles, the Great Pompey, the Great Alexander. If they denie the whole treatiſe, and ſay, that it was neuer of Amphilochius doing, that were a ſhift indeed, but yet the worſt of all and furtheſt from reaſon and cuſtome of the beſt learned, and much like the fact of king Alexander, who being deſirous to vndoe the fatall knot at Gordium, a Towne in Phrygia, hearing that the Empire of the World was boded by an old propheſie to him that could vnknit it, not finding out the ends of the ſtrings, nor perceiuing by what meanes he could doe it, drew foorth his ſword and hewed it in peeces, ſupplying want of skill with wilfull violence. For the authority of this Treatiſe, this much I can ſay. Beſide that it is ſet foorth in a Booke of certaine holy mens liues Printed in Colen, and beſide very great likelihood appearing in the Treatiſe it ſelfe; it is to be ſeene in the Library of S. Nazarius in the City of Verona in Italy, written in Velume for three hundred yeeres paſt, bearing the name of Amphilochius Biſhop of Iconium.

The forcing of this table.

Chriſt and his Apoſtles bring bread from Heauen.

Rather the firſt parents of hypocriticall and idle Monkes.

The 40. vntruth. For we neuer called it ſo.

The glorious painting of a ſhadow.

Set abroad lately with other fables.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

If this ſerue not the turne, nothing, I trow, will euer ſerue. The authoritie of S. Baſil and Amphilochius is ſo great: the matter ſo cleare: the wonder ſo ſtrange: the antiquity ſo ancient: the fable ſo likely: the dreame ſo plaine: The original hereof at Verona, in Italy in the Library of Nazarius, kept as a Relike faire written in velume aboue three hundred yeres agoe: Baſil a worthy Biſhop; Ephrem a holy Father; Amphilochius a man that had conference with the heauenly powers. Not one ſhew or circumſtance left out, that may ſerue to win credit. And what ſhould need ſo much ado, if there were not ſome ſuſpition in the matter? He that neuer ſaw this Booke, nor knoweth the contents thereof, happily by ſuch circumſtances and colours may be deceiued.

But I my ſelfe haue had this vnknowen Doctour in my poore Library theſe twenty yeres and more, written likewiſe in velume, as true, as faire, and of as good record in all reſpects, as that other of Verona, indeed not vnder the name of Amphilochius: but no doubt very ancient, as it may ſome appeare. For the ſame Authour in the ſame Booke hath written alſo the life of Thomas Becket, who liued at the leaſt ſeuen hundred yeres after that Amphilochius, this Writer, was dead. Therefore that ſtory written by him of one that was to come ſo many hundred yeres after him, muſt needs be a propheſie, and not a ſtory.

The very names of old godly Fathers are worthy of much honour. But as it is well knowen, many vaine tales haue beene couered vnder the name of old Fathers. The life of S. Baſil hath beene ſet forth fully and faithfully by ſundry old worthy writers, as by his owne Brother Georgius Nyſſenus, by his deare friend Gregory Nazianzene, by Gregorius Presbyter, by Socrates, by Theodoretus, by Sozomenus, by Nicephorus, touched alſo in diuers places by Chryſoſtome. And notwithſtanding of late yeres he that wrote Vitas Patrum, and Iacobus de Voragine, and Vincentius in ſpeculo, who ſeeme to intitle this this Booke by the name of Amphilochius, haue furnished the same with many vnsauory vaine tales, yet was there none of them so impudent, once to make any mention of this peruish fable of M. Hardings Masse.

The fable of Amphilochius.

But forsomuch as the glorious name of this holy Father is here brought in to beare witnesse to these matters, and that in the night season in a dreame, and a vision, with the visible appearance of Christ and his Apostles, and the great stay of M. Hardings cause resteth hereupon, and many are amazed with the strangenesse hereof, and many are led away as though it were matter of good truth, and specially for that the Booke is not commonly to be had: and it would be chargeable to send to Verona into Italy for a Copy: suffer me therefore, good Christian Reader, to giue thee some taste of the same, that thou maist be able of thy selfe to iudge further, and to see, by what Doctours, M. Harding proueth his Priuate Masse.

The contents of M. Hardings Amphilochius. Tert. li. 5. contra Marcionem.

To passe ouer the idle talke and conference with Diuels, the Visions, the Dreames, the Fables, and other fantasticall vanities, which are the whole contents and substance of this new Booke, Tertullian hath a good discreet saying: Furibus aliqua semper excidere solent in indicium: The theefe euermore leaueth somewhat behinde him that he may be knowen by. Let vs therefore compare M. Hardings Amphilochius with Socrates, Sozomenus, Gregory Nazianzene, Gregory Nyssene, and other old Writers of approued credit, that haue of purpose written S. Basils life.

Socr. li. 4. ca. 21 Sozom. lib. 6. cap. 17. Nazian. in vita Basilij. Gregor. Presbyter in vita Nazianzeni. Nazian. in vita Basilij.

Socrates and Sozomenus say, that Basil in his youth was Libanius Scholar: M. Hardings Amphilochius saith, Basil was Libanius schole fellow.

Nazianzene and Gregorius Presbyter say, that Basil continuing at Cæsaria, was well acquainted with Eusebius the Bishop there, before he went into Pontus: M. Hardings Amphilochius saith, that at his returne from Pontus, which was some after, Eusebius knew him not, neither had euer spoken with him or seene him before.

M. Hardings Amphilochius saith, Basil was Bishop of Cæsaria in the time of the Emperour Iulianus, whereupon also are founded a great many fond fables: Nazianzene his nereest friend saith, he was chosen Bishop there a long while after, in the time of the Emperour Valens, and was not Bishop there at all during the whole time of Iulianus.

Nazian. in oratione 2. contra Iulian. Socrat. lib. 3. cap. 18. Theod. lib. 3. cap. 25. Sozo. li. 6. ca. 2. Theo. li. 3. ca. 2. Sozom. lib. 6. cap. 16. Nazian. in Monodia. Greg. Presbyter in vita Nazianzen.

M. Hardings Amphilochius telleth a long tale, how that S. Mercury being then dead, and a Saint in Heauen, at the commandement of our Lady, toke his owne Speare out of his Chappell where it was kept, and went out with the same into the field, and slew the Emperour Iulian, and that the same Speare was found bloudy afterward: Nazianzene, Socrates, Theodoretus, and Sozomenus say, it could neuer be knowen by whom he was slaine.

M. Hardings Amphilochius saith, Basil foretold the death of Iulian. Theoderetus saith, it was one Iulianus Sabba that foretold it, and not S. Basil.

M. Hardings Amphilochius saith, the Emperour Valens yelded and gaue place vnto Basil: Sozomenus saith, the Emperour continued still his purpose, and would not yeld. M. Hardings Amphilochius saith, Nazianzenus was present at S. Basils Burial: Nazianzene himselfe, that ought to know it best, saith he came afterward, and was not present.

Gregorius Presbyter saith, Nazianzene came a great while after that Basil was buried. M. Hardings Amphilochius is so impudent, that he saith, Nazianzenus came in all haste, and saw the blessed Body, and fell vpon it when it was buried. Whereby it seemeth, that this Amphilochius was not very wise, nor circumspect in his talke. For if Nazianzene saw S. Basils Body, how was it buried? If it were buried, how could he see it?

Againe, M. Hardings Amphilochius saith, Gregory Nazianzene ruled the Apostolike See for the space of 12. yeres. By the Apostolike See he must needs meane either Rome or Constantinople. If he meane Rome, Nazianzene was neuer Bishop there: If he meane Constantinople, where indeed he was Bishop, yet was that neuer called the Apostolike See: and so, whatsoeuer he meant, he made a lie.

Now iudge thou indifferently, good Christian Reader, whether Amphilochius the Bishop of Iconium, S. Basils speciall and nereest friend, writing of him that he knew so well, could possibly so many waies be deceiued. If M. Harding had knowen him better, I thinke, he would haue spared this authoritie. Howbeit Vlpian saith: Etiam monstra & portentosi partus prosunt: Euen monsters and ill shapen children may goe for children.

De verbor. & rer. significat. Queret aliquis

To come to the matter, M. Hardings Amphilochius thus telleth on his tale: Basil saith he, being once made Bishop, besought God that he might offer vp the vnbloody Sacrifice with his owne words: he fell in a trance: came againe to himselfe: and so ministred euery day.

day. On a certaine night Chriſt with his Apoſtles came downe to him from heauen; brought bread with him; awoke Baſil, and bade him vp and offer the Sacrifice. Vp he aroſe; was ſtraight at the Altar; ſaid his prayers as he had written them in his paper; lifted vp the bread; laid it downe againe; brake it in three parts; receiued one; reſerued another to be buried with him; hung vp the third in a golden Doue. And all this was done, Chriſt and his Apoſtles being ſtill preſent, who came purpoſely from Heauen to helpe Baſil to ſay Maſſe.

The fable of Amphilochius

We may now the better beleeue Homer, that Iupiter with his Gods went downe ſometime for his pleaſure to banket in Ethiopia: Or that an [a] Angell euermore miniſtred the Sacrament vnto Marcus that holy Monke: Or that [b] Angels came from Heauen to conſecrate Amphilochius Biſhop of Iconium: [c] Or that the holy Ghoſt was ſent from Heauen to Remigius with a Boxe of Holy Oile: [d] Or that when holy Arnulphus began Matins at midnight, and ſaid, Domine labia &c. and all his Monkes were aſleepe, a number of Angels ſupplied the lacke, and anſwered him, Et os meum annunciabit laudem tuam.

[a] Sozomenus lib. 6. cap. 29.
[b] Niceph. lib. 11. cap. 20.
[c] Paulus Æmilius. Gaguinus.
[d] Henricus Herfordien. cap. 49.

But M. Harding layeth on more weight and forceth this fable to his purpoſe: and albeit in the whole tale there is not once the name of Maſſe, yet is he content to take paines cunningly to falſifie the text, and ſeuen times together to tranſlate it only by the name of Maſſe. For with him, Offerre Sacrificium, is to ſay Maſſe; likewiſe, Miniſtrare Deo, is to ſay Maſſe; and Miniſterium miniſtrationis, is the ſeruice of the Maſſe. For as Midas whatſoeuer he touched had power to turne the ſame into gold; ſo M. Harding, whatſoeuer he toucheth, hath a ſpeciall power to turne the ſame into his Maſſe.

M. Harding falſifieth his owne fable.

But let vs a little view the Circumſtances, and weigh the likelyhods of this matter. Baſil beſought God that he might make the Sacrifice with his owne words. And ſhall we thinke hee had more fancie to his owne words than he had to the words of Chriſt? He awoke, ſtood vp, and ſuddenly was at the Altar at midnight. What, ſhall we thinke hee was the Sertine there, or lay all night like Eli, or Samuel, in the Church; and yet being ſo famous a Biſhop had no man to attend vpon him?

He diuided the Bread, and laid vp the third part of it in a golden Doue, that hung ouer the Altar; and yet by his owne tale, his golden Doue then was not yet ready made. For it followeth immediately in the next lines; After Baſil had done theſe things, and had communed with Eubulus, and others, the next day hee ſent for a Gold ſmith, and made a Doue of pure Gold. It behoueth a liar to be mindfull what he ſaith. If this Doue were made before, how was it made afterward? If it were not made before, how could it then hang ouer the Altar? Or how could Baſil put his bread in it before it was made? And to what end was that Bread ſo kept in the Doue? And wherein, or where was the other third part kept, that Baſil thus reſerued purpoſely to be buried, or as M. Harding termeth it, to bee interred with him? Wherein M. Hardings Amphilochius both vttereth words of manifeſt blaſphemie, and alſo ſhamefully belieth that holy Father, and doth him great and open iniurie. It was but fondly done by S. Benet, as Gregory reporteth of him, to cauſe the Sacrament to bee laid vpon a dead mans breſt: and likewiſe it was as fondly done of others that miniſtred the Sacrament vnto the dead, and gaue it into their mouthes: which thing is namely forbidden by the Councell of Carthage.

The golden Doue.

Dialogorum, lib. 2. cap. 24.

Conc. Carthag. 3. can. 6.

But the Sacrament being, as M. Harding would haue the world beleeue, no Bread, no Wine, and ſo no Sacrament at all, but only the Naturall and Reall Body of Chriſt, it were horrible blaſphemie to bury it, and as a dead thing to lay it in the graue.

The burying of the Sacrament.

Further, as this Doctour ſaith, S. Baſil had this dreame or viſion, and reſerued this portion of the Sacrament, immediatly after he was made Biſhop of Cæſarea, and after that as it is cleare by other ſtories, continued Biſhop there, ſeuen yeeres at the leaſt. Now iudge thou (gentle Reader) what kinde of bread that would haue beene after ſeuen yeeres keeping, to bee giuen to a ſicke man in his death bed. So many abſurdities and contrarieties may eaſily be found in the very ſhew and light of this childiſh fable.

The Sacrament reſerued ſeuen yeeres.

Yet ſaith M. Harding, Heere doth M. Iewel with his Conſacramentaries ſtagger and knoweth not what to ſay. Yea verily, M. Harding, we are aſtonied to conſider the wonderfull and iuſt iudgements of God, that any man ſhould ſo wilfully renounce Gods knowen truth, and be thus vtterly giuen ouer to follow lies: or ſo much to preſume of his owne wit and eloquence, that he thinketh himſelfe able to ouerrule and lead all the World with a fable. As for axes or inſtruments to hew vp this knot, wee need none. Euery childe may ſee the ends. It openeth and looſeth it ſelfe. Chriſt commeth with his Apoſtles downe from Heauen to heare Maſſe. The Apoſtles ſing Maſſe by note: Chriſt plaieth the Clerkes part, and attendeth the Prieſt: Amphilochius writeth Thomas Beckets life ſe-

The true Amphilochius.

uen hundred yeres before he was borne: S. Basil lieth all night in the Vestry: He hangeth vp a golden Doue first, and maketh it afterward. He keepeth a portion of the Sacrament seuen yeres together: He receiueth the same in his death bed, and is buried: or as M. Harding delighteth rather to say, is interred with it: besides a multitude of other like follies and fables. This is that wonderfull Gordius fatall knot, that can neuer be opened without an axe.

The true Amphilochius.

And although M. Hardings Amphilochius were a manifest and an impudent liar, yet I confesse, and it is well knowen, that the true Amphilochius of Iconium, was a godly and a worthy Bishop, stout and courageous in suppressing the Messalians, the first parents, as M. Harding here saith, of the Sacramentary Heresies. Howbeit the rest of his brethren, and he himselfe elsewhere saith, Berengarius was the first father of that Heresie. For afterward in the Fifth Article he writeth thus: Berengarius first began openly to sow the wicked seed of the Sacramentary Heresie. So it appeareth that M. Harding neither is resolued in the Heresie, nor can tell when it first began. Notwithstanding the seed that he called wicked, was first sowen, neither by the Messalians, nor by Berengarius, but by Christ himselfe, and by his Apostles.

M. Harding much forgetteth himselfe.

The first Fathers of idle Monkes.

Indeed the Messalians, whom Amphilochius suppressed, were Heretikes, the Fathers of many idle swarmes, yet remaining in the World. They were named in Greeke φαλλιανοι, or ευχιτοι, of their long counterfet praying. S. Augustine saith: They praied so much, or so fast, that a man that knew it not, would not thinke it possible. They thought it vnlawfull for a Monke to labour for his liuing, and therefore became Monkes, that they might be free from labour. Thus farre S. Augustine.

Aug. ad Quodvult-Deum.

Theod. Heret. Fabular. lib. 4.

Theodoretus saith: Orationi vacantes, maximam diei partem dormiunt: They giue themselues to Contemplation, and sleepe the most part of the day. S. Augustine saith: Tanquam conseruatricem Euangelij prædicant pigritiam: They highly commend sloth, as if it were the maintenance of the Gospell. For these causes Amphilochius being the Archbishop of Lycaonia, and Flauianus the Bishop of Antioch withstood them, and draue them from their Diocesses: and Letoius being an earnest and a zealous man vtterly consumed and burnt their Monasteries, or rather as Theodoretus termeth it, their Dennes of Thernes.

De opere Monach. cap. 22.

Theoderetus lib. 4. cap. 11. μᾶλλον ὃ λῃστεῖα καὶ σπήλαια.

These were the Messalians, not the open maintainers of any errour touching the Mysticall Supper: neither doth either S. Augustine or Epiphanius report any such matter of them.

Indeed Theodoretus saith, they had certaine secret instructions among themselues, that Sacraments did at all neither further nor hinder: meaning thereby aswell the Sacrament of Baptisme, as the Sacrament of Christs Body: into which errour they were lead, for that they gaue all perfection and holinesse to their Praiers, and in respect thereof refused the Communion of their Brethren.

But whereas M. Harding saith: This is also our doctrine, and that we teach the people, the Sacrament of Christs body to bee nothing else but tokening Bread; his owne conscience knoweth it is a slander, and will be required of him in the day of the Lord. Our doctrine is, that the Sacraments of Christ, vnto the godly are the instruments of the Holy Ghost: and vnto the wicked are increase of further iudgement. Like as S. Augustine also saith: Sacramentum sumitur quibusdam ad vitam, quibusdam ad exitium. Res vero ipsa cuius est Sacramentum, omni homini ad vitam, nulli ad mortem, quicunque eius particeps fuerit. The Sacrament is receiued of some vnto life, of some vnto destruction. But the thing it selfe (that is, the Body of Christ) whereof it is a Sacrament, is receiued of all men to life, and of no man to destruction, whosoeuer be partaker of it. Here S. Augustine maketh great and manifest difference betweene the Body of Christ, and the Sacrament of the same. And this is not the Messalian Monkes heresie, but S. Augustines, and the Catholike Faith.

August. in Ioh. Tract. 26.

Now to denie that euer this was Amphilochius doing, that (saith M. Harding) were a shift indeed. Thus he is bold to say, I beleeue, for that he neuer considered the whole Booke. For otherwise he might sone haue seene it is but a rude gathering out of the Tripartite Story in many places word by word, without discretion, with interlacing of lies and fables of his owne, without shame. Neither can M. Harding iustly proue, that euer Amphilochius wrote S. Basils life. For notwithstanding a clause in Nazianzenes Monodia touching the same, as it is now extant in Latine, yet must he vnderstand, that the said clause was thrust in by Volaterane the Translatour, a man that hath peruerted and altered a great part of that Booke, as by conference to any learned man may appeare, and is not to bee found in the Greeke. But false translation maketh no proofe.

Amphilochius neuer wrote S. Basils life.

But, This Booke is found at Verona in Italy; he might aswell haue said, at Falsona. It is written in Velume. This is but a simple allegation. A Calues skin is no sufficient warrant of truth: lies haue beene written in letters of gold.

The

The table of Amphilochius

The allegation of the Booke called ἀσκητικὸν, which M. Harding saith, S. Basil dedicated to Amphilochius, rather hindereth, than further his matter. For Nazianzenus reckoning vp all S. Basils Bookes, passeth that booke by, as none of his. And Sozomenus saith, it was euer doubted of, and thought of many neuer to be written by S. Basil, but rather by an Heretike named Eustathius, a booke full of superstition and wicked doctrine, and namely condemned by the Councell of Gangra.

Nazianzen. in Monodia. Sozom. li. 3. cap. 13. Præfat. in Concil. Grangrense. Eubulus.

But Eubulus is witnesse of these things: He peared in at the creuise, and espied what was done. Certainly a mete witnesse for such a matter. I haue heard sometime a man without a name: but here we haue found a name without a man. M. Hardings Amphilochius euer maketh this Eubulus the chiefest man about S. Basil in all his affaires: yet neither doth Basil in any of all of his Epistles, or other workes, nor Nazianzene, nor Socrates, nor Sozomenus, nor Gregorius Nyssenus, nor Gregorius Presbyter, once make mention of any such. Thus much for the credit of M. Hardings Amphilochius.

But if all this were good record and matter of truth, yet were it but a miracle, but a vision, and perhaps but a dreame, but one mans fact, but once done, not in the day time, but at midnight, and that without company and without witnesse. If this Eubulus, which doubtlesse was No Body, had not espied it, No Body should euer haue heard of it.

Now as touching the very Masse, that S. Basil said indeed, we may some learne the order of it without any dreame or vision. S. Basil himselfe in the Liturgie, that beareth his name, plainly declareth the whole order in this sort: The Priest speaketh thus aloud vnto the people: The whole people maketh answer: One is holy, One is the Lord, One Iesus Christ in the glory of the Father. Then (saith S. Basil) the Quire singeth the Communion: and so they Communicate all together.

Liturgia Basilij

Here may we clearely see the very order and vsage of S. Basils Masse. Here was no Sole Receiuing; no Single Communion: no Priuate Masse; the whole people prayed aloud together with the Priest, and receiued the Communion all together.

And what if M. Hardings owne Amphilochius, notwithstanding all his fables say the same? Can any man desire more substantiall witnesse? Verily his words be plaine, that there was people in the Church with S. Basil, and receiued the Communion at his hand. For thus saith S. Basil euen as it is here written by this Amphilochius: Vouchsafe O Lord to giue vnto vs, and by vs vnto all the people, holy things vnto the holy; The people answereth, One is holy, &c. I shuffle not these words, but leaue them euen as this Amphilochius hath written them, and M. Harding himselfe hath here alleged them.

S. Basils Masse is a Communion, and no Masse.

Now marke (good Reader) what helpe M. Harding hath here found for his Priuate Masse. M. Hardings owne Amphilochius saith: The holy things were giuen vnto all the people: M. Harding saith: S. Basil receiued alone. M. Hardings owne Amphilochius saith: there was people in the Church: M. Harding saith: there was no people there.

M. Harding and his Amphilochius cannot agree.

But this people (saith M. Harding) was Christ and his Apostles. No doubt a strange kinde of people. And Basil being so notable a man for his eloquence, was not able to vtter his minde in his owne mother tongue, but said, All the people: and yet saw no people there at all: and, Giue this to all, and yet knew there was no body there to giue vnto. Thus may we conclude according to M. Hardings owne construction, that that People was no People: that Christ, no Christ: that Eubulus, no Eubulus: that Amphilochius, no Amphilochius: that Basil, no Basil: that Dowe, no Dowe: and that Masse, no Masse at all. Such be the proofes of Priuate Masse.

M. Harding. The 34. Diuision.

Concil. 41. ad finem Antioch.

Now one place more for proofe of Priuate Masse, at the winding vp of this matter, and then an end of this Article. (41) This place is twice found in Chrysostome in an Homilie vpon the Epistle to the Ephesians, and more plainly in an Homilie Ad populum Antiochenum, where he hath these very words, Multam video rerum inæqualitatem. In alijs quidem temporibus cùm puri frequenter sitis, non acceditis: In Pascha verò licet sit aliquid à vobis parratum acceditis. O consuetudinem! O præsumptionem! Sacrificium frustra quotidianum. Inassum assistimus altari. Nullus qui Communicetur: I see great inequility of things among you. At other times, when as for the most part yee are in cleane life, yee come not to receiue your rites. But at Easter though yee haue done some things amisse, yet yee come. O what a custome is this! O what a presumption is this! The Daily Sacrifice is offered in vaine. Wee stand at the Altar for nought. There is not one that will be housled.

The 41. vntruth. For Priuate Masse is neuer found in Chrysostome.

Heere is to be noted, whereas Chrysostome saith, the daily Sacrifice was celebrated in vaine, and the Priests stood at the Altar in vaine; it is not to bee vnderstanded of the Sacrifice in it selfe, as though it were in vaine and frustrate; but this is to bee referred to the people, it was in vaine for their part that should haue receiued their Communion with the Priests, who waited daily for them, and cried out as the Maner was, Sancta Sanctis, Holie things for the Holy; and after that they had receiued the Bread themselues, shewing the Chalice to the people, said; Cum timore Dei, & fide, & dilectione accedite.

accedite. Come yee vp to receiue with the feare of God, with faith and charity. But all was in vaine. (42) For none came: so cold was their deuotion in that behalfe. Now if Chrysostome had cause to complaine of the peoples slackenesse in comming to the Communion, in that great and populous City of Antioch, where the Scriptures were daily expounded and (43) preached, where discipline and good order was more straitly exacted, where in so great number some of likelihood were of more deuotion than others; what is to be thought of many little Townes and Villages thorow the world, where little preaching was heard, where discipline slaked, where the number of the faithful beeing small, and they occupied altogether in worldly affaires, few gaue good example of deuotion to others? Doubtlesse in such places was much lesse resort of the people at the Masse time to receiue the Sacrament with their Priests. And whereas lest this place might seeme plainly to auouch the hauing of Masse without a number Communicating with the Bishop or Priest, for auoiding of this authority, the Gospellers answer by way of coniecture, that in Chrysostomes time the Priests and Deacons Communicated together daily with the party that offered the Sacrifice, though none of the people did; we tell them that this poore shift will not serue their purpose. For though they say some sufficient number euer Communicated with him that celebrated the Daily Sacrifice in that great and famous Church of Antioch, where many Priests and Deacons were, which neither being denied, they shal neuer be able to proue: what may be said or thought of many thousand other lesse Churches thorow the World, where the Priest that said Masse had not in readinesse a sufficient number of other Priests and Deacons to receiue with him, so to make vp a Communion? Of such Churches it must be said, that either the Sacrifice ceased, and that was not done which (44) Christ commanded to be done in his remembrance, which is not to be granted? or that the memory of our Lords death was oftentimes celebrated of the Priests in the daily oblation, without tarrying for others to Communicate with them, and so had these Churches Priuate Masses, as the Churches now adaies haue. Now to conclude, of this most euident place of Chrysostome, euery child is able to make an inuincible argument against M. Iewel for the Priuate Masse, as they call it, in this sort: By report of Chrysostome, the Sacrifice in his time was daily offered, that is to say, the Masse was celebrated; but many times no body came to Communicate Sacramentally with the Priest (45) as it is before prooued; Ergo, There were Masses done without other receiuing the Sacrament with the Priests. And then further; Ergo, Priuate Masses in Chrysostomes daies were not strange; and then yet one step further there to stay; Ergo, M. Iewell according to his own promise and offer, must yeeld, subscribe and recant, vnto a gheese.

The 42. vntruth. For there came many both of the people, and also of the Clergie.

The 43. vntruth. For there was no such dailie preaching, as shall appeare.

M Hard. seeketh vp his Masse in little Townes and Villages.

Priuate Masse prooued by a simple collection.

The 44. vntruth. For Christ commanded no such daily Sacrifice.

The 45. vntruth. For this is not yet prooued.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Now is M. Harding come (as he saith) to the winding vp of his Clew: meaning thereby, as may be thought, that the substance of all that he hath alleged hitherto, hangeth only by a twined threed.

This Coniecture is taken out of certaine words of Chrysostome: and the whole force thereof standeth only vpon this word Nemo, which is in English, No body. Chrysostomes words be these: We do daily offer the Sacrifice, or (as M. Harding delighteth rather to say) we doe daily say Masse, and there is no Body to Communicate: Ergo, saith he, Chrysostome receiued alone. And so haue we without question a plaine Priuate Masse.

Chrysost. ad populum Antiochen. homil. 61.

Here would I first know, whether M. Harding will rest vpon the bare words of Chrysostome, or rather qualifie them some what, and take his meaning. If he presse the words so precisely as he seemeth to doe, then is it not Chrysostome himselfe Communicate. For he was Some Body: and the plaine words be, No body doth Communicate. By which words doubtlesse Chrysostome himselfe is excluded as well as others. And so there was no Sole receiuing, nor any receiuing at all: and therefore no Priuate Masse.

If he will rather take Chrysostomes meaning, it appeareth, his purpose was, to rebuke the negligence of the people, for that of so populous a City, they came to the Holy Communion in so small companies: which companies, he in a vehemency of speech by an exaggeration, in respect of the whole, calleth No Body. The like maner of speech is vsed also sometimes in the Scriptures. S. Iohn saith of Christ, Testimonium eius nemo accipit. Not for that no body at all receiued his witnesse: For his Disciples, and many others receiued it: but for that of a great multitude very few receiued it. In like phrase Chrysostome himselfe saith otherwhere: Nemo diuina sapit, nemo contemnit ea quæ in terra sunt, nemo attendit ad Cœlum: No body sauoureth godly things: No body despiseth the things of this World: No body hath regard to Heauen. In these words M. Harding must needs confesse, that Chrysostome in stead of few, by heat of speech, and by way of comparison said, No body.

Iohn 3.

Chrys. ad Hebræos, hom. 12.

And albeit this only Answer compared with the maner of Chrysostomes eloquence, which commonly is hot and feruent, and with the common practise of the Church then, may suffice a man, more desirous of truth, than of contention, yet I haue good hope it may be proued, notwithstanding M. Hardings Nemo, that Chrysostome neither was alone, nor could be alone at the holy ministration, and therefore could say no Priuate Masse. For if the whole company of the Lay people would haue forsaken him, yet had he company sufficient of the Priests and Deacons, and others of the Quire. And if the whole Quire would haue forsaken him, yet had hee company sufficient of the Lay people, as it may be clerely proued.

That there was then a great number to serue in the Ministery, it may diuerslie well appeare.

Ignatius

Ignatius calleth Presbyterium, The sacred Colledge, the Counsell and companie of the Bishop. Ignatius ad Trallianos, τὸ ἱερὸν συνέδριον.

Chrysostome himselfe in his Liturgie saith thus: The Deacons bring the Dishes with the Holy Bread vnto the Holy Altar: The rest carry the Holy Cups. By which words appeareth both a number of the Ministerie, and also prouision for them that would receiue. Chrysostom. in Liturgia.

Cornelius writeth, that in the Church of Rome there were fortie and sir Priests, seuen Deacons, seuen Subdeacons, forty and two Acolutes, Exorcists, Readers, and other Officers of the Church, fifty and two; Widowes, and other afflicted people that there were relieued, a thousand fiue hundred. Epist. Cornelij ad Fabiũ Antiochenum, ex Euseb. Lib. 6. Cap. 42.

Nazianzene complaineth of the number of the Clergy in his time, that they seemed to be moe than the rest of the people. And therefore the Emperour Iustinian afterward thought it needfull to abridge the number, and to make a Law, that in the great Church at Constantinople, where Chrysostome was Bishop, there should not be aboue the number of threescore Priests, one hundred Deacons, forty Women, fourescore and ten Subdeacons, one hundred and ten Readers, and fiue and twenty Singers. Hereby we may see, that Chrysostome being at Antioch, in so populous a City, although he had none of the Lay people with him, yet could not be vtterly left alone. Nazianzen. in Apologetico. ἢ οἴει σκεδὸν τὸ πλῆθος κατ' ἀριθμὸν, ἢ ὀπόσων ἄρχειν.

Now if we say, that some of these Priests, Deacons, or other, Communicated with the Bishop, I tell them (saith M. Harding) boldly, and with a solemne countenance, which must needs make good proofe, This is but a poore shift, and will not serue their purpose. But if it be true, it is rich enough: if it agree with Chrysostomes owne meaning, it is no shift; and therefore sufficiently serued our purpose. In Auth. Collatione prima. Titul. Vt determinatus sit numerus Clericorum.

And because he sitteth so fast vpon the bare words, and reposeth all his hope in Nemo, if we list to cauill in like sort, we might some finde warrant sufficient to answer this matter, euen in the very plaine words of Chrysostome. For thus they lie: Frustrà assistimus Altari: In vaine we stand at the Altar. We stand (saith he) and not I stand: and therefore includeth a number, and not one alone. Howbeit, our shifts are not so poore: we need not to take hold of so small aduantages.

It is proued by the Canons of the Apostles, That if any Bishop, or Priest, or Deacon, or any other of the Quire, after the Oblation is made, doe not receiue, vnlesse he shew some reasonable cause of his so doing, that he stand Excommunicate. There was then neither such number of Altars, nor such chenisance of Masses, as hath bene sithence. All the Priests receiued together at one Communion. The like Law in the Church of Rome was afterward renued by Pope Anacletus. Canon. Apost. Ca. 9. ἐκ τῶν κατηλέγχθη ἱερατικῶν. De Con. dist. 1. Episcopus.

The Councell of Nice decreeth thus: Accipiant Diaconi, secundùm ordinem, post Presbyteros, ab Episcopis, vel à Presbytero Communionem: Let the Deacons in order, after the Priests, receiue of the Bishops, or of the Priest, the holy Communion. Concil. Nicen. Can. 14.

Likewise the Councell of Carthage: Accipiant Diaconi ex ordine Eucharistiam post Presbyteros, eis dante Episcopo, vel Presbytero: Let the Deacons receiue the Communion in order after the Priests, either the Bishop or the Priest ministring it. Concil. Carthagin. 6. Ca. 18.

So the Councell of Laodicea: It is lawfull only for the Priests of the Church to enter into the place where the Altar standeth, and there to Communicate. Concil. Laodic. ca. 59.

So the Councell of Toledo: Let the Priests and Deacons Communicate before the Altar: the Clerkes in the Quire, and the People without the Quire. Conc. Toletan. 4. ca. 17.

Nicolaus Cusanus writing vnto the Clergie and learned of Bohemia, hath these words: Hoc est singulariter attendendum, quòd Sacerdotes nunquam sine Diacono celebrabant: & in omni Missa Diaconus de manu Sacerdotis accipit Eucharistiam sub specie Panis, & Sacerdos de manu Diaconi Calicem: This thing is specially to be noted, that the Priest did neuer Celebrate without a Deacon: and that in euery Masse the Deacon receiued the Sacrament in the kinde of Bread, at the Priests hand; and the Priest the Cup at the Deacons hand. Nicolaus Cusan. ad Clerum & Literatos Bohemiæ.

But what needeth much proofe, in a case that is so plaine? Chrysostome himselfe in the Liturgie that commonly beareth his name, followeth the same order. After that the Priests haue receiued (saith he) the Archdeacon commandeth the Deacons to come foorth: and they so comming, receiue as the Priests did before. This was the very order of Chrysostomes Masse, touching the Clergy, and that by the witnesse of Chrysostome himselfe. Chrysostom. in Liturgia.

Now let M. Harding iudge vprightly, whether these shiftes be so poore as he would make them.

But if the whole Clergy had bene so negligent, that not one of them all, being so many, and so straitly charged, would haue Communicated with the Priest, as M. Harding seemeth to condemne them all, onely vpon his owne word, without any euidence; yet let vs see whether M. Hardings Nemo were able of necessitie to shut out all the rest of the people.

Chrysostome

Chrysostome in diuers places seemeth to diuide the whole multitude into three sorts, whereof some were Penitent, some Negligent, and some Deuout. The Penitent were commanded away, and might not Communicate: The Negligent some time departed of themselues, and would not Communicate: The Deuout remained, and receiued together. Now that the Deuout remained still with Chrysostome the whole time of the holy Misteries, it is plaine by the very same place that M. Harding heere allegeth for his purpose. For thus Chrysostome saith vnto the people: Thou art come into the Church, and hast sung praises vnto God with the rest, and hast confessed thy selfe to be one of the worthy, in that thou departedst not forth with the vnworthy. By these words he sheweth, that some were worthy, and some vnworthy: that the vnworthy departed, and the worthy remained. And againe in the same Homily he saith: The Deacon standing on high, calleth some to the Communion, and putteth off some: thrusteth out some, and bringeth in some. Chrysostome saith, Some are called, and some are brought in, to Receiue with the Priest. Where then is now M. Hardings Nemo? Verily if there were some people with the Priest, then was there no place for Nobody. If Nobody receiued, then is it not true that Chrysostome saith, that some receiued.

Chrysost. ad popul. Antioch. Homil. 61.

Heere, of a false principle, M. Harding, as his wont is, gheseth out the like conclusion: If there were so few Communicants in that populous City of Antioch, where the Scriptures were daily expounded and preached, then it is likely in Country Churches there were none at all. This argument hangeth only by likelihood, as do the rest of his making: and being set in order, it standeth thus: There was no Priuate Masse in the great City of Antioch: Ergo, there was Priuate Masse in the Countrey. Surely (good Reader) this is a very Country Argument, whatsoeuer it seeme to M. Harding.

And further, whereas to aduance the Citie, and to abase the Country, he saith, The people in Cities were daily taught by open Sermons; herein he must needs be content, that his gheste, giue place vnto the truth. For Chrysostome himselfe saith farre otherwise. Thus he speaketh vnto the people in the Citie: Dum per hebdomadam semel vocamus vos, & ignaui estis, & alij quidem non aduenitis, alij autem præsentes sine lucro disceditis, quid non faceretis, si nos hoc continuò faceremus? Whereas being called by vs but once in the weeke, yet yee be slothfull, and some of you come not at all, and other some being present, depart without profit, what would yee not doe, if wee should call you euery day? I note not this for that I mislike with daily preaching, but for that vntruth so boldly presumed should not passe vntouched.

Chrys. in Acta Apost. hom. 45. Idem in Matt. Hom. 5.

Yet saith M. Harding, In small Country Churches, either the Priest let cease the daily Sacrifice, or else he receiued alone. But the daily Sacrifice ceased not: for then that had beene left vndone, that Christ commanded to be done: Ergo, There was Priuate Masse. O, M. Harding, is it not possible your Doctrine may stand without lies? So many vntruths in so little roome, without shame of the world, without feare of God? Where did Christ euer command you to make your Sacrifice? By what Commission? By what words? Where did Christ will you to doe it euery day? Where did Christ euer call it the daily Sacrifice? Or where euer learned you that the remembrance of Christs death perteineth more to the Priest, than to the people? And if your Masse be that Sacrifice, who euer commanded your Priest to say your daily Masse? What Law, what Decree, what Decretall, what Legantine, what Prouinciall? Or what Priest euer was there that said it daily?

Peccham in his Prouinciall was neuer so strait. He saith no more but thus: Statuimus, vt quilibet Sacerdos, quem Canonica necessitas non excusat, conficiat omni hebdomada saltem semel: Wee ordaine that euery Priest, vnlesse he be excused by some Canonicall necessitie, doe Consecrate euery weeke once at the least. There is ods betweene once a weeke, and once a day. And Linwood writing vpon the same, alleggeth these words of S. Augustines: Quotidiè Eucharistiæ Communicare, nec laudo, nec vitupero: As for receiuing the Communion euery day, I neither praise it, nor dispraise it. Innocentius the Third noteth, that there were Priests in his time, that would scarcely say Masse at foure times in the yere. And Thomas of Aquine thinketh it sufficient for a Priest, that is not charged with Cure, to say Masse onely vpon principall Feasts. It is also written in Vitis Patrum, that a certaine holy man being made Priest, would notwithstanding neuer say Masse while hee liued. Yet was there none of these euer charged with forefollowing or ceasing the Daily Sacrifice, or leauing vndone that thing that Christ had commanded to be done.

De celebrat. Miss. Can. Altissimus.

De Con. dist. 2. Quotidiè. Extr. de Celebratione Miss. Dolentes. In summ. Parte vltim. Qua. 82. Artic. 1.

Concerning the Priests Sole Receiuing, which is grounded only vpon it selfe, without further proofe; verily I see no cause, but that Nicolaus de Cusa, being a Cardinall of Rome, ought to carry as good credit herein, as M. Harding with all his gheses. He saith, and willeth his words to be specially noted, as it is before touched, that in those dayes the Nicol. de Cusa, ad Clerum & Literatos Bohemiæ.

Priest

Priest did neuer receiue without the Deacon. Yet hath M. Harding a certaine surmise by himselfe, that the Priests in the Country receiued alone.

But what a wonderfull case is this? The Masse that we must nedes beleeue is so Ancient, so Vniuersall, so Catholike, so Holy, so Glorious, cannot be found, neither in Churches, nor in Chapels, nor in Secret Oratories, nor in Priuate houses, in Towne or City, but must be sought out in some Petie Parish in the Country, and that by coniecture only, and by gheste, and by such Records as directly condemne the whole order of the Masse, and will suffer no man to be present thereat, but only such as will receiue.

For thus saith Chrysostome: If thou stand by, and doe not Communicate, thou art malapert, thou art shameleſſe, thou art impudent. Thine eies be vnworthy the sight heereof: vnworthy be thine eares. O, thou wilt say, I am vnworthy to be partaker of the holy Mysteries. Then art thou vnworthy to be partaker of the praiers: thou maist no more stand heere, than a Heathen that neuer was Christened. And touching himselfe, he saith: Invaine we come to offer the Daily Sacrifice: Invaine we stand at the Altar: meaning thereby, as may appeare, that if he said Priuate Masse for lacke of companie, it was in vaine. Heere M. Harding seing that his Masse, euen by his owne Authoritie, is shrewdly crackt, and left for vaine, assaieth to saue it as well as he may. Chryſoſt. ad Epheſ. Homil. 3.

The Masse (saith he) is not in vaine in it selfe, but vnto the people that will not come. This is a Gloſſe beside the Text: yet let vs take it as it were true. But if hearing of the Masse be a thing pleasant vnto God, and meritorious vnto the people: if Christ be there offered indeed for the sinnes of the World: if the Priest alone may receiue for all the rest: if it be sufficient for the people to Communicate spiritually, as M. Harding hath auouched: then is not the saying of the Masse in vaine, no not vnto the people; no although they neuer would Communicate. Chrysostome saith, It is in vaine: M. Harding saith, It is not in vaine. And yet, to see a greater contradiction, M. Harding himselfe in this place saith, It is in vaine vnto the people: And yet the same M. Harding hath said before, It is commanded by Councels: it is sufficient for the people to Communicate in spirit: it is not in vaine vnto the people. Diuiſion. 9. fol. 13. b.

If M. Harding will stand vnto the Authoritie of Chrysostome, let him not dissemble, but speake plainly vnto the people, as Chrysostome spake. Let him say to them that come to heare his Masse, If yee receiue not, ye are shameleſſe, yee are impudent, ye are not worthy to be partakers of the common praiers: depart ye from the Church: yee haue no more place heere, than Turkes and Heathens: Your eies bee vnworthy to see these things: vnworthy be your eares: Our Masses cannot profit you: they are not meritorious for you: they please not God: they prouoke his anger: they are all in vaine. This is Chrysostomes sense and plaine meaning: and this is a faire winding vp of M. Hardings Clew.

Now let vs examine this inuincible argument, wherewithall euery childe, as M. Harding vanteth, is able to proue the Priuate Masse.

The Maior is this: The Sacrifice in Chrysostomes time was daily offered.

The Minor is this: But many times no man came to Communicate with the Priest.

The Conclusion: Ergo, There was Priuate Masse.

Heere the Maior is apparant false: The Minor proued at aduentures, only by blinde gheste, and so not proued at all: Therefore the Conclusion must nedes follow after as it may. Vnleſſe M. Harding loke better to it, I trow it will proue but a Childish Argument.

As for the Maior, it is plaine by the sixth Councell of Constantinople, by S. Augustine vpon S. Iohn, by S. Basil Ad Cæsariam patriciam, by the Epistle of the Councell of Alexandria in the defense of Macarius, and by the Councell holden at Laodicea, and by sundrie other Authorities to that purpose before alleged, that the Sacrifice was not daily offered, as M. Harding imagineth.

Touching the Minor, it is not proued, but hangeth, as I haue said, only by gheste. M. Harding himselfe saw, that this is put a slender proofe: Chrysostome ministred euery day; Ergo, he receiued alone: And therefore he sought further to finde his Single Communion in the Country. But Chrysostome saith, There is No body to Communicate. By this it may appeare, as I haue already said, that Chrysostome himselfe did not Communicate, vnleſſe we will say Chrysostome was No body, and so No body receiued alone, and No body himselfe said M. Hardings Priuate Masse. And therefore No body may come forth, and iustly require me to subscribe. Thus the Maior being false, the Minor not proued, the Conclusion not following, thou seest, good Christian Reader, what inuincible force M. Harding hath brought to reproue his Masse. Conc. Conſtantin. 6. Can. 52. Aug. tract. 26. Baſil. ad Cæſar. Concil. Laodic. Ca. 49.

But because he seemeth to set somewhat by the winding vp of his Clew, it shall not be from from the purpose, to vnwinde it againe, and to lay it abroad, and to consider the stuffing of it, and to see how closely and handsomely it is wound together.

Communion.

First, there is not one threed of the holy Scriptures in all this Clew, but the plaine example of Christ and his Apostles quite refused.

1 Secondly, the Priuate Masse is founded vpon the negligence, and, as M. Harding calleth it, the vndeuotion of the people.

2 3 Thirdly, there is a way deuised, how two Priests, saying their Masses in diuers Countries, may Communicate together in Breaking Bread, be the distance betweene them neuer so great: and that without any maner warrant of Scripture or Doctor.

4 Fourthly, Lay people, women, sicke folkes, and boies, that receiued or ministred the Sacrament alone, are brought in for this purpose, as though it had beene lawfull then for women or boies to say Masse.

5 Fifthly, because S. Ambrose, S. Augustine, S. Hierome, S. Chrysostome, S. Basil, and such others would not serue, there is brought in a great number of Petie Doctours, all of doubtfull credit, and many of them long sithence misliked, and condemned by the Church.

6 Sixthly, the matter is made good by Visions, Dreames, and Fables.

7 Seuenthly, there are alleged Canons of Councels, not extant in any Councell, gathered without great iudgement by one Gratian, and yet none of them neither prouing, nor once naming the priuate Masse.

8 Eightly, because M. Harding could not finde his Masse in the whole Church of Rome within the space of six hundred yeres after Christ, he hath therefore made search at Alexandria in Egypt, at Antioch in Syria, at Cæsaria in Cappadocia, a thousand miles beyond the Limits of all Christendome, where as was neuer Priuate Masse said, neither then, nor before that time, nor neuer sithence.

9 Ninthly, for that he stood in despaire of Cathedrall, and other like great Churches, he hath sought out Chapels, Celles, Oratories, and Priuate houses: and because he had no hope to speed in Townes or Cities, he hath sought out the little Churches in the Country.

10 Tenthly, notwithstanding all this inquirie, he hath not yet found, neither the name of Priuate Masse, nor any Priest that euer ministred and receiued alone.

11 To be short, the whole substance of his proues hangeth onely vpon his owne surmise, without any certainty, or appearance of truth.

These be the contents of M. Hardings Clew, and thus substantially hath he proued the Antiquitie and Vniuersalitie of his Masse.

Now, good Reader, to giue thee onely a taste of some part that may be said of our side, first it is apparent that Christ our Sauiour, at his last Supper, ministred the holy Communion, and no Priuate Masse, and bade his Disciples to doe the same in his remembrance.

Hieron. in 1. Cor. 11. Likewise S. Paul willed the Corinthians one to wait and tarry for another, in the holy Ministration, and to conforme themselues to Christs example. Whereupon S. Hierome saith, as it is before alleged: The Lords Supper must be common vnto all: for the Lord deliuered the Sacraments equally vnto all the Disciples that were present. And S. Ambrose likewise Ambros. 1. Cor. 11. Can. Apost. Canon. 9. De Con. dist. 2. Peracta. expounding these words, Inuicem expectate, Waite one for another, saith thus: That the Oblation of many may be celebrate together, and may be ministred vnto all.

De Con. dist. 1. Episcopus. In the Canons of the Apostles it is decreed, that if any man resort vnto the Church, and heare the Scriptures, and abstaine from the Communion, he stand excomunicate, as one that troubleth the Congregation.

De Con. dist. 2. Si non. The like Decrees are found vnder the names of Calixtus, Anacletus, Martinus, Hilarius, and others: by which it is certaine, that the whole Church then receiued together.

De Con. dist. 2. Si quis. [1] Clemens, as M. Harding calleth him, the Apostles fellow, writeth thus: Let so many Hosts be offered vpon the Altar, as may be sufficient for the people.

[1] Clem. epist. 2. [2] Aug. de Sermon. Dom. in Mont. lib. 2. [3] August. in Psalm. 10. [4] Clem. strom. lib. 1. [2] S. Augustine saith of the Congregation in his time: Euery day we receiue the Sacrament of Christs Body. [3] And opening the same more particularly, he saith thus: Vnde confido in eis, quibus heri Communicasti, & hodiè Communicas, & cras Communicabis? What trust can I haue in them, with whom thou didst Communicate yester day, and doest Communicate to day, and wilt Communicate againe to morrow?

[4] Clemens Alexandrinus saith: After that certaine, as the maner is, haue diuided the Sacrament, they giue euery of the people leaue to take part of it.

Chrysost. in 1. Cor. Hom. 27. S. Chrysostome plainly describeth the very order of the Communion that was vsed in his time, by these words: The spirituall and reuerend Sacraments are set foorth equally to rich and poore: neither doth the rich man enioy them more, and the poore man lesse: they haue all like honour, honour, and like comming to them. The Sacraments being once laid foorth (as then the maner was for the people to receiue) are not taken in againe, vntill all the people haue Communicate, and taken part of that spirituall meat: but the Priests stand still, and wait for all, euen for the poorest of them all. Communion.

Againe he saith: There are things wherein the Priest differeth nothing from the people: as when we must vse the fearefull Mysteries. For we are all of one worthinesse to receiue the same. Chrys. 2. Cor. Hom. 18.

S. Gregorie saith, that euen in his time the order was, that in the time of the Holy Communion, the Deacon should stand vp, and say aloud vnto the people: Si quis non Communicat, det locum: If there bee any body that is not disposed to Communicate, let him giue place. Gregor. Dialogor. li. 2. ca. 23.

This Latine word Missa, in the time of Tertullian and S. Cyprian, signified a dimissing, or a licence to depart, and was specially applied vnto the Communion, vpon, this occasion that I must here declare. They that were then named Catechumeni, that is to say, Nouices of the Faith, and not yet Christened, were suffered to be present at the Communion, vntill the Gospell was ended. Then the Deacon commanded them forth, pronouncing these words aloud: Catechumeni exeunto: Or thus: Ite, Missa est: Goe ye foorth, Ye haue licence to depart. Of this dimissing, or departing forth of the Catechumeni and others, the Seruice it selfe was then called Missa. The rest remained still in the Church, and receiued the Communion together with the Priest. Further, the breaking of the Bread, which euen now is vsed in the Masse it selfe, signifieth a distribution of the Sacrament vnto the people, as S. Augustine saith vnto Paulinus, ad distribuendum comminuitur, It is broken to the end it may be deuided. Moreouer, the Priest himselfe in his Masse saith thus: This holy Mixture and Consecration, &c. be vnto mee, and to all that shall receiue it, vnto Saluation. Thus the very name of the Masse, the very Breaking of the Bread, the very Gestures and Words that the Priest vseth at his Masse, beare manifest witnesse against Priuate Masse. Missa. Isidorus in Lexico. The breaking of the Bread. Aug. ad Paulin. Epist. 59.

Here I leaue out a great number of Councels, and Canons, and old Fathers, as Iustinus Martyr, Dionysius, Tertullian, Epiphanius, and Eusebius, with sundry other ancient Writers, both Greekes and Latines: thinking it sufficient by these few to haue giuen a tast of the rest.

Our proofes hang not vpon coniecture, or vncertaine ghesses: we pray not aid of sicke folke, Women, Boies, and Children, for the proofe of the holy Communion, as M. Harding is driuen to doe for proofe of his Masse: we seeke not out secret Oratories, or priuie Chapels: we forge no new Doctours, such as the world neuer knew before, as these men doe for lacke of others: we allege neither Dreames, nor Visions, nor fantasticall Fables.

We rest vpon the Scriptures of God, vpon the authoritie of the ancient Doctors and Councels, and vpon the Universall practise of the most famous Cities and Churches of the world.

These things well compared and weighed together, iudge thou now (gentle Reader) whether M. Harding haue hitherto iust cause, either to blow vp the Triumph with such courage, or to require any man to Subscribe.

OF COMMVNION VNDER BOTH Kindes.

THE SECOND ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

OR that there was then any Communion ministred vnto the People vnder one kinde.

M. Harding. The First Diuision.

This being a Sacrament of Vnitie, euery true Christian man ought in receiuing of it to consider how Vnitie may be atchieued and kept, rather than to shew a straitnesse of conscience about the outward forms of Difference betweene Prieſt and Lay.

of Bread and Wine, to be vſed in the adminiſtration of it: and that ſo much the more, how much the end of euery thing is to be eſteemed more than that which ſerueth to the end. Otherwiſe heerein the breach of vnitie is ſo little recompenſed by the exact keeping of the outward Ceremonie, that according to the ſaying of S. Auguſtine, whoſoeuer taketh the Myſterie of vnitie, and keepeth not the bond of peace, hee taketh not a Myſterie for himſelfe, but a teſtimonie againſt himſelfe. Therefore they haue great cauſe to weigh with themſelues, what they receiue in this Sacrament, who mooued by ſlender reaſons made for both kindes, doe raſhly and dangerouſly condemne the Church, for giuing of it vnder one kinde, to all that doe not in their owne perſons Conſecrate and offer the ſame in remembrance of the Sacrifice once offered on the Croſſe. And that they may thinke the Church to ſtand vpon good grounds heerein, may it pleaſe them to vnderſtand, that the fruit of this Sacrament, which they enioy that worthily receiue it, dependeth not of the outward formes of Bread and Wine, but redoundeth of the vertue of the Fleſh and Blood of Chriſt. And whereas vnder either kinde (46) whole Chriſt is verily preſent, (for now that hee is riſen againe from the dead, his Fleſh and Blood can be ſundred no more, becauſe he dieth no more) this healthfull Sacrament is of true Chriſtian people with no leſſe fruit receiued vnder one kinde, than vnder both. The Sacramentaries that beleeue not the truth of Chriſts Body and Blood in this holy Sacrament, I remit to ſundry godly treatiſes made in defenſe of the right faith in that point. I thinke it not neceſſarie heere to treat thereof, or of any other matter, which M. Iewell hath not as yet manifeſtly touched in his Sermon.

The 46. vntruth, proceeding only of the groſſe errour of Tranſſubſtantiation.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The former Article of Priuate Maſſe, by M. Hardings owne confeſſion, proceedeth not from God, but from the negligence of the people: but the abuſe of the Communion vnder one kinde, from whence ſoeuer it firſt proceeded, ſtandeth now only vpon the willfulneſſe of the Prieſts, who ſéing and knowing the Inſtitution and Commandement of Chriſt, yet notwithſtanding haue deuiſed waies againſt their owne knowledge, violently to repell the ſame. And that the whole caſe may the better appeare, the Queſtion that ſtandeth betwéne vs is moued thus: Whether the Holy Communion at any time, within the ſpace of ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, were euer Miniſtred openly in the Church vnto the People vnder one Kinde. For proofe whereof, M. Harding hath héere brought in Women, Children, Sicke folkes, Infants, and mad men; that theſe haue ſometimes receiued the one kind, ſome in their priuate houſes, ſome in their death-beds, ſome otherwiſe, as he did before for proofe of his Priuate Maſſe. If in all this long treatie he haue brought any one example, or proofe ſufficient, of the Miniſtration in one kinde, openly vſed in any Church, it is good reaſon he be beléeued. But if he, after all theſe vaunts, hauing publiſhed ſuch a Booke, as al the world, as it is ſuppoſed, is not able to anſwer, haue hitherto brought no ſuch, neither example, nor proofe, then may we iuſtly thinke, there is nothing to be brought at all; but that by his eloquence and faire ſpéech, he ſéeketh to abuſe the ſimplicity and ignorance of his Reader.

Concil. Baſil. The Councell of Baſil, aboue one hundred and thirty yéeres paſt, made no conſcience to grant the vſe of both kindes vnto the Kingdome of Bohæmia: And this Councell now Conc. Trident. preſently holden at Trident, vpon certaine conditions, hath granted the ſame to other Kingdomes and Countries: and were it not they ſhould ſéeme to confeſſe the Church of Rome hath erred, they would not doubt to grant the ſame freely to the whole World. None of them all can tell, neither when, nor where, nor how this errour firſt began. St. G. in the Diuels Sophiſtrie. Some thinke it ſprang onely of a certaine ſuperſtition and ſimplicitie of the people. But whence ſoeuer it firſt began, as Tertullian writeth of the frowardneſſe that he ſaw in certaine of his time, it muſt now néeds be maintained and made good againſt the truth. His Tertull. de virginib. velandis. words be theſe: Conſuetudo initium ab aliqua ignorantia, vel ſimplicitate ſorrita in vſum per ſucceſſionem corroboratur, & ita aduerſus veritatem vendicatur. Sed Dominus noſter Chriſtus Veritatem ſe, non Conſuetudinem, cognominauit. Viderint ergo, quibus nouum eſt, quod ſibi vetus eſt. Hæreſes non tam nouitas, quàm veritas reuincit. Quodcunque aduerſus veritatem ſapit, hoc erit Hæreſes, etiam vetus conſuetudo: Cuſtome, either of ſimplicitie, or of ignorance, getting once an entry, is inured and hardned by ſucceſſion, and then is defended againſt the truth. But Chriſt our Lord called himſelfe the Truth, and not Cuſtome. Let them take heed therefore, vnto whom the thing ſeemeth new, that in it ſelfe is old. It is not ſo much the nouelty of the matter, as the truth, that reproueth an Hereſie. Whatſoeuer fauoureth againſt the truth, it is an Hereſie, be the cuſtome thereof neuer ſo old.

To come néere the matter: Vnitie (ſaith M. Harding) is the ſubſtance of this Sacrament and who ſo receiueth not the ſame in Vnitie, receiueth a teſtimonie againſt himſelfe. As this is true, and auouched by S. Auguſtine, and of our part not denied, ſo is it alſo true that S. Ambroſe writeth: Indignus eſt Domino, qui aliter Myſterium celebrat, quàm ab eo traditum eſt. Non enim poteſt deuotus eſſe, qui aliter præſumit, quam datum eſt ab Authore: He is vnworthy of the Lord, that doth otherwiſe celebrate the Myſterie, than it was deliuered of the Lord. Ambroſ. 1. Corinth. 11.

For

For he cannot be denout, that taketh it otherwise than it was giuen of the authour. But this excuse vnder the pretence and colour of vnitie, seemeth to import some default. For what, thinke these folke that vnitie cannot stand without the breach of Christs Institution? Or that the Apostles and holy Fathers, that ministred the Communion vnder both kindes, were not in vnitie? Or that there was neuer vnitie in the Church for the space of a thousand foure hundred and moe yeres after Christ, vntill the Councell of Constance, where this matter was first concluded? Herein standeth that Mysticall Unitie, that one Bread is broken vnto all, and one Cup is deliuered vnto all, equally without difference: and that as Chrysostome saith, in the reuerend Sacrifice, there is no difference betweene the Priest and the People, but all is equall. But our aduersaries haue herein forced a difference betweene the Priest and the People, without cause, and say, There must needs be such a difference.

Whole Christ in either part.

Chry. in 2. Cor. homil. 18.

And when the French King, who vntill this day receiueth still in both kindes, had moued his Clergie, wherefore he might so doe more than others, they made him answer, For that Kings are anointed aswell as Priests. Gerson saith, that if Lay men should communicate vnder both kindes aswell as Priests, Dignitas Sacerdotis non esset supra dignitatem Laicorum: The dignitie of the Priest should not be aboue the dignitie of Lay men. And Gabriel Biel extolleth the Priest aboue our Lady, and All hallowes, because hee may communicate vnder both kindes, and they cannot. And so haue they altered the Sacrament of equalitie and vnitie, and made it a Sacrament of difference and dissention.

Iohan. Sleidanus, lib. 9. Gerson in Tractatu contra heresim communicandi Laicos sub vtraq; specie. Gabriel Biel.

The fruit of the Sacrament (saith M. Harding) hangeth not of the formes of Bread and Wine. This is a strange forme of speech vnto the ignorant, that knoweth not what these formes meane. Beware, good Reader, for vnder this word there lieth a snare. S. Paul fiue times in one place calleth it Bread: but this man saith, it is the Forme, the Appearance and Shew of Bread. but he would haue thee beleeue that indeed it is no Bread.

1. Cor. 11.

We know well, the fruit of the Sacrament standeth not, neither in the Formes, nor in the Bread or Wine, which are outwardly receiued with the bodily mouth, but in the flesh and blood of Christ, which only are receiued spiritually into the soule.

He addeth further: Whole Christ is vnder either kinde; therefore hee that receiueth in one kinde onely, hath no wrong. If any ancient Doctour had said the same, it might the rather haue beene beleeued. But M. Harding of false principles of his owne, thinketh he may boldly gather the like conclusions. These toies are sufficient to please vaine fantasie: but they are not sufficient to content a godly conscience. But doth M. Harding so surely know that whole Christ is in either kinde, and did Christ himselfe not know it? Or if Christ did know it, was not hee able to breake his owne ordinance, and to prouide for this inconuenience, as well as others? We know, and it is our beleefe, that Christs whole Humanitie both Flesh and Blood is in heauen. But that the same humanitie of Christ is in the Sacrament, in such grosse sort, as is supposed by our Aduersaries, notwithstanding many bold vants thereof made, yet was it hitherto neuer proued. And although this matter bee moued by M. Harding out of season, as being no part of this Question, yet I thinke it not amisse briefly to signifie by the way, what the old Catholike Fathers haue thought of it.

Consentius demandeth this question of S. Augustine, Whether the Body of Christ being now in Heauen, haue in it blood or no. Here to leaue S. Augustines answer, it is easie for any man to consider, if Consentius had beene perswaded, as M. Harding would seeme to bee, that Christs Body hath Blood in the Sacrament, hee would neuer haue moued this question of the Body of Christ, that is in Heauen. To leaue these new fantasies, whereof it doth not appeare, that euer the old Catholike Doctours made any report, wee must vnderstand, that the Bread is the Sacrament of Christs Bodie, and the Wine is the Sacrament of his Blood. So saith Beda: Panis ad Corpus Christi Mysticè, Vinum refertur ad Sanguinem: The Bread in Mysticall maner hath relation to the Bodie of Christ: the Wine hath relation vnto his Blood. So likewise saith S. Paul: The Bread that we Breake, is it not the Communication of the Body of Christ? And the Cup of the blessing which wee blesse, is it not the Communication of the Blood of Christ? S. Paul saith not, each part is in other: but each hath a peculiar signification by it selfe.

Lib. Epist. epist. 146.

Beda in Lucam cap. 22. lib. 6.

But if it were so as M. Harding and certaine others of late daies haue grossly imagined, yet notwithstanding the people taking but one kinde only, receiueth iniurie, as M. Harding may see by Alexander of Hales, and Durandus, and other of his owne Doctours. Alexanders words be these: Licèt illa sumptio, quæ est in accipiendo sub vna specie, sufficiat, tamen illa quæ est sub duabus est maioris meriti: Although that order of receiuing the Sacrament, which is vnder one kinde be sufficient, yet the other which is vnder both kindes, is of greater merit. And immediately after: Sumptio sub vtraque specie, quem modum sumendi

Alexand. 4. qu. 53. M. 1.

Whole Christ in either part.

tradidit Dominus, eſt maioris efficaciæ, & maioris complementi : The receiuing vnder both kindes, which order the Lord deliuered, is of greater ſtrength, and of greater fulneſſe. And the ſame Alexander againe ſaith : Totus Chriſtus non continetur ſub vtraque ſpecie Sacramentaliter : ſed Caro tantùm ſub ſpecie Panis, & Sanguis ſub ſpecie Vini: Whole Chriſt is not contained vnder each kinde by way of Sacrament, but the Fleſh only vnder the forme of Bread, and the Blood vnder the forme of Wine. The like might be reported out of Durandus and others. Heere M. Hardings owne Doctours confeſſe, that the people receiuing vnder one kinde, receiueth not the full Sacrament, nor the Blod of Chriſt by way of Sacrament : and that their doing therein is of leſſe ſtrength and merit, than the doing of the Prieſt. Wherefore M. Harding in ſaying, The people receiuing onely vnder one kinde taketh no iniury, doth the people double iniurie.

Alexand. 4. qu. 40. M. 3. art. 2.

But to paſſe ouer theſe Scholaſticall ſubtle points, it behoueth vs to know, that Chriſt the Sonne of God, appointed the Sacrament of his Body to be giuen in Bread, and the Sacrament of his Blod to be giuen in Wine. Theſe bee the holy Myſteries of Chriſts Body and Blod. Wee may not heere account what may bee in either of them by the drift of vaine fantaſie : but rather we ought to conſider, what Chriſt in the firſt Inſtitution hereof did, and what he commanded to be done. Neither doe wee heere condemne the Church, as it pleaſeth M. Harding vniuſtly to charge vs : but we wiſh and pray to God that his whole Church may once bee reformed after the example and Inſtitution of Chriſt, without whom the Church is no Church, neither hath any right or claime without his promiſe, nor any promiſe without his word.

Now whereas M. Harding ſaith, The reaſons that wee make for the maintenance of Chriſts Inſtitutions are ſo ſlender ; If hee had firſt weighed his owne, perhaps he would the more honourably haue reported ours. I meane not the reaſons that others of that ſide haue taken of mens Beards, of feare of the palſie and ſhaking, or other diſeaſes, or inconueniences that may happen ; but euen of the ſame, that he hath heere planted in the firſt ranke, and entrie of his cauſe. The firſt is this :

1 It is a Sacrament of vnitie ; Therefore if it be abuſed, we may ſeeke no redreſſe.

The ſecond is this : The fruit of the Sacrament dependeth not of the formes of Bread and Wine ;

2 Therefore we may breake Chriſts Inſtitution.

The third is this : Whole Chriſt (as M. Harding ſaith) is in either part of the Sacrament ;

3 Therefore there is no wrong done in barring the people from one kinde. Certainly theſe reaſons ſeeme very ſlender, and ſpecially to countermand the plaine Word of God. The ſentence that S. Baſil vſeth in this caſe is very terrible : Who ſo forbiddeth the thing that God commandeth, and who ſo commandeth the thing that God forbiddeth, is to bee holden accurſed of all them that loue the Lord.

Baſil. Moral. Summa ca. 14.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

The 47. vntruth. For the Bread & Wine ſignify the body and blood of Chriſt, the whiteneſſe, the roundneſſe, and other outward formes ſignifie nothing.

The 48. vntruth. For the Church neuer thus miniſtred the Sacrament vnto the people in any open congregation within the ſpace of ſix hundred yeeres.

Now concerning the outward formes of Bread and Wine, (47) their vſe is imployed in ſignification only, and be not of neceſſitie, ſo as grace may not be obtained by worthy receiuing of the Sacrament, vnleſſe both kindes be miniſtred. Therefore in Conſecrating of the Sacrament, according to Chriſts Inſtitution, both kindes be neceſſarie ; foraſmuch as it is not prepared for the receiuing only, but alſo for renuing and ſtirring vp of the remembrance of our Lords death. So in as much as the Sacrament ſerueth the Sacrifice, by which the death and oblation of Chriſt is repreſented, both the kindes be requiſite ; that by diuers and ſundry formes, the Blood of Chriſt ſhed for our ſinnes, and ſeparated from his Body, may euidently be ſignified. But inaſmuch as the faithfull people doe receiue the Sacrament, thereby to attaine ſpirituall grace, and ſaluation of their ſoules, diuerſitie of the formes or kindes that be vſed for the ſignification only, hath no further vſe nor profit. But by one kinde, becauſe in it whole Chriſt is exhibited, abundance of all grace is once giuen ; ſo as by the other kinde thereto ouer added (which giueth the ſame, and not another Chriſt) no further augmentation of ſpiritual grace may be attained. In conſideration of this, the Catholike Church, taught by the holy Ghoſt all truth, whiles in the daily Sacrifice the memorie of our Lords Death and Paſſion is celebrated, for that it is neceſſarie therein, to expreſſe moſt plainly the ſhedding and ſeparating of the Blood from the Body that was crucified ; hath alwaies to that purpoſe diligently vſed both kindes of Bread and Wine. But in diſtributing of the bleſſed Sacrament to Chriſtian people, hath vſed liberty (which Chriſt neuer imbarred by any commandement to the contrarie) ſo, as it hath (48) euer beene moſt for the behoofe and commodity of the receiuers ; and hath miniſtred ſometimes both kindes, ſometimes one kind onely, as it hath beene thought moſt expedient, in regard of time, place, and perſons.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Heere is much talke, and no proofe. I grant, the Prieſt, if he miniſter the Communion orderly, and as he ſhould, doth renue the memorie of Chriſts Paſſion, according to his owne commandement, Doe this in my remembrance. Yet all this concludeth not directly, That therefore Chriſts ordinance may be broken. Neither is it yet ſo clerely proued, that the Prieſt in his Maſſe repreſenteth the ſeparation of Chriſts Blod from his Body. For, beſide that there is no ancient Doctour heere alleged for proofe heereof, I might well demand by what words, by what geſture, or to whom doth he repreſent this Separation ? His words be ſtrange ; his geſture ſecret : the people neither heareth heareth nor ſeth ought, nor knoweth what hée meaneth. And being granted, that the Separation of Chriſts Bodie and Blood, is repreſented in the holy Myſteries, yet holy knoweth M. Harding, that the Prieſt ought more to repreſent the ſame, than the people? Doubtleſſe Chriſts Blood was ſhed indifferently for all the faithfull, as well for the People, as for the Prieſt: betweene whom and the People, as I haue before ſhewed out of S. Chryſoſtome, in this caſe there is no difference. For whereas M. Harding taketh the name of Sacrifice for ſome ſhew of proofe in this matter, it behoueth him to know, that not only the portion receiued by the Prieſt, but alſo the portion that is diſtributed vnto the people, is of the old Fathers called a Sacrifice. S. Auguſtine hath theſe words: In Carthage the maner was, that Hymnes ſhould bee ſaid at the Altar out of the Booke of Pſalmes, either when the Oblation was made, or when the thing that was offered, was diuided vnto the people. Chryſ. in 2. ad Cor. hom. 18. Retract. lib. 2.

By theſe plaine words we may ſée, that both the Prieſt and People receiued one Sacrifice. And Clemens (as M. Harding calleth him, the Apoſtles fellow) ſaith thus: Tanta in Altario Holocauſta offerantur, quanta populo ſufficere debeant: Let there bee ſo many Sacrifices offered at the Altar, as may ſuffice for the people. Clemens epi. 2.

And whereas it is further ſaid, that the Prieſt by receiuing both parts in ſeuerall, repreſenteth, as it were, vnto the eie, how Chriſts Bodie and Blood were done aſunder, the Scriptures and ancient Fathers haue taught vs otherwiſe, that not any geſture of the Prieſt, but the very miniſtration of the Holy Communion, and the whole action of the people, repreſenteth vnto vs the maner and order of Chriſts death. S. Paul ſaith: As often as ye ſhall eat this Bread, and drinke this Cup, ye ſhall declare the Lords death vntill he come. And this S. Paul writeth, not only to the Prieſts, but alſo to the whole congregation of the Corinthians. And in like ſort writeth S. Auguſtine touching the ſame: Cùm frangitur Hoſtia, & Sanguis de Calice in ora fidelium funditur, quid aliud quàm Dominici Corporis in Cruce immolatio, eiuſque Sanguinis de latere effuſio deſignatur? When the Oblation is broken, and the Blood from the Cuppe is powred into the mouthes of the faithfull, what thing elſe is there ſignified, but the offering of the Lords Body vpon the Croſſe, and the flowing of his Blood from his ſide? Thus it is cléere, that the ſeparation of Chriſts Bodie and Blood is repreſented as well by the People, as by the Prieſt. Wherefore to deuiſe a difference without cauſe, and of the ſame to conclude an errour, it is double follie. 1. Cor. 11. De Con. diſt. 2. Cùm frangitur.

The diuerſitie of formes and kindes (ſaith M. Harding) ſerueth for ſignification only, and hath no further vſe nor profit. Notwithſtanding this ſaying were otherwiſe true, yet the iſſue thereof ſéemeth dangerous. It is our part to bée obedient, and not to diſcuſſe or rectifie Gods commandements, and to ſay, any thing that Chriſt the Sonne of God hath appointed vs to doe, is vtterly void of vſe and profit. As for the libertie of the Church that is here claimed, if we ſhould demand where & when it was granted, perhaps the Chartar would not be found. The libertie of the Church is not to be againſt God, nor to controle any his ordinance. Neither hath M. Harding yet proued, that the Church within fiue hundred yeres after Chriſt, in open congregation and aſſemblie of people (which is the ſtate of this queſtion) euer vſed any ſuch kinde of libertie.

In theſe words M. Harding hath priuily couched ſundry arguments, which of what value or force they be, I pray thée (gentle Reader) to vnderſtand.

The firſt is this: The Prieſt conſecrateth the Sacrament: Therefore the People is not bound to receiue in both kindes. 1

The ſecond is this: The Prieſt offereth the Sacrifice and repreſenteth the ſeparation of Chriſts Bodie and Blood: Ergo, It is ſufficient for the people to receiue in one kinde. 2

The third is this: The Church hath her libertie: Ergo, She is not bound to Chriſts Inſtitution. 3

Alas, how ſlenderly hang theſe things together? Yet theſe are the arguments that (as it is ſuppoſed) are neuer able to be anſwered.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuiſion.

Anti poſſunt nos ſcim præcepta hæc fatere, quamuis Apoſtoli apud Clementem lib. 8. Conſtit. Apoſtolicarum, cap. vlt.

As touching the words of Chriſt, Bibite ex hoc omnes, Drinke yee all of this; they pertaine to the Apoſtles only, and to their Succeſſors. For to them (49) only he gaue commandement to do that, which he did in his Supper, as Clement ſaith; to them only, ſaying, Doe this in my remembrance, he gaue commiſſion to conſecrate, offer, and to receiue the Sacrament in remembrance of his death and paſſion, by the ſame words ordaining them Prieſts of the New Teſtament. Wherefore this belongeth not to the Lay-people, neither can it iuſtly be gathered by this place, that they are bound of neceſſitie, and (a) vnder paine of deadlie ſinne to receiue the Sacrament vnder both kindes.

The 49. vntruth. For theſe words pertained aſwell to the people as to the Prieſts, as ſhall appeare.

(a) Here M. Harding altereth the caſe.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

When I reade the wordes of M. Hardings, I am stricken with horrour, to consider the terrible iudgement of God. It is much to be feared, that he, that is led away of this sort, offendeth not of ignorance, for so were the fault the more pardonable, but against the manifest knowen truth, and against the spirit of God. For whereas Christ saith, Drinke ye all of this, if he will follow the letter, the wordes be plaine that all should drinke. If he will leaue the letter, and take the meaning, S. Paul hath opened it. For, writing vnto the whole Congregation at Corinth, he saith thus: As often as ye shall eat this Bread, and drinke of this Cup, ye shall declare the Lords death vntill he come. If he doubt S. Paul, yet the very practise and continuall order of the Primitiue Church, fully declareth what Christ meant. And they say, Consuetudo est optima interpres Legis: Custome is the best Interpreter of the Law. If he will take neither the wordes of Christ, nor Christs meaning, then I knew not how to deale with him.

1. Cor. 11.

Once againe he bringeth forth Clement the Apostles fellow. And what Clement? Verily euen the same, that ministred and deliuered the holy Communion to the faithfull that then were in Rome, vnder both kindes, as appeareth by the long vsage of that Church euen as Christ deliuered it to his Disciples: and M. Harding is not able to shew, that the same Clement euer ministred otherwise. He saith and knoweth that the word Omnes, is against him: the meaning against him: the practise of the Church against him: his owne Clement against him. Yet he beareth his countenance so, as if all were with him. To be short, if Christ, when he said, Drinke yee all, meant not that all should drinke, why did S. Paul and all the Apostles, and the whole Primitiue Church expound it and practise it, as though he had meant so? And if he meant so, why doth M. Harding deceiue the World, and say, he meant not so?

But Clement saith, Christ spake these words, Doe this in my remembrance, onely vnto the Apostles. Therefore (saith M. Harding) these words, Drinke ye all, pertaine to the Apostles only, and to their Successours. Vnderstand, good Reader, that Clement in the place here alleged, speaketh not one word, either of one kinde or of both: but only saith thus: That Christ appointed his Apostles to the office of the holy ministration, which he calleth the spirituall oblation. Therefore thou maist see, that M. Harding shewing the one thing for another, and of the same concluding what him liketh, cannot seeme to deale plainly.

Spiritualis hostia.

The argument that hereof is gathered, standeth thus: Clement saith, that Christ gaue only vnto his Apostles, the office of the Ministerie, and authority to offer the spirituall Sacrifice: Ergo, these wordes, Drinke ye all of this, pertaine nothing to the people. Here is a very faint conclusion. For by force of this reason, he may take from the people both parts of the Sacrament, as well as one, and so leaue them no Sacrament at all.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuision.

The 50. vntruth. For they changed not, but restored the old custome.

And this vnderstood they which aboue one hundred yeeres past, (50) changing the old custome of the Church of receiuing the Communion vnder one kinde, by their priuate authoritie would needs vsurpe the Cup also. For seeing themselues not to haue sufficient proofe and warrant for their doing, of these words, Drinke yee all of this, the better to bolster vp their new fangled attempt, they thought it better to allege the words of Christ in S. Iohn; Except ye eat the flesh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his blood, ye shall not haue life in you; which words for all that our new Masters of forty yeeres past, will to be vnderstanded of the spirituall, and not of the Sacramentall eating, as it may be and is taken for both, of the Doctours viewed apart; yet in all that Chapter, there is no mention of the Cup nor of Wine at all. Wherefore they that cry so much on the institution and commandement of Christ, cannot finde in all the Scriptures, neither commandement where he gaue charge the Sacrament so to be giuen, neither so much as any example, where Christ gaue it vnder both kindes to any other than to the Apostles. Whereas contrariwise it may bee shewed of our part, that the Sacrament was giuen vnder one kinde only to the two Disciples that went to Emmaus; For that the Bread which Christ there tooke, Blessed, Brake, and gaue to them, was not simple and common Bread, but the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. For so [a] Chrysostome, [b] Augustine, [c] Bede, and [d] Theophylact, with one accord doe witnesse. It appeareth also, that the Communion vnder one kinde was vsed at Hierusalem among Christs Disciples, by that S. Luke writeth in the Acts of the Apostles of the breaking of the bread. If M. Iewell heere thinke to auoid these places by their accustomed figure Synecdoche, among his owne sect happily it may be accepted; but among men of right and learned iudgement, that shift will seeme ouer weake and vaine. Now to conclude touching the sixth Chapter of S. Iohn, as thereof they can bring no one word mentioning the Cup or Wine, for proofe of their both kindes; so it sheweth, and not in very obscure wise, that the forme of Bread alone is sufficient, whereas Christ saith; Qui manducat panem hunc, viuet in æternum: He that eateth this Bread, shall liue for euer.

Ioan. 6.

Luke 24.

[a] In Matth. hom. 17. [b] De consens. Euangel. lib. 3. cap. 25. [c] In Luca. [d] In Luca. Act. 2.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

In these wordes M. Harding chargeth not only vs, but also the Apostles of Christ, and all the Fathers of the Primitiue Church, with great ouersight: who in their times ministred the holy Sacrament vnto the vulgar people, as it is now supposed by these men, without any example of Christ, and without Commission.

Touching

Touching the Inſtitution of Chriſt, I haue alreadie ſaid ſo much, as vnto a quiet minde may ſeeme ſufficient. Yet for further declaration, I would demand of M. Harding, what thing he requireth to Chriſts Inſtitution. If Words, Chriſts words be plaine: If Example, Chriſt himſelfe miniſtred in both kindes: If Authoritie, Chriſt commanded his Diſciples, and in them all other Miniſters of his Church to doe the like: If Certaintie of his meaning, The Apoſtles endued with the Holy Ghoſt, ſo practiſed the ſame, and vnderſtood, he meant ſo: If Continuance of time, Hee bade the ſame to be continued vntill hee come againe. If neither the Words, nor Example, nor Commandement of Chriſt, nor the vnderſtanding and practiſe of the Apoſtles, can warrant vs Chriſts Inſtitution, alas what warrant then haue they, that being vtterly void of all theſe things, only ſtay themſelues, as it is confeſſed by the beſt of that ſide, by the ſimple deuotion of the people? When Chriſt had deliuered both kindes vnto his Diſciples, hee ſaid vnto them, This doe ye, the ſame that yée ſée I haue done. But where did Chriſt euer ſay, Miniſter vnto your ſelues one way, and another way vnto the people: or, Receiue ye in both kindes, and let all the reſt receiue in one? St. Gard. in the Diuels Sophiſtrie.

Although theſe things be plaine and euident of themſelues, yet that the follie of theſe men may the better appeare, it ſhall be good to heare the report of one of their owne Doctours touching theſe matters. One Gerardus Lorichius, in a Booke that hee wrote, De Miſſa publica proroganda, hath theſe words: Sunt Pſeudocatholici, qui reformationem Eccleſiæ quoquo modo remorari non verentur. Hi ne Laicis altera ſpecies reſtituatur, nullis parcunt blaſphemijs. Dicunt enim, Chriſtum ſolis Apoſtolis dixiſſe, Bibite ex eo omnes. Atqui verba Canonis habent, Accipite & manducate ex hoc omnes. Hic dicant, oro, num & hoc ad ſolos dictum ſit Apoſtolos. Ergo Laicis & à ſpecie panis eſt abſtinendum: Quod dicere eſt hæreſis, & blaſphemia peſtilens, & execrabilis: Conſequitur ergo, vtrunque verbum dictum eſſe ad omnem Eccleſiam: They bee falſe Catholikes (ſaith this man) that are not aſhamed by all meanes to hinder the Reformation of the Church. They to the intent the other kinde of the Sacrament may not be reſtored vnto the Lay people, ſpare no kinde of blaſphemies. For they ſay, that Chriſt ſaid only vnto his Apoſtles, Drinke ye all of this. But the words of the Canon (of the Maſſe) be theſe: Take and eat ye all of this. Heere, I beſeech them, let them tell me, whether they will haue theſe words alſo, onely to pertaine vnto the Apoſtles. Then muſt the Lay people abſtaine from the other kinde of the Bread alſo. Which thing to ſay, is an hereſie, and a peſtilent and a deteſtable blaſphemie. Wherefore it followeth, that each of theſe words was ſpoken vnto the whole Church. Thus farre Lorichius, an earneſt defender of Tranſubſtantiation, of the Popes Supremacie, and of Priuate Maſſe: leſt M. Harding ſhould ſay, he were one of Luthers Scholars, and ſo except againſt him, as being a partie. And Iulius ſometime Biſhop of Rome, hearing of certaine that vſed to dippe the Bread in the Wine, and ſo to deliuer it to the people, had no way to reforme them, but only by Chriſts Inſtitution. For thus he ſaith: Quod pro complemento Communionis, intinctam tradunt Euchariſtiam populis, nec hoc prolatum ex Euangelio teſtimonium receperunt: Whereas for accompliſhment of the Communion, they dip the Sacrament and deliuer it vnto the people, they haue not receiued this witneſſe of the Goſpell. He addeth further: Seorſum enim Panis, & ſeorſum Calicis commendatio memoratur: For the deliuery of the Bread and the deliuery of the Cup, are mentioned aſunder. And thus he ſpeaketh of the miniſtration of the Sacrament, that is due not only to the Prieſts, but alſo to the people. Gerardus Lorichius in 7. parte Canonis. De Con. diſt. 2. Cum omne.

The learned men of Bohæmia ſaw they could haue no hold of Chriſts Inſtitution, and therefore to maintaine their new fangled attempt, as it pleaſeth M. Harding to terme it they were faine to take the words of Chriſt out of the ſixth Chapter of Iohn; Vnleſſe ye eat the fleſh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his Blood, ye ſhall haue no life in you. But theſe words in the ſixth Chapter of S. Iohn, ſaith M. Harding, our new Maſters will haue expounded of the Spirituall, not of the Sacramentall eating. Of the Bohemians, I cannot ſée why they ſhould be called new fangled. Their requeſt was none other, but that they might continue the order of the Primitiue Church, which Thomas of Aquine ſaith, had continued in diuers Churches from the Apoſtles vntill his time, for the ſpace of a thouſand and three hundred yéeres without controlement. And it may ill become a Chriſtian man, and a Scholar of the Apoſtolike Sée, to call the doing of Chriſt, and of his Diſciples, New fangled. Touching their reaſons made in this behalfe, I néed not to ſpeake. Gods name bee bleſſed, they haue preuailed with the beſt learned of the World. Whatſoeuer their premiſſes ſéeme to M. Harding, their concluſion was this, that no mortall Creature ſhould preſume to diſallow the ordinance of the Immortall God. Part. 3. qu. 80. Art. 12.

But our new Maſters (ſaith M. Harding) muſt needs haue theſe words of S. Iohn expounded of the ſpirituall eating. If it be either the violence of nature, or the maner of his Catholike doctrine, that driueth M. Harding thus to taunt, hée muſt be borne withall; notwithſtanding ding it agreeth not with his premise. As touching the vnderstanding of the wordes of Christ in the sixth of S. Iohn, they are not all new maisters, that haue so taken them. For to leaue S. Augustine, Origen, and others of that age, Nicolaus Lyra, a man of latter yeres, saith, The said wordes of Christ must nedes be taken spiritually, and none otherwise. Thus he saith: Ista intelligi debent de manducatione, & potatione spirituali. Quia sequitur, Qui manducat meam Carnem, & bibit meum sanguinem, in me manet, & ego in eo. Quod B. Augustinus exponens ait: Hoc est manducare illam escam, & bibere illum potum, in Christo manere, & Christum manentem in se habere: quod nihil aliud est, quàm esse in charitate Christi: These words must be taken of the spirituall eating and drinking. For it followeth: Hee that eateth my Flesh and drinketh my Blood, dwelleth in mee, and I in him. Which thing S. Augustine expounding, saith thus: This is the eating of that food, and the drinking of that drinke, for a man to dwell in Christ, and to haue Christ in him dwelling: which thing is nothing else, but to be in the loue of Christ. Here we see, that Nicolas Lyra, a man that liued two hundred yeres agoe, and therefore no very New Maister, expoundeth these wordes of the spirituall eating.

Nicol. Lyra in Psalm. 111.

Yet M. Harding saith, The same place may be taken also of the Sacramentall eating. But Lyra thinketh no, and therefore addeth further: Hoc verbum nihil directè pertinet ad Sacramentalem vel corporalem manducationem. Nam hoc verbum fuit dictum diu, antequam Sacramentum Eucharistiæ esset institutum. Ex illa igitur litera, de Sacramentali Communione, non potest fieri argumentum efficax: These words pertaine not directly vnto the Sacramentall or Corporall eating. For it was spoken long before the Sacrament was ordained. Therefore out of this letter, there cannot be made any good argument for the Sacramentall Communion.

Nicol. Lyra in Psalm. 111.

Likewise one Michael Væhe, one of late yeres, a man of M. Hardings owne side, touching the same matter, writeth thus: Infirmum est argumentum: Quæ enim de spirituali manducatione dicta sunt, ille ad sacramentalem torquet: This (saith he) is but a weake reason: For the words that be spoken of spirituall eating, he applieth to the Sacramentall eating. Here may M. Harding see, besides S. Augustine, Origen, and other old Catholike Fathers, whose wordes I haue not alleged, what men hee hath called New Maisters. Nicolas Lyra was an English man, and liued two hundred yeres before Luther. Michael Væhe was of late yeres, and wrote namely against Luther. Verily if Christ and his Apostles were now conuersant in the world, vnlesse they would forsake their owne doctrine, they should be called New Maisters too, aswell as others.

Michael Væhe tract. 5. contra Lutherum.

And notwithstanding these wordes in the sixth Chapter of S. Iohn be spoken and taken of the spirituall eating, as it is already prooued, yet are they oftentimes by the old Fathers applied vnto the Sacrament: but vndirectly, as it is aboue noted by Lyra. To alleg the places, specially being so many, and not vnknowen vnto the Learned, it would be tedious. Christs being at Emmaus, and the Disciples breaking of bread at Hierusalem, because it hath pleased M. Harding to bring them twice, shall bee afterward answered in their places.

The reasons that M. Harding hath here gathered be these: In the sixth Chapter of S. Iohn there is no mention made of the Cuppe or Wine; Ergo, the people may receiue vnder one kinde. This reason is very weake: for he may as well conclude of the same wordes; Ergo, The Priest may receiue vnder one kinde: which he himselfe saith is against Christs Institution. He might farre better haue concluded the contrary. The Lay people being faithfull and godly, by Faith, and in their hearts doe indeed and verily drinke the blood of Christ. Therefore they may drinke the Sacrament of the same. And as Eckius a Doctour of that side saith: The People drinketh in the person of the Priest. Therefore, they may drinke in their owne person as well and without danger.

Eckius, in locis Communibus.

Another reason is this: It doth not appeare, that Christ euer ministred in both kindes, but onely to his Disciples: Ergo, the people may receiue in one kinde. I marueil, what lucke M. Harding hath to such conclusions. For what necessarie sequell can there bee, either from the Apostles to the people, or from both kindes to one kinde, or from an affirmatiue to a negatiue? The summe of the reason standeth thus: The Apostles are commanded to receiue both kindes: Ergo, The people is not commanded to receiue both kindes. The weaknesse whereof is euident and sheweth it selfe. It will much rather and better follow thus: The people is commanded to receiue as the Apostles receiued, for there is expressed no difference. The Apostles receiued in both kindes: Ergo, the people is commanded to receiue in both kindes. And thus notwithstanding it be here stoutly auouched, that we haue neither example, nor Institution, yet I trust it doth well appeare, that we haue both the example of Christ, that ministred the Sacrament in both kindes: and also Christs Institution, that bade his Disciples to doe the same.

M. Harding.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuision.

Thus our aduersaries haue nothing to bring out of the Scriptures against the vse of the Catholike Church, in ministring the Communion vnder one kind. And yet they cease not crying out vpon the breach of Christs expresse Commandement. And M. Iewell, for his part, in his first Answer to D. Cole, saith, that the Councell of Constance pronounced openly against Christ himselfe. But forasmuch as they are so hot in this point, I will send them to Martin Luther himselfe their Patriarke, that either by his sobrietie in this matter, they may be somewhat colded, or by his and his Scholars inconstancie heerein, be brought to be ashamed of themselues. Though the places be well knowen, as often times cited of the Catholike Writers of our time, against the Gospellers, yet heere I thinke good to rehearse them, that the vnlearned may see how themselues make not so great a matter of this Article, as some seeme to beare the people in hand it is. Luther writeth to them of Bohemia these very words: Quoniam pulchrum quidem esset, vtraque specie Eucharistiæ vti, & Christus hac in re nihil tanquam necessarium præcepit; præstaret pacem & vnitatem, quam Christus vbique præcepit, sectari, quàm de speciebus Sacramenti contendere: Whereas it were a faire thing (saith he) to vse both kindes of the Sacrament, yet for that Christ heerein hath commanded nothing, as necessarie, it were better to keepe peace and vnitie, which Christ hath euery where charged vs withall, than to striue for the outward kindes of the Sacrament. Againe his words be these, in a declaration that he wrote of the Sacrament: Non dixi, neque consului, neque est intentio mea, vt vnus aut aliquot Episcopi, propria authoritate alicui incipiant vtramque speciem porrigere, nisi ita constitueretur & mandaretur in Concilio Generali: Neither haue I said, nor counselled, nor my minde is, that any one, or moe Bishops, begin by their owne authoritie, to giue both kindes (of the Sacrament) to any person, vnlesse it were so ordained and commanded in a Generall Councell.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

It greeueth M. Harding that we should say, the Councell of Constance decreed against Christ himselfe: and therefore he sendeth vs to Luther himselfe, that, seeing his inconstancie, we may be ashamed of our selues. And thus, with one worde sylLable, he thought it good merrily to refresh himselfe: and yet touching inconstancie, wherein he so triumpheth against D. Luther, he seemeth vtterly to haue forgotten himselfe. For it is knowen to the World, that D. Luther, in all his life, neuer changed but once, and that from manifest errour to the open confessed truth. But M. Harding, vpon how good occasions I will not say, hath changed his Doctrine and whole Faith, twice within the space of two yeares. And so much would I not now haue touched, saying only to put him in remembrance of himselfe.

That the determination of the Councell of Constance was against Christ, besides Gerardus Lorichius, a Doctour of M. Hardings owne Schoole, who affirmeth it in vehement words, what can there be so plaine, as that S. Paul writeth vnto the Corinthians? That I receiued of the Lord, the same haue I deliuered vnto you. After he mentioneth each kinde apart, and sheweth, that as Christ toke the Bread, so he also toke the Cup: and that the Apostles receiued both at Christs hands, not only for themselues, but also to the vse and behoofe of the people. Therefore whereas M. Harding crieth so often against vs, that the deliuerie of the Cup vnto the people is no part of Christs Institution, if he had considered these things well, or had conferred herein with the old Catholike Fathers, he would haue better aduised himselfe. For in stead of many, for shortnesse sake, to allege but one, S. Cyprians words in this matter be very plaine: Quidam vel ignoranter, vel simpliciter, in Calice Dominico sanctificando, & plebi ministrando, non hoc faciunt, quod Iesus Christus Dominus & Deus noster, huius Sacrificij Author & Doctor, fecit & docuit: Some there be, that in sanctifying the Cup, and deliuering it vnto the people, doe not that thing, that Iesus Christ our Lord and God, the Author and Teacher of this Sacrifice, both did and taught. And addeth further: If any man be in this errour, seeing the light of the truth, let him returne againe vnto the roote, and vnto the originall of the Lords Tradition. And after in the same Epistle: We keepe not the thing that is commanded vs, vnlesse we doe the same that the Lord did. In these few words S. Cyprian saith, The Lord both did it, and taught it to bee done: He calleth it, The Lords Tradition: He calleth it, The Lords Commandement. And here cannot M. Harding steale away in the mist, and say, S. Cyprian meant all this of the Cup, that the Priest consecrateth for himselfe. For his very words be plaine to the contrary: In Calice Dominico sanctificando, & plebi ministrando: that is, In sanctifying the Lords Cup, and ministring it vnto the people. And if S. Cyprian might well write thus against the Heretikes called Aquarij, which in the holy Ministration would vse no wine, but in stead thereof did Consecrate water, and ministred it vnto the people, much more may we say the same against our Aduersaries, which Consecrate and minister vnto the people no Cup at all. Wherefore at the end of the same Epistle he concludeth with these words: Not to doe that thing that the Lord did, what is it else, than to cast off his word, and to despise his Discipline, and to commit, not worldly, but spirituall robberie and adulterie, while as a man, from the truth of the Gospell, stealeth away both the sayings and doings of the Lord, and corrupteth and defileth Gods Commandements? So is it written in the Prophet Ieremie: What is Chaffe

De Miss. publica prorogandæ. 1. Cor. 11.

Cyprian. lib. 2. Epist. 3.

Ad originem Traditionis Dominicæ.

Quod mandatum est.

Ierem. 23.

Chaffe in comparison of Corne ? Therefore will I vpon these Prophets, saith the Lord, that steale my words each one of them from his neighbour, and deceiue my people in their lies, and in their errours.

The words that Luther wrote to them of Bohæmia, and the others here reported, were written by him before God had appointed him to publish the Gospell: and therefore are no more to be alleged against him for that he wrote afterward, as note of inconstancie, than M. Hardings Sermons preached openly in the time of King Edward, are to bee alleged against that he writeth now.

M. Harding. The 6. Diuision.

The 51. vntruth. ioined with a slander. Neuer man spake more reuerently of the Oblation of Christ vpon the Crosse.

Thus he wrote before he had conceiued perfect hatred against the Church. But after that he had beene better acquainted with the Diuell, and of him, appearing vnto him sensibly, had beene instructed with arguments against the Sacrifice of the Masse, (51) that the memorie of our Redemption by Christ wrought on the Crosse, might vtterly be abolished, he wrote heereoffarre otherwise: Si quo casu Concilium statueret, minimè omnium nos vellemus vtraque specie potiri: imo tunc primùm in despectum Concilij, vellemus aut vna, aut neutra, & nequaquam vtraque potiri, & eos planè anathema habere, quicunque talis Concilij authoritate potirentur vtraque: If in any case the Councell would so ordaine, we would in no wise haue both the kindes: but euen then, in despight of the Councell, we would haue one kinde, or neither of them, and in no wise both; and hold them for accursed, whosoeuer by authoritie of such a Councell would haue both. These words declare what spirit Luther was of. They shew him like himselfe. Whosoeuer readeth his Bookes with indifferent iudgement, shall finde that sithence the Apostles time, neuer wrote man so arrogantly, ne so despightfully against the Church, nor so contrarily to himselfe. Which markes be so euident, that whosoeuer will not see them, but suffereth himselfe to be carried away into errour, hatred of the Church, and contempt of all godlinesse, either by him, or by his scholars; except he repent, and returne, he is guiltie of his owne damnation, vtterly ouerthrowen, and sinneth inexcusably, as one condemned by his owne iudgement. But for excuse heereof, in his Booke of the Captiuitie of Babylon, he confesseth that he wrote thus, not for that he thought so, nor for that he iudged the vse of one kinde vnlawfull, but because hee was stirred by hatred and anger so to doe. His words doe sound so much plainly: Prouocatus, imò per vim raptus: I wrote this (saith hee) otherwise than I thought in my heart, prouoked, and by violence pulled to it, whether I would or no. Here I doubt not, but wise men will regard more that Luther wrote when his minde was quiet and calme, than when it was enraged with blustering stormes of naughtie affections.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

There is nothing so easie, as to speake ill. There was nothing further off from Luthers minde, than vpon any determination of any Councell, to minister the Sacrament vnder one kinde, and so to breake Christs Institution into halues. But hee thought it not mat, that Gods truth immortall, should hang of the authoritie of a mortall man, and stand for true no further than it should please a man to allow of it. Notwithstanding, such interest and authoritie the Pope hath claimed to himselfe, forcing the world to beleeue, as he himselfe writeth, That he hath all right and law in the closet of his brest. And one Sylvester Prierias, gouernour of Pope Leoes Palace, was not ashamed nor afraid to write these words: A Doctrina Romanæ Ecclesiæ, & Romani Pontificis, sacra Scriptura robur & authoritatem trahit: The holy Scripture taketh strength and authoritie of the Church and Bishop of Rome. This was the thing that D. Luther misliked, and thought intolerable. And therefore hee said, hee would haue Gods word receiued, onely because it is Gods word, and spoken by him; not because it is authorized by a Councell: and if the Councell would allow the Ministration in one kinde, then, he said, he would vse both, because Christ in his Institution appointed both. But if the Bishops in the Councell would agree vpon both kindes, as a matter standing wholly in their pleasures, as though they had full power to controle or to ratifie the will of God, then, he said, he would haue no regard vnto the authoritie of such a Councell, that setteth it selfe aboue God, but rather would vse one kinde only, or none at all. For this cause M. Harding reproueth Doctor Luther so bitterly, and calleth him arrogant, because he would not haue Gods will subiect to the will of man.

Extr. de Const. Licet Roman. Sylvester Prierias, Magister Palatij.

Actor. 16.

Yet it appeareth, that S. Paul in the like case did the like. For notwithstanding he had Circumcised Timothy, yet when he saw certaine come in, that would needs force the same vpon Titus also, and so make it necessary, he withstood them stoutly, and would not yeld.

Galat. 2.

Thus he writeth: Neither was Titus, that then was with me, compelled to be Circumcised, for the comming in of certaine false Brethren, which came vpon vs to trie out our libertie, that we haue in Christ Iesus, to the intent to bring vs into bondage. Vnto whom wee gaue no place by yeelding, no not for any time, that the truth of the Gospell might remaine among you.

Euseb. lib. 2. cap. 2.

Eusebius in his Story saith, there was an old Law in Rome, that no Emperour should Consecrate a God, vnlesse the same God had beene first allowed by the Councell. Tiberius being Emperour, when he heard of the wonderfull workes that were wrought by Christ in Iurie, thought therefore he was a God, and promoted a bill vnto the Councell, that that Christ might be proclaimed, and taken for a God. But the Councell was otherwise bent, and would allow him for no God. Tertullian laugheth at their follie. His words be these: Apud vos de humano arbitrio diuinitas pensitatur. Nisi homini Deus placuerit, non erit Deus. Homo iam Deo propitius esse debet: Amongst you the diuinitie and state of God is weighed by mans indgement. Vnlesse God please man, God (amongst you) shall be no God. Now therefore man must be good and fauourable vnto his God. The like follie seemeth to be in them that thinke Gods truth is no truth, vnlesse the consent of a Councell allow it to be truth. To this same purpose Luther wrote a Booke vnto the Knights of the order of Russia, after they had obtained from the Pope a dispensation to marrie, notwithstanding their vow. He chargeth them, that in any wise they marrie not by warrant of that dispensation: otherwise (he saith) they offend God, and be worse than adulterers, as hauing more regard vnto man, than vnto God: and hauing Gods owne dispensation, as if it were not sufficient, would seeke further for the dispensation of a man.

Tertull. in Apologetico.

Ad nobiles Ordinis Teutonici.

Luther wrote not this in the despight of any godly Councell, no more than the Prophet Esay, when he said, Inite Concilium, & dissipabitur: Goe, gather your Councell, and it shall be broken. But he could not suffer to see Gods glorie so defaced, that a companie of men should presume to allow or disallow his truth, as if it were not true in it selfe, but must fall or stand only at their pleasure.

Esai 8.

The rest that followeth, is nothing else but vnsemely slander. But God be blessed, that hath deliuered that godly man from lying tongues.

But Luther (saith M. Harding) was contrary vnto himselfe. Euen so Marcion the Heretike charged S. Paul, that he spake against the Ceremonies, and yet himselfe shaued his head at Cenchreæ, and obserued the Ceremonies: that hee would not Circumcise Titus, and yet had Circumcised Timotheus: that hee would sometime defend the Law, and sometime repraue the Law: and so was euermore contrarie to himselfe. And he that had M. Hardings spirit, perhaps would no more doubt to finde fault with S. Paul for inconstancie, than with Luther. If Luther were euer contrarie to himselfe, yet might no man worse charge him in that behalfe, than M. Harding. But Luther euermore followed Gods calling, and neuer returned backe vnto his vomit, neither fought against his owne conscience, nor against the manifest knowen truth. And therefore, although hee were contrarie vnto himselfe, as passing from errour vnto truth, yet was he not contrary vnto God.

Actor. 21.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuision.

Now to put this matter, that Luther iudged it a thing indifferent, whether one receiue the Sacrament vnder one kinde, or both, more out of doubt, Philip Melancthon, his scholar, and neerest of his counsell, writeth: Sicut edere suillam, aut abstinere á suilla, sic alterutra signi parte vti medium esse: That as it is a thing indifferent to eat Swines flesh, or to forbeare Swines flesh, so it is also to vse which part of the signe a man listeth. By the word Signe, he meaneth the Sacrament, liking better that strange word, than the accustomed word of the Church, lest hee might perhaps be thought of the Brethren of his Sect, in somewhat to ioine with the Catholikes.

Iohan. Commun.

Bucer also is of the same opinion, who in the conference that was had betweene the Catholikes and Protestants, for agreement in controuersies of Religion at Ratisbone, confirmed and allowed this Article by his full consent, with these words: Ad controuersiam, quæ est de vna aut vtraque specie, tollendam, cum primis conducturum, vt sancta Ecclesia liberam faceret potestatem, Sacramentum hoc in vna, vel in vtraque specie sumendi. Ea tamen lege, vt nulli per hoc detur occasio, quem vsum tantoperè retinuit Ecclesia, temerè condemnandi, aut inuicem iudicandi: That the controuersie for the one or both kindes may bee taken away, it shall bee very well done, that holy Church made it free, to receiue this Sacrament in one or both kindes: yet vnder such condition, as heereby no occasion bee giuen to any body, rashly to condemne the vse which the Church hath so long time kept, nor to iudge another. Soothly hee which would haue it free, and at libertie, to receiue the Sacrament vnder one or both kindes, and holdeth opinion, that the old custome of the one kinde onely is not to bee condemned, seemeth plainely enough to confesse, that nothing hath beene instituted or commanded of Christ, touching this matter, as necessarie to saluation.

Thus we may see plainly, that they which haue diuided themselues from the Mysticall Body of Christ, that is, his Church, who were of greatest learning and iudgement, make it a matter indifferent (as it is indeed of it selfe left to the libertie of the Church) whether the Sacrament be ministred vnder one kinde, or both. And thus much hath beene confessed against M. Iewell and his Sect, not onely by the learned aduersaries of the Church in our time, but also by a learned man of Bohæmia, aboue six score yeeres past. His name is Iohn Przyxam, of whose writings, some are set foorth in print. This learned man, whereas hee endeuoured to proue the vse of both kindes of the words of Christ written by S. Iohn, Except yee eat the flesh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his blood, ye shall not haue life in you, at length vttereth these words according to the eloquence of his time: Verùm tamen hîc Deum timens, & mores impios aliorum præcauens, fateor, quòd quascunque personas de Ecclesia Communioni fidelium sub vtraque specie repugnantes, damnare aut hæreticare non intendo: But heere hauing the feare of God before mine eies, and being well ware I follow not the wicked conditions of others, I grant, that what persons soeuer of the Church repine against the Communion of the faithfull people vnder both kindes, I intend not to condemne them, nor to hold them for Heretikes.

Ioh. de profess. fidei cathol. Cap. 19.

But

A Signe.

But if it bee the Commandement of God, that the Sacrament bee receiued of all vnder both kindes, why ſhould hee be forbidden by the feare of God, to condemne thoſe that withſtand that order of Communion, ſeeing that whoſoeuer goeth againſt Gods Commandement, is worthy to be condemned? Therefore by his teſtimonie, the vſe of one or both kindes is indifferent.

Thus we are able to allege Luther, Melanchon, Bucer, and that learned Bohæmian, for the indifferencie of the Communion, to be miniſtred either vnder one kinde or both: whereby I meane not, that the vſe of the Sacrament is ſo left to euery mans libertie, as he that liſteth may require both kindes, and another may content himſelfe with one kinde. Not ſo. Euery man is bound to follow the order of the Church: but the Church is not bound of neceſſitie, by Gods Commandement, to miniſter it vnder both kindes to the Laitie.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

To proue that the halfe Communion is a thing indifferent, hee bringeth forth the authoritie of Melanchon, Bucer, and a certaine learned man of Bohæmia: ſome of them falſlie alleged, and ſome without any allegation at all. Neither doth he bring them to the intent to take them for his Authors, and to follow them: for they neither in their Bookes, nor in the order of their Churches, euer conſented to the breach of Chriſts Inſtitution. But herein hee bewraieth his want of old Doctors: for hauing the authoritie of them, he would neuer haue alleged any of theſe.

In Melanchon he miſliketh much the maner of his ſpeech, in that he calleth the Sacrament a Signe: which word (as hee ſaith) is ſtrange, and not the accuſtomed word of the Church. Sauing that hee ſeeketh occaſions and quarrels without cauſe, as his wont is, otherwiſe hee knoweth, that a Sacrament hath beene called a Signe, in all times and Ages of the Church.

Lib. 4. diſt. 1. Petrus Lumbardus thus defineth a Sacrament: Sacramentum eſt Signum rei Sacræ: A Sacrament is the Signe of a holy thing. And as it is thought, the very ſubſtance and nature of a thing cannot be better knowen, than by the Definition. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Signa cùm ad res diuinas adhibentur, Sacramenta vocantur: Signes, when they be applied to godly things, be called Sacraments. And againe, writing of the difference that is betweene the Sacraments of the Old Law, and of the New, he ſaith thus: In Signis diuerſis, eadem Fides: The Signes being diuers, the Faith is one. And writing againſt one Adimantus, he ſaith: Non dubitauit Dominus dicere, Hoc eſt Corpus meum, cùm daret Signum Corporis ſui: The Lord doubted not to ſay, This is my Body, when he gaue the Signe of his Body. Likewiſe ſaith Chryſoſtome: Si mortuus Ieſus non eſt, cuius Symbolum ac Signum hoc Sacrificium eſt? If Ieſus died not, whoſe Token and whoſe Signe is this Sacrifice? And leſt any man ſhould be deceiued in the meaning of this word Signe, S. Auguſtine himſelfe hath expounded it thus: Signum eſt res, præter ſpeciem, quam ingerit Senſibus, aliud quiddam faciens ex ſe in cognitionem venire: A Signe is a thing, that, beſides the ſight it ſelfe which it offereth vnto the ſences, cauſeth of it ſelfe ſome other certaine thing to come into knowledge. Whereby it may appeare, that this word Signe is not ſo ſtrange as M. Harding would haue it ſeeme, nor ſo vnaccuſtomed vnto the Church. Although it miſlike him, that we ſhould doe as the old Fathers did, yet he might giue vs leaue to vſe ſuch words and phraſes as the old Fathers vſed.

Aug. de Doctrina Chriſtiana, li. 3. ca. 6.
In Iohan. Tract. 45.
Auguſt. contra Adimantum, cap. 12.
Chryſ. in Mat. Homil. 83.
Aug. de Doctrina Chriſtiana, lib. 2.
De Con. diſt. 2. Signum eſt.

But (ſaith he) Melanchon and Bucer accounted it a thing indifferent. Indeed theſe godly learned men, when they ſaw that through the malice of their Aduerſaries, they could not obtaine, that Chriſts Inſtitution might vniuerſally be receiued, yet they deſired at the leaſt, it might bee left free, without reſtraint, for euery Church to doe therein as they ſhould thinke good, and that without murmur, or offence of others. And thus farre forth their deſire was it might be iudged free: not that they thought Chriſt had not ordeined the Sacrament to be miniſtred vnto the people in both kindes, or that in it ſelfe it is indifferent, but that the faithfull of God might indifferently and freely vſe it, without controlement, and that it ſhould not be iudged Hereſie, to doe as Chriſt hath commanded.

So the godly Fathers at the beginning, when they could not perſwade the Princes of the world, with their people, to receiue the Goſpell, yet they thought they were gainers, and gaue God thankes, when they might haue place and libertie for themſelues, freely and with quiet conſcience to meet together, and to preach the Goſpell.

This libertie M. Harding cannot like withall. He would haue it free for the whole Church to determine of it: but not for euery Church particular. This is a ſhift to deceiue the ignorant. For he knoweth well, that all other Churches throughout the world, from the firſt planting of the Goſpell vntill this day, doe ſtill miniſter the holy Communion in both kindes, as Chriſt commanded: and that Chriſts Inſtitution was neuer openly and by conſent broken, but only in the Church of Rome: which Church alſo is not vniuerſall, but meere particular: and that the ſame breach, in the ſame Church of Rome, ſprang not of any conſent of Biſhops, or other learned men, but, as it is proued before, onely of the simple deuotion of the people. And doth M. Harding thinke the people may safely breake Christs Institution, without any Generall Councell: and may not safely returne againe to the same, without a Generall Councell? Verily there needeth no Councell, where as nothing is done by Councell. Nestorius.

ſimple

Touching the indifferencie of this matter, whereupon M. Harding hath built this whole treatie, and in what sort the breach of Christs Institution may same a thing indifferent, I know no better answer, than that is already made by S. Cyprian, who in the like case maketh answer thus: Si quis de antecessoribus meis non hoc obseruauit & tenuit, quod nos Dominus exemplo & magisterio suo docuit, potest simplicitati eius de indulgentia Domini venia concedi: nobis verò non poterit ignosci, qui nunc à Domino admoniti & instructi sumus, &c. If any of my predecessors haue not followed and kept that thing which the Lord, by his example and commandement, hath taught vs, hee for his simplicitie may bee pardoned: but (if we wilfully offend) there is no pardon for vs, that are already warned and instructed of the Lord. We giue God thankes, that whiles he instructeth vs what wee shall doe for the time to come, hee forgiueth vs that is past, because wee haue erred of simplicitie. Thus farre forth the breach of Gods ordinance may bee borne withall, by the iudgement of S. Cyprian. But he addeth further: Post inspirationem verò, & reuelationem factam, qui in eo quod erraverat, perseverat, prudens & sciens, sine venia ignorantiæ peccat, præsumptione atque obstinatione superatus: After that God hath once opened and reuealed (his truth) whoso continueth still in his errour, willingly and wittingly offendeth, without hope of pardon, as being ouercome with Presumption and Wilfulnesse. Cyprian. lib. 2. epist. 3. Cypr. ad Iubaianum, de Hereticis Baptizandis.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuision.

And whereas it was ministred in both kindes at Corinth, as it appeareth by S. Paul, and in sundry other places, as wee finde most euidently in the writings of diuers ancient Fathers, yet the Church hath beene mooued by diuers and weighty causes, to take order, that the people should receiue their Communion vnder one kinde, not onely in the Councell of Basil, but also in that of Constance, and long before them, aboue a thousand yeeres, in (52) the first Councell of Ephesus, as many doe probably gather, and namely, Vrbanus Regius, a Doctor of Luthers Schoole, confesseth in his booke De locis Communibus. One cause, and not the least, was, that thereby the Heresie of Nestorius might the rather be extinguished, who, amongst other errours, held opinion (53) that vnder the forme of Bread in the Sacrament, is conteined the Body of Christ, without his Blood: and vnder the forme of the Wine, his Blood onely, without his Body. Many other causes mooued those Fathers to take that order, for the auoiding of many inconueniences, dangers, and offences, which might happen in the vse of the Cup, as vnreuerence of so high a Sacrament, whereof Christian people at the beginning had a maruellous care and regard: the lothsomeneſse of many that cannot brooke the taste of Wine: the difficultie of getting, and impossibilitie of keeping Wine from corruption, in Countries situated neere to the North Pole, in that Clime, where is knowen to be great extremity of cold, beside a number of the like. So that it had beene besides reason, to haue bound all to the necessity of both kindes.

The 52. vntruth. For there was no such Canon touched, or once mooued in that Councell.

The 53. vntruth. For Nestorius neuer dreamed of any such folly.

Weighty considerations, wherefore Christs Institution should bee broken.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Ye granteth that S. Paul at Corinth, and sundry other holy Fathers, in their seuerall Churches, ministred the Sacrament in both kindes. Ye might as well haue said, All the Apostles, and all the holy Fathers, sauing for hindering of his cause. But the Church afterward vpon good causes (as it is here alleged) tooke order to the contrary, and namely to confute the Heretike Nestorius.

Here must thou marke, good Christian Reader, the Question is, Whether M. Hardings halfe Communion were euer Ministred openly to the People in the Church, within the space of six hundred yeeres after Christ. For proofe hereof he allegeth, that this order was allowed in the Councels of Constance and Basil, the former whereof was begun and holden in the yeare of our Lord A thousand foure hundred and fourteene, and the same neither Generall, nor euer generally receiued. And what force can he finde herein to prooue his purpose? It is also probably gathered (saith M. Harding) that the same order was taken a thousand yeeres before, in the first Councell of Ephesus. Here he is driuen vtterly to leaue his learning, and, as he commonly doth, only to hold by bare ghesse. But if this new deuice were brought in to confute the Heretike Nestorius, why then tooke it place first in the Councels of Constance and Basil, a thousand yeares after that Nestorius was dead, and his Heresie quite forgotten? If it were so ordered in the Councell of Ephesus, why is there no Act or mention thereof extant in that Councell, nor any learned man, within a thousand yeares after, to record the same? Anno 1414.

But Vrbanus Regius, a Doctor of Luthers Schoole, confesseth it. First, Vrbanus Regius departed this life not aboue twentie yeares agoe: and therefore is a very yong Witnesse, to testifie a thing done so long before. Besides this, the Booke of Common Places, that is abroad abroad in his name, is nothing else but a heape of things gathered together by long reading, as the maner of Students is, out of diuers and sundrie Bookes, and that as well of the one side, as of the other, onely for helpe of memorie, and increase of knowledge. Neither was that Booke euer corrected or published by him, but onely deliuered to the Printer as it was, by his widow, after his death, as appeareth by Pomeranus, that dedicated that Booke to the Prince of Mensburg. And therefore these collections doe witnesse his diligence, but not his iudgement. As touching that note concerning the Councell of Ephesus, it may be thought he had it out of Alardus, or Michael Væhe, or some other like Writer of this age.

Nestorius.

Nestorius amongst other errours (saith M. Harding) held opinion, that vnder the forme of Bread in the Sacrament, is contained the Body of Christ without his Blood, and vnder the forme of Wine, the Blood onely, without his Body. Why should this man thus delight himselfe to vphold one falshood with another? First hee saith, The Councell of Ephesus decreed against both Kindes. This is vntrue, and was neuer yet proued. Next, some cause must bee deuised, that should lead the Fathers to that Decree. Which, as it is heere surmised, was this errour of Nestorius. A cause that neuer was, is good enough to proue the effect that neuer was. Thus is M. Harding driuen, not onely to forge new Doctours, and new Decrees of Councels, but also to imagine New Heresies, such as were neuer heard of before: euen in like sort, and to like purpose, as by some it is supposed, that Aristotle sometime imagined strange and monstrous opinions to bee taught by Democritus, Parmenides, Melyssus, and other old Philosophers: not because they had euer taught or written so indeed, but to the end to finde occasion of talke, and the better to set abroad his owne Learning. If it bee true that is surmised by Nestorius, then M. Hardings whole defense standeth but vpon an Heresie: If it bee vntrue, as indeed it is, then it standeth vpon an open falshood: and so, whether it bee true, or false, it hath a very weake foundation.

As for Nestorius, it is knowen he was a wicked and a blasphemous Heretike, and was worthily condemned by sundrie holy Fathers and Councels. Philastrius, Epiphanius, and S. Augustine, haue written namely of his errours: The Councell of Ephesus, the Councell of Chalcedon, Cœlestinus, Gelasius, Leo, Bishops of Rome, Cyrillus Bishop of Alexandria, haue ript vp and condemned all the branches of his Heresies. Yet none of them all euer charged Nestorius with this new Heresie of M. Hardings making. If there had beene in it any shew of truth, M. Harding, as he is eloquent, would haue laid out all the Circumstances, when this strange errour first began, where, and how long it continued, who wrote against it, and by whom, and in what Councell it was condemned. Verily this great silence declareth some want. It must needs bee a very strange Heresie, that neuer had neither beginning, nor ending: nor defender, nor reprouer: nor mouth to vtter it: nor eare to heare it: nor pen to write it: nor time to last in: nor place to rest in. And if all this had beene true of Nestorius, yet had it beene no reason, that for any one mans priuate errour, Christs Institution should be broken.

But that the vaine follie and manifest falshood of these men may appeare, vnderstand (good Reader) that where as Nestorius dwelt, and his Heresie toke place, in those Countries they haue euermore kept Christs Institution in both kindes: but in these Countries, where as neither the name of Nestorius was euer heard of, but onely vnto a few, nor his Heresie euer reached, there haue they made great Prouisoes against Nestorius, yea a thousand yeares after Nestorius was dead. The rest of the causes, which hee calleth so weighty, are scarcely worth any answer. Some men doe loath Wine: Some people can hardly get, some can hardly keepe Wine: Ergo, There must be made a Law generall, that the whole World shall Communicate in one kinde. If the Conclusion had beene, that such as haue these impediments, or wants, might so Communicate, it had beene more tolerable. For, as it is well noted by Pomponius, Lawes must touch things that happen commonly, and, for the most part, not things that happen to few, or seldome. Otherwise the like reason may bee made for the Priests: Some Priests, by meane of disease, can taste no Wine: some in certaine Countries can hardly get, some can hardly keepe Wine: Therefore it were well prouided that all Priests should minister vnder one kinde. Certainly, where as Wine may be prouided for the Priest, there may also Wine be prouided for the people. For it were strange to heare, that a Cart or a whole Ship should come laden only with one bottle of Wine into a Country.

De legib. & Senatusconf. & longa consuetudine. ἐκ τὸ πολὺ ἐν ἐξ παραλόγου.

Some say, that the Priests in Russia, for lacke of Wine, vsed to Consecrate in Methegle: Some other say, that Innocentius the eighth, for the like want, dispensed with the Priests of Norwey, to Consecrate without Wine. It were no reason to binde the whole Church to the necessitie or imbecillitie of a few. For otherwise the same want and impos-

Cornel. Agrippa de vanitate scientiarum. Volaterranus.

sibilitie

ſibility, that M. Harding hath heere found for the one part of the Sacrament, may be found alſo for the other. For Arrianus de rebus Indicis, and Strabo in his Geographie, haue written, that there be whole Nations and Countries that haue no Bread. Therefore it ſhould ſeeme neceſſarie by this concluſion, that in conſideration of them, the whole Church ſhould abſtaine from the other portion of the Sacrament alſo, and ſo haue no Sacrament at all.

Arianus lib. 8.
Strabo.

M. Harding. The 9. Diuiſion.

Now in very deed, if we would grant our aduerſaries, which in no wiſe we doe grant, that it hath been commanded of Chriſt, the Lay people ſhould Communicate vnder both kindes, by theſe words, Drinke ye all of this, yet this notwithſtanding, the exact ſtraitneſſe of Gods ordinance may without ſinne in caſes be omitted, in ſuch things which be not neceſſarily to be obſerued of themſelues, or of the preſcript of the Law of nature; ſo that great and weighty cauſes (the rule of charity exactly obſerued) require the ſame. For euident proofe of this, we haue examples both of the Old, and alſo of the New Teſtament. Did not God command, that none ſhould eat of the Shew Bread, but the Prieſt only? Dauid ate thereof, and yet Chriſt cleareth him of all blame. The Law of Circumciſion ſo ſtraitly commanded, was for the ſpace of forty yeeres, by the people of Iſrael quite omitted, whiles they paſſed from Ægypt to the land of Promiſe, and God found no fault with them for it. God gaue the Law of keeping holy the Sabbath day without exception. The Machabees notwithſtanding ſtickt not to arme themſelues againſt Antiochus, and to ſpend that day in the field in their defence, hauing no ſcruple of conſcience for breach of that Law. Many the like examples we finde in the Old Teſtament. But let vs come to the New Teſtament, and to the Sacraments of the time of Grace. In due conſideration of which, wee may finde, that Chriſt hath ſcarcely commanded any outward thing, the moderation, qualifying and ordering whereof, hee hath not left to his Church, as according to the condition of the time, it hath been ſeene moſt expedient for the common preferment, and edifying of the ſame. So that notwithſtanding there be no ſwaruing from the ſcope and principall intent, & no creature defrauded of that good, which by the outward things is to be attained.

Leuit. 24. 1. Regum, 21. Mar. 2. Geneſ. 17. & 34. Exod. 20. 1. Mach. 1.

Touching the Sacrament of Baptiſme, though nothing bee ſaid of the teaching of them that ſhould bee Baptized, neither of the dipping of them into the water, which Chriſts charge in this behalfe giuen ſeemeth plainly to require, Go you (ſaith he to his Apoſtles) and teach all nations, baptizing them &c. and yet the Church hath not feared to Baptize Infants, that be without capacity of teaching; and for the due adminiſtration of this Sacrament, too many haue thought powring or ſprinkling of water vpon them ſufficient. Though this be not ſpoken of, I ſay, it is much to be conſidered to this purpoſe, that the Apoſtles ſtickt not for a time to alter and change the very eſſentiall forme of words, with which Chriſt would this Sacrament to be miniſtred. For whereas he commanded them to Baptize in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, they Baptized in the name of Ieſus Chriſt (54) Only, intending thereby to make that to be of more fame and celebrity. So to returne to the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, whereof we treat, no man can denie, but many things were at the inſtitution of it done by the example of Chriſt, and by him commanded, which now be not obſerued; and yet in that reſpect no fault is found.

Matth. 28.

The 54. vntruth. A foule depratation of the Scriptures.

Chriſt waſhed the Apoſtles feet, and gaue them an expreſſe commandement to doe the ſame, with theſe moſt plaine words; If I that am your Maſter and Lord haue waſhed your feet, you alſo ought to waſh one anothers feet. For I haue giuen you an example, that as I haue done, you doe likewiſe: Which commandement of Chriſt according to the outward letter, verily bindeth no leſſe, than theſe words; Drinke ye all of this; yet this commandement is not kept, but cleane growen out of vſe. Though it appeare by S. Bernard, who calleth it Magnum Sacramentum, a great Sacrament, and long before, by report of S. Cyprian, that Chriſt did not only waſh his Apoſtles feet, but commanded alſo by ſolemne requeſt, and ordained that the Apoſtles afterward ſhould doe the ſame. Whether this ordinance of Chriſt hath beene aboliſhed, for that it ſhould not be thought a rebaptization, as it may be gathered of S. Auguſtiue, or for any other cauſe, it foorceth not greatly. But this is much to be maruelled at, that this ſo earneſtly commanded, is ſo quietly and with ſuch ſilence ſuffered vndone, and in the miniſtration of the Sacrament, the vſe of the cup ſo factiouſly and with ſo much crying out required. Neither in many other rites and ceremonies, we do not as Chriſt did. Chriſt celebrated this Sacrament after that he had Supped; wee doe it in the morning and faſting. Chriſt ſate at the table with his twelue Apoſtles; neither ſit we at a table, neither thinke we it neceſſary to obſerue ſuch number. Chriſt brake the bread; we thinke it not neceſſary to breake the hoſt that is to bee deliuered to the faithfull participants. Heere is to be noted, that S. Cyprian rebuking them, which thought ſprinkling or powring of water not to be ſufficient for Baptiſme, declareth, that the Sacraments bee not to bee eſteemed according to their extreme and rigorous obſeruation or adminiſtration of all the externe elements, but rather according to the integrity and ſoundneſſe of faith of the giuer, and of the receiuer; and that diuine things vſed in a compendious ſort, conferre, and giue neuertheleſſe to the right beleeuers their whole vertue, lib. 4. epiſt. 7. Many other commandements of God concerning outward things might heere be rehearſed; which notwithſtanding by little and little in the Church haue beene omitted; as the forbearing of ſtrangled things and blood; which was commanded by God in the Old Teſtament, and according to the pleaſure and aduice of the holy Ghoſt, decreed by the Apoſtles in the New Teſtament. Yet forſmuch as concerneth outward things, both this and many other the like, haue in proceſſe of time growen out of obſeruation, and haue without any ſcruple of conſcience beene abrogated.

Ioan. 13.

In Serm. de Cœna Domini. In Serm. de paſſione Chriſtiana. Ad Iamarium ep. 18.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The beſt ſtay, that theſe men can lay hold vpon, is to denie Chriſts Inſtitution. And therefore M. Harding ſaith heere, In no wiſe we do not grant it, which is an argument of good courage, but of ſmall proofe. But he addeth further: If it were Chriſts Inſtitution, yet notwithſtanding by the authority of the Church, and vpon good conſideration, it might bee broken. His reaſons be theſe: In the old Teſtament, Dauid did eat the Shewbread, notwithſtanding it were forbidden: the people in the wildernes ceaſed from circumciſion, notwithſtanding it were commanded: the Machabees fought and defended themſelues vpon the Sabbath day, notwithſtanding God had appointed that day to reſt. In the new Teſtament, we

1. Samuel 21. Ioſue 5. 1. Machab. 2.

In the name of Christ only.

Baptize Infants, that can receiue no teaching: and sometime we thinke it sufficient to sprinkle them or to power them ouer: and the Apostles, contrary to Christs Institution, Baptized in the name of Iesus Only. If M. Harding could haue brought any such example or authority, as was required, such poore helps should not haue needed. For these allegations are partly true, partly false, partly not agreeable to that we haue in hand, neither in place, nor in time, nor in the end, nor in the maner of doing, nor in other circumstances, and therefore make little to this purpose.

1. Samuel 21. Dauid tooke of the Shewbread, but he was forced thereto by extremity of famine: neither did he euer Decree, that it should be lawfull for all others to doe the like.

Iosue 5. The people ceased from Circumcision in the Wildernesse: but they had Gods speciall dispensation so to do, as it is noted by Lyra, for that they were in continuall trauell from place to place, and people being newly circumcised could abide no labour: yet made they no Law, that Circumcision should quite be abolished.

1. Machab. 2. Matth. 12. The Machabees might lawfully defend themselues vpon the Sabbath day. For, as Christ expoundeth the Law: Man is not made for the Sabbath, but the Sabbath is made for Man. And therefore the Iewes did ill, that being besieged vpon the Sabbath day, as Dion saith, stood still, and yelded themselues vnto their enemies. Yet did not the Machabees proclaime, that it should be lawfull vpon the Sabbath to goe to the field.

Dion. Touching Baptisme, first we teach the Fathers and afterward we Baptize their children: and this is no breach of Christs commandement. For after we be once become Gods people, God hath promised, That he will bee our God, and the God of our children: and by the Prophet Ezechiel he saith: Your children be my children. They that sprinkled them that they Baptized, vsed both the word, and also the element or kinde of water, that was commanded: neither doth it appeare, that Christ gaue any commandement of dipping the party into the water. But these men take quite away from the people, both the element and kinde of Wine, and also the words of Consecration.

Ezechiel 16.

M. Harding falsifieth the words of S. Luke. Last of all, in that he saith, The Apostles contrary to the institution, Baptized in the name of Christ Only, besides the mere Sophistication of the matter, he also falsifieth the words, putting that behinde, that S. Luke set before.

And that thou maist the better perceiue the fraud, I must bid thee, Christian Reader, to vnderstand, that in the time of the Apostles, some that were Baptized receiued the holy Ghost in sensible graces, and were able immediately, some to speake sundry tongues, some to worke other miracles. Some others receiue no such miracle, but Baptisme only: as they of Samaria, that were Baptized by Philip. Therefore, saith S. Luke, Peter and Iohn prayed for them, that they also might receiue the holy Ghost in visible tokens, as well as others. For the holy Ghost vntill that time, was come vpon none of them, but only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Iesus: by this word, Only, excluding nothing else, but the outward miraculous gifts of the holy Ghost.

Actor. 8.

Only.

But M. Harding transporteth and shifteth S. Lukes words at his pleasure, and placeth this word Only in the end, and thereby excludeth the essentiall forme of Baptisme, as if they had bene Baptized in the name of Christ Only, and so not in the name of the Father, and of the holy Ghost. This errour must needs hold by the cauasing of the Scriptures.

To Baptize in the name of Christ, is to Baptize according to the Order, Institution, and commandement of Christ. Neither doe these words, In the name of Christ, import that Baptisme was ministred in the name of Christ only, and in none other name beside: no more than these words, Paul the seruant of Iesus Christ, doe import, that Paul was the seruant of Christ only, and so not the seruant of God the Father, nor of the holy Ghost: or these words that Paul spake vnto the Keeper, Beleeue in the Lord Iesus, doe discharge him from beleeuing in the other two persons of the holy Trinity. Doubtlesse he must be very bold with the Scriptures of God, that will presume hereby to proue, either that the Apostles altered the essentiall forme of Baptisme, or that they proclaimed them Heretikes, that in Baptizing would follow Christs Institution.

Act. 16.

In Sermone de Cœna Domini. Hilar. in Matt. canon 5. 11. 12. 13. Hilar. de Trinit. lib. 10. Bernard. de bonis defendendis. The obiection of washing of feet is common, and hath bin oftened answered. S. Bernard calleth it a Sacrament. I grant. But S. Bernard is a Doctour but of late yeeres, and therefore his authority herein must weigh the lighter. Neither doth he so call it according to the nature and common Definition of a Sacrament. For neither was there any certaine element namely chosen, nor any speciall words appointed to make it a Sacrament, nor any promise of grace thereto annexed. Only he calleth it a Sacrament by a generall kinde of taking. And in that meaning S. Hilary saith: The Sacrament of Praier: The Sacrament of Fasting: the Sacrament of Fulnesse: the Sacrament of Thirst: the Sacrament of Weeping. And S. Bernard in another place in like sort saith: The Sacrament of a painted Crosse. And in this place

place hée ſaith, that the waſhing of fæt betokeneth the waſhing and purging of veniall ſinnes, which ſignification he calleth a Sacrament.

Waſhing of feet.

But Chriſt ſaith: I haue giuen you an example, that as yee haue ſeene me doe, yee alſo doe the like. Therefore (ſaith M. Harding) this commandement bindeth as well as the other, Drinke ye all of this. How may a man truſt M. Harding in the darke, that will thus deceiue him in the light? For he knoweth that the waſhing of fæt was neither Inſtitution of Chriſt, nor any part of the Sacrament, nor ſpecially appointed to be done by the Apoſtles, nor the breach thereof euer deemed Sacrilege, as Gelaſius writeth of this diſorder of the halfe Communion. Whether the Apoſtles for any time after Chriſts Reſurrection obſerued it or no, it appeareth not. Neither is there any thing, to my remembrance, written of it. As we may perceiue by S. Paul, it was an office more belonging vnto women, than vnto men. And it ſeemeth by S. Auguſtine, that this Ceremony in the Church had relation vnto ſome other cauſe, and not vnto the Inſtitution of Chriſt, neither to the example or practiſe of the Apoſtles. For thus he writeth vnto his friend Ianuarius touching the ſame: If thou demand, vpon what conſideration this Ceremony of waſhing feet began firſt, notwithſtanding I haue well thought of it, yet can I finde nothing that ſeemeth more likely than this: for that the bodies of them that had appointed to be Baptized (at Eaſter) being ill cheriſhed by reaſon of the Lenten faſt, would haue had ſome lothſomneſſe in the touching, vnleſſe they had beene waſht at ſome time before: and that therefore they choſe this day chiefly to that purpoſe, vpon which day the Lords Supper is yeerely celebrated. Here S. Auguſtine ſaith, it was the fulſomneſſe of the bodies, and lothſomneſſe of the ſenſes, that firſt began this Ceremony, and not the Inſtitution or commandement of Chriſt. But as touching the miniſtration of the Communion in both kindes, it is moſt certaine, that the Apoſtles vſed it, and that Chriſt commanded it to be vſed ſtill vntill his comming.

De Con Diſt. 2 Comperimus.

1. Tim. 5.

Aug. ad Ianuar. epiſt. 118.

With what indifferent iudgement then can M. Harding thus compare theſe things together: a Sacrament with no Sacrament: an Inſtitution with no Inſtitution: a thing that in the Primitiue Church was euery where vſed, with that thing, whereof no proofe can be made, that vpon Chriſts commandement it was euer vſed? Neither did Chriſt therefore ſo abaſe himſelfe, to waſh his Diſciples fæt, to the intent they according to the letter ſhould doe the ſame: but in himſelfe to ſhew them a perfect example of humility. For they were yet in a deepe dreame, that Chriſt ſhould come like a King with all worldly Maieſty, and that they ſhould be Princes, and ſit with him to rule the World. Therefore to breake them out of this ſléepe, he toke vpon him this vile and ſeruile office, that they might ſée, that his comming was to ſerue them, and therefore might learne humility by his example, one of them to ſerue another. In like maner Chriſt ſet a child before his Diſciples, & willed them all to be as children. He bade them to ſhake off the duſt from their ſhoes, and to carrie neither rod nor ſcrip about them, and to ſalute no man vpon the way: not that they ſhould practiſe theſe things according to the rigour of the words, but to the intent that by the ſame, they might be induced to a deeper vnderſtanding. Such was the Sacrament and meaning of the Waſhing of fæt.

Matth. 20.

Matth. 18.
Matth. 10.
Matth. 8.

The reaſons that follow are of like value. For Chriſt ſaid not, Do this after Supper, or ſitting, or at a table, or being ſo many together. Neither did the Apoſtles euer ſo vnderſtand his words. But when he had miniſtred the Sacrament vnto his Apoſtles in both kindes, he bade them do the ſame that he had done: and ſo they vnderſtood his words, and miniſtred the Sacrament vnto the people in both kindes accordingly.

The words of S. Cyprian héere alleged, are ſpoken of ſprinkling or powring on water ouer them that were Baptized: which is but a Ceremony, and therefore ought to bee at liberty, and is not of the ſubſtance of Baptiſme. Neither doth it follow, We may breake a Ceremony; Ergo, we may breake the ſubſtance of Chriſts Inſtitution. This reaſon rather maketh againſt M. Harding and his fellowes. For if Ceremonies ſhould bee vſed freely and without rigour, as S. Cyprian ſaith, why then be they ſo preciſe in their Oile, their Balme, their Lights, and other things of like value, that be the abuſe thereof neuer ſo great, yet they will remit nothing? And if they bee ſo preciſe, and ſo earneſt in ceremonies and deuiſes of their owne, how much more ought wee to bee earneſt in matters touching the eſſentiall forme of the Inſtitution of Chriſt?

M. Harding. The 10. Diuiſion.

I truſt no man will gather of that I haue ſaid heere, that it is none offence to do againſt Gods commandement. My meaning is farre otherwiſe. Neither ſay I, that this ſaying of Chriſt in Matthew, Drinke yee all of this, or that in Iohn; Except yee eat the fleſh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his blood, yee ſhall not haue life in you; or other commandements of Chriſt, be not to be kept; But this is that I ſay, and that euery Catholike man ſaith, that the vniuerſall Church doth better vnderſtand which are the commandements of Chriſt, and how they ought to be kept, than Berengarius, Wickleffe, Hus, Luther, Zuinglius, Caluine, Cranmer, Peter Martyr, Martyr, or any their ſcholars and followers, which now be ſundrie ſects. As for example ; God hath thus commanded ; Thou ſhalt not ſweare ; and, Thou ſhalt not kill ; and, If thine eie cauſe thee to offend, pull him out and caſt him away from thee. Whereas certaine Sects of Heretikes, as namely they which be called Waldenſes and Picardi, by their conſtruction heereof haue maintained opinion, that no oath ought to bee giuen or made in no caſe or reſpect ; likewiſe that in no caſe or reſpect a man may doe another to death ; and alſo that after the outward letter of the Goſpell, ſometime a man is bound to pull out his eie and caſt it from him ; which thing hath beene done by ſome of the Picardes, as it is reported, as though elſe Gods commandement were not kept ; this hath ſo beene vnderſtanded by the Catholike Church, confeſſing neuertheleſſe theſe to be Gods commandements, as in time, in place, and in certaine caſes, a man might and ought without breach of commandement, both ſweare and kill ; and likewiſe keepe his eie in his head ; and therein offended God nothing at al. So the Catholike Church vnderſtandeth, Drinke ye all of this, to be Chriſts commandement, and of neceſſity to be obſerued ; but of Prieſts only, I meane of neceſſity ; and that when in the Sacrifice of the Church is celebrated the memory of Chriſts death, which in that degree be the ſucceſſours of the Apoſtles, to whom that commandement was ſpecially giuen, when they were conſecrated Prieſts of the New Teſtament ; who ſo did drinke indeed, as S. Marke witneſſeth ; Et biberunt ex eo omnes, and they dranke all of it. To theſe only and to none other, the (55) Catholike Church hath euer referred the neceſſity of that commandement. Elſe if the neceſſity of it ſhould pertaine to all, and becauſe Chriſt ſaid, Drinke ye all of this, if all of euery ſtate and condition ought to drinke of this Cuppe of neceſſity, how is it come to paſſe, that our aduerſaries themſelues (who pretend ſo ſtrait a conſcience heerein) keepe from it infants and yong children, vntill they come to good yeeres of diſcretion ; ſpecially whereas the cuſtome of the Primitiue Church was that they alſo ſhould be partakers of this Sacrament, as it may plainly be ſeene in S. Dionyſe, Cyprian, Auguſtine, Innocentius, Zoſimus and other ancient fathers ? What better reaſon haue they to keepe the infants from the Cup, than the Anabaptiſts haue, to keepe them from their Baptiſme ? If they allege their impotency of remembring the Lords death, the Anabaptiſts will likewiſe allege their impotency of receiuing and vnderſtanding doctrine, that Chriſts Inſtitution in this behalfe ſeemeth to require.

Matth. 5. Exod. 20.

Marke 14.

The 55. vntruth. For the Catholike or Vniuerſal Church neuer vnderſtood it ſo : but only the Church of Rome which is both late and meere particular.

Thus the aduerſaries of the Church themſelues do agniſe, that the vſe of the Cup in the Sacrament, perraineth not to all of neceſſity. So haue they neither godly charity to ioine with the Church, neither ſufficient reaſon to impugne the Church.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

The beſt defenſe to colour diſobedience, is to improue Gods commandement. Therefore ſaith M. Harding, The halfe Communion is no breach of Chriſts Inſtitution. For Chriſt neuer commanded, that the whole Communion ſhould be miniſtred vnto the people in both kindes. And that (ſaith he) the Church knoweth better, than Luther, or Cranmer, or ſuch others. Whatſoeuer ordinary light the Church hath, that hath it not of her ſelfe, but of Gods holy Word, that is a Lanterne vnto her feet. And it is no Chriſtian modeſty, to make ſuch boaſts of the gifts of God. Gods holy Spirit bloweth, where it thinketh good. Daniel alone ſaw the innocency of Suſanna : the Iudges and Elders ſaw it not. Paphnutius alone was heard againſt all the reſt of the Nicene Councell. S. Hierome alone is receiued againſt all the whole Councell of Chalcedon. And forasmuch as M. Harding delighteth himſelfe with odious compariſons without cauſe, why may not a man likewiſe ſay, The Primitiue Church in the time of the Apoſtles and other Catholike Doctours and old Councels, that miniſtred the whole Sacrament vnto the people in both kindes, vnderſtood Chriſts Inſtitution aſwell as did afterward the Councell of Conſtance, in which Councell, holden foure ſcore hundred yeers after Chriſt and more, it was determined, that the Laity ſhould content themſelues only with the halfe Communion in one kinde ? But therefore hath God giuen his holy Scriptures, that the Church ſhould be directed and neuer erre. And S. Auguſtine ſaith : Dominus ſemper veraciter iudicat : Eccleſiaſtici autem Iudices, ſicut homines plærunque falluntur : The Lord alwaies iudgeth truely : but the Eccleſiaſticall Iudges, for that they be men are often times deceiued.

Pſalm. 118. Iohn 3. Daniel 13. Sozomenus lib. 1. cap. 22. 36. Quæſt. 2. Tria legitima.

Auguſt. contra Creſconium Grammaticum lib. 2. cap. 21.

The examples of killing, ſwearing, pulling out of eies, eating of blod and ſtrangled things that are heere brought in, ſtand more for a countenance, than for proofe of the matter. Touching the firſt, God ſaith vnto the priuate man, Thou ſhalt not kill : but vnto the Magiſtrate he ſaith : Thine eie ſhall not ſpare : Thou ſhalt not ſuffer the wicked ſorcerer to liue. This caſe was neuer doubtfull : or if it were, let M. Harding ſhew, in what Councell it was determined. Touching Oathes, it is forbidden, that any ſhall ſweare vnaduiſedly or without iuſt cauſe, and ſo to abuſe the name of God : but otherwiſe to ſweare before a Judge, in the way of iudgement, iuſtice and truth, God himſelfe hath commanded.

Exod. 20. Leuit. 20. Deut. 18. Hierm. 4. Matth. 5.

The pulling out of the eie is an allegorie, wherein by a figure or maner of ſpech, one things is conceiued of another, and Chriſts meaning is, that whoſo will follow him, muſt pull out and caſt from him his affections, his goods, and his friends, for the Goſpels ſake, yea though he loue them as his eies. And if the Picard take it otherwiſe, it was an error of ſimplicity, much like the error of Origen, and certaine others, who, as it is written of them, groſly, and according to the letter, gelded themſelues for the kingdome of heauen : Or the errour of the Biſhop of Rome, who vpon ſmall occaſion of theſe words, Ecce duo gladij hic : Behold heere be two ſwords ; clameth vnto himſelfe both the Spirituall and alſo the Temporall Sword, and ſo the whole Iuriſdiction of all the World.

Euſeb. lib. 6. cap. 7. De Maioritate & obedientia, Vnam Sanctam

The

The forbearing of blod and ſtrangled meats began among the faithfull in the time of the Apoſtles, not as of Gods commandement, or to continue for euer, but only of charity, to beare with the weakneſſe of the Iewes, vntill they might grow to a perfect knowledge in Chriſt: during which weakneſſe, this charitable order among the reſt of the faithfull Chriſtians, continued ſtill, as may appeare by Tertullian, by Arnobius, by Euſebius, by Oecumenius, and others. But after that the Iewes were thoroughly perſwaded, that all creatures of God were cleane, this forbearing, which began only for their ſakes, had an end.

But how can M. Harding applie theſe things to his purpoſe? Or how can he hereby warrant the manifeſt breach of Chriſts Inſtitution? The Church in euery of theſe orders was directed, and guided by Gods word: Touching killing, God ſaith vnto the Magiſtrate: Thou ſhalt not ſuffer the wicked to liue. Touching ſwearing, God ſaith: Thou ſhalt ſweare in truth, in iudgement, and in iuſtice. Touching pulling out of our eies, S. Paul ſaith: No man euer hated his owne fleſh, but doth nouriſh and cheriſh it. And touching blod, and ſtrangled meats, Chriſt ſaith: The thing that entreth into the mouth, defileth not the man. And S. Paul ſaith: Euery Creature of God is good. Therefore the Church in theſe caſes deuiſed no new thing of hir ſelfe, nor brake any of Gods ordinances, but only followed the word of God.

Hierem. 4.

Epheſ. 5.

Now of the other part, let M. Harding ſhew, what word of God the Church of Rome had to follow, in the ordering of the halfe Communion. Where did Chriſt or his Apoſtles euer ſay, Let not the people receiue the whole Sacrament, as it was ordained at the firſt, but let it be ſufficient for them to receiue one portion? If there be no ſuch commandement to be ſhewed, then be not theſe caſes like. And if the caſes be not like, why doth M. Harding deceiue the World, and compare them thus together, as though they were like? What, troweth he there is no difference betweene obeying Gods commandement, and breaking Gods commandement? Or thinketh he, becauſe it was lawfull for Abraham, hauing Gods commandement, to haue ſlaine his Sonne Iſaac, that therefore it was lawfull for him to ſlay Iſmael alſo, hauing no commandement? It is a dangerous doctrine, to ſay, The Church is Omnipotent, and may allow or diſallow Gods commandements without difference, at her pleaſure. For, as it is diſcretly noted by the Emperours Valentinian and Martian, Whoſoeuer, after the truth is once found, ſeeketh further, he ſeeketh for a lie, and not for the truth.

Geneſis 20.

In Edicto Imperat. Valentin. & Martia. in Chalced. Con. Act. 3.

But to miniſter vnto the vulgar Lay people in both kindes (ſaith M. Harding) was not Chriſts Inſtitution. Thus he ſaith, and ſaith it often, and onely ſaith it. Other authority than his owne he bringeth none. The reaſon that moueth him, I weene, is this: for that there was no Lay people at that banket with Chriſt, but the Apoſtles onely. But this reaſon would ſpoile the Lay people not of one part only, but of all together. Surely one Lorichius a Doctour of M. Hardings owne ſide ſaith thus: Ipſius Sacramenti Inſtitutio vult, vt omnes vnà manducemus & bibamus: The very Inſtitution of the Sacrament willeth, that wee all Eat and Drinke together. M. Hardings Doctour ſaith: It is Chriſts Inſtitution. M. Harding himſelfe ſaith: It is not Chriſts Inſtitution. Whether of them two a man may beleeue, I leaue it to others. Howbeit in the meane time, while theſe Doctours can better agree, it cannot be denied, but Chriſt miniſtred vnto his Diſciples the whole Sacrament in both kindes, and gaue them in charge, in plaine expreſſe words to doe the ſame. But of the halfe Communion in one kinde, Chriſt neither gaue them charge, nor ſpake any one word at all. If M. Harding will replie, that Chriſts words in this caſe be doubtfull, and may be diuerſly taken, yet is that obiection already anſwered. For the Law ſaith: Side Interpretatione Legis quæratur, in primis inſpiciendum eſt quo iure Ciuitas retrò in huiuſmodi caſibus vſa fuerit. Optima enim eſt Legum interpretatio Conſuetudo: If queſtion happen to be moued touching the meaning of a Law, firſt of all we muſt ſee, what order hath beene vſed in the like caſes in times paſt. For the cuſtome and practiſe of the people is the beſt expounder of the Law. Now it appeareth plainly, that the cuſtome and practiſe of the pureſt Church in the time of the Apoſtles, and others old Catholike Fathers was, to miniſter vnto the people in both kindes: whereof we may conclude, that the ſame was Chriſts Inſtitution and very meaning. But if M. Harding will applie the authority of cuſtome vnto his purpoſe, for that the common practiſe of the Church of Rome for a few late yeares, hath beene to the contrary, that therefore this was Chriſts meaning, this obiection is alſo ſome anſwered. For both Law and common reaſon ſaith: In ambiguo ſermone non vtrunque dicimus, ſed id duntaxat quod volumus: In a doubtfull ſpeech we ſpeake not both the things (that may be gathered) but that thing only that we meane. Now if Chriſt meant both the order that was practiſed by the Apoſtles and Old Fathers, and alſo the contrary order, that of late hath beene practiſed in the Church of Rome, then had Chriſt at one time, and in the ſame

De Miſſa publica prorogandâ.

De Legibus & Senatuſconſult. & longa conſue. Side.

De rebus dubijs. In ambiguo.

ring of one ſentence, not only two, but alſo diuers and contrary meanings, and ſo by M. Hardings iudgement, Chriſt muſt néeds conſtrue his owne wordes in this wiſe: Drinke yee all of this: I meane, let Prieſts onely drinke of this. Drinke yee all: I meane, ſome may not drinke. Drinke ye all: I méane contrary, Drinke ye not all. And when I ſay, Doe yee the ſame that I haue done, my meaning is otherwiſe, Doe not the ſame that I haue done. O M. Harding, It is an old ſaying: Maledicta gloſſa quæ corrumpit textum: Curſed bee that gloſing conſtruction that deſtroieth the text.

Ye ſay, The Prieſts are bound of neceſſitie to receiue both kindes, but the Lay people is not bound. And ſo ye conclude that Chriſt ordained two ſundry Communions, the one not like the other: the one for the Prieſts, the other for the People. And therefore by your aduice, we muſt correct S. Hierome, that ſaith: The Lords Supper muſt be common to all. And likewiſe Chryſoſtome, that ſaith: In the holy Myſteries there is no difference betweene the Prieſt and the People. For it is now otherwiſe agréed, that the Lords Supper may not be common vnto all, and that in the Myſteries there muſt be a difference betwéene the Prieſt & the People.

Hieron. 1. Cor. 11. Chryſoſt. 2. Cor. 18.

The obiection that is made of keeping children from the Communion, is but childiſh, and nothing to the matter. For in ſo doing, we diuide not the Myſteries, nor breake any part of Chriſts Inſtitution: no more than when by order of Excommunication, wée remoue the wicked from the whole vſe of the Sacrament.

For notwithſtanding it appeare by S. Auguſtine, S. Cyprian, and others, that Infants in the Primitiue Church in ſundry places were admitted to the holy Communion, yet afterward vpon good aduice, they were iuſtly removed from it; becauſe that being in that age, they were not thought able to examine and proue themſelues according to the Doctrine of S. Paul: and ſo to eat of that Bread, and to drinke of that Cup. In like ſort in the Law of Moſes, notwithſtanding all men children were commanded to bée Circumciſed, yet none were admitted to eat the Paſſeouer, but onely ſuch as could demand what it meant.

The Church (ſaith M. Harding) is the interpreter of Gods minde. The Church knoweth, that this was not Chriſts Inſtitution. Verily if the Church know it now at laſt, ſhe hath béene long in learning this leſſon. For the Olde Catholike Church, as it is well knowen, tooke it farre otherwiſe, and that following the plaine wordes of God, whereby Gods ordinary way is to reueale his minde, and becauſe Chriſt miniſtred vnto his Diſciples in both kindes, and commanded them to doe the ſame, therefore that Church vnderſtood him, euen as his wordes ſounded, and miniſtred vnto the people the whole Communion in both kindes.

Now whereas M. Harding ſaith: The Church of Rome of late yeeres, hath more ſecret intelligence of Gods minde, than the elder Church had at any time before: Mée thinketh hée imagineth Chriſt thus to ſay to his Apoſtles: Doe the ſame to others, that yee haue ſeene mee doe to you. For a time it ſhall be lawfull: after it ſhall not be lawfull. Now it is my Inſtitution: the time ſhall come when it ſhall be no longer my Inſtitution. After foureteene hundred yeeres there ſhall be a certaine Councell of fiue hundred Biſhops, and eight hundred Monkes and Friars: there ſhall be terrible contention, whether the Pope be aboue the Councell, or the Councell aboue the Pope. One Pope ſhall be depoſed, another ſhall be erected againſt him: and ſo two Popes at one time. The one ſhall excommunicate and curſe, and ſeeke all meanes to depoſe the other. Kings and Princes ſhall be in parts. The whole World ſhalbe troubled. Then ſhall theſe matters be concluded. That I command, they ſhall breake: that I binde, they ſhall looſe. Vnleſſe M. Harding giue ſuch expoſition to Chriſts wordes, he cannot be greatly relieued by them. Thus haue we reaſon ſufficient, to open the errour of M. Hardings Church and Godly charity, to ioine with the old Catholike Church of the Apoſtles and holy Fathers, which, we doubt not, was the Church of God.

M. Harding. The 11. Diuiſion.

And although heerein we could be content, Infants not to be ſpoken of, yet it may eaſily bee prooued, that the Communion vnder both kindes hath not euer beene generall. And as we doe not condemne it, but confeſſe, it might be reſtored againe by the authority of the Church lawfully aſſembled in a Generall Councel, vpon mature deliberation before had, and a wholeſome remedy againſt the inconueniences therof prouided; euen ſo are we able to ſhew good authority for the defence of the one kinde now vſed in the Church.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding would haue vs put Gods word to daying, and none otherwiſe to be obedient to Chriſts commandement, than if a few Biſhops gathered at Trident ſhall allow it. But wé may anſwer ſuch a Councell as King Ageſilaus ſometime anſwered the Macedonians, thorow whoſe countrie hé deſired to haue paſſage againſt his enemies. For when they had ſent him word, that the matter was great, and that therefore foꝛe they would well conſider of it: Let them conſider, ſaid he, while they leſt: but in the meane time I will paſſe thorow. If the Councell, vpon aduice, will reſtoꝛe againe the whole Communion, why then doth Pope Leo call it, The Hereſie of the Greekes, and of the Bohemians? Oꝛ why doth Gerſon intitle his Booke, Contra Hæreſim Communicandi Laicos ſub vtraque ſpecie? Againſt the Hereſie of Communicating the Lay people vnder Both Kindes? I troꝛw, Councels be not called to reſtoꝛe the woꝛld to Hereſies. The great inconueniences that M. Harding would haue a Generall Councell to make pꝛouiſoes foꝛ, are noted by Gerſon, the greateſt Pꝛomoter of the Councell of Conſtance, and are theſe:

Emmaus.

In Bulla Leonis. 10.

Gerſon.

The liquoꝛ might be ſhed:
It cannot be carried about without danger:
In Winter it would ſome ſoꝛoe, and turne to Vineger:
In Summer it would putrifie, and bꝛæd woꝛmes:
It would be lothſome foꝛ men to dꝛinke:
In ſome Countries it is hard to begotten:
The Lay people ſhould touch the Cup:
Some of them haue Beards, ſome haue Palſies:
The dignity of the Pꝛieſt and Lay man ſhould be all one.

Theſe and other like inconueniences are ſuch as Chꝛiſt and his Apoſtles neuer knew: yet the Councell that is now holden at Trident, vpon mature and ſolemne deliberation, hath pꝛonounced and publiſhed, If any man will ſay, that theſe be not iuſt cauſes, why the people ſhould ſtand content with the Halfe Communion, accurſed be he.

And notwithſtanding the Biſhops in that Councell haue already yelded, that certaine Countries and Kingdomes may vſe the whole Communion, accoꝛding to Chꝛiſts Inſtitution, yet haue they added ſo fond conditions vnto the ſame, that all men may ſee they ſit there only foꝛ a countenance to mocke the woꝛld.

M. Harding. The 12. Diuiſion.

And becauſe M. Iewell beareth the world in hand, nothing can be brought for it of our ſide; ſome places I will allege heere, that ſeeme to me very euidently to prooue, that the vſe of both kindes hath not alwaies beene thought neceſſary to all perſons, and that the Communion vnder one kinde hath beene practiſed and holden for good within the ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, that he would ſo faine binde vs vnto.

Heere may be alleged firſt the example of our Lord himſelfe, out of the 24. Chapter of S. Luke, which is ſpoken off before; where it is declared, that he gaue the Sacrament vnto the two Diſciples at Emmaus vnder * the forme of Bread only; which place ought to haue the more weight of Authoritie, in a Catholike mans iudgement, becauſe it is brought by the Councell of * Conſtance, and alſo by the Councell of Baſil, for proote of the Communion vnder one kinde. That it was the Sacrament, the ancient Doctors doe affirme it plainly, and the words conferred with the words of our Lords Supper, doe agree. And that it is not needfull of our owne head to adde thereto the adminiſtration of the Cup, as our aduerſaries do by their figure Synecdoche; it appeareth by that thoſe two Diſciples declared to the twelue Apoſtles, aſſembled together in Hieruſalem, how they knew our Lord in fractione Panis, in breaking of the Bread to them, which cannot be taken for the Wine. And as ſoone as they knew him in breaking of the Bread, he vaniſhed away from their ſight, ere that he tooke the Cup into his hands, and bleſſed it, and gaue it vnto them (56) as it appeareth euidently enough to S. Auguſtine, to Bede, and to all other that be not wilfully opiniatiue.

Againe, what need is it to vſe violence in this Scripture, and ioine vnto it a patch of our owne deuice, by ſo ſimple a warrant of a figure, ſith that, according to the minde of the learned Fathers, Chriſt gaue heere to the two Diſciples not a peece of the Sacrament, but the whole Sacrament, as it is prooued by the effect of the ſame: and the effect preſuppoſeth the cauſe. For S. Auguſtine confeſſeth by that Sacrament of Bread, (ſo he calleth it Viatate Corporis participata, remoueri impidimentum inimici, vt Chriſtus poſſit agnoſci; That thereby they were made partakers of the vnity of Chriſts Body, that is to ſay, made one body with Chriſt, and that all impediment or let of the enemy, the Diuell, was taken away, ſo as Chriſt might bee acknowledged. What more ſhould they haue gotten, if they had receiued the Cup alſo?

* S. Luke nameth neither Forme nor only.

* In the yeere of our Lord 1414.

The 56. vntruth. For neither S. Auguſtine, nor Beda, nor any other ancient Father hath any ſuch word, but rather the contrary.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

If I would ſpeake only by authoꝛity, and pꝛoue nothing, as M. Hardings wont is, I might anſwer all this matter in thꝛee woꝛds:

Firſt, that the Bꝛead that Chꝛiſt bꝛake at Emmaus, was commmon table Bꝛead, and not the Sacrament.

Secondly, that albeit ſome Wꝛiters ſeeme to call it the Sacrament, yet none of them ſaith, it was miniſtred in one kinde, as M. Harding by his ſlender gheſſes would ſeeme to gather.

Thirdly, although he were able to pꝛoue, that Chꝛiſt ſo miniſtred at that time, and in that place, yet were all this nothing to pꝛoue his purpoſe. Foꝛ we ioine iſſue of the people: he anſwereth of the Pꝛieſts. I ſpeake of the Church: he ſpeaketh of an Inne. And to conclude, by this example it appeareth, that Chꝛiſt himſelfe receiued in one kinde: which one thing ouerthꝛoweth all that M. Harding hath built.

And becauſe he maketh himſelfe ſo ſure and certaine, that Chꝛiſt at Emmaus miniſtred the Emmaus.

the Sacrament, it may please him to remember, that euen the same Doctours that he hath here alleged, and diuers others of late yeres, vpon good consideration haue said, it was not the Sacrament. S. Augustine saith, the breaking of Bread there was hospitalitie, and intertaining of strangers. His words be these: Quia hospitalitatem sectati sunt, eum, quem in expositione Scripturarum non agnouerunt, in panis fractione cognoscunt: Because they were giuen to hospitalitie, they knew him in the breaking of Bread, whom they knew not in the expounding of the Scriptures. Which thing S. Gregory vttereth in plainer maner: Mensam igitur ponunt, Panes ciboſque offerunt, & Deum, quem in Scripturarum expositione non cognouerant, in panis fractione cognoscunt: They lay the Table, and set foorth Bread and Meat, and God whom they knew not in the expounding of the Scriptures, they know in the breaking of bread. It were hard to say, the setting foorth of Bread and Meat vpon a Table in an Hostery, was the ministration of the Sacrament. And to leaue Beda and others, that follow the same exposition, Dionysius one of late yeres, and therefore led away with many errours, according to the weakenesse of that time, saith thus: Accepit panem & Benedixit: non tamen in suum Corpus conuertit, sicut in Cœna: sed vt moris est benedicere cibum: He tooke Bread and blessed it: but he turned it not into his Body, as he did at his Supper: but only as the maner is, to say grace, or to blesse the meat. So likewise saith Antonius Iulianus: Accepit panem, benedixit, fregit, & porrigebat illis, sicut consueuerat ante Passionem: Hee tooke Bread, blest it, brake it and gaue it vnto them, as his maner was before his Passion.

Aug. in Caten in 24. Luc.

Greg. in Euangel. Homil. 23.

Dionys. in 24. Lucæ.

Anton. Iulianus in Postilla maiori.

Nicol. Lyra.

Lyra saith they knew him, for that he brake the Bread so euen, as if he had cut it with a knife. By these Writers it appeareth, it was common Bread that Christ gaue to his Disciples, and not the Sacrament.

And whereas M. Harding allegeth S. Augustine to the contrary, if he had considered the words of one William Wideford, a Doctour of his owne side, which he vseth against Wickliffe, I reckon, either he would haue better aduised himselfe, or else would haue refused his owne Doctour. Widefords words be these: Hic dico, quod non habetur extextu, vel ex Glossa Lucæ 24. vel per antiquos Doctores, quòd ille Panis, quem Christus fregit post Resurrectionem, fuit Consecratus, vel Sacramentalis Ideò inepte, & consequenter dico, quod falsò allegat authoritatem Augustini: This I say, it cannot be gathered neither by the text of S. Luke, nor by the Glosse, nor by the ancient Doctours, that the Bread that Christ brake after his Resurrection, was the Consecrate or Sacrament all Bread. And therefore, (I say) that foolishly and by consequence that falsly he alleged S. Augustine to this purpose.

Wil. Wideford contra Wicleuum.

The two Councels of Constance and Basil, thus vnderstood the words of S. Luke: and that saith M. Harding) in a Catholike mans iudgement ought to weigh much. The former of these two Councels was holden but of late daies, aboue fourténe hundred yéres after Christ, and the weight of them is already determined by others. For all the Dominike Friars, and all others, that held with Thomas of Aquine, which thought themselues to be the best learned that were then aliue, vtterly refused the Councell of Basil, and said, it was neuer lawfully called together.

Ludouic. Viues in 20. de Ciuit. Dei, Cap. 26.

And Albertus Pigghius saith, that both these Councels, aswell that of Basil, as the other of Constance, Decreed against the order of Nature, against the manifest Scriptures, against the authority of all Antiquity, and against the Catholike faith of the Church.

Pigghius in Hierarchia.

These be the two Councels that M. Harding would haue to weigh so déepely in a Catholike mans conscience. Neither can it iustly be replied, that any of these were Lutherans. For the Dominicke Friars were a hundred yéres before Luther euer preached: And Albertus Pigghius wrote namely and of purpose against Luther. Verily these Councels séeme ouerlight, to weigh downe all the Old Councels of graue and Catholike Fathers that were before them. Touching the authoritie of Councels, because they séeme oftentimes to varie, Gelasius thought it best to take vp the matter thus: In gestis Conciliorum, quotiescunque discors sententia inuenitur, illius Concilij sententia magis tenetur, cuius antiquor & potior extat authoritas: Whensoeuer contrarietie in sentence is found in the Acts of Councels, let the sentence of that Councell be taken, that hath the elder and better authoritie. If this determination of Gelasius be good, there is no cause why these two so late Councels should weigh downe any Catholike mans conscience, specially against so many contrary Councels as haue béene before. Doubtlesse it is a maruellous case, that either of these two Councels should at last sée that thing in the words of S. Luke, that the Councell of the Apostles could not sée.

Dist. 50. Domino Sancto.

Yet to helpe M. Harding forthward, let vs grant S. Augustine vnderstood these words of the Sacrament. Indéed he calleth it in the same place, Sacramentum Panis, The Sacrament of Bread: meaning thereby, that the substance of Bread in the same remaineth still: but he calleth it not, The forme or shadow of Bread, as M. Harding doth. But let vs grant it was the Sacrament.

Now

Now haue an eie (good Reader) to M. Hardings fingers, and marke how he iuggleth with S. Auguſtines words. S. Auguſtine ſaith; Per Sacramentum Panis vnitate Corporis participara: These plaine words it liketh M. Harding to Engliſh thus: Thereby they were made partakers of the vnitie of Chriſts Body, that is to ſay, made one Body with Chriſts. Alas, this was no part of S. Auguſtines minde. Beware good Reader: this man ſeeketh waies to deceiue thee. Lyra himſelfe confeſſeth, that theſe words of S. Auguſtine haue Myſticam Interpretationem, A myſticall vnderſtanding: and may not be taken neither of the Sacrament, nor of Chriſts Naturall Body, but of his Body Myſticall, which is the Church: and that whoſoeuer is partaker or member of the Church, knoweth Chriſt: whoſoeuer is without the Church, knoweth not Chriſt. But who can better report the ſame, than S. Auguſtine himſelfe? His words be theſe, plaine and cleere, and in the ſame place: Howbeit M. Harding thought good to diſſemble them: Nec quiſquam ſe Chriſtum agnouiſſe arbitretur, ſi eius Corporis particeps non eſt, id eſt, Eccleſiæ: cuius vnitatem in Sacramento Panis Apoſtolus commendat, dicens, vnus Panis, vnum Corpus multi ſumus: Let no man thinke he knoweth Chriſt, vnleſſe he be partaker of his Body, that is to ſay, of the Church: the vnitie of which Church the Apoſtle commendeth in the Sacrament of Bread, ſaying, We being many, are one Bread, and one Body. The Church was that Body, whereof the two Diſciples were made partakers and members, and ſo came to the knowledge of Chriſt. Aug. de conſenſu Euangeliſtarum. li. 3. c. 25.

Now, notwithſtanding we haue granted that S. Auguſtine expounded this place of the Sacrament, yet doth not S. Auguſtine ſay, that Chriſt miniſtred the halfe Sacrament to his Diſciples in one kinde only. But ſaith M. Harding, Luke ſpeaketh only of the Bread? Ergo, There was no Wine.

This Argument may be good in M. Hardings Diuinitie: but it is of ſmall force in good Logicke.

As for your Synecdoche, whereby of the part ye vnderſtand the whole (ſaith M. Harding) it is but a patch of your deuice, and will not ſerue. Yet S. Auguſtine, S. Gregorie, Bede, Iulianus, Dionyſius, Lyra, Wideford, and others that vnderſtand theſe words of S. Luke, of hoſpitalitie, muſt néeds craue the warrant of a figure, and vnder the name of Bread, muſt néeds conceiue meat and Wine alſo: otherwiſe there had béene a very ſimple, and a drie Feaſt. Now if M. Harding can allow them the figure of Synecdoche, why may not he as well allow vs the ſame? It is a maner of ſpeech commonly vſed in all the Scriptures.

But Chriſt ſtraightway vaniſhed from their ſight, vpon the breaking of the Bread; and therefore had no leaſure to deliuer the other portion; neither is there any mention made of the Cup. O what miſerable ſtraits theſe men be driuen into! To make vp their tale, they are glad to ſay, that Chriſt lackt leaſure. But there is nothing written of the Cup. I grant. Neither is there any thing there written, that Chriſt did Conſecrate the Bread. And this place is priuileged aboue all others. We muſt conceiue no more of it, than is ſpoken. Then was there a Sacrament without Conſecration. Neither is there any thing there written, that either Chriſt himſelfe or the Diſciples did eat the Bread. Thus hath M. Harding, with much adoe, found out at laſt, not a Communion of one kinde, that he ſought for, but a Communion of no kinde at all. And ſo haue we a Sacrament without Sacrament, and a Communion without Communion.

What ſhall I ſay further? If I grant M. Harding his whole demand, yet hath he won nothing againſt me; but very much againſt himſelfe. For the queſtion is moued of Lay people: M. Harding bringeth examples of Chriſt and two Diſciples, who were of the number of the ſeuenty and two, that were ſent abroad to preach the Goſpell, and therefore it may well be thought, they were Miniſters, and not of the Lay ſort. Lyra and others thinke, the one of them was S. Luke himſelfe. Epiphanius thinketh it was Nathaniel. Therefore M. Harding may well gather hereof, that Prieſts may receiue in one kinde: which thing he will in no wiſe grant. But he can conclude nothing againſt the people. Such lucke hath he to allege matter againſt himſelfe. Lyra in Lucam cap. 24. Epiphan. contra Saturnilinos.

M. Harding. The 13 Diuiſion.

Heere might bee alleged the place of the Acts in the ſecond Chapter, where mention is made of the Communion of breaking of the Bread, the Cup not ſpoken of: which the Heretikes called Waldenſes did confeſſe, that it muſt be vnderſtanded of the Sacrament, In confeſſione ad Vladiſlaum, and likewiſe the place of the 20. Chapter, and ſpecially that of the 27. Chapter of the Acts. (57) where Chryſoſtome, and other Fathers vnderſtand the Bread that S. Paul, in perill of Shipwracke, tooke, gaue thankes ouer, brake, and ate, to be the holy Sacrament.

The 57. vntruth. For Chryſoſtom vnderſtandeth it of common meat.

The

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

He thought it not good to recite the words, as knowing they would not greatly serue his purpose. That the two former places were meant of the Sacrament, it appeareth (saith hee) not only by the Waldenses, but also by the exposition of the old Fathers. Yet could none of them, in either of these places, euer finde out the halfe Communion in One Kinde. But heere is no mention of the Cup: Ergo, (saith M. Harding) The Communion was ministred in Bread alone. A learned man, before he conclude so vnaduisedly, should foresee what would follow. M. Harding granteth, as shall hereafter appeare, that if a Priest doe Communicate in One Kinde alone, he committeth Sacrilege: for so it is determined by Gelasius. Now let vs lay these two verities of M. Hardings both together. The first is, If a Priest minister in One Kinde, he committeth Sacrilege: The second is, The Apostles were Priests, and ministred onely in One Kinde: for heere is no maner mention of the Cup. These both be M. Hardings premisses. Hereof it must necessarily follow, and cannot be auoided, that the Apostles of Christ committed Sacrilege. But what will not these men grant, to win their purpose?

M. Hardings Cõclusion, that the Apostles of Christ committed Sacrilege.

The weight of M. Hardings Argument is taken, as they name it in Schooles, ab Authoritate negatiuè: and vnlesse it be in consideration of some other Circumstance, it is so simple, that a very childe may soone answer it. For as he saith heere, There is no mention made, but of breaking of Bread: Ergo, There was no Cup: So might he also say, There is no mention made, but of breaking of Bread: Ergo, There was not Christs Body. Or thus: Iacob went downe into Egypt with threescore and ten soules: Ergo, In his company hee had no bodies. Certainly as the soule in that place importeth the whole man; euen so in the other place, the breaking of Bread importeth the whole Ministration.

Genes. 46.

As for the breaking of Bread in the 27. of the Acts, which place, as it is auouched, Chrysostome vnderstandeth of the Sacrament, verily M. Harding was therein much ouerseene. For the Text is cleere: If S. Paul gaue the Sacrament, being at that time in the Ship, he gaue it only vnto Infidels, that knew not Christ. And Chrysostomes Exposition, euen in the same place, is plaine to the contrarie. For thus he enlargeth S. Pauls words, that he spake to the Mariners: Obsecro vos, vt sumatis cibum: hoc enim ad salutem vestram fuerit: hoc est, ne forsan fame pereatis, cibum sumite: I pray you take some sustenance. It is behouefull for you, that yee so do. That is to say, take some meat, lest perhaps yee die for hunger. Now let M. Harding either say these words are spoken of the Sacrament; or confesse that he hath made vntrue report of his Doctor.

M. Hard. misreporteth S. Chrysostome.

M. Harding. The 14. Diuision.

The 58. vntruth. For S. Paul neuer ministred the Comunion so.

It is not to be maruelled at, albeit S. Paul deliuered to the Corinthians the Institution of our Lords Supper vnder both kindes, that yet vpon occasion giuen, and when condition of time so required, (58) hee ministred the Communion vnder one kinde, sith that (without doubt) he tooke that holy Mysterie vnder one kind for the whole Sacrament, as we perceiue by his words, where he saith, Vnus Panis, & vnum Corpus, multi sumus, omnes qui de vno Pane participamus: One Bread, and one Body, wee (being many) are, all that doe participate of one Bread. (59) Where he speaketh nothing of the Cup. And likewise by his words, where he speaketh disiunctiuely, as the Greeke and the true Latine Text hath: Quicunque manducauerit Panem, vel biberit Calicem Domini indignè, reus erit Corporis & Sanguinis Domini: Whosoeuer eateth the Bread, or drinketh of the Cup of our Lord vnworthily, he shall be guilty of the Body and Blood of the Lord. Whereon dependeth an Argument of the contrarie, that whosoeuer eateth this Bread worthily, or drinketh this Cup worthily, he eateth and drinketh righteousnesse and life.

1. Cor. 10.

The 59. vntruth. For immediatly before he saith, The Cup of blessing which wee blesse, is it not the Communion of Christs Blood?

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

It is no maruell (saith M. Harding) though S. Paul ministred sometimes in one kind. But it is much to be maruelled, that any Christian man durst euer thus boldly to publish open errour vnder the name of S. Paul. What would not these men take in hand to prooue, that dare thus to allege S. Paul himselfe, against himselfe, and that without any testimonie, or word of S. Paul? Yes marry (saith M. Harding) S. Paul saith, wee being many, are one Bread, and one Body: and speaketh nothing of the Cup. Heere, by the way, M. Harding chargeth S. Paul with manifest Sacrilege. For it is already confessed by all them of that side, that it is Sacrilege, if a Priest, such as S. Paul was, doe minister and receiue the Sacrament vnder one kinde.

M. Harding chargeth S. Paul with Sacrilege.

But (he saith) there is nothing spoken of the Cup. What may we thinke hereof? Whether is this man himselfe blinde, or thinketh he all others to be blinde? Is there nothing there spoken of the Cup? (O good Christian Reader) marke the dealing of this man, and beware of him. Vnlesse thou consider well the places that he allegeth, he may soone deceiue thee. Thus lie S. Pauls words: The Cup of the blessing, which we blesse, is it not the Communication of the Blood of Christ? The Bread that we breake, is it not the Communication of the Bodie die of Christ? For we being many, are one Bread, and one Body, all that be partakers of one Bread.

Here S. Paul distinctly nameth both parts together, and the Cup before the Bread. Yet (saith M. Harding) there is nothing spoken heere of the Cup. If he hath dealt faithfully here in, thou maiest trust him further for the rest. Verily S. Hierome noteth it thus: Ideo de Calice primùm dixit, vt posset postea de Pane latius disputare: Therefore S. Paul spake first of the Cup, that he might afterward intreat more at large of the Bread. M. Hard. misreporteth S. Pauls words. Hieronymus in 1. Cor. 10.

Further (saith M. Harding) S. Paul vseth a Disunctiue, as appeareth both by the Greeke, and also by the true Latine Text. Such diligence and circumspection, in searching the Scriptures for defence of a truth, is much to be commended. For there may be often times great weight in one letter, as appeareth by sundry disputations betweene the Christians and the Arians. But this man seeketh so narrowly, only to finde some conert for his errour. S. Hierome, Anselmus, Haimo, and many others, both in the Text and in the Exposition of the same place, vse the Copulatiue. Notwithstanding, to grant M. Harding his Disunctiue, yet if he be so skilfull in the Digest, as in other places of his Booke he would seeme to be, he might some remember, that the very discretion of the Law hath determined, that sometimes Disunctiues stand in stead of Copulatiues, sometimes Copulatiues in stead of Disunctiues: Sæpè ita comparatum est, vt & Coniuncta pro Disiunctis accipiantur, & Disiuncta pro Coniunctis. De verb. & rerum significatione.

But if M. Harding haue so good eie to one little Disiunctiue, and meane vprightly, why doth he so blindely passe by so many Copulatiues in the selfe same place altogether? For S. Paul saith, As often as ye shall eat of this Bread, And drinke of this Cuppe: And againe, Let a man examine himselfe, and so eat of that Bread, And drinke of that Cuppe: And againe, He that eateth And drinketh vnworthily, eateth And drinketh his owne damnation: Here be foure Copulatiues together. And by these it were good reason, that M. Harding should expound his Disiunctiue: specially for that S. Paul, recording the Institution, vseth a Copulatiue: and the order of the Primitiue Church, and the Exposition of S. Hierome, and others, is agreeable to the same. In such cases Tertullian hath giuen a good rule: Oportet secundùm plura intelligi pauciora. Sed proprium hoc est omnium Hæreticorum: Nam quia pauca sunt, quæ in sylua inuenire possunt, pauca aduersus plura defendunt, & posteriora aduersus priora suscipiunt: It is meet, that we expound the fewer places according to the moe. But this is the very cast of all Heretikes. For because there be few things to be found in the wood, or in the multitude, therefore they defend a few things against many, and things lately deuised, against the first. Thus doth M. Harding, as we plainly see: and this (saith Tertullian) is the very cast of all Heretikes. Likewise also the Cup. Tertull. aduersus Praxeam.

M. Harding. The 15. Diuision.

For this purpose wee haue a notable place in the Hebrew Gospell of S Matthew, which S. Hierome saith, hee saw in the Library of Cæsarea, and translated it. This place is cited by S. Hierome, in his Booke, De Ecclesiasticis Scriptoribus, in Iacobo fratre Domini: The words touching the Communion, that S. Hierome rehearseth, agree thorowly with those of S. Luke 24. Chapt. Matthæus sic refert: Dominus autem &c. Matthew reporteth thus: When our Lord had made an oath, that he would not eat Bread from that houre he dranke of the Cup of the Lord, vntill he saw him raised from the dead. It followeth a little after: Afferte, ait Dominus, mensam & panem. Statimque addit: Tulit Panem, & benedixit, & fregit, ac dedit Iacobo Iusto, & dixit ei, Frater, comede Panem tuum, quia resurrexit filius hominis à dormientibus: Bring the Table, and set on Bread, quoth our Lord: and by and by it is added, Hee tooke Bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gaue it to Iames the Iust, and said vnto him, My brother, eat thy Bread: for the sonne of man is risen againe from the dead. No man can doubt but this was the Sacrament. And Wine was there none giuen, for any thing that may be gathered. For it is not likely that S. Iames had Wine in his house then, forasmuch as Egesippus, who was not long after him, witnesseth of him, that he neuer dranke Wine, but at our Lords Supper.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

What shall need long Answer to him that alleageth nothing? Here is no word spoken of the Sacrament, no more than when Christ did eat of the broiled Fish, and of the hony combe. And other proofe thereof there is none brought, but words and boldnesse. For shew and countenance of somewhat, there is brought forth the Gospell of S. Matthew, and that written in Hebrew, as though S. Matthew had written two Gospels, in two sundry tongues: and not only two, but also diuers. I know it is thought of some, that S. Matthew wrote his Gospell in Hebrew, and by report of Theophylactus, S. Iohn the Euangelist translated the same into Greeke. But that there should be any contrarietie or diuersitie of story, or matter, as M. Harding seemeth to meane, I haue not heard. Luc. 24.

But S. Hierome, in the place here alleged, as he not once nameth the Sacrament, so he speaketh not one word of S. Matthew. Which thing adeth some more distrust to M. Hardings dealing: S. Hierome only nameth the Gospell of the Hebrewes, which (he saith) he Hieronymus de Ecclesiasticis Scriptoribus.

he himselfe translated both into Greeke and Latine, and is often alleged by Origen. But Eusebius lib. 3. cap. 24. Eusebius accounteth it for no Gospell, but only among the bastard Scriptures.

Howbeit, whatsoeuer the credit of the Booke be, thus it is written: Christ tooke Bread, and blessed it, and brake it. Heere (saith M. Harding) no man can doubt but it was the Sacrament. I see well he would faine haue it so. Yet is there heere, neither by the Hebrewes Gospell, nor by S. Hierome, any word spoken of the Sacrament. Neither had S. Iames vowed, that he would not minister or receiue the Communion, but that he would eat no Common Bread, before he had seene Christ risen againe from the dead. As for the blessing of the Bread, it was not a thing peculiar to the Sacrament, but a generall maner that Christ obserued, whensoeuer he vsed Gods creatures, as it may appeare throughout the Story of the Gospels. That Christ should then minister the Sacrament, it is but M. Hardings gheste. No old Writer euer saw so much before, no not S. Hierome, that wrote the Story. Yet M. Harding, as though he had learned it in the third Heauen, saith, It is so plaine, that no man may doubt of it.

But be it the Sacrament: Ergo (saith M. Harding) There was but one kinde. And how may that be proued? Now must one gheste helpe another. For it is likely (saith M. Harding) that there was no Wine in the house. And why so? Because S. Iames dranke no Wine. If gheستes goe for arguments, this matter is done: Howbeit, it seemeth a very silly gheste, to say, S. Iames dranke no Wine: Ergo, He had no Wine in his house. Verily the same Egesippus, that saith S. Iames neuer dranke Wine, saith also, That hee neuer was anointed, neuer ware wollen cloth, neuer eat flesh in all his life.

Egesippus. Abdias lib. 6.

Hereof, by M. Hardings Logicke, we may conclude, that he had neither ointment, nor wollen cloth, nor flesh in his house. Yet is there heere another greater inconuenience. S. Hierome saith, that S. Iames continued Bishop in Hierusalem the space of thirty yeres, vntill the seuenth yeare of Nero: if it be true that is heere auouched, that in all his life he neuer dranke Wine, but only at Christs last Supper, then must it follow, that being Bishop in Hierusalem the space of thirty yeres, he neuer said Masse: which thing M. Harding may not well grant: Or else that he Consecrated in one kinde: which thing by Gelasius is adiudged Sacrilege. Which way soeuer M. Harding turne himselfe, into one of these inconueniences he must néeds fall.

Hieron. de Ecclesiæ Scriptoribus.

Againe, if heere be mention indeed of the Sacrament, and no Wine to be had in S. Iames house, then did Christ himselfe receiue in one kind, to whose example, as these men say, Bishops and Priests are bound to stand. Therefore let them no longer deceaue the people, but by Christs example, let both Bishops and Priests content themselues with the halfe Communion, as well as others.

M. Harding. The 16 Diuision.

But because perhaps our aduersaries will cast some mist ouer these allegations, to darken the truth with their cloudy Glosses, which be cleere enough to quiet and sober wits, that giue eare to the holy Ghost, speaking to vs by the mouth of the Church: I will bring foorth such witnesses and proofes for this purpose, out of ancient Fathers, as by no reason or Sophisticall shift, they shall be able to auoid. Many of the places that I alleged in the Article before this, for Priuate Communion, may serue to this purpose very well, and therefore I will not let to recite some of them heere also.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

God wot, it were great wrong to cast a mist ouer darkenesse. But M. Harding hauing alleged such matter for his halfe Communion, as he himselfe seeth may be easily answered, and William Wideford, a Doctour of his owne learning, saith, Is foolishly and falsly brought in, to serue this turne; yet he would not passe it ouer without some brauery. But now will he bring in such authorities, so cleere, so forcible, and so inuincible, as cannot possibly be auoided. Howbeit, God be thanked, these Authorities be neither so weighty, nor so strange. I knew them all, and had weighed them well, before I spake any thing in that behalfe. Heere he doubleth a great many things, before by him alleged for his Priuate Masse, indeed seruing as well to the one purpose, as to the other.

Wil. Wideford, contra Wicleuum.

M. Harding. The 17. Diuision.

Melciades that constant Martyr of Christ, and Bishop of Rome, ordeined, that sundry hosts, prepared by the Consecrating of a Bishop, should bee sent abroad among the Churches, and Parishes, that Christian folke, who remained in the Catholike Faith, might not through Heretikes be defrauded of the holy Sacrament. Which can none otherwise be taken, than for the forme of Bread only, because the Wine cannot so conueniently be carried abroad from place to place, in small quantitie, for such vse; much lesse any long time bee kept without corruption.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

This Argument hangeth only vpon lacke of carriage. For if it were possible to deuise a way, that the Sacrament might be carried about in both kindes, then were this gheste ſone anſwered. For otherwiſe Melciades ſpeaketh not one word of the Communion in One kinde. Now that the cartiage of both kindes is not vnpoſſible, the examples of antiquitie doe well declare. S. Hierome writeth thus of Exuperius the Biſhop of Tolouſe in France: Nihil illo ditius, qui Corpus Domini in caniſtro vimineo, Sanguinem portabat in vitro: There was no man richer than hee that carried the Lords Body in a wicker Basket, and his Blood in a Glaſſe. Hieronym. ad Ruſticum. Likewiſe Iuſtinus Martyr declaring the order of the Church in his time, ſaith thus: Illis, quæ cum gratiarum actione conſecrata ſunt, vnuſquiſque participat: eadem, ad eos qui abſunt, Diaconis dantur perferenda: Of the things that be Conſecrate (that is, the Bread, Water and Wine) euery man taketh part: The ſame things are deliuered to the Deacons to be carried vnto them that be away. Iuſtinus Martyr in Apologia 2. Here haue we found not only a poſſibilitie, but alſo a common vſage and practiſe of carrying the Sacrament in Both kindes. This is the firſt inuincible argument, that all the World cannot anſwer.

M. Harding. The 18. Diuiſion.

The Councell of Nice decreed, that in Churches where neither Biſhop nor Prieſt were preſent, the Deacons themſelues bring foorth and eat the holy Communion. Which likewiſe cannot bee referred to the forme of Wine, for cauſe of ſowring and corruption if it be long kept.

This Canon is neither found in the Greeke, nor extant in the firſt edition, nor alleged by Gratian.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

This latter clauſe (Ipſi proferant & edant:) Let them bring it foorth themſelues and eat, neither is in the Greeke, nor in the Decrees, nor in the former edition of the Councels. Certaine words ſomewhat like are found in Ruffinus in this ſort: Præſentibus Presbyteris, Diaconi ne diuidant Euchariſtiam, ſed illis agentibus, ſolùm miniſtrent. Si verò Preſbyter nullus ſit in præſenti, tunc demum etiam ipſis liceat diuidere: In the preſence of the Prieſts, let not the Deacons diuide or miniſter the Sacrament, but onely ſerue the Prieſts in their office. But if there be no Prieſt preſent, then let it be lawfull for the Deacons to miniſter. Ruffinus libro 1. cap. 6. Here is very ſmall helpe for M. Hardings purpoſe, vnleſſe perhaps hee will ſay, that Proferre or diuidere, is to miniſter in one kinde. But if he thinke this a very fond Tranſlation, as it is indeed, then this authoritie might haue beene ſpared.

M. Harding vpon occaſion of theſe words would haue men beleeue that the Deacon in the abſence of the Prieſt, went to the Pix, and toke out the Sacrament and receiued it. But Ruffinus ſpeaketh not one word neither of taking forth of the Sacrament, nor of the receiuing of the Deacon, but of Diuiding or Miniſtring to the people. And his meaning ſeemeth to be this, that in the abſence of the Prieſt, the Deacon might Conſecrate, and ſo ſerue the people. Which thing notwithſtanding it ſeeme in ſome part contrarie to another Canon of the ſame Councell, namely in the preſence of a Prieſt, yet that it was ſo vſed in the Primitiue Church, it appeareth by moſt manifeſt and certaine proofes. Canon. 18. S. Ambroſe imagineth S. Laurence being a Deacon, thus to ſay vnto Sixtus the Biſhop, when he ſaw him led to his Martyrdome: Experire vtrùm idoneum miniſtrum elegeris, cui commiſeris Dominici ſanguinis Conſecrationem: O Father, trie whether thou haue choſen a fit Miniſter, vnto whom thou haſt committed the Conſecration of the Lords Blood. Ambr. officior. lib. 1. cap. 41. By theſe words we ſee, that Deacons then vſed to Conſecrate. Therefore Eutropius was not well aduiſed, when he without cauſe corrupted and altered S. Ambroſes words, and for Dominici Sanguinis Conſecrationem, read Dominici ſanguinis diſpenſationem. Eutropius. For it followeth immediately in S. Ambroſe: Et conſummandorum conſortium Sacramentorum: that is, The Fellowſhip of perfecting the Sacraments.

And the Emperour Iuſtinian in his Authentikes, De eccleſiaſticis diuerſis capitulis: Let the Biſhop appoint vnto the women that be vnder his gouernment, ſuch Prieſt or Deacon as they ſhall chuſe to make anſwer vnto them, or to miniſter vnto them the holy oblation. Folio 356. Authen. De Eccle. diuer. capitulis.

The ſame alſo may euidently be gathered by the ſecond Canon of the Councell Ancyrane: the words be: Diaconi ſimiliter, qui immolauerunt, honorem quidem habeant: ceſſare verò debent ab omni Sacro miniſterio, ſiue a Pane, ſiue à Calice offerendo vel prædicando: Let the Deacons that haue offered (vnto Idols) keepe their eſtate ſtill. But they muſt giue ouer all holy Miniſterie, both of offering the Bread and Wine, and alſo of Preaching. Concil. Ancyran. Can. 2.

This part of the Deacons office was afterward in ſundrie decrees abrogated. Firſt Bergomenſis in the life of Honorius ſaith: It was decreed by Zoſimus Biſhop of Rome, that the Deacon ſhould not miniſter in the preſence of the Biſhop or Prieſt. Bergomen in Honorio. And long before that time, order was taken in the Councell holden at Arle in France, that Deacons ſhould not miniſter the Sacrament at all. The words be: De Diaconis, quos cognouimus multis locis offerre, placuit id minimè fieri debere: Touching Deacons of whom we heare ſay, that they make the oblation in many places, we haue thought it good, that they doe ſo no more. Concil. Arelat. 1. cap. 15.

M. Harding will not denie but theſe bee proofes ſufficient, that the Deacons in thoſe dates vſed to miniſter the holy Communion. Therefore the meaning of the Councell of Nice, is not that the Deacon should goe to the Priest, and take the Sacrament reserued, as M. Harding seemeth to gather vpon a false text, being neither in the Greeke, nor in the former setting forth of the Councels, nor alleged by Gratian: but that the Deacon in the absence of the Priest might Consecrate the holy Mysteries, and deliuer the same vnto the people, as may well be gathered by the words of Ruffine. But let vs grant M. Harding, that the Sacrament was reserued: yet hath he gotten very small aduantage for his halfe Communion. For if he would say thus: The Sacrament was reserued, Ergo, it was reserued in one kinde, the Sequell of his argument would be to weake. No Logicke could make it good.

I grant, the holy Mysteries were sometimes kept in the Primitiue Church vpon sundrie occasions: but they were kept in both kindes, as manifestly appeareth by Nicephorus, and by the first Epistle of Complaint sent by Chrysostome vnto Innocentius. This being true, as it cannot bee denied, that the Sacrament was reserued in both kindes, what then hath M. Harding gotten by this inuincible argument, for his halfe Communion in one kinde?

Nicephor. lib. 13. cap. 19.

Chrys. epist. 1. ad Innocētium.

M. Harding. The 19. Diuision.

Where often times we finde it recorded of the Fathers, that Christian people in time of persecution receiued of the Priests at Church in fine linnen clothes, the Sacrament in sundry portions, to beare with them, and to receiue it secretly in the morning before other meat, as their deuotion serued them, for the same cause; and in respect of other circumstances, it must of necessitie be taken, only for the kinde or forme of Bread. The places of Tertullian and S. Cyprian be knowen. Tertullian writing to his wife, exhorteth her not to marry againe, specially to an Infidell, if he die before her, for that if she doe, she shall not be able at all times for her husband, to doe as a Christian woman ought to doe. Will not thy husband know (saith he) what thou eatest secretly before all other meat? And in case he doe know it, he will beleeue it to be bread, not (do) him who it is called. S. Cyprian writeth in his Sermon De Lapsis, That when a woman had gone about with vnworthy hands to open her Coffer where the holy thing of our Lord was laid vp, shee was made afraid with fire that rose vp from thence, as she durst not touch it. Which doubtlesse must be taken for that one kinde of the Sacrament.

Lib. ad Vxo. rem.

The 60. vntruth. Standing in the false translating of Tertullian.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The matter that hangeth in question betweene vs, is whether the people being assembled together in the Church, at any time within the space limited, receiued the Communion vnder one kinde. M. Harding answereth me, not of the order of the Church, but of seuerall men and Priuate houses. Thus he lieth that thing that should bee proued: and the thing that needeth no proofe, as nothing pertinent vnto the matter, hee proueth onely by coniecture. In the place of Tertullian hee vseth a manifest corruption, as I haue already shewed.

M. Harding falsifieth Tertullian.

His coniectures be these: Women receiued the Sacrament in a linnen cloth; Tertullians wife receiued it at home before meats; S. Cyprian saith, A woman kept it at home in a Chest; Ergo, The Sacrament was ministred in one kinde. These be cold ghesses and no proofes. To say, They had the Bread: Ergo, They had not the Wine, is a very faint reason, and hangeth only of ignorance, for that M. Harding knoweth not, in what order these things were kept. But that women and others kept the Sacrament and carried it about them, and that in both kindes, it is euident, and cannot be denied.

Gregorie Nazianzene thus writeth of his sister Gorgonia: ἐπεὶ τι τῶν ἁγιασθέντων τῷ τιμίῳ σώματι, καὶ αἵματι, ἢ χεὶρ ἐδυσώπησεν, τοῦτο καταμιγῦσα τοῖς δάκρυσι, &c. If her hand had laid vp any portion of the tokens of the precious Body and of the Blood, mingling it with her teares, &c. Heere Nazianzene, contrarie to M. Hardings iudgement, saith, she had laid vp both parts. And what should I stand long to heape examples? M. Hardings owne Amphilochius, of whom he seemeth to make so great account, among other his fables, whereof he hath good store, saith: That a certaine Iew came and receiued among the Faithfull, and priuily caried part of either kinde home with him. How or wherein, it is not written. Yet will it not follow, M. Harding cannot tell wherein the Iew carried home the Wine: therefore Amphilochius tale is not true.

Nazian. in funere Gorgoniæ.

Amphilochius.

Now if M. Harding had his owne request, yet is he farre off from his purpose. For if he would reason thus: One woman receiued the halfe Sacrament in one kinde at home: Ergo, The people receiued in like sort openly in the Church (which is the thing that should be proued) this argument would hardly hold.

To bee short, these three examples heere alleged, are nothing else but meere abuses of the Sacrament. And therefore as it appeareth by S. Cyprian, God shewed himselfe by miracle to be offended with it, fraying the woman that so had kept it, with a flame of fire. And it was decreed in the Councell holden at Cæsarauguſta in Spaine: That if any man receiued the Sacrament, and eat not the same presently in the Church, hee should bee accursed for euer.

Cyprian. de Lapsis Serm. 5.

Concil. Cæsarauguſt. cap. 3.

euer. Thus M. Hardings reaſons hold only by gheſſe, grounded vpon abuſe, and being granted, yet are not able to proue his purpoſe. Paulinus.

M. Harding. The 20. Diuiſion.

The examples of keeping the holy Sacrament vnder the forme of Bread only, to be in a readineſſe for the ſicke and for others in time of danger, that they might haue their neceſſarie victuall of life, or voiage prouiſion with them at their departure hence, be in maner infinite. Heere one or two may ſerue in ſtead of a number. For though M. Iewell maketh his vaunt that wee haue not one ſentence or clauſe for proofe of theſe Articles, which he ſo defaceth with his negatiue; yet I will not accumulate this treatiſe with tedious allegation of authorities. S. Ambroſe at the houre of death, receiued the Communion vnder one kind, kept for that purpoſe, as it appeareth by this teſtimonie of Paulinus, who wrote his life. And becauſe it may be a good inſtruction to others to die well, I will heere recite his words: At the ſame time as he departed from vs our Lord, from about the eleuenth houre of the day, vntill the houre that hee gaue vp the ghoſt, ſtretching abroad his hands in maner of a Croſſe, hee praied: wee ſaw his lips moue, but voice wee heard none. Horatius a Prieſt of the Church of Vercels, being gone vp to bed, heard a voice three times of one calling him, and ſaying to him, Ariſe and haſte thee, for hee will depart hence by and by. Who going downe, gaue to the Saint our Lords Bodie, which taken and ſwallowed downe, hee gaue vp the ghoſt, hauing with him a good voyage prouiſion, ſo as the ſoule being the better refreſhed by the vertue of that meat, may now reioice with the companie of Angels, whoſe life he led in the earth, and with the fellowſhip of Elias.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

It is no vaunt to ſay the truth. Neither did I denie, that euer any one man receiued the Communion in One kinde. For I knew all theſe examples, and the weight of them. Neither is it ſo hard a matter for a man to know them. But this is the only thing that I denied: That you are not able to bring any one ſufficient authoritie or example that euer the whole people receiued the Communion in the open Church vnder one Kinde. Hereupon reſteth that ſtrange Negatiue, wherewithall ye are ſo greeued. This is it that ye ſhould proue, and yet hitherto haue not proued. Ye ſay, ye will not accumulate examples, as though yee had enow to ſpare. Yet haue yee gotten together Sicke folke, Women, Infants, Mad men, Coniectures, Gheſſes, Miracles and Fables: and haue ſpared nothing that might bee found, although it made nothing to your purpoſe. Such is the ſtore of your examples.

Touching Paulinus, that as it is ſuppoſed, wrote this life of S. Ambroſe, I will ſay nothing as of my ſelfe, but onely referre you to Eraſmus, whoſe iudgement yee would ſeeme ſometime not to miſlike. Thus he ſaith: Idem eſt artifex, qui tam multa contaminauit in ſcriptis Hieronymi & Auguſtini, &c. It is the ſame crafts man, that hath corrupted ſo many things in the writings of S. Hierome and S. Auguſtine, a man euen made to ſuch purpoſe. He had the ſtorie of S. Ambroſes life written by ſome other. Vnto the ſame he ſet a iolly Preface of his owne: he woaue in a great many talkes betweene parties, and thereunto framed a concluſion, and patched on a ſort of Miracles. Compare the very phraſe and maner of ſpeech of the true Paulinus with this fellowes rags, &c. Eraſm. in præfatione in Ambroſium.

This is that Paulinus, whom M. Harding hath choſen for his authour.

Touching the matter, if it bee granted, it neither releeueth M. Hardings purpoſe, nor hindreth ours. For if S. Ambroſe ſtraight vpon receiuing of the Bread yelded vp the ſpirit, and therefore did not receiue the Cup, which thing notwithſtanding is not yet proued, yet will it not follow, that this was the common order of the Church. What example of dying well M. Harding hath heere found, I cannot ſee: vnleſſe hee meane that the Sacrament, onely becauſe it is receiued, hath power to worke Saluation, and to cauſe a man to die well: which is a dangerous doctrine, and by M. Harding already refuſed. For as much as may appeare by the ſtorie, neither did S. Ambroſe in that caſe call for the Sacrament, nor vtter any kinde of word, nor vnderſtood what he receiued: but onely lay ſpeechleſſe, and as ſoone as he had ſwallowed the Bread downe, gaue vp the ghoſt. But this Paulinus in the ſame ſtorie noteth one ſpeciall ſentence of S. Ambroſe, much had in remembrance and commended by S. Auguſtine in his old age, and heere diſſembled by M. Harding, whereof a man may take great comfort, and indeede learne a good leſſon to die well. For he ſaid lying in his death bed: Non ſic vixi, vt pudeat inter vos viuere: nec mori timeo, quia bonum habemus Dominum: Neither haue I ſo liued, that I am aſhamed longer to liue amongſt you: nor am I afraid to die, for that we haue a gratious Lord. Articulo 20.

M. Harding. The 21. Diuiſion.

Dionyſius Alexandrinus about the yeere of our Lord 200. as Euſebius Cæſarienſis reciteth, manifeſtly declareth, how that an old man called Serapion, was houſeled vnder one kinde at his end. This Serapion after that he had laien ſpeechleſſe three daies, ſent for the Sacrament. The Prieſt for ſickneſſe not able to come himſelfe, gaue to the lad that came of that errand, a little of the Sacrament, commanding him to wet it, and ſo being moiſted, to powre it into the old mans mouth. Thus much is expreſſed by the words there, Euſebius hiſt. lib. 6. cap. 44.

as the Greeke is to be construed. The ladde being returned home, moisted with some liquor that diuine meat to serue the old man withall, lying now panting for desire to bee dismissed hence, and to haste him away to Heauen, and powred it into his mouth. For that this old mans mouth and throat had long beene drie by force of his sickneſſe; the Priest who had experience in that case, prouidently gaue warning to moist the Sacrament with some liquor, and so together to powre it into his mouth. Which was so done by the ladde as Dionysius expresseth. Now if the forme of Wine had then also beene brought by the ladde to be ministred, there had beene no need of such circumstance to procure the old man a moisture to swallow down that holy food. And that this was the maner of ministring the Sacrament to old men at their departing, it appeareth by record of Theodoritus, who writeth in his Eccleſiasticall story, how one Bassus an Arch-Priest ministred vnto an old man called Simeones, of great fame for his holineſſe. Bassus, saith he, as he visited his Churches, chanced vpon holy Simeones that wonder of the World lying sicke, who through feeblenesse was not able to speake nor moone. When Bassius saw he should die, he giueth him his rites before. But after what sort it is to bee marked. Spongia petita Simeoni os humectat atque eluit, ac tum es diuinum obtulit Sacramentum: Hee calleth for a sponge (saith Theodoritus) and therewith moisteth and washeth Simeones mouth, and then giueth him the holy Sacrament. If at that time the receiuing of the sacred Cup had beene in vse, such procuring of moisture for the better swallowing downe of the Sacrament vnder one kinde had been needleſſe.

Ἀμφιλόχιος τὸν Ἀσσίου τὸν ἐπισκοπήσαντα τὸν ξυροφάγον ἐπισκοπῆς.

The burying of the Sacrament.

Amphilochius that worthy Bishop of Iconium in Lycaonia, of whom mention is made in the Article afore this, writeth in the life of S. Basil, that a little before he gaue vp his ghoſt, he receiued a portion of the holy Sacrament, which long before hee had caused to bee kept, to the intent it might be put in his graue with him at his buriall. Which no man can cauill to be any other, than the forme of Bread only.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding rather than hée would séeme to answer nothing, answereth one thing for another. The question is, of the vsage and order of the Church: his answer is of Serapions death bed, as though there had béene no Churches yet erected in those daies.

This Serapion for open Idolatrie by him committed, was Excommunicate from the Church, and vtterly cut off from the company of the faithfull, and that in such extreme sort, for the greater terrour of others, that during his life hée should neuer bée admitted againe. Notwithstanding which extremity, vpon good proofes, and tokens of repentance, leſt the party should bée vtterly swallowed vp with despaire, the Church often times with charitable discretion, remitted some part of that rigour: as may appeare by S. Cyprian, S. Augustine and others, and by Dionysius that wrote this Storie.

Auguſt. epiſt. 180.

S. Augustine speaking of the times of persecution: Doe not we consider (saith he) in what multitudes the people in such danger, resorteth to the Church, some desiring they may be Baptized, some that they may be reconciled from Excommunication, some that they may be admitted to shew their repentance (for their open crimes) euery man desiring comfort, euery man desiring the participation of the Sacrament? In which case if there be no Minister to be had, what misery then followeth them that depart this life either vnbaptized or else bound (in their sinnes?) Likewise S. Cyprian saith: In this extreme case of death, the partie Excommunicate should not tarry to bee reconciled by the Bishop (in the presence of the Church, as the order was then) but discharge himselfe before any Deacon, and so depart vnto the Lord in peace. Therefore the Priest vnderstanding the state the old man Serapion, being Excommunicate, stood in, and being not able for sickneſſe to goe himselfe, leſt he should depart comfortleſſe in desperation, in token that he was reconciled vnto the Church, sent vnto him the Sacrament by the ladde, and sent it not in one kinde only, but in both. For such was the order of the Church then, as it appeareth well by the story of Exuperius, and by Iustinus, and others. And the boy that caried the Sacrament, for more ease of the old man in that case, was warned by the Priest to moist the bread in the Sacramentall Wine that he brought with him, like as Bassus also did vnto Simeones: whom M. Harding highly commendeth for his holineſſe, notwithstanding he were the founder of the Meſſalians, and therefore as hée afterward saith, the first parent of the Sacramentary hereſie. And what hath M. Harding herein found for his halfe Communion? He will say, The boy was commanded to dippe the Bread; and Bassus was faine to wash Simeones mouth; Ergo, he receiued in one kinde. Verily Serapions boy were some able to answer this argument. For what sequell is this in reason: The sicke mans mouth was drie; Ergo, he could not receiue the Cup? Who would make such reasons but M. Harding? Of this ground he might better reason thus: The sicke mans mouth was drie: Ergo, He could not receiue the Bread. In my iudgement, the scowring of the sicke mans mouth hath small force to take from him the Sacrament of Christs Blood, and so to proue the halfe Communion.

Hieronym. ad Ruſticum. Iuſtinus, Apologia 2. Theodoret. lib. 4. cap. 11.

As for the fable of M. Hardings Amphilochius, it were great wrong to answer it otherwise than as a fable. For thus it is: The Bread had beene kept by the space of seuen yeeres or more: S. Basil in his death bed called for it, and receiued it, to the intent, as M. Harding saith, it might be buried with him. The former part hereof, to say, either that the Sacrament was kept the space of seuen yéres, or that at the end of so long time, it was fit to be receiued of a ſicke man in his death bed, is méere follie. But to ſay, as M. Harding héere ſaith, that the Body of Chriſt being now immortall and glorious, and at the right hand of God, may bée laid in the graue and buried, is manifeſt and wicked blaſphemie. Abdias ſaith, that S. Matthy the Apoſtle when he was ſtoned to death, deſired that two of the firſt ſtones might be buried with him for a witneſſe againſt them that ſo vſed him: who although hée bée full of like fables, yet hath he ſome reaſon in his fables: but M. Hardings Amphilochius hath none at all.

a

Now for view of M. Hardings proofes, good Reader, conſider this: I demand of the Lattie: he anſwereth of S. Ambroſe, and S. Baſil, which were Biſhops. I demand of the whole people: hée anſwereth of ſeuerall men. I demand of the vſage of the Church: hée anſwereth of perſons Excommunicate, that were without the Church. I demand of ſufficient and certaine proofes: he anſwereth me by ghéſſes and fables. And theſe be his inuincible arguments, that no man can anſwer.

M. Harding. The 22. Diuiſion.

It hath beene a (61) cuſtome in the Latine Church from the Apoſtles time to our daies, that on Good-Friday, aſwell Prieſts as other Chriſtian people, receiue the Sacrament vnder the forme of Bread only, conſecrated the day before, called the day of our Lords Supper, commonly Maundie Thurſday, and that not without ſignification of a ſingular myſterie; and this hath euer beene iudged a good and ſufficient Communion.

The 61. vntruth. without any colour or ſhew of truth.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

This may well bée called a Good Fridaies argument, it commeth in ſo naked without witneſſe. Indéed M. Tonſtall ſaith, it hath béene vſed of old in the Latine Church, but hee durſt not ſay from the time of the Apoſtles, as M. Harding héere ſaith. Yet for augmentation of matter of his ſide, I will ſay further: the firſt Councell Arauſicane holden ſometime in France, and Innocentius the firſt haue added héereto the holy Saturday, which now is called Eaſter Eue, and ſay it is a tradition of the Church, that in thoſe two daies the Sacrament in any wiſe be not miniſtred. The like whereof is written by Socrates of Good Friday, and the Wedneſday before.

Tonſtall. de Euchariſt. Concil. Arauſicanum 1.

Socr. l. 5. ca. 21

Innocen. 1. c. 4.

The ſingular myſterie héereof, M. Harding holdeth ſecret as a myſterie. Innocentius ſaith: It is becauſe the Apoſtles ran their way that day, and hid themſelues. Thomas of Aquine and Gerſon ſay: Becauſe if any had Conſecrate that day while Chriſt lay dead, the Body had been without Blood, and the Blood without the Body. Others ſay: If the Sacrament that meane while had beene kept, it would haue beene dead in the Pix.

Thom. 3. par. de Euch. qua. 76. ar. 2.

Gerſon contra Floret. li. 4.

Hugo Cardinalis ſaith: Quinta feria duæ hoſtiæ conſecrantur, & altera in craſtinum reſeruatur, quod eleganter fit, &c. Vpon Shire Thurſday two hoſts be Conſecrate, and the one of them is reſerued vntill the next day, which thing is very trimly done. For Chriſts Paſſion is the truth, and the Sacrament is a figure of the ſame. Therefore when the truth is come, the figure giueth place. These be the greateſt myſteries that I could euer learne touching this matter.

Eleganter.

Tho. 3. par. q. 81. art. 4. Innocent. 3. Hugo Cardinal. in Euang. ſecundùm Lucam cap. 24.

But this (ſaith M. Harding) was euer counted a good Communion. I grant. But yée haue not yet proued, that this was your halfe Communion. For if ye ſay, they Conſecrated the day before: Ergo, They receiued in One kinde onely the day after, this would bée no formall argument. For the Gréeke Church all the Lent long vſed to Conſecrate the Sacrament only vpon Saturdaies and Sundaies, as it is noted in the Councell of Conſtantinople: and vpon other daies they vſed the Communion of things Conſecrate before, and yet had they neuer vntill this day the Communion vnder One kinde. Yet notwithſtanding vnto this maner of the Gréeke Church, [a] M. Tonſtall reſembleth the obſeruation of Good Friday in the Latine Church. So farre is M. Harding off from proouing his purpoſe by Good Friday.

Sexta Synodus Conſtantinopol. Can. 52. τῆ θείᾳ λειτουργίᾳ τῶν προηγιασμένων.

[a] Tonſtall. de Euchariſt.

M. Harding. The 23. Diuiſion.

And that in the Greeke Church alſo, euen in the time of Chryſoſtome, the Communion vnder the forme of Bread only, was vſed and allowed, it appeareth by this notable ſtorie of Sozomenus, a Greeke Writer; which becauſe it is long, I will heere rehearſe it onely in English, remitting the learned to the Greeke. When Iohn, otherwiſe named Chryſoſtome, gouerned the Church of Conſtantinople very well, a certaine man of the Macedonian hereſie had a wife of the ſame opinion. When this man had heard Iohn in his Sermon declare, how one ought to thinke of God, hee praiſed his doctrine, and exhorted his wife to conforme her ſelfe to the ſame iudgement alſo. But when as ſhee was led by the talke of noble women, rather than by her husbands good aduertiſements, after that hee ſaw counſell tooke no place, Except (quoth he) thou wilt beare me companie in things touching God, thou ſhalt haue no more to do with me, nor liue any longer with me. The woman hearing this, promiſing fainedly, that ſhe would agrée vnto it, conferreth the matter with a woman ſeruant that ſhe had, whom ſhe eſteemed for truſty, and vſeth her helpe to deceiue her husband. About the time of the Myſteries, ſhe holding faſt that which ſhe had receiued, ſtouped downe, making reſemblance to pray. Her ſeruant ſtanding by, giueth to her ſecretly, that which ſhee had brought with her in her hand. That, as ſhe put her teeth to it to bite it, hardneth into a ſtone. With that the woman sore astonied, fearing lest some euill should happen vnto her therefore, which came by the power of God, ranne foorthwith to the Bishop, and bewraying her selfe, sheweth him the stone, hauing yet in it the prints of her bit, representing a strange matter and a wondrous colour; and so with teares of her eies besought forgiuenesse, promising her husband she would consent and agree to him. If this seeme to any incredible (saith Sozomenus) that stone is witnesse, which to this day is kept among the Iewels of the Church of Constantinople. By this storie it is cleere, the Sacrament was then ministred vnder One kinde only. For by receiuing that one forme, this woman would haue perswaded her husband, that she had communicated with him, and with that holy Bishop. Else if both kindes had then beene ministred, shee should haue practised some other shift for the auoiding of the Cup, which had not beene so easie.

Niſter Eccleſ. hiſt. li. 12. cap. 5. in Greco.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

I may not disgrace the credit of this story: albeit in Sozomenus and Nicephorus, of both whom the same is recorded, there be sundrie things that may well be sied. But I see no cause yet, wherefore M. Harding should blow the triumph. For in all this long rehearsall there is not one word spoken of the Communion vnder One kinde. The Bread so changed into a stone, and kept for a memorie among the Iewels there, was a witnesse of the womans dissimulation, and not of M. Hardings halfe Communion. Yet (saith he) by this story it is cleere, the Sacrament was then ministred vnder one kinde only. For by receiuing that one forme, the woman would haue perswaded her husband, that she had Communicated with him. Else if both kindes had then beene ministred, shee would haue practised some other shift for the auoiding of the Cuppe, which had not beene so easie. Now truly here is but a cold conclusion, hanging wholly (as it may appeare) only vpon the sleight of a womans wit. For as this woman had diuised to deceiue her husband in the Bread, why might she not as well deuise to deceiue him in the Cup? why might she not take the Cup, and faine that she dranke, and yet drinke nothing? Doubtlesse such dissimulation is sooner wrought in the Cuppe than in the Bread: and she that durst so to dissemble in the one part of Gods Sacraments, would little feare to dissemble in the other.

Here we see the certaintie of M. Hardings ghesses. He reapeth the thing that was neuer sowen, and gathereth of his authours, the thing that was neuer spoken.

But touching the truth of this whole matter, if a man list onely to goe by ghesse, as M. Harding doth, why may hee not thus imagine with himselfe: If this woman would thus dissemble in a case so dangerous, what needed her to take the Bread at her Maids hand, and specially at that time, in that place, and in the sight of the whole people? Or how could shee so openly receiue it without suspition? Or why might she not haue brought it in a Napkin secretly about her selfe? The burden was not great: her faining and hypocrisie had beene the easier. And thus much to answer one ghesse by another.

But that there was no such dismembring of the holy Communion at that time, we may well vnderstand both by S. Basil, Nazianzene, Gregorie Nyssene, and others of that age, and also by these plaine words of Chrysostome: Est vbi nihil differat Sacerdos a subdito: vt quando fruendum est horrendis Mysterijs: In some cases there is no difference between the Priest and the People: as when they must enioy the reuerend Mysteries. Besides that, the Greeke Church neuer had this halfe Communion, neither before that time nor neuer sithence. And therefore Pope Leo the tenth, calleth the vse of the whole Sacrament according to Christs Institution, the Bohemians and the Grecians heresie.

Chrysost. in 2. Cor. homil. 18.

M. Harding. The 24. Diuision.

The place of S. Basils Epistles ad Cesarium, cannot be auoided by no shift nor Sophistrie of the Gospellers. These be his words: All they which liue the solitarie life in wildernesse, where is no Priest, keeping the Communion at home, communicate themselues. And in Alexandria and in Egypt each of the people for the most part hath the Communion in his house.

Here I might aske M. Iewel how they could keepe wine consecrated in smal measures, as should serue for euery mans housel apart, in those countries of extreme heat, specially in wildernesse, where they had neither Priest, nor Deacon, as in that place S. Basil writeth; for lacke of whom they kept it in store a long time, that they might not be destitute of it at need. Againe, heere I might aske him, whether it was the forme of Bread only, or of Wine also, which Christian men and specially women were wont deuoutly to receiue of the Priests in their cleane linnen or napkins, to bare home with them, taking great heed, that no fragments of it fell downe to the ground, as both Origen, and also S. Augustine doe witnesse. I thinke he will confesse, that linnen cloth is not a very fit thing to keepe liquor in.

Bread and Wine shifted suddenly into formes.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The Gospellers, whom M. Harding so often vpbraideth with that name, as if he himselfe had no part in Gods Gospell, haue little neede to auoid that thing, whereby they fit themselues nothing hindred. For the question is moued of the whole Congregation: answer is made of seuerall persons. Wee speake of the order of Churches: M. Harding answereth of forrests and wildernesse. Verily if he could finde any thing to purpose in the Church, he would not thus hunt the mountaines: neither would he flie for aid into Egypt, if he could finde any neere at home.

The

The ground of this Argument is the impoſſibilitie of képing Wine: which M. Harding hath hitherto vttered by the name of Forme. Now that it is come to ſowring, hee calleth it Wine. There is cunning in ſhifting of termes. But if there be no Wine there remaining, as theſe men would perſwade the world, what ſhall we call it then, that thus ſtandeth in danger of ſowring? Certainly Chriſts Blood will not ſowre, and formes of Wine, without ſubſtance, cannot ſowre: either of theſe both can as well abide the hot Country, as the cold. But Gelaſius ſaith, There remaineth in the Sacrament the Nature and Subſtance of Bread and Wine.

Of preſeruing Wines in hot Countries, I will not reaſon. Notwithſtanding, I remember Macrobius ſaith, that as the Country of Egypt is extreme hot, ſo the Wines of the ſame bee extreme cold, and therefore, as it may bee ſuppoſed, the more durable. And although the Country of Naples be very hot, yet the Wines thereof haue beene preſerued the ſpace of fortie or fiftie yeeres, as it is mentioned by Plutarch, Athenæus, and others. Howbeit, this is not much materiall. But as the Wine is in danger of ſowring, ſo is the Bread in danger of moulding, as appeareth by ſundry cautels of the Maſſe therefore prouided. Yet one queſtion would well be heere demanded. If the Wine in the Mountaines of Egypt could not be kept in ſmall quantities a few daies, how then could the Wine that Chriſt changed out of water, in Cana of Galile, be kept at Orleance in France, as a relike, for the ſpace of fiftéene hundred and thirtie yeeres, euer ſithence that time, vntill this day, and that ſtill without ſowring? But let vs yéld, that Wine in the Mountaines could not be kept: yet might it well be had, and kept in Churches, at the leaſt during the time of the Communion: and that to this purpoſe is ſufficient.

Macrobius.

Plutarchus in Lucullo. Athenæus li. 1.

Vinum Architriclini.

The képing of liquor in a linnen cloth, was M. Hardings conceit, more to ſolace himſelfe withall, than much making to the matter. For otherwiſe, as the women receiued the Bread in a cloth, ſo might they receiue the Wine in a viall, or ſome other like thing. And that they ſo did, it may well be gathered by the Storie of Gorgonia, Nazianzens ſiſter: by Exuperius of whom S. Hierome writeth: and by the Fable of the Iew, in M. Hardings owne Amphilochius. And for that M. Harding maketh ſuch ſport with keeping liquor in a cloth, it was decréed in the Councel holden at Altiſiodorum, That the Prieſt ſhould put his oile in a Chriſmatorie, and in linnen, by theſe words: Vt Chriſma Chriſmario & linteo imponant. I doubt not, but M. Harding thinketh a linnen cloth will hold Wine as well as Oile.

Nazian. in Funere Gorgoniæ. Hieronym. ad Ruſticum Narbonen. Concil. Altiſiodoren. Can. 6.

M. Harding. The 25. Diuiſion.

Though I might bring a great number of other places, for the vſe of one kinde, which after the moſt common rule of the Church, was the forme of Bread; yet heere I will ſtay my ſelfe, putting the Reader in minde, that the Communion hath beene miniſtred to ſome perſons vnder the forme of Wine only, and hath beene taken for the whole Sacrament, ſpecially to ſuch, as for drineſſe of their throat, at their death, could not ſwallow it downe vnder the forme of Bread. Whereas it appeareth by S. Cyprian, and alſo by S. Auguſtine, that the Sacrament was giuen to infants in their time; wee finde in S. Cyprian, that when a Deacon offered the Cup of our Lords Blood to a little maid childe, which through default of the Nurſe, had taſted of the Sacrifices that had beene offred to Diuels; the childe turned away her face, by the inſtinct of the diuine Maieſtie (ſaith he) cloſed faſt her lips; and refuſed the Cup. But yet when the Deacon had forced her to receiue a little of the Cup, the yeax and vomit followed, ſo as that ſanctified drinke in the Blood of our Lord, guſhed foorth of the polluted bowels. If the Sacrament had beene giuen to this Infant vnder the forme of Bread before, ſhe would haue refuſed that no leſſe than ſhe did the Cup, that the Deacon then would not haue giuen her the Cup. And that this may ſeeme the leſſe to be wondred at, Iohannes Teutonicus, that wrote Scholies vpon Gratian, witneſſeth, that euen in his time, the cuſtome was in ſome places to giue the Sacrament to Infants, not by deliuering to them the Body of Chriſt, but by powring the Blood into their mouthes: which cuſtome hath beene, vpon good conſideration, abrogated in the Church of Rome, and kept in the Greeke Church, as Lyra writeth vpon S. Iohn.

Sermon 5. de Lapſis.

De Conſecrat. diſt. 4. can. 4. Si quis apud il. in Hæreticos.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Whatſoeuer plentie of ſuch examples M. Harding hath, if he had any better, he might well haue ſpared theſe. Heere hee ſaith, Some old men, for their age and drithe, were ſuffered to Communicate of the Cuppe only, as being not able to ſwallow the Bread. A little before, hee ſaid, That S. Ambroſe lying in his death bed, receiued the Bread only: And that S. Baſil in the like caſe, receiued the Sacrament, being then ſtale and drie, of ſeuen yeeres keeping, and that alone, without Wine. Seneca ſaith: Proprium eſt luxuriæ, gaudere peruerſis: It is the property of wantonneſſe, to delight in things out of order.

M. Harding is againſt himſelfe, and ſpeaketh contrary.

Infants (ſaith M. Harding) receiued in one kinde, and thereto hee allegeth the Authoritie of S. Cyprian: which although it made with him to this purpoſe, touching Childréen, yet to other great purpoſes it maketh directly againſt him. For firſt by that place of S. Cyprian, the holy Communion was thought ſo neceſſarie to all the faithfull, that childréen and infants were not excluded: which plainly ouerthroweth the Priuate Maſſe.

Cypr. Serm. 5. de lapſis.

Beſides

M. Hard. alleg-eth S. Cyprian against himselfe.

Besides that, the whole people receiued in both kindes, as it is manifest by S. Cyprians woords: which thing is contrary to M. Hardings halfe Communion.

All this he graunteth touching the people, wherein onely I toined issue: and maketh his whole plea vpon an Infant: and yet of Infants, as he knoweth, I spake nothing. If all that he saith, were proued true, yet hath he gotten but an Infant of his side. But what if this Infant receiued both kindes? Verily there is nothing in Cyprian to the contrarie. And it appeareth by S. Hierome, S. Augustine, and other old Writers, that they that were Baptized, as well children as others, immediately receiued the holy Mysteries in Both kindes. S. Hierome, speaking of one Hilarius, saith thus: Non potest Baptisma tradere sine Eucharistia: He cannot minister Baptisme without the Sacrament of thanksgiuing. S. Cyprians woords touching this matter be these: Vbi solemnibus adimpletis Calicem Diaconus offerre præsentibus cœpit, & accipientibus cæteris, locus eius aduenit, faciem suam paruula, instinctu diuinæ Maiestatis, auertere, &c. After the solemnitie (of the Consecration) was done, and the Deacon began to minister the Cup vnto them that were present, and among others that receiued, her turne was come, the childe, by the power of Gods diuine Maiestie, turned away her face, &c. Hereby we may well gather, that like as the Priest, the Deacons, and the people receiued, euen so the childe receiued too, without any maner innouation or difference.

Aug. de Eccl. Dogmat. lib. 1. cap. 52. Hieron. contra Luciferian.

He will say, There is mention made but onely of the Cuppe. Therefore the childe receiued not the other kinde. This gheese is ouer slender: yet is it an ordinarie Argument with M. Harding. But it seemeth he doth not well consider the inconuenience that thereof may follow. For so may he as well conclude, that the Priest himselfe, and the Deacons, and the whole people receiued only of the Cuppe. For there is no mention at all made of the other portion.

If the Bread had beene offered to the childe, shee would as well haue refused that, as shee did the Cuppe. This is another gheese, without any necessarie sequell. This effect followed when God would haue it: of whose doings we can giue no reason.

Lyra and Teutonicus liued at the least thirteene hundred yeares after Christ, wherefore their Authoritie in this case must needs seeme the lesse. Yet, for ought that I can see, Lyra is vntruly alleged, as writing to another purpose. Teutonicus in his Glosse in the same place, manifestly corrupteth S. Augustines Text. For whereas S. Augustine speaketh namely of Children, and calleth them, Paruulos, Little ones, hee saith in his Glosse, Hoc intellige de adultis: Vnderstand this of men of ripe yeeres. When to confirme his errour, he allegeth a custome, but he knoweth not where: and proueth it also, but he knoweth not by whom. For thus he auoucheth it: Secundùm quosdam: that is, As some men say: Which was neuer good Witnesse in any Court. Wherefore M. Harding might haue spared these Doctours, without any preiudice of his cause.

M. Harding. The 26. Diuision.

The fourth Councell of Carthago decreed, if a man in sickenesse (who was enioined publike penance) doe demand his houzell, and ere hee die, fall in a phrensie, or become speechlesse, that the Sacrament bee powred into his mouth. To take this for the forme of Wine, we are mooued by the decree of the eleuenth Councell Toletane. Where it is said, that the weake nature of man is wont at the point of death to bee so farre oppressed with drouth, that it may be refreshed by no meanes, vnlesse it be susteined with comfort of drinke. Then it followeth: Which thing we see to be so, at the departing of many, who being very desirous to receiue their voiage prouision of the holy Communion, when the Sacrament was giuen them, haue cast it vp againe: not that they did this through infidelitie, but for that they were not able to swallow downe the Sacrament deliuered to them, but only a draught of our Lords Cup. Howsoeuer this bee taken, it is plaine by this Councell, as by many other ancient Councels and Doctors, that the maner of the Catholike Church hath beene, to minister the Sacrament to the sicke vnder one kinde. Can. 6. Can. 11.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

These Authorities answer themselues. Being euery way granted, yet is M. Harding neuer the nearer. The whole matter we stand vpon, is the open order and vsage in the Church. For proofe hereof, here are brought in Lunatickes and Mad Men. It were a strange sight, to see a Church full of such people. The substance of his Argument resteth onely vpon this gheese, That the Bread cannot bee powred into the sicke mans mouth: and yet hee may learne by the third Councell of Carthage, and by the Abridgement of the Councell of Hippo, That the Sacrament was then put into dead mens mouthes. Neither can I see what necessitie is in this reason: The man is frenticke, or lieth speechlesse, which was the suggestion of that Councell: Ergo, He cannot receiue the Sacrament all Bread. If there bee danger in the receiuing, there is none more than in the Cup.

Concil. Carth. 3. Ca. 6.

The Canon of the Councell of Toledo here alleged, is not an exposition of this Councell of Carthage, as M. Harding thinketh: but a declaration of a Canon made in the first Councell Councell of Toledo, as it is plaine by those words: In collatione nostri cœtus relectus est Canon Toletani Concilij primi, in quo præceptum est, vt si quis acceptam à Sacerdote Eucharistiam non sumpserit, velut Sacrilegus propellatur: In the conference of our Councell, there was read a Canon of the Councell of Toledo, wherein it was ordered, that if any man receiued not the Sacrament deliuered to him by the Priest, the same should be Excommunicate, as a wicked doer. This Decree semed very strait, specially for that a godly man, by meane of sickness, or other weakenesse of nature, might happen to refuse, or not to receiue downe the Sacrament, but to cast it vp against his will. Therefore the Councell, by way of declaration, determineth thus: That if any man happen so to doe by force of sicknesse, he shall not stand in danger of the Law. Conc. Toletan. 11. Ca. 11.

Hereupon M. Harding concludeth thus: It is plaine by this Councell, and by many other Councels and Doctours, &c. Other Councell or Doctour here is none named. This Councell neither maketh any Law touching this matter, nor declareth any order, or maner of publike Ministration: but onely excuseth the inuincible necessitie and weakenesse of nature.

But touching the maner and order of the Church, the same Councell in the selfe same place saith, that the whole Sacrament was offered euen to the sicke: that the sicke did sometime of infirmitie cast it vp againe: which is a good Argument, that they did receiue it: and that Infants did sometime the like: whereof we may gather, that Infants then receiued the Sacrament, and that in such sort as others did. Si quis acceptam Eucharistiam non sumpserit. Collatam à Sacerdote Eucharistiã reiciunt.

All these things considered accordingly, M. Harding might well conclude thus against himselfe: It was granted of speciall fauour vnto Lunatickes and mad men, and other sicke persons, that in consideration of their weakenesse, they might Communicate vnder one kinde without danger of the Law: Therefore the rest, that were not so excepted, Communicated vnder both kindes, and that by the very force of the Law.

M. Harding. The 27. Diuision.

Now whereas some say, that the Sacrament to be giuen vnder the forme of Bread, was first dipt in the Blood of our Lord, and would haue so vsed now also for the sicke, and that it is so to be taken for the whole and entire Sacrament, as though the Sacrament, vnder the forme of Bread, were not of it selfe sufficient: let them vnderstand, that this was an old errour, condemned aboue twelue hundred yeeres past by Iulius the first, that great defender of Athanasius; who heereof in an Epistle to the Bishops thorow Egypt, wrote thus: Illud verò quod pro complemento Communionis intinctam tradunt Eucharistiam populis, nec hoc prolatum ex Euangelio testimonium receperunt, vbi Apostolis Corpus suum Dominus commendauit & Sanguinem. Seorsum enim Panis, & seorsum Calicis commendatio memoratur: Whereas some deliuer to the people the Sacrament dipt, for the iull and whole Communion, they haue not receiued this testimonie pronounced out of the Gospell, where our Lord gaue his Body and his Blood. For the giuing of the Bread is recorded apart by it selfe, and the giuing of the Cup, apart likewise by it selfe. And whereas some afterward, in the time of Vitellianus, would haue brought in againe this abrogated custome, it was in like maner condemned and abolished, In tertio Concilio Braccarensi, Can. 1. De Con. dist. 2. Ca. Cum omne enim.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

There haue beene many great abuses about the holy Mysteries, not only of late yeres in the Church of Rome, whereof we iustly complaine: but also in the Primitiue Church, euen from the Apostles time. For some there were, that ministred in water onely: some that ministred milke in stead of Wine: some bruized grapes into the Cup, and so ministred: some ministred Bread and Cheese together: some dipt the Sacrament of Christs Body in the Sacrament of his Blood. But neither this follie, whereof Iulius speaketh, nor any other like old follie, was euer renued by any of vs. Indeed M. Harding, and all the rest of that side, haue vsed to breake the Bread, and to dip the third part of it into the Wine, and for the same haue deuised a solemne Mysterie. For some of them say, It signifieth Christs rising from the dead: Some, The faithfull that be yet aliue: Some others, The blessed, that be in heauen. And yet M. Harding knoweth that Iulius calleth it, A Schismaticall ambition, and a practise contrarie to the Apostles Doctrine. De Con. dist. 2. Cum omne. Aug. ad Quodvult-deum.

We (both heerein, and in all other cases like) follow only Christs Institution: who, as the Euangelists haue written, and as Iulius also recordeth, first gaue the Bread apart, and afterward the Wine likewise apart: and said not only, Eat this, but also by expresse words, Drinke this. Yet Iuo saith, that for danger of shedding, sometimes the Bread is dipt into the Cup, and so deliuered to the people. Iuo de diuinis officijs. Cassander.

This Iulius heere alleged, standeth fully of our side: and therefore I marueil that M. Harding would seeke comfort at his hand. For where he saith, Porrigunt Eucharistiam populis; They deliuer the Sacrament vnto the people; hee importeth a Communion: where hee reproueth the errour of dipping, and rectifieth the same by Christs Institution, And commandeth Both Kindes to be giuen apart; hee signifieth the whole Communion expressly Iulius cõmandeth Both Kindes, contrarie to M. Hardings doctrine.

pꝛeſly in both kindes: and ſo quite ouerthꝛoweth whatſoeuer M. Harding hath hitherto builded.

M. Harding. The 28. Diuiſion.

The queſtion is of the open miniſtration in the Church.

Now I referre me to the iudgement of the Reader, of what opinion ſoeuer hee bee, whether for proofe of the Communion vnder one kinde, wee haue any word, ſentence, or clauſe at all, or no: and whether theſe words of M. Iewell in his Sermon be true or no, where he ſaith thus: It was vſed thoꝛowout the whole Catholike Church, ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſts Aſcenſion, vnder both Kindes, without exception. That it was ſo vſed, yea ſix hundred yeeres, and long after, wee denie not: but that it was ſo alwaies, and in euery place vſed, and without exception, that wee denie: and vpon what grounds we doe it, let M. Iewell himſelfe be Iudge. If ſome of our allegations may be with violence wreſted from our purpoſe, verily a great number of them cannot, the Authoritie of the ancient Fathers, who wrote them, remaining inuiolated. Whereof it followeth, that after the iudgement of theſe Fathers, whereas Chriſt inſtituted this bleſſed Sacrament, and commanded it to be celebrated, and receiued in remembrance of his death, (62) hee gaue no neceſſarie Commandement, either for the one, or for both kindes, (beſide and without the celebration of the Sacrifice) but left that to the determination of the Church. Now that the Church, for the auoiding of vnreuerence, perils, offences, and other weightie and important cauſes, hath decreed it * in two Generall Councels, to bee receiued of the Lay people in one kinde only, we thinke it good, with all humbleneſſe to ſubmit our ſelues to the Church heerein: which Church, Chriſt commandeth to be heard and obeied, ſaying, He that heareth not the Church, let him be to thee as a Heathen, and as a Publican. In doing whereof, we weigh aduiſedly with our ſelues, the horrible danger that remaineth for them, who be authors of Schiſme, and breakers of vnitie. Matth. 18.

The 62. vntruth. For Chriſts Inſtitution perteineth as well to the people, as to the Prieſt.

* Theſe Councels were holden fourteene hundred and fourteene yeeres after Chriſt.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

God Chriſtian Reader, now that M. Harding hath ſaid ſo much as hée is able, it behoueth thee, as thou wilt iudge indifferently betweene vs both, ſo to conſider and marke well the very ſtate and iſſue of the matter, wherein the whole queſtion lieth. The negatiue of our ſide, which ſo much troubleth him, is this: That for the ſpace of ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, it cannot be found in any old Doctor, or Councell, that euer the holy Communion was miniſtred to the people, in the Church, or any open aſſembly, in one Kinde onely, as it is now miniſtred in the Church of Rome. The iſſue therefoꝛe of the whole matter betweene vs, ſtandeth vpon the oꝛder and vſage of the Church.

M. Harding, foꝛ pꝛoofe heereof, hath bꝛought certaine particular examples of Dꝛouth, Infirmities, Sickneſſe, Age, Ineuitable Neceſſities, and Impoſſibilities, and Weakneſſe of Nature. Verily, good Reader, I looke foꝛ other pꝛoofes at M. Hardings hands. Foꝛ all theſe, and other like things, I knew befoꝛe. Hee hath alleged Chriſts bꝛeaking of Bꝛead at Emmaus: the allegation whereof to this purpoſe, one of his owne Doctours ſaith, is meere follie. Hee hath alleged two Women, thꝛee ſicke folke in their death-beds, Perſons Excommunicate, Infants, Phꝛentickes, and Mad Men. Wil. Wideford.

Hée allegeth Napkins, Cheſts, Chambers, Mountaines, and Wilderneſſe: and foꝛ further pꝛoofe, hath bꝛought Coniectures, Ghoſtes, Lies, and Fables. He allegeth abuſes, that long ſithence haue beene condemned. Hee allegeth Scriptures, Doctours, and Councels, plainly and directly againſt himſelfe.

Hee is learned, and hath read much: he is eloquent, and can vtter much: yea he is able to make nothing to appeare ſomewhat, and a little to ſeeme much.

Hee hath had good conference with as many as hee thought meet, either within this Realme, oꝛ without. Hee hath ſeene whatſoeuer hath beene written by Cochæus, Eckius, Pighius, Hoſmeiſter, Michael Væhe, Hoſius, Staphylus, and ſuch other of that ſoꝛt. Hee hath had fiue whole yéeres and moꝛe to oꝛder and digeſt his Booke. It toucheth him very néere, that any man ſhould be ſo bold to ſay, They haue defrauded the people of halfe the Sacrament, and yet can allege nothing for it. He ſheweth himſelfe much offended, and therefoꝛe ſpareth not his familiar termes, Heretikes, Schiſmatikes, Aduerſaries of the Church, Gods Enemies, and ſuch like. Yet hauing ſo much learning, ſo much eloquence, ſo much conference, ſo much ſtudie, ſo much leaſure, being ſo affected, and ſo offended, yet hath he not hitherto bꝛought one woꝛd, either of ancient Councell, oꝛ of old Doctour, to pꝛoue that thing that is denied: that is, That the Sacrament was euer miniſtred vnto the People in One Kinde, Openly in any Congregation, or in the open order and vſage of any Church. Yet were there Churches then erected: yet were there Pꝛieſts and people then: yet was the holy Miniſtration then openly vſed in foꝛme and oꝛder: and learned men to recoꝛd the ſame. All this notwithſtanding, M. Harding ding hath hitherto found nothing in the open Miniſtration, in the Congregation and Aſſemblie of the people, whereby to proue his halfe Communion. Wherefore there is no cauſe yet ſhewed to the contrary, but M. Iewell may ſay now as he truly before ſaid in his Sermon, The whole Communion was vſed thorowout the whole Catholike Church vnder Both Kindes, ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſts Aſcenſion, in all Congregations and Churches, without exception. Gelaſius.

But Chriſt hath left theſe matters to the diſcretion and determination of the Church. By what Record may that appeare? M. Hardings word is no Charter. Or if it bee true, where did the Church euer ſo determine of it, within the compaſſe of ſix hundred yeres? S. Auguſtine in this caſe is very reaſonable. His words be theſe: Vbi authoritas deficit, ibi conſuetudo Maiorum pro Lege tenenda eſt: Where authoritie faileth, there the cuſtome of our Elders muſt hold for a Law. But hauing Gods Word, and Chriſts Inſtitution, we want no Authoritie. Ad Caſulanũ.

The authoritie of the Church is great. I grant: but the cauſes that moued the Church of Rome to breake Chriſts Inſtitution, As the keeping of the Wine, Beards, and Palles, and ſuch like, are not great: Notwithſtanding M. Harding enlarge them much, and call them Important and weighty cauſes. The two Councels of Baſil and Conſtance, where this matter was firſt concluded, as they were at the leaſt fourteene hundred yeres after Chriſt, and therefore not to be alleged in this caſe againſt my aſſertion; ſo the Authoritie of them both hangeth yet in queſtion. For the Thomiſts ſay, the Councell of Baſil came vnlawfully together, and that therefore all their determinations were in vaine. And Pigghius ſaith, the other Councell of Conſtance concluded againſt Nature, againſt the Scriptures, againſt Antiquitie, and againſt the Faith of the Church. Theſe be the two Councels that M. Harding would haue vs yeld vnto. Ludouic. Viues in 20. li. de Ciuit. Dei, ca. 26.

Wee are bound to heare the Church, ſaith M. Harding: But much more are wee bound to heare God. This ſaying of S. Cyprian is worthy deeply to be noted: Non ſungitur Eccleſiæ, qui ab Euangelio ſeparatur: He hath no fellowſhip with the Church, that is diuided from the Goſpell. And likewiſe writing againſt certaine that abuſed the Cup of Chriſt, miniſtring therein Water in ſtead of Wine, he giueth this Leſſon to all Biſhops, and others, touching the Reformation of the Church: Religioni noſtræ congruit, & timori, & ipſi loco, & officio Sacerdotij noſtri, cuſtodire Traditionis Dominicæ veritatem: &, quod prius apud quoſdam videtur erratum, Domino monente, corrigere: vt cùm in Claritate ſua, & Maieſtate Cœleſti venire cœperit, inueniat nos tenere, quod monuit: obſeruare, quod docuit: facere, quod fecit: It behoueth the Religion that wee profeſſe, and our reuerence towards God, and the very place and office of our Prieſthood, to keepe the Truth of the Lords Tradition, and by the Lords aduertiſement, to correct that thing, that by certaine hath beene amiſſe: that when he ſhall come in his Glory and Maieſtie, he may finde vs to hold, that hee warned vs: to keepe, that he taught vs: to doe, that he did. Cypr. ad Cæcil. Lib. 2. Epiſt. 3.

M. Harding. The 29. Diuiſion.

Now for anſwer to M. Iewels place alleged out of Gelaſius, which is the chiefe that he and all other (the aduerſaries of the Church) haue to bring for their purpoſe in this point, thus much may be ſaid. First, that he allegeth Gelaſius vntruly, making him to ſound in Engliſh otherwiſe than he doth in Latine. M. Iewels words be theſe: Gelaſius, an old Father of the Church, and a Biſhop of Rome, ſaith, that to miniſter the Communion vnder one kinde, is open Sacrilege. But where ſaith Gelaſius ſo? This is no ſincere handling of the matter. And becauſe he knew the words of that Father imported not ſo much, guilefully he reciteth them in Latine, and doth not Engliſh them: which he would not haue omitted, if they had ſo plainly made for his purpoſe. The words of Gelaſius be theſe: Diuiſio vnius eiuſdemque Myſterij, ſine grandi Sacrilegio non poteſt peruenire: The diuiſion of one and the ſame Myſterie, cannot come without great Sacrilege. Of theſe words he cannot conclude Gelaſius to ſay, that to miniſter the Communion vnder one kinde, is open Sacrilege. Gelaſius rebuketh and abhorreth the diuiſion of that high Myſterie, which vnder one forme, and vnder both, is vnum idemque, one and the ſame: not one vnder the forme of Bread, and another vnder the forme of Wine: not one in reſpect of the Body, and another in reſpect of the Blood; but vnum idemque, one and the ſelfe ſame. The words afore recited, be taken out of a fragment of a Canon of Gelaſius, which is thus, as we finde in Gratian: Comperimus autem, quod quidam, ſumpta tantùm Corporis ſacri portione, à Calice ſanctificati cruoris abſtineant. Qui procul dubio (quoniam neſcio qua ſuperſtitione docentur adſtringi) aut integra Sacramenta percipiant, aut ab integris arceantur: quia diuiſio vnius eiuſdemque Myſterij, ſine grandi Sacrilegio non poteſt peruenire: Which may thus be Engliſhed: But we haue found, that ſome, hauing receiued only the portion, wherein is the holy Bodie, abſteine from the Cup of the ſacred Blood: who without doubt (forasmuch as I know not with what ſuperſtition they be taught to be tied) either let them receiue the whole Sacraments, or let them bee kept from the whole: becauſe the diuiſion of one and the ſame Myſterie, cannot come without great Sacrilege. De Con. diſt. 2. Cap. Cõperimus. Gelaſius vntruly tranſlated by M. Harding.

Heere might bee ſaid to M. Iewell, Shew vs the whole Epiſtle of Gelaſius, from whence this fragment is taken, taken, that we may weigh the circumstance, and the causes why he wrote it, conferring that goeth before, and that followeth: and wee will frame you a reasonable answer. But it is not extant, and therefore your argument, in that respect, is of lesse force.

Gelasius.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Neither are wee the aduersaries of the Church, nor Gelasius the chiefest that was bring for our purpose. We follow Christ, as he hath commanded vs, whom it became Gelasius also to follow. But it is a world to see into how many faces and fashions M. Harding is faine to turne himselfe, to auoid this authoritie of Gelasius. He leaueth the whole text of his owne companie, and is glad to run alone. Yea erpounded Gelasius by Leo, as though they wrote both of one thing. And yet others of his owne side say, that Leo wrote of Heretikes, and Gelasius of Catholikes: Leo of the People, Gelasius of the Priests. He complaineth, that the rest of Gelasius is not to be found, as though it were suppressed by some of vs: and yet it is thought the Pope hath it whole in his Librarie. He deuiseth new causes of vnitie of the Mysterie: such as Gelasius neuer knew. He concludeth at the last, that this breach of Christs Institution, and Ministration vnder one kinde, that is now vniuersally vsed in the Church of Rome, was first brought in and practised by the Manichees, which were in old time wicked and horrible Heretikes.

In Pontificali, vt citatur in 1. Tom. Concil. vita Gelasij.

Yea saith, I haue guilefully alleged Gelasius, and to the intent it might the sooner appeare, hee hath noted it specially in the Margin. But if M. Harding himselfe had meant no guile, he would haue shewed plainly, wherein I haue beene guilefull, or what I might haue gotten by this guile, or what aduantage I might haue lost by plainer dealing. For guile without cause is meere follie, and no guile. But I recited the words in Latine, and had forgotten to English them. Now surely that is but a simple guile, and might well haue beene spared out of the Margin.

But my words be these: Gelasius saith, That to minister the Sacrament in one kinde, is open Sacrilege. And what guile can he finde herein? This word Sacrilege, and the refusing of the Cup, are both specially named by Gelasius. There remaine onely these words, To minister the Sacrament: and there, saith M. Harding, lieth the guile. Howbeit, therein, as it shall well appeare, I say nothing but that Gelasius saith, and M. Harding himselfe would haue him say. For thus saith Gelasius, The diuision of the Mysteries, whereby he meaneth the Sacrament, is Sacrilege:

The Priest ministring in One Kinde, committeth Sacrilege.

But the Priest that ministreth in One kinde, diuideth the Mysterie:
Ergo, The Priest that ministreth in One Kinde, committeth Sacrilege.

This argument is perfect, and formall, and founded vpon Gelasius words. I trow, this is no guilefull dealing.

The vnitie of the Mysterie, that M. Harding hath heere fantasied, that either part is in other, and therefore harpeth so often, as it were by reports, vpon these words, Vnum & idem, is but his owne voluntarie. He is not able to allege either Gelasius, or any other old Father, that euer erpounded Vnum and Idem in that sort. He calleth it one Mysteris, as Hugo Cardinalis saith, (although otherwise a very grosse Writer) Propter vnitatem Institutionis, For the vnitie of the Institution, and for that the Bread and Wine, being sundry portions, haue both relation vnto one Christ. And for that cause, by S. Hieromes iudgement, S. Paul saith, Vna Fides, vnum Baptisma: One Faith, one Baptisme. And for that also, that being, as I said, two sundry portions, yet they make not two sundry Sacraments, but one only Sacrament. And therefore Durandus, a late Writer, seemeth to say well: In multis locis Communicatur cum Pane & Vino, id est, cum toto Sacramento: In many places they Communicate with Bread and Wine, that is, saith he, with the whole Sacrament. Of which words the Reader, be he neuer so simple, may easily gather, that the Communion in one kinde is but the halfe Sacrament: and so the diuision of one Mysterie: and so further, the selfe same thing that Gelasius calleth Sacrilege.

Vnum & idem. Hugo Cardinal. 1. Cor. 11.

Hieronym. ad Ephes. li. 2. c. 4.

Durand. lib. 4. ca. 24.

M. Harding. The 30. Diuision.

But for auoiding that our aduersaries would heereof conclude, it is to be vnderstanded, that this Canon speaketh against the Heretikes named Manuhai, who in the time of Leo the first, about forty yeeres before Gelasius, went about to spread their Heresie in Rome, and in the parts of Italie. Their heretical opinion was, that Christ tooke not our flesh and blood, but that hee had a fantasticall body, and died not, nor rose againe truly and indeed, but by way of fantasie. And therefore at the Communion, they abstained from the Cuppe: and the better to cloke their Heresie, came to receiue the Sacrament in forme of Bread, with other Catholike people. Against whom Leo saith thus: Abdicant enim se Sacramento Salutis nostræ, &c. They driue themselues away from the Sacrament of our Saluation. And as they denie that Christ our Lord was borne in truth of our flesh, so they beleeue not that hee died, and rose againe truly. And for this cause they condemne the day of our Saluation and gladnesse (that is, the Sunday) to bee their sad fasting day. And whereas, to cloke their infidelitie, they dare to bee at our Mysteries, they temper themselues so in the Communion of the Sacraments, as in the meane time they may the more safelie keepe them priuie.

Serm. 4. de quadragesima.

With

With vnworthy mouth they receiue Christs Body; but to drinke the Blood of our Redemption, vtterly they will none of it. Which thing we would aduertise your holinesse of, that both such men may be manifested by these tokens vnto you, and also that they whose diuelish simulation and faining is found, being brought to light, and bewrayed of the fellowship of Saints, may be thrust out of the Church by Priestly authoritie. Thus farre be Leo his words.

Gelasius that succeeded forty yeeres after Leo, imploied no lesse diligence than hee did, vtterly to vanquish and abolish that horrible heresie. Of whom Platina writeth, that he banished so many Manichees as were found at Rome, and there openly burned their Bookes. And because this heresie should none elsewhere take root, and spring, he wrote an Epistle to Maioricus, and Ioannes, two Bishops, amongst other things warning them of the same. Out of which Epistle, this fragment only is taken; wherby he doth both briefly shew what the Manichees did for cloking of their infidelity, as Leo saith; and also, in asmuch as their opinion was, that Christs Body had not very Blood, as being phantastical only, and therefore superstitiously abstained from the Cup of that holy blood; giueth charge and commandement, that either forsaking their heresie they receiue the whole Sacraments, to wit, vnder both kindes, or that they bee kept from them wholly. Heere the words of Leo afore mentioned, and this Canon of Gelasius conferred together, specially the story of that time knowen, it may soone appeare to any man of iudgement, against whom this fragment of Gelasius was written. Verily not against the Church for ministring the Communion vnder one kinde, but against the detestable Manichees, who going about to diuide the mysterie of the Body and Blood of Christ, denying him to haue taken very flesh and blood, so much as in them lay, losed Christ, whereof S. Iohn speaketh; and would haue made frustrate the whole worke of our Redempuon.

1 Iohn. 4.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

To auoid the inconuenience growing of this authority, M. Harding is driuen to auoid the company of Pighius, Hosius, Tapper, D. Cole, and all others his fellowes of that side, and to say that Gelasius wrote this Decree against the Manichees: notwithstanding all they say, he wrote it against certaine superstitious Priests. D. Cole referreth himselfe vnto the construction of the Glosse there written. The words thereof be these: There were certaine Priests that Consecrated the Body and Blood of Christ in due order: and receiued the Body, but abstained from the Blood. Against them Gelasius writeth. This gheese of that Glosser, for many good causes seemeth vnlikely: for first it cannot be shewed by any story, neither where, nor when any such Priests were that so abstained: and againe, Gelasius seemeth to write of them that should be taught, not of them that should teach: of them that should be remoued from the Sacraments, not of the Priests that should remoue them: of the sacrilege and wickednesse of the fact, not of the difference of any persons.

De Con. dist. 2. Comperim. In Glossa.

But the Glosse saith notwithstanding, The Priest consecrated both the Body and the Blood, and receiued the Body, and abstained from the Blood. Heere would I faine learne of D. Cole, what then became of the Cup. The Priest drank it not: that is certaine: for the Glosse saith so. Againe, the people drank it not; for so saith the Glosse also, and be it true or false, it must be defended.

Then must it néeds follow, that Christs Blood was consecrate to be cast away. D. Cole might haue foreséene, that this Glosse would soone be taken against himselfe. Now let vs sée of this very selfe Glosse, what may be concluded of our side. The Sacrament of Christs Blood was not thrown away; the Priest receiued it not: Ergo, it followeth of very fine force, it was receiued by the people. Thus D. Cole séeking to proue that the people receiued not in both kindes, himselfe vnawares necessarily proueth, that the people receiued in both kindes. Wherefore M. Hardings coniectur carrieth more substance of truth. For the very story and conferrence of time, will soone giue the aduised Reader to vnderstand, that Gelasius wrote this Decree against the Manichees.

Thus much therefore hath M. Harding gotten hereby, that now it appeareth, that the first authours of his halfe Communion were a sort of Heretikes. They held that Christ neuer receiued Flesh of the Blessed Virgin, neither was borne, nor suffered, nor died, nor rose againe. Which errours are manifestly conuinced by the Sacraments. For they are Sacraments of Christs Body and Blood: therefore whoso receiueth the same, confesseth therby, that Christ of the Virgin receiued both Body & Blood. So saith S. Chrysostome: Si mortuus Christus non est, cuius Symbolum & signum hoc Sacramentum est? If Christ died not indeed, tell me then, whose token or whose signe is this Sacrament? Tertullian also by a like argument taken of the Sacrament reproueth Marcion, that held that Christ had no Body, but only a shew, and a phantasie of a Body: Christus acceptum Panem, & distributum Discipulis, Corpus suum illum fecit, dicendo, Hoc est Corpus meum, hoc est, figura Corporis mei. Figura autem non esset, nisi veritatis esset Corpus. Cæterùm vacua res, quod est phantasma, figuram capere non potest: Christ hauing receiued the Bread, and giuing the same to his Disciples, made it his Body, saying: This is my Body, that is to say, a figure of my Body. But it could not be a figure, vnlesse there were a Body of a truth. For a void thing, as is a phantasie, can receeiue no figure at all. Thus the Sacraments do plainly testifie, that Christ receiued not a phantasie or shew of a Body, but a very Body indeed. Therefore the Manichees abstained from the holie Cup, as it appeareth by Leo: notwithstanding S. Augu-

Heretikes the first authors of the halfe Communion.

Chrysostom. in Matt. hom. 83. contra Marcion. li. 4.

Gelasius. Contra Faustum Manich. lib.20.cap.13.

ſtine in one place writing, namely againſt the Manichées, ſeemeth to ſignifie the contrary. These be his words: Sacramentum Patris, & Calicis ita laudatis, vt in eo nobis pares eſſe voluerit: Yee ſo commend the Sacrament of the Bread, and of the Cup, that therein you would make your ſelues equall with vs. Neither were they indeed able to shew any ſimple cauſe, why they ſhould more ſhun the one portion, than the other. For the Sacrament of the Bread no leſſe confounded their errour, than the Sacrament of the Cup. And as they thought that Chriſts Body was no Body, but only a phantaſie, ſo they likewiſe thought that Chriſts Blood was no naturall Blood, but only a phantaſie. But if they would not beleeue Leo, or Auguſtine, that Chriſt had one Body, how much leſſe would they beleeue M. Harding, that Chriſt hath two Bodies, the one in the Bread, the other in the Cup, and each wholly in the other?

M. Harding. The 31. Diuiſion.

And therefore M. Iewel doth vs great wrong in wreſting this Canon againſt vs, forasmuch as wee doe not diuide this diuine myſterie, but beleeue ſtedfaſtly with heart, and confeſſe openly with mouth, that vnder each kinde, the very fleſh and blood of Chriſt, and whole Chriſt himſelfe is preſent in the Sacrament, (63) euen as Gelaſius beleeued. Vpon this occaſion, in the parties of Italy, where the Manichees vttered their poiſon, the Communion vnder both kindes was reſtored, and commanded to be vſed againe, whereas before (64) of ſome the Sacrament was receiued vnder one kind, and of ſome vnder both kinds. Elſe if the Communion vnder both kindes had beene taken for a neceſſary inſtitution and commandement of Chriſt, and ſo generally and inuiolably obſerued euery where and alwaies without exception; what needed Gelaſius to make ſuch an ordinance of receiuing the whole Sacraments, the cauſe whereof by this Parentheſis (quoniam neſcio qua ſuperſtitione docentur adſtringi) plainly expreſſeth? Againe, if it had beene ſo inuiolably obſerued of all vntill that time, then the Manichees could not haue couered and cloked their infidelity, as Leo ſaith, by the receiuing the Communion with other Catholike people vnder one kinde. For whiles the Catholikes went from Church, contented with the only forme of Bread, it was vncertaine, whether hee that came to receiue were a Manichee or a Catholike. But after that for deſcrying of them, it was decreed, that the people ſhould not forbeare the Communion of the Cup any more: the good Catholike folke ſo receiued, and the Manichees by their refuſall of the Cup bewraied themſelues. Whereby it appeareth, that the Communion vnder one kinde, vſed before by the commandements of Leo and Gelaſius, was forbidden, to the intent thereby the Manichees hereſie might the better be eſpied, rooted out, and cleane aboliſhed.

The 63. vntruth. For Gelaſius neuer beleeued ſo.

The 64. vntruth. For no catholike congregation euer receiued the Sacrament in One kinde.

Thus becauſe we doe not diuide the Myſtery of the Lords Body and Blood, but acknowledge, confeſſe, and teach, that Chriſt tooke of the Virgin Mary very Fleſh, and very Blood indeed, and was a whole and pertect man, as alſo God, and deliuered the ſame whole Fleſh to death for our Redemption, and roſe againe in the ſame for our Iuſtification, and giueth the ſame to vs to be partakers of it in the bleſſed Sacrament to liſe euerlaſting; that decree of Gelaſius cannot ſeeme againſt vs iuſtly to bee alleged; much leſſe may hee ſeeme to ſay or meane, that to miniſter the Communion vnder one kinde, is open Sacrilege.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Here M. Harding complaineth, we do him wrong to allege this Canon againſt him, for that he beleeueth, euen as Gelaſius did, that whole Chriſt is in euch part of the Sacrament. It is very much to allege Gelaſius Faith without his words, or to found any new Faith, as this is, without ſome kinde of proofe. This is M. Hardings groſſe errour, and not Gelaſius, or any other of the Catholike Fathers faith. If the holy Fathers had ſo beleeued, they had words and were able to vtter it. If this had beene the faith of the Catholike Church, it had not beene kept ſo long in ſilence.

As for Gelaſius, his owne words are ſufficient to declare his faith. Thus he writeth againſt Neſtorius and Eutyches: Sacramenta, quæ ſumimus, Corporis & Sanguinis Chriſti, diuinæ res ſunt: propter quod & per eadem diuinæ efficimur conſortes naturæ. Et tamen eſſe non deſinit ſubſtantia vel natura Panis & Vini: The Sacraments of Chriſts Body and Blood, that wee receiue, are a godly thing, and therefore by the ſame wee are made partakers of the diuine nature. Yet there letteth not to be the ſubſtance or nature of Bread and Wine. This was Gelaſius faith touching theſe portions of the Sacrament: Gelaſius contra Eutychem.

Now hath M. Harding deuiſed another Myſterie of the wonderfull coniunction of God and Man in Chriſt, whereof Gelaſius ſpake not one word in this place, neither was it any thing to his purpoſe to ſpeake of it. Beſides this, hee imagineth Gelaſius to giue a Law, that no man ſhould diuide that Myſterie, whereas it neuer lay in the power of man to diuide it. Neither had that beene a diuiſion, but an vtter diſſolution of the Myſterie.

Thus, ſo he may ſeeme to ſay ſomewhat, hee weigheth not greatly what hee ſay, examining each thing, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, Non in ſtatera æqua diuinarum Scripturarum, ſed in ſtatera doloſa Conſuetudinum ſuarum: Not in the iuſt balance of the holy Scriptures, but in the deceitfull and falſe beames of his owne cuſtomes. Auguſt. contra epiſt. Parmeniani, lib. 3. ca. 2.

Of the Cup he maketh the Bread: Of the Bread he maketh the Cup: Of one hee maketh both: Of both he maketh one: Of one Myſterie he maketh another: and thus they deale, euen as Irenæus writeth of the Heretike Valentinus: Ordinem & textum Scripturarum Irenæus li. 1.

rarum supergredientes, & quantum in ipsis est, solventes, membra veritatis transferunt, & transfingunt, & alterum ex altero facientes, scelerum multos exhis quæ apta sunt ex Dominicis eloquijs male composito phantasmati: Peruerting the order and text of the Scriptures and as much as in them lieth, dismembring the limbs of the truth, they alter and transpose matters, and making one thing of another, they deceme many by their vnaptly vse of the Lords words, and come to their ill fauoured phantasme.

The Mysterie whereof Gelasius speaketh, is the holy Sacrament, which albeit it stand of two parts, yet is it one Sacrament, and not two. The Manichees deuided the same, taking one part, and leauing the other. And this is it that Gelasius calleth Sacrilege.

Here it is further surmised, that Leo and Gelasius by their Decrees, restored the Catholike people againe to the vse of both kindes. This is vtterly vntrue, and may bee ghessed by M. Harding, but cannot any way be proued.

The Decrees of Leo and Gelasius be abroad, and may be knowen. But where are these Decrees? In what Bookes are they written? Or who euer made mention of them? Verily these godly Fathers reproued the Manichees for their Sacrilege, and not the Catholikes: and commanded such as had offended, to correct their faults, and not such as were faultlesse.

But how could the Manichees haue beene knowen, (saith M. Harding) vnlesse the Catholike people among whom they receiued, had Communicated in one kinde? This question is out of course. I might better say: Nay how could the Manichees haue beene knowen, if they and the Catholikes had receiued in one kinde both alike? For this is the token that Leo would haue them knowen by: Sanguinem Redemptionis nostræ haurire detrectant: They refuse to drinke the Blood of our Redemption. By these words it is clere, that the Cup was offered orderly vnto them, as vnto others, but they refused it.

Thou seest, good Christian Reader, that M. Harding notwithstanding hee driuen to leaue his owne fellowes, to shift one Mysterie for another, to imagine new Lawes, and new decrees, that were neuer heard of, to change himselfe into sundry formes, and to seeke all maner holes to crepe out at, yet at last hath found by the authoritie of Leo, whom he himselfe allegeth, that the Catholike people receiued the whole Communion vnder both kindes, according to Christs Institution: and that the patrons and founders of his halfe Communion were old wicked Heretikes, named the Manichæs: that the same is the diuision of one whole intire Mysterie: and therefore by the authoritie of Gelasius may well be called open Sacrilege.

Now to shew what might be said of our side were labour infinite. For our doctrine taketh no authoritie of Priuate Folke, of Women, of Forcelets, of Napkins, of Sicke Bodies, of Death Beds, of Miracles, of Fables, of Children, and of bad men: which be the only grounds of all that M. Harding seemeth hitherto able to say: But of Christs Institution, of the Scriptures, of the Practise of the Apostles, of the vsage of the Primitiue Church, of old Canons, of ancient Councels, of Catholike Fathers, Greekes, and Latines, Old and New, euen of Clemens, Abdias and Amphilochius; which are M. Hardings peculiar Doctours. S. Chrysostome saith: In the receiuing of the holy Mysteries, there is no difference betweene Priest and People. Dionysius saith: The vnity of the Cup is diuided vnto all. Ignatius saith: One Cup is diuided vnto the whole Church. S. Augustine saith: We drinke all together, because we liue all together. But to reckon vp the authorities of antiquity, as I said, it would be infinite. Chrysostom. in 2. Cor. hom. 18 Eccl. Hiera. cap. 3. Ignatius ad Philadelphien. De Con. dist. 2. Quia passus.

The Scholasticall Doctours of very late yeres haue seene and testified, that M. Hardings doctrine is but new. Thomas of Aquine saith: In quibusdam Ecclesijs prouide obseruatur, vt populo Sanguis non detur: In certaine Churches it is prouidently obserued, that the Blood be not giuen to the people. In certaine Churches, he saith: not in all Churches. Thom. par. 3. q. 80. art. 12.

Likewise Durandus: In multis locis Communicatur cum Pane & Vino, id est, cum toto Sacramento: In many places they Communicate with Bread and Wine, that is to say, with the whole Sacrament. In many places, hee saith: but not in all places. Likewise Alexander de Hales, a great Schole Doctour: Ita ferè vbique à Laicis fit in Ecclesia: That the Lay people in the Church for the most part doe. For the most part, he saith: but not in all parts. And Linwood in his Prouincials: Solis celebrantibus sanguinem sub specie vini conferri sumere, in huiusmodi minoribus Ecclesijs est concessum: It is granted onely vnto the Priests that celebrate in such small Churches, to receiue the Blood vnder the forme of Wine. He excepteth only the small Country Churches, not the greater Churches in Cities and Townes. All these Doctours liued within the space of three hundred yeres past. So long it was before M. Hardings Doctrine could grow generall. Durand. li. 4. cap. 42. Alexan. par. 4. q. 55. m. 1. Linwood de sum. Trinit. & Fide Catholi.

Antoninus saith, that King William the Conqueror that liued a thousand yeres after Antoninus.

Christ, caused his whole armie to Communicate, and that as the order was then, vnder both kindes. Haimo, that was not long before him, saith: Appellatur Calix Communicatio, propter participationem: quia omnes Communicant ex illo: The Cuppe is called the Communication, because of the participation, for that euery man receiueth of it. Thus is our doctrine confirmed, not only by the Old Doctours, but also by the New.

Haimo in. 1. Cor. 11.

Wherefore M. Harding thus maintaining the open abuse of the holy Mysteries, offendeth against Christs Institution, against the Scriptures, against the perfection of the Sacrament, against the confirmation of the New Testament, against the Tradition and practise of the Apostles, against the ancient Councels against the Canons, against the Doctours, both Old and New. The Apostles of Christ being full of the holy Ghost, so take Christs words as we take them now. And S. Hieronc saith: Quicunq; aliter Scripturam intelligit, quàm sensus spiritus sancti flagitat, quo conscripta est, licèt de Ecclesia non recesserit, tamen Hæreticus appellari potest: Whosoeuer vnderstandeth the Scriptures otherwise than the sense of the Holy Ghost requireth, by which Holy Ghost the Scriptures were written, although he be not yet departed from the Church, yet he may well be called an Heretike.

Hieronym. ad Galat. li. 3. ca. 5

If M. Harding will say, that was true then, and this is true now, Then may we answer him as S. Hilary did the Arians: Veritas ergo temporum erit magis, quàm Euangeliorum: The truth must be as pleaseth the time, not as pleaseth the Gospell. And further as S. Augustine answered the Donatists: Aliud declamas, aliud recitas, nos post vocem Pastoris nostri, per ora Prophetarum, & os proprium, & per ora Euangelistarum, nobis apertissimè declaratam, voces vestras non admittimus, non credimus, non accipimus: If yee Preach any otherwise, or tell vs any other tale after we haue once heard the voice of our Shepheard, most plainly declared vnto vs by the mouthes of his Prophets, by his owne mouth, and by the mouthes of his Euangelists, touching your voices, we take them not, we beleeue them not, we receiue them not.

Hilarius ad Constantium August. Augustin. de vnitate Eccle. cap. 11.

But forasmuch as this is a Mystery of Vnitie, God grant vnto vs such humilitie of minde, that wee may all submit our selues vnto his holy Word, that wee may ioine together in holy and perfect vnity: and as I alleged before out of S. Cyprian; By his aduertisement redresse that thing wherein certaine haue erred: That when he shall come in his glory, and in his heauenly Maiestie, he may finde vs to hold that he warned vs: to keepe that he taught vs: to doe that he did. Amen.

Cyprian. ad Cecilium, lib. 2. epist. 3.

OF PRAIERS IN A STRANGE TONGVE.

THE THIRD ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

OR that the People had their Common Praiers then in a strange tongue, that they vnderstood not.

TO furnish out this Article, M. Harding hath laid together a great heape of Stories, Antiquities, Obseruations of Writers, Erections, Propagations, Canons, and Orders of the Church, Cosmography, Situation of Countries, Corruptions, and changes of Tongues, which things he might better haue vsed to some other purpose. Now they serue him more for shew of learning, than for substance of proofe. He hath bestowed vpon this treaty, whatsoeuer he could either deuise of himselfe, or finde in others, adding besides all maner of beauty and force vnto the same, both with weight of sentence, and also with colour of words. Howbeit great vessels be not alwaies full: and the emptier they be, the more they sound. The wise Reader will be weighed with reason, and not with talke. As I said at the beginning, One good sentence were proofe sufficient. And if there be any one such in this whole Booke, I will yeld according to promise. If there be none, then must M. Harding consider better of the matter, and begin againe. Howbeit hee hath done that was the part of a good Orator, that the learned may say, hee hath shewed learning and eloquence: the vnlearned may thinke, he hath said some truth.

M. Harding.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuiſion.

If you meane M. Iewel, by the peoples Common Prayers, ſuch as at that time they commonly made to God in priuate deuotion, I thinke they vttered them in that tongue which they vnderſtood: (65) and ſo do Chriſtian people now for the moſt part: & it hath neuer beene reproued by any Catholike Doctor. But if by the Common Prayers you meane the Publike Seruice of the Church, wherof the moſt part hath been pronounced by the Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, and other Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters, the people to ſundry parts of it ſaying Amen, or otherwiſe giuing their aſſent: I grant, ſome vnderſtood the language theror, and ſome vnderſtood it not; I meane, for the time you referre vs vnto, euen of ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſts conuerſation heere in earth.

The 65. vntruth. For vnder the ſubiection of the Biſhop of Rome, the people for the moſt part pray in Latine.

For about nine hundred yeeres paſt, (66) it is certaine, the people in ſome Countries had their Seruice in an vnknowen tongue, as it ſhall be prooued of our owne Countrie of England.

The 66. vntruth. For this certainty will neuer bee prooued.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The diſorder of Prayer, that M. Harding hath here taken in hand to defend, is not only repugnant to the Scriptures of God, but alſo contrary to the ſenſe of Nature. For if Birds and Beaſts could ſpeake, as Democritus the Philoſopher ſometime thought, and as Lactantius a Chriſtian Writer ſeemeth partly to ſay they doe, yet being Birds and Beaſts, and void of Reaſon, they would not ſpeake they know not what. Wherefore ſeeing this abuſe appeareth contrary to God, and Nature, and now alſo is miſliked and condemned by the common iudgement of all people, therefore it behoueth M. Harding to leaue his ghеſſes, and ſoundly and effectually ſeeke to proue it.

Lactantius, Inſtitution. lib. 3. cap 10.

Two ſpeciall things he hath confeſſed in this treaty, which quite ouerthrow his whole purpoſe: The one is, That the Prayers in the Primitiue Church were ſaid in the common knowen tongue: The other is, That it were good euen now, that the people vnderſtood their owne Prayers. This is the plaine ſong, and may well ſtand for the ground: the reſt is altogether deſcant and vaine voluntary, and the moſt part out of tune.

This diſtinction of Common Prayers, whereof he imagineth ſome to bee made openly by the Miniſter of the Church, ſome ſeuerally by euery of the people in Priuate deuotion, is both vnperfect and alſo needleſſe. For the ſecret prayers that the faithfull make ſeuerally by themſelues, haue euermore been called Priuate and neuer Common. And in this ſenſe Thomas of Aquine thinketh that a Prayer made in ſuch ſort by the Prieſt, and in the Church, may be called Priuate.

Par. 3. quæſt. 183. art. 4.

He thinketh, That the people vttered their ſecret Prayers in the tongue that they vnderſtood, and ſo he ſaith, Chriſtian people doe now for the moſt part. The former part hereof is vndoubtedly true. But for the ſecond, That Chriſtian people doe ſo now, Gods name be bleſſed, that hath brought it ſo to paſſe, not by M. Harding or his Catholike Doctours, but by ſuch as they haue withſtanded for the ſame and called Heretikes.

Touching the Publike Seruice pronounced by the Prieſt, whereunto the people ſaid Amen; Some (ſaith M. Harding) vnderſtood the language thereof, and ſome vnderſtood it not. Here vnawares he implieth a repugnance in reaſon, and a manifeſt contradiction.

M. Harding implieth a contradiction.

For if ſome of the people vnderſtood it not, how could all the people ſay Amen? S. Pauls words be plaine: How ſhall the vnlearned ſay Amen, to thy thankeſgiuing? For he knoweth not what thou ſaieſt. This runneth directly againſt M. Harding: All the people gaue their aſſent, and ſaid Amen, to the Common Prayers, in the Church: Ergo, all the people vnderſtood the Common Prayers. The allegation of the Church of England in the time of Auguſtine, whereof M. Harding maketh himſelfe ſo ſure, and ſaith with ſuch affiance, It ſhall be prooued, when it ſhall hereafter come to proſe indeed, ſhall proue nothing.

As concerning the diſtinction of Priuate and Common Prayers, betweene which M. Harding would alſo haue a difference of ſpeech, vndoubtedly the tongue that is godly and profitable, and will ſtirre the minde in Priuate deuotion, is alſo godly and profitable, and likewiſe able to ſtirre the minde in the open Church. And I marueil, what reaſon can lead any man to thinke the contrary.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

But to ſpeake firſt of antiquity and of the compaſſe of your ſix hundred yeeres, it is euident by ſundry ancient records, both of Doctours and of Councels, ſpecially of the Councell Laodicine in Phrygia Pacatiana, holden by the Biſhops of the leſſer Aſia, about the yeere of our Lord 364. that the Greeke Churches had ſolemne ſeruice in due order and forme, ſet foorth with exact diſtinction of Pſalmes, and Leſſons of Houres, Dates, Feaſts and times of the yeere, of ſilence and open pronouncing, of giuing the Kiſſe of Peace to the Biſhop, firſt by the Prieſts, then by the Lay people; of offering the Sacrifice, of the only Miniſters comming to the Altar to receiue the Communion, with diuers other ſeemely obſeruations.

Heere M. Hard. wandreth vainly from the purpoſe

Alſo the Latine Churches they had their Prayers and Seruice alſo; but in ſuch fixed order, long after the Greekes. For Damaſus the Pope firſt ordained that Pſalmes ſhould bee ſung in the Church of Rome Alternatim, enterchangeably or by courſe, ſo as now wee ſing them in the Quire, and that in the end of euery Pſalme ſhould be ſaid Gloria Patri, & Filio, & Spiritui Sancto, ſicut erat, &c. Which he cauſed to be done by counſell of S. Hierome, that the faith of the 318. Biſhops of the Nicene Councell might with like fellowſhip be declared in the mouths of the Latines. To whom Damaſus wrote by Bonifacius the Prieſt to Hieruſalem, that Hierome would ſend vnto him Pſallentium Græcorum, the maner of the ſinging of the Greekes, ſo as he had learned the ſame of Alexander the Biſhop in the Eaſt. In that Epiſtle complaining of the ſimplicity of the Roman Church, he ſaith, that there was on the Sunday but one Epiſtle of the Apoſtle, and one Chapter of the Goſpell rehearſed, and that there was no ſinging with the voice heard, nor the comlineſſe of hymnes knowne among them.

Singing.

In præfatione Hieronymi ad 2. epiſt. Damaſi Papæ ad Hieronymū Presbyterum. Ita præcepit Damaſus Papa Hieronymo, vt Pſallentium Græcorum, id eſt, Alexandri Epiſcopi Græci, Liber confeſſionum.

About the ſame time S. Ambroſe alſo tooke order for the Seruice of his Church of Millaine, and made holy hymnes himſelfe. In whoſe time (as S. Auguſtine writeth) when Iuſtina, the yong Emperour Valentinians mother, for cauſe of her Hereſie, wherewith ſhe was ſeduced by the Arians, perſecuted the Catholike faith, and the people thereof occupied themſelues in deuout watches more than before time, ready to die with their Biſhop in that quarrell; it was ordained that Hymnes and Pſalmes ſhould bee ſung in the Church of Millaine, after the maner of the Eaſt parts; that the good folke thereby might haue ſome comfort and ſpirituall reliefe, in that lamentable ſtate and continuall ſorrowes. Thereof the Churches of the Weſt foorthwith tooke example, and in euery Country they followed the ſame. In his ſecond Booke of Retractations hee ſheweth, that in his time ſuch maner of ſinging began to be receiued in Aphrica. Before this time had Hilarius alſo the Biſhop of Poyters in France, made Hymnes for that purpoſe, of which S. Hierome maketh mention. cap. 11.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

We may well ſuffer M. Harding to wander at large in matters that relaine him nothing. If it were lawfull for others ſo to doe, it were no great maſtery to write Bookes. Many matters bee heere heapt together, touching order of Seruice, diſtinction of Pſalmes, Leſſons, Houres, Daies, Feaſts, the giuing of Peace, the forme of Communion, ſinging in the Church, when it began in Græcia, when in Rome, when in Millaine, when in Aphrica, when in France, and when in other places. Theſe be none of the matters that lie in queſtion. And therefore as they nothing further M. Harding to this purpoſe, ſo in other reſpects they hinder him ſundry waies. For in the ſame Councell of Laodicea it is decréed, like as alſo in the Councell of Carthage: That nothing bee read in the Church vnto the people, ſauing only the Canonicall Scriptures. Therefore the Leſſons there mentioned, were not taken out of the Feſtiual or Legenda aurea, as hath béene vſed in the Church of Rome: but out of the Chapters of the Holy Bible, as it is now vſed in the Church of England. The Peace giuen to the Biſhop, was not a little Table of Siluer: ſomewhat elſe, as hath béene vſed in the Church of Rome, but a very Kiſſe indéed, in token of perfect peace and vnity in Faith and Religion. So Iuſtinus Martyr ſaith, ſpeaking of the time of the holy Miniſtration, Wee ſalute each one another with a Kiſſe. So likewiſe Chryſoſtome and others.

Concil. Laodic. Canon. 59. Concil. Carthag. 3. Can. 47.

In Apologia 2. ἀλλήλους φιλήματι ἀσπαζόμεθα.

Where he ſaith that the Church of Rome being as then plaine and ſimple, learned the Pſalmodie and other Eccleſiaſticall Muſicke, and the ſinging of Gloria Patri, at the end of euery Pſalme, of S. Hierome and the Biſhops of the Eaſt, he doth vs well to vnderſtand, that then Rome is not the Mother of all theſe things, neither is ſo to be taken.

But where hée further ſaith: Damaſus ordained that the Pſalmes ſhould bée Sung Interchangeably and in ſides, and euen ſo, as they be now Sung in the Quire, meaning, as it ſéemeth, that only the Prieſts and Clerkes Sung, and the people ſate ſtill; it is an open and a manifeſt vntruth. For it is certaine many waies, that the whole people then Sung the Pſalmes altogether.

[a] Confeſſionum lib. 9. cap. 7. [b] Nazianzen. in funebri Oration. de Baſilio. τὼ ἀκοὴν περιβαλούσῃ τῇ ψαλμῳδίᾳ κατιβεντίδη. [c] In Pſalm 65. [d] Theodoret. lib. 2. cap. 24. Baſil. in epiſt. ad Clericos, Neocæſarien. Ἀντιψάλλουσιν ἀλλήλοις. Diſt. 92. in Sancta Roma-na.

S. Auguſtine ſaith: [a] That S. Ambroſe tooke that order in Millane in time of perſecution and great danger, for the ſolace of the people. [b] Nazianzenus erpreſſeth the terrible ſound of the people, ſo ſinging together in this wiſe: When the Emperor Valens was entred into the Church where S. Baſil Preached, and was ſtricken with the Pſalmody, as if it had beene with a Thunder, &c. [c] The like hath S. Hilary writing vpon the Pſalmes: [d] The like hath Theoderetus of one Flauianus and Theodorus, that firſt deuiſed this order of Singing in the City of Antioch.

But none plainer than S. Baſil: his words be theſe: The people riſe before day, and bie them to the houſe of Praier, and there, after that in mourning, and in heauineſſe, and continuall teares, they haue confeſſed themſelues vnto God, ſtanding vp from their Praiers, they begin the Pſalmody, and being diuided into two parts, they Sing together, the one part anſwering to the other. And this order (he ſaith) was agreeable to all the other Churches of God. Certainly it ſéemeth that S. Gregory in his time thought ſinging in the Church to be a thing fitter for the multitude of people, than for the Prieſt. For he erpreſſly forbiddeth the Prieſt to ſing in the Church: but I doe not remember that euer he forbade the people.

Héereof we may gather that Damaſus diuided the whole people into two parts, and willed them to ſing the Pſalmes in their owne knowen tongue, the one part making anſwer by courſe to the other, ſauing only the ſides: nothing like to that is now vſed in M. Hardings Quires.

M. Harding.

Barbarous Tongue.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuiſion.

Much might be alleged for proofe of hauing Seruice in the Greeke and in the Latine Churches, long before the firſt ſix hundred yeeres were expired, which is not denied. The thing that is denied by M. Iewell, is this, That for the ſpace of ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, any Chriſtian people had their Seruice, or Common Praiers, in a tongue they vnderſtood not: Which they of his ſide beare the world in hand, to be a hainous errour of the Church, and a wicked deceit of the Papiſts. And I ſay, as I ſaid before, that (67) the Seruice was then in a tongue which ſome people vnderſtood, and ſome vnderſtood not: I meane the Greeke tongue, and the Latine tongue, For, that it was within the ſix hundred yeeres, in any other barbarous or vulgar tongue, I neuer read, neither I thinke M. Iewell, nor any the beſt learned of his ſide, is able to prooue. To bee the better vnderſtanded, I call all tongues Barbarous and Vulgar, beſide the Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine.

The 67. vntruth. For M. Harding is not able to ſhew one nation that vnderſtood not their common Seruice.

The Goſpell and the Faith of Chriſt was preached and ſet foorth in Syria and Arabia, by Paul; in Egypt, by Marke; in Æthiopia, by Matthew; in Meſopotamia, Perſia, Media, Bactra, Hyrcania, Parthia, and Carmania, by Thomas; in Armenia the greater, by Bartholmew; in Scythia, by Andrew; and likewiſe in other Countries, by Apoſtolike men, who were ſent by the Apoſtles, and their next ſucceſſors; as in France by Martialis, ſent by Peter; by Dionyſius, ſent by Clement; by Creſcens, as Clement and Hierome writeth; and by Trophinus, S. Pauls Scholar; and by Nathaniel, Chriſts Diſciple, of whom he at Arelate, and this at Bourges and Treueres, preached the Goſpell, as ſome record. In our Countries heere of Britaine, by Fugatiues, Damianus, and others, ſent by Eluthering the Pope and Martyr, at the requeſt of King Lucius, as Damaſus writeth in Pontificiali. Other Countries, where the Greeke and Latine tongue was commonly knowen, I paſſe ouer of purpoſe. Now if M. Iewell, or any of our learned aduerſaries, or any man liuing, could ſhew good euidence and proofe, that the publike Seruice of the Church was then in the Syriacall, or Arabicke, in the Egyptian, Æthiopian, Perſian, Armenian, Scythian, French, or Brittaine tongue; then might they iuſtly claime perſcription againſt vs in this Article, then might they charge vs with example of antiquitie, then might they require vs to yeeld to the maner and authoritie of the Primitiue Church. (68) But that doubtleſſe cannot appeare, which if any could ſhew, it would make much for the Seruice to be had in the Vulgar tongue.

Conſtit. Apoſt. lib 7 cap. 46. Liber Scriptor. Eccleſiaſticus. Temporib. Antonini Commodi. Anno Do. 181.

The 68. vntruth. For doubtleſſe it will ſoone be ſhewed.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

M. Harding being now out of his digreſſion, foundeth himſelfe vpon this Principle, that ſome people vnderſtood the common praiers, and ſome vnderſtood them not. But if it might haue pleaſed him to ſhew any one kinde of people, that vnderſtood them not, it had beene ſufficient. But he ſheweth none, neither heere, nor elſe where. Therefore we may coniecture, his ſtore of ſuch things is not great.

He granteth, that the Seruice was commonly ſaid in the Greeke and in the Latine tongue. All other tongues he condemneth for Barbarous: by what authoritie, I cannot tell. For in the reſpect of God. There is neither Iew, nor Gentile: nor Greeke, nor Barbarous: nor any other diſtinction of tongues: but all are one in Chriſt Ieſus. Otherwiſe any tongue, vnto him that vnderſtandeth it not, appeareth Barbarous. And in that ſenſe S. Paul ſaith, Vnleſſe I vnderſtand the meaning of the ſpeech, I ſhall be Barbarous vnto him that ſpeaketh: and he that ſpeaketh, ſhall be likewiſe Barbarous vnto me. Like as Anacharſis the Philoſopher alſo ſaid, The Scythian is Barbarous at Athens: and the Athenian is Barbarous among the Scythians. And ſo the Prieſt that praieth in an vnknowen tongue, whether it be Greeke, or Latine, is Barbarous vnto the people: and if he be ignorant, and himſelfe vnderſtand not his owne Praiers, he is Barbarous alſo vnto himſelfe. As for the Latine tongue, which M. Harding ſo fauourably excepteth, it hath no ſuch ſpeciall Priuilege aboue others. S. Paul making a full diuiſion of the whole World, nameth ſome Greekes, and ſome Barbarous: and ſo leaueth out the Latines among the Barbarous. The ſame diuiſion Strabo alſo followeth in his Coſmographie. For thus he ſaith: Barbaræ ſunt omnes nationes, præter Græcos: All nations be Barbarous, Beſide the Greekes. Afterward the Romans miſliking herewithall, as they increaſed the ſtate of their Empire, ſo firſt they excepted themſelues, and in continuance, all other Nations, that would become Prouinces, and be ſubiect vnto them. And therefore Pope Nicolas the firſt, made a pitious exclamation againſt the Greeke Emperour Michaell, that ſeemed to deface the Latine tongue with that odious name: Appellatis Latinam linguam Barbaram, ad iniuriam eius qui fecit eam: Ye call the Latine tongue Barbarous, in deſpight of him that made that tongue. Great Alexanders modeſtie is much commened, who, as Strabo ſaith, would neuer ſort his Subiects by Greekes, and Barbarous: but rather by the difference of God, and Ill. For many Greekes (ſaid he) be ill people: and many Barbarous be good. The like modeſtie might well haue ſerued M. Harding in this place. For many that know the Greeke and the Latine tongues be notwithſtanding vngodly: and many be godly, that know them not. Therefore it is very diſcreetly ſaid by Beda: Barbara eſt lingua, quæ Deum laudare non poteſt: The tongue is Barbarous, that cannot ſerue God.

Galat. 3.

1. Cor. 14.

Strabo, Coſmograph. lib. 1. & 4.

Epiſtola Nicolai 1.

Strabo, Coſmograph. lib. 1.

Beda, 1. Cor. 14.

M. Harding maketh a long diſcourſe of the Apoſtles, and other Apoſtolike mens trauels thorowout the World. If he had ſhewed to what end, we might the better haue knowen knowen his purpoſe. If he will ſay, The Apoſtles preach in ſundry Countries: Ergo, The people had their Common Praiers in an vnknowen tongue: This argument will hardly hold. For to that end God gaue vnto them the gift of Tongues, that they might deale with all nations in their owne Languages.

Ephrems Homilies. Act. 2.

Heere are we required to ſhew ſome euidence, that in the Primitiue Church the publike Seruice was in the Syriacall, or Arabicke, or Egyptian, or any other Barbarous tongue: and it is ſtoutly preſumed, that we are able to ſhew none. Whatſoeuer we can ſhew, this is no indifferent dealing.

M. Hard. requireth others to ſhew, being himſelfe able to ſhew nothing.

For M. Harding being required of me to ſhew but one ſentence of proofe for his ſide, and hauing as yet ſhewed nothing, ſuddenly altereth the whole ſtate of the cauſe, and ſhifteth his hands, and requireth me to ſhew. Which thing although I be not bound to doe, by any order of Diſputation, yet that it may appeare that we deale plainly, and ſeke nothing but the truth, I am content, only in one example or two, preſently to follow his will, referring the reſt to another place more conuenient for the ſame.

In the 15. Diuiſion. Hieron. in Epitaphio Paulæ.

And forasmuch as the firſt tongue that he nameth, amongſt others, is the Syriacall, let him read S. Hierome, deſcribing the pompe of Paulaes funerall. Theſe be his wordes: Tota ad Funus eius Palæſtinarum vrbium turba conuenit: Hebræo, Græco, Latino, Syroq; Sermone, Pſalmi in ordine perſonabant: At her funerall, all the multitude of the Cities of Paleſtine met together. The Pſalmes were ſung in order, in the Hebrew, Greeke, Latine, and Syrian tongue. Heere may be ſeē, that in one Citie foure ſeuerall Nations, in their Common Seruice, vſed foure ſeuerall tongues, among which tongues, is the Syriacall: which thing M. Harding thinketh all the world cannot ſhew. S. Auguſtine willing the Priests to apply their ſtudies to correct the errours of their Latine ſpeech, addeth thereto this reaſon: Vt populus ad id quod planè intelligit, dicat, Amen: That people, vnto the thing that they plainly vnderſtand, may ſay. Amen. This of S. Auguſtine ſeemeth to be ſpoken generally of all tongues. M. Harding himſelfe, at the end of his treatie, confeſſeth, that the Armenians, Ruſſians, Æthiopians, Sclauons, and Moſcouites, haue from the beginning of their Faith, in their Publike Seruice, vſed euermore their owne naturall Country tongues. Wherefore, by M. Hardings owne grant, we may iuſtly claime preſcription, and charge him with Antiquitie, and require him to yeld to the Authoritie of the Primitiue Church.

Aug. de Catechizandis rudibus, ca. 9.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuiſion.

Wherefore, M. Iewell in his Sermon, which hee vttered in ſo ſolemne an audience, and hath ſet foorth in print to the world, ſaith more than hee is able to iuſtifie, where hee ſpeaketh generally thus: Before the people grew to corruption (whereby he meaneth the firſt ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt) all Chriſtian men thorowout the world, made their Common Praiers, and had the Holy Communion, in their owne common and knowen tongue. This is ſoone ſpoken, Sir: But it will not by you be ſo ſoone prooued.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

That M. Iewell there ſaid, is proued ſufficiently, vnleſſe M. Harding be able to bring ſome example, one or other, to proue the contrary. Neither is the matter ſo hard of our ſide to be proued. Thomas of Aquine, and Nicolas Lyra, M. Hardings owne Witneſſes, for ſome good part, will proue it for me.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuiſion.

Indeed we finde, that whereas holy Ephrem, Deacon of the Church of Edeſſa, wrote many things in the Syriacall tongue, he was of ſo worthy fame and renowne, that (as S. Hierome witneſſeth) his writings were rehearſed in certaine Churches openly, Poſt lectionem Scripturarum, After the Scriptures had beene read: whereof it appeareth to Erasmus, that nothing was wont then to be read in the Churches, beſide the writings of the Apoſtles, or at leaſt of ſuch men as were of Apoſtolike Authoritie. But by this place of S. Hierome it ſeemeth not that Ephrems Workes were vſed as a part of the common Seruice; but rather as Homilies, or exhortations, to be read after the Seruice, which conſiſted in maner wholly of the Scriptures. And whether they were turned into Greeke, or no, ſo ſoone, it is vncertaine.

Lib. de Script. eccleſiaſt.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

M. Harding, contrary to the order of Rhetoricke, would confute our ſide, before hee confirme his owne. But I maruell much to what end he ſhould thus allege Ephrem, vnleſſe it be to heape matter againſt himſelfe. For will he thus frame his reaſon:

Ephrem wrot ſundry things in his owne mother tongue:
Ergo, The people had their Seruice in a ſtrange tongue?

Will hee haue this to be allowed, and goe for an Argument? if there were nothing elſe else here to be gathered, yet hath he touched two things expresly against himselfe. The one is, that nothing was then read in the Church, sauing only the Scriptures, or other matters of Apostolike Authority: which thing is also straitly commanded by the Councell of Carthage. Yet M. Harding, in his Church, euen in the Publike Seruice, readeth Lessons, and Legends of childish Fables. S. Hieroms translation Concil. Carth. 3. Can. 47.

The other is, that Ephrems Homilies were pronounced vnto the people in the vulgar tongue: yet M. Harding himselfe pronounceth Gospels, Epistles, and Homilies, and all whatsoeuer, vnto the people in a strange tongue.

But to auoid this inconuenience, he saith, The Homilies were no part of the Seruice. First, how is he sure of that? Certainly, the Latine Homilies be read in the Matins, and accounted part of the Romish Seruice. Againe, what necessary Sequell is this:

The people vnderstood Ephrems Homilies:

Ergo, His Homilies were no part of the Seruice?

Or what leadeth him to thinke, it was profitable for the people to heare and vnderstand Ephrem, and yet was not profitable for them to heare and vnderstand Peter, Paul, or Christ? To be short, he confesseth that Ephrems writings were exhortations to the Greeks people: and yet doubteth whether they were translated into the Greeke, or no: and so he endeth in vncertaintie, and concludeth nothing.

Now let vs see whether the same Ephrem will conclude any thing of our side. First, Theodoretus saith, He was vtterly ignorant of the Greeke tongue. Which thing is also confirmed by M. Hardings owne Amphilochius. For in the conference that was betwaene him and Basil, he saith, He spake by an Interpreter, as beeing not able to speake Greeke himselfe. Yet was the same Ephrem a Minister in the Church, being, as S. Hierome saith, a Deacon, and as some others write, the Archdeacon of the Church of Edessa. Now let M. Harding shew vs, in what other tongue he could minister the Ecclesiasticall Seruice, but in his owne. If he thinke this coniecture to be weake, let him vnderstand further, that, as Theodoretus reporteth, the same Ephrem made Hymnes and Psalmes in the Syrian tongue: and that the same were sung at the solemne Feasts of Martyrs: and that, as Sozomenus saith plainly, the same Hymnes and Psalmes were sung in the Churches of Syria.

Theodoret. lib. 4. ca. 29. Amphilochius. Hier. de Eccles. siast. Scriptor. Theodoret. lib. 4. ca. 29. φασὶ δὲ τῶν νικηφόρων μαρτύρων πανηγύρεις ποιεῖ.

M. Harding. The 6. Diuision.

Neither S Hieromes Translation of the Scriptures into the Dalmaticall tongue (if any such was by him made at all) prooueth that the Seruice was then in that vulgar tongue. That labour may bee thought to haue serued to another purpose. But of the Translation of the Scriptures into vulgar tongues, I shall speake hereafter, when I shall come to that peculiar Article. Verily the handling of this present, and of that, hath most things common to both. Thus, that the people of any Country had the Church Seruice in their vulgar and common tongue, beside the Greeke and the Latine tongue, we leaue as a matter stoutly affirmed by M. Iewell, but faintly prooued: yea nothing at all prooued.

See the 15. Diuision of this Article.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding semeth to doubt whether S. Hierome translated the Scriptures into the Sclauon tongue, or no. Yet Stanislaus Hosius, one of the greatest of that side, maketh it very certaine, and putteth it quite out of doubt. His words be plaine: In Dalmaticam linguam Sacros Libros Hieronymum vertisse constat: It is certainly knowen, that S. Hierome translated the Scriptures into the Sclauon tongue. And likewise Alphonsus de Castro: Fatemur, olim Sacros Libros in Linguam Vulgarem fuisse translatos, beatumque Hieronymum in Linguam Dalmaticam eos vertisse: We confesse, that in old times the Scriptures were translated into the Vulgar Tongue, and that S. Hierome turned them into the Sclauon Tongue. Neither euer wist I any man that made doubt hereof, but M. Harding. But being granted (saith he) that S. Hierome so translated the Scriptures, yet that prooueth not that the Seruice was then in the Vulgar tongue. God sir: much lesse it proueth, that the Seruice was then among the Sclauons in the Latine Tongue. He saith further, That labour may be thought to haue serued to another purpose. But to what other purpose, he sheweth not. Surely whatsoeuer is thought hereof by M. Harding, M. Eckius, one of his owne Doctours, confesseth that the same S. Hierome, that translated the Scriptures into the Sclauon Tongue, procured also, that the Common Seruice there should be said in the Sclauon Tongue. And it may well be thought, his Translation could serue to no better purpose. I grant, S. Chrysostome, and Origen, in their Sermons, exhort the people to read the Scriptures in their houses at home: which purpose also, no doubts, was very godly. But such priuate reading at home, excludeth not the open reading in the Church. Chrysostome saith, It was the Readers dutie, openly in the Church to pronounce the Scriptures. And S. Augustine saith vnto the people, The Apostle S. Paul witnesseth, that this Psalme which yee haue heard, pertaineth

Hosius de sacro vernacule legendo. Alphonsus de Haref. lib. 1. cap. 13. Eccli. de Missa Latinè dicēda. Chrys. in Mat. Hom. 2. & in Genes. hom. 28. Orig. in Leuit. Homil. 9. Chrys. in Acta Apost. hom. 19. Aug. in Ps. 31.

S. Hieroms tranſlatiõ

Orig. in Leuit. cap. 7.

pertaineth to that grace of God, whereby we are made Chriſtians: therfore I haue cauſed the ſame Leſſon to be read vnto you. I thinke M. Harding will grant, that theſe Leſſons that S. Chryſoſtome and S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of, were vttered in ſuch a tongue, as the people might vnderſtand. For elſe Origen ſaith, Alioqui non fuiſſet neceſſarium, legi hæc in Eccleſia, niſi ex his ædificatio aliqua audientibus præberetur: Otherwiſe it had not beene neceſſarie for theſe things to be read in the Church, vnleſſe ſome profit might come thereof vnto the hearers.

Yet notwithſtanding (ſaith M. Harding) theſe matters be ſtoutly affirmed by M. Iewell, and faindy prooued. My proofes were taken out of the manifeſt words of S. Paul, S. Ambroſe, S. Auguſtine, S. Chryſoſtome, Arnobius, Gregorie, and others like: notwithſtanding it pleaſe M. Harding to call them ſo faint. Let vs therefore ſee the weightie reaſons that he and others of his ſide haue made for the contrarie. M. Harding ſeemeth to reaſon thus:

Ephrem made Homilies in the Syrian tongue:

And, S. Hierome tranſlated the Bible into the Sclauon tongue:

Ergo, The Common Seruice was in the Latine or Greeke tongue.

Otho Cardinal. in ſtatutis Synodi Auguſten.

Cardinall Otho ſaith, There were three tongues written in the title of the Croſſe, the Greeke, the Hebrew, and the Latine:

Ergo, In one of theſe three tongues, the people muſt haue their Common Seruice.

Eckius de Miſſa Latinè dicenda.

Eckius ſaith, Chriſt praied Secretly, being in the Mount alone:

Ergo, The Seruice muſt be in an vnknowen tongue.

These and ſuch like Arguments he brought by them. I leaue it vnto the diſcreet Reader, to iudge their force.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuiſion.

Now concerning the two learned tongues, Greeke and Latine, and firſt the Greeke: that the ſeruice was in the Greeke tongue, and vſed in the Greeke Church, I grant. And to ſhew what is meant by the Greeke Church, the learned doe vnderſtand all the Chriſtian people of that Countrey which properly is called Græcia, of Macedonia, Thracia, and of Aſia the Leſſe, and the Countries adioining. The Prouinces that were allotted to the Patriarke of Alexandria in Egypt, and to the Patriarke of Antiochia in Syria, are of the old Writers called ſometime by the name of the Orientall or Eaſt Church, ſometime of the Greeke Church. Thus much by vs both confeſſed, M Iewell, and agreed vpon; I ſay, that if I can ſhew, that the people of ſome Countries of the Greeke Church, (69) which all had their Common Praiers and Seruice in the Greeke tongue, for the more part vnderſtood not the Greeke tongue, more than Engliſh men now vnderſtand the Latine tongue; then I haue prooued that I promiſed to prooue, that ſome peoples, I meane whole Nations, vnderſtood not their Seruice, for that they had it in an vnknowen tongue.

The 69. vntruth. For it is certaine, that ſundry of y Eaſt nations had not their Seruice in the Greeke tongue, as ſhall appeare.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The Diuiſion of the Church into Greeke and Latine.

M. Harding firſt hauing diuided the whole world into two Churches, the Greeke, and the Latine, afterward maketh offer to proue his purpoſe. Whereof it may be gathered, that he hath hitherto proued nothing. This diuiſion of the Church, neither is greatly materiall, nor of our part much denied: albeit many waies it ſeemeth vnperfect. For the great Churches of Æthiopia, India, and Scythia, planted by S. Matthew, by S. Thomas, and by S. Andrew, beſides Arabia, Syria, Perſia, Media, Armenia, and a great number of other Countries, which neuer were neither of the Greeke Church, nor of the Latine, are here quite left out. Two propoſitions M. Harding hath here choſen to proue. The one is, that all the Greeke Church had the Common Seruice wholly and thorowly in the Greeke tongue. The other is, that ſome whole Countries in the Greeke Church, vnderſtood not the Greeke tongue.

If both theſe propoſitions bee proued ſoundly and ſubſtantially, without ſurmiſe or gheſſe, then it behoueth me to yeeld. But (good Reader) marke them well both, and conſider the proofes. For if he faile in either of theſe, he proueth nothing, as I hope it will appeare.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuiſion.

A Fallax, or a deceitfull argument.

Now how well I am able to prooue this, I referre it to your owne conſideration. The leſſe Aſia being a principall part of the Greeke Church, had then the Seruice in the Greeke tongue: But the people of ſundrie Regions and Countries of the leſſe Aſia, then vnderſtood not the Greeke tongue: Ergo, The people of ſundry Regions and Countries had then their Seruice in an vnknowen tongue. The firſt propoſition, or Maior, is confeſſed, as manifeſt: no learned man will denie it: and if any would, it may eaſily be prooued. The ſecond propoſition, or Minor, may thus bee prooued: Strabo, who trauelled ouer all the Countries of Aſia, for perfect knowledge of the ſame, neere about the time of S. Pauls peregrination there, who alſo was borne in the ſame, in his 14. Booke of Geographie writeth, that whereas within that Cherroneſus (that is, the ſtrait betweene Sea and Sea) there were ſixteene Nations, by report of Ephorus; (70) of them all, only three were Greekes, all the reſt Barbarous. Likewiſe Plinius in the ſixth Booke Naturalis hiſtoria Cap. 2. declareth, that (71) within the circuit of that Land were three Greeke Nations only, Dores, Ioues, Aeolis: and that the reſt were Barbarous. Amongſt whom the people of Lycaonia was one, who in S. Pauls time, ſpake before Paul and Barnabas in the Lycaonicall tongue.

The 70. vntruth, miſreporting Straboes words. The 71. vntruth, miſreporting y words of Plinie.

The

The Scripture it ſelfe reporteth a diuerſitie of language there, and there about, as it appeareth by the ſecond Chapter of the Acts: Where the Iewes gathered together in Hieruſalem, for keeping of the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, wondering at the Apoſtles, for their ſpeaking with ſo many ſundry tongues, amongſt other Prouinces different in language, they reckon Pontus, and Aſia, Cappadocia, Phrygia, and Pamphilia: Which two Prouinces are of all attributed vnto the leſſe Aſia: Which maketh a good Argument, that all Aſia the Leſſe had not only the Greeke tongue. And therefore ſo many of them as were of other language, hauing the Seruice in Greeke, had it in a tongue they vnderſtood not. They that will ſeeme to ſearch the cauſe why that Land had ſo great diuerſitie of Languages, impute it to the often change of Conqueſts, for that it was ouercome, and poſſeſſed of diuers Nations: of which euery one coueted, with enlarging their Empire, to bring into the Countries ſubdued, their lawes, their cuſtomes, and their language. Now this being prooued by good and ſufficient authoritie, that in Aſia, of ſixteene Nations, three onely were Greekes, it followeth, that the other thirteene, hauing their Seruice in Greeke, had it not in their owne, but in a ſtrange tongue. For elſe, if they had all naturally ſpoken Greeke, why ſhould not they haue beene called Greekes? Thus wee ſee, it is no new thing, proceeding of a generall corruption in the Church, ſome peoples to haue the Seruice in an vnknowen tongue.

Aſia the Leſſe.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Take hèd, good Reader: M. Harding hath hère throwen a great Miſt of learning, to dazle thy ſight. Unleſſe thou eie him well, he wil ſteale from thee. Thus he frameth his Syllogiſmus: The leſſe Aſia being a principall part of the Gréeke Church, had then the Seruice in the Gréeke tongue: but ſundry Countries of the ſame Aſia vnderſtood not the Gréeke tongue: Ergo, They had their Seruice in an vnknowen tongue.

Hère is a faire Gloſſe. But be not deceiued. M. Harding knoweth well enough, it is but a Fallace, that is to ſay, a deceitfull Argument, named in the Schooles, Ex meris particularibus: Or, A non diſtributo, ad diſtributum. Unleſſe he amend the Maior, and make it an Vniuerſall, and ſay thus: All Aſia the Leſſe had the Seruice in the Gréeke Tongue, it can in no wiſe hold. That Aſia the Leſſe had the Seruice in Gréeke, it is doubted of no man, nor learned, nor vnlearned. But that all Aſia the Leſſe had throwout in all parts the ſame Seruice, if it be denied, M. Harding, with all his learning, is not able to proue it: and therefore he did better to turne it ouer without any proofe at all.

The diſcloſing of M. Hardings Fallax.

The Minor is this: Sundry Nations in Aſia the Leſſe vnderſtood not the Greeke. And to proue this, M. Harding hath directed all his drift. But to what end? For neither is it denied by any of vs, nor is it any part of our queſtion. And yet notwithſtanding, is not M. Harding able to proue it with all his gheſſes.

He allegeth the Acts of the Apoſtles, whereas mention is made of ſundry languages, and among the ſame, certaine Prouinces of this Aſia ſpecially named for their difference in ſpeech. But what if anſwer were made, that all there rehearſed, were not diuers tongues, but rather certaine differences in one tongue? Certainly, Beda ſeemeth plainly ſo to ſay. His words be theſe: Verily this man was with him, for he is of Galile: not for that the people of Galile, and the people of Hieruſalem, vſed ſundry tongues: but for that euery Prouince (of Iurie) hauing a peculiar maner of vtterance in their ſpeech, could not auoid the ſame. And hèrevnto he applieth this Story of the Acts of the Apoſtles.

Actor. 2.

Beda in Luc. ca. 22. li. 6. Ex Hieronymo in Matth. ca. 26.

But ſaith M. Harding, There muſt needs be greater difference betweene theſe Countries of Aſia, and that, becauſe of often ouerthrowes and conqueſts, that there had happened. The coniecture is good. But the greateſt Conquerours that came there, were the Macedonians, the Thebanes, and other Grecians, who (no doubt) planted there the Gréeke tongue, as it may ſone appeare to any man, that can with iudgement conſider of it. S. Paul vnto the Epheſians, the Galathians, and the Coloſſians, dwelling all in this ſame Aſia the Leſſe, wrote in Gréeke. And S. Luke writing of S. Pauls being and preaching at Epheſus, ſaith, It came ſo to paſſe, Vt omnes qui habitabant in Aſia, audirent Sermonem Domini Ieſu, Iudæi ſimul & Græci: That all they that dwelt in Aſia, heard the word of the Lord Ieſus, both Iewes, and Greekes. S. Luke, that had trauelled ouer that whole Country with S. Paul, knew none other Nation there, but Iewes and Greekes: M. Harding hath a gheſſe, there ſhould be ſome other Barbarous people alſo: but what they were, or where about they dwelt, or what tongue they ſpake, he cannot tell. Verily Polycarpus was Biſhop of Smyrna: Gregorius was Biſhop in Pontus: S. Baſil was Biſhop of Cæſaria in Cappadocia: Amphilochius Biſhop of Iconium in Lycaonia: Gregorius, S. Baſils brother, Biſhop of Nyſſa in Caria, or Thracia. All theſe, in ſundry Countries within Aſia the Leſſe, preached openly in the Gréeke tongue, and the vulgar people vnderſtood them.

Actor. 19.

Actor. 19.

Yet (ſaith M. Harding) Strabo being borne in the ſame Countrey, and liuing vnder the Emperours Auguſtus and Tiberius, in the time of S. Paul, writeth in his Geographie, that whereas there were then ſixteene ſundry Nations in Aſia the Leſſe, three only of them were Grecians, and the reſt Barbarous. I know not whether M. Harding be vnwittingly deceiued himſelfe, or wilfully go about to

Aſia the Leſſe.

to deceiue others. But well I know, that this is no part of Straboes meaning. For Strabo ſpeaketh not this of his owne time, but of the time of Ephorus, that liued well nere fiue hundred yeres before him. This Ephorus reporteth, that in his time there were but three Grecke Nations as yet entred into Aſia, but all the reſt then were Barbarous. And therefore Apollodorus ſaith, that before the battell of Troy, no people of the Grekes at all euer came ouer to dwell there. For if Strabo had meant this of his owne time, to what end ſhould he allege the Record of Ephorus, that liued ſo many hundred yeres before him, for proofe of that thing that he had ſo diligently viewed, and ſene himſelfe? and ſpecially ſeing his purpoſe is not to follow, but to reprowe Ephorus: as it well appeareth by his words. As for Apollodorus, thus he ſaith of him: Hee ſeemeth not diſcreetly to deale heerein. For he diſordereth and falſly allegeth the words of Homer. And vnto this conſtruction of Strabo, very well agreeth the place of Plinius here alleged, and concludeth manifeſtly againſt M. Harding, as it appeareth by the very words: In omni eo tractu proditur, tres tantùm Gentes Græcas iure dici, Doricam, Ionicam Æolicam: Cæteras Barbarorum eſſe: In which whole circuit, it is written, that only three Nations be rightly called Greekes: and that the reſt are of the Barbarians. In that he ſaith, Proditur, It is written, he meaneth by Ephorus, Apollodorus, or ſuch others, as had liued long before. In that he ſaith, Cæteras Barbarorum eſſe, The reſt be of the Barbarians; he meaneth, that they had arriued thither, not out of Græcia, as had the other three; but out of other Countries that were Barbarous. But in that he ſaith, Tres tantùm Gentes Græcas iure dici, That onely three Nations bee rightly, or naturally, called Greekes; he muſt needs meane that the reſt were called Grekes alſo, although not ſo rightly and naturally as the other. For elſe the exception of this word iure, that is, rightly or naturally, had bene in vaine. And thus M. Harding ſeeking to prowe, that the people of Aſia were no Grekes, allegeth Plinius, by whoſe words it appeareth neceſſarily, that they were Grekes.

Strabo, lib. 14. eodem loco. τὰ δὲ πρώτα παραλείπω καταλελυθότα. Plin. hiſt. natural. lib. 6. cap. 2.

But M. Harding will force the matter further: Strabo ſaith, that theſe three Nations excepted, the reſt were Barbarous: Ergo, They vnderſtood no Greeke. And hereupon reſteth his whole prowfe. But this is another falſification of Straboes minde. For Strabo calleth them Barbarous, that vnderſtood and ſpake Grecke. And what better Witneſſe can we herein haue, than Strabo himſelfe? Thus he writeth: Barbariſmum in his dicere conſueuimus, qui malè loquuntur Græcè: non autem in illis, qui Caricè loquuntur. Sic etiam barbariloquos, & barbari ſermonis homines eos accipere debemus, qui malè Græca pronuntiant: We take a Barbariſmus, or a barbarous maner of ſpeech, to be in them that ſpeake the Greeke diſorderly: and not in them that ſpeake a ſtrange tongue, as is the tongue of the Carians. So we ought to take them to be barbarous, or men of barbarous ſpeech, that ill fauouredly pronounce the Greeke. Thou maiſt ſee (good Reader) with what faith M. Harding allegeth the Authoritie of old Writers. He would prowe by Strabo, that theſe people ſpake no Grecke, becauſe they were Barbarous. And Strabo himſelfe ſaith, notwithſtanding they were Barbarous, yet they ſpake Grecke: Now therefore, ſeing the Syllogiſmus it ſelfe, as I haue ſaid, is a Fallace, the Maior falſe, the Minor falſe, and neither of them any way prowed, and Strabo and Pliny falſly alleged: to gather hereof, that theſe people had their Seruice in an vnknowen tongue, muſt needs ſeeme a ſtrange Concluſion.

M. Harding falſifieth Straboes minde. Li. 14. Geogra.

M. Hardings Syllogiſme.

M. Harding. The 9. Diuiſion.

Heere perhaps M. Iewell, or ſome other for him, replieth, and ſaith, that the people of Aſia commonly, beſide their owne proper language, ſpake the Greeke tongue alſo; and allegeth for the ſame purpoſe S. Hierome, who ſaith, Galatas, excepto ſermone Græco, quo omnis Orins loquitur, propriam linguam eandem habere, quam Treuiros: That the Galathians, beſide the Greeke language, which all the Orient or the Eaſt ſpeaketh, haue their owne peculiar tongue, the very ſame that they of Treuers haue. Lo, ſaith this replier, S. Hierome affirmeth, all the Orient to ſpeake the Greeke tongue: Ergo, The Seruice in Greeke to them was not ſtrange and vnknowen.

In prooem. lib. Comment. Ep. ad Galat.

To this I anſwer, S. Hierome meaneth, that ſome of all Countries of the Orient, or Eaſt, ſpake Greeke, as the learned men, gentle men, Merchants, all of liberall education, and ſuch other as had cauſe to trauell thoſe Countries. To be ſhort, it was without doubt very common, as being their onely learned tongue for all ſciences, and the tongue that might beſt ſerue to trauell withall, from Country to Country, within the Eaſt, right ſo as the Latine tongue ſerueth to the like intents, For all Nations of the Weſt. And he meaneth not, that all and ſingular perſons, of what degree and condition ſoeuer they were, all vplandiſh people, tillers of the ground, heardmen, and women, ſpake Greeke. For if it had beene ſo, then had they not had peculiar and proper tongues. For it is not for their ſimple heads (for the moſt part) to beare away two languages. In that S. Hierome calleth the Galathians tongue, propriam linguam, a proper and a peculiar tongue to that Nation, he doth vs to vnderſtand, the ſame to perteine to all in particular, that is, to euery one of that Prouince, and the Greeke to all in generall, in reſpect of other Nations there, ſo as not of neceſſitie it be vnderſtanded of euery one.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

M. Harding ouermuch paineth himſelfe to prowe that thing that no wiſe man will denie him. For how can it ſeeme likely, that the whole Eaſt, which is in a maner the one halfe halfe part of the world, containing ſo many, and ſo ſundry Nations, ſhould ſpeake all one tongue: ſeeing wee our ſelues, in this one little kingdome of England, haue the vſe of fiue tongues, and not one of them vnderſtanding another? I maruell that M. Harding alleged not the fables of Herodotus, that Bek in the Phrygians tongue ſignifieth Bread: Ki-ki in the Egyptians tongue, an ointment: Achmach, one of the Guard: or Alila, or Vrotal, in the Arabicke tongue, and ſuch like. For theſe might haue ſtand him in ſtead of good proofes, that all the Nations of the whole Eaſt part of the World ſpake not Greeke. Herodotus.

And although wee agree with him in the principall, that in the Eaſt part were vſed ſundry languages, and likewiſe that the Greeke tongue was commonly vſed among the learned, yet his diſtinction of all in Generall, and all in Particular, that he hath heere deuiſed to ſhift off S. Hierome, ſeemeth very homely, and home made. For how can it be a Generall, vnleſſe it include euery Particular? By M. Hardings conſtruction, we muſt take All, for Some: or All, not for the tenth part of all: and by this Rhetoricke, leſſe than halfe is as much as All: and ſo, All, is not All. Thus M. Hardings Generall is a meere Particular: and to conclude, his Generall is no Generall. So weakly and ſo loſely his anſwer ſtandeth.

As touching the Galathians, of whom S. Hierome ſaith, that beſide their owne naturall tongue, they had alſo the vſe of the Greeke, becauſe as Apollodorus ſaith, They of all others, arriued laſt into that Countrey, it is likely, they kept their owne barbarous ſpeech longer than others. But, like as whether they of all ſorts ſpake Greeke or no, as M. Harding ſaith, of neceſſitie cannot be proued, ſo indeed it forceth nothing. For he cannot proone thereby, that they that vnderſtood not the Greeke, had their Seruice in the Greeke. Yet is this the Maior, and the ground of the whole, which M. Harding ſo cloſely diſſembleth and paſſeth by. Strabo Geogr. lib. 14.

M. Harding. The 10. Diuiſion.

Tract. in Ioan. 117. S. Auguſtine ſpeaking of the title written by Pilate on the Croſſe, ſaith thus; It was in Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine, Rex Iudæorum. For theſe three tongues were there in preeminence before all other; Hebræa, propter Iudæos, in Dei Lege gloriantes: Græca, propter gentium ſapientes: Latina, propter Romanos multis at pene omnibus iam tunc gentibus imperantes: The Hebrew for the Iewes, that g'oried in the Law of God; the Greeke, for the wiſe men of the Gentiles; the Latine, for the Romans bearing rule at that time ouer many, and almoſt ouer all Nations. Now where he ſaith heere, that the Greeke tongue was in preeminence Propter Gentium ſapientes, for the wiſe men of the Gentiles, he diſcuſſeth fully the doubt that might ſeeme to riſe of S. Hieromes ſaying, and ſheweth, that the Greeke tongue was common, not to all the vulgar people of the whole Orient, but to the wiſe men onely, and that for the attaining of learning. And for this it is to bee noted, that the Scripture reporteth the vulgar tongue of the Lycaonians, to haue beene vttered in the hearing of Paul and Barnabas; not by the Magiſtrates, or other the chiefe, but by the vulgar people. Turba leuauerunt vocem ſuam Lycaonicè dicentes, &c. Act. 14. And ſo S. Hierome is to be vnderſtanded to ſpeake in that place, not of all men of the Nations of the Eaſt, but rather of a great number, and of ſome perſons of all Nations. For elſe, if all the Eaſt had ſpoken Greeke, the Souldiers that buried Cordianus the yonger Emperour, apud Circeium Caſtrum, at Circey Caſtle, neere to the land of Perſie, would not haue written his title of honor vpon his Sepulchre, in Greeke and Latine, in the Perſians, Iewes, and Egyptians tongues, vt ab omnibus legeretur, that it might be read of all, as Iulius Capitolinus writeth. Which is an argument, that all the Eaſt ſpake not, nor vnderſtood not the Greeke tongue. As likewiſe that Epiphanius writeth, where hee ſaith thus: Moſt of the Perſians after the Perſicall letters, vſe alſo the Syrians letters. As with vs many Nations vſe the Greeke letters, yea where as in euery Nation in maner, they haue letters of their owne. And others ſome much eſteeme the profound tongue of the Syrians, and the tongue that is about Palmyra, both the tongue it ſelfe, and alſo the letters of the ſame. Bookes alſo haue beene written of Manes in the Syrians tongue. Againe, if all the Eaſt had ſpoken Greeke, ſundry the holy Fathers would not haue beene ſo enuious to the common weale of the Church, as to hide their ſingular workes from the reading of all, which they wrote in barbarous and vulgar tongues, to the commoditie only of their brethren that vnderſtood the ſame: Antonius that wrote ſeuen notable Epiſtles to diuers Monaſteries of Apoſtolike ſenſe and ſpeech, as S. Hierome witneſſeth in the Egyptian tongue. Likewiſe holy Ephrem of Edeſſa, Bardeſanes of Meſopotamia, who wrote very excellent workes in the Syriacall tongue. Euen ſo did Iſaac of Antioch, and Samuel of Edeſſa Prieſts, write many goodly workes againſt the enemies of the Church in the ſame tongue, as Gennadius recordeth. But what ſhall we ſpeake of all the Eaſt? Neither all the Leſſe Aſia and the Countries there adioining, ſpake not Greeke one generation before the comming of Chriſt. For if all had ſpoken Greeke, Mithridates that renowmed King of Pontus, had not needed to haue learned two and twenty languages of ſo many Nations hee was King ouer, to make anſwer to ſuiters, to appoint them Orders and Lawes, and in open audience to ſpeake to them in ſo many languages without an Interpreter, as Plinie writeth. Heere if theſe 22. Nations of 22. ſundry tongues, had alſo beſide their owne language ſpoken Greeke and vnderſtanded the ſame, Plinie would not haue vttered that word ſine Interprete, without an Interpreter. And likewiſe that King had taken vaine labour in learning thoſe tongues, where one might haue ſerued his turne.

In Gordiano. Lib. 2. hiſt. 66

Li. de Enſeſſ. aſt Script.

Natura. hiſtor. lib. 7. cap. 24.

Lib. 6 Natu. rall hiſt. cap. 5. Neere to this Kings dominion, in the ſhore of the Sea Euxinus, in the Land of Colchis, there ſtood a Citie named Dioſcurias, ſo much haunted of ſtrangers, that, as Plinie writeth by record of Thimoſthenes, it was reſorted vnto of three hundred Nations of diſtinct languages, and that the Romans for the better expedition of their affaires there, had at length lying in the ſame 130. Interpreters. Now if all the Orient had ſpoken Greeke, as S. Hieromes words ſeeme to import, the Romans ſhould not haue needed to haue maintained there to their great charges, ſo great a number of interpreters, to bee their agents there. But for proofe that all the Orient ſpake not Greeke, what need wee allege prophane Writers? The knowen place of the Acts maketh mention of ſundrie Nations there, that had diſtinct languages, the Parthians, Medians, and Elamites, &c. Act. 2.

To conclude, they that to maintaine their ſtrange opinion of the Vniuerſall vnderſtanding of the Seruice vſed of old time in the Eaſt Church, ſay and affirme, that all the Orient ſpake Greeke; ſeeme much to diminiſh the Maieſtie, Vtilitie, and neceſſitie of the miraculous gift of tongues, which the Holy Ghoſt gaue in the Primitiue Church, for the better furtherance of the Goſpell. For if all in thoſe parties had ſpoken Greeke, the gift of tongues had beene in that reſpect needleſſe. Hitherto of the Greeke (72) and of the Seruice in that language.

The 72. vntruth. For hee hath not hitherto ſpoken one word of the Seruice.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

This labour may well be called Vanitas vanitatum. For it is a great token of idleneſſe, to be ſo earneſt, and ſo copious in proouing that thing that no man denieth. And yet hee forceth the matter ſo, as if all the right of his cauſe lay vpon it. Hee might as well haue proued that the Indians, Arabians, Ethiopians, Tartarians, vnderſtood no Greeke. It is a leaud kinde of Logicke, ſo ſtoutly to proue that thing that needeth no proofe: and to leaue the thing that ſhould be proued. The title of the Croſſe written in three ſundry languages, as it teſtifieth that the Nations of the Eaſt part of the World ſpake not all one tongue, which thing is not of any wiſe man denied, ſo it proueth plainly againſt M. Harding, that the Death of Chriſt ſhould be publiſhed in all tongues. For as Albertus and Lyra, M. Hardings owne Doctors, haue witneſſed, writing vpon the ſame; Therefore was the Title by Gods ſpeciall prouiſion drawen in the three principall Languages: Vt omnes qui de diuerſis orbis partibus venerant, poſſent illum legere: That all they that were then come to Hieruſalem out of ſundry parts of the World, might bee able to reade it. S. Hierome likewiſe ſaith, the ſame title was ſo written: In teſtimonium vniuerſarum gentium: For the witneſſe of all Nations. For it was the will of God, that euery tongue ſhould confeſſe that Chriſt is the Lord in the glorie of the Father.

Albertus & Lyra in 19. cap. Iohan.

Hieron. in Eſai lib. 7. cap. 20.

Wherein M. Harding much abridgeth the glorie of the Croſſe of Chriſt, that would the title thereof to pertaine only to the wiſe and learned of the Greekes. For Albertus and Lyra ſay, It was ſo written that all might reade it. And as S. Hierome ſaith, For witneſſe of all Nations. Neither can wee finde, that there was any great number of Philoſophers preſent at Chriſts death, to read that Title. As for S. Auguſtine, by theſe words, Sapientes Græcorum, he vnderſtandeth All the Greekes. For as all the Iewes generally gloried of the Law, euen ſo all the Greekes generally gloried in their wiſedome. And S. Paul ſaith generally of them both: Iudæi ſignum quærunt: Græci ſapientiam: The Iewes call for ſigns and miracles: and the Greekes call for knowledge. And therefore one of the Philoſophers ſaid, In old times there were ſeuen wiſe men among the Greekes, but now there are not ſo many fooles: for that they all gloried in their wiſedome.

1. Cor. 1.

The people of Lycaonia ſpake vnto Paul and Barnabas, Lycaonicè: Ergo, ſaith M. Harding, They ſpake no Greeke. But what if S. Luke had ſaid, they ſpake Ionicè, Æolicè, or Doricè, which tongues were adioining faſt vpon Lycaonia; would hee therefore conclude, they ſpake no Greeke? Verily if a man by way of contention would ſay, the Lycaonicall tongue was a corruption or difference of the Greeke tongue, and not a ſeuerall tongue of it ſelfe, M. Harding ſhould haue much adoe to proue the contrary. Doubtleſſe, they worſhipped Iuppiter and Mercurie, that were the Gods of the Greekes, and had the Greeke Sacrifice, as it manifeſtly appeareth by the words of S. Luke, and it may bee credibly gathered, that Paul and Barnabas ſpake to them in Greeke. Howbeit, whether it were ſo, or otherwiſe, ſauing that M. Harding maketh the matter ſo certaine, it importeth nothing.

Act. 14.

But this one thing, good Reader, I giue thee further to conſider. Theſe Lycaonians, as M. Harding confeſſeth, and as plainly appeareth by S. Luke, being yet Infidels, made their praiers vnto their Idols, Iuppiter and Mercurie, in their owne tongue. And may it any wiſe ſeeme likely, that the ſame being afterward become Chriſtians, made their praiers vnto Almighty God, and to Chriſt his Sonne in a ſtrange tongue? If it behoue Idolaters to vnderſtand their owne praiers, much more it behoueth the people of God to doe the like. Certainly if the ſame Lycaonians were now aliue, they would reproue M. Hardings errour in their owne tongue.

Act. 14.

The blaſing of the yong Emperour Gordians graue with fiue ſundrie languages, like as it was needleſſe in this place, as all the reſt, the matter being confeſſed, euen ſo it weigheth very much againſt M. Hardings ſide. For if the barbarous Souldiers of their dutie and allegeance towards their Prince, thought his death worthie to bee publiſhed in ſo many tongues, what may then bee thought of them that cannot ſuffer the Death of Chriſt to bee publiſhed in any one tongue? And if they ſo furniſhed a mortall mans memorie, as Capitolinus ſaith, Vt ab omnibus legeretur: That it might be read of all men: Why then doe theſe men ſo hide and burie the immortall memory of the the glory of Christ, that sauing themselues, they would haue it to be read and seene of no Man?

The allegation of the Persians and Syrians letters: of the tongue vsed about Palmyra: of Epistles written in the Egyptians tongue by Antonius, in the Syrian tongue by Bardesanes, Ephrem, Isaac and Samuel: of Mithridates the King of Pontus, that was able to answer two and twenty Nations, that were his subiects, without an Interpreter; of the resort of three hundred sundrie Nations vnto the City called Dioscurias in Colchis; and once againe of the Miracle of tongues and diuersity of languages in the Acts of the Apostles, hath some shew, and ostentation of learning, and serueth well either to fill vp rome, or else to reproue, and controle S. Hierome: for that he saith; All the East part of the World speaketh Greeke: For against vs, that neither write so, nor speake so, it maketh nothing.

We know, that by meane of the great Empire, that the Grækes had gotten ouer many Countries and Kingdomes in all the East, and partly also for that the Barbarous Nations whom they had subdued, had great pleasure in their Philosophie, and other skilfull knowledge, the Græke tongue was learned of many, and carried about into all places of that part of the World: and that Cicero therefore saith; Græca leguntur in omnibus ferè gentibus: The Greeke tongue is read in maner amongst all Nations. And S. Augustine likewise; Quos Paulus dixit Græcos, eos etiam Gentium nomine significauit: eò quod hæc Lingua maximè excellit in Gentibus, Whom Paul called Greekes, them also hee vttred by the name of the Gentiles: for that the same tongue chiefly excelleth among the Gentiles. And yet we doubt not, but there were other naturall tongues and speeches to, besides the Græke; as the Egyptian, the Syrian, the Arabicke, the Persian, the Bactrian, the Indian, the Armenian, the Scythian, and many others. And if I list here to dally for pleasure, and vainly to carry away the Reader from the purpose, as M. Harding doth, I could say, that Themistocles a Gentleman of Athens, before he presented himselfe vnto the Great King of Persia, first learned to speake the Persians tongue; that the Nestorian Heretikes translated their bookes into the Persian, Armenian, and Syrian tongue; that S. Augustine saith, that S. Hierome vnderstood the Hebrew, the Græke, the Chaldee, the Latine, the Persian, the Arabick and the Median tongue; and that S. Chrysostome saith; So many tongues and voices there be of the Scythians, of the Thracians, of the Romans, of the Persians, of the Moores, of the Indians, of the Egyptians, and of a thousand Nations beside. With many other authorities to like purpose, to auouch the thing, that M. Harding so earnestly proueth, and no man denieth; that the Nations of the East part of the World had seuerall tongues, and spake not all one only tongue.

Cicero pro Archia.

Plutarchus in Themistocle, Liberatus, ca. 10.

Augustin. ad Cyrill. citatur à Petro Crinito, lib. 6. cap. 6.

Chrysostom. in 1. Corin. 14. homil. 35.

Let M. Harding therefore consider better, who they be, that, as he saith, Denie the Maiesty, Vtility, and necessity of the gift of tongues. For we confesse, that the knowledge thereof is necessary, not only for the furtherance, but also for the continuance of the Gospell; neither doe we doubt but by what tongues the Heathens were conuerted vnto God, by the same tongues they made their petitions vnto God; the contrary whereof M. Harding by his silence confesseth he cannot proue. Which notwithstanding, he palleth ouer the matter by these words; Hitherto of the Greeke, and of the Seruice in that language: And so endeth this peece of his treaty with a piety vntruth, hauing indeed proued somewhat of the tongue: but of the Seruice, whereupon his whole cause resteth, not one word at all.

Which thing, that it may the better appeare, let vs lay together the parts and members of his argument. His Maior is this: All Asia the lesse had the Seruice in the Greeke tongue; The Minor, But many Countries of the said Asia vnderstood not the Greeke tongue; The conclusion; Ergo, Many Countries had their Seruice in an vnknowen tongue. The Minor he warranteth but by ghesse only, and none otherwise: although both S. Luke in the nineteenth of the Acts, and also the very story of the times following, be to the contrary. The Maior he toucheth not at all. Therefore his Syllogismus halteth downe right of one side, and concludeth only vpon the Minor. And thus M. Harding shoareth vp his strange doctrine, with a strange Maior, a strange Minor, and a strange conclusion.

M. Hardings Syllogismus.

M. Harding. The 11. Diuision.

Now concerning the Latine tongue, which is the learned tongue of the West. That the Latine Church, or the West Church, for so it is called, had the Seruice in latine, I grant. The chiefe Regions and Countries of the Latine Church, within the foresaid six hundred yeeres, were these; Italy, Aphricke, Illyricke, both Pannonies, now called Hungary, and Austria; Gallia, now France; and Spaine. The Countrie of Germany, Pole and Swethen, and those North parts receiued the Faith long sithence. The Countries of Britaine heere had receiued the Faith in most places, but were driuen from the open profession of it againe, by the cruell persecution of Diocletian the Emperour: at which persecution S. Albane with many others suffered Martyrdome.

The 73. vntruth. For the firſt preaching of ỹ Faith in theſe Weſt Countries came not firſt from [illegible].

The 74. vntruth. For the firſt preachers themſelues ſpake no Latine.

After that theſe Countries had beene inſtructed in the Faith, as things grew to perfection, they had their Seruice accordingly; no doubt ſuch as was vſed in the Churches, from whence their firſt Apoſtles, and Preachers were ſent. And becauſe (73) the firſt Preachers of the Faith came to theſe Weſt parts from Rome, directed ſome from S. Peter, ſome from Clement, ſome others afterward from other Biſhops of that See Apoſtolike: they planted and ſet vp in the Countries by them conuerted, the Seruice of the Church of Rome, or ſome other very like, and that (74) in the Latine tongue only, for ought that can be ſhewed to the contrary. Wherein I referre me only to the firſt ſix hundred yeeres. Now that ſuch Seruice was vnderſtanded of thoſe peoples, that ſpake and vnderſtood Latine, no man denieth. For to ſome Nations that was a native, and a Mother tongue, as the Greeke was to the Grecians.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The faith came not firſt from Rome.

M. Harding wittingly and willingly auoucheth vntruth. Ad Roman. 15 Theodoret. de curand. Græc. affect. Beda in Hiſto. Anglo. lib. 2. Galfrid. li 8. ca. 4. Auentinus in Hiſtoria Boiorum. 2. Ad Timoth. 4. Tertull. contra Marcion. li. 2. Auguſt. Epiſt. 178.

I finde no fault with M. Hardings Coſmographie: but I trow, Coſmographie in this caſe maketh ſmall proofe. His proofe for the Latine Seruice hangeth vpon two points. The firſt is, that all the faith of the Weſt part of the World, came only from the Biſhops of Rome. The ſecond is, that the planters of the ſame Faith miniſtred the Common Seruice euery where in the Latine tongue. He knoweth well, that either of theſe points is vntrue, and will neuer be proued. And ſomewhat to touch hereof by the way, S. Paul ſaith: That he himſelfe had filled all places with the Goſpell of Chriſt, euen as farre as Illyricum: and that not from Rome, but from Hieruſalem: and premiſeth that he would paſſe by Rome into Spaine, as by report of ſome, afterward he did: and Theodoretus ſaith, that Paul came into this Iland, now called England, and here planted the Goſpell. The like is commonly ſurmiſed by the Writers of the Britiſh Chronicles, of Ioſeph of Arimathæa. And although coniectures in ſuch antiquities be often vncertaine and darke, yet it may ſeeme very likely, that the Religion of Chriſt came firſt into this Iland, not from Rome, but from the Greekes: both for that in the keeping of Eaſter day, we followed the Church of Græcia, and not the Church of Rome: and alſo for that, when Auguſtine was ſent in hither by Gregory, we would in no wiſe acknowledge or receiue the Biſhop of Rome. As for Lazarus, Nathaniel, Saturninus, that preached firſt in France, I haue ſaid before. Auentinus ſaith, Lucius, S. Pauls companion, went into Germany: and S. Paul ſaith, Titus went into Dalmatia.

It is knowen that the Church of Rome, for certaine other cauſes, and namely for the great State and Renowme of that City, euen from the beginning was notable aboue all others, and was carefull in enlarging the Glory of Chriſt, and yelded many Martyrs vnto God. Yet may we not thinke that all things therefore came from Rome. For Tertullian calleth Hieruſalem, Matrem & Fontem Religionis: The Mother and the Spring of Religion. And S. Auguſtine ſaith; Fides orta eſt à Græcis: The Faith ſprange firſt from the Greekes.

Now that he further ſaith, The planters of the Faith in all theſe Weſt Countries, made the Common Prayers euery where in the Latine tongue; beſides that it is manifeſtly falſe, as, God willing, hereafter ſhall well appeare, it hath not, no not ſo much, as any likelihood or ſhew of truth.

For good Reader, conſider this reaſon: The planters of the Faith came from Rome; Ergo, They kept euery where the order of Rome. If this argument would hold, then would I likewiſe reaſon thus: The Church of Rome was firſt planted by them that came from Græcia, or from Hieruſalem: Ergo, Rome keepeth the order of Græcia, or of Hieruſalem. But M. Harding preſuming this of himſelfe, without other proofe, that the Churches of theſe Countries followed the order of the Church of Rome, concludeth further: Ergo, They had their Seruice in Latine, as had the Church of Rome. Euery childe ſeeth that this is a Fallax, or a deceitfull argument called, A ſecundùm quid ad ſimpliciter. He might aſwell haue ſaid thus: They followed the order of the Church of Rome: Ergo, They had their Exhortations and Sermons in Latine: for ſo had the Church of Rome. But is M. Harding ſo vnaduiſed, or ſo negligent in his matters, that he ſeeth not, how aptly his owne argument reboundeth vpon himſelfe? Verily of this ground we may in good forme and truly reaſon thus: Theſe Churches of the Weſt followed the order of the Church of Rome (This he himſelfe hath taken as an vndoubted truth.)

M. Hardings reaſon againſt himſelfe.

But the Church of Rome had the Seruice in the naturall knowen tongue (which thing he himſelfe alſo granteth.)

Ergo, Theſe Churches of the Weſt had the Seruice in the naturall knowen tongue.

This argument is ſound and perfect, and without Fallax.

Againe, he might eaſily haue ſeene, that of his owne poſition and principle, another neceſſary argument might ſone grow againſt him in this wiſe:

All Churches that receiued their Faith from Rome, kept the orders of the Church of Rome.

But the Church of England followed not the orders of the Church of Rome: as it is moſt manifeſt by the keeping of the Eaſter day, and by refuſing of the Biſhop there, as it is already ready proued: Ergo, The Church of England receiued not her Faith from the Church of Rome. If M. Harding had better aduised himselfe, he would not haue built vpon these grounds.

M. Harding. The 12. Diuision.

M. Iewel alleging for the hauing of the Praiers, and Seruice in a vulgar tongue (as for England, in the English, for Ireland in the Irish, for Duchland in the Dutch tongue, &c.) authorities and examples of the Churches (where in the time of the Primitiue Church, the Greeke and Latine tongue was the vsuall and common tongue of the people) bringeth nothing for proofe of that which lieth in controuersie. Arnobius, saith he, called the Latine tongue, Sermonem Italum: S. Ambrose in Millaine, S. Augustine in Aphricke, S. Gregory in Rome preached in Latine, and the people vnderstood them. What then? No man denieth you this. S. Basil also speaketh of a sound, which the Men, Women and Children made in their praiers to God, like the sound of a waue striking the sea bankes. What can you conclude of this necessarily M. Iewel? All this may bee vnderstanded of the sounding that one word, Amen, answered at the praiers end, which is done now by the Quire, and may be done by the people also, in the lower part of the Church. For S. Hierome leadeth vs so to thinke: who commending the deuotion of the people of Rome, saith in like maner: Vbi sic ad similitudinem cœlestis tonitrui, Amen reboat, & vacua idolorum templa quatiuntur? Where else are the Churches and the Sepulchres of Martyrs, with so feruent deuotion, and with so great company resorted vnto? (which words go before where doth Amen giue so loud a sound like the thunderclap out of the aire, so as the Temples emptied of Idols, shake with it, as at Rome?

Hexamer. hom. 4.

In 2. Proœmio comment. ad Galat.

The people speaketh with the Priest at the Mysticall praiers, saith Chrysostome, alleged by M. Iewell. What then? So was it long before, euen in the Apostles time, as we read in Clement, and likewise in S. Cyprian, in Cyrillus Hierosolymitanus, and many other. So is it now. For he shall finde in the old Fathers, that to Per omnia secula seculorum, (which Chrysostome speaketh of) to Dominus vobiscum: (so light as they make of it) to Sursum corda: and to Gratias agamus Domino Deo nostro, the people answered (75) as now also they answer, Amen, & Cum spiritu tuo, Habemus ad Dominum, Dignum & iustum est.

Constitut. Apostolicarum lib 8 ca. 16 in oratione Mystagogica.

The 75. vntruth. For it is not so now. M. Harding knoweth, The people now answereth not the Priest.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here M. Harding taketh in hand to answer the authorities by me alleged, and that with this speciall note of remembrance in the Margin, M. Iewels allegation solued. It appeareth, his solutions be very short. For whatsoeuer authority be alleged, it is sufficient, for him to say, What then? For whereas I said, the Common Seruice and Ministration in the Churches of Rome and Millaine, and other places within Italy, was pronounced vnto the people in Latine, for that then the Latine tongue was the common naturall speech of that Country, and that therefore Arnobius calleth the same Latine tongue Sermonem Italum: and further said, that long after that time, S. Ambrose in Millaine, S. Augustine in Aphrica, and S. Gregorie in Rome Preached vnto the Vulgar People in Latine, and in the same tongue ministred the Common Praiers: all this is sone answered: for M. Harding saith, What then?

I alleged the saying of S. Basil, That the sound of Men, Women, and Children praying in the Church together, seemed like the sound of the waues beating against the sea bankes: the saying of S. Hierome, That the noise of the people sounding out Amen, together, was like the sound of a thunder. Likewise the saying of Chrysostome: Cõmunes preces & à populo, & à Sacerdote fiunt & omnes vnam dicunt orationem. Bene precatur Sacerdos populo, & bene precatur populus Sacerdoti, &c. Common petitions be made together, both of the people and of the Priest, all together say one Praier. The Priest wisheth well vnto the People, and the People vnto the Priest. But What then, saith M. Harding? Why, What then? Thinketh M. Harding that the authority of Arnobius, S. Ambrose, S. Augustine, S. Basil, S. Hierome, S. Chrysostome, and other holy Fathers is so light, that he is able to blow them all away with these two vaine syllables, What then? He will say: I grant you the Praiers were vsed in the Greeke and Latine tongue. But ye haue not prooued the same of any other tongue that was barbarous. I haue already proued the same of the Syrian tongue, which is neither Greeke nor Latine: and therefore by M. Hardings iudgement, meere barbarous. Hereafter, God willing, I shall shew the like largely and at full, of other tongues. In the meane season, it may stand M. Harding in good stead, if it shall please him to shew these priuileges granted vnto the Greeke and Latine tongue, and how they be specially sanctified aboue others: that in them only we may make our common Petitions vnto God, and in other tongues we may not make them. Touching the place of S. Basil, and the other of S. Chrysostome, M. Harding answereth so, as though he had no great regard what he say. For he auoucheth that thing for true, that the simplest of all the people, knoweth to be apparant false, that is, That the people now answereth the Priest in the time of the holy Mysteries, as they did in Chrysostomes time. The people (saith he) answered then, as now also they answer. He taketh no shame to say, The people answered the Priest, and yet knoweth, that the people answereth not the Priest. Thus by this Resolution, he answereth that answereth nothing. He answereth that knoweth not, neither what is demanded, nor what to answer. To be short, he answe-

Basil. Hexamer. 4. Hieron. in Secundo proœmio ad Galat. Chrysostom. 2. Corin. hom. 18.

The priuiledge of the Greeke and Latine tongue.

M. Harding auoucheth open vntruth.

reth that holdeth his peace: and ſo, anſwering and not anſwering, in M. Hardings iudge-
Chryſ. in 2. ad Cor. hom. 18. ment is all one thing. But S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Et cum Spiritu tuo, nihil aliud eſt, quàm ea, quæ ſunt Euchariſtiæ, communia ſunt omnia. Neque enim ille ſolus gratias agit, ſed populus omnis: The Lord be with thy ſpirit, (which words the whole people anſwereth vnto the Prieſt) is nothing elſe to ſay, but, The things that pertaine to thankeſgiuing, are all common. For it is not the Prieſt only, that giueth thanks, but alſo all the people. Likewiſe S. Ambroſe:
Ambroſ. in 1. Cor. 14. Imperitus neſcit finem orationis, & non reſpondet Amen, id eſt, Verum ſit, vt firmetur benedictio. Per hoc enim impletur confirmatio precis, cùm reſpondetur Amen, & omnia dicta rei teſtimonio in audientium animis confirmantur: The ignorant knoweth not the end of the Praier, and anſwereth not, Amen, that is to ſay, So be it, that the bleſſing may bee confirmed. For thereby the confirmation of the Praier is fulfilled, when Amen is anſwered, and all the words that be ſpoken, by the teſtimony of the thing it ſelfe are confirmed in the mindes of the hearers. Thus in Chryſoſtomes time the whole People and the Prieſt, in their Common Seruice talkt and prayed together.

M. Harding. The 13. Diuiſion.

A bare Gloſſe. For S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of praiing, and not of preaching.

As for the place hee allegeth out of S. Auguſtine vpon the Pſalmes, it maketh nothing for his purpoſe. S. Auguſtines words bee theſe, otherwiſe than hee reporteth them: Quid hoc ſit, intelligere debemus, vt humana ratione, non quaſi auium voce, cantemus. Nam & merula, & pſittaci, & cornì, & picæ, & huiuſcemodi volucres, ſæpe ab hominibus docentur ſonare, quod neſciunt: Hauing praied to God (ſaith S. Auguſtine) that he make vs cleane of our priuie ſinnes, &c. Wee ought to vnderſtand what this is, that wee may ſing with mans reaſon, not with voice, as birds doe. For Owſels, Popiniaies, Rauens and Pies, and ſuch the like birds, oft times bee taught of men to ſound they know not what. Theſe words are to bee taken of the vnderſtanding of the ſenſe, not of the tongue, which the Seruice is ſung in. For the people of Hippo, where hee was Biſhop, vnderſtood the Latine tongue meanly. Which ſenſe cannot rightly and ſafely bee attained of the common people, but is better and more holeſomely taught, by the preaching of the learned Biſhops and Prieſts. In Pſalm. 11. in expoſition ſecunda.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Firſt he ſaith, S. Auguſtines words be otherwiſe than I repoꝛt them. I aſſure thẽ, god Reader, if this great erreur had bene woꝛth the ſhewing, it had neuer bene ſuffered thus to paſſe in ſilence.

But to ſhift off S. Auguſtines woꝛds, heere is bꝛought in a Gloſſe plaine contrary to the text. For this compariſon (ſaith M. Harding) betweene Men and Birds, muſt bee taken, not of the words, but of the ſenſe and vnderſtanding. And what reaſon leadeth him thus to ſay? Verily Birds are vtterly void of reaſon, and neither vnderſtand the woꝛds they be taught to ſpeake, noꝛ the meaning of the woꝛds. And yet muſt wee onely vpon this ſimple warrant, needes beleeue, that S. Auguſtine compareth Birds with Men in vnderſtanding?

S. Auguſtines meaning is plaine, as is the meaning of other godly Fathers in this behalfe, That the people ſhould know what they pray, and ſo ſing with reaſon agreeable to a Man, and not chatter with voice as Birds doe. For if they Sing or Pray, they know not what, he ſaith, that for their ſound of voice, and want of ſenſe, they may bee well compared with Owſels or Popiniaies. This is the very drift of S. Auguſtines meaning. Birds by skill may bee trained to reꝛeꝛd, and ſound Mens woꝛds, although they haue no vnderſtanding of them: As Plinius wꝛiteth of the Rauen, that was taught to ſay, Aue Cæſar Imperator: All haile Emperour Cæſar: another that had learned to ſay, Salue Victor Antoni: All haile Antonius the Conquerour. And Cælius Rhodiginus wꝛiteth, that Cardinall Aſcanius had a Popiniay, that could pꝛonounce diſtinctly all the Articles of the Creed. With ſuch Birds let vs compare ſuch Men as pꝛay they know not what. They bee taught to ſound words, but vnderſtand not the meaning of them: neither ſing they with reaſon agreeable to a Man. Whether theſe woꝛds agree aptly to my purpoſe, oꝛ no, let M. Harding himſelfe be the Iudge. Certainly he ſhall haue much to do, to rack them to ſerue foꝛ his purpoſe. Vnleſſe perhaps he will reaſon thus: S. Auguſtine exhorteth Men to know what they pray: Ergo, They may pray in an vnknown tongue: Oꝛ thus: S. Auguſtine willeth Men not to ſing or chatter like Birds: Ergo, They may pray, they know not what.

Celius Rhodigin l. 3. ca. 32.

And if wee receiue M. Hardings gloſſe of Senſe and Vnderſtanding, yet ſtandeth hee in caſe, as he did beſoꝛe. Foꝛ if the people vnderſtand not the woꝛds, much leſſe can they vnderſtand the ſenſe and meaning of the ſame woꝛds. Ariſtotle ſaith, Hearing is the peculiar ſenſe of learning: and thereſoꝛe they that heare neuer, can neuer learne. And Cicero
Ci. de Oratore. ſaith: Sententia conſtare non poteſt, ſi verba ſemoueris: Remoue the words, and their meaning cannot ſtand. Thereſoꝛe this ſhift helpeth nothing. Vnleſſe he thinke this is a good argument: The people ought to vnderſtand the meaning of their praiers: Ergo, they need not to vnderſtand the words. S. Auguſtines meaning appeareth in the next woꝛds that immediately follow: Scienter Cantare, naturæ hominis diuina voluntate conceſſum eſt: To Sing with vnderſtanding,

Auguſt. in Pſalm. 18.

vnderſtanding, is granted through Gods will, vnto the Nature of man. And therefore thus hee exhorteth the people: Chariſſimi, quod conſona voce cantauimus, ſereno etiam corde noſſe & tenere debemus: Deerely beloued, that wee haue ſung together with tuneable voice, wee muſt vnderſtand and keepe with pure heart. But this can we not doe, vnleſſe wee vnderſtand what we pray. Therefore S. Baſil ſaith: Lingua cantet; mens autem ſcrutetur ſenſum eorum quæ dicuntur: Let thy tongue ſing; but let thy minde ſearch out the meaning of the things that thou ſpeakeſt. Iuſtinians Conſtitution. Baſil. in Pſ. 28.

M. Harding. The 14. Diuiſion.

De Eccleſiaſtica diuerſit. reprou. Conſtitutione 123. Greg. Haloander interprete. Nemo in veteri tranſlatione nihil tale habet. par. poyns. Cap. 1.

The commandement of Iuſtinian the Emperour, which M. Iewell allegeth, that Biſhops and Prieſts ſhould celebrate the holy Oblation, or Sacrifice, which we call the Maſſe, not cloſely, but with vtterance, and ſound of voice, that they might be heard of the people, maketh nothing for the Seruice to bee had in the Engliſh tongue, in the Church of England, or in any other Vulgar tongue, in the Church of any other Nation: but requireth only of the Biſhops and Prieſts, open pronouncing, Vocall, not Mentall: ſpeaking, not whiſpering with the breath onely, in the celebration of the holy Sacrifice, and other Seruice. Wherein hee agreeth with S. Auguſtine, who in his booke De Magiſtro, ſaith, that when we pray, there is no need of ſpeaking, vnleſſe perhaps we doe as Prieſts doe, who when they pray (in publike aſſemblie) vſe ſpeaking for cauſe of ſignifying their minde, that is, to ſhew that they pray, not to the intent God, but men may heare, and with a certaine conſent, through putting in minde (by ſound of voice) may bee lifted vp vnto God. Thus much S. Auguſtine there. And this is the right meaning of that Conſtitution. (76) And thus hee ordained for the Greeke Church only, and thereto only it is to bereferred, for that ſome thought the Sacrifice ſhould be celebrated rather with ſilence, (77) after the maner of the Church of Rome, ſpecially at the Conſecration. And as that Conſtitution pertained to the Greekes, and not to the Latines, ſo was it not found in the Latine Bookes, vntill Gregorius Haloander of Germanie, of late yeeres tranſlated the place. And where M. Iewell allegeth this commandement of Iuſtinian, againſt the hauing of the Seruice in a learned tongue, vnknowen to the common people, it is to be noted, how he demeaneth himſelfe not vprightly, but ſo as euery man may thereby know a Scholar of Luther, Caluin, and Peter Martyr. For whereas, by the allegation of that ordinance, he might ſeeme to bring ſomewhat that maketh for the bleſſed Sacrifice of the Church, commonly named the Maſſe, hee diſſembleth the word of the Sacrifice, which Iuſtinian putteth expreſly, τὴν θείαν προσφορὰν, Id eſt, diuinam oblationem, The diuine or holy Oblation, and termeth it otherwiſe in his replies, by the name of Common Praiers; and in his Sermon, by the name of the words of the Miniſtration, refuſing the word of the Church, no leſſe than hee refuſeth to be a member of the Church. Thus through Foiſting and Cogging their Die, and other falſe play, theſe new perillous Teachers, deceiue many poore ſoules, and robbe them of the ſure ſimplicitie of their Faith. And where was this Commandement giuen? In Conſtantinople, the chiefe Citie of Greece, where the Greeke tongue was commonly knowen.

The 76. vntruth. For it touched the whole Empire.

The 77. vntruth. For the Prieſts in Rome praied aloud, as appeareth by S. Hierome, Leo, Ambroſe, &c.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The Gloſſe that M. Harding hath heere imagined, wherewith to defeat this good Emperours whole purpoſe, may ſeeme ſomewhat vnto the ignorant.

Iuſtinian (ſaith hee) ſpeaketh of the open vtterance and ſound of voice, and agreeth with S. Auguſtines place, De Magiſtro: Therefore it nothing toucheth Praiers to bee had in the Vulgar Tongue. Heere is a very Vulgar Concluſion, as (I truſt) hereafter it ſhall appeare. Good Chriſtian Reader, if it ſhall pleaſe thee only to peruſe theſe words of the Emperour Iuſtinian, and of S. Auguſtine, by vs alleged, I will make thee Iudge and Arbitrour of the whole.

S. Auguſtine ſaith, Wee neede no vtterance of voice, to pray vnto God. For the Sacrifice of Iuſtice is ſanctified in the Temple of our minde, and in the ſecret Chamber of our heart. As Clemens Alexandrinus alſo ſaith: God looketh not for the voices of our tongues to declare our meaning: For before our Creation hee knoweth what thoughts would come into our mindes. And therefore God ſaith in the Prophet Eſay: Antequam clament, ego exaudiam: I will heare them, yea before they crie. Clem. ſtrom. lib. 7. Eſay 65.

Hereupon S. Auguſtine demandeth this queſtion: Wherefore then doth the Prieſt lift vp his voice, and pray aloud, in the open aſſemblie in the Church? Hee anſwereth: Not that God, but that men may heare him: that the people, by the ſound of his voice, and vnderſtanding his meaning, may be put in minde, and by conſent be ioined together, and be lifted vp to God. This is the very meaning and minde of S. Auguſtine, agreeing fully with theſe words of S. Cyprian: The Prieſt before praier prepareth the mindes of his brethren, ſaying thus: Lift vp your hearts: to the intent they may be put in minde, they ought to thinke of nothing elſe, but of the Lord. For not the ſound of voice, but the mind and vnderſtanding, muſt pray vnto the Lord with pure intention. Cypr. de Orat. Dominica.

All this (ſaith M. Harding) pertaineth to the ſenſe and vnderſtanding of the Praier, and nothing to the Vulgar Tongue. And doth hee thinke the people can vnderſtand the praier, without vnderſtanding of the tongue? S. Auguſtine, if hee were aline, would bee aſhamed to ſee ſuch a Comment vpon his words. He ſaith further: The Prieſt lifteth vp his voice, not that the people may vnderſtand him, but only for a token, to ſhew that hee praieth. And thus he maketh the Miniſter of God worſe than a Brazen Trumpet, which, if it giue no certaine ſound, as S. Paul ſaith, no man can prepare himſelfe to warre. This is the iuſt iudgement of God, that who ſo ſeeketh to blinde others, ſhall be giuen ouer, and become blinde himſelfe. 1. Cor. 14.

And

Iuſtinians Conſtitution.

And notwithſtanding S. Auguſtines minde, concerning the ſpeaking of the Prieſt, be plaine in it ſelfe, yet afterward in the ſame Booke hée openeth it in this maner more at large: Conſtat inter nos, verba eſſe ſigna: At ſignum, niſi aliquid ſignificet, non eſt ſignum: Wee are agreed vpon this, that the words we ſpeake be tokens. But a token, vnleſſe it betoken ſomething, is no token. Now if the Prieſt, after M. Hardings conſtruction, vtter his words, which are the tokens of his meaning, in an vnknowen tongue, and the people vnderſtand not what is tokened, according to S. Auguſtines meaning, he ſpeaketh, and yet ſaith nothing: and sheweth tokens, and yet tokeneth nothing. Further, S. Auguſtines words be cléere: The Prieſt in the Aſſembly ſpeaketh aloud, Significandæ mentis cauſa, vt homines audiant, &c. To the end to declare his minde, that men may heare him, and by the ſound of his voice be put in remembrance. But M. Harding ſaith, No, the Prieſt ſpeaketh not aloud, to the intent to declare his minde, neither that men may heare him, nor be put in remembrance, but only to giue a token that he praieth. And thus by his Gloſſe hée vtterly deſtroieth the text.

Auguſt. de Magiſtro.

The Reſolution of M. Hardings reaſon.

Now let vs reſolue both S. Auguſtines and Iuſtinians words, into their cauſes: which is an infallible way of vnderſtanding. The end of them both is, according to the Doctrine of S. Paul, that the people may ſay, Amen. Then further: The people muſt anſwer Amen, vnto the Praier: Then they muſt vnderſtand the Praier. Yet further: The People muſt vnderſtand the Praier: Then muſt the Prieſt vtter the ſame Praier, both with a loud voice, and alſo in the Peoples vulgar Tongue. Let vs againe reſolue it forward. The Prieſt, by M. Hardings iudgement, may pray openly in a ſtrange Tongue: Then he néedeth not to ſpeake aloud. Hée ſpeaketh not aloud: Then cannot the people vnderſtand him. The people vnderſtandeth not the Prieſt: Then can they not ſay, Amen. Thus M. Harding muſt néeds conclude his Gloſſe with the open breach of S. Pauls Doctrine.

M. Hard. vttereth two vntruths in one ſentence.

M. Harding ſaith further: This Law tooke place only in Conſtantinople, and not in the Church of Rome: And ſo he coucheth two manifeſt vntruthes together in one ſentence. But what? will he ſay, Iuſtinian was not Emperour of Rome, or had nothing to doe in the Church of Rome? Verily, he writeth himſelfe the Emperour of Rome, of France, of Almaine, and Germaine, &c. And deposed two Biſhops of Rome, Siluerius, and Vigilius: whereof it may appeare, he had ſomewhat to doe in the Church of Rome.

In. 2. Tom Cõcil. in vita Vigily.

De legatis præſ. con. tab. bon. poſſ. pc. li. 1. generaliter.

Touching this Conſtitution, the Law ſaith: Generaliter dictum, generaliter eſt accipiendum: The thing that is ſpoken generally, muſt be taken generally. And it is commonly ſaid: Vbi Lex non diſtinguit, nos diſtinguere non debemus: Where the Law maketh no diſtinction, there ought wee to make no diſtinction. And what reaſon hath M. Harding, or what witneſſe more than his owne, that this onely Law toke no place in the Church of Rome? Certainly the reſt of the ſame Nouell Conſtitutions were made not onely for Conſtantinople, or for Rome, but alſo for the whole Empire. And the Emperour Iuſtinian in the ſame Title ſaith thus: Whatſoeuer things, touching this matter, were needfull for this Imperiall Citie of Conſtantinople, wee haue comprifed in a ſpeciall Law for the ſame. But what néedeth many words? The Emperour himſelfe calleth the Conſtitution that concerneth the Clergy, a Law Generall, by theſe words: κοινῷ τι, καὶ γενικῷ νόμῳ περὶ χειροτονίας, &c. διετυπώσαμεν: We haue enacted by a Generall and a Common Law. And in the Code, intreating namely of Biſhops and Clerks, he hath theſe words: Et hoc non ſolùm in veteri Roma, vel in hac regia Ciuitate, ſed & in omni terra, vbicunque Chriſtianorum nomen colitur, obtinere ſancimus: This Law we will haue to take place, not only in the Citie of old Rome, or in this Imperiall Citie (of Conſtantinople) but alſo in all the world, whereſoeuer the name of Chriſtians is had in honour.

De Eccleſ. diuerſis capitulis. τίνα τε ἰδικῶ περιειλάβομεν νόμῳ. In auth. Colla. 1. vt definitus ſit numer. Cler. In Cod. de Epiſcop. & Cleric. Generaliter.

Leo de Ieiunio, 7. men. Ser. 6. Ambr. de Sacram. li. 4. c. 5. Aug. in Pſ. 54. Hier. in præfat. lib. 2. ad Galat.

And how can M. Harding make himſelfe ſo ſure, that the Church of Rome was neuer ſubiect to this Law? Certainly, both by Leo Biſhop of Rome, and alſo by S. Ambroſe, Biſhop of Millaine, and other holy Fathers, it appeareth otherwiſe. S. Auguſtine ſaith of the Church of Rome: Vnum Pſalmum cantamus: vnum Amen reſpondemus: We ſing one Pſalme, and we anſwere one Amen. S. Hierome ſaith: Euen in Rome, at the end of the Praier, the people ſo ſounded out Amen, as if it had beene a thunder clap.

M. Hard. forgetteth himſelfe.

Againe, if this Conſtitution ſerued only for the Grécke Church, and only the Prieſts there ſpake aloud, and the others of the Latine Church ſpake in ſilence, how then doth M. Harding expound this Law of Iuſtinian by the words of S. Auguſtine, who, as he ſuppoſeth, did the contrary, and was neuer ſubiect vnto that Law? Or how can he make contrarieties agrée together? Hath he ſo ſone forgotten himſelfe? Or will he expound ſpeaking by ſilence: or ſinging out by whiſpering?

To conclude, Iuſtinian ſaith, Theſe Conſtitutions were generall: M. Harding alone ſaith, They were not generall, Iuſtinian ſaith, They tooke place in all the world: M. Harding alone ſaith, ſaith, They tooke place only in Conſtantinople. S. Ambroſe, S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, Leo, and others ſay, They were obſerued in they Church of Rome: M. Harding alone ſaith, They were neuer obſerued in the Church of Rome. If he will thus deceiue vs in plaine things, how may we then truſt him in doubtfull things?

Iuſtinians Conſtitution.

Gregorius Haloander. whom M. Harding ſæmeth to touch with corruption of theſe Lawes, was a learned man, and a faithfull Tranſlatour: and for his diligence deſerued thankes: and therefore nædeth no excuſe. He addeth nothing more than is to be found in the Originall. In M. Hardings old Tranſlation, euen in this ſame very title, De Eccleſiaſticis diuerſis capitulis, there wanteth a whole leafe, or more, at the beginning, that is found extant in the Græke.

Gregorius Haloander.

Touching Cogging and Foiſting, I marueil M. Harding, being ſo graue a man, would borrow Ruffians termes to ſcoffe with all. As for the Sacrifice of Chriſt vpon the Croſſe, which is repreſented vnto vs in the holy Communion, we beleeue it with our hearts, and confeſſe it with our mouthes. Concerning this word Oblatio, he knoweth well, I tranſlated not the place, but only touched it: neither had I then any maner occaſion to ſpeake of the Sacrifice, but only of Prayers: which thing alſo I did without any Cogging, or any other ſleight, following theſe very words of Iuſtinian: ἢ τὰς ἄλλας προσευχὰς μετὰ φωνῆς προφέρειν: That is to ſay, To offer vp other Prayers alſo with loud voice. Neither did I auouch any vntruth by Iuſtinian, as M. Harding hath here done by Iuſtinian and S. Auguſtine both together. I know the holy Miniſtration is named of the holy Fathers ſundry waies: The Supper of the Lord: The Lords Table: The Communion: The Myſtery: The Sacrament: The Myſticall Table: The Thankſgiuing: The Oblation: and, The Sacrifice. Neither is there any of theſe names, but we vſe indifferently, as occaſion ſerueth.

Now, for ſo much as M. Harding taketh occaſion, for that I paſt this place of Iuſtinian ſo ſhortly ouer, only touching it with one word, as the time then forced me, I thinke it not a miſſe, for the better contentation of the Reader, to lay it out fully, as it lieth. His words be theſe: Wee command all Biſhops and Prieſts, to miniſter the Holy Oblation, and the Prayer at the holy Baptiſme, not vnder ſilence, but with ſuch voice, as may be heard of the faithfull people: to the intent, that thereof the hearts of the hearers may be ſtirred to more deuotion, and honour giuing to God the Lord. For ſo the holy Apoſtle teacheth, ſaying in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians: For if thou only bleſſe with the ſpirit, how ſhall he that ſupplieth the roome of the ignorant, ſay Amen (to God) at thy thankſgiuing? For hee knoweth not what thou ſaieſt. Thou giueſt thankes well: but the other is not edified.

Authen. Conſtitut. 123.

1. Cor. 14. τῷ θεῷ.

For theſe cauſes therefore it behoueth, that the Prayer at the Holy Oblation, and alſo other Prayers, be offered with loud voice of the holy Biſhops and Prieſts, vnto our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt. And let the holy Prieſts vnderſtand, that if they neglect any of theſe things, they ſhall make anſwer therefore at the dreadfull iudgement of the great God, and our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt. And yet neuerthelleſſe, we vnderſtanding the ſame, will not paſſe it ouer, nor leaue it vnpuniſhed.

Here we ſee, it is lawfull for a godly Prince, To command Biſhops and Prieſts: To make Lawes, and Orders for the Church: To redreſſe the abuſes of the Sacraments: To allege the Scriptures: To threaten and puniſh Biſhops and Prieſts, if they offend.

Now if theſe words of Iuſtinian make not for vs, and that without Foiſting or Cogging, much leſſe make they for M. Harding, vnleſſe he will forme his reaſons thus:

The Prieſt muſt ſpeake aloud:

Ergo, He may ſpeake in an vnknowen tongue.

Or thus: The people muſt heare the prayer, and anſwer, Amen:

Ergo, They need not to vnderſtand it.

To be ſhort, whereas, to the intent to bring Gods truth out of credit, and to make it odious among the ignorant, he ſaith, We haue refuſed to be the members of the Church of God; this is only a bitterneſſe of talke, inflamed with malice, whereof it ſæmeth he wanteth no ſtore, and neither furthereth his cauſe among the wiſe nor hindereth ours. If we be no members of the Church, that with all the people euery where to vnderſtand what they pray, to ioine their hearts together, and to be lifted vp vnto God: what then be they that with all the Church to be drowned in ignorance, and the people to know nothing? If S. Paul were now aliue, he would anſwer him as ſometime he anſwered Elymas. For certainly he himſelfe knoweth, That he wilfully peruerteth the manifeſt way of the Lord. Act. 17.

M. Harding. The 15. Diuiſion.

That Emperour had dominion ouer ſome Nations, that vnderſtood not the Greeke commonly. Yet no man can tell of any Conſtitution that euer he made, for Seruice there to be had in their Vulgar and Barbarous

Examples.

The 78. vntruth. For it ſhall appeare, that wee are able to ſhew manifeſt examples to the contrary.

rous tongue. So many Nations hauing beene conuerted to the Faith, the common people whereof vnderſtood neither Greeke, nor Latine; if the hauing of the Seruice in their Vulgar tongue, had beene thought neceſſarie to their ſaluation, the Fathers that ſtickt not to beſtow their Blood for their Flocks, would not haue ſpared that ſmall paine and trauell, to put their Seruice in Vulgar tongues. If it had beene neceſſary, it had beene done: if it had beene done, it had beene mentioned by one or other.

It appeareth by Arnobius vpon the Pſalmes, by Epiphanius writing againſt Hereſies, and by S. Auguſtine in his Bookes, De Doctrina Chriſtiana, that by account of the Antiquitie, there were 72. tongues in the world. Cicero ſaith, that they be in number infinite. Of them all, (78) neither M. Iewell, nor any one of his ſide, is able to ſhew, that the Publike Seruice of the Church in any Nation, was euer, for the ſpace of ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, in any other, than in Greeke and Latine.

Pſal. 104. Ex. contra Haereſ. Haereſ. 39. in Taſcula.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Arnobius, S. Auguſtine, and Epiphanius ſay, there be threeſcore and twelue ſundrie Languages in the World: Cicero ſaith, they be infinite. Heere muſt I note by the way, that Ciceroes words well alleged, doe vtterly confound M. Hardings Doctrine of hearing that thing that the hearers vnderſtand not, in ſuch ſort as he maintaineth the hearing of Maſſe. For thus he ſaith: In his linguis, quas non intelligimus, quæ ſunt innumerabiles, ſurdi profectò ſumus: In thoſe tongues that we vnderſtand not, which be innumerable, certainly we be deafe. By which words M. Harding might perceiue, that the ſimple people hearing him at his Maſſe, is ſtarke deafe, and heareth nothing. Yet (ſaith M. Harding) is not M. Iewell able to ſhew, that euer the Publike Seruice was in any other tongue, than in Greeke or Latine. And thus, being required by me, to ſhew any one example, that the people had their Common Seruice in a ſtrange tongue; and (as it appeareth) not able to ſhew any, he altereth cunningly the whole caſe, and willeth me to ſhew. Which thing notwithſtanding I might iuſtly refuſe to doe, by the order of any Schooles, yet I am well content to yeeld to his requeſt, both for the goodneſſe and pregnancie of the cauſe, and alſo ſpecially (good Chriſtian Reader) for the better contentation of thy minde: not doubting, but of thy ſelfe thou wilt be able to finde ſome diſtruſt and want in M. Hardings ſide: who, notwithſtanding ſo many words, and ſo great vaunts, yet is able to ſhew nothing.

Cicero in Tuſc. quæſtionibus.

And to auoid multitude of words, the caſe being plaine, Eckius ſaith: The Indians had their Seruice in the Indian tongue. Durandus ſaith: The Iewes that were Chriſtened, had their Seruice in the Hebrew tongue. Yet was neither of theſe tongues either Greeke, or Latine.

Eckius in locis Communibus. Durand. lib. 4. Ca. 1.

Nicolas Lyra and Thomas of Aquine ſay: The Common Seruice in the Primitiue Church, was in the Common Vulgar Tongue.

Nicola. Lyra, & Thomas in 1 ad Cor. 14.

By theſe few it may appeare, it was but a brauery, that M. Harding ſaid, Neither M. Iewel, nor any of that ſide, is able to ſhew, that the Publike Seruice was in any other tongue, than in Greeke or Latine. For it is eaſie to be ſhewed, euen by the Doctors of his owne ſide.

But what if Doctour Harding himſelfe haue in plaine words confeſſed the ſame? Although he haue wantonlie denied Chriſt, yet (I trow) he will not denie himſelfe. Conſider (good Reader) his owne words, hereafter following in this ſelfe ſame Article.

Fol. 69. Diuiſ. 28. But S. Paul, ſay they, requireth that the people giue aſſent, and conforme themſelues vnto the Prieſt, by anſwering Amen to his praier made in the Congregation. Hereunto M. Harding anſwereth thus: Verily, in the Primitiue Church this was neceſſarie, when the Faith was a learning, and therefore the Praiers were made then in a common tongue, knowen to the people.

What can there be more plainely ſpoken? Heere M. Harding not only confeſſeth that the Common Praiers were pronounced in a Common Tongue, knowen to the people, but alſo further ſaith, the ſame at that time was neceſſary, and auoucheth it with his warrant, Verily. Now quite contrary, as a man that had vtterly forgotten himſelfe, he ſaith, The Common Seruice was neuer ſaid, but either in the Greeke tongue, or in the Latine, and therein he offereth ſtoutly to ſtand againſt M. Iewell, and all others of this ſide: Which thing is eaſie for him to doe, ſeeing he dareth to ſtand ſo ſtoutly againſt himſelfe. Verily his ſayings cannot ſtand both together. If he be true in the one, in the other he muſt needs be falſe.

M. Harding contrarie to himſelfe.

Yet (good Chriſtian Reader) for thy better ſatisfaction, it may pleaſe thee to know, that in the Primitiue Church, the Common Seruice was not miniſtred by one man alone, but by the Prieſt and whole Congregation, all together, as may appeare by the generall conſent of the old Fathers. Clemens Alexandrinus ſaith: In orationibus, veluti vnam vocem habent communem, & vnam mentem: In the (Common) praiers, they haue all,

Clem. Alexan. Strom. lib. 7.

all, as it were, one voice, and one minde. S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Not onely the Prieſt giueth thankes to God, but alſo all the people: And what doeſt thou maruell to ſee the Prieſt and people in the praiers talke together? And here to leaue S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, S. Baſil, Nazianzenus, Dionyſius, Areopagita, with many other like Fathers; Iſidorus deſcribing the order of the Church in his time, writeth thus: Oportet, vt quando pſallitur, ab omnibus pſallatur: & cùm oratur, vt ab omnibus oretur: cùmque Lectio legitur, facto ſilentio, æquè audiatur à cunctis: When they Sing, they muſt Sing all together: When they Pray, they muſt pray all together: And when the Leſſon is read, ſilence being commanded, they muſt heare all together.

Examples.

Chryſ. in 2. ad Cor. Hom. 18.

Iſidor. de Eccl. offic. ca. 10.

It were very much for M. Harding to ſay, All theſe things were done in a learned tongue, and that the vulgar people in euery Country vnderſtood either the Greeke, or the Latine. Yet, for that nothing ſeemeth hard for him to ſay, let vs ſee what the old Fathers will report in that behalfe. I haue already ſhewed by Theodoretus, Sozomenus, and S. Hierome, that the Seruice was in the Syrian tongue.

Old Father Origens words, in my iudgement, ſeeme very plaine. Writing againſt one Celſus a wicked Heathen, he ſaith thus: Græci quidem Græcè Deum nominant, & Latinè Romani, & ſinguli item natiua & vernacula lingua Deum precantur, & laudibus proſe quiſque extollit. Ille enim qui eſt linguarum omnium Dominus, audit quauis lingua orantes, idque non ſecùs, quàm ſi vnam vocem exciperet è varijs linguis expreſſam. Deus enim cùm præſit machinæ vniuerſi, non eſt quaſi vnus aliquis, qui linguam vel Græcam vel Barbaram ſit ſortitus, vt cæteras neſciat: The Greekes name God in the Greeke tongue, and the Latines in the Latine tongue, and all ſeuerall Nations pray vnto God, and praiſe him in their owne naturall and mother tongue. For he that is the Lord of all tongues, heareth men praying in all tongues, none otherwiſe, than if it were one voice pronounced by diuers tongues. For God, that ruleth the whole world, is not as ſome one man, that hath gotten the Greeke or Latine tongue, and knoweth none other.

Origen. contra Celſum, lib. 8.

S. Ambroſe ſpeaking of the Iewes that were conuerted to Chriſt, ſaith thus: Hi ex Hebræis erant, qui aliquando Syria lingua, plærunque Hebræa in Tractatibus & Oblationibus vtebantur: Theſe were Iewes, which in their Sermons and Oblations vſed ſometime the Syrian tongue, and ſometime the Hebrew.

Ambroſ. in 1. Cor. 14.

S. Baſil writing vnto the learned men of Neocæſaria, and ſhewing in what order the people vſed to reſort to the houſe of praier in the night ſeaſon, and to ſing Pſalmes in ſides, and to pray together: towards the end thereof, hath theſe words: Tanquam ab vno ore, & ab vno corde, Confeſſionis Pſalmum offerunt Domino, & verba pœnitentiæ eorum quiſque propriè aſcribit ſibi: As it were from one mouth, and from one heart, they offer vp vnto the Lord the Pſalme of Confeſſion, and the words of repentance euery of them appliеth particularly vnto himſelfe. Hereby it is plaine, that the people in S. Baſils time ſung the Pſalmes together, and vnderſtood what they ſung.

Baſil. in Epiſt. ad Clericos Neocæſarien.

And leſt M. Harding ſhould ſlip away, as his wont is, and ſay, All this was done in the Greeke tongue, and not in any tongue Barbarous, S. Baſil hath already preuented him. For immediately he addeth further as it followeth: Horum gratia ſi nos fugitis, fugietis etiam Ægyptios, & vtroſque Lybias, & Thebanos, & Palæſtinos, & Arabas, & Phœnices, & Syros, & eos qui ad Euphratem incolunt, & in vniuerſum omnes, quibus Vigiliæ, & Orationes, & Communes Pſalmodiæ in honore habentur: If ye flee vs for thus ſinging and praying together, then muſt ye flee the Egyptians, and both the Countries of Lybia, and the Thebanes, and the Paleſtines, and the Arabians, and the Phenicians, and the Syrians, and the borderers of Euphrates: and generally ye muſt flee all them that haue watchings, and praiers, and common Pſalmodie in eſtimation. I trow M. Harding will not ſay, All theſe Nations ſpake Greeke or Latine.

S. Hierome writing vnto Heliodorus of the death of Nepotianus, ſeemeth to auouch the ſame. Theſe be his words: Nunc Paſſionem Chriſti, & Reſurrectionem ejus cunctarum gentium & voces & literæ ſonant. Taceo de Hebræis, Græcis, & Latinis, quas Nationes ſuæ Crucis Titulo Dominus dedicauit. Beſſorum feritas, & pellitorum turba populorum, qui mortuorum quondam inferijs homines immolabant, ſtridorem ſuum indulce Chriſti fregerunt melos, & totius mundi vna vox eſt Chriſtus: Now both the voices and letters of all Nations do ſound out Chriſts Paſſion and Reſurrection. I leaue the Iewes, the Greekes, and the Latines, which Nations the Lord hath dedicate with the Title of his Croſſe. The ſauage nature of the Beſſians, and people that for their wildneſſe goe clad in skinnes, which ſometimes made Sacrifices of mens Bodies, haue turned their Barbarous ſpeech into the ſweet harmony of Chriſt. Chriſt is now the voice of the whole world.

Hieronym. ad Heliodorum, Epitaphium Nepotiani.

Æneas Syluius ſaith, that when Cyrillus and Methodius had conuerted the Sclauons vnto God, which was about the yeare of our Lord eight hundred and threeſcore, and were Æneas Sylu. hiſtor. Bohemica, ca. 13.

Examples.

were ſuiters, that they might miniſter the common praiers, and other Seruice vnto them, in their common Sclauon tongue, and great ſtay was made therein by the Pope and his Cardinals, a voice was heard, as it had beene from Heauen: Omnis ſpiritus laudet Dominum; & omnis lingua confiteatur ei: Let euery ſpirit praiſe the Lord; and let euery tongue acknowledge him: And that thereupon they were ſuffered to vſe their owne tongue.

Extra. de Offic. Iudicis Ordinarij. Quoniam in plerisque. Rituum & linguarum.

Touching this matter, Innocentius the Third hath decreed thus: and whether it make for the purpoſe or no, let M. Harding himſelfe be Iudge. His words be theſe: Quoniam in plærisque partibus, intra eandem Ciuitatem atque Diœceſim, permiſti ſunt populi diuerſarum linguarum, habentes ſub vna Fide varios ritus & mores, diſtrictè præcipimus, vt Pontifices huiuſcemodi Ciuitatum ſiue Diœceſium, prouideant viros idoneos, qui ſecundùm diuerſitates rituum & linguarum, diuina illis officia celebrent, & Eccleſiaſtica Sacramenta miniſtrent: For ſo much as in many places, within one Citie and one Dioceſſe, there be Nations mingled together of many tongues, hauing diuers orders and cuſtomes vnder one Faith, we doe therefore ſtraitly command, that the Biſhops of ſuch Cities, or Dioceſſes, prouide meet men to Miniſter the holy Seruice, According to the diuerſitie of their maners and tongues.

Iohan. Billet in Summa de diuinis officijs.

Here might I allege much more out of diuers Writers, euen out of Abdias himſelfe, whom M. Harding ſo much eſteemeth. But I will onely note the complaint of one Iohn Billet, concerning this caſe, and ſo make an end. His words be theſe: In Primitiua Eccleſia prohibitum erat, ne quis loqueretur linguis, niſi eſſet qui interpretaretur. Quid enim prodeſſet loqui, niſi intelligeretur? Inde etiam inoleuit laudabilis conſuetudo, vt pronuntiato literaliter Euangelio, ſtatim in vulgari populo exponeretur. Quid autem noſtris temporibus eſt agendum, vbi nullus, vel rarus inuenitur legens, vel audiens, qui intelligat? Videtur ergo potiùs eſſe tacendum, quàm pſallendum: It was forbidden in the Primitiue Church, that no man ſhould ſpeake with tongues, vnleſſe there were ſome preſent to expound it. For what ſhould ſpeaking auaile, without vnderſtanding? And heereof grew a laudable cuſtome, that after the Goſpell was read literally, it ſhould ſtraightway be expounded in the Vulgar tongue. But what ſhall wee doe in our daies, when as there is either none at all, or very ſeldome, that readeth, or heareth, and vnderſtandeth? It ſeemeth, it were better now to hold their peace, than ſo to ſing.

Here haue I alleged, for proofe of our purpoſe, of the old Fathers, Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, S. Baſil, S. Hierome, Theodoretus, Sozomenus, and Iſidorus: of the latter Writers, Æneas Syluius, Innocentius Tertius, Iohn Billet, Thomas of Aquine, Lyra, Durandus, and Eckius. Therefore I truſt M. Harding will no more denie, but wee are able to ſhew ſomewhat, that the Common Seruice, in the Primitiue Church, was in ſome other tongue, and not only in Greeke or Latine. Now if M. Harding be able to ſhew any ſuch ſufficient example of his ſide, I will yeeld, according to promiſe.

M. Harding. The 16. Diuiſion.

For further anſwer to the Authoritie of Iuſtinians ordinance, wee hold well with it. Good men thinke it meet, the Seruice to be vttered now alſo with a diſtinct and audible voice, that all ſorts of people, ſpecially ſo many as vnderſtand it, may the more be ſtirred to deuotion, and thereby the rather be mooued to ſay Amen, and giue their aſſent to it, through their obedience and credit they beare to the Church, aſſuring themſelues the ſame to be good and healthfull, and to the glorie of God. And for that purpoſe, wee haue commonly ſeene the Prieſt, when he ſped him to ſay his Seruice, to ring the ſaunce Bell, and ſpeake out aloud, Pater noſter; by which token, the people were commanded ſilence, reuerence, and deuotion.

Saunce Bell. Pater noſter.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Cicero pro Cœlio.

I muſt néeds anſwer M. Harding, as Cicero ſometime anſwered his aduerſarie: Mimi ergo exitus eſt, non Fabulæ: This geare goeth by geſture, and not by ſpeech. S. Cyprian declaring the order of the Church in his time, ſaith: Sacerdos ante orationem parat animos fratrum, dicendo, Surſum corda: The Prieſt, before the praiers, prepareth the hearts of the brethren, ſaying thus vnto them, Lift vp your hearts.

Cypr. in Orat. Domini.

The Deacons in S. Chryſoſtomes and Baſils time, vſed to call vpon the people with theſe words: Oremus; Attendamus: Let vs pray; Let vs giue eare. Like as alſo the Prieſt in the Heathen Sacrifices, was wont to command ſilence, and to ſay to the multitude, Fauete linguis. This was done in the Church of Chriſt, as S. Cyprian ſaith, to put the people in remembrance, that in their praiers they ſhould thinke of nothing elſe, but only of the Lord. And therefore Chryſoſtome ſaith, The Prieſt in the holy Miniſtration ſpeaketh vnto the people, and the people vnto the Prieſt. But M. Harding, for eaſe and expedition, hath deuiſed a ſhorter way, to teach the people by a Bell-rope. Hee turneth his backe vnto his Brethren, and ſpeaketh out two words aloud, Pater noſter: and cauſeth the Chryſ. in 2. ad Cor. Hom. 18.

Sanctus

Sanctus Bell to play the part of a Deacon, to put the people in remembrance, that now they must pray. If any other man would say so much, he were a scoffer: M. Harding speaketh it, and it is good earnest, and cause sufficient to auoid Iustinians Law. Augustus Cæsar warned his sonne in law Tiberius, Vtore, non digito loqueretur: That hee should speake with his mouth, and not with his finger. And Cato was wont to say, when he saw two Augures meet together, He marvailed that either of them could abstaine from smiling: for that their whole profession, and occupation stood in mocking of the people. I will not applie this to M. Harding, notwithstanding he seeme to professe the like. God grant his Bell may remember him to feare God, lest he himselfe be left, As a sounding peece of Brasse, or as a tinkling Cymball.

Aphrica.

Sueton. in Aug.

Plutarchus in Catone.

1. Corin. 13.

M. Harding. The 17. Diuision.

Now to say somewhat touching the common praiers or Seruice of the Churches of Aphrica, where S. Augustine preached in Latine, as you say, and I denie not, and thereof you seeme to conclude, that the common people of that Countrey vnderstood and spake Latine, as their vulgar tongue. That the Aphricane Churches had their Seruice in Latine, it is euident by sundry places of S. Augustine in his exposition of the Psalmes, in his Bookes, De Doctrina Christiana, and in his Sermons, and most plainly in an Epistle that he wrote to S. Hierome, in which he sheweth, that the people of a City in Aphrica, was greatly mooued and offended with their Bishop, for that in reciting the Scriptures, for part of the Seruice to them, hee read out of the fourth Chapter of Ionas the Prophet, not Cucurbita, after the old text, which they had beene accustomed vnto, but Hedera, after the new translation of S. Hierome. Now, as I grant that some vnderstood it, so I haue cause to doubt, whether some others vnderstood it, or no. Nay rather I haue great probability to thinke they vnderstood it not. For the bewraying of Hannibals Embassadours to the Romans by their Punicall language, whereof Titus Liuius writeth; and likewise the conference betwixt Sylla the Noble man of Rome, and Bocchus King of Numidia, had by meane of Interpreters adhibited of both parts, as Salust recordeth In Bello Iugurthino, declareth, that the tongue of Aphrica was the Punicall tongue before the Romans conquest. Now the same people remaining there vntill S. Augustines time, what should moone vs to iudge that they forgot their owne natiue and mother tongue, and learned a new the Latine tongue? I confesse, that many vnderstood and spake Latine, by reason of the Romans common resort thither, of their lawes there executed, of their garrisons there abiding, and specially of the great multitude of Latine people thither sent to inhabite, Deductis Colonijs, by August. the Emperour first, then by Adrianus, and afterward by Commodus, who would haue had the great City Carthago newly reedified, to be called after his owne name, Alexandria Commodiana, as Lampridius writeth. These Roman colonies; that is to wit, multitudes of people sent to inhabite the Country, placed themselues about the Sea coasts in the Chiefe Cities, in Carthago, Vtica, Hippo, Leptis, &c. and there about. And by these meanes the Roman or Latine speech spred abroad there, and became to be very common, as that which remained still among the Inhabitants that were of the Roman kinde, and was learned by long vse and custome of others, dwelling amongst them, specially in the Cities, where the Romans bare the sway & gouernment. For these considerations, I thinke the Latine tongue was there very common. But that it was common to the inward parties of the Country also, and to the vplandish people, amongst whom the old accustomed language is longest kept, as experience teacheth: it is not likely. For though the Nobilitie and Cities change their language to bee the more in estimation, yet the common and base people of the Country, fall not so soon to a change. In this realme of England after William Conquerours time, by occasion of great resort of French men hither, and of our Country men into France, also of the French Lawes, & speciall fauour by the Princes borne, and preferrements bestowed vpon them that spake French, the most part of the Nobilitie, Lawyers, Merchants, Captaines, Souldiers and wealthy folke, had skill in the vnderstanding and speaking of the French tongue; but yet the common and vplandish people spake little or nought at all. Whereof grew this Prouerbe in England of old time, Iacke would be a Gentleman, but Iacke can no French. The like may be thonght of the Latine tongue in Aphrica.

Lib. 3. bell. Punic.

What shall we thinke of the Vplandish people there, when as Septimus Seuerus the Emperour, yea after the Apostles time, had not very good skill in the Latine tongue, but in the Punicall tongue, and that being borne at Leptis? Of whom Aurelius Victor saith thus in Epitome; Latinis literis sufficienter instructus, Punica lingua promptior, quippe genitus apud Leptim Prouincia Aphrica: Seuerus was learned in the Latine letters sufficiently, but in the Punicall tongue he was readier, as being borne at Leptis, within the Prouince of Aphrica. Heere the Latine tongue is attributed to instruction and teaching, and the Punicall tongue to nature. Ælius Spartianus writing the life of this Seuerus to Diocletian, sheweth that when his Sister a woman of Leptis, came to Rome to him, Vix Latinè loquens, Her Brother the Emperour was ashamed of her, and blushed at her, for that she could scantly speake Latine, and therefore commanded her away, home againe to her Countrey; for these be the very words of Spartianus. Now if such noble personages lacke the Latine speech in the chiefe part of Aphrica, it is soone vnderstanded, what is to be deemed of the common and vulgar people abroad in the Country.

Let vs come downe lower, euen to S. Hieromes time. S. Hierome writing to a noble yong Roman Virgin, called Demetrias being in Aphrica, exhorting her to keepe her selfe in that holy state of Virginity, saith thus; Vrbs tua quondam orbis Caput: Thy City once the head of the World, is become the Sepulchre of the Roman people. And wilt thou take a banished husband, thy selfe being a banished woman in the shore of Lybia? What woman shalt thou haue there to bring thee to and fro? Stridor Punica linqua protacta tibi fescennina cantabit: The iarring Punicall tongue shall sing thee baudy songs at thy wedding. Lo, in S. Hieromes time, they of Aphrica spake the Punicall tongue, and that by the Sea side where the Romanes of long time had made their abode. Of this may be gathered, that the Latine speech was not in the further parts within the Country very common. S. Augustine in sundrie places of his workes sheweth, that the people of Aphrica called Punikes, spake the Punicall tongue, acknowledging a likenesse and cosenage, as it were to be betweene that and the Hebrew tongue. But most euident witnesse for the Punicall tongue is to bee found in his 44. Epistle, Ad Maximum Madaurensem. In which hee answereth him soberly for his scoffing,

In Psalm. Diuersum Iemadum in Serm. 35.

Aphrica.

and iefting at certaine Punicall words in derogation of the Chriſtians; After wondering that hee being an Aphricane borne, and writing to Aphricanes, ſhould finde fault with the Punicall names and words, and after commendation of the tongue, for that many things haue right wiſely beene commended to memorie by great learned men, in Bookes of the Punicall language, at length concluded againſt him thus; Tamen te certè ibi natum, vbi huiuſmodi linguâ cunabula tractant: In good ſooth thou muſt be content in thy heart, that thou wert borne there, where the Cradles of ſuch a tongue bee warme againe. By which words he ſeemeth to charge him with an vnnaturall griefe and repenting, that he was borne in that Country where they ſpeake Punicke ere they creepe out of their Cradles; whereby it appeareth, the Mother tongue of thoſe parts of Aphrica which he ſpeaketh of, to be the Punicall, and not the Latine.

To conclude, if they had all ſpoken Latine, and not ſome the Punicall tongue, S. Auguſtine would neuer haue written, Punici Chriſtiani Baptiſmum, ſalutem; Euchariſtiam, vitam vocant: That thoſe Chriſtians which ſpeake the Punicall tongue, call Baptiſme in their language, Health or Saluation: and the Euchariſt, Life. Wherefore we ſee, that there were Latine Chriſtians, and Punicall Chriſtians in Aphrica, of whom all vnderſtood not the Latine Seruice. Li. 1. de Pecc. orum merit. & remiſſ. cap. 24.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Here M. Harding, as his wont is, taketh needleſſe paines without profit, to proue that thing that is not denied. I ſaid, that at the Citie of Hippo in Aphrica, where S. Auguſtine was Biſhop, the Common Seruice of the Church was pronounced in Latine, and that no maruell, for that the whole people there vnderſtood and ſpake the Latine tongue. For anſwer whereof, Replie is made, and that by ghеſſes and likelihoods, that the whole people of Aphrica in all the mountaines, and vplandiſh Countries, was neuer trained vp in the Latine tongue. Which thing neither is denied by me, nor any wiſe toucheth this Queſtion. For it is eaſie to be knowen by S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, and others, in infinite places, that the people of that Countrey had a naturall tongue of their owne, diſtinct from all others, and ſeuerall only to themſelues. And therefore to proue the ſame in ſuch earneſt ſort, by Titus Liuius, by Saluſt, by Aurelius Victor, by Ælius Spartianus, by S. Auguſtine, and by S. Hierome, it was only ſpending of time, without winning of matter. S. Auguſtine ſaith, Euchariſtia, in the Punicke tongue was called Life: and Baptiſmus, in the ſame tongue, was called Health: and rehearſeth theſe words, Mammon and Iar, and other like words, and certaine Prouerbs, vſed in the ſame tongue. S. Hierome ſaith that Alma, in the Punike tongue ſignifieth a Virgin, according to the Hebrew. Quintilian ſaith, that this word Mappa, was borrowed of the Punikes, and made Latine, as Rheda and Petoritum were borrowed of the Gaules. Neither is there any reaſon to lead vs, but that they had other words and ſentences of their owne ſufficient to expreſſe their mindes.

Auguſt. de verbis Dom ſecun. Luc. Serm. 35. Aug. in Pſalm. 123. Hieronym. in Eſay li. 3. ca. 7. Lib. 1. ca. 9.

But after the Romans had once ſubdued them, the better to ſtabliſh and confirme their Empire, they forced them to receiue both the Roman Lawes, and alſo the Roman tongue: as they had done before in ſeuerall Countries within Italy, and in other places moe. Which thing vnto ſome ſeemed ſo grieuous, that, as it is reported by Cato, Turrhenus the laſt King of Etruria, notwithſtanding he were content to yeld his Country to the Romans, yet could neuer be won to yeld his tongue. For the better performance hereof, they had it enacted by a Law, that the Iudge in euery Prouince ſhould heare, and determine matters, and pronounce ſentence only in Latine, as it appeareth by theſe words: Decreta à Prætoribus, Latinè debent interponi. By meane whereof S. Hierome ſaith: The Punike tongue in his time, was much altered from that it had beene before.

Ex originib. Catonis.

De re iudicata, &c. Decreta.

All theſe things be confeſſed, and nothing touch this caſe, nor ſerue to any other purpoſe, but only to amaze the ignorant Reader with a countenance of great learning.

Hieron. in præfatio. in lib. 2. Comment. ad Galatas.

But that the whole people of the City of Hippo, where the Seruice was miniſtred in the Latine tongue, vnderſtood and ſpake Latine, who can witneſſe better than S. Auguſtine himſelfe, that was then Biſhop of Hippo? And to paſſe ouer that he reporteth of himſelfe, that being borne in Tagaſta a City of Aphrica, he learned the Latine tongue, Inter blandimenta Nutricum: As he was playing vnder his Nurce, ſignifying thereby, that his Nurces vnderſtood and ſpake Latine: In his Booke De Catechizandis rudibus, he writeth thus: Let them know, there is no voice that ſoundeth in Gods eares, but the deuotion of the mind. So ſhall they not ſcorne at the head Prieſts and Miniſters of the Church, if they happen in making their Praiers vnto God, to ſpeake falſe Latine, or not to vnderſtand the words that they ſpeake, or to ſpeake them out of order. He addeth further; Non quòd iſta corrigenda non ſint, vt populus ad id, quòd planè intelligit, dicat, Amen: Not for that ſuch faults ſhould not be amended, to the end that the people, to the thing that they plainly perceiue, may ſay, Amen. Here S. Auguſtine willeth that the Prieſts vtter their Latine Seruice diſtinctly and truly, that the people may vnderſtand them. Againe he ſaith thus: Volens etiam cauſam Auguſtin. Confeſſ. lib. 1. cap. 14. De Catechizandis rudibus, cap. 9.

Donatiſtarum

Donatiſtarum ad ipſius humillimi vulgi, & omninò imperitorum, atque idiotarum notitiam peruenire, & eorum, quantum fieri poſſet, per nos inhærere memoriæ, Pſalmum, qui eis cantaretur, per Latinas literas feci. Being deſirous that the cauſe of the Donatiſts ſhould come to the knowledge of the loweſt ſort, and of them that be vtterly ignorant and void of learning, and as much as in vs lay, might be fixed in their memorie, I wrote a Pſalme for them to ſing in the Latine tongue. And Poſſidonius writing S. Auguſtines life, ſaith, that Valerius that was Biſhop of Hippo, before S. Auguſtine, for that he was a Greeke borne, and had ſmall ſkill in the Latine tongue, was therefore able to Preach vnto the people and to diſcharge his dutie there.

Aphrica.

Retractation lib. 1. cap. 20.

Poſſidonius in vita Auguſtini cap. 5.

I doubt not, but by theſe few words, it may well appeare, that the people of Hippo vnderſtood the Latine, albeit not in ſuch good order, as they that had learned it at the Schoole: and therefore would often times ſpeake amiſſe, placing one word for another: and Gender for Gender: and Caſe for Caſe: as for example, Dolus for Dolor. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Multi fratres imperitiores Latinitatis, loquuntur ſic, vt dicant, Dolus illum torquet, pro eo, quod eſt, Dolor. And for that cauſe in his Sermons vnto the people, hee ſubmitteth often times himſelfe vnto their capacity. For thus he ſpeaketh vnto the people: Sæpe & verba non Latina dico, vt vos intelligatis: Many times I vtter words that be no Latine, that ye may vnderſtand me. And againe he ſaith: Ego dicam Oſſum: ſic enim populus loquamur. Melius eſt, vt nos reprehendant Grammatici, quàm non intelligant populi: I will ſay, Oſſum, for your better vnderſtanding: although it bee no Latine word. And ſo hardly let vs ſpeake. For better is it that the Grammarians finde fault with vs, than the people ſhould not vnderſtand vs. Hereby it is plaine, that at the City of Hippo, whereof I ſpecially ſpake, the common Seruice of the Church was pronounced and miniſtred in the Latine tongue, for that the whole people there vniuerſally vnderſtood and ſpake Latine.

Auguſt. in Iohan. Tract. 7.
Auguſtin. in Pſalm. 123.
Auguſtin. in Pſalm. 128.

M. Harding. The 18. Diuiſion.

And whereas S. Auguſtine, as you allege him, without ſhewing the place (as your maner is, whereby you may eaſily deceiue the Reader) hath theſe words in his Sermons to the common people diuers times; Nunc loquar Latinè, vt omnes intelligatis, Now will I ſpeake Latine, that you may all vnderſtand mee; of that ſaying, if any ſuch be, may be gathered, that ſometime hee ſpake in the Punicall tongue to the Punicall Chriſtians, not vnderſtanding the Latine; but now among the Latine Aphricanes that were of the Roman kinde, and vnderſtood not the Punike, hee would ſpeake Latine, that all ſuch ſhould vnderſtand him.

Who ſo deſireth further to be perſwaded, that the people of Aphrica called Pæni, ſpake and vnderſtood their owne Punicall tongue, and not the Latine tongue, as likewiſe the people of Spaine, named Iberi, ſpake that language which was proper to them, let him read Titus Liuius, De Bello Macedonico. For there he recordeth, that when thoſe of Aphrica, or of Spaine, and the Romans came together for parle and talke, they vſed an Interpreter.

And Vlpianus the Lawyer, a great Officer about Alexander Seuerus the Emperour, at the beginning of Chriſtian Religion, writeth, that Fidei commiſſa, may be left in all vulgar tongues, and putteth for examples, the Punicall, and the French, or rather Gallicall tongue.

l. fideicommiſſa.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

I ſée, there is no pardon to be hoped for at M. Hardings hands. Becauſe I noted not in what Booke and Chapter this place is to be found, therefore he beareth men in hand, I ſéeke meanes to deceiue the Reader. If this poore quarrell may ſtand for proofe, then is it no hard matter by the ſame Logike, to conclude the like againſt him. For M. Harding oft times vſeth the authority of S. Auguſtine and other Fathers, without any noting of the places, as his owne Booke is beſt witneſſe: Ergo, M. Harding ſeeketh meanes to deceiue his Reader.

But in my iudgement better it is not to note the places at all, than falſly to note them, as M. Hardings maner is to doe: as where he vntruly allegeth the Decree of the Councell of Epheſus againſt Neſtorius, for the Communion in One kinde: which Decree neither is to be found in that Councell, nor euer was recorded, or mentioned by any old Father: Or where he allegeth the Decree of the firſt Councell of Nice, for the Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome: himſelfe confeſſing that the ſame Decree was burnt, I know not how, and could neuer yet bée ſéene vntill this day. Verily, this is a ready way to deceiue the Reader. I paſſe by other petite faults: as that he allegeth the ſixth Booke of Ambroſe, De Sacramentis, in ſtead of the fifth: or the xxiiij. Chapter of the ſixth Booke of Euſebius, in ſtead of the xliij. Or that Steuen Gardiner allegeth Theophilus Alexandrinus, in ſtead of Theophylactus: Or the third Booke of S. Auguſtine, De Sermone Domini in Monte, whereas S. Auguſtine neuer wrote but two. The place wherewith M. Harding findeth himſelfe greeued, is to be found in S. Auguſtine, De Verbis Apoſtoli: the words be theſe: Prouerbium notum eſt Punicum: quod quidem Latinè vobis dicam, quia Punice non om-

Folio 23. a.
Folio 18. b.
Contra Archiepiſc. Cantuar. lib. 3.
Contra Arch. Cantuar. lib. 4.
De Verbis Apoſtoli, Serm. 25.

Aphrica.

nes noſtis: There is a common Prouerbe in the Punicke tongue, which I will report vnto you in Latine, becauſe ye doe not all vnderſtand the Punicke. Here it is plaine, that the Latine tongue was knowen to all the hearers, and the Punicke tongue only vnto ſome. And therefore in an other Sermon vnto the people, he ſaith thus: Omnes nouimus, Latinè non dici ſanguines, aut ſanguina: We doe all know, (reckoning himſelfe with the people) that theſe words, Sanguines, or Sanguina, are no Latine: and againe, as I haue before reported, touching a Latine Pſalme that he made for the common people, he writeth thus: Being deſirous, that the cauſe of the Donatiſts ſhould come to the knowledge of the loweſt ſort, and of them that be vtterly ignorant and void of learning, and as much as in vs lay, might be fixed in their memory, I wrote a Pſalme for them to ſing in the Latine tongue.

Auguſt. in Pſalm. 50. Retract. lib. 1. cap 20.

This long rehearſall of all theſe authorities, ſauing that M. Harding gaue the occaſion, was vtterly needleſſe. Notwithſtanding, hereby it is euident, that the people there vnderſtood the Latine, wherein their Seruice was miniſtred: and therefore had not their Seruice in an vnknowen tongue. Now if M. Harding were able to ſhew, that other Cities or Prouinces of the ſame Countrey where the Latine tongue was not knowen, had notwithſtanding the Latine Seruice, it would very well ſerue his purpoſe. Otherwiſe the argument that he would ſeeme to faſhion hereof, is maruellous ſtrange. For thus at leaſt appeareth, he would conclude: Some people in Aphrica ſpake the Punicke tongue: Ergo, they had their Seruice in the Latine tongue. For other argument that he can here gather, I ſee none. The reſt of Titus Liuius, De bello Macedonico, or of Vlpian, De fidei commiſſis, is vtterly out of ſeaſon, and therefore not worthy to be anſwered.

M. Harding. The 19. Diuiſion.

Thus much or more, might heere be ſaid of the language of the people of Gallia, now called France, which then was barbarous and vulgar, and not only Latine, and (79) yet had they of that Nation their Seruice then in Latine, as all the Weſt Church had. That the common language of the people there was vulgar, the vſe of the Latine ſeruing for the learned as we muſt needs iudge; wee haue firſt the authority of Titus Liuius. Who writeth, that a Galloes, or as now we ſay, a French man of a notable ſtature, prouoked a Roman to fight with him, man for man, making his challenge by an Interpreter. Which had not beene done, in caſe the Latine tongue had beene common to that Nation. Next, the place of Vlpianus before mentioned. Then the record of Ælius Lampridius, who writeth that a Woman of the order of the Druides, cried out aloud to Alexander Seuerus, Mammæa her ſonne, the Emperor as he marched forward on a day with his army, Gallico ſermone, in the Gallicall tongue, theſe words boding his death, which right ſo ſhorly after followed: Vadas: nec victoriam ſperes: ne militi tuo credas: Goe thy way; and looke not for the victory; truſt not thy Souldiers. Laſtly, the witneſſe of S. Hierome; who hauing trauelled ouer that Region, and therefore being skilfull of the whole ſtate thereof, acknowledgeth the people of Treuers, and of that territory, to haue a peculiar language, diuers from Latine and Greeke.

The 79. vntruth, boldly auouched, but no way prooued.

Ad vita Alexandri lib. 7.

Ex vita Alexandri Mam. hau.

In prooem. 2. Comment. ad Galat.

If all that I haue brought heere touching this matter, bee well weighed, it will ſeeme probable, I doubt not, that all ſorts of people in Aphrica, vnderſtood not the Seruice which they had in the Latine tongue. And no leſſe may be thought of Gallia and Spaine. And ſo farre it is prooued againſt M. Iewels ſtoute aſſertion, that within his ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, ſome Chriſtian people had their Common Praiers and Seruice in a tongue they vnderſtood not.

An eaſie proofe without premiſſes.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

A ſhort anſwer may ſerue, where nothing is obiected. This gheſſe ſtandeth vpon theſe two points: The Firſt is this: The people of Gallia vnderſtood not the Latine tongue: The Second is this: That notwithſtanding, the ſame people had their Sernice in Latine: Whereof the concluſion followeth: Ergo, They had Seruice in an vnknowen tongue. The Maior hereof is proued with much adoe, by Titus Liuius, by Vlpianus, by Ælius Lampridius, and by S. Hierome. He might as well haue added the ſtory of Brennus: Cæſars Commentaries: Quintilian, that nameth two meere French words, Rheda and Petoritum: and Cicero, who in his Oration pro Fonteio, and elſewhere, calleth the men of the Countrey Barbaros. Thus M. Harding taketh great paines to proue that thing that is confeſſed, and needeth no proouing.

Quintil. lib. 1. cap. 9.
Cicero pro Fonteio.

But the Minor, which is vtterly denied, and wherein ſtandeth all the doubt, and without proouing whereof, he proueth nothing, he palleth ouer cloſely and proueth by ſilence. If the matter be doubtfull, it hath the more need of proofe: if it be plaine and out of doubt, it is the ſooner proued. Surely, to ſay without any kinde of proofe or euidence, only vpon M. Hardings bare word, The people of Gallia had the Latine Seruice, it is but a very ſimple warrant. For what learning, what authority, what coniecture, what gheſſe hath he, ſo to ſay? Some hold that Ioſeph of Arimathæa, Philip the Apoſtle, Nathaniel and Lazarus, were the firſt that euer opened the Goſpell in France. But theſe foure neither came from Rome, nor to my knowledge, euer ſpake the Latine tongue: They came from Hieruſalem out of Iewrie, and ſpake the Hebrew tongue. Therefore, I reckon, M. Harding will not ſay, that any of theſe foure, erected there the Latine Seruice.

The beſt that he can make hereof, is but a gheſſe and a likelihood: for thus he ſaith: It will ſeeme probable I doubt not. But I aſſure thee, good Reader, it will proue nothing, I doubt doubt not. For weigh the probability of these reasons: The people of Gallia had a speech peculiar to themselues, and spake no Latine: Ergo, They had the Latine Seruice. Or thus: The first preachers in Gallia, came from Hierusalem, and spake the Hebrew tongue: Ergo, They ministred the Seruice and common Prayers in the Latine tongue. These be M. Hardings probabilities, wherewith he doubteth not this matter is proued. France.

But once againe, let vs view the maine reason: The Maior, The people of Gallia vnderstood no Latine; The Minor, The same people had the Latine Seruice; The Conclusion, Ergo, They had Seruice in an vnknowen tongue.

Here M. Harding, we doe vtterly denie your Minor: which vnlesse ye proue otherwise than ye haue hitherto begun, very Children may see, that your conclusion cannot follow. Ye should not so stoutly haue said, ye haue so thoroughly proued the matter, hauing indeed as yet proued nothing.

But that the Seruice in the Churches of Gallia was not said in such order, as M. Harding gheseth, but in a tongue known vnto the people, it is euident by Seuerus Sulpitius in the life of S. Martine. The people of the City of Tours, in France then called Gallia, vpon the vacation of the Bishoprick, were desirous to haue S. Martine to be their Bishop: notwithstanding there were others that thought him a very simple man, and in all respects, vnworthy of any Bishoprick. In this contention the matter fell out in this wise, as Sulpitius sheweth: Cum fortuitò Lector, cui legendi eo die officium erat, intercluſus à populo deſuiſſet, turbatis miniſtris, dum expectatur, qui non aderat, vnus è circumſtantibus, ſumpto Pſalterio, quem primum verſum inuenit arripuit: Pſalmus autem hic erat: Ex ore infantium, & lactentium, perfeciſti laudem, &c. Quo lecto, clamor populi tollitur, & pars aduerſa confunditur: Whereas by chance the Reader, whose office was to read in the Church that day, was shut out by meane of the throng, and the Ministers were troubled, looking about for him that was not there, one of the company tooke the Psalter and read that verse that came next to hand. The verse of the Psalme was this: Out of the mouth of Infants and sucklings, thou hast wrought praise. As soone as that verse was read, the people made a shout, and the contrary part was confounded. Here we see the practise of the Church of Gallia. The Reader pronounced the Scriptures, and the people vnderstood them. Whether it were in the vulgar tongue, or in the Latine, it was a tongue knowen vnto the people, Therefore M. Harding might haue better aduised himselfe before he thus assured the World, That the people of Gallia had their Seruice vndoubtedly in an vnknowen tongue. Sulpitius in vita Martini.

M. Harding. The 20. Diuiſion.

And thus, all his allegations brought for proofe of his saying in this behalfe, be answered; the place of S. Paul to the Corinthians excepted.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

If haine gheses, without proofe: if the corruption of S. Auguſtine: if the falſifying of the Emperour Iuſtinians Law, may ſtand for an Anſwer, then are my allegations fully answered.

M. Harding. The 21. Diuiſion.

Which ere I answer, I will according to my promise proove, that about nine hundred yeeres past, yea a thousand also, and therefore some deale within his six hundred yeeres, euen in S. Gregorius time, The Seruice was in an vnknowen tongue in this land of England, then called Brittaine, and begun to bee called England, at least, for so much as sithence and at these daies is called by the name of England. Beda an English man, that wrote the Eccleſiaſticall ſtory of the Engliſh Nation, in the yeere of our Lord 731. and of their comming to Britane about 285. recordeth that S. Auguſtine and his company, who were sent hither, to conuert the Engliſh people to the Faith of Chriſt, which the Britans had heere profeſſed long before, hauing a safe conduct granted them by King Ethelbert to preach the Gospell where they would, said and sung their Seruice in a Church, builded of old time in the honour of S. Martin, adioining on the East side of the head City of Kent, whiles the Romans dwelt in Britaine. The words of Beda bee these: In hac (Eccleſia) conuenire primò pſallere, orare, miſſas facere, prædicare, & Baptizare cœperunt: In this Church they began first to assemble themselues together, to Sing, to Pray, to say Masse, to Preach and to Baptize. It is plaine, that this was the Seruice. And no doubt, they resorted to it, who beleeued and were of them Baptized, wondring as Beda saith) at the simplicity of their innocent life, and sweetnesse of their heauenly doctrine. In English it was not, for they had no skill of that tongue, as Beda sheweth, Lib. 1. Cap. 23. And therefore ere they entred the land, they tooke with them by commandement of S. Gregory. Interpreters out of France. Which Interpreters serued for open preaching, and priuate instruction, exhortation and teaching. In singing and saying the Seruice there was no vse of them. They were Italians and spake no English; neither was this the ordinary seruice of the English Church.

Hiſt. Eccleſ. Anglic. lib. 1. cap. 26.

Hiſt. cap. 25.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Here is a great bulke and no Corne. If empty words might make proofe, then had we here proofe sufficient. First, I will examine euery of these gheses particularly by themselues, and in the end, will shew the true story of this Iland, as it may be gathered by Tertullian, Origen, Chryſoſtome, Theodoretus, and ſuch other old Writers.

England. Auguſtine

And leſt any man be deceiued by ambiguity of names, this Auguſtine, whom M. Harding calleth Saint, and ſome others, the Apoſtle of England, was not that great learned Father and Doctour of the Church, whom we worthily call S. Auguſtine, but another of the ſame name, as, far vnlike him in learning and holineſſe, ſo alſo two hundred yéres behind him in courſe of age: a man, as it was iudged by them that ſaw him, and knew him, neither of Apoſtolike ſpirit, nor any way worthy to be called a Saint: But an Hypocrite, a Superſtitious man, cruell, bloody, and proud aboue meaſure. And notwithſtanding, he withdrew the Engliſh Nation from their groſſe idolatrie, wherein he had no great trauell, yet it is certaine, he planted not Religion in this Realme: for it was planted here, and had growen, and continued ſtill foure hundred yéres and more, before his comming. But it is thought of many, that he corrupted the Religion that he found planted here before, with much filth of Superſtition: and therefore Galfridius ſaith, that the Biſhops, and learned men of this Iland, would none either of him, nor of the Pope, that ſent him.

Galfridus Monemuthen. lib. 8. cap. 4.

And that it may the better appeare, what a one this Auguſtine was, and what opinion the faithfull people of this Realme had of him, I will rehearſe a ſhort ſtory that is written by Beda in that behalfe. The Biſhops of this Country (ſaith Beda) before they would goe to the Councell where as Auguſtine ſhould be Preſident, firſt went vnto a holy wiſe man that liued an Anchors life, and deſired his Counſell, whether that at Auguſtines Preaching, they ſhould leaue the traditions, that they had ſo long vſed, or no. He anſwered, If hee be a man of God follow him. But how ſhall we know, ſaid they, whether he be a man of God, or no? He anſwered againe, If he be gentle and lowly of heart, it is likely enough that hee carrieth the Yoke of the Lord, and offereth vnto you to carry the ſame. But if he be diſdainefull and proud, then it is certaine, hee is not of God, neither ought you to regard what he ſaith. Then ſaid the Biſhops againe: But how may we know whether he be diſdainfull and proud, or no? Prouide ye, ſaith this holy man, that he may be in the Councell ſitting before you come. Then if he ariſe vp from his Chaire at your comming, and ſalute you, Know you, that he is the man of God, and therefore hearken to him. But if hee diſdaine you, and will not once mooue his place, ſpecially ſeeing you are the moe in number, then ſet you as little by him, and diſdaine him too. And as this holy man had told them, ſo did they. When they came into the Councell houſe, Auguſtine ſate ſtill and would not mooue. Whereupon they refuſed him, and would not heare him, as a man diſdainfull and proud of heart, and therfore no man of God. Vpon which refuſal, Æthelbertus the King raiſed his power, and ſlew great numbers of the Britaines, and a thouſand, and two hundred godly Religious men, euen as they were at their praiers. Hitherto Beda.

Beda li. 2. ca. 2.

Wherefore the authority of this Auguſtines doings, muſt néeds ſéeme the leſſe, yea although it were all true that M. Harding reporteth of him. And further, I truſt, it will be proued, that the things that M. Harding allegeth ſtand without the compaſſe of ſix hundred yéres: and therefore, notwithſtanding they were true, yet cannot greatly further his purpoſe. This Auguſtine vpon his arriuall into England, had a place alotted him in Kent. There he and his company Sung and Praied, and ſaid Maſſe, (this Maſſe was a Communion, as ſhall appeare) and Preached and Baptized. In what language it is not noted by Beda. But bée it in Latine. Hereof M. Harding forméth vp this argument:

> Auguſtine and his company praied together in Latine, for that they were ſtrangers newly ſent in out of Italy, and vnderſtood not the Engliſh tongue:
> Ergo, The Engliſh people had the Latine Seruice.

M. Harding ſhould not thus mocke the World. He knoweth well, a Childe would not make ſuch reaſons. For Auguſtine was no Pariſh Prieſt, ne ſerued no Cure, but only had a place ſenerally appointed to himſelfe. Neither did any Engliſh man reſort to his Seruice, vnleſſe it were to ſée the ſtrangeneſſe of his doings. He might as well reaſon thus:

> The Iewes this day in Venice haue their Seruice in the Hebrew tongue:
> Ergo, The people of Italy haue their Seruice in the Hebrew.

Hitherto, I trow, this matter is but ſimplie proued.

M. Harding. The 22. Diuiſion.

Whereas S. Auguſtine, after that the Engliſh Nation had receiued the Faith, and he had beene Archbiſhop ouer them, hauing found, the Faith being one, diuerſity of cuſtomes in diuers Churches, one maner of Maſſes in the holy Roman Church, another in that of France: for this and certaine other purpoſes, ſent two of his Clergie, Laurence and Peter to Rome, to be aduertiſed amongſt other things what order, maner, and cuſtome of Maſſes, it liked S. Gregory, the Churches of the Engliſh Nation ſhould haue. Hereunto that holy Father anſwered, that what hee eſpied either in the Roman or French, or any other Church, that might bee moſt acceptable to almighty God, hee ſhould chuſe out and gather together, and commend commend the same to the Church of England, there to be left in custome to continue: Lib. 1. cap. 27. If it had then beene thought necessary, the Seruice of the Masse to be in English, or if it had been translated into the English tongue, it is not to be thought that Bede, who declareth all things, concerning matters of Religion, so diligently, specially professing to write an Ecclesiasticall Story, would haue passed ouer that in silence. And if the Masse had beene vsed in the English tongue, the monuments and Bookes so much multiplied among the Churches, would haue remained in some place or other. And doubtlesse, some mention would haue been made of the time, and causes of the leauing such kinde of Seruice, and of the beginning the new Latine Seruice. As certaine of S. Gregories Workes, turned into English by Bede himselfe, haue beene kept, so as they remaine to this day.

England.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Here was a short victorie. Peter and Paul could neuer so easily conquer Kingdomes. But this matter stood not so much in winning the vnfaithfull, as in killing the godly. After that was once done, straightwaies Augustine had the Conquest, and was out of hand made Archbishop, and wrote to Rome both thereof, and also for resolution of certaine questions, meet, as he saith, for that rude people of England: As, whether a Woman might be Baptized while she were great with Childe, or after her deliuerie: and how long after she should forbeare the Church: with certaine other secret questions, touching both man and wife, so childish, and so rude, that a man may well doubt, whether Augustine were ruder, or the people. Among other things, he demanded Counsell touching the Masse, for that in diuers Countries he had seene diuers orders of Masses: And yet, good Reader, of them all, he had seene no Priuate Masse. For the Masse in Rome at that time was a Communion, as I haue already shewed, and as it appeareth by these words, which the Deacon pronounced at euery Masse aloud vnto the people: Hee that receiueth not the Communion, let him giue place. The difference stood in addition of certaine Ceremonies. For the Countries abroad, as we may iudge, kept still that simple order that they had first receiued. But the Church of Rome was euer altering. For Gregorie himselfe, vnto whom this Augustine writeth, added the Introite, and the Antemes, and Alleluia, and willed the Introite to be doubled twice, and the Kyrie eleeson nine times, and added also a certaine portion to the Canon. Of these and other like differences Augustine demandeth: and of the same, Gregorie maketh answer. Hereof M. Harding gheseth thus: It appeareth not by Beda, the Seruice was in English: Ergo, The Seruice was in Latine. What kinde of Logicke haue we here? Or how may this reason hold? It concludeth ab authoritate negatiuè. I beleeue, M. Harding himselfe will not allow it. By the like forme of reasoning, a man might as well say: It appeareth not by Beda, that the Preachers instructed or exhorted the English people in English: Ergo, They instructed and exhorted the English people in Latine. Yet againe he gheseth further: There is no Booke to be found of the English Seruice in that time: Ergo, The Seruice was in Latine. O what follie is this! Who is able to shew any Booke written in English a thousand yeares agoe? Or if it could be shewed, yet who were able to vnderstand it? There is no Booke to be found of the prayers that the Druydes made in France, or the Gymnosophistæ in India: and will M. Harding thereof conclude, that therefore the Druydes, or the Gymnosophistæ, prayed in Latine? Such regard he hath to his Conclusions.

Beda, l. 1. c. 27.

Platin. in vitis Pontif. Sabellicus, Ennead. 8. lib. 5.

M. Harding. The 23. Diuision.

S. Gregorie himselfe is a Witnesse of right good Authoritie vnto vs, that this Land of England, which hee calleth Brittanie, in his time, that is almost a thousand yeeres past, had the Common Prayers and Seruice in an vnknowen tongue, without doubt in Latine, much in like sort as we haue of old time had till now. His words be these: Ecce, omnipotens Dominus pene cunctarum gentium corda penetrauit? Ecce, in vna fide Orientis limitem Occidentisque coniunxit: Ecce, linguæ Britanniæ, quæ nihil aliud nouerat, quàm barbarum frendere, iamdudum in diuinis laudibus Hebreum cæpit Halleluia resonare: Behold, our Lord Almighty hath now pierced the hearts almost of all Nations: Behold, he hath ioined the borders of the East and the West in one Faith together: Behold, the tongue of Britaine, that could nothing else but grash barbarously, hath beguune now of late in diuine Seruice to sound the Hebrew Halleluia.

Euangel. in hom. 34. 6.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

S. Gregorie in that place vpon Iob speaketh not one word, neither of the Latine, nor of the English Seruice. Onely he sheweth the mighty power of God, that had conuerted all the World to the obedience of his Gospell. These be his words: Omnipotens Dominus coruscantibus nubibus Cardinis Maris operuit: quia emicantibus prædicatorum Miraculis, ad Fidem etiam terminos Mundi perduxit. Ecce enim pene cunctarum iam gentium corda penetrauit: Ecce, in vna Fide Orientis limitem Occidentisque coniunxit: The Almighty Lord with his shining Clouds hath couered the Corners of the Sea: For hee hath brought the ends of the World vnto the Faith, at the sight of the glorious Miracles of the Preachers.

Gregor. in Iob, lib. 27. cap. 6.

England.

chers. For behold, hee hath well neere pierced thorow the hearts of all Nations, and hath ioined together the borders of the Eaſt and the Weſt, in one Faith. Now, ſaith M. Harding, Gregory is a witneſſe of right good authority, that this Realme of England had the Seruice in an vnknowen tongue. Verely Gregories authoritie in this caſe were right good, if he would ſay the word. But (ſaith M. Harding) S. Gregory reporteth, that the Engliſh people, in the praiſing of God, pronounced the Hebrew Hallelula: Ergo, He is witneſſe to the Latine Seruice. This argument may be perfected, and made thus: The Engliſh people in their praiers ſaid, Halleluia: Halleluia is an Hebrew word: Ergo, The Engliſh people had the Latine Seruice.

This is another Syllogiſmus of M. Hardings. God wot he might haue made it better. Of S. Gregories words he might rather haue concluded thus:

The people of England in their praiers pronounced the Hebrew Halleluia:
Ergo, They had the Hebrew Seruice.

Which doubtleſſe in the Engliſh Churches had bene very ſtrange: and yet as much reaſon in that, as in the Latine. As for theſe Hebrew words, Halleluia, Amen, Sabbaoth, and other like, they may aſwell be vſed in the Engliſh Seruice, as in the Latine: and at this day are vſed, and continued ſtill in the reformed Churches in Germany: and therefore can import no more the one than the other.

M. Harding. The 24. Diuiſion.

Hee liued in the yeere of our Lord 640.

Anno Dom. 668.

Anno 668.

Bede in the end of his ſecond Booke ſheweth, that one Iames, a Deacon of the Church of Yorke, a very cunning man in ſong, ſoone after the Faith had beene ſpread abroad heere, as the number of beleeuers grew, began to be a Maſter or Teacher of ſinging in the Church, after the maner of the Romanes. The like he writeth of one Eddi, ſurnamed Stephanus, that taught the people of Northumberland to ſing the Seruice after the Roman maner: and of Putta, a holy man, Biſhop of Rocheſter, commending him much for his great skill of ſinging in the Church, after the vſe and maner of the Romanes, which he had learned of the Diſciples of S. Gregorie.

Maruellous proofes.

Anno 680.

These be teſtimonies plaine and euident enough, that at the beginning, the Churches of England had their diuine Seruice in Latine, and not in Engliſh. One place more I will recite out of Bede, moſt manifeſt of all other, for proofe hereof. In the time of Agatho the Pope, there was a reuerend man called Iohn Archicantor, that is, chiefe Chaunter or Singer, of S. Peters Church at Rome, and Abbat of the Monaſterie of S. Martin there; Benedict an Abbat of Britaine, hauing builded a Monaſterie at the mouth of the Riuer Murus, (Bede ſo calleth it) ſued to the Pope for confirmations, liberties, franchiſies, priuileges, &c. as in ſuch caſe hath beene accuſtomed. Among other things, hee obteined this cunning Chaunter Iohn, to come with him into Britaine, to teach ſong.

Becauſe Bedes Eccleſiaſticall Story is not very common, I haue thought good, heere to recite his owne words, thus Engliſhed: This Abbat Benedict tooke with him the foreſaid Iohn, to bring him into Britaine, that hee ſhould teach in his Monaſterie the courſe of Seruice for the whole yeere, ſo as it was done at S. Peters in Rome. Iohn did as hee had commandement from the Pope, both in teaching the ſinging men of the ſaid Monaſterie, the order and rite of ſinging and reading with vtterance of their voice, and alſo of writing and pricking thoſe things that the compaſſe of the whole yeere required in the celebration and keeping of the holy daies: which bee kept in the ſame Monaſterie till this day, and be copied out of many round about, on euery coaſt. Neither did that Iohn teach the Brethren of that Monaſterie onely, but alſo many other made all the means they could, to get him to other places, where they might haue him to teach. Thus farre Bede. I trow, no man will thinke that this Roman taught and wrote the order and maner of ſinging, and pronouncing the Seruice of the Churches of this Land, in the Engliſh tongue. If it had beene deemed of the learned and godly gouernours of Chriſtian people then, a neceſſary point to ſaluation, to haue had the Seruice in the Engliſh, no man had beene ſo apt and fit to haue tranſlated it, as he, who in thoſe daies had, by ſpeciall grace of God, a ſingular gift to make ſongs and ſonets in Engliſh Meeter, to ſerue Religion and deuotion. His name was Cednom, of whom Bede writeth maruellous things. How hee made diuers ſongs conteining matter of the holy Scripture with ſuch exceeding ſweetneſſe, and with ſuch a grace, as many feeling their hearts compunct and prickt with hearing and reading of them, withdrew themſelues from the loue of the world, and were enkindled with the deſire of the heauenly life. Many (ſaith Bede) of the Engliſh Nation, attempted after him to make religious and godly Poetries, but none could doe compareably to him. For he was not (ſaith he alluding to S Pauls words) taught of men, neither by man, that Art of making godly ſongs; but receiued from God that gift freely. And therefore he could make no wanton, trifling, or vaine ditties, but onely ſuch as perteined to godly Religion, and might ſeeme to proceed of a head guided by the holy Ghoſt: Lib. 4. Cap. 24. This diuine Poet Cednom, though he made many and ſundry holy workes, hauing their whole argument out of holy Scripture, as Bede reporteth, yet neuer made hee any peece of the Seruice to be vſed in the Church. Thus the Faith hath continued in this Land, among the Engliſh people, from the 14. yeere of the reigne of Mauritius the Emperour, almoſt theſe 1000. yeeres, and vntill the late King Edwards time, the Engliſh Seruice was neuer heard of, at leaſt way, neuer in the Church of England, by publike Authoritie, receiued and vſed.

The 80. vntruth. For his examples reach nothing ſo farre.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

I little thought M. Harding would ſo much haue bewraied his want, to proue his matter by Pipers and Poets, and ſpecially being all without the compaſſe of 600. yeeres. For it is plaine by Beda, that this Iames, the Deacon, liued vnder King Edwine, about the yeere of our Lord 640. Putta and Edda, in the yeere 668. Iohn the Archchaunter, and Cednom, or Cedman (for ſo his name is read in Beda, written in parchment) in the time of of Pope Agatho, in the yere 680. in whose name this Decree is written: Sic omnes sanctiones Apostolicæ Sedis accipiendæ sunt, tanquam ipsius diuina voce Petri firmatæ: All the Constitutions of the Apostolike See must bee receiued so, as if they were confirmed by the very heauenly voice of S. Peter. Vnto such a tyrannie the Church of Rome at that time was growen. And the Glosse vpon the same saith: Papa Sanctitatem suam recipit a Cathedra: The Pope receiueth his holinesse of his Chaire. Therefore herein M. Harding hath somewhat misreckoned himselfe. Although all the rest were certaine, yet these Witnesses come too late to make good proofe. England. Distinct. 19. Sic omnes.

Beda, l. 2. c. 14. Beda, l. 4. c. 21. Beda, li. 4. c. 1.

Yet (saith M. Harding) these testemonies bee plaine and euident enough, that at the beginning, the Churches of England had their diuine Seruice, in Latine, and not in English. These be very dumbe Testimonies. For neither Iames the Deacon, nor Iohn the Arch-chaunter, nor Cednom, nor Putta, nor Beda himselfe euer said so. Therefore this matter is proued by M. Hardings ghesse, and not by the words of the Witnesses.

The force of his reason seemeth to weigh thus:

These Musicians taught the Clerkes of England to sing their Seruice after the Roman maner:

Ergo, They had the Latine Seruice.

The substance of this argument may the better appeare by some other like:

Triptolemus taught all Nations to plow the ground after the maner of the Athenians:

Ergo, He taught all Nations in the Athenian tongue.

Or: Abraham taught the Egyptians Arithmeticke and Astronomie:

Ergo, Abraham taught the Egyptians in the Chaldee tongue.

For doth M. Harding beleeue, it is not possible to learne the Roman Musicke, without the Roman speech: or that the note cannot be taught, without the Ditty? Verily I reckon him no good Musician, that will say so. By the like reason he might say: Damasus besought S. Hierome to send to him Græcorum psallentiam, the musicke of the Greeke Church, to the intent to practise the same in the Church of Rome: Ergo, Damasus vsed the Greeke Seruice in the Church of Rome. Damasus ad Hieronymum.

But Beda himselfe is best able to expound his owne meaning. Hauing occasion to intreat of Adrianus and Theodorus, that came into England the yere of our Lord 668. he writeth thus: Sonos cantandi in Ecclesia, quos eatenus in Cantio tantùm nouerant, ab hoc tempore per omnes Anglorum Ecclesias discere cœperunt: From that time, they began to learne throwout all the Churches of England, the sounds of singing, or the notes of Musicke, which before that time were knowen only in Kent. Beda saith, They learned the Sounds, or Notes, or Harmonie, and maketh no mention of the Tongue, or Ditty. But let M. Hardings conclusions stand for good:

These Musitians taught the Clerks of Engand to sing after the Roman maner:

Ergo, They had the Latine Seruice.

And doth he not see, that he concludeth fully with me, and directly against himselfe: Certainly if the Roman Musicke import the Latine Seruice, then may I well reason thus: The Churches of England had not the Roman musicke before Iames the Deacon of Yorke, which liued in the yeere of our Lord 640. Ergo, Before that time, the Churches of England had not the Latine Seruice. Which thing ouerthroweth all that M. Harding hath hitherto spoken, and standeth very well with my assertion. No Latine Seruice in England within six hundred yeeres.

Againe, where he saith, That Iohn the Arch-chaunter, that liued in the yeere of our Lord 680. taught the Clerkes of England to pronounce the Latine tongue; it may thereof well be gathered, that before that time, they could not pronounce the Latine tongue: and so before that time, had not the Latine Seruice.

Now, forsomuch as M. Harding saith, By meane of the arriuall and conquest of the English men, who then were Infidels, the Faith was vtterly banished out of this Realme, and remained only in a few Britaines, and Augustine at his comming restored the same againe, and therefore is called of some, the English mens Apostle; I thinke it necessary therefore, shortly to touch somewhat of the state of the Church within this Land, both before the entry of our English Nation, and also in the first time of our being here. Ghildas saith, that Ioseph of Arimathea, that toke downe Christ from the Crosse, being sent hither by Philip the Apostle, out of France, began first to preach the Gospell in this Realme, in the time of Tiberius the Emperour. Nicephorus saith, that Simon Zelotes, about the same time, came into this Iland, and did the like. Theodoretus saith, that S. Paul, immediately after his first deliuerie in Rome, vnder the Emperour Nero, preached the Gospell in this Iland, and in other Countries of the West. Tertullian saith, the Iland of Britaine was subiect vnto Christ in his time. And Origen witnesseth the like of the same Iland in his time: At which time Lucius, the King of this Realme, was Baptized, Ghildas. Ann. Dom. 38. Nicep. li. 2. c. 4. Anno 38. Theodoret. de curandis Græcorum affect. li. 9. Tertull. aduersus Iudæos. Anno 230. Orig. in Ezechiel. hom. 4. Anno 240.

England.

Baptized, and receiued the Goſpell, and ſent to Rome to Eleutherius the Biſhop there, for his aduice, couching the ordering of his Church and Realme. Helena being an Engliſh woman, wife vnto Conſtantius the Emperour, and mother vnto Coſtantinus, is notably praiſed for her Faith and Religion, by S. Ambroſe, by Euſebius, by Sozomenus, and others.

Ambr. de obitu Theod.

Euſeb. de vita Conſtan. lib. 3.

Sozom. l. 2. c. 1.

Chryſoſtome ſaith, that in his time, the Iland of Britaine had receiued the power of the Goſpell.

Chryſ. aduerſ. Gentiles, to 5.

Now let vs conſider in what ſtate this Realme ſtood, touching Religion, at the coming of Auguſtine, at which time M. Harding ſurmiſeth the whole Faith was vtterly decaied. Firſt Beda ſaith, there were among the Britaines, ſeuen Biſhops, and one Archbiſhop, and one and twenty hundred Monkes, about Bancor: and as he further auoucheth, Plures viri doctiſſimi, many moe great learned men, that vtterly refuſed to receiue this Auguſtine with his new Religion.

Beda, l. 2. ca. 2.

Beda, l. 1. c. 26.

As touching the Engliſh Nation, it appeareth by Beda, that the Quéne herſelfe was Chriſtened, and had S. Martins Church appointed her, freely to pray in with her company. Whereof it may be thought, the King was no great enemie vnto the Faith, and therefore the like alſo may well be thought of a great number of the people.

Thus much ſhortly of the firſt planting of the Religion of Chriſt within this Iland and of the continuance of the ſame, from the time of Ioſeph of Arimathea, vntill the coming in of Auguſtine. Now touching the Common Praiers that they vſed among themſelues all that while. Firſt, it were very much for M. Harding to ſay, that S. Paul, or Ioſeph of Arimathea, or Simon Zelotes, being all Hebrewes borne, toke order, that the Seruice héere ſhould be miniſtred vnto the people in the Latine tongue. 1

Againe, Eleutherius the Biſhop of Rome, for generall order to be taken in the Realme and Churches héere, wrote his aduice vnto Lucius the King, in this ſort: Suſcepiſti in Regno Britanniæ, miſeratione diuina, Legem & Fidem Chriſti. Habetis penes vos in Regno vtramque paginam: Ex illis, Dei gratia, per Concilium Regni veſtri, ſume Legem, & per illam, Dei patientia, veſtrum rege Brittanniæ Regnum. Vicarius verò Dei eſtis in Regno illo. Ye haue receiued in the Kingdome of Britaine, by Gods mercy, both the Law and Faith of Chriſt. Ye haue both the New Teſtament, and the Old. Out of the ſame, through Gods grace, by the aduice of your Realme, take a Law, and by the ſame, through Gods ſufferance, rule ouer your Kingdome of Britaine. For in that Kingdome you are Gods Vicar. He willeth him to order matters according to the Law of God. Now the Law of God willeth the Seruice ſo to be ſaid, as the people may vnderſtand it, and giue conſent vnto it, by ſaying Amen: But the people of this Realme could not haue ſaid Amen vnto the Latine Seruice: Therefore no man can well thinke, that King Lucius appointed the Common Seruice to be ſaid in that tongue. Further, it may well be iudged, that the greateſt furtherers of Religion within this Realme, were Græcians, and for order of the Church, had inſtructions euer more from the Gréeke Church, and not from Rome, as it may appeare by the kéeping of the Eaſter day, and by other good coniectures, mentioned by Beda. Now, if the Græcians had refuſed the Common Vulgar Tongue of this Country, doubtleſſe they would haue appointed their owne Gréeke tongue for the Publike Miniſtration, and not the Latine. 2 3

Againe, M. Harding allegeth S. Gregory, that the tongue of this Nation was neuer otherwiſe taught, but only to roare out their barbarous language: how then can he ſo ſuddenly ſay, that from the time of Ioſeph of Arimathea, they had euermore the Seruice in the learned Latine tongue? 4

Gregor. in Iob, lib. 27. cap. 6. Ecce lingua Britanniæ, quæ nil aliud nouerat, quàm barbarum frẽdere.

Beſides this, S. Gregory writing vnto Auguſtine, willeth him, of the ſundry others that hee had ſeene in diuers Countries, to take ſuch as he could iudge might doe moſt good. But M. Harding granteth, that at the firſt planting of the Faith, it is neceſſary the Common Praiers be miniſtred in the knowen tongue: Therefore it muſt néeds be thought, that Auguſtiine comming hither, as it is ſuppoſed, to plant the Faith, iudged that thing beſt, that M. Harding ſaith was neceſſarie, and ſo miniſtred the Common Praiers in the knowen tongue. 5

And to conclude, it was moſt méet, that Auguſtine, being purpoſely ſent hither from Rome, ſhould conforme his Church héere, to the Church of Rome. But the Seruice in the Church of Rome was miniſtred then in the Vulgar Tongue, as it is many waies eaſie to be proued: Therefore it behoued Auguſtine likewiſe in the Churches of this Country, to ſée the Seruice miniſtred in the Vulgar tongue.

Howbeit, it ſéemeth by M. Hardings Concluſion, that hée maketh his account onely from the fourtéenth yéere of the Emperour Mauritius, which was in the yéere of our Lord, fiue hundred foure ſcore and ſixtéene: Sithence which time (hée ſaith) vntill the time of King Edward the Sixth, there was neuer in this Realme, other than the Latine Seruice. I may not greatly blame this diuision. For of the fiue hundred yeeres after Christ, whereupon I ioine with him in issue, liberally and of his owne accord, hee giueth me backe fiue hundred foure score and fifteene, and of so great a number, reserueth vnto himselfe but only foure poore yeeres, and yet is not very certaine of the same. But if Marianus Scotus account be true, that Augustine came into this Realme, not the fourteenth yeere of the Emperor Mauritius, but foure yeeres after, which was iust the fiue hundreth yeere after Christ, then hee reserueth not one yeere at all vnto himselfe, but yeeldeth mee backe all together. Surely Abbas Vrspergensis writeth thus: Gregorius, in the yeere of our Lord six hundred and three, hauing sent in Augustine and Mellitus, conuerted England to the Faith. All this hitherto maketh with me, vnlesse M. Harding will say, The people of this Countrey had Christian Seruice before they were Christened.

Anno 596.

the

England.

Marian. Scot.

Ann. Do. 600.

Abbas Vrsperg. in vita Mauritij. Anno 603.

M. Harding. The 25. Diuision.

Now touching the Scripture by M. Iewell, and by all them of that side alleged, for the Seruice to be had in the Vulgar tongue, in the 14. Chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians, S. Paul treateth of the vse of tongues, so as it was in the Primitiue Church a speciall gift. As the faithfull folke came together to pray, and to heare Gods word, some one man suddenly stood vp, and spake in the Congregation with tongues of many Nations, Spiritu insufflante, as Chrysostome saith, that is, by inspiration, or prompting of the Spirit, so as neither others that were present, neither himselfe, after the opinion of Chrysostome, vnderstood what he said; that gift the Apostle did not forbid: for that euery gift of God is good, and nothing by him done in vaine. but dehorted the Corinthians from the vaine and ambitious vse of it: and therefore did much extenuate the same, and preferred propheseying, that is, the gift to interpret and expound Scriptures, farre before it. It was not in the Church, but in the Apostles time, or a very short while after them; and that altogether by miracle, the holy Ghost being the worker of it.

The place of S. Paul to the Corinthians maketh not for a Seruice in the English tongue. 1. Cor. 14. Ioan. 17.

As concerning the order of the Common Praiers, and Publike Seruice, in such sort as wee haue now, and that age had not, S. Paul mentioneth nothing, neither speaketh one word in that whole Chapter, but of the vse of the miraculous gift, as is said before. And therefore his sayings out of that Chapter be not fitly alleged of M. Iewell, and the rest of our aduersaries, against the maner of praiers and Seruice of the Church, now receiued, and of long time vsed, which in the West is vttered in the Latine tongue, not by way of miracle, or peculiar gift, but according to the institution and ordinance of the Church. Profecto enim cœlum Ecclesia tum fuit. In very deed (saith Chrysostome) the Church then was Heauen, when as the holy Ghost administred all things, moderated all the heads of the Church, taught each one with his inspiration. As for vs we keepe but the steps only of those things. We speake two or three of vs, and that a sunder, and one holding his peace, another beginneth. But these be but signes only, and memorials of things. And so when we haue begun he meaneth Dominus vobiscum, & cum spiritu tuo) the people answereth: meaning to signifie thereby, that so in old time they spake, not of their own wisedome, but of the instinct of the spirit of God. Thus much Chrysostome of the heauenly maner of the Primitiue Church in the Apostles time. Now if in these daies the maner were like, if it pleased the Holy Ghost to powre vpon vs the like abundance of grace, as to doe all things for vs, to rule the heads of all faithfull people, to carry each one of vs with his diuine inspiration, and when wee came to Church together for comfort and edifying, to giue into our hearts, and put into our mouthes by daily miracle what wee should pray, and what we should preach, and how we should handle the Scriptures, in this case no Catholike Christian man would allow the vnfruitfull speaking with strange and vnknowen tongues, without interpretation, to the let and hinderance of Gods word to be declared, and to the keeping of the people only in gazing and wondering, from saying Amen, and giuing their assent to the godly blessing and thanksgiuing. But the order of the Church now is farre otherwise. We haue not those miraculous gifts, and right well may we do without them. For the speaking with tongues was in stead of a signe or wonder, not to them that beleeued, but to the vnbeleeuers. And signes be for the vnfaithfull: the faithfull haue no need of them. In Churches, I meane where ancient order is kept, whiles the Seruice is sung or said, the Ministers doe not speake with tongues, or with a tongue, in such sort as S. Paul vnderstood, but they doe read and rehearse things set foorth and appointed to them. S. Paul rebuketh them, who speaking with tongues, letted the Preachers, so as the people present might not be edified. The Latine Seruice is not so done in the Church, as the exposition of the Scriptures be thereby excluded. In the Apostles time they came to Church, to the intent they might profitably exercise the gifts God gaue them, and by the same, specially by the gift of propheseying, edifie one another, and teach one another. Now adaies they come not together to Church, one to teach another, and to expound the Scriptures in common, but to pray, and to heare the opening of Gods Word, not one of another, without order, but of some one, to wit, the Bishop, Priest, Curate, or other spirituall Gouernour and Teacher.

The 21. vntruth. For sundry Doctours, both old and new, allege these words to this selfesame purpose.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

We may safely grant some part of M. Hardings long talke, without preiudice of our cause. Indeed S. Paul in the place alleged, spake of the gift of tongues, as it was a speciall miracle, enduring only for a while, not gotten by labour or study, but freely inspired by the spirit of God.

But the Latine tongue (saith M. Harding) as it is now commonly vsed in the Romane Seruice, is not giuen by any such prompting of the Holy Ghost, nor is now any Miracle at all. Therefore the place of S. Paul cannot be applied vnto it. We grant well, it is no Miracle, as it is now vsed, nor any way sauoureth of the Spirit of God. But this is a great miracle, to see either any man so wicked, that so will vse it: or so impudent, that so will defend it: or so patient, that so will suffer it. This verily is a maruellous miracle.

M. Harding

M. Harding ſæmeth hereof to reaſon of this ſort: S. Paul forbade the Corinthians to vſe the ſpeciall miracle and gift of God, without profiting the Congregation: Ergo, Now hauing the Latine tongue without miracle, we may miniſter the Seruice therein, although the Congregation haue no profit by it. This reaſon is ſtrange, and holdeth as ſimply as the reſt. Yet hath he giuen ſpeciall aduertiſement in the Margin, that this place of S. Paul ſerueth nothing to our purpoſe. If this note be ſo certaine, and ſo authenticall as he would ſæme to make it, then were the Doctours, both new and old, that toke it otherwiſe, not well aduiſed. For Lyra writing vpon the ſame: ſaith thus: Si populus intelligat orationem Sacerdotis, melius reducitur in Deum, & deuotiùs reſpondet, Amen. Ideò dicit Paulus, Si tu Sacerdos benedixeris Spiritu, & populus non intelligat, quid proficit populus ſimplex, & non intelligens? Quapropter in Primitiua Eccleſia benedictiones & cætera omnia fiebant in vulgari: If the people vnderſtand the Praier of the Prieſt, they are the better brought vnto God, and with greater deuotion they anſwer, Amen. Therefore S. Paul ſaith, If thou being a Prieſt, bleſſe with thy ſpirit, and the people vnderſtand thee not, what profit then hath the people, being ſimple, and not vnderſtanding thee? Therefore in the Primitiue Church, both the bleſſings, and all other things, were done in the vulgar tongue. Lyra in 1. Cor. 14.

The vulgar tongue, ſaith Lyra, was vſed in the Primitiue Church, vpon occaſion of theſe words of S. Paul. In the Councell of Acon it is written thus: Pſallentium in Eccleſia Domino mens concordare debet cum voce, vt impleatur illud Apoſtoli, Pſallam ſpiritu, pſallam & mente: the voice and minde of them that ſing vnto the Lord in the Church, muſt agree together. Concil. Aquiſgran. ca. 132.

The reaſon thereof is taken out of this place of S. Paul: I will ſing with my ſpirit, I will ſing with my minde. Chryſoſtome ſaith, S. Paul ſtayeth the whole tenour of this matter vnto the profit of the hearers. Theſe be his words: Eſt autem quod Paulus dicit huiuſmodi: Niſi dixero quod percipi facilè claréque à vobis poſſit, ſed linguarum munere præditum me eſſe tantùm oſtendam, nullum ex his, quæ non intelligetis, fructum facientes, abibitis. Nam quæ vtilitas eſſe poſſit ex voce non intellecta? Chryſoſt. in 1. Cor. Hom. 35.

S. Pauls ſaying ſtandeth thus: Vnleſſe I vtter my words ſo as they may cleerely and plainly be perceiued of you, but only ſhew my ſelfe to haue the gift of tongues, ye ſhall haue no fruit of thoſe things that ye know not. For what profit can yee get of a voice that yee cannot vnderſtand? And againe the ſame Chryſoſtome ſaith further: Sic & vos, niſi ſignificantem vocem dederitis, verba (quod dicitur) vento, hoc eſt, nemini facietis: Euen ſo you, vnleſſe you giue a ſound that may be knowen, as the Prouerbe is, ye ſhall throw foorth your words into the winde, that is to ſay, yee ſhall ſpeake to no man.

So likewiſe the Emperour Iuſtinian, where he commandeth all Biſhops and Prieſts to miniſter the Sacraments, and other Praiers, aloud, and with open voice, he admonyſheth the ſame by this place of S. Paul. For thus he ſaith: Sic enim diuinus Apoſtolus docet, dicens, Si ſolùm ſpiritu benedixeris, qui implet locum Idiotæ, quomodo dicet Amen ſuper tuam benedictionem? Non enim intelligit quid dicas: So the holy Apoſtle ſaith: If thou only bleſſe, or pray with thy ſpirit, how ſhall hee that ſupplieth the roome of the vnlearned, ſay Amen vnto thy bleſſing? For he knoweth not what thou ſaieſt. De Eccleſiaſtic. diuerſis capit.

It appeareth by theſe authorities, notwithſtanding M. Hardings note, that S. Paul maketh ſomewhat for our purpoſe.

Howbeit, we build not our proofes vpon the miracle and gift of tongues, that laſted but for a while; but vpon theſe expreſſe and plaine words of S. Paul, which no man can denie: He that ſpeaketh with tongue, ſpeaketh not vnto men, but vnto God: For no man heareth him. If the Trumpet giue an vncertaine voice, who ſhall prepare himſelfe vnto the warre? Euen ſo you, vnleſſe yee vtter ſuch words as haue ſignification, how ſhall it be knowen what we ſay? For yee ſhall ſpeake into the winde. I will pray with my Spirit, I will pray with my minde: I will ſing with my ſpirit, I will ſing with my minde. If thou bleſſe with thy ſpirit, how ſhall the ignorant ſay Amen vnto thy thankſgiuing? For he knoweth not what thou ſaiſt. In the Church I had leuer to ſpeake fiue words with my minde, ſo that I may inſtruct others, than ten thouſand words with my tongue. Let all things be done to the profit of the people. 1. Cor. 14.

Theſe words be euident: The expoſition of Lyra, of the Councell of Acon, of Chryſoſtome, and Iuſtinian, is plaine. And yet muſt we, vpon M. Hardings warrant, needs beleeue, that all this maketh nothing for the English Seruice to be had in the Church of England.

M. Harding. The 26. Diuiſion.

The 82. vntruth. The Altars to Communion Tables ſtood in the midſt of the Church as ſhall appeare.

And foraſmuch as all the people cannot heare the Prieſts praiers at the Altar, (which hath from the Apoſtles time hitherto euer beene a place to celebrate the holy Oblation at) turning himſelfe for the moſt part to the Eaſt, according to the Apoſtolike tradition, in what tongue ſoeuer they be vttered, for diſtance of the place they remain in, it is no inconuenience, ſuch admitted into the Quire, as haue better vnderſtanding of that is ſaid or ſung, that the reſt remaine in ſeemely wiſe in the nether part of the Church, and there make their humble praiers to God by themſelues in ſilence, in that language they beſt vnderſtand, conforming themſelues to the Prieſts bleſſing and thankſgiuing, through faith and obedience, with their brethren

The people taught by ceremonies.

brethren in the Quire, and giuing assent to the same, vnderstanding some good part of that is done, as declared by often preaching, and by holy outward Ceremonies, perceiueable to the senses of the simplest.

Communion Tables or Altars.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

There haue beene Altars (saith M. Harding) euen from the Apostles time, and that euen as it is vsed now, farre off from the Body of the Church. Neither could the people beneath heare the Priest standing about at the Altar, or vnderstand what he meant, but only were instructed by holy reuerend Ceremonies, and gaue consent vnto all that was said by the Priest, and yet knew not what he said.

This man could neuer vtter so many vntruths together without some speciall Priuiledge. For first, where hee saith, The Apostles in their time erected Altars, It is well knowen, that there was no Christian Church yet built in the Apostles time. For the faithfull for feare of the Tyrants were faine to meet together in Priuate Houses, in Vacant places, in Woods and Forests, and in Caues vnder the ground. And may we thinke, that Altars were built before the Church? Verily Origen, that liued two hundred yeres after Christ, hath these words against Celsus: Obijcit nobis, quòd non habeamus Imagines, aut Aras, aut Templa: Celsus chargeth our Religion with this, that we haue neither Images, nor Altars, nor Churches. Origen. contra Celsum, li. 4.

Likewise saith Arnobius that liued somewhat after Origen, writing against the Heathens: Accusatis nos, quòd nec Templa habeamus, nec Imagines, nec Aras: Yee accuse vs, for that we haue neither Churches, nor Images, nor Altars. Arnobius, li. 2.

And Volaterranus and Vernerius testifie, that Sixtus Bishop of Rome, was the first that caused Altars to be erected. Therefore M. Harding was not well aduised, so confidently to say, That Altars haue euer beene, euen sithence the Apostles time. Volaterranus, Vernerius.

Neither afterward, when Altars were first vsed, and so named, were they straightway built of stone, as Durandus and such others say, they must needs be, and that, Quia petra erat Christus: Because Christ was the stone. For Gerson saith, that Sylvester Bishop of Rome first caused stone Altars to be made: and willed that no man should Consecrate at a wodden Altar, but himselfe only, and his Successours there. And notwithstanding both for continuance, and stedinesse, such Altars were vsed in some places, as it appeareth by Gregorius Nyssenus, S. Basils Brother, yet it is plaine by S. Augustine, that in his time in Aphrica they were made of Timber. For he saith: That the Donatists in their rage wounded the Priest, and brake asunder the Altar boords. And againe hee saith: That the Deacons duty was to carrie or remoone the Altar. Which thing cannot be erpounded of a heape of stones, but only of the Communion Table. And therefore S. Chrysostome commonly calleth it, ἱερὰ τράπεζα, The holy boord: and S. Augustine, Mensa Domini, The Lords Table, as other Fathers also doe in infinite places. Durandus li. 4. Gerson. contra Floretum, li. 4. Gregori. Nyssen. de Sancto Baptismate. August. ad Bonifacium, Epistola 50. Augu. in q. veteris & noui Testam. q. 101, Ireneus li. 4. cap. 34. Orig. in Matthe. tract. 25,

And notwithstanding it were A Table, yet was it also called An Altar: not for that it was so indeed, but only by allusion vnto the Altars of the old Law. And so Irenæus calleth Christ our Altar, and Origen calleth Our heart, Our Altar: Not that either Christ, or our hearts bee Altars in deed, but onely by a Metaphor, or a manner of speech. Such were the Altars that were vsed by the old Fathers, immediately after the Apostles time.

Now whether it may seeme likely, that the same Altars stood so farre off from the hearing of the people, as M. Harding so constantly affirmeth: I referre my selfe to these authorities that heere follow.

Eusebius thus describeth the forme and furniture of the Church in his time: Absoluto Templo, ac sedibus excelsissimis ad honorem præsidentium, & subsellijs ordine collocatis, ornato & post omnia Sancto Sanctorum, videlicet, Altari, in medio constituto, &c. The Church being ended and comely furnished with high Thrones for the honor of the Rulers, and with stalles beneath set in order, and last of all, the Holy of Holies, I meane, The Altar, being placed in the middest. Eusebius saith not, the Altar was set at the end of the Quire, but in the middest of the Church among the people. Eusebius li. 10. cap. 4. Ex oratione Panegyrica in Encæniis.

S. Augustine likewise saith thus: Christus quotidiè pascit: Mensa ipsius est illa in medio constituta. Quid causæ est, ô audientes, vt mensam videatis, & ad epulas non accedatis? Christ feedeth vs daily: and this is his table heere set in the middest. O my hearers, what is the matter that ye see the table, and yet come not to the meat? In the Councell of Constantinople it is written thus: Tempore diptychorum, cucurrit omnis multitudo cum magno silentio circumcirca Altare, & audiebant: When the Lesson or the Chapter was a reading, the people with silence drew together round about the Altar, and gaue eare. And to leaue others, Durandus examining the cause why the Priest turneth himselfe about at the Altar, yeldeth this reason for the same: In medio Ecclesiæ aperui os meum: In the middest of the Church I opened my mouth. And Platina noteth, that Bonifacius Bishop of Rome, was the first that in the time of the Ministration diuided the Priest from the people. Augustinus de Verbis Domini secundu Iohan. Sermon. 42. Concil. Constantinop. 5. Act. 1. Durandus li. 5. Platina.

Communion Tables or Altars.

To leaue further allegations, wee ſee by theſe few, that the Quire was then in the Bodie of the Church, diuided with Railes from the reſt, whereof it was called Cancelli, a Chancell, and commonly of the Grækes, Presbyterium, for that it was a place ſpecially appointed vnto the Prieſts and Miniſters, and ſhut vp from all others, for diſturbing the holy Miniſterie, as it appeareth notably by the ſtorie of S. Ambroſe, that willed the Emperour Theodoſius himſelfe to depart forth, and by Nazianzenus in the life of S. Baſil, and by a Decree vnder the name of Clemens, and by the Councell of Laodicea concerning the ſame: and, as it may be gathered by S. Chryſoſtome, at certaine times of the Seruice was drawen with Courtaines.

Theodoret li. 5. cap. 18.
Nazianzen. in vita Baſilij.
De Con. diſt. 2. Sacerdotum.
Concil. Laodicen. ca. 19.

Euen at this day in the great Churches at Millane, Naples, Lions, Mens, and Rome, and in the Church of S. Laurence in Florence the Prieſt at his Seruice ſtandeth towards the Weſt, and ſo hath his face ſtill vpon the people. And therefore Durandus ſaith: In ſuch places the Prieſt needeth not to turne himſelfe round when he ſaith, Dominus vobiſcum, and ſalluteth the people.

Chryſoſtom. in epiſt. ad Epheſ. hom. 3.
Chryſoſt. in 2. ad Cor. hom. 18
Clemens Strom. li. 7.

And whereas M. Harding imagineth, that the people for diſtance of place, could not heare what the Prieſt ſaid, a man that hath conſidered the old Fathers with any diligence, may ſone ſee, he is farre deceiued. For Chryſoſtome ſaith: The Deacon at the holy Myſteries ſtood vp, and thus ſpake vnto the people: Oremus pariter omnes: Let vs pray all together. And againe he ſaith: The Prieſt and the People at the Miniſtration talke together. The Prieſt ſaith, The Lord be with you: The People anſwereth, And with thy Spirit. Iuſtinian the Emperour commanded, that the Prieſt ſhould ſo ſpeake aloud at the holy Miniſtration, As the people might heare him. Clemens Alexandrinus ſaith: Eſt ergo, quod eſt hîc apud nos Altare, terreſtris congregatio eorum, qui ſunt dedicati orationibus: qui veluti vnam vocem habent Communem, & vnam mentem: The Altar that wee haue, is an earthly Congregation of men giuen to praiers, which haue, as it were, both voice and minde common together. And to leaue reheartall of others, Beſſarion ſaith: Sacerdote verba illa pronunciante, aſſiſtens populus in vtraque parte reſpondet, Amen: The Prieſt ſpeaking theſe words, the people ſtanding by, at each part of the Sacrament, or on euery ſide, ſaith Amen.

Beſſarion de Sacramento Euchariſtiæ.

Now iudge thou, good Reader, what truth may ſeeme to be in that M. Harding addeth hereto: That the people remaining in ſeemely wiſe in the neather part of the Church, was inſtructed by certaine Ceremonies and tokens ſhewed in the Quire, and gaue aſſent and ſaid Amen, vnto the Prieſt praying at the Altar, although they vnderſtood no part of his praier. Certainly, S. Paul ſaith; Quomodo dicet, Amen, ad tuam gratiarum actionem? Quandoquidem neſcit quid dicas: How ſhall he ſay Amen, and giue aſſent vnto thy thankeſgiuing? For hee knoweth not what thou ſaieſt. So ſaith S. Auguſtine: Vt populus ad id, quod plane intelligit, dicat Amen: That the people vnto that they plainly vnderſtand, may ſay Amen. Likewiſe S. Ambroſe: Imperitus audiens, quod non intelligit, neſcit finem orationis, & non reſpondet Amen: id eſt, Verum, vt confirmetur benedictio. Per hos enim impletur confirmatio precis, qui reſpondent Amen: vt omnia dicta veri teſtimonio in audientium mentibus confirmentur: The vnlearned, hearing that he vnderſtandeth not, knoweth not the end of the praier, neither ſaith Amen: that is to ſay, It is true: That the Prieſts Bleſſing may be confirmed. For by them that anſwer Amen, the Praier is confirmed: whereby is meant, that whatſoeuer is ſpoken by the teſtimonie of the truth, be made good in the mindes of the hearers. Seeing therefore that neither Altars were erected in the Apoſtles time: nor the Communion Table, that then was vſed, ſtood ſo farre off from the Body of the Church: nor the people gaue aſſent to that, they vnderſtood not: ſo many vntruths being found in M. Hardings premiſſes, wee may well and ſafely ſtand in doubt of his concluſion.

1. Cor. 14.

Auguſtin. de Catechizandis rudibus, cap. 9.
Ambroſ. in 1. Cor. cap. 14.

M. Harding. The 27. Diuiſion.

Whereas you, M. Iewel, allege S. Paul for your purpoſe, & make him to ſay thus, otherwiſe than he wrote; If thou make thy praier in the congregation with thy ſpirit, or noiſe of ſtrange words, how ſhall the vnlearned man thereunto ſay Amen? For he knoweth not what thou ſaiſt; you bombaſt this text with your owne counterfet ſtuffing. The tranſlation authorized by King Edward and his Counſell, is truer, and followeth the Greeke neerer, which hath thus; When thou bleſſeſt with the ſpirit, how ſhall hee that occupieth the roome of the vnlearned, ſay Amen, at thy giuing of thankes, ſeeing he vnderſtandeth not what thou faieſt? Heere the Apoſtle S. Paul ſpeaketh of bleſſing or thankeſgiuing with the ſpirit; which ſpirit, what it is, it is not eaſie to declare, after the iudgement of your owne Patriarke, Iohn Caluin. S. Ambroſe taketh it for the ſpirit we haue receiued in Baptiſme, that doth incline and moeue vs ro praier. S. Thomas for the holy ghoſt giuen to vs, for reaſon, and for the power imaginatiue. Eraſmus, for the voice it ſelfe. Iſidorus Clarius, for the power of pronouncing or vtterance; ſome, for the breath that paſſeth the throat; ſome, for the intention; S. Auguſtine very ſubtlely, Pro apprehenſione quæ ideas concipit, & ſigna rerum. Caluine in his Inſtitutions, De Oratione, cap. 15. for the ſound of the mouth, that is cauſed of the breath of a mans throat, and rebounding of the aire. Chryſoſtome, for the ſpirituall gift, or the gift of the holy Ghoſt to ſpeake with tongues. Which Caluine himſelfe, ſitting in iudgement as it were, vpon this doubtfull matter, alloweth beſt, and condemneth the minde of all others, and alſo his owne though vnawares, as it ſeemeth, and

1. Cor. 14.

and ſo he would condemne your noiſe of ſtrange words likewiſe if he heard it. This text being ſo doubtfull of it ſelfe in ſenſe, ſo put out of tune by your noiſe of ſtrange words, wherewith you deſcant vpon the word Spirit, ſo violently applied by your new fangled expoſition, maketh little to the condemnation of the Latine Seruice in the Latine Church, ſpecially ſeeing that S. Paul meaneth by that miraculous ſpeaking with tongues, vſed or rather abuſed among the Corinthians, a farre different maner of ſpeaking from that ſpeaking whereby the Prieſt vttereth the Common Seruice.

The Prieſt (I grant) ſaying his Seruice to his Pariſh, ſpeaketh with a tongue, but ſuch maner of ſpeaking is not that which S. Paul meant. For the Prieſt vnderſtandeth it for the better part, if hee bee learned, and (83) the people be not vtterly ignorant, becauſe of often preaching, long cuſtome, ſolemne feaſts and vndue Ceremonies. And therefore your argument gathered out of that text, concludeth nothing againſt hauing the Seruice in the learned Latine tongue, not perfectly vnderſtanded of the vnlearned people. Verily, if you admit the exact iudgement of S. Auguſtine concerning this place of S. Paul, then muſt you ſeeke for other Scriptures & proofs of your Engliſh Seruice. For, as he diſcuſſeth this point learnedly, by the tongue, S. Paul meaneth not the Latine, Greeke or Hebrew, among the vnlearned people, or any other alien or ſtrange tongue, but only, and that by way of Metaphor, any maner of vtterance whereby the ſignes of things are pronounced before they be vnderſtanded. And by the Spirit, hee vnderſtandeth not a noiſe of ſtrange words, after your ſtrange interpretation, but as it is heere in a certaine proper and peculiar maner taken, a power of the ſoule inferiour to the minde, which conceiueth the ſimilitudes of things, and vnderſtandeth them not. And things ſo vttered be vttered with the tongue and ſpirit, whether it bee in Engliſh or Latine, or any other language.

The 83. vntruth. For the ſimple people vnderſtandeth not one word or ſyllable of the Latine tongue.

Vide Auguſtinum lib. 12. de Geneſ. ad litteram c. 7. & 8. & 9.

And Sir, although the people vnderſtand not in moſt exact wiſe what the Prieſt ſaith in the Latine Seruice, yet haue they commodity and profit thereby, ſo far as it pleaſeth God to accept the common prayer of the Church, pronounced by the Prieſt for them.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Heere M. Harding hath found a ſport to paſſe the time withall. He maketh M. Caluin a Patriarke, and ſetteth him on high in iudgement, to condemne all the World. S. Pauls meaning is bombaſted and brought out of tune with a noiſe of ſtrange words. And in this point he doubleth and ſheweth copy, and plaieth round about merrily with his owne fantaſie. Wherein he may not be much offended, if I ſay vnto him, as S. Hierome ſaid ſometime vnto S. Ambroſe, for his Commentaries vpon S. Luke: Verbis ludis: ſententijs dormitas: That is, Your words be pleaſant: but your ſenſes be halfe aſleepe. Ruffinus.

For that I ſaw theſe words of S. Paul, If thou bleſſe with thy Spirit, might ſeeme doubtfull, and diuers expoſitions riſing thereupon, I thought it meet for the more eaſe of the vnlearned, to open what S. Paul might ſeeme to meane by this word Spirit, in that place. And following the iudgement of ſundry old Fathers, I called it a ſound or noiſe of vnknowen words. This is it, that M. Harding heere ſo pleaſantly calleth, Stuffing and bombaſte, and a ſtrange new fangled interpretation. Wherein he ſheweth himſelfe to be ſomewhat ſhort witted, as may ſone appeare. For within a few lines after, expounding theſe words of S. Paul (Quam decem millia verborum in lingua) he himſelfe vſeth the like bombaſte, and the very ſame ſtuffing.

Verily, if hee will vtterly condemne all maner Paraphraſe, or adding of other words for declaration of that ſeemeth hard, or doubtfull in the text, then muſt he needs condemne not only the Septuagints, but alſo all other Interpreters of the Scriptures. Whereof Origen weighing in what ſort the Apoſtle S. Paul allegeth the words of the Prophet Dauid, writeth thus: Sed quòd dixit Apoſtolus, Sicut ſcriptum eſt, Non eſt iuſtus quiſquam, non eſt intelligens, non eſt requirens Deum, Non ijſdem Sermonibus inuenitur in Pſalmo; ſed alij permutantur, alij aſſuuntur, alij relinquuntur. Quod à ſtudioſis quibuſque ſi obſeruetur diligentiùs, puto dari in hoc Apoſtolicam authoritatem, vt cùm Scripturæ teſtimonijs vtendum fuerit, ſenſum magis ex ea, quàm verba capiamus: But where (as S. Paul ſaith) As it is written, There is not one iuſt man, there is not one of vnderſtanding, there is not one that ſeeketh after God, This place is not found in the Pſalme by theſe words, but ſome words are altered by S. Paul, and ſome others are added vnto, and ſome are left out. Which thing if the Reader aduiſedly conſider, I thinke that heerein the Apoſtles authority is declared, that when we haue need to vſe the teſtimony of the Scriptures, wee rather take the meaning thereof, than the words. Origen ſaith, S. Paul both altered the words of the Prophet, and added to, and toke fro: Yet, I truſt, M. Harding will not ſay, S. Paul bombaſted or ſtuffed the Scriptures. Origen. in epiſt. ad Roman. ca. 3. li. 3.

Perhaps he will replie, S. Paul by this word Spirit, meant not a ſtrange tongue, or a noiſe of vnknowen words: and therefore this ſtuffing is counterfet. And becauſe M. Harding ſaith ſo, perhaps the ſimple Reader will ſo beleeue it. But if the Old Doctours and Fathers ſo expound it, then all this ſtrange mirth and triumph might haue beene ſpared

S. Ambroſe openeth S. Pauls meaning, and ſheweth what he vnderſtood by this word: Spirit, in this wiſe: Si tu benedixeris ſpiritu, hoc eſt, (ſi laudem Dei lingua loquaris ignota audientibus: If thou bleſſe with thy Spirit, that is to ſay, If thou vtter the praiſe of God in a tongue vnknowen vnto the hearers. This, I trow, is no bombaſte, nor counterfet ſtuffing Ambro. in 1. Cor. cap. 14.

The learned Latine tongue.

Chryſoſt. in 1. Cor. 14. Hom. 35.

Eraſmus in 1. Corin. 14.

Dionyſius Carthuſian. in 1. Cor. 14.

Anſelmus in 1. Corin. 14.

Hugo Cardin. citat Gregorii.

Auguſt. ad Quodvult-Deum.

ſing: it is S. Ambroſe Interpretation. Likewiſe S. Chryſoſtome expounding the ſame words, ſaith thus : Si tu benedixeris ſpiritu, &c. Eſt quod dicit, huiuſmodi: Si peregrina lingua gratias agas, quam nec intelligas ipſe, nec cæteris idem interpreteris, plebeius non poteſt ſubijcere, Amen. If thou bleſſe with thy Spirit, &c. The meaning heereof (ſaith) S. Chryſoſtome) is this : If thou giue thankes vnto God (or pray) in a ſtrange tongue, which neither thou knoweſt thy ſelfe, nor canſt expound vnto others, the vnlearned cannot ſay, Amen. This, Chryſoſtome ſaith, is S. Pauls very meaning. M. Harding ſaith : No: it is a ſtrange new fangled interpretation. Eraſmus in his Paraphraſe turneth it thus : Si tu decantes laudes Dei, ſermone omnibus incognito : If thou ſing out the praiſes of God, in a tongue vnknowen vnto all thy hearers. Dionyſius the Carthuſian likewiſe ſaith thus : Si tu benedixeris Spiritu, id eſt non verbis, quæ ab alijs intelligantur, ſed tantùm lingua : If thou bleſſe with thy Spirit, that is to ſay, not with ſuch words as others may vnderſtand, but onely with the tongue.

Anſelmus ſaith : Spiritus meus orat, id eſt, flatus oris mei orat, dum loquor in oratione: My ſpirit praieth, that is, The breath of my mouth praieth, ſo long as I continue ſpeaking. Whatſoeuer opinion M. Harding haue of Eraſmus, yet, I trow, of his modeſtie, he will not ſay, that either Dionyſius the Carthuſian, or S. Ambroſe, or S. Chryſoſtome, or Anſelmus, deuiſed new fangled expoſitions, or deſcanted vpon S. Paul, or ſet his text out of tune.

But (he ſaith) the place of S. Paul is doubtfull; S. Ambroſe, S. Auguſtine, S. Chryſoſtome, Iſidorus, Eraſmus, and Thomas of Aquine vnderſtood it diuerſly. And will hée therefore concludo thus: Theſe Fathers miſtooke S. Pauls ſenſe; Ergo, S. Paul had no ſenſe? Or, Diuers Doctours touching this place had diuers iudgements; Ergo, we muſt haue no iudgement? Or muſt we follow none of them becauſe ſome were deceiued? Or muſt wée follow them all together, becauſe they were Doctours? Indéed they diſſented ſomewhat in the taking of this word Spirit, as it is euident, but whether it were the holy Ghoſt that S. Paul meant thereby or Imagination, or Reaſon, or the Gift of tongues, or the ſound of the mouth, or the power of Vtterance, or the Voice it ſelfe, it is certaine and confeſſed by theſe and all other Doctours and Fathers, that S. Paul ſpake of an vnknowen tongue, and as S. Gregory ſaith, De ſtrepitu oris: Of the babbling of the mouth: and ſo conſequently of a noiſe of ſtrange words, wherewith M. Hardings tender eares are ſo much offended.

Now forasmuch as it is auouched, that theſe words of S. Paul make nothing for our purpoſe, let vs a little examine one or two of M. Hardings reaſons, and ſée, how well he applieth the ſame to his purpoſe. The firſt is this : S. Paul intreateth of the miraculous gift of tongues: Ergo, His words make nothing againſt the Latine Seruice.

Againe : S. Paul willeth, that the Prieſt vtter the common Praiers in the Congregation, in ſuch language as the vnlearned may be edified thereby, and anſwer Amen: Ergo, (M. Harding ſéemeth to ſay) The Prieſt may vtter the Common Praiers in an vnknowen tongue. Surely theſe arguments would make a ſtrange noiſe in the Schooles, and ſet all Logike quite out of tune. But if S. Pauls words make nothing againſt the Latine Seruice, as it is now vſed, what is it then that S. Paul condemneth? Why concludeth he thus: How ſhall the ignorant ſay Amen at thy thankſgiuing? For he knoweth not what thou ſaieſt. Why ſetteth he the whole difference in knowing and not knowing? Or what miſliketh he elſe, but the ſound or noiſe of a ſtrange tongue, whereby he thinketh the people in no wiſe can be edified? If all this be nothing, as M. Harding ſaith, then let him turne the whole courſe of S. Pauls words and ſay thus: Pray thou in a ſtrange vnknowen tongue, that the people may ſay Amen: for ſo may they ſay, although they know not what thou praieſt.

The allegation of the learned Latine tongue, which M. Harding ſo often vſeth, may ſerue rather to aſtonith the ſimple, than to make any good ſufficient proofe. So the ſubtile old Heretikes, Marcus and Heracleon, as it is reported by S. Auguſtine and Arnobius, vſed in their praiers certaine Hebrew, and other ſtrange vnknowen words, to the intent to amaze their hearers with admiration, and the more to commend and ſet forth their treacherie.

No tongue is to be accounted learned in it ſelfe, but only in reſpect of ſome other thing, and as the learned terme it, Per accidens, , that is, either for the eloquent maner of vtterance, or for the ſubſtance of learned matter therein contained, or for the learning and knowledge of the ſpeaker. But the Latine Seruice, beſides that it is not eloquent in it ſelfe (as in déed it néedeth not to be) ſometimes it holdeth not good congruity, but is vtterly void of reaſon. Wherein let this one example ſtand for many. In the praiſes of the Bleſſed Virgin, it is written thus; Cuius Dominus humilitatem reſpiciens, Angelo nuntiante, concepit Redemptorem mundi: By the learning of this learned tongue, wée are taught it was not our Lady, but our Lord, that was mother vnto Chriſt: for ſo it falleth out in conſtruction, Our Lord conceiued the Redeemer of the World. The ſubſtance of the matter therein contained, is ſometimes vaine and full of fables, ſometimes wicked and Idolatrous: the Prieſts, that vtter this tongue, for the moſt part ſuch as are hardly able to make it learned. Pope Zacharie ſaith, that a Prieſt in his time Baptized a Childe by theſe words, In nomine Patria, & Filia, & Spirita Sancta. And S. Auguſtine ſaith, that diuers Prieſts in his time, in their common Latine Seruice, whereas the people vnderſtod the Latine tongue, vttered Barbariſmes, and Solœciſmes, that is to ſay, ſpake falſe Latine: and further ſaith: Multa in illis reperiuntur contra Catholicam Fidem: In theſame praiers many things are found contrary to the Catholike Faith. Such is this tongue that M. Harding here ſo highly commendeth to be ſo learned. De Conſecrat. Diſt. 4. Retulerunt. Auguſtin. de Catechizan. rudib. cap. 9. De Con. diſt. 4. Si non.

out

But grant we the Latine tongue to be eloquent, copious and learned aboue all others. Yet thinke theſe men that Gods eares be ſo curious, or ſo daintie, that hee can abide no praier, but only in a Learned language? Verily S. Paul requireth no bragge of learning to be vttered in the Congregation, but onely plaine ſpéech and vnderſtanding, That the ſimple may be edified.

Caligula the Emperour ſet golden loaues, and all other Seruices of whole gold before his gueſts, and bade them eat. Indéed they had a glorious ſight to loke vpon. Yet had they nothing neither to eat nor to drinke, for contentation of nature. Euen ſo would M. Harding ſet his glittering Seruice of Greeke, Hebrew and Latine before the people, and bid them fed. A goodly ſhew, no doubt, to gaze, and to wonder at. But alas, nothing haue they there either to receiue or to taſte of, either to moue them to repentance, or to comfort and quiet their conſcience. It is notably well ſaid by S. Auguſtine: Quid prodeſt Clauis aurea, ſi aperire quod volumus, non poteſt? aut quid obeſt lignea, ſi hoc poteſt? quando nihil quærimus, niſi aperire, quod clauſum erat: What auaileth a golden Key, if it cannot open that we would haue opened? Or what hurteth a woodden Key, if it be able to open? Seeing wee deſire nothing, but that the thing that is ſhut may be opened. Auguſtin. de doctrina Chriſtiana. lib. 4. cap. 11.

The people (ſaith M. Harding) is not vtterly ignorant what the Prieſt ſaith. They vnderſtand him, although not perfectly, nor in exact wiſe, yet they vnderſtand him. Thus he doubteth and ſtaggereth betweene perfect and vnperfect, as not hauing yet well meaſured the peoples vnderſtanding. For to ſay, The ignorant perfectly vnderſtand the Latine tongue, were againſt the manifeſt truth: to ſay, They vnderſtand no part therof at all, were directly againſt S. Paul: for hee requireth vnderſtanding. Therefore M. Harding diuideth the matter, and ſaith: They vnderſtand the Latine tongue, although not exactly or perfectly: that is to ſay, They vnderſtand neither the Scriptures, nor the praiers, nor any one thing that is ſpoken, nor ſentence, nor word, nor ſyllable, nor letter. They heare the Prieſt ſpeake, and know not what he ſaith. They ſée him turne and geſture, and know not what hee meaneth. This (ſaith M. Harding) is the vnderſtanding of the Latine tongue. But alas, is this the vnderſtanding that S. Paul requireth, That the people may bee edified, and anſwer Amen? And what pleaſure hath hee in abridging and bridleing the vnderſtanding of Gods people? Why ſhould they not rather vnderſtand perfectly what the Prieſt ſaith? Why ſhould there be any imperfection in godly things? S. Paul wiſheth that wée may all grow vnto a perfect man in Chriſt Ieſus: and S. Auguſtine wiſheth, that the people may ſay Amen, To that they plainly and perfectly vnderſtand? Ad Epheſ. 4. Auguſtin. de Catechizan. rudib. cap. 9.

M. Harding. The 28. Diuiſion.

But S. Paul (ſay they) requireth that the people giue aſſent and conforme themſelues vnto the Prieſt, by anſwering Amen to his praier made in the Congregation.

Verily, in the Primitiue Church this was neceſſarie, when the Faith was a learning. And therefore the Praiers were made then in a common tongue knowen to the people, for cauſe of their further inſtruction. Who being of late conuerted to the Faith, and of Painims made Chriſtians, had need in all things to bee taught. But after that the Faithfull people was multiplied and increaſed in great numbers, and had beene ſo well inſtructed in all points of Religion, as by their owne accord they conformed themſelues to the Miniſters at the Common Praiers; in the Latine Church the Seruice was ſet out in Latine; and it was thought ſufficient, part of the people in the Quire to anſwer for the whole. And this hath beene eſteemed for a more expedite and conuenient order, than if it were in the vulgar tongue of euery Nation.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Who ſo will maintaine an vntruth, ought to bée circumſpect and to remember well, how his tales may ſtand together. M. Harding a little before wrote thus: Cicero ſaith, Tongues be in number infinite. Of them all, neither M. Iewel, nor any one of his ſide is able to ſhew, that the publike Seruice of the Church in any Nation, was euer for the ſpace of ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt in any other tongue, than in Greeke or Latine. Now contrariwiſe, either of forgetfulneſſe what he hath ſaid before, or of ſome better aduice, hee ſaith thus: Verily in the Primitiue Church this was neceſſary, when the Faith was a learning. And therfore the praiers were made then in a common M. Harding contrarie to himſelfe.

tongue known to the people, for cauſe of their further inſtruction. By theſe words he vtterly ouerthroweth, that he ſo confidently ſaid before: and very well confirmeth my aſſertion. M. Iewel may now take his eaſe. For M. Harding himſelfe is able to proue againſt himſelfe, that in the Primitiue Church the Seruice was miniſtred in the common tongue: and that he confirmeth for a veritie, and ſaith, It was neceſſary ſo to bee, and could not bee otherwiſe. Theſe ſayings of M. Hardings being directly contrarie, cannot poſſibly ſtand both together. If the one be true, the other of neceſſitie muſt nœds be falſe.

The reaſon that he gathereth in this place, ſtandeth vpon the diuerſitie of times. Then (ſaith he) the people was ignorant, and needed of all things to be taught. Now they are inſtructed and vnderſtand the Faith, and are increaſed in multitude. Therefore it is better now for expedition, the Seruice be ſaid in a ſtrange language, and that only the Clerke make anſwer to the Prieſt in ſtead of the whole Congregation.

Thus ſaith M. Harding, not by the authoritie of S. Ambroſe, S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, S. Chryſoſtome, or any other like old Catholike Doctour, but only by warrant of late Doctours, Thomas of Aquine, and Nicholas Lyra, the former of which two liued at the leaſt twelue hundred yeres after Chriſt. His reaſon in ſhort is thus: The people now is inſtructed; Ergo, They ought to haue their Seruice in a ſtrange tongue.

If M. Harding minde to perſwade the world, he had nèd to bring other arguments. But what if the people be not inſtructed? What if they know nothing, no not the Articles of the Chriſtian Faith? What if there be no man to inſtruct them? What if the Prieſt be euen as is the people, and the blinde lead the blinde? Yet I trow, M. Harding will not alter his new Decrée: but his ſtrange Seruice muſt continue ſtill. Verily the vnderſtanding of God is the ſoule and life of Gods Church: and as it was neceſſary at the firſt planting thereof, ſo is it alwaies neceſſarie for the continuance of the ſame. S. Hilarie ſaith: Eccleſiæ, in quibus verbum Dei non vigilat, naufragæ fiunt: The Churches wherein Gods word is not watchfull, ſuffer wracke. Neither did S. Paul ſay, let this order hold for the time, while the faith is a learning, as M. Harding would haue him ſay: but thus he
1. Corin. 14. ſaith: Hæc quæ ſcribo, Domini ſunt mandata. Omnia ad ædificationem fiant: The things that I write, are the commandements of the Lord. Let all things be done to edifie. The edifying of the people, which is the finall cauſe hereof, continueth ſtill; therefore ought the vnderſtanding of the people, which is the efficient cauſe hereof, to continue ſtill.

M. Harding. The 29. Diuiſion.

I grant they cannot ſay Amen, to the bleſſing or thankeſgiuing of the Prieſt, ſo well as if they vnderſtood the Latine tongue perfectly. Yet they giue aſſent to it, and ratifie it in their hearts, and do conforme themſelues vnto the Prieſt, though not in ſpeciall, yet in generall; that is to wit, though not in euery particular ſentence of praiſe and thankſgiuing, or in euery ſeuerall petition, yet in the whole. For if they come to Church with a right and good intent, as the ſimple doe no leſſe than the learned; their deſire is to render vnto God glorie, praiſe and honour, and to thanke him for benefits receiued; and withall, to obtaine of him things behouefull for them in this life, and in the life to come. And without doubt this godly affection of their mindes, is ſo acceptable to God, as no vnderſtanding of words may bee compared with it. This requiſite aſſent and conforming of themſelues to the Prieſts, they declare by ſundrie outward tokens and geſtures; as by ſtanding vp at the Goſpell, and at the preface of the Maſſe; by bowing themſelues downe and adoring at the Sacrament; by kneeling at other times, as when pardon and mercie is humbly asked, and by other like ſignes of deuotion in other parts of the Seruice.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Yet once againe M. Harding would make the world beléeue that the ignorant people vnderſtandeth the Latine tongue, although not perfectly; and that they may in generall giue their conſent vnto whatſoeuer the Prieſt ſaith, although they know not one word what he ſaith. And ſo betweene S. Paul and M. Harding there appeareth a plaine contrarietie. For S. Paul ſaith, The vnlearned cannot ſay Amen to thy praier, becauſe hee knoweth not what thou ſaieſt. Yes (ſaith M. Harding) although he know not what thou ſaieſt, yet may he neuertheleſſe ſay Amen. But hereto he laieth his correction: I grant (ſaith he) they cannot ſay Amen to the bleſſing and thankſgiuing of the Prieſt, So well, as if they vnderſtood the Latine tongue.

O M. Harding, who taught you thus to qualifie the peoples duties? Why do you thus openly deceiue your brethren? Why teach you them to ſay Amen, to edifie themſelues, to be thankfull, and to conforme their hearts vnto God, Not ſo well, but in worſe wiſe, as you your ſelfe confeſſe, than you know they are bound to doe? Your owne tongue confeſſeth againſt your ſelfe, that you leade the people of God from the better, vnto the worſe.

I know the humble affection and deuotion of the heart is more pretious before God, Iohn 4. than any vnderſtanding or ſound of words. For that inward is the praying in Spirit and and Truth. And therefore God complaineth of the contrary: This people draweth neere vnto me with their lips, saith the Lord, but their heart is farre from me. Matth. 15. Hereof M. Harding gathereth this reason:

The people is deuout, and godly disposed:

Ergo, They must haue their praiers in a strange tongue.

I would M. Harding would consider, and reforme his reasons better. This is too simple: It needeth no answer. Certainly, if the simple people be so deuout, and so reuerentlie disposed in the darknesse, without any teaching, or vnderstanding, much more would they reuerently and deuoutly dispose themselues, if they heare the godly praiers, and vnderstood them.

Kneeling, bowing, standing vp, and other like, are commendable gestures, and tokens of deuotion, so long as the people vnderstandeth what they meane, and applieth them vnto God, to whom they be due. Otherwise they may well make them Hypocrites: but holy or godly they cannot make them. Cœlestinus writeth thus vnto the Bishops of France: Docendi potiùs sunt, quàm illudendi: nec imponendum est eorum oculis: sed mentibus infundenda præcepta sunt: The people must rather be taught, than mocke: Neither must we deceiue their eies, but must powre wholesome precepts into their hearts. Inter Decreta Cœlestin. pp. 1.

M. Harding. The 30. Diuision.

And whereas S. Paul seemeth to disallow praying with tongue in the Common Assemblie, because of want of edifying, and to esteeme the vtterance of fiue words or sentences, with vnderstanding of his meaning, that the rest might be instructed thereby, more than ten thousand words in a strange and vnknowen tongue, all this is to be referred to the state of that time, which was much vnlike the state of the Church we be now in. The tongue of the praiers which S. Paul speaketh of, was vtterly strange and vnknowen, and serued for a signe to the vnbeleeuers. The Latine tongue, in the Latine Church, is not altogether strange and vnknowen. For beside the Priest, in most places, some of the rest haue vnderstanding of it, more or lesse, and now wee haue no need of any such signe. They needed instruction: wee be not ignorant of the chiefe points of Religion. They were to bee taught in all things: wee come not to Church specially and chiefly to bee taught at the Seruice, but to pray, and to bee taught by preaching. Their praier was not vailable, for lacke of Faith, and therefore was it to be made in the vulgar tongue, for increase of Faith. Our Faith will stand vs in better stead, if wee giue our selues to deuout praier. They, for lacke of Faith, had need of interpretation, both in praiers, and also in preaching, and all other spirituall exercises: wee hauing sufficient instruction in the necessarie rudiments of our Faith, for the rest, haue more need, by earnest and feruent praier, to make sute vnto God, for an vpright, pure, and holy life, than to spend much time in hearing for knowledge. Concerning which thing, Chrysostome hath this saying: Profectò si orare cum diligentia insuescas, nihil est quod doctrinam tui conserui desideres, quum ipse Deus sine vllo interprete mentem abunde luce afficiat: Verily, if thou vse to pray diligently, there is no thing why thou shouldest desire teaching of thy fellow seruant, seeing God himselfe doth abundantly lighten thy minde, without any Interpreter. Contra Anomæ Hom. 3. The words of Chrysostome much abused.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Here M. Harding, by counterpoints, and by sundrie circumstances of difference, compareth the state of the Primitiue Church and his Church of Rome together, and thereof would seeme to proue, that S. Pauls words, which S. Paul himselfe calleth Mandata Domini, The Lords Commandements, stood good onely for that time present, and for no time afterward: as if he would say, Gods Will were mutable, or his Commandements hold only for terme of yeres.

I grant, there appeare great notes of difference betwéene the order of the Primitiue Church, and the order that now is in the Church of Rome. For, to leaue all that M. Harding hath here touched by way of comparison, and to note that may serue here to this purpose; The Rulers there wished and laboured that the people might abound in knowledge: Here their whole labour and studie is, that the people may abound in ignorance. There the Ministers spake with sundrie tongues, that the people of all Nations might vnderstand them: Here the Minister speaketh in a strange tongue, to the intent that no man may vnderstand him. There the simple and the ignorant were made eloquent: Here the Bishops, and Cardinals, and greatest learned, are made dumbe. And to prosecute no further, there appeared in the Primitiue Church the vndoubted workes of the holy Ghost, and the very traces and steps of Christs feet: and therefore Irenæus, and other Old Fathers, in cases of doubt, appealed euermore to the order and example of that Church. And Tertullian saith: Hoc aduersus omnes Hæreses valet, id esse verum, quodcunque prius: id esse adulterinum, quodcunque posterius: This Marke preuaileth against all Hereses: That is the truth, that was vsed first: that is false and corrupt, that was brought in afterward. And therefore the holy Fathers in the Councell of Nice made this generall shout, and agreed vpon the same: τὰ ἀρχαῖα κρατείτω: Let the ancient orders hold still: reserring themselues thereby, to the vse and order of the Primitiue Church. Contrariwise, Irenæus lib. 3. cap. 3. Tertull. aduersus Praxeam. Concil. Nicen.

wiſe, Valentinus, Marcion, and other like Heretikes, thought themſelues wiſeſt of all others, and therefore vtterly refuſed (as M. Harding and his fellowes now doe) to ſtand Iren. li. 3. ca. 2. to the Apoſtles orders. Thus Irenæus writeth of them: Dicent ſe non ſolùm Presbyteris, ſed etiam Apoſtolis ſapientiores eſſe, & ſinceram veritatem inueniſſe: They will ſay, that they are wiſer not only than other Prieſts, but alſo than the Apoſtles, and that they haue found out the perfect truth. I ſay not, M. Harding is ſo wickedly minded as Valentinus or Marcion was: but thus I ſay; He vtterly refuſeth to ſtand to the Apoſtles orders, and followeth other late deuiſed fantaſies: and therein vndoubtedly doth euen as the old Heretikes Marcion and Valentinus did.

Now let vs conſider M. Hardings reaſons:

1 The ſtate (ſaith he) of the Primitiue Church was farre vnlike the ſtate of the Church we be now in:

Ergo, We are not bound to S. Pauls Commandements.

2 Againe he ſaith: Some one or other in a pariſh vnderſtandeth ſomewhat of the Latine tongue:

3 The people is ſufficiently inſtructed in Religion:

4 They come together now, not ſo much to be inſtructed, as to pray:

Ergo, They ought to haue their Seruice in a ſtrange tongue.

O what meaneth M. Harding thus to deale! Loth I am to make the compariſon: But true it is: Very children doe not vſe to reaſon in ſo childiſh ſort. He knoweth well, that commonly neither any one of the whole Pariſh vnderſtandeth the Latine tongue, nor often times the Prieſt himſelfe. He knoweth that the people of his Church is not inſtructed in Religion, nor no man ſuffered to inſtruct them. And notwithſtanding both theſe parts were granted true, yet could he not any way conclude, that therefore the people ſhould haue their Seruice in a ſtrange vnknowen tongue. Thus neither is the Antecedent true, nor doth the Conſequent thereof follow. Now iudge thou, good Chriſtian Reader, whether theſe proſes beare weight ſufficient to lead thy conſcience.

He ſaith, Praiers in the Common Vulgar Tongue were neceſſarie in the Primitiue Church, for breeding of the Faith. But what thing can he breed by Praiers in a ſtrange tongue? What knowledge, what Faith, what Charitie? The Apoſtles were not void
Luke 17. of Faith: yet they ſaid vnto Chriſt, O Lord increaſe our faith. Chriſt ſpeaking of the latter daies, ſaith thus: When the Sonne of man ſhall come, hee ſhall ſcarcely finde Faith in Luke 18. the World. Doubtleſſe the thing that was good to reare the Faith, is alſo good to repaire the Faith: and that was then neceſſarie to increaſe Faith, is alſo neceſſary now to continue Faith.

Chryſ. contra Anom. hom. 3. But to what end doth he allege the words of Chryſoſtome? Did that good Father euer miniſter the Common Seruice vnto the people in a ſtrange tongue? M. Harding knoweth, the people vnderſtood Chryſoſtome, what he praied, and anſwered him in their owne Chryſ. 1. Theſſ. Homil. 3. tongue, and praied with him all together. Or did Chryſoſtome euer checke the people for their knowledge, or diſcourage them from reading the Scriptures? Certainly he often times rebuketh them for not reading, and willeth them to buy the Scriptures, to Chryſ. in Mat. Hom. 2. read the Scriptures, and to conferre at home with their families, of the Scriptures. And Chryſoſtom. in Pſalm. 43. whereas M. Harding, to withdraw the peoples hearts from reading, ſaith, the Scriptures are darke, and dangerous, and no man able to wade in them without a guide; S.
Chryſ. ad Coloſſ. Hom. 9. Chryſoſtome contrariwiſe, to encourage the people to reade the Scriptures, ſaith, They be plaine and eaſie, and that the ignorant and ſimple man, by praier vnto God, may attaine the knowledge of them, without any Maſter or Teacher, by himſelfe alone. For Chryſ. contra Anomeos, Hom. 3. theſe be his words, euen as M. Harding hath alleged them: Profectò ſi orare cum diligentia inſueſcas, nihil eſt, quod doctrinam conſerui tui deſideres, cùm ipſe Deus, ſine vllo Interprete, mentem tuam abundè luce afficiat: If thou vſe to pray diligently, there is no cauſe why thou ſhouldeſt deſire the teaching of thy fellow ſeruant. For God himſelfe will abundantly lighten thy minde, without any Interpreter. The like ſaying he hath often other where. Declaring the Storie of Queene Candaces Chamberlaine, he writeth thus: Fieri non poteſt, Chryſ. in Gen. Hom. 35. vt is qui diuinis Scripturis magno ſtudio feruentique deſiderio vacat, ſemper negligatur: Licèt enim deſit nobis hominis Magiſterium, tamen ipſe Dominus ſuperne intrans corda noſtra, illuſtrat mentem, rationi iubar ſuum infundit, detegit occulta, doctorque fit eorum quæ ignoramus: It cannot be that any man, with great ſtudie and fernent deſire reading the Scriptures, ſhould ſtill be left deſtitute. For although we lacke the inſtruction of man, yet will God himſelfe, from aboue, enter into our hearts, and lighten our minde, and caſt a beame of light into our reaſon, and open things that be hidden, and become our Teacher of ſuch things as wee know not. Therefore this place of Chryſoſtome ſtandeth M. Harding in ſmall ſtead, vnleſſe it bee by the countenance of an Ancient Doctour, to make the ſimple beleeue hee hath ſaid ſomewhat. The reaſon that he gathereth hereof, is this: The vnlearned man, bee hee neuer ſo ſimple,

ſimple, may read the Scriptures in his owne Vulgar tongue, and vnderſtand the ſame without a Teacher: Ergo, The Common Seruice ought to be miniſtred vnto the Lay people in an vnknowen tongue.

Generall Councels.

M. Harding. The 31. Diuiſion.

I would not heere that any man ſhould lay to my charge the defenſe of ignorance, as though I enuied the people any godly knowledge. I wiſh them to haue all heauenly knowledge, and to be ignorant of nothing neceſſary to their Saluation. Yea, euen with my very heart I wiſh with Moſes, Quis tribuat, vt omnis populus prophetet, & det Dominus illis ſpiritum ſuum! O that all the people could prophecie, and were learned in Gods holy word; and that our Lord would giue them his ſpirit! But all the common people to vnderſtand the Prieſt at the Seruice, I thinke wiſe and godly men iudge it not a thing ſo neceſſary, as for the which the ancient order of the Church, with no little offenſe, publike and vniuerſall authority not conſulted, ſhould be condemned, broken, and quite abrogated, by priuate aduice of a few. Num. 11.

If default were in this behalfe iuſtly found, it is knowen to whom the redreſſe pertaineth. Concerning the ſtate of Religion, in all ages the Generall Councell repreſenting the Vniuerſall Church, for all ſores hath ordeined holeſome remedies. Where they be not heard, of whom Chriſt ſaid, He that heareth you, heareth me, and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me; it is to be feared, that concerning the Seruice, the new learned boldneſſe is not ſo acceptable to God, as the old ſimple humilitie. It were good the people, hauing humble and reuerent hearts, vnderſtood the Seruice: I denie not.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

M. Harding witheth vnto the people, All maner of knowledge, that is godly, and heauenly, and neceſſary for their Saluation. Only his Latine Seruice he would in no wiſe haue them know. Whereby he ſeemeth plainly to grant, that his Latine Seruice neither is godly, nor heauenly, nor neceſſary for the peoples Saluation.

He would, That all the people were learned in Gods holy word. And notwithſtanding he know there is no man to inſtruct them, yet may he not ſuffer them either to read the Scriptures, or to vnderſtand any part of their Common Prayers. I trow he would haue them learne only by Reuelation.

If any fault were iuſtly found (ſaith M. Harding) the redreſſe thereof belongeth to the Generall Councell. I grant, the very name of a Councell is great, and weigheth much. But if there were none other poſſible way to ſeeke redreſſe, then moſt miſerable were the Church of God. If Chriſt and his Apoſtles would haue waited for a Generall Councell, the Goſpell had beene vnpreached, and the Church vnplanted, vntill this day. It were good (ſaith M. Harding) the people vnderſtood the Seruice: I denie not. Forget not this, good Reader: That the people vnderſtood their Seruice, M. Harding himſelfe confeſſeth, it were good. And why ſo? Doubtleſſe becauſe he is forced to ſee and ſay, that it would redound to the glory of God, and to the great comfort and profit of the people. Therefore hee ſaith, It were good. Whereof we may well gather this Argument of the contrary: Then: that the people in this braute ſort is kept ſtill in ignorance, not vnderſtanding any portion of their Common Seruice, by M. Hardings owne confeſſion, It is ill. And is it not lawfull to doe that is good, to redreſſe that is ill, to ſeeke Gods glory, and the comfort of his people, without conſent of a Generall Councell?

It appeareth well, God is not bound to ſuch orders. He hath often times reſtored his Church, and reformed Abuſes and Hereſies, by particular conference within ſeuerall Realmes and Countries: as we ſee by theſe Priuate Councels holden at Carthage vnder S. Cyprian: at Neocæſaria in Pontus: at Ancyra in Galatia: at Gangra in Paphlagonia: and by other like, without any conſent of a Generall Councell. So likewiſe ſaith S. Ambroſe againſt Secundus and Palladius: The Biſhops of the Eaſt part, and ſo the Biſhops of the Weſt, haue euer vſed ſeuerally to aſſemble themſelues together, as occaſion was offered, and to reforme their Churches by themſelues, without troubling the whole World. Cyprian. to. 2. In 1. to. Cõcil. In Concil. Aquileiẽ. in Collatione cum Palladio.

But (ſaith M. Harding) Chriſt himſelfe hath by ſpeciall words commended the authority of Councels: Qui vos audit, me audit: He that heareth you, heareth me: and hee that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me. We deny not the truth of theſe words: notwithſtanding it is plaine, Chriſt ſpake there no more of a Councell, than of any one priuate man, hauing Commiſſion from him, and doing his Commandement: whereunto the whole Councell is bound to yeeld, no leſſe than others, and without which the Councell, be it neuer ſo Generall, is no Councell. But where did euer Chriſt giue commandement, that the Seruice ſhould be ſaid in a ſtrange vnknowen tongue? Or where did any Generall Councell euer decree it? Once againe I aſke M. Harding, and gently deſire his anſwer, where did any Generall Councell, from the beginning of the world, euer decree, that the people ſhould heare their Seruice in a ſtrange vnknowen tongue? If there be any ſuch Councell, why doth he not ſhew it? If there be none, nor neuer were any, why doth he thus mocke the world with the name of a Councell? Luke 10.

Cicero ſaith very well of himſelfe: Nihil nobis opus erat Lege, de quibus nihil eſſet actum Cicero de legib. lib. 3.

Generall Councels.

actum Legibus: To reſtore me from exile, I needed no Law, againſt whom there was nothing done by Law. So may we likewiſe ſay, We need no Councell to reſtore Gods Truth, that was taken away from vs without a Councell. Euery Prince is bound in the whole to ſee the Reformation of his owne Church and Country. Neither will God hold him excuſed if he ſay, I will tarry till all other Princes, and the whole world do the like. Ioſue, that noble Prince, when he had aſſembled all the Tribes of Iſrael before him, thus he ſpake vnto them: Si malum vobis videtur, vt ſeruiatis Domino, optio vobis datur: Ego autem, & domus mea, ſeruiemus Domino: If yee thinke it ill to ſerue the Lord, yee ſhall haue your choice: but I and my houſe will ſerue the Lord. It pleaſed God to plant his Church in this Realme, three hundred yeares before the firſt Generall Councell was holden at Nice. The Lords hand is not ſhortned. He is likewiſe able now to reforme the ſame by his Holy Word, without tarrying for a Generall Councell.

Ioſue cap. 24.

Polydor. Hildas. Theodoretus.

Eſai 59.

Howbeit, the world may ſee theſe be but prefects and vaine ſhifts, without any ſimple meaning. They haue now had a Councell of long continuance: They haue heard the great complaints of all Chriſtian Kingdomes and Countries, namely, touching their Common Seruice. M. Harding himſelfe confeſſeth, It were good the people vnderſtood it. Yet notwithſtanding the Councell ſaith, No, it were ill: It were not good: and can in no wiſe abide it. And ſo either the Councell condemneth M. Harding, or elſe M. Harding condemneth his Councell. But Chriſt ſaith vnto vs, Let the dead bury their dead: Come thou, and follow me.

Matth. 8.

M. Harding. The 23. Diuiſion.

Yet all ſtandeth not in vnderſtanding. S. Auguſtine ſaith notably, Turbam non intelligendi vitandam, ſed credendi ſimplicitas tutiſſimam facit: That is for the common people, it is not the quickneſſe of vnderſtanding, but the ſimplicitie of beleeuing, that maketh them ſafeſt of all. And in an other place: Si propter eos ſolos Chriſtus mortuus eſt, qui certa intelligentia poſſunt iſta diſcernere, penè fruſtra in Eccleſia laboramus: If Chriſt (ſaith he) died only for them which can with certaine or ſure vnderſtanding diſcerne thoſe things (concerning God) then is the labour we take in the Church, in maner, in vaine. God requireth not ſo much of vs, how much we vnderſtand, as how much we beleeue, and through beleefe, how much we loue. And when we ſhall all appeare before Chriſt, in that dreadfull day of iudgement, (84) we ſhall not be required to giue an account of our vnderſtanding, but (Faith preſuppoſed) of our Charity.

Contra Manichæum epiſt. fundamenti, cap. Ad Enodium, Epiſt. 101.

The 84. vntruth. For it is written: Hee that knoweth not, ſhall not bee knowen. 1. Cor. 14.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Whereas M. Harding ſaith, All ſtandeth not in vnderſtanding; If he meane thereby profound knowledge, and deepe conceiuing of Myſteries, as S. Auguſtine alſo meant, it may well be granted. Otherwiſe, as touching the Publike Seruice, as Chryſoſtome ſaith, Vnleſſe the vnlearned vnderſtand what thou praieſt, hee is not edified, neither can hee giue conſent vnto thy praier: thou throweſt thy words into the winde, and ſpeaketh in vaine. And therefore the very ſubſtance of the Publike Praier reſteth in the vnderſtanding of the hearer.

Chryſoſt. in 1. Cor. Hom. 35.

No man may iuſtly preſume of that M. Harding ſaith, Wee ſhall not render account of our knowledge. For at that terrible day of the Lord, we ſhall aſſuredly render account of our wilfull Ignorance. Chriſt himſelfe, vnto whom God hath giuen all Iudgement, ſaith If the blinde lead the blinde, both ſhall fall into the pit. And againe: This is the Condemnation of the World: Light is come into the World, and men loue the darkneſſe more than the light. This (ſaith Chriſt) is the Condemnation of the world. And the wiſe man ſaith, The wicked at that terrible time ſhall make their mone on this ſort: Aberrauimus à via veritatis, & Iuſtitiæ lumen non fulſit nobis: & Sol intelligentiæ non exortus eſt nobis: We ſtraied from the way of the Truth, and the light of Iuſtice ſhined not before vs: neither did the Sunne of vnderſtanding ariſe vnto vs. Chryſoſtome often times complaineth of the peoples negligence in this behalfe: Non ſum, inquis, Monachus: Vxorem habeo & filios, & curam domus. Hoc illud eſt quod omnia quaſi vna quadam peſte corrumpit, quòd Lectionem diuinarum Scripturarum ad ſolos putatis Monachos pertinere, &c. Thou wilt ſay, I am no Monke: I haue Wife and Children, and charge of houſhold. This is it, that, as it were, with a peſtilence, infecteth all together, that ye thinke the reading of the holy Scriptures belongeth onely vnto Monkes. He addeth further: Multò eſt grauius, atque deterius, ſuperfluam eſſe putare Legem Dei, quàm illam omninò neſcire. Hæc enim verba ſunt, quæ de diabolica prorſus meditatione promuntur: The fault is greater, and more greeuous, to thinke Gods Law is ſuperfluous, (and not needfull for thee) than to be ignorant, whether there be any ſuch Law, or no: For theſe words come euen from the perſwaſion of the Diuell. Againe he ſaith: Hæc diabolicæ inſpirationis operatio eſt, non ſinentis nos aſpicere Theſaurum, ne diuitias acquiramus. Propterea ille ſuadet, nihil omninò eſſe commodi diuinas audire Leges, ne quando ex auditu ſequi videat actionem: This is the working of the Diuels Inſpiration: Hee would not ſuffer vs to ſee the Treaſure, leſt we ſhould get the riches. Therefore he counſelleth vs, that it vtterly auaileth nothing Roman. 14. 2. Cor. 5. Matth. 15. Iohan. 3.

Sapient. 5.

Chryſ. in Mat. Hom. 2.

In eadem hom.

In eadem.

thing, to heare the Lawes of God, lest that vpon the hearing, hee may see our doing follow. Here we see, the Doctrine of simple ignorance, which M. Harding so stiffy maintaineth, is called by Chrysostome, The Diuels Study : The Diuels Iudgement : The Diuels Inspiration. And where he saith, God will call vs to no reckoning of our knowledge, or lacke of knowledge; Chrysostome plainely auoucheth the contrarie, by these words : Dices, Non legi : Non est hæc excusatio, sed crimen : Thou wilt say, I haue not read the Scriptures : This is no excuse, but a sinne. Chrys. ad Hebræos, hom. 17.

Christian simplicitie is not wilfull ignorance, that is to say, to beléeue euery fable that is told, and to examine and know nothing. As Christ saith, Be yee simple as Doues, so he also saith, Be ye wise, as Serpents. Take heed ye be not deceiued. S. Paul saith, He that knoweth not, shall not bee knowen. Chrysostome hereof writeth thus : Paulus ait, Verbum Christi inhabitet in vobis abundanter. Sed quid ad hæc respondent fucis stultiores ? Benedicta omnis anima simplex : Et, Qui simpliciter ambulat, in fiducia ambulat. Hoc videlicet omnium malorum est causa, quòd non multi Scripturarum testimonia in opportunis rebus sciunt adducere. Non enim eo loco simplex pro stulto, aut pro eo qui nihil nouit, intelligendus est : sed pro homine non malo, nec versuto. Nam si ita intelligeretur, superuacaneum fuisset dicere, Estote prudentes, sicut Serpentes : S. Paul saith, Let the word of God dwell in you abundantly. But what will these fooles say heereto ? O (say they) Blessed is the simple soule. And, He that walketh simply, walketh surely. This is the very cause of all mischiefe, that in cases of necessitie there be not many able to allege the Scriptures. For, a simple man, in that place, may not be taken for a foole, or a man that knoweth nothing ; but for a man that meaneth no ill, or worketh no fraud. For if it were to be taken so, it had beene in vaine for Christ to say, Be ye wise as Serpents. Therefore M. Harding, in the defense of ignorance, thus alluring the World, that God will not be offended with want of knowledge, deceiueth the people of God, and saith not the truth. The reason that M. Harding hereof gathereth, standeth thus : Matth. 10. Coloss. 2. 1. Cor. 14. Chrysost. in Iohan. hom. 16.

The people, as S. Augustine saith, cannot attaine profound knowledge, and God beareth with their simplicitie.

Ergo, They ought to haue their Seruice in a strange tongue.

M. Harding. The 33. Diuision.

Now though the people know not the Latine tongue, and albeit it were better they had the Seruice in their owne vulgar tongue, for the better vnderstanding of it, yet as it is, forasmuch as (85) it consisteth in maner altogether of the Scriptures, that great profit commeth both to the reader and to the hearer of it, Origen sheweth at large in the twentieth homilie vpon Iosue. Because it were ouer long to bring all that he saith there to this purpose, the summe of the whole may thus be abridged : First, that the heauenly powers and Angels of God, which be within vs, haue great liking in our vtterance of the words of the Scripture. Though we vnderstand not the (86) words we vtter with our mouth, yet those powers, saith hee, vnderstand them, and thereby be inuited, and that with delight, to helpe vs. And speaking of the powers that be within vs, to whom charge of our soules and bodies is committed, he saith, that if the Scriptures bee read of vs, they haue pleasure therein, and be made the stronger toward taking heed to vs, yea, and that if wee speake with tongues, and our spirit praie, and our sense bee without fruit. And there hee allegeth to that purpose the common place of S. Paul to the Corinthians, calling it maruellous, and in a maner a mysterie, shewing how the spirit praieth, the sense being without fruit. After this he declareth the euill powers, and our ghostly enemie the Diuell, by our reading and hearing of the Scriptures, to bee driuen from vs. As by enchantments, saith he, Snakes be staied from doing hurt with their venome, so if there be in vs any Serpent of contrarie power, or if any Snake wait priuily to mischiefe vs, by vertue of the holy Scripture rehearsed (so that for wearinesse thou turne not away thy hearing) he is put away. S. Augustine confirmeth the same doctrine, where he saith, Psalmus Dæmones fugat, Angelos in adiutorium inuitat : The Psalme (read deuoutly, or heard) putteth Diuels to flight, and prouoketh Angels to helpe. At length Origen shewing how by meat or drinke we finde remedie for sore eies, though we feele no benefit foorthwith in eating or drinking, he concludeth his speciall part of comparison with these words : In this wise we must beleeue also of the holy Scripture, that it is profitable, and doth good to the soule, Etiamsi sensus noster ad præsens intelligentiam non capit, although presently our sense doe not attaine the meaning or vnderstanding, because our good powers by these words be refreshed and fed ; and the contrarie, that is, our aduersarie powers are weakened, and put to flight. At length making obiection to himselfe on the behalfe of his hearers, as though they should lay this doctrine to his charge, for excuse of taking further paines, in preaching and expounding the Scriptures to them, thereto he answereth, and saith, No, no, wee haue not said these to you for that cause, neither haue wee vttered these things to you for excuse, but to shew you, In Scripturis sanctis esse vim quandam, quæ legenti etiam sine explanatione sufficiat : That in the holy Scriptures there is a certaine power or strength, which is sufficient for one that readeth it, yea without any expounding of it. This sufficiencie hee referreth (I thinke) to the procuring of the good powers to helpe vs, and to the driuing away the malice of euill powers, our ghostly enemies, that they hurt vs not.

The 85. vntruth. For in the Romish Seruice there are infinite vanities, besides the Scriptures.

The 86 vntruth. For Origē speaketh of the ignorance of the Allegorie, not of the words.

In prologo Psalmorum.

S. August. speaketh of vttering the Psalmes in a knowen tongue.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

It appeareth, M. Harding is not so certaine of his Doctrine, but hee may alter and varie, without discredit. Hee held before for certaine, That the ignorant people vnderstandeth the Latine

M. Hard. altereth his iudgement.

Origen.

Latine Tongue, although not perfectly, or in exact wiſe. Now hée ſaieth to bée reſolued otherwiſe, that they vnderſtand it not at all. Theſe contrarie ſayings will hardly ſtand together, vnleſſe he meane, the peoples vnderſtanding, and no vnderſtanding, is all one thing.

Origen, as hée is héere alleged, ſaith, That the very reading or hearing of Gods word, profiteth much, and reioiceth the Angels both within and about vs, although wee vnderſtand it not. For better vnderſtanding hereof, I muſt briefly note certaine particular opinions that this godly Father had of Angels and heauenly powers. And to leaue much that might be ſaid, he held thus: that Angels haue their offices allotted vnto them diuerſly, ſome ouer trées, ſome ouer hearbes, ſome ouer other things: that ſome haue power to teach Grammar, ſome Logicke, ſome Rhetoricke, ſome other Sciences: and that ſome others are appointed to guide and guard vs in this life, and ſhall appeare before God, at the generall Iudgement, to yéeld account of our doings. By theſe it may appeare, what Origen meaneth by the Angels, that, as he ſaith, be about vs.

Orig. in Ioſue Hom. 23.
περὶ Ἀρχῶν. lib. 3. cap. 3.
Origen. in Numer. Hom. 20.

His ſaying is very comfortable vnto the ſimple minde, that delighteth in Gods word, although often times not vnderſtanding the déepe ſenſe of it. Of reading the Scriptures, his purpoſe was to ſpeake, and not of hauing the ſeruice or Praiers in a ſtrange tongue. Wherefore M. Harding was the more to blame, thus to wreſt his Authour to a wrong purpoſe. Origen often times exhorted the people to the reading of the Scriptures. Vpon Eſay the Prophet hée writeth thus: Vtinam omnes faceremus illud quod ſcriptum eſt, Scrutamini Scripturas: I would wee would all performe that is written, Search the Scriptures.

M. Hard. wreſteth Origen from his purpoſe.
Origen. in Eſa. Hom. 2.

In this place vpon Ioſue he laieth this obiection againſt himſelfe: It may bee ſaid, The Scriptures bee hard. Hée anſwereth: Yet, that notwithſtanding, if thou reade them, they ſhall doe thee good. For the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, if he finde vs occupied in the Scriptures, and exerciſed in the ſtudie thereof, not only vouchſafeth himſelfe to be refreſhed and fed in vs, but alſo ſeeing ſuch a banket prepared, bringeth with him his Father vnto vs. In the end hée concludeth thus: Hæc idcirco diximus, ne faſtidium capiamus audientes Scripturas, etiamſi eas non intelligamus: Theſe things haue I ſaid, that we loath not to heare the Scriptures, although we vnderſtand them not. And thus much Origen ſpake, not of the Grammaticall or plaine vnderſtanding of the Scriptures, that riſeth of the letter, but of the Allegorie, or profound ſenſe, whereunto the vnlearned cannot well attaine. For ſo he expoundeth his owne meaning, writing vpon the Goſpell of S. Matthew: Etiam illi ſaluantur, qui Literam Euangelij, hoc eſt, ſimplicem narrationem, ſequuntur. Sola enim narratio ſimplex ſufficit ſimplicioribus ad ſalutem: Euen they bee ſaued, that follow the Letter, that is to ſay, the plaine ſtorie of the Goſpell. For only the ſimple ſtorie is ſufficient vnto the ſaluation of the ſimple. So farre forth may the vnlearned haue profit by reading of the Scriptures, although hee further vnderſtand them not. So likewiſe ſaith S. Auguſtine: Qui diligit Legem Dei, etiam quod in ea non intelligit, honorat: Whoſo loueth the Law of God, honoureth in it euen that thing that hee vnderſtandeth not. Likewiſe hée confeſſeth of himſelfe, that at his firſt entrie into the Faith of Chriſt, he receiued great profit by reading the Epiſtle of S. Paul vnto the Romanes, although he were not then able thorowly to conceiue the meaning of it. And further, that by the counſell of S. Ambroſe, he read the Prophet Eſay: And although hee fully vnderſtood him not, yet was he thereby made the meeter to receiue the grace of God. The like alſo writeth S. Hierome, by way of Prophecie, of the latter daies, before the comming of Chriſt: In aduentu Meſſiæ populus eleuabitur, & prophetabit, qui ſub Magiſtris antè fuerat conſopitus, & ibunt ad montes Scripturarum: Ibi inuenient montes Moſen, & Ioſue filium Naue, montes Prophetas, montes Noui Teſtamenti, Apoſtolos, & Euangeliſtas: Et cùm ad tales montes confugerit, & in huiuſmodi montium fuerit lectione verſatus, ſi non inuenerit qui eum doceat, tamen illius ſtudium comprobabitur, quòd confugerit ad Montes: At the comming of Meſſias, the people ſhall be lifted vp, and ſhall prophecie, that before lay aſleepe vnder their Maſters: and they ſhall goe to the Mountaines of the Scriptures, and there ſhall they finde Mountaines, Moſes, and Ioſue the ſonne of Naue, the Mountaines of the Prophets, the Mountaines of the New Teſtament, the Apoſtles, and the Euangeliſts. And when they ſhall flee to ſuch Mountaines, and ſhall bee occupied in the reading thereof, if they finde not one to teach them, yet ſhall their endeuour and good will be allowed, for that they haue fled vnto the Mountaines. Thus may the ſimple haue profit by the reading of the Scriptures, albeit hee fully vnderſtand them not: Thus bee the Angels delighted: Thus is the Diuell moleſted and grieued with the ſame, as Origen himſelfe witneſſeth by theſe words: Dæmonibus ſuper omnia eſt tormentorum genera, & ſuper omnes pœnas, ſi quem videant Verbo Dei operam dare, ſcientiam Diuinæ Legis, & Myſteria Scripturarum, intentis ſtudijs perquirentem: Vnto the Diuels it is a greefe aboue all kindes of torment, and aboue all paines, if they ſee any man labour

Aug. in Pſalm. 119.
Aug. Confeſſ. lib. 7. cap. 12.
Aug. Confeſſ. lib. 9. cap. 5.
Hieron. in Nahum cap. 3.
Origen. in Numer. Hom. 27.

labour the Word of God, seeking with earnest minde the knowledge of Gods Law, and the Mysteries of the Scriptures.

Origen.

S. Augustine, as M. Harding allegeth him, saith: The Psalme chaseth away Diuels: But S. Augustine giueth not such power vnto a Psalme pronounced only with the lips, in a strange vnknowen tongue: but vnto a Psalme vnderstanded, and beleeued, and pronounced from the heart. For to say, The word of God only because it is written or spoken, is auaileable of it selfe without vnderstanding, as M. Harding seemeth to say, is a superstitious and a Iewish kinde of follie. Chrysostome saw and reproued the superstition therof in his time by these words: Quidam Sacerdotes partem aliquam Euangelij alligant circa collum. Dic Sacerdos insipiens: Nonne quotidie Euangelium in Ecclesia legitur, & auditur ab hominibus? Cui ergo in auribus posita Euangelia nihil prosunt, quomodo cum poterunt circa collum suspensa saluare? Vbi est virtus Euangelij? In figuris literarum, an in intellectu sensuum? Certain Priests there be that binde a peece of the Gospell about their neckes. Tell me thou foolish Priest: Is not the Gospell euery day read and heard of men in the Church? If the Gospell do not profit a man being put in his eare, how then can it profit him being tied at his necke? For wherin resteth the power of the Gospell? in the form of the letters, or in the vnderstãding of the sense? So may we say vnto M. Harding: wherein resteth the power of the Psalmes, wherewith the Diuell is vanquished? In the bare sound of the words, or in the sense & meaning of the same? Certainly S. Augustine saith: The word of God worketh in our hearts, non quia dicitur, sed quia creditur. Not because it is spoken, but because it is beleeued. Likewise saith S. Basil: Non qui ore profert verba Psalmi, psallit Domino, sed quicunque de puro corde proferunt Psalmodiam: He singeth not vnto the Lord that vttereth the words of the Psalme, but they that from a pure heart pronounce the Psalmody. Likewise Origen: Fiduciam habet ad Deum, non propter Verba Orationis, vel Psalmi, quamuis videantur bene composita, & de Scripturis electa, sed quia Altare cordis sui bene construxit: He that praieth hath trust in God, not for the words of his praier, or of the Psalme, although they seeme to be well made, and chosen out of the Scriptures, but because he hath well made vp the Altar of his heart. This was Origens whole and only purpose. He exhorteth not the people to heare Seruice in a strange language. Neither is M. Harding able to shew, that there was any such Seruice in the whole Church of God, either then in Origens time, or within fewre hundred yeres after him. Onely he incouraged the people to read the Scriptures, yea although they were not able to reach the bottome of them, as it plainly appeareth by his owne words following: In Scripturis Sanctis est vis quædam, quæ legenti etiam sine explanatione sufficiat: In the holy Scriptures there is a certain vertue sufficient for the Reader, yea although they be not expounded: And therefore he allegeth these words of S. Paul, My spirit praieth, but my sense is without fruit: not to warrant M. Hardings strange order of praier, which neither S. Paul, nor Origen himselfe euer knew; but onely to shew that as God of his mercie helpeth our weakenesse in praying, so likewise in reading the Scriptures he helpeth our weakenesse in vnderstanding. S. Paul saith: Quid oremus, quemadmodum oporteat nescimus: sed ipse spiritus postulat pro nobis gemitibus inenarrabilibus: We know not what to pray, as it is meet for vs to pray: But the spirit of God intreateth for vs with sighes that cannot bee expressed. Thus, saith Origen, The Angels of God delight to see vs praying. Thus they delight to see vs reading. But if they delight only to see vs pray or heare in a strange tongue we know not what, as M. Harding would gather, then are they the Angels of Darkenesse, and not of God.

Auguſt. in prolog. in librum Pſalm.

Chryſoſtom. in Matthæ. in opere imperfecto hom. 43.

Auguſt. Tract. 80. in Iohan.

Baſil. in Pſalm. 29.

Origen. in Matth. Tract. 25.

1. Cor. 14.

Roman. 8.

But of this place of Origen M. Harding gathereth these reasons: The Angels are delighted to heare vs read or pray, although we of our weakenesse know not thorowly what we speake; Ergo, the people in Origens time, had the common Seruice in a strange tongue. The errour or fraud hereof, may the better appeare by that I haue afore declared. It is called Fallacia ab Amphibologia, that is, of the doubtfull taking of one word. For this word (Vnderstanding) hath two significations. For we vnderstand the words, and we vnderstand the meaning of the words. Origen saith: The people vnderstood not the meaning of the Scripture: Ergo, saith M. Harding, They vnderstood not the words of the Scripture. Againe Origen saith: They had no full and perfect vnderstanding: Ergo, saith M. Harding, They had no vnderstanding at all. And therein standeth the fallhod of his argument. And againe, The words that Origen writeth of Reading the Scriptures, M. Harding applieth the same to the common Seruice, and so violently and perforce altereth and depraueth Origens meaning, and concludeth one thing for another. And thus this good Father is drawen in to proue that thing, that he neuer neither knew, nor did nor willed to be done.

M. Harding. The 34. Diuision.

I trust, wise, godly and stedfast men, who be not carried about with euery winde of Doctrine, will bee mooued more with the authority of Origen, a man alwaies in the iudgement of all the Christian world accounted moſt excellently learned, than with the ſcorning of Caluine, who ſpeaking of the ancient Latine Seruice vſed in England and France, ſaith; Ad Eccleſiam ex ſeruitio illo nihil fructus redit: that of the ſound not vnderſtanded, no fruit at all returneth to the Church, vſing that word of deſpight that might better be ſpoken by a Minſtrell of his Pipe and Tabret, than by a Preacher of the Diuine Seruice. Neither herein of with any milder ſpirit ſpeaketh his Diſciple and Subminiſter Theodore Beza, the hot Miniſter of the deformed Churches of France; Quicunque precatur aliquo communi idiomate quod ipſe non intelligat, pro Dei ludibrio ſunt habenda: What praiers ſoeuer be made (ſaith he) of any man in a tongue that he vnderſtandeth not, they be to bee taken for a mockerie of God. Whoſoeuer heere alloweth Caluine and Beza condemned of the Church, muſt condemne Origen, for no point neuer ſo prooued or vouched of any, that haue not ſpared him where ſoeuer they could charge him with any errors. If all praiers made in an vnknowen tongue be a mocking to God, as Beza ſaith, then were the praiers vttered by miracle in the Primitiue Church with tongues (which the vtterers themſelues vnderſtood not after the minde of Chryſoſtome) a mocking of God; For I ſee nothing whereby they are excluded from his (87.) generall ſaying and vniuerſall propoſition. Verily this teaching of Beza is not ſound: I weene, if he were out of the protection of his deformed Churches, and conuented before a Catholike Biſhop to giue an account of this doctrine; he would ſtep backe and reuoke that raſh ſaying againe. For elſe he ſhould ſeeme to grant that God gaue at the beginning of the Church, the gift of tongues to be mocks withall: which were very abſurd and blaſphemous. S. Paul wiſheth that all the Corinthians ſpake with tongues, but rather that they prophecied.

In Iſaiam. cap.

Confeſſion. 4. ſection 16.

The 87. vntruth: For this generall ſaying of Chryſoſtome is vntruly reported.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

I marueil much what ſoundneſſe of Doctrine M. Harding can meane, hauing thus taken vpon him to be the Procour of ignorance: or how he can well commend others for conſtancie and ſtedfaſtneſſe, finding himſelfe with ſo light winges ſo often remoued: or wherefore he ſhould ſo highly commend that old Father Origen, at whoſe hands he findeth ſo ſmall reliefe.

That he thus bitterly chargeth that godly learned Father Iohn Caluine, for ſaying thus: Of the vnknowen Seruice there redoundeth no maner profit to the Church; it toucheth many others moe, and not him only. S. Auguſtine ſaith thus: Si Moſes mihi Hebræa voce loqueretur, fruſtrà pulſaret ſenſum meum, nec inde mentem meam quicquam tangeret: If Moſes ſhould ſpeake vnto mee in the Hebrew tongue (for that I vnderſtand it not) hee ſhould beat my ſenſes in vaine, neither ſhould there any thing thereof enter into my minde. S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Niſi dixero quod percipi facilè, clareque à vobis poſſit, ſed linguarum more præditum me eſſe tantùm oſtendam, nullum ex his quæ non intelligitis, fructum facientes abibitis, credo. Nam quæ vtilitas eſſe ex voce non intellecta poteſt? Vnleſſe I ſpeake that you may plainly and clearely vnderſtand, but onely ſhew my ſelfe to haue the gift of tongues, yee ſhall depart away hauing no fruit of thoſe things that ye vnderſtand not. For of a voice that ye know not, what profit can ye haue? Againe he ſaith: Et vos, niſi ſignificantem ſonum dederitis, verba vento, hoc eſt, nemini facietis: And you vnleſſe ye vtter a ſound with vnderſtanding, ye ſhall ſpeake to the winde, that is to ſay, ye ſhall ſpeake to no Body. And to paſſe by all others, Nicolas Lyra ſaith thus: Si tu Sacerdos benedixeris ſpiritu, id eſt, abſque hoc, quod populus intelligat, quid proficit populus ſimplex, & non intelligens? If thou being the Prieſt, do bleſſe with thy ſpirit, that is to ſay, if the people vnderſtand thee not, what profit hath the ſimple people thereby, not vnderſtanding thee? Therefore as M. Harding ſaith, M. Caluine in this point was a ſcorner, ſo might he as well haue ſaid, S. Auguſtine, S. Chryſoſtome, Nicolas Lyra, and others are all ſcorners.

Auguſt. Confeſſion. lib. 11. cap. 3.

Chryſoſt. in 1. Cor. 14. hom. 35.

No fruit.

Speake to the winde.

Nicol. Lyra in 1. ad Corin. 14.

No profit.

If all praiers (ſaith M. Harding) made in a ſtrange tongue be a mocking of God, as Beza ſaith, then were the praiers vttered by miracle in the Primitiue Church with tongue, which the vtterers themſelues vnderſtood not, after the minde of Chryſoſtome, a mocking of God. This expoſition of Chryſoſtome is very ſtrange and agreeth with few others: and yet is the ſame heere by M. Harding vntruly reported. For Chryſoſtome ſaith not, that whoſoeuer in the Primitiue Church vttered the praiers with tongue, vnderſtood not himſelfe what he ſaid, but plaine the contrary. For thus he ſaith: Linguis loquens ſe ipſum ædificat: quod quidem fieri non poteſt, niſi quæ loquatur norit: He that ſpeaketh with tongues, profiteth himſelfe: which cannot be vnleſſe he vnderſtand what he ſaith. And he addeth further: Et hactenus quidem diſputat de illis, qui ea, quæ loquuntur, intelligunt: Hitherto S. Paul diſputeth of them, that vnderſtand what they ſay. Heere by it is plaine that M. Hardings generall propoſition is not generally true. But others, Chryſoſtome ſaith, there were that abuſed the gift of tongues, and knew not themſelues what they ſaid. And whether this were a mocking of God or no, let M. Harding iudge. Chryſoſtome ſaith: It was a confuſion of the Church: a bragging and oſtentation of themſelues: without conſideration either of themſelues or of others: that ſuch a one was Simon Magus: that ſuch were the ſewes that betraied themſelues vnto the Diuell. And S. Auguſtine compareth them vnto Owſels, Pies and Rauens, that crie and chatter they know not what. Therefore I doubt not but M. Bezaies expoſition will ſtand, both before God, and alſo before any good Catholike Biſhop.

Chryſo. 1. Cor. 14. hom. 35.

Eadem homilia.

M. Harding.

M. Harding. The 35. Diuiſion.

The Latin Church. The Pſalmes.

If our new Maſters condemne the Latine Seruice in the Latine Church, for that the people vnderſtand it not, thereof it muſt follow, that the Engliſh Seruice, ſo much of it as conſiſteth of Dauids Pſalmes, which is the moſt part, be alſo condemned. The like may be ſaid of other Nations. For how many ſhall we finde not of the people onely, but alſo of the beſt learned men, that vnderſtand the meaning of them, in what tongue ſoeuer they be ſet foorth? S. Hillary compareth the booke of Pſalmes to a heape of Keies, that be to open the doores of euery houſe of a great Citie laid together. Amongſt whom it is hard to finde which key ſerueth which locke, and without the right key no doore can be opened. S. Auguſtine likeneth the people of Aphrica, ſinging the Pſalmes which they vnderſtood not, to Owſels, Popiniaies, Rauens, Pies and ſuch other birds, which be taught to ſound they know not what, and yet they vnderſtood the tongue they ſung them in. And therefore he exhorteth them to learne the meaning of them at his preaching, leſt they ſhould ſing not with humane reaſon (as it is before recited) but with voice onely as birds doe.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Al your matter is fully anſwered and confuted: For M. Harding hath called vs New Maſters: euen with the ſame authority and ſpirit, that Haman ſaid vnto King Darius, Eſther 3.8. The Iewes troubled his Countrey, and profeſſed and vſed a New Law. Certainly our Doctrine is Chriſts Doctrine, and hath the teſtimony, not only of the Law and the Prophets, but alſo of the ancient Councels and old Fathers.

The greateſt proofe for the Latine Seruice, that M. Harding can finde, ſtandeth vpon the bare name of the Latine Church. And yet in that whole Church this day, there is not one Nation, that either ſpeaketh or vnderſtandeth the Latine tongue. Let M. Harding only leaue his portuiſe, and Latine Seruice, then hath he no further cauſe to bragge of his Latine Church. For, as it now fareth, his Seruice taketh not name of his Church, but his Church of his Seruice. Verily, as it is meet, the Seruice ſhould be in Latine in the Latine Church: ſo is it meet the Seruice ſhould be in Engliſh in the Engliſh Church.

We grant, the Pſalmes be hard, as it is alleaged, for the deepe ſenſes and high myſteries and ſecret Prophecies of Chriſt and of his Church therein contained. Beſides that, M. Harding hath found out a bunch of Keies in S. Hilary, wherewith to ſhut out all the people. Notwithſtanding the right vſe of Keies is rather to open than to ſhut. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Clauis eſt verbum ſcientiæ Scripturarum, per quam aperitur hominibus ianua Veritatis: The Key is the word of knowledge of the Scriptures, by the which the gate of the Truth is opened vnto men. And Tertullian likewiſe ſaith: Clauis eſt interpretatio Legis: The Key is the expoſition of the Law. And therefore Chriſt ſaith: Woe be vnto you ye Scribes and Phariſeis, that ſhut vp the Kingdome of God before men, for ye enter not your ſelues, neither ſuffer others that would enter. And thus they doe, ſaith Tertullian: Docentes potius præcepta & doctrinas hominum: Teaching rather the commandements and doctrines of men. But if there be ſo manie Keies bound together, what if M. Harding haue miſſed in his choiſe, and haue taken one key for another?

Chryſoſt. in opere imperfecto in Matth. ca. 23. Tertull. contra Marcionē, li. 4. Matthæ 23.

His reaſon ſtandeth thus: The ſimple people vnderſtandeth not the deepe meaning of the Pſalmes; Ergo, They vnderſtand nothing in the Pſalmes. By this Key M. Harding may happen to ſhut out himſelfe. This is a falſe kinde of reaſoning, whith in the Schooles is called A ſecundum quid ad ſimpliciter. For albeit the people vnderſtand not all the high Myſteries of the Scriptures, yet it followeth not, that therefore they vnderſtand nothing in the Scriptures. For in the Scriptures there is both ſtrong meat for Men, and alſo Milke for Children: And in the ſame, ſaith S. Gregory, the Elephant may ſwim, and the Lambe may wade a foot. Gregorius in Epiſtola ad Leandrum.

And if the Pſalmes be hard in the vulgar tongue, be they therefore eaſie in the Latine tongue? Or if the Pſalmes be darke, muſt the people therefore haue their Seruice in Latine?

Verily it appeareth both by Dauid himſelfe, and alſo by ſundrie old Fathers, that the ſimpleſt of all the people were able to vnderſtand the Pſalmes. Dauid exhorteth, Yong men and Maides, Old Men and Children, to praiſe the name of the Lord. Children were able to receiue Chriſt with Pſalmes, and to ſing aloud, Bleſſed is he that commeth in the name of the Lord; and applied the ſame aptly vnto Chriſt. S. Hierome ſaith: The poore husbandman ſung the Pſalmes at his Plough. S. Baſil exhorteth the artificer to ſing Pſalmes in his ſhop. Appollinaris turned the Pſalmes into Greeke verſes, that Children might learne them in the Schooles. S. Chryſoſtome ſaith vnto the Father, Teach thy Childe to ſing the Pſalmes. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Pſalmes were purpoſely made, that yong Men and Children might learne to ſing them. Protogenes in the ſtead of Poets fables, and other like things, gaue Dauids Pſalmes to Children to expound. And that euery of theſe vnderſtood what they ſung, it may appeare by theſe words of S. Auguſtine: Simul & cantare videmur, & quod ad ani- Pſalm 138. Matthæ 21. Hieronymus ad Marcellam. Baſil. in Pſalmos. Chryſoſt. ad Coloſſ. hom. 9. Prolog. in Pſalmes.

The Pſalmes.

mæ vtilitatem pertinet, docemur: Both we ſeeme to ſing, and alſo withall are taught that thing that is profitable for our ſoule. Therefore if any in Aphrica ſung they knew not what, S. Auguſtine compareth them to Rauens or Popinaes. But will M. Harding thereof conclude thus: They that know not what they ſing, ſing like Rauens or Popinaes; Ergo, The people ought to haue their Seruice in a ſtrange tongue.

Theodoret. lib. 4. cap. 19. In Prologo in Pſalmos.

M. Harding. The 36. Diuiſion.

The reſt of the Scriptures whereof the Seruice conſiſteth, is, though not altogether ſo obſcure as the Pſalmes, yet verily, darker and harder, than that the common peoples groſſe and ſimple wits may pierce the vnderſtanding of it, by hearing the ſame pronounced of the Miniſter in their Mother tongue. And by this reaſon we ſhould haue no Seruice at all gathered out of the Scriptures for default of vnderſtanding.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The people (ſaith M. Harding) is groſſe and ſimple, and cannot vnderſtand the Scriptures by hearing the ſame in their Mother tongue; Ergo, They muſt heare it pronounced in the Latine tongue. I told you that they may the better vnderſtand it. This ſeemeth to be a very ſimple argument, and a groſſe vngentle opinion of the ſimplicity of the people. God is not partiall, neither hideth his truth from the ſimple becauſe he is ſimple: but from the proud and reprobate, becauſe he is wilfull: and ſpecially chuſeth the ſimple of the World, to confound the wiſe. The ſimpleſt and groſſeſt of all them that M. Harding meaneth, is able to heare the voice of the Shepheard, and to follow him, but the ſtranger, of whom he hath beene deceiued by double doctrine, he doubteth him, and refuſeth him, and will not follow.

Iames 4. Pſalm. 34. 1. Cor. 1.

Iohn 10.

M. Harding. The 37. Diuiſion.

The 88. vntruth. For the vulgar Seruice increaſeth deuotion, as by ſundry authorities it ſhall appeare.

And whereas, of the Seruice in the vulgar tongue, the people will frame leaud and peruerſe meanings of their owne leaud ſenſes; ſo of the Latine Seruice they will make no conſtructions either of falſe doctrine or of euill life. And as (88) the vulgar Seruice pulleth their mindes from priuate deuotion to heare and not to pray, to little benefit of knowledge, for the obſcurity of it; ſo the Latine giueth them no ſuch occaſion: they occupie themſelues whiles the Prieſt praieth for all, and in the perſon of all, in their Priuate praiers, all for all and euery one for himſelfe.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

He that vnderſtandeth what he heareth read (ſaith M. Harding) hath his minde wandering, and is drawen abroad with vaine imaginations. But whoſo vnderſtandeth not one word at all, neither what he heareth, nor what he ſpeaketh himſelfe, hath his minde cloſely fixed vpon that he ſpeaketh. Thus M. Harding, as he hath made a new Diuinity, ſo is he alſo bold to make a new Philoſophie. For naturally, the minde vnderſtanding what it heareth or readeth, and being attentiue vnto the ſame, hath leſſe cauſe to wander and ſtray abroad. S. Baſil ſaith: Lingua pſallat: Mens autem ſcrutetur ſenſum eorum quæ dicis: vt pſallas ſpiritu, & pſallas etiam mente: Let thy tongue ſing: and let thy mind ſearch out the meaning of that thou ſpeakeſt, that thou maiſt ſing with thy ſpirit, and ſing alſo with thy mind.

Baſil in Pſalm. 28.

But foraſmuch as M. Harding ſaith, the vnderſtanding of the Prieſt is a hinderance vnto Priuate deuotion, in fauour whereof he vtterly defaceth the Publike Praiers, it ſhall behoue vs to conſider, what the old Fathers haue thought in that behalfe. Chryſoſtome thereof writeth thus: Non æquè exoras, cùm ſolus Dominum obſecras, atquè cum fratribus tuis. Eſt enim in hoc plus aliquid, videlicet, concordia, conſpiratio, copula amoris, & charitatis & ſacerdotum clamores. Præſunt enim ob eam rem Sacerdotes, vt populi orationes, quæ infirmiores per ſe ſunt, validiores illas complexæ ſimul in cœlum euchantur: Thou doeſt not ſo ſoone obtaine thy deſire when thou praieſt alone vnto the Lord, as when thou praieſt with thy brethren. For heerein there is ſomewhat more, the concord, the conſent, the ioining of loue and charity and the crie of the Prieſts. For to that end the Prieſts are made ouerſeers, that they being the ſtronger ſort, may take with them the weaker praiers of the people, and carry them vp into Heauen. Likewiſe againe he ſaith: Quod quis apud ſe ipſum precatus accipere non poterit, hoc cum multitudine precatus accipiet. Quare? Quia etiamſi non propria virtus, tamen concordia multum poteſt: The thing that a man cannot obtaine praying by himſelfe alone, praying together with the multitude he ſhall obtaine. And why ſo? For although not his owne worthyneſſe, yet the Concord and Vnity preuaileth much. Thus then ſtood the order of Chriſts Church: The whole multitude gaue care vnto the Prieſt, and at the end of his praier lifted vp their voices vnto heauen all together and ſaid Amen: which voice often times was ſo great, that, as it is alſo ſaid, S. Hierome likeneth it vnto a thunder clap: S. Baſil, vnto the roaring of the Sea. At that time, M. Hardings Priuate deuotion, as it is now vſed in his Church, would haue beene called Priuate Superſtition. And whereas he thus ſtrangely ſaith, Deuotion is hindred by vnderſtanding: His owne Doctour, Nicolas Lyra ſaith otherwiſe and condemneth him: Si populus intelligat orationem Sacerdotis, melius reducitur in Deum

Chryſoſt. de incomprehenſibili Dei natura, homil. 3.

Chryſo. in 2. ad Theſſal. hom. 4.

Lyra in 1. Cor. cap. 14.

um & deuotiùs respondet Amen: If the people vnderstand the praier of the Priest, they are the better reduced vnto God, and with more deuotion they answer, Amen. The Emperour Iustinian, where he commandeth all Bishops and Priests to minister the Seruice with a loud voice, giueth this reason withall: Vt nientes audientium ad maiorem animi compunctionem, & ad reddendam Domino gloriam excitentur: That the mindes of the hearers may be stirred vp to more deuotion, and to render praise vnto the Lord. And S. Basil saith: Tanquam ab vno ore, & vno corde Confessionis Psalmum offerunt Domino: & verba pœnitentiæ eorum quisque propriè ascribit sibi: As it were from one mouth, and from one heart, they offer vp vnto the Lord the Psalme of Confession, and the words of repentance euery of them appleth particularly vnto himselfe. So likewise it is written in the Prologue before S. Augustine vpon the Psalmes: Quomodo debitè potest Deo psallere, qui ignorat quid psallat? How can hee sing duly (or deuoutly) vnto God, that knoweth not what he singeth? It is thought by these, notwithstanding M. Hardings contrary and priuate iudgement, that the vnderstanding of the Publike Seruice is no hinderance vnto deuotion, and their authority in this case may serue, vnlesse M. Harding will condemne them altogether, as he doth others, for New Masters.

Praiers Common and Priuate.

In Nouellis, de Ecclesiasticis diuersis capitulis.

εἰς πλείονα κατάνυξιν.

Basil. ad Clericos Neocæsar.

Prolog. in Augustin. super Psalmos.

M. Harding. The 38. Diuision.

(88) The Nations that haue euer had their Seruice in the vulgar tongue, the people thereof haue continued in Schismes, errours and certaine Iudaicall obseruances, so as they haue not beene reckoned in the number of the Catholike Church. As the Christians of Moschouia, of Armenia, of Prester Iohn his land in Æthiopia. Bessarion asking by way of a question of the Greekes his Country men, what Church that is, against the which Hell gates shall neuer preuaile, answereth himselfe and saith: Aut Latina aut Græca est Ecclesia: tertia enim dari non potest. Si quidem aliæ omnes hæresibus sunt plenæ; quas sanctæ Patres, & Generales Synodi condemnarunt: Either it is the Latine or the Greeke Church; for there is no third that can be granted. For all other Churches be full of Heresies, which the holy Fathers and Generall Councels haue condemned. Wherefore of these Churches no example ought to bee taken for Seruice in the vulgar tongue; as neither of the Churches of Russia, and Morrauia, and certaine other, to whom, aboue six hundred yeeres past, it was granted to haue the Masse in the Sclauons tongue, through speciall licence thereto obtained of the See Apostolike, by Cyrillus and Methodius that first conuerted them to the Faith. Which maner of Seruice, so many of them as be Catholike, for good causes haue left, and vsed the Latine, as other Latine Churches doe. Concerning the rest yet keeping their Sclauon tongue, beside other errours and defaults, for which they are not heerein to be esteemed worthy to be followed, wee may say of them the words of Gregory Nazianzene; Priuilegia paucorum, non faciunt Legem communem: The Priuileges of a few, make not a thing lawfull in common.

In Epistola ad Græc.

3. The 89. vntruth. For the Seruice in the vulgar tongue neuer was cause of Schisme or Heresie.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

This argument séemeth to hold thus: Seruice in the vulgar tongue is cause of Schismes and errours; Ergo, within six hundred yeeres after Christ, it was ministred in some place in a tongue vnknowen vnto the people. The force of this conclusion is euident: a very child may soone sée thorow it. If the antecedent were true, then should the Iewes, the Grækes, and the Latines, which euermore had their Seruice in the vulgar tongue, for that cause haue béene full of schismes and errours. S. Augustine, S. Hierome and other Fathers say, that pride and wilfulnesse of minde: Tertullian saith, that knowledge of Philosophie and affiance of learning, hath caused diuision and heresies in the Church, and therefore calleth the Philosophers the Patriarkes of Heretikes. The Bishops in the Councell of Toledo say thus: Ignorantia est mater omnium errorum: Ignorance is the Mother of all errour. But that the vnderstanding of the Common Seruice was euer thought the cause of Schisme or errour in the Church, I thinke it was neuer either written or spoken by any old Doctour, either Græke or Latine, or Iew or Gentile. Epiphanius reckoneth vp fourescore sundry heresies, that had béene before his time: S. Augustine reckoneth fourescore and nine. Yet do they not say, that any one of all those heresies euer sprang of vnderstanding the Common Seruice. No man would say thus but M. Harding: Neither will M. Harding thus say, when faction and contention laid apart, he shall either say that he knoweth, or haue regard to that he saith.

Tertull. contra Hermogenem.

Concil. Toletan. 4. ca. 24.

Epiphan. De Heresibus.

Augustin. ad Quod-vult-Deum.

Touching the Christians, which be in infinite numbers in Moscouia, Armenia, Ethiopia, and elsewhere, whom vpon verie short aduice, he hath condemned altogether for Schismatikes, if he would haue credit giuen vnto his tale, it would haue behoued him, both to haue declared their particular errours and heresies, and also substantially to haue proued, that their vulgar Seruice gaue occasion vnto the same.

The Christians of Russia and Morauia (saith M. Harding) afterward vpon good causes receiued the Latine Seruice. Howbeit of all these good causes he vttereth none. But after Cyrillus and Methodius by long preaching and great paines had conuerted them to the faith of Christ, and for the better continuance of that they had begun, were desirous that the people so conuerted might haue their common Seruice in their mother tongue, and the matter stood in suspense at Rome, in the Consistory before the Bishop there and his Cardinals, a voice was Æneas Syluius hiſtoriæ Bohemice, cap. 13, heard by an Angell from Heauen: Omnis Spiritus laudet Dominum: & omnis lingua confiteatur ei: Let euery Spirit praiſe the Lord, and let euery tongue make confeſſion vnto him. By this ſtory it appeareth, the Angell of God from Heauen was authour that theſe Nations ſhould haue their Seruice in their common tongue. Now if M. Harding be able to ſhew, that either Euangeliſt, or Angell, or voice from Heauen, euer willed them to leaue their owne naturall ſpeech, and to vſe the Latine, then may hée ſay they had good cauſes ſo to doe. Beſſarions authoritie in this caſe cannot ſéeme great, both for other ſundry cauſes, which I leaue, and alſo for that hée liued at the leaſt fourétéene hundred yéares after Chriſt, and being out of his owne Countrie, and created Cardinall, and Biſhop of Tuſculum, he manifeſtly flattered the Biſhop of Rome.

M. Harding. The 39. Diuiſion.

The 90. vntruth. For the contrary is ſufficiently prooued in the 35. Diuiſion of this Article.

A heape of vntruthes laid together.

Wherefore to conclude, ſeeing (90) in ſix hundred yeerés after Chriſt the Seruice of the Church was not in any other than in the Greeke and Latine tongue, for that any man is able to ſhew by good proofe, and the ſame not vnderſtanded of all people; ſeeing the authorities by M Iewel alleged, import no neceſſary argument, nor direct commandement of the vulgar tongue, but only of plaine and open pronouncing, and that where the tongue of the Seruice was vnderſtanded; ſeeing the Church of the Engliſh Nation had their Seruice in the Latine tongue to them vnknowen, welneere a thouſand yeeres paſt; Seeing the place of S. Paul to the Corinthians, either pertaineth not to this purpoſe, or if it be ſo granted, for the diuerſity of ſtates of that, and of this our time, it permitteth a diuerſity of obſeruation in this behalfe, though ſome likeneſſe and reſemblance yet reſerued; ſeeing great profit commeth to the faithfull people, hauing it ſo as they vnderſtand it not: Finally, ſeeing the examples rehearſed heerein to be followed, be of ſmall authority in reſpect either of antiquity or of true Religion: as the bold aſſertion of M. Iewel is plainly diſprooued, ſo the old order of the Latine Seruice in the Latine Church, whereof England is a Prouince, is not raſhly to be condemned; ſpecially wheras (91) being firſt committed to the Churches by the Apoſtles of our Country, and the firſt Preachers of the Faith heere, it hath beene authoriſed by continuance almoſt of a thouſand yeeres without controle or gaine ſaying, to the glory of God, the wealth of the people, and the procuring of helpe from heauen alwaies to this land.

The 91. vntruth. For the firſt preachers of the faith in this Iland were Greekes, and Hebrewes, and not Latines.

The 92. vntruth, ioined with a ſlander. For our Seruice conteineth nothing contrary to the faith.

And to adde heereunto thus much laſt of all, though it might bee granted that it were good, the Seruice were in the vulgar tongue, as in Engliſh for our Countrey of England. Yet doubtleſſe good men and zealous keepers of the Catholike faith, will neuer allow the Seruice deuiſed in King Edwards time, now reſtore againe, not ſo much for the tongue it is in, as for the order it ſelfe and diſpoſition of it, lacking ſome things neceſſary, and hauing ſome other things (92) repugnant to the Faith and cuſtome of the Catholike Church.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Héere M. Harding it appeareth, yée begin to miſlike your owne dealing, that after ſo many words, and ſo great a countenance of learning, yée ſhould be found ſo nakedly, and ſo vnſenſibly to deceiue the people. And therefore hauing no maner authoritie of ancient Councell or Doctour to allege againſt the Engliſh tongue in the Church of England, yet leſt in the end, hauing ſaid ſo much, yée ſhould ſéeme to ſay nothing, yée begin to find fault with the order of our Seruice, and without any maner of proofe, yée ſay, there are many things therein contained, contrarie to the Catholike Faith; and ſo contrary to your owne knowledge, yée maintaine one vntruth by another.

Tertull. in Apologetico:

you know, that wée ſerue God according to his holy word, and the order of his Primitiue Church. For (as Tertullian ſaith, the Chriſtian people did in his time:) Coimus ad diuinarum Scripturarum commemorationem, ſi quid præſentium temporum qualitas aut præmonere cogit, aut recognoſcere. Certè fidem ſanctis vocibus paſcimus, ſpem erigimus, fiduciam figimus: Wee meet together to heare the reherſall of the holy Scriptures, if the ſtate of the preſent time do force vs either to forewarne any thing, or elſe to call any thing to remembrance. Verily wee feed our Faith with thoſe holy words, wee confirme our hope, wee aſſure our truſt. We miniſter the holy Sacraments in pure and reuerent ſort: wée Baptize in the name of God the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt: wée receiue the Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood from the holy Table: wée make our humble Confeſſion and fall to the ground, and pray altogether, with one heart, and one voice, in ſpirit and truth: and ſpecially wée pray for you, and for ſuch others, that yée may conſider from whence yée are fallen, and repent your ſelues, and returne to God: wée Excommunicate open offenders: wée receiue againe them that ſhew themſelues penitent: wée inſtruct our youth in the Faith of Chriſt: wée make collections and prouide charitably for the poore. Of all theſe things, what one thing is contrary to the Catholike Faith? O M. Harding, it is written, The mouth that lieth deſtroieth the Soule: And Chriſt ſaith: The Blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt ſhall neuer be forgiuen, neither in this life, nor in the life to come.

Sapien. 1. Matth. 12.

Now, good Chriſtian Reader, for the better contenting of thy minde, I beſeech thée to looke backe and to conſider the whole ſubſtance of all that M. Harding hath laid in for proofe of this Article, what weight it beareth, and how well it ſerueth to his purpoſe. He hath intreated largely of ſinging in the Quire, at what time, and where it firſt began: and likewiſe likewise hath proued by a great long discourse of situation of Countries, and diuersity of tongues, that neither all the East part of the world vnderstood the Greeke, nor all the people of Aphrica, Mauritania, Spaine, and France, vnderstood the Latine: which labour in this case was nothing needfull. But that all the Nations of the East part had their Seruice in the Greeke tongue, and that all the people of Aphrica, Mauritania, Spaine, and France, had their Seruice in the Latine tongue, which thing onely stood in question, and therefore was onely to be proued, he hath hitherto vtterly left vnproued. Touching the Publike Seruice within this Iland, the story of Augustine of Rome, and Edda, and Putta, and other Poets, and singing men, as I haue shewed, standeth him in small stead. Contrarie to his owne knowledge, he saith, that the fourteenth Chapter of S. Paul to the Corinthians cannot necessarily be applied to this purpose. And further he saith, that euen from the Apostles time, the Priest euermore made his Prayers in the Quire, farre off from the hearing of the people: That the ignorant people vnderstandeth the Latine Tongue, although not in most exact wise, or perfectly: That they are now better instructed in the Articles of the Faith, than they were in the time of the Apostles: That it is sufficient for them now to be taught by Gestures and Ceremonies: and, That they haue great profit by hearing their Seruice, although they know not what they heare. Againe he saith, That the Greeke and Latine be learned tongues, and therefore all the Seruice of the Church, throughout the whole World, ought to be ministred in one of them: That all the Psalmes, and all other Scriptures, are hard, and farre passe the capacitie of the people: That vnderstanding of the matter, causeth the minde to wander: And to bee short, That Prayer in the Common Tongue hath euermore bred Schismes and Diuisions in the Church. He hath openly falsified Strabo, Iustinian, Origen, Chrysostome, and others, and hath forced them to say the thing they neuer meant.

This is the whole Summary of all that he had to say. Hereof he would faine to conclude, that within the first six hundred yeare after Christ, the Common Seruice was ministred openly in a tongue vnknowen vnto the people: Albeit, he hath hitherto alleaged neither Scripture, nor Councell, nor Decree, nor Doctor, nor Example, or practise of the Primitiue Church, to proue the same.

Of the other side, it is sufficiently proued of our part, that the fourteenth Chapter to the Corinthians must of necessitie belong to the vse of Common Prayers; and that in the Primitiue Church, the Seruice was euery where ministred in the Vulgar Tongue; and that the Priest and the people prayed altogether. I haue proued, not only that the Nations that vnderstood Greeke or Latine, had their Seruice in the Greeke or Latine tongue, but by Theodoretus, Sozomenus, S. Ambrose, and S. Hierome, that the Syrians had their Seruice in the Syrian tongue: by S. Basil, that the Egyptians had their Seruice in the Egyptian tongue: The Lybians, the Thebanes, the Palestines, the Arabians, and the Phenicians, each of them in their owne tongue: by Origen, that all Barbarous people had their Seruice in their seuerall Barbarous tongues: by Sulpitius, that the people of France, then called Gallia, had their Seruice in the French tongue. S. Hierome saith: Vox quidem dissona, sed vna Religio. Tot pene psallentium chori, quot gentium diuersitates: The voice is diuers, but the Religion is all one. There be welneere so many companies of people singing, as there be diuersities of Nations. To be short, I haue proued by S. Chrysostome, and by Lyra, and others, that there can no maner profit redound vnto the people, of prayers made in a strange tongue.

Iustinian. Lyra & Thom.

Hieronym. ad Marcellam.

Seeing therefore M. Hardings Doctrine standeth vpon so simple grounds, as I haue shewed, and serueth only to maintaine ignorance, and the Kingdome of darkenesse, it is now thy part, gentle Reader, to iudge indifferently betweene vs, both how iustly he hath coloured the same with such a face of antiquity, and also how truely and substantially he hath answered my assertion.

OF THE SVPREMACIE.

THE FOVRTH ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR, that the Bishop of Rome was then called an Vniuersall Bishop, or Head of the Vniuersall Church.

M. Harding.

Vniuerſall Biſhop.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuiſion.

By what name ſoeuer the Biſhop of Rome was called within ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſts Aſcenſion, this is cleere, that his Primacie, that is to ſay, ſupreme power and authoritie ouer and abeue all Biſhops, and chiefe gouernment of all Chriſts flock, in matters pertaining to Faith and Chriſtian Religion, was then (93) acknowledged and confeſſed. Which thing being ſo, whether then he were called by either of thoſe names that you deny, or no, it is not of great importance. And yet for the one of them, ſomewhat, and for the other, an infinite number of good authorities may be alleaged. But thereof heereafter.

The 93. vntruth. For there was no ſuch power confeſſed. Not one at all.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Touching theſe glorious Names and Titles, wherewith the Biſhop of Rome hath long ſithence furniſhed and beautified his eſtate, M. Harding ſeemeth in part willingly to yeeld: claiming neuertheleſſe the Supreme Power, and Vniuerſall Authoritie, vnto the See of Rome, and that euen from the Apoſtles time: notwithſtanding it was as eaſie a matter for Chriſt to giue Peter the Power and Title both together, as to giue him the Power alone, without the Title. But to auoid errour that might grow by miſtaking of words, him wee call, The Vniuerſall Biſhop, or, The Head of the Vniuerſall Church, that hath Authoritie aboue all Generall Councels, and fulneſſe of power to expound the Scriptures: to whoſe determinations the whole Church of God muſt of neceſſitie ſubmit it ſelfe without contradiction: whom neither Emperour, nor King, nor Clergy, nor the whole Vniuerſall People, in any wiſe may controle, whatſoeuer he doe: vnto whom all Appeales ought to lie from all places of the world: and who, whereſoeuer he happen to be, hath the full Iuriſdiction of a Biſhop. That euer any ſuch Superiority, or Vniuerſall Power, was giuen by Chriſt to the See of Rome, it will be too much for M. Harding well to proue.

Extra. de elect. & electi. poteſt. Solitæ. De Maior. & Obedien. Vnam Sanctam. 9. Quæſt. 3. Nemo.

But whereas the Biſhop there ſo ambitiouſly craueth to be knowen and taken for the Vniuerſall Biſhop, and Head of the Vniuerſall Church, happy is he, if he doe the dutie of one particular Biſhop, and be found but a member of Chriſts Church. S. Gregorie ſaith: Aduerſus quem portæ prævalent Inferorum, ille neque Petra dicendus eſt, ſupra quam Chriſtus ædificat Eccleſiam, neque Eccleſia, neque pars Eccleſiæ: He, againſt whom the gates of Hell doe preuaile, (as they haue often againſt the Biſhop of Rome) neither may be called the Rocke, whereupon Chriſt doth build his Church, nor the Church, nor any part of the Church.

Greg. in Caten. in Mat. ca. 16. Gregor. Lib. 4. Epiſt. 34.

Certainly, touching theſe vaine Titles, the ſame Ancient Father S. Gregorie ſaith: Ego fidenter dico, Quiſquis ſe Vniuerſalem Sacerdotem vocat, vel vocari deſiderat, in elatione ſua Antichriſtum præcurrit: I ſpeake it boldly, Whoſoeuer either calleth himſelfe the Vniuerſall Biſhop, or deſireth ſo to be called, in his pride he is the Forerunner of Antichriſt.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

Now concerning the chiefe point of this Article, which is the Primacie of the Pope, Peters ſucceſſour: Firſt, it hath beene ſet vp and ordained by God, ſo as it ſtandeth in force Iure diuino, by Gods Law, and not only by mans Law, the Scriptures leading thereto. Next, commended to the World by Decrees of Councels, and confirmed by Edicts of Chriſtian Emperours, for auoiding of Schiſmes. Furthermore, confeſſed and witneſſed by the holy Fathers. Againe, found to be neceſſary by reaſon. Finally, vſed and declared by the euent of things, and practiſe of the Church. For proofe of all this, ſo much might eaſilie be ſaid, as ſhould ſerue to a whole volume.

A heape of vntruths.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Heere M. Harding ſaith, he will trip and dance lightly ouer this Article. And therefore notwithſtanding he would ſeeme to hold De Iure diuino, that is, by the Scriptures, yet for haſte he allegeth not any one word of the Scriptures, as of himſelfe, but only vpon the report and credit of others. Howbeit Pope Zoſimus, in all that long contention he had with the Biſhops of Aphrica, touching theſe matters, neuer alleged any word of the Scriptures, but only the Councell of Nice, which he himſelfe had falſified. And Meltiades writing heereof to the Biſhops of Spaine, ſeemeth to claime only by Cuſtome, and not by any right of Gods word.

Zoſimus in Cõcil. Aphricano. Meltiades in epiſt. ad Epiſcop. Hiſpaniæ.

Iohan. 17. Matth. 38. In Conc. Lateran. ſub Leone. Reginal. Polus aduerſus H. 8. Regem Angliæ.

Neuertheleſſe, ſithence that time, they haue found out ſundry places of the Scriptures to auouch their Title, and haue forced the ſame to ſerue their purpoſe. Chriſt ſaith, All power is giuen to me. Heereof Stephanus the Biſhop of Patraca concludeth thus: Ergo in Papa eſt omnis poteſtas ſupra omnes poteſtates, tam Cœli, quàm Terræ: Therefore in the Pope is all power aboue all powers, as well of Heauen, as of Earth. Some others there be that reaſon thus: Peter entred into the graue before Iohn: Peter drew his net full of fiſh: Vnto Peter

Chriſt

Christ said, Confirme thy brethren: Ergo, The Pope is head of the Church. Bonifacius the eighth saith: In principio creauit Deus Cœlum & Terram, non in principijs: God made Heauen and Earth in the beginning, and not in the beginnings, as in many. And againe: Spiritualis omnia dijudicat: He that is spirituall, iudgeth all things: Ergo, The Bishop of Rome ought to haue an Vniuersall power ouer all the World. By these, and other like Authorities of the Scriptures, they conclude, that the Pope holdeth his Authoritie not by any ordinance of man, but De Iure diuino, that is, euen by the right of Gods vndoubted Law. And therefore Pope Bonifacius determineth the matter in this wise to hold for euer: Declaramus, Dicimus, Definimus, Pronuntiamus, omninò esse de necessitate Salutis omni humanæ creaturæ, subesse Romano Pontifici: Wee declare, say, determine, and pronounce, that vndoubtedly it standeth vpon the necessitie of Saluation, for euery mortall creature to be subiect to the Bishop of Rome. Likewise saith the Glosse vpon the same: Quicquid saluatur, est sub summo pontifice: Whatsoeuer is saued, is vnder the highest Bishop. If these clames be good, it is no hard matter to hold by Scriptures.

De Iure diuino.

De Maior. & Obed. Vnam Sanctam. 2. Cor. 2. De Maior. &c. vt supra. Glossa ibidem.

But forasmuch as they seeme to make greatest account of these words of Christ, Thou art Peter, and vpon this Rocke I will build my Church; therefore, for answer hereunto, vnderstand thou, good Christian Reader, that the old Catholike Fathers haue written and pronounced, not any mortall man, as Peter was, but Christ himselfe, the Sonne of God, to be this Rocke. Gregorius Nyssenus saith: Tu es Petrus, &c. Thou art Peter, and vpon this Roeke I will build my Church. He meaneth the confession of Christ: For hee had said before: Thou art Christ, the Sonne of the liuing God. So saith S. Hilarie: Hæc est vna fœlix Fidei Petra, quam Petrus ore suo confessus est: This is that only blessed Rocke of Faith, that Peter confessed with his mouth. Againe he saith: Vpon this Rocke of Peters Confession, is the building of the Church. So Cyrillus: Petra nihil aliud est, quam firma & inconcussa Discipuli Fides: The Rocke is nothing else, but the strong and assured Faith of the Disciple. So likewise Chrysostome: Super hanc Petram, id est, In hac Fide & Confessione, ædificabo Ecclesiam meam: Vpon this Rocke, that is to say, Vpon this Faith, and this Confession, I will build my Church. Likewise S. Augustine: Petra erat Christus, super quod Fundamentum etiam ædificatus est Petrus: Christ was the Rocke, vpon which Foundation Peter himselfe was also built. And addeth further besides: Non me ædificabo super te, sed te ædificabo super me: Christ saith vnto Peter: I will not build my selfe vpon thee, but I will build thee vpon me. All these Fathers be plaine: but none so plaine as Origen. His words be these: Petra est, quicunque est discipulus Christi: Et super talem Petram construitur omnis Ecclesiastica Doctrina. Quod si super vnum illum Petrum tantùm existimas ædificari totam Ecclesiam, quid dicturus es de Iohanne Filio Tonitrui, & Apostolorum vnoquoque? Num audebimus dicere, quòd aduersus Petrum vnum non præualitura sint portæ Inferorum? An soli Petro dantur à Christo Claues Regni Cœlorum? Hee is the Rocke, whosoeuer is the Disciple of Christ: And vpon such a Rocke all Ecclesiasticall learning is built. If thou thinke that the whole Church is built only vpon Peter, what then wilt thou say of Iohn the Sonne of the Thunder, and of euery of the Apostles? Shall wee dare to say, that the Gates of Hell shall not preuaile only against Peter? Or are the Keies of the Kingdome of Heauen giuen only vnto Peter? By these few it may appeare, what right the Pope hath to claime his Authoritie by Gods Word, and, as M. Harding saith, De Iure diuino. Indeed touching the same words of S. Matthew, S. Hierome writeth thus: Istum locum Episcopi & Presbyteri non intelligentes, aliquid sibi de Pharisæorum assumunt supercilio: Bishops and Priests, not vnderstanding this place, take vpon them some part of the proud lookes of the Phareseis. And againe he saith: Nouerint Episcopi, se magis consuetudine, quàm dispositionis Dominicæ veritate, Præsbyteris esse maiores: Let Bishops vnderstand that they are greater than the Priests, more of Custome, than of the truth of Gods Ordinance. By this it appeareth, that the Bishop of Rome holdeth by Custome, and not as M. Harding saith, De iure diuino.

Marke 3. Hier. in Matt. Cap. 16. Lib. 3.

As for the Decrées of Councels, the Edicts of Princes, the Sayings of holy Fathers, the Necessitie of Reason, and the Practise of the Church, how iustly they be auouched by M. Harding, they shall be seuerally examined, as they come.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuision.

But I in this treatise seeking to auoid prolixitie, hauing purposed to say somewhat to this number of the other Articles, and knowing this matter of the Primacie to bee already largely and learnedly handled of others, will but Trip, as it were, lightly ouer at this time, and not set my fast footing in the deepe debating and treating of it. Trip.

Firſt, as concerning the right of the Primacie by Gods Law, by these ancient authorities it hath beene auouched. Anacletus, that holy Bishop and Martyr, S. Peters Scholar, and of him consecrated Priest, in his Epistle to the Bishops of Italy, writeth thus: In Nouo Testamento, post Christum, &c. In the New Testament ſtament, the order of Prieſts began, after our Lord Chriſt, of Peter, becauſe to him Biſhopricke was firſt giuen in the Church of Chriſt, where as our Lord ſaid vnto him, Thou art Peter, and vpon this Rocke I will build my Church, and the gates of Hell ſhall not preuaile againſt it: and vnto thee I will giue the Keies of the Kingdome of Heauen. Wherefore this Peter receiued of our Lord, firſt of all power to binde and to looſe: and firſt of all he brought people to the Faith, by vertue of his preaching. As for the other Apoſtles, they receiued honour and power in like fellowſhip with him, and willed him to be their Prince, or chiefe Gouernour.

Epistles Decretall.

In an other Epiſtle to all Biſhops, alleaging the ſame text, for the Primacie of the See of Rome, ſpeaking of the Diſpoſition of Churches committed to Patriarkes and Primates, ſaith thus moſt plainly: This holy and Apoſtolike Church of Rome, hath obteined the Primacie, not of the Apoſtles, but of our Lord and Sauiour himſelfe, and hath gotten the preeminence of power ouer all Churches, and ouer the whole flocks of Chriſtian people, euen ſo as hee ſaid to bleſſed Peter the Apoſtle, Thou art Peter, and vpon this Rocke, &c.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The authorities here alleged, are full of fogge, and falſe ground, and can abide no taſt ſoting: and therefore M. Harding trippeth them ſo lightly ouer.

Touching this Epiſtle of Anacletus, and other like Epiſtles Decretall, I will only giue a taſte, and leaue the iudgement thereof vnto the Reader.

First, one Petrus Crab, the compiler of the Councels, complaineth much, that the examples from whence he toke them, were wonderfully corrupted, and not one of them agreeing with another; and expreſſeth the ſame by theſe words: Exemplarium intolerabilis nimiaque differentia & deprauatio.

In admonitione ad lectorẽ, ante Decret. Liber.

Againe, Gratian himſelfe, vpon good aduiſe, is driuen to ſay, That all ſuch Epiſtles ought to haue place, rather in debating of matter of Iuſtice in the Conſiſtorie, than in determining and weighing the truth of the Scriptures.

Diſt. 20. Decretales.

Beſides this, neither S. Hierome, nor Gennadius, nor Damaſus, nor any other old Father, euer alleged theſe Epiſtles, or made any account of them: nor the Biſhops of Rome themſelues, no not when ſuch euidence might haue ſtood them in beſt ſtead, namely, in their ambitious contention for the Superiority ouer the Biſhops of Aphrica.

The contents of them are ſuch, as a very childe, of any iudgement, may ſone be able to deſcry them.

Clem. Epiſt. 1.

Clemens informeth S. Iames of the order and maner of S. Peters death: yet it is certaine, and Clement vndoubtedly knew it, that Iames was put to death ſeuen yeres before S. Peter.

Hier. de Eccleſiaſt. Scriptor.

Anther. epiſt. 1.

Antherus maketh mention of Euſebius, Biſhop of Alexandria, and of Felix Biſhop of Epheſus: yet was neither Euſebius, nor Felix, neither Biſhop, nor borne all the time that Antherus liued.

Marcell. epiſt. 2. ad Oriental.

Marcellinus ſaith: The Emperour might not attempt to preſume any thing againſt the Goſpell: Yet was there then no Emperour aliue, that vnderſtood Chriſt, or knew the Goſpell.

Marcell. epiſt. 2.

Marcellus writeth to the Emperour Maxentius, and chargeth him ſtraitly with the authoritie of Clement: yet was Maxentius an Infidell, a cruell Tyrant, and a perſecutor of the Church: and neither knew nor cared for the name of Clement.

Zephyr. epiſt. 1.

Zephyrinus ſaith: Chriſt commanded his Apoſtles to appoint the threeſcore and twelue Diſciples: Yet S. Luke ſaith, Chriſt himſelfe appointed them.

Luke cap. 10.

Luke 3.

S. Luke ſaith: Iohn the Baptiſt gaue this counſell to the Souldiers, Be ye contented with your wages, &c. Yet Meltiades quite altereth the whole ſtory, and nameth Chriſt in ſtead of Iohn.

Meltiad. epiſt. 1.

It would be tedious and needleſſe to open all: Theſe few notes may ſuffice for a taſte.

Now touching this Anacletus, whom M. Harding hath furniſhed with his titles, as though it were the very true Anacletus indeed; firſt he ſaith, Clemens was his predeceſſor: Contrariwiſe, Irenæus that liued immediately afterward, and Euſebius ſay, Anacletus was predeceſſour vnto Clement. Whereby it may appeare, that Anacletus wrote this Epiſtle after that he himſelfe was dead.

Anacl. Epiſt. 1.

Iren. li. 3. ca. 3.

Diſt. 93. Iuxta Sanctorum.

He maketh mention of S. Peters Church: yet was there no Church built in the name of Peter within three hundred yeres after Anacletus.

Anacl. epiſt. 3.

Againe, he alleageth the Decrees and Canons of the old Fathers: His words be theſe: Hęc ab antiquis Apoſtolis & Patribus accepimus: Theſe things haue we receiued of the old Apoſtles and ancient Fathers: As if the Apoſtles had bene long before him: notwithſtanding S. Iohn the Apoſtle was yet aliue, and Anacletus himſelfe was one of the oldeſt Fathers.

Although by that I haue thus ſhortly touched, the likelihod hereof may ſone appeare, yet I beſeech thee, good Chriſtian Reader, conſider alſo theſe and other like phraſes, and maners of ſpeech, which in theſe Epiſtles are very familiar, and may eaſily be found: Perſecutiones patienter portare: Peto vt pro me orare debeas: Epiſcopi obediendi ſunt, non inſidiandi: Ab illis omnes Chriſtiani ſe cauere debent. Here is not ſo much as the very congruitie and natural ſound of the Latine Tongue. And ſhall we thinke, that for the ſpace of three hundred yeres and more, there was not one Biſhop in Rome, that could ſpeake true Latine? And ſpecially then, when all the whole people there, both women and children, were able to ſpeake it naturally, without a Teacher? Verily the Pope himſelfe ſaith, Falſa Latinitas vitiat reſcriptum Papæ: False Latine putteth the Popes owne writ out of credit. Extr. de reſcriptis, ad audientiam.

non

As for the ſubſtance and contents of theſe Epiſtles, they touch nothing, neither of the ſtate of the Church in that time, nor of Doctrine, nor of Perſecution, nor of Hereſie, nor of the office of the Miniſters, nor of any other thing, either agreeable vnto that age, or in any wiſe greatly worthy to be conſidered.

All their drift is, by falſifying of the Scriptures, and by all other meanes, onely to eſtabliſh the State and Kingdome of the See of Rome. Anacletus thus interlaceth the words of Chriſt: Super hanc Petram, id eſt, ſuper Eccleſiam Romanam, ædificabo Eccleſiam meam: Vpon this Rocke, that is to ſay, vpon the Church of Rome, I will build my Church. And againe: Romana Eccleſia Cardo & Caput eſt omnium Eccleſiarum: Vt enim Cardine oſtium regitur, ita huius ſanctæ Sedis authoritate omnes Eccleſiæ reguntur: The Church of Rome is the Hooke and the Head of all Churches. For as the doore is ruled by the Hooke, ſo all Churches are ruled by the authoritie of this holy See (of Rome.) Pope Stephanus ſaith: Hæc Sacroſancta Domina noſtra Romana Eccleſia: This holy our Lady, the Church of Rome. Anaclet. epiſt. 1. Anaclet. epiſt. 3. Diſt. 70. Oportebat.

And what needed M. Harding to allege only Anacletus, being ſo well ſtored of ſundrie others? For Pope Euariſtus, Alexander, Sixtus, Teleſphorus, Higinus, Pius, Anicetus, Soter: Eleutherius, Victor, and all the reſt of the ancient Biſhops of Rome, whoſe names haue beene abuſed to this purpoſe, agree in one. All they are made to ſay, Wee are the Vniuerſall Biſhops: We are the Heads of the Vniuerſall Church: All appeales ought of right to lie to vs: We cannot erre: We may not be controlled: For it is written, The Scholar is not aboue his maſter. If theſe authorities were ſufficient, then were the caſe cleere of M. Hardings ſide. But he ſaw they were forged, and full of vntruth: and therefore he thought it beſt to trip ſo lightly ouer them. As for Anacletus himſelfe, that was Peters Scholar, and the reſt of the ancient Biſhops of Rome, they were holy men, and godly Fathers, and lined in continuall perſecution, and were daily taken, and put to death, and had no leiſure to thinke vpon theſe ambitious and vaine titles.

Epiſtles Decretall.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuiſion.

S. Gregory writing to Mauritius the Emperour, againſt Iohn the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, ambitiouſly claiming and vſurping the name of an Vniuerſall Biſhop, proueth the Biſhop of Rome, ſucceeding in Peters Chaire, to be Primate, and to haue charge ouer all the Church of Chriſt, by Scriptures, thus: Cunctis Euangelium ſcientibus liquet, &c. It is euident to all that know the Goſpell, that the cure and charge of the whole Church hath beene committed, by the word of our Lord, to the holy Apoſtle Peter, Prince of all the Apoſtles. For to him it is ſaid, Peter, loueſt thou me? Feed my ſheepe. To him it is ſaid, Behold, Sathan hath deſired to ſift you, as it were wheat, and I haue praied for thee, Peter, that thy Faith faile not. And thou being once conuerted, ſtrengthen thy brethren. To him it is ſaid, Thou art Peter, and vpon this Rocke will I build my Church, and the gates of Hell ſhall not preuaile againſt it. And vnto thee I will giue the Keies of the Kingdome of Heauen. And whatſoeuer thou bindeſt vpon earth, ſhall be bound alſo in heauen, and whatſoeuer thou looſeſt on earth, ſhall be looſed alſo in heauen. Behold, he receiueth the Keies of the heauenly Kingdome: the power of binding and looſing is giuen to him: the charge of the whole Church and principalitie is committed to him. Thus far Gregorie. But becauſe our aduerſaries, though without iuſt cauſe, refuſe the witneſſe of the Biſhops of Rome in this Article, as vnlawfull witneſſes in their owne cauſe, were they neuer ſo holy Martyrs, or learned Confeſſors; they may vnderſtand, we are able to allege ſundry other authorities to the confirmation hereof, that be aboue all exception.

Iohn. 21. Luc. 22. Matth. 16.

Cunctis vtique Eccleſiæ præpoſitus committitur.

M. Harding cutteth off, and corrupteth ỹ words of S. Gregorie: For it followeth immediately: Tamen Petrus Vniuerſalis Apoſtolus non vocatur.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

If S. Gregorie were now aline, he would charge M. Harding with open ſhiftie: not only for altering his whole meaning, but alſo for mangling and maimung his very words. M. Harding, to proue that the Biſhop of Rome was called the Vniuerſall Biſhop, alleageth theſe words of S. Gregorie: Ecce, Petrus Claues Regni Cœlorum accipit. Et poteſtas ei ligandi ſoluendique tribuitur. Cura ei totius Eccleſiæ & Principatus committitur: Behold, Peter receiueth the Keies of the Kingdome of Heauen. To him is giuen power both to binde and looſe. The charge and chiefe rule of the Church is committed vnto him. Thus farre Gregorie, ſaith M. Harding. And why no farther? Was he ſtaied with the Choine-couch, and forced to breake off his tale in the midſt? But marke well, gentle Reader, and thou ſhalt ſee S. Gregory ſet to Schoole, and kept in aw, and not ſuffered to vtter one word more than M. Harding will giue him leaue. The next words that immediately follow Gregor. lib. 4. Epiſt. 32.

Petrus vniuersalis Apostolus non vocatur.

follow in the same sentence, are these: Tamen Petrus Vniuersalis Apostolus non vocatur: Yet Peter is not called the Vniuersall Apostle. M. Harding saith; The Bishop of Rome was called the Vniuersall Bishop. But S. Gregorie, euen in the selfe same sentence that M. Harding hath heere so hastily broken off, saith: Peter himselfe being the Apostle of Christ, yet was not called the Vniuersall Apostle. And would M. Harding haue the World beleeue, that the Popes power is greater, and more vniuersall, than S. Peters? These words, M. Harding thought good to nip off in the midst. Such is his dealing in the allegation of the Ancient Fathers. If I list to vse his owne termes, I might well call this, Foisting, or Cogging, or, I know not what. Certainly the Holy Fathers, in the Councell of Constantinople, say thus: Non conuenit Orthodoxis, ita circumtruncatas Sanctorum Patrum voces deflorare. Hæreticorum potiùs hoc proprium est: It is not meet for Catholike men, thus to chop and to pare the sayings of the holy Fathers. It is rather the very propertie of Heretikes.

Concil. Constãtinopol. 8. Action. 8.

M. Harding will say, Gregorie misliked this name of Vniuersall Bishop, only in Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople, that so ambitiously and so greedily sought for it: and yet neuertheless claimed the same vnto himselfe, as a title only belonging to the See of Rome: and that we therefore doe wrongfully racke S. Gregorie, forcing his words otherwise than he euer meant. For answer hereunto, it shall behoue vs to consider both what S. Gregorie hath written in generall of this title, and also what speciall claime he hath laid vnto it for himselfe.

Gregor. Lib. 6. Epist. 30.

Thus therefore generally he writeth of it: Ego fidenter dico, Quisquis se Vniuersalem Sacerdotem vocat, vel vocari desiderat, in elatione sua Antichristum præcurrit, quia superbiendo se cæteris præponit: I speake it boldly, Whosoeuer calleth himselfe Vniuersall Bishop, or desireth so to be called, is in his pride the Forerunner of Antichrist, because in his pride hee setteth himselfe before others.

Gregor. Lib. 4. Epist. 34.

Hac in re à fratre & consacerdote meo contra Euangelicam sententiam, &c. Heerein my brother and fellow Bishop doth against the meaning of the Gospell, against S. Peter the Apostle, against all Churches, and against the ordinance of the Canons. In this pride of his, what other thing is there tokened, but that the time of Antichrist is euen at hand? For he followeth him, that despising the equalitie of ioy among the Angels, laboured to breake vp to the top of singularity, saying thus, I will aduance my throne aboue the starres of Heauen: I will sit in the mount of the Testament, euen in the corners of the North: I will get mee vp aboue the light of the clouds, and will be like vnto the highest. Againe: Rex superbiæ in foribus est, &c. The King of pride is euen

Esai 14.

Gregor. Lib. 4. Epist. 38. Sacerdotum est paratus exercitus.

in the Gates: and, a horrible thing to speake, an army of Priests is made ready. For now they play the Souldiers, and beare their heads on high, that were ordeined to be Captaines of humility.

Ita in manuscriptis, Melius quàm exitus.

Againe: I would haue all men to be great and honourable, so that their honour be no derogation to the honour of God. For whoso will be honoured against God, shall not be honourable vnto me. Againe: Neither may you say, that the vsing of this Title is nothing: For if we beare this matter quietly, we ouerthrow the Faith of the whole Church. The agreeing vnto this wicked Title, is the losing of the Faith. Thus therefore S. Gregorie iudgeth generally of the name of Vniuersall Bishop; which name notwithstanding the Bishops of Rome haue sithence chosen, and taken to themselues, that is to say, That it is vaine and hurtfull: The confusion, the poison, and vtter and vniuersall destruction of the Church: The corruption and losing the Faith: Against the holy Canons: Against S. Peter the Apostle: Against the very sense and meaning of the Gospell: Against all the Churches of God, and against God himselfe: That neuer good or holy man would vse such Titles: That whosoeuer vseth them, in so doing, followeth Lucifer, and is the very Forerunner and Messenger of Antichrist.

Gregor. Lib. 6. Epist. 28.
Gregor. Lib. 6. Epist. 24.
Gregor. Lib. 4. Epist. 39.

Perhaps M. Harding will say, this name belonged peculiarly and only to the Bishop of Rome: and therefore Gregorie reproued Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople, for that he so presumptuously, and by way of intrusion, claimed the same as a right and interest, that was not his. But S. Gregory calleth the same title of Vniuersall Bishop, [a] Typhum Superbiæ, [b] Nomen nouum, [c] Vocabulum temerarium, Stultum, [d] Superbum, Pompaticum, [e] Peruersum, [f] Superstitiosum, Profanum, [g] Scelestum, [h] Nomen erroris, [i] Nomen singularitatis, [k] Nomen vanitatis, [l] Nomen Hypocriseos, [m] Nomen Blasphemiæ: That is to say, A puffe of Arrogancie, A new name, A Rash, a Foolish, a Proud, a Pompous, a Peruerse, a Superstitious, an Vngodly, and a Wicked Title, A name, of Errour, a name of Singularitie, a name of Vanitie, a name of Hypocrisie, and a name of Blasphemie. And doth M. Harding thinke, or would he haue the World beleeue, that S. Gregorie would euer take these names and titles from Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople, to the intent to lay them vpon his owne See of Rome? Or is it likely, that M. Harding knoweth S. Gregories minde better than euer S. Gregorie knew it himselfe? Verily, S. Gregorie not onely misliketh these Titles in others, but also disclaimeth the same from himselfe, and from his

[a] Lib. 6. Ep. 2.
[b] Li. 4. Ep. 32.
[c] Li. 4. Ep. 38.
[d] Li. 4. Ep. 32.
[e] Li. 4. Ep. 38.
[f] Li. 6. Ep. 24.
[g] Li. 4. Ep. 39.
[h] Li. 4. Ep. 38.
[i] Li. 4. Ep. 32.
[k] Li. 4. Ep. 39.
[l] Li. 4. Ep. 39.
[m] Li. 4. Ep. 39.

his Sée of Rome for euer. For thus he writeth, and his words be plaine: Nullus Romanorum Pontificum hoc Singularitatis nomen assumpsit: None of the Bishops of Rome euer receiued this name of singularitie. Nullus decessorum meorum hoc tam profano vocabulo vti consensit: None of my Predecessours euer consented to vse this vngodly name. Nos hunc honorem nolumus oblatum suscipere: We, being Bishops of Rome, will not take this honour being offered vnto vs. Greg.li.4.ep. 32. Greg.li.4.ep. 36.

And the reason that hée forceth against the Bishop of Constantinople, may serue aswell against the Bishop of Rome. For thus he saith: Quid tu Christo Vniuersalis Ecclesiæ Capiti, in extremi iudicij dicturus es examine, qui cuncta eius membra tibimet conaris Vniuersalis appellatione supponere? What answer wilt thou make vnto Christ, that indeed is the Head of the Vniuersall Church, at the triall of the last Iudgement, that thus goest about vnder the name of Vniuersall Bishop, to subdue all his members vnto thee? This is the very definition of an Antichristian Vniuersall Bishop. Thus the Bishop of Rome attempteth to subdue the whole Church of God, and all the members of Christ vnto himselfe. Therefore by S. Gregories iudgement, he is the Forerunner of Antichrist. And writing vnto Eulogius the Patriarke of Alexandria, he vseth these words: Sanctitas vestra mihi sic loquitur, Sicut iussistis: Quod verbum Iussionis, Peto, à meo auditu remouete. Quia scio quis sim, & qui sitis: Loco mihi fratres estis: moribus patres: Your holinesse writeth thus vnto me, As you commanded. This word of Commanding, I beseech you take away from my hearing. For I know both what I am, and also what you are. In place (or dignitie) ye are my brethren, in life and maners, ye are my Fathers. Greg.li.7. Epist.30.

Againe he saith: Ecce in præfatione Epistolæ, &c. Behold euen in the very preface of the Epistle that you sent vnto me, you haue written the name of that Presumptuous title, calling me the Vniuersall Pope, notwithstanding I haue forbidden it. I beseech your Holinesse to doe it no more. For you doe defraud your selfe, when you giue another more, than reason would. Ibidem.

The selfe same meaning M. Harding might haue found twice written, euen in the same place of S. Gregorie that he heere alleageth, if it had pleased him to consider, either what went before, or else what followed immediately after. Before, hée writeth thus: Non mea causa, sed Dei est: Nec solus ego, sed tota turbatur Ecclesia. Quia piæ Leges: quia venerandæ Synodi: quia ipsa Domini nostri Iesu Christi mandata Superbi atque Pompatici cuiusdam sermonis inuentione turbantur: It is Gods cause, it is not mine: Neither only I, but also the whole Church is troubled. For both the godly Lawes, and the reuerend Councels, and the very commandements of our Lord Iesus Christ, are combred with the deuice of this proud pompous title. Gregor.li.4. Epist.32.

Immediately after it followeth thus: Nunquid ego in hac re pijssime Domine propriam causam defendo? O my most gratious Soueraigne, doe I heerein defend mine owne right? By these it may appeare, that S. Gregory being Bishop of Rome, would not suffer the name of Vniuersall Bishop to be giuen, neither to any other Bishop, nor to himselfe.

And whereas S. Gregorie saith: The charge and chiefrie of the whole Church is committed vnto Peter, in the sense it is spoken in, we denie it not. S. Paul likewise saith of himselfe in like sense: Incumbit mihi quotidiana cura omnium Ecclesiarum: There lieth vpon me the daily charge of all Churches. And further saith: I reckon my selfe to be nothing inferiour in trauell to the highest Apostles. And will M. Harding hereof reason thus? 2.Cor.11. 1.Cor.11.

Peter had the charge of the whole Church:
Ergo, The Pope is an Vniuersall Bishop.

Certainly, S. Gregory saith: Peter himselfe, notwithstanding he receiued the whole charge, yet is he not called the Vniuersall Apostle. And can the Pope be that thing, that S. Peter himselfe could not be? Gregor.li.4. Epist.32. Tamen Vniuersalis Apostolus non vocatur.

S Gregorie driueth his reason thus: If this title of Vniuersalitie might belong to any man, it should chiefly belong vnto S. Peter: But it belongeth not vnto S. Peter: Therefore it can belong to no man.

Hereby it is plaine, that the Bishop of Rome challengeth this day a title that S. Peter neuer had; that no holy nor godly man would euer take vpon him, that S. Gregorie vtterly refused, and detested, and called blasphemie. And yet will he seeme to maintaine his estate by the authoritie of this holy Father. If S. Gregorie were now aliue, he would crie out as he did to the Emperour Mauritius: O Tempora! O Mores! O what a time is this! O what maners are these! Thus much is M. Harding furthered by the authority of S. Gregory. Gregor.li.4. Epist.32.

The 94. vntruth. For S. Cyprian speaketh these words of euery seuerall Bishop, not only of the Bishop of Rome.

The 95. vntruth, standing in the manifest corruption & falsifying of S. Cyprian.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuision.

S Cyprian declaring the contempt of the (94) high Priest Christ Vicar in Earth, to bee cause of Schismes and Heresies, writeth thus to Cornelius Pope and Martyr; Neque enim aliunde Hæreses obortæ sunt, &c. Neither haue Heresies or Schismes risen of any other occasion, than of that the Priest of God is not obeied, and that one Priest for the time in the Church, and one Iudge for the time in stead of Christ, is not thought vpon. To whom if the whole brotherhood (95) (that is the whole number of Christian people which bee brethren together, and were so called in the Primitiue Church) would be obedient according to Gods teachings;

Secundum Ma. gistra diuina.

One Bishop.

chings, then no man would make adoe against the College of Priests; no man would make himselfe Iudge, nor of the Bishop now, but of God, after Gods iudgement, after the fauour of the people declared by their voices at the election, after the consent of his fellow Bishops. No man through breach of vnitie and strife, would diuide the Church of Christ; no man standing in his owne conceit, and swelling with pride, would set vp by himselfe abroad, without the Church, a new Heresie.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

If M. Hardings cause were true, hee would not auouch it with such vntruth, and so often corruption of the holy Fathers. If S. Cyprian writing this Epistle to Cornelius the Bishop of Rome, once name him either the High Priest: Or Christs Vicar Generall in earth: Or Vniuersall Bishop: Or Head of the Vniuersall Church: Or say, that the whole brotherhood of all Christian people ought to bee obedient vnto him, as M. Harding vntruly and contrarie to his owne knowledge expoundeth it: Or if either his words or his purpose of writing may seeme any way to lead to that end; then may M. Harding seeme to haue some honest colour for his defense. Otherwise we may iustly say, hee racketh the Doctours, and forceth them to speake what him listeth to serue his turne.

First, it is certaine, that in all that Epistle, S. Cyprian neuer gaue vnto Cornelius any such ambitious title, but only calleth him by the name of Brother. For thus hee saluteth him: Cyprian vnto his Brother Cornelius sendeth greeting: and maketh his entrie in this wise: Deare Brother, I haue read your Letters. Thus S. Cyprian being Bishop of Carthage claimeth brotherhood and equalitie with the Pope. One speciall occasion of his writing vnto Cornelius, was this amongst others: Cornelius being Bishop of Rome, and hauing excommunicate certaine notorious wicked men, and afterward being threatned, and ill vsed at their hands, began to faint, and to bee wearie of his office. S. Cyprian hearing thereof, wrote comfortably vnto him, and willed him in any wise to proceede, and to deale boldly, and not to yeeld, considering it was Gods cause, and not his owne. Among other words hee saith thus: Christiani non vltrà aut durare, aut esse possumus, si ad hoc ventum est, vt perditorum minas & insidias pertimescamus: Wee cannot longer continue or bee Christian men, if wee being Bishops, once begin to shrinke at the threats and fetches of the wicked.

Cyprian. li. 2. Epist. 3.

Vpon occasion hereof hee sheweth, what hurt and confusion of Sects and Schismes, insueth in any Prouince or Dioceese, where as the Bishops Authoritie, and Ecclesiasticall Discipline is despised. For euery Bishop (saith S. Cyprian) within his owne Diocesse, is the Priest of God, and for his time is a Iudge appointed in the place of Christ: and as the Church is one, so ought hee likewise to bee but one. And thus hee writeth generally of the authoritie of all Bishops, and not onely of the authoritie of the Bishop of Rome. And notwithstanding he directeth his Epistle only to Cornelius, yet are all his reasons generall, and touch both himselfe being Bishop of Carthage, and also all other Bishops whatsoeuer.

Now therefore to draw that thing by violence to one onely Bishop, that is generally spoken of all Bishops, it is a guilefull fetch to mislead the Reader, and no simple or plaine dealing. But M. Harding seemeth to ground his errour, vpon the mistaking of these words of S. Cyprian: Vnus Sacerdos, and Fraternitas vniuersa: That is, One Bishop, and The whole Brotherhood. For whereas S. Cyprian saith, There must bee one Bishop in a Church, hee imagineth there must bee one Bishop to rule ouer the whole Vniuersall Church.

The occasion of M. Hardings errour.

And whereas againe S. Cyprian saith: The whole Brotherhood must obey one Bishop, hee gathereth that all Christian people throughout the whole World, which hee vntruly calleth, The whole Brotherhood, must bee obedient vnto one Vniuersall Bishop. And thus hee buildeth one errour vpon another. But mistaking of the Doctour maketh no sufficient proose.

It may soone appeare, S. Cyprian meant, that for the auoiding of Schismes and diuisions, there ought to bee onely one Bishop within one Dioceese, and not one Bishop to rule euer all the World. For thus hee expoundeth his owne meaning: Cùm post primum esse non possit quisquam, qui post vnum, qui solus esse debet, factus est, iam non secundus ille, sed nullus est: Seeing that after the first Bishop is chosen, there can bee none other, whoso is made Bishop after that one, which must needs be alone, is now not the second Bishop, but indeed is no Bishop.

7. qu. 1. Factus est.

So likewise, when the Heretike Nouatus had by wicked practise diuided the people of Rome into Sects, and had solemnly sworne them that gaue eare vnto him, that they should no more returne vnto Cornelius the Bishop there, and so had rent one Bishopricke into two, and made two Bishops in one Citie: Cornelius complaining thereof vnto vnto Fabius the Bishop of Antioch, and informing him of the same, writeth thus vnto him: Novatus nescit, vnum Episcopum in Catholica Ecclesia esse debere: Novatus knoweth not, that there ought to be but one Bishop in a Catholike Church: not meaning thereby the whole vniuersall Church throughout the world, but onely his owne particular Church of Rome.

The vniuersall Brotherhood.

So when Chrysostome the Bishop of Constantinople, saw Sisinius beare himselfe as Bishop within the same Citie, he said vnto him, One Citie may not haue two Bishops. Eusebius, li. 6. ca. 42.

So likewise S. Hierome saith, that notwithstanding the power of all Priests by the authoritie of Gods word be one and equall, yet men by policie to auoid contention, appointed one Priest in euery City, to order and to direct his brethren. Socrates li. 6. ca. 22.

Thus was the vnitie of the whole Church preserued: Thus were all Churches as one Church, and all Bishops as one Bishop. For who so dissented from one, dissented from all. So saith S. Cyprian: Ecclesia cohærentium sibi inuicem Sacerdotum glutino copulatur: The Church is coupled and ioined in one, by consent of Bishops agreeing together. Hieronym. in epist. ad Titum ca. 1.

Likewise againe he saith: Hanc vnitatem firmiter tenere, & vendicare debemus, maxime Episcopi, qui in Ecclesia præsidemus: vt Episcopatum quoque ipsum vnum, & indiuisum probemus: This vnitie must we keepe and defend, specially the Bishops and beare rule in the Church, that we may declare indeed, that our Bishopricke is one, and not diuided. Cyprian. li. 4. Epist. 9. And therefore S. Hierome saith: Episcopi nouerint in communi debere se Ecclesiam regere: Let Bishops vnderstand, that they ought to gouerne the Church in common, or, as all in one. Cyprian. de simplicitate Prælatorum. Hieronym. ad Titum, ca. 1.

In this sense is euery Bishop for his time, as S. Cyprian saith, in the stead of Christ, and to euery such, Christ saith: * He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that despiseth you, despiseth mee. And therefore Ignatius saith: The Bishop in his Church is the forme of God the Father of all: and so much as is possible, resembleth (in his office) Christ our God. For this cause S. Cyprian saith: Heereof spring Schismes and Heresies, for that the Priest of God (in euery seuerall Diocesse) is not obeied. As likewise againe he saith to like purpose: Qui cum Episcopo non sunt, in Ecclesia non sunt: They that bee not with the Bishop, bee not in the Church. So likewise Ignatius: They that be of Christ, are with the Bishop. * Luke 10. Ignatius ad Trallianos. τὸ πᾶν ὡς τῶν ὅλων τύπος. Cyprian. li. 1. Epist. 3. Cyprian li. 4. Epist. 9. Ignat. ad Philadelphien. ὅσοι γάρ εἰσιν ἐν τῷ θεῷ καὶ μετὰ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου εἰσίν.

Thus S. Cyprian spake these words generally of the authoritie of all Bishops in their seuerall Dioceses, and not of any speciall authoritie of the Bishop of Rome, as it is here vntruly affirmed by M. Harding.

But he will replie, S. Cyprian saith, Vniuersa fraternitas, that is, The whole Brotherhood ought to be obedient to that one Bishop. And that whole brotherhood must nedes be the whole company of all Christian people. Notwithstanding this exposition seeme very large, yet if S. Cyprian himselfe had not opened his owne meaning otherwise, perhaps some man either of simplicitie or of ignorance might so take it. But S. Cyprian, that doubtlesse best knew his owne minde, vnderstandeth these words, Fraternitas vniuersa, not of all the vniuersall company of all Christian people throughout all the World, as M. Harding doth, but of the whole brotherhood within euery seuerall and particular Diocese. For thus he writeth in the next Epistle following: Ferè per prouincias vniuersas tenetur, vt ad ordinationes ritè celebrandas, ad eam plebem cui præpositus ordinatur, Episcopi eiusdem prouinciæ proximi quique conueniant, & Episcopus deligatur plebe præsente, &c. Quod & apud nos factum vidimus in Sabini Collegæ nostri ordinatione: vt de vniuersæ fraternitatis suffragio Episcopatus ei deferretur: This order is in maner kept in all Prouinces, that vnto the due ordering or installing of a Bishop, the Bishops of the same prouince that dwell nerest come together to the people of that Citie, vnto which a new Bishop is appointed: and that the Bishop be chosen in the presence of the people. Which thing wee saw done in the Election and ordering of our fellow Bishop Sabinus, that the Bishopricke was bestowed vpon him by the consent and voices of the whole brotherhood. Here vniuersa fraternitas, vndoubtedly is vsed for the whole faithfull companie of one Citie. In like maner he writeth vnto Cornelius of certaine that were returned from Schismes and Errours, vnto the vnitie of the Church: Meritò illos reuertentes, summo gaudio & Clerus, & plebis fraternitas omnis excepit: When they came againe, both the Clergie and the whole brotherhood of the people, worthily receiued them with great ioy. So likewise the Emperour Honorius writeth vnto Bonifacius: If two Bishops through ambition and contention happen to bee chosen, Wee will, that neither of them bee allowed as Bishop: But that hee onely remaine in the Apostolike See, whom out of the number of the Clergie, godly discretion, and the consent of the whole brotherhood shall chuse by a new Election. Cyprian. lib. 2. Epist. 12. Rescriptum Honorij ad Bonifacium. Quem vniuersitatis consensus elegerit.

In these places M. Harding cannot denie but these words, Vniuersa fraternitas, Omnis fraternitas, and Vniuersitatis consensus, must nedes be taken for one whole particular Brotherhood within one Prouince or Diocese. In the same sense Origen saith: Qui vocatur ad Episcopatum, vocatur ad seruitutem Totius Ecclesiæ: He that is called vnto a Bishopricke, Origenes in Esaiam, hom. 6.

The vniuerſall Brotherhood.

is called vnto the ſeruice of the Whole Church. Likewiſe againe he ſaith: Plus à me exigitur, quàm à Diacono: plus à Diacono, quàm à Laico: Qui verò Totius Eccleſiæ arcem obtinet, pro Omni Eccleſia reddet rationem: There is more required of me (being a Prieſt) than of a Deacon: more of a Deacon, than of one of the people: But he that keepeth the watch or Caſtle of the Whole Church (which is euery Biſhop in his Dioceſſe) ſhall yeeld a reckoning for the whole.

In theſe places euery particular Church is called the Whole Church. And therefore Ignatius ſaith: Quid aliud eſt Epiſcopus, quàm quidam obtinens principatum & poteſtatem ſuprà omnes? What is a Biſhop, but one hauing all rule and power ouer all?

Origen. in Hieremi. hom. 7.

Ignatius ad Trallianos. τί ἐστιν ἐπίσκοπος ἀλλ', ἢ πάσης ἐξουσίας καὶ πάσης κτίσεως κράτος.

Theſe things well weighed, beſides the manifeſt corruption and falſifying of S. Cyprians both words and minde, I doubt not, but the weakneſſe alſo of M. Hardings reaſon may ſone appeare. For vpon this place of S. Cyprian vntruly reported, hee would ſeeme to reaſon thus: There muſt be one Biſhop in one Church or Dioceſſe; Ergo, There muſt be one Biſhop ouer all the World. Or thus: The whole Brotherhood in euery Dioceſſe ought to hearken only to one Biſhop; Ergo, All Chriſtian people thorowout the World, ought to bee in ſubiection to the Biſhop of Rome.

Theſe arguments bewray themſelues, and therefore néed no further opening.

All this notwithſtanding, if M. Harding will ſay, S. Cyprians words muſt néeds import one Vniuerſall Biſhop, and the ſame of neceſſitie muſt be the Biſhop of Rome; let him then vouchſafe to reade the Epiſtle that the ſame S. Cyprian wrote vnto Florentius Pupianus. There ſhall hee finde, that S. Cyprian euen in like ſorme and order, ſpeaketh theſe ſelfe ſame words of himſelfe, being as M. Harding knoweth, the Biſhop of Carthage in Aphrica, and not the Biſhop of Rome. His words be theſe: Vnde Schiſmata & Hæreſes obortæ ſunt, & oriuntur, niſi dum Epiſcopus, qui vnus eſt, & Eccleſiæ præeſt, ſuperba quorundam præſumptione contemnitur, & homo dignatione Dei honoratus, ab hominibus indignis iudicatur? Whereſence haue Schiſmes and Hereſies ſprung heeretofore, and whereof ſpring they now, but that the Biſhop, which is one and gouerneth the Church, by the preſumptuous diſdaine of certaine is deſpiſed, and a man preferred by Gods allowance, is examined and iudged by vnworthy men. All this S. Cyprian ſpeaketh plainly, and namely of himſelfe, being Biſhop of Carthage. Therefore it is great ouerſight to force the ſame only to the Biſhop of Rome, and ſtoutly to ſay, It can be applied vnto none other.

Cyprian. lib. 4. Epiſt. 9.

M. Harding. The 6. Diuiſion.

Of all other authorities, that of Athanaſius and of the Biſhops of Ægypt and Lybia gathered together in a Synod at Alexandria, is to be regarded: Who making humble ſute to Felix then Biſhop of Rome, for aid and ſuccour againſt the Arians thorow the whole Epiſtle, confeſſing the ſupreme authoritie of that Apoſtolike See, vtter theſe very words; Veſtræ Apoſtolicæ Sedis implorantes auxilium, &c. Wee humbly beſeech you of the helpe of your Apoſtolike See. Becauſe (as verily wee beleeue) God hath not deſpiſed the praiers of his ſeruants, offered vp to him with teares, but hath conſtituted and placed you and your predeceſſours, who were Apoſtolike Prelates in the higheſt tower or ſupreme ſtate, and commanded them to haue cure and charge of all Churches, to the intent you helpe and ſuccour vs, and that defending vs (as to whom iudgement of Biſhops is committed) you forſlow not through negligence, to deliuer vs from our enemies.

Athanaſius forged.

In primam Concilium. In ſummitate arcis conſtitui.

Now if the Apoſtolike Church of Rome hath obtained the Primacie and preeminence of power ouer all Churches, and ouer the whole flocke of Chriſtian people, of our Lord and Sauiour himſelfe, as Anacletus ſaith: if it be euident to all that know the Goſpell, that the cure and charge of the whole Church hath been committed to the holy Apoſtle Peter, Prince of all the Apoſtles, by the word of our Lord, as Gregorie witneſſeth: if the whole Brotherhood (that is to ſay, all Chriſtian folke) ought to obey the one high Prieſt or Biſhop of God, and the one Iudge that is Chriſts Vicar, or in ſtead of Chriſt for the time, according to the precepts and teachings of God, as Cyprian writeth: if it be God that hath placed and ordained the Biſhop of Rome in the higheſt ſtate of the Church, as Athanaſius, with all the Fathers of that Alexandrine Councell, recordeth: if this, I ſay, be true, then is it eaſily ſeene, vpon how good ground this doctrine ſtandeth, whereby it is affirmed, that the Biſhop of Rome his primacie hath his force by Gods Law, and not only by mans Law, much leſſe by vniuſt vſurpation. The Scriptures by which aſwell theſe, as all other holy and learned Fathers were led to acknowledge and confeſſe the Primacie of Peter and his Succeſſours, were partly ſuch as Anacletus and Gregorie heere allegeth, and Cyprian meaneth; as it appeareth by his third treatiſe, De ſimplicitate Prælatorum, and ſundrie moe of the New Teſtament, as to the learned is knowen: of which to treat heere largely and pithily, as the weight of the matter requireth, at this time I haue no leiſure; neither if I had, yet might I conueniently performe it in this treatiſe, which otherwiſe will amount to a ſufficient bigneſſe, and that matter thorowly handled will fill a right great volume. Wherefore, referring the Readers to the credit of theſe worthie Fathers, who ſo vnderſtood the Scriptures, as thereof they were perſwaded the Primacie to be attributed to Peters ſucceſſour by God himſelfe, I will proceed keeping my prefixed order.

Anacletus forged.

S. Gregorie nipped. For the next words immediately following are theſe; Tamen Petrus Vniuerſalis Apoſtolus non vocatur.

S. Cyprians minde twice falſified in one place.

The 96. vntruth, ioined with follie, as ſhall appeare.

Whereas the preeminence of power and authority, which to the Biſhop of Rome by ſpeciall and ſingular priuilege God hath granted, is commended to the World by many and ſundry Councels, for auoiding of tediouſneſſe, I will rehearſe the teſtimonies of a few. Among the Canons made by three hundred and eighteene Biſhops at the Nicene Councell, which were in number 70. and (96) all burnt by Heretikes in the Eaſt Church, ſaue xx. and yet the whole number (97) was kept diligently in the Church of Rome in the originall it ſelfe, ſent to Sylueſter the Biſhop there from the Councell, ſubſcribed with the ſaid 318. Fa-

Vide Trauiſ. Turrianum, li. 3. diſcuſſ. 6. num.

The 97. vntruth. For there was no ſuch originall kept in the Church of Rome.

thers

thers hands, the 44. Canon which is of the power of the Patriarke, ouer the Metropolitanes and Biſhops, and of the Metropolitane ouer Biſhops, in the end hath this Decree; Vt autem cunctis ditionis ſuæ nationibus, &c. As the Patriarke beareth rule ouer all Nations of his iuriſdiction, and giueth Lawes to them; and as Peter Chriſts Vicar, at the beginning ſet in authoritie ouer Religion, ouer the Churches, and ouer all other things pertaining to Chriſt, was (98) Maſter and Ruler of Chriſtian Princes, Prouinces, and of all Nations: ſo he whoſe Principalitie or Chiefrie is at Rome, like vnto Peter, and equall in authoritie, obtaineth the rule and ſoueraignte ouer all Patriarkes. After a few words it followeth there; If any man repine againſt this Statute, or dare reſiſt it, by the Decree of the whole Councell he is accurſed.

Athanaſius forged.

The 98. vntruth. For there was no Prince or Prouince Chriſtned in S. Peters time.

Iulius that worthy Biſhop of Rome, not long after the Councell of Nice, in his Epiſtle that hee wrote to the 90. Arian Biſhops, aſſembled in the Councell at Antioch againſt Athanaſius Biſhop of Alexandria, reprooueth them for their vniuſt treating of him, ſaith of the Canons of the Nicene Councell, then freſh in their remembrance, that they command, Non debere præter ſententiam Romani Pontificis vllo modo Concilia celebrari, nec Epiſcopos damnari: That without the authority of the Biſhop of Rome, neither Councels ought to be kept, nor Biſhops condemned. Againe, that nothing be decreed without the Biſhop of Rome; Cuncta & maiora Eccleſiarum negotia, tam ab ipſo Domino, quàm ab omnibus vniuerſorum Conciliorum fratribus, ſpeciali priuilegio contraditta ſunt: To whom theſe and other the weighty matters of the Churches bee committed by ſpeciall priuilege, as well by our Lord himſelfe, as by all our Brethren of the whole vniuerſall Councels. Among other principall points which he reciteth in that Epiſtle of the Nicene Councels Canons, this is one; Vt omnes Epiſcopi, &c. That all Biſhops who ſuſtaine wrong, in weighty cauſes, ſo often as need ſhall require, make their appeale freely to the See Apoſtolike, and flee to it for ſuccour, as to their Mother, that from thence they may be charitably ſuſtained, defended and deliuered. To the diſpoſition of which See, the ancient authority of the Apoſtles and their Succeſſours, and of the Canons, hath reſerued all weighty or great Eccleſiaſticall cauſes and iudgements of Biſhops.

Athanaſius and the whole company of Biſhops of Ægypt, Thebaida and Lybia, aſſembled together in Councell at Alexandria, complaining in their Epiſtle to Felix the Pope, of great iniuries and griefes they ſuſtained at the Arians; allegeth the determination of the Nicence Councell touching the ſupreme authority and power of that See Apoſtolike ouer all other Biſhops: Similiter & à ſupradictis Patribus eſt definitum conſonanter, &c. Likewiſe (ſay they) it hath beene determined by common aſſent of the aforeſaid Fathers (of Nice) that if any of the Biſhops ſuſpect the Metropolitane, or their fellow Biſhops of the ſame Prouince, or the Iudges, that then they make their appeale to your holy See of Rome, to whom by our Lord himſelfe power to binde and looſe, by ſpeciall priuilege aboue other hath beene granted. Thus much alleged out of the Canons of the Nicene Councell, gathered partly out of Iulius Epiſtle, who wrote to them that were preſent at the making of them, (which taketh away all ſuſpition of vntruth) and partly out of Athanaſius and others, that were a great part of the ſame Councell.

Matthæ. 16.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

A ſcarcrow ſtuft with ſtraw, and ſet vpright, may ſeeme a farre off to bee a man. Euen ſo a forger of lies and fables, prickt vp in the apparell of ancient names, may ſeeme to the ignorant an old Catholike Father. No marueil though this authoritie like M. Harding beſt aboue all others: for it is moſt vaine and ſhameleſſe aboue all others: and therefore meeteſt to helpe vp a ſhameleſſe Doctrine. It is no new practiſe in the Church of Rome, to forge euidence in the name of old Fathers, as, God willing, hereafter it ſhall better appeare. But as for this Epiſtle and certaine others that are carried about vnder the name of that godly Biſhop Athanaſius, I will only rip vp the ſtuffing, and open ſome part of the contents of them, and ſo will not refuſe M. Harding himſelfe to be the Iudge.

Firſt, that they were neuer written in Greeke, and therefore not by Athanaſius, it may appeare by ſundry tokens, and namely by the alluſion of theſe two Latine words, Vertex, and Verturtur: Romana Sedes eſt ſacer vertex, in quo omnes verturtur: The Latine is rude and barbarous, and many times vtterly void of ſenſe. The manner of vtterance is childiſh, and babling, emptie of matter, and full of words without meaſure. The ſubſtance of the whole is nothing elſe but flattering and aduancing of the See of Rome, ſtarted vp, and ſet out with lies without ſhame.

Eſay 2. Miche. 4: Matrix Religionis. . . Nicephor. li. 2. ca. 40. Euſeb. lib. 2. ca. 24. Nicephor. li. 2. ca. 43. Auguſtin. epiſt. 170. & epiſt. 178. Græcia, vnde Fides orta eſt. Concil. Carthaginen. 6.

The Author hereof ſpeaking of the Church of Rome, ſaith: Inde Eccleſiæ ſumpſere Prædicationis exordium: From Rome the Churches receiued the firſt preaching of the Goſpell. But God himſelfe ſaith: Ex Sione exibit Lex, & Verbum Domini de Hieruſalem: From Sion the Law ſhall proceed, and the word of the Lord from Hieruſalem. And therefore Tertullian calleth Hieruſalem, The Mother of Religion. And Nicephorus ſaith, that Simon Zelotes ran ouer all Aphrica, and preached the Goſpell. Euſebius ſaith, that S. Marke the Euangeliſt firſt erected Congregations, and taught the Goſpell at Alexandria. And Nicephorus ſaith further, that S. Marke went preaching ouer all Egypt, and Lybia, and Cyrene, and Pentapolis, and the whole Country of Barbary, in the time of the Emperour Tiberius, which was at the leaſt ſix yeeres before Peter came to Rome. S. Auguſtine ſaith, the Religion of Chriſt was firſt brought into Aphrica out of Græcia, and not from Rome. Therefore that M. Hardings Athanaſius ſaith, the Church receiued from Rome the firſt preaching of the Goſpell, is an open flattery, and a manifeſt vntruth.

Further this Author ſaith, That in all cauſes there lay appeales from the Metropolitane to the Biſhop of Rome: and that by the authoritie of the Nicene Councell. But that thing in the Councell of Carthage, S. Auguſtine being then preſent, was vtterly denied by all the Biſhops ſhops of Aphrica, Numidia, Mauritania, Byzancena, and Tripolis, to the number of two hundred and ſeuentæne, and by the witneſſe of the three Patriarkes of Antiochia, Conſtantinopolis and Alexandria, was found vntrue.

Athanasius forged.

This Authour ſaith: Fuit ſemper veſtræ Sanctæ & Apoſtolicæ Sedi licentia, iniuſtè damnatos vel excommunicatos poteſtatiuè ſua authoritate reſtituere, & ſua eis omnia reddere: Your holy Apoſtolike See had euermore a ſpeciall Prerogatiue by your owne authoritie, and by way of power to releeue men vniuſtly condemned or excommunicate, and to reſtore them to their owne. But it ſhall hereafter appeare, that the Biſhop of Rome at that time had no ſuch power: and that it was not he, that reſtored any man in that caſe by his power, but onely the Emperour.

1.Cor.3. S.Paul ſaith: Other foundation none can be laid, but only that is laid already, which is Chriſt Ieſus. And findeth great fault with the Corinthians that ſaid: I hold of Apollo, I hold of Paul, I hold of Peter. But M.Hardings Athanaſius ſaith: Tu es Petrus, & ſuper fundamentum tuum Eccleſiæ columnæ, hoc eſt, Epiſcopi, ſunt confirmatæ: Thou art Peter, and vpon thy foundation the pillars of the Church, which are the Biſhops, are ſurely ſet. And thus he deuiſeth another foundation beſides Chriſt, and contrarie to S. Pauls Doctrine would haue all the Biſhops of the World to hold of Peter.

But to leaue all other vntruths, wherewith theſe Epiſtles bée ſtuffed full, marke gentle Reader, onely this ouerſight, and thou ſhalt plainely ſée with thine eies, that M. Hardings Doctour is an impudent, and an open lier. For the true Athanaſius himſelfe, of whom wée make no doubt, ſaith, that the Arians at Alexandria burnt the Catholike mens Bookes, and therewithall the Canons of the Councell of Nice, in the time of the Emperour Conſtantius, Iulius being then Biſhop of Rome. Which obſeruation of time appeareth alſo by Socrates in his ſtorie. But M.Hardings Athanaſius is either ſo forgetfull of his lies, or ſo impudent and careleſſe what he ſay, that he maketh pitious complaint of the ſaid burning vnto Marcus, that was Biſhop in Rome before Iulius, and was dead at the leaſt nine yeares before the Canons were burnt. By ſuch Doctours M.Harding vpholdeth the ſtate of Rome.

Athanaſius in epiſtola ad Orthodoxos. Socrat.lib.2. ca.8.

As for Athanaſius himſelfe, he neuer vnderſtood the Biſhop of Rome had any ſuch prerogatiue power, nor neuer named him by greater title, than the Biſhop of Rome. And whereas this Epiſtle alleged in the name of Athanaſius, ſoundeth farre otherwiſe, it is no maruell: For it was dated at Alexandria and made in Rome.

Now if the Decretall Epiſtle which M.Harding hath brought in vnder the name of Anacletus, be nothing elſe but forged euidence, as it is ſufficiently declared: If M.Harding haue vncourteouſly vſed S.Gregory, cutting off his tale in the middeſt, and purpoſelie leauing out thoſe words: Tamen Petrus Vniuerſalis Apoſtolus non vocatur: Yet is not Peter called the Vniuerſall Apoſtle: which was the onely matter that S.Gregory had then in hand. If S.Gregory ſay: None of my Predeceſſours Biſhops of Rome, would euer take vpon him the name of Vniuerſall biſhop. If S.Gregory ſay: It is the puffe of arrogancy: the word of pride: a new, a pompous, a peruerſe, a fooliſh, a raſh, a ſuperſtitious, a profane, an vngodly, and a wicked name: a name of ſingularitie: a name of error: a name of hypocriſie: a name of vanitie, and a name of blaſphemie: and that whoſoeuer calleth himſelfe, or deſireth to be called by that arrogant name, in the pride of his heart is the forerunner of Antichriſt: and that the quiet and indifferent bearing of the ſame is the deſtruction of the Faith of the Vniuerſall Church. If M.Harding haue wittinglie and openly falſified the words of S. Cyprian, and that twice together in one ſentence, as he himſelfe cannot denie: If the Epiſtle that he allegeth vnder the title of Athanaſius, be nothing elſe but a ſhameleſſe counterfet, full of vile flattering and apparant lies; then is this former part hitherto but weakly proued, neither can M.Harding truly ſay, His Doctrine ſtandeth vpon good and ſure ground.

Gregor.li.4. Epiſt.32. Gregor.li.4. Epiſt.36. Gregor.li.6. Epiſt.30. Gregor.li.6. Epiſt.24. Cyprian.li.1. Epiſt.3.

O what lucke hath M.Harding to ſuch authorities, hauing choice, as hée ſaith, of ſo many, and tripping ouer ſo lightly, to ſpéed ſo ill? His Amphilochius lieth at Verona: His Clemens in Candie: His Martiall in a caue vnder ground: His Canon of the Councell of Epheſus againſt Neſtorius was neuer ſéene, and others otherwiſe miſcarried: The Councell of Nice, wherein was the whole ſtay of the Primacie of Rome, is burnt by the Arians, and ſauing only in Rome, no where elſe in the world to be found.

Cyprian.de Ieiunio & Tentatione. Ammianus Marcellin. Socrat.li.4. ca.24. Auguſt.in queſtionib. veteris & noui Teſtamenti, quæſt. 101.

For anſwer hereunto, mée thinketh theſe words ſpoken generally by S. Cyprian, had then, and haue yet a ſpeciall place in the Sée of Rome: Ambitio dormit in ſinu Sacerdotum: Ambition ſleepeth in the boſome of Prieſts. For, to paſſe ouer the great contention that euen at the beginning happened there betwéene Damaſus and Vrſinus, whether of them two ſhould bée Biſhop, in which contention a great number of either part was ſlaine, S. Auguſtine alſo complaineth, that euen the Deacons of Rome in his time, aduanced themſelues farre aboue their eſtate. Theſe be his words: Falcidius, duce ſtultitia, ſtultitia, & Ciuitatis Romanæ iactantia, Diaconos Presbyteris æquare contendit: Falcidius lead by follie, and by the courage of the Cuie of Rome, would haue Deacons to be nothing inferiour vnto Priests. Likewiſe S. Hierome ſaith: The Romans are noted of courteſie, and ſtoutneſſe of minde. And therefore S. Paul gaue this aduertiſement ſpecially vnto them, aboue all others: Noli altum ſapere, ſed time: Be not high minded, but ſtand in awe. Whereforeit is the leſſe to be marueiled, if they haue ſo ambitiouſly at all times attempted dominion ouer others.

The pride of Rome.

Hier. in præfatione ad Galat. Rom. 11.

But M. Harding ſaith, the preeminence of power and authority of the Biſhop of Rome is commended to the World by many and ſundry Councels. Wherein I marueil he alegeth not the Councell of Carthage, of Hippo Regius, and of Aphrica, in which it was decreed thus: Vt primæ Sedis Epiſcopus non appelletur Princeps Sacerdotum, aut Summus Sacerdos, aut aliquid huiuſmodi: ſed tantum primæ Sedis Epiſcopus: That the Biſhop of the firſt See be not called the chiefe of Prieſts, or the higheſt Prieſt, or by any other like name: but onely the Biſhop of the firſt See: Or the Councell of Aphrica, where, touching appeale to Rome, it was ſpecially prouided thus: Si prouocandum putauerint, non prouocent, niſi ad Aphricana Concilia, vel ad Primates Prouinciarum ſuarum. Ad tranſmarina qui putauerit appellandum, à nullo intra Aphricam in Communionem ſuſcipiatur: If they thinke it needfull to appeale from their owne Biſhops, let them not appeale but only vnto Councels to be holden within the Country of Aphrica. But whoſoeuer ſhall thinke it needfull to appeale to the iudgement of any beyond the Sea, (that is, to the Biſhop of Rome) let no man within Aphrica receiue him to his Communion. Why doth M. Harding ſo warily leaue theſe Councels, that be extant, and to be ſeene, the authoritie whereof was neuer doubted of, and allege only a patch of the Councell of Nice, which he himſelfe confeſſed was burnt, and all the Biſhops of the Eaſt part, who are ſuppoſed to haue made it, proteſt openly, vnder their hands and ſeales, it was neuer made? But M. Harding herein doth much like vnto the Arians, that accuſed Athanaſius, who were not aſhamed to bring in the names of certaine men, as being aliue, to witneſſe againſt him; and yet notwithſtanding, charged Athanaſius with the ſame men, that he had ſlaine them.

Con. Carthag. 3. Can. 26.

Concil Hippo. Can. 27.

Concil. Aphrican. Ca. 6.

Concil. Aphrican. Ca. 92.

Synod. Alexandrina aduerſus accuſatores Athanaſij.

Neither doe I ſee wherefore M. Harding ſhould néed in this caſe to leane to the authoritie of any Councell. For his Anacletus thought it better to make men beléeue hée had his ſuperioritie, Not from the Apoſtles, but from Chriſt himſelfe. And Fauſtinus Epiſcopus Potentinus, claiming for the Biſhop of Rome in the Councell of Carthage, and finding himſelfe to haue ſmall hold in this Canon of the Nicene Councell, alleged rather Cuſtome and Preſcription. Theſe be his words: Tractandum eſt cum veſtra beatitudine de Nicenis Canonibus, vt conſeruentur & Conſtituta eorum, & Conſuetudo. Quia aliqua Ordine & Canone tenentur, aliqua Conſuetudine firmata ſunt: We muſt deale with your holineſſe of the Canons of the Councell of Nice, that they may be kept, both the Conſtitutions thereof, and alſo the Cuſtome. For certaine things are holden by Order, and by Canon: and certaine things are made good by Cuſtome. But Pope Nicolas the firſt vtterly reſuſeth, not onely the Councell of Nice, and all other Councels in this behalfe, but alſo the authoritie of Preſcription and Cuſtome. For thus he ſaith: Animaduertendum eſt, quia non Nicena, non denique vlla Synodus quicquam Romanæ contulit Eccleſiæ priuilegij: quæ in Petro nouerat eam totius iura poteſtatis pleniter meruiſſe, & cunctarum Chriſti ouium regimen accepiſſe: Yee muſt conſider, that neither the Councell of Nice, nor any other Councell, euer gaue any priuilege to the Church of Rome. For this Church knoweth, that in Peter ſhe hath fully deſerued the right of all power, and hath attained the gouernment of all the ſheepe of Chriſt.

Anacl. epiſt. 1.

Concil. Carthagin. 6. Ca. 2.

Nicolaus 1. ad Michal. Imperatorem.

But touching the forgerie of this Councell of Nice, the very beginning of the quarrell, and the whole ſtorie ſtandeth thus: One Apiarius a Prieſt of the Church of Sicca in Aphrica, as it appeareth, a very ill man, being iuſtly excommunicate, both by his owne Biſhop, and alſo by a great number of other Biſhops together in the Councell there, appealed from them all vnto Zoſimus then Biſhop of Rome. Zoſimus, without further knowledge of the cauſe, neuer hearing the other partie, pronounced Apiarius to bé innocent, and reſtored him to the Communion. And vnderſtanding there was a Councell gathered in Aphrica touching the ſame, ſent thither Fauſtinus the Biſhop of Potentia, with two other Prieſts of Rome, Philippus and Aſellus, not onely to ſée that the ſaid Apiarius, without any further triall, might bée reſtored vnto his right, but alſo to make plea in the open Councell, that it ſhould bée lawfull for any Prieſt to appeale from his owne Ordinarie, or Metropolitane, or Councell, vnto the Apoſtolike Sée of Rome. The Biſhops of Aphrica anſwered, there was no Law it ſhould bée ſo. Fauſtinus laid forth this Canon of the Councell of Nice, not made by the authoritie of the Biſhops there, but onely deuiſed by the Biſhop of Rome. The Biſhops there, among whom was S. Auguſtine, that famous learned Father, thought it was a forged matter, and therefore ſaid, they would Concil. Carthagin. 6. Ca. 3. Ca. 4.

The Pope a Forger.

would ſend vnto Alexandria, Antioch, and Conſtantinople, for the very Originall Copies of the ſaid Councell, and deſired the Biſhop of Rome to doe the ſame: and ſaid, that in the meane while they would doe as they had done before. Vpon this Meſſage, and returne of the Anſwer with the true authentike Copies, from Cyrillus the Biſhop of Alexandria, and Atticus the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, it appeared plainely vnto the World, that the Canons were corrupted, and that the Pope had falſified that holy Councell: and to the intent to aduance his Apoſtolike See of Rome, had deuiſed Priuileges and Prerogatiues of his owne. Here might M. Harding well beſtow his termes: Here might he truly ſay: The Pope coggeth and foiſteth the die: The Pope bombaſteth the Canons of Councels, and the Decrees of holy Fathers, with his counterfet ſtuffing. The Biſhops in the Councell of Aphrica hauing thus thoroughly examined the truth hereof, wrote vnto Cœleſtinus, being then Biſhop of Rome, in this wiſe: Decreta Nicena, &c. The Decrees of the Councell of Nice haue committed both the inferiour Clerkes, and alſo the Biſhops, vnto their Metropolitanes. For it was diſcreetly and rightly conſidered, that all matters are to be determined in the places where they began, and that no Prouince can lacke the holy Ghoſt, whereby the Biſhops of Chriſt may be able both wiſely to ſee, and alſo conſtantly to maintaine the right: and ſpecially for that it is lawfull for euery man, that ſhall miſlike the diſcretion of his Iudges, to appeale either to a particular Councell within the ſame Realme, or elſe to the Vniuerſall Councell of the whole world: Vnleſſe perchance ſome man will ſay, God is able to inſpire the triall of Iuſtice into one man alone (becauſe hee is Biſhop of Rome) and will not inſpire the ſame into a great number of Biſhops meeting together in Councell. And how may ſuch beyond-ſea-Iudgement be thought good, whereunto the perſons of the witneſſes, which in triall of truth are thought neceſſarie, either for that they bee women, or for the infirmitie of their age, or for many other incident lets, cannot be brought? Now that any ſhould be ſent abroad, as it were, from your holineſſe ſide, wee finde it not decreed in any Councell. As for that you ſent vs lately by our brother Fauſtinus, as part of the Councell of Nice, we muſt do you to wit, that in the true Councels, which we haue receiued from our holy fellow-biſhop Cyrillus of Alexandria, and the Reuerend Father Atticus the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, taken out of the very Originals, it cannot be found. And ſend you not any your Clerkes hither to execute Iuſtice at any mans requeſt, leſt we ſeeme to bring the ſmoakie puffe of the world into the Church of Chriſt. Thus farre the words of the Councell.

They would not thus haue done if they had thought all the Originals and Copies had beene burnt.

Ca. 7. Concil. Aphrican. ca. 102.

Concil. Aphrican. ca. 105.

The Pope taken in manifeſt forgerie.

Fumoſum typhum.

The Biſhop of Rome, when he ſaw he was taken with the maner, and found an open Falſarie, for that the Canons of his making diſagreed from the very Originals, thought it good policie, to ſay, the Originals were burnt by the Arians, and ſo no true Copie now remaining, but his only. And therefore he imagined a Letter to be written in the name of Athanaſius, and other Biſhops of Ægypt, vnto Marcus the Biſhop of Rome, wherein they beſought him a Copie of the Nicene Councell, for that all their Bookes were vtterly deſtroied. But this ſhift was too ſimple. For it were hard for M. Harding to ſhew, what helpe Athanaſius could haue found in any of thoſe Canons, that are now preſumed to bee burnt, wherewith either to relaxe himſelfe in that caſe, or elſe to moleſt and grieue his aduerſaries.

But both Iulius the Biſhop of Rome, and alſo Athanaſius the Biſhop of Alexandria, make mention heereof. Therefore there is no cauſe (ſaith M. Harding) why this matter ſhould bee ſuſpected of any vntruth. This remouing of ſuſpicion, I know not how, ſæmeth ſomewhat to increaſe ſuſpicion. If there were not a ſore, what ſhould it thus need to bee ſalued? Indeed Iulius allegeth a Canon of the Councell of Nice: but M. Hardings Canon he allegeth not. And the compiler of the Councels gaue this note in the Margin touching the ſame: Hoc Statutum ſolùm reducibile eſt ad quintum & ſextum Caput Niceni Concilij: Verùm apertè non inuenitur: This Decree may onely bee reduced to the fifth and ſixth Chapter of the Councell of Nice: But expreſly it is not found. Such credit is to be giuen to this Iulius in his allegations.

In Epiſtola Decretali Iulij.

Manifeſt forgerie Athan. in epiſt. ad Orthodox.

Socrates lib. 2. cap. 8.

As for M. Hardings Athanaſius, his tale is ſo ſimple, that it will ſone bewray it ſelfe. For, as I noted before, he writeth vnto Marcus the Biſhop of Rome, of the burning of the Bookes: and yet Athanaſius himſelfe certainly knew, that Marcus was dead at the leaſt nine yeares before that burning happened.

Euen ſo the vaine forger of the Emperor Conſtantines great Donation imagineth him to decree, that the Biſhop of Conſtantinople ſhould be ſubiect vnto the See of Rome. And yet neither was the Citie of Conſtantinople at that time built, nor any ſuch name yet knowen in the world, nor any Biſhoprike there erected. A man might ſay, Non ſatis commodè diuiſa ſunt temporibus tibi Daue hæc.

Againe

The Pope a Forger.

Againe the same Athanasius writing vnto Felix, saith: The Arians had falsified the Nicene Councell: But writing vnto Marcus of the same matter, as a man that had vtterly forgotten himselfe, he saith: The Arians had burnt the Councell of Nice. But if it were burnt, how was it falsified? If it were falsified, how was it burnt? These tales hang not well together. But forasmuch as M. Harding would so faine haue the Pope to hold by burnt euidence, if it may please thee (gentle Reader) discreetly to weigh the whole circumstance of the matter, thou shalt sone finde, that all this great adoe was nothing else but a great fable. For first it appeareth by Theodoretus, that the whole Acts, and Copies of the Councell of Nice, were sent abroad vnto all Bishops that were away. And Marius Victorinus writing against Arius, saith, that the same Acts were sent abroad into the whole World, and that Many thousand Bishops subscribed, and agreed vnto them. Which thing being vndoubtedly true, it were very much for M. Harding to say, that all these Copies, in all parts of the World, could bee destroied vpon the sudden, and that all together, in one place, and with one fire, and at one commandement. The Arians neither were so mightie to atchieue it, nor so foolish to attempt it. Certainly the like neuer happened to any other Councell. But what needeth words, where the matter is plaine? The Bishops of Aphrica had the very Copies of these Canons. Alypius the Bishop of Tagasta, in this conference with Faustinus, said: Adhuc tamen me mouet, quoniam cùm inspiceremus Græca exemplaria huius Synodi Nicenæ, ista ibi, nescio qua ratione, minimè inuenimus: But this one thing much moueth mee, that conferring and examining the Greeke examples of this Nicene Councell, these matters (of the superioritie of the See of Rome that is alleged) I know not how, wee found not there. And Cyrillus the Bishop of Alexandria, being desired, for triall of this matter, to send the true Originall of this Councell, made answer in this sort: Necesse habui fidelissima exemplaria ex authentica Synodo vestræ charitati dirigere: I thought it needfull to send vnto you the true example of the very authenticke Councell. Likewise Atticus the Bishop of Constantinople, to the same request answereth thus: Canones sicut statuti sunt in Nicæa Ciuitate a Patribus, in integro ad vos direxi: I haue sent vnto you the Canons in the whole, euen as they were made and ratified by the Fathers in the Citie of Nice. Now if these Canons were quite burnt, as M. Harding saith, how were they afterward found whole, as the godly Father Atticus, and the learned Bishop Cyrillus saith? And if they were afterward found whole, how then were they quite burnt before? Or how is it, that no man, neither in Aphrica, nor in Europa, nor in Asia; neither in the East Church, nor in the West, was euer able to see these Canons, but only the Bishop of Rome, that so ambitiously claimeth by them? And if hee haue them indeed, and that of such authenticke record, vnder the hands of the three hundred and eightéene Bishops, as it is boldly auouched, why are they not shewed? Why haue they beene, for the space of these thirteene hundred yeares, still kept inuisible? Verily the Councell of Nice were well worth the shewing.

Athanas. in Epist. ad Felicē.
Athanas. in Epist. ad Marc.
Theodoret. l. 1. ca. 9. & lib. 2. cap. 8.
Marius Victorin. aduersus Arium, lib. 2.
Conc. Carthag. 6. cap. 4.
Con. Carthag. 6. ca. 102.
Con. Carthag. 6. ca. 103.

All these things rightly weighed, may seeme sufficient to descrie a Forger. Yet (gentle Reader) the better to satisfie thy minde, marke how earnestly, and with what cunning, M. Hardings Athanasius forceth on his Fable. Hee thought it not sufficient to say, The Canons all were quite burnt, which thing he only saith, and no man else, but because hee saw wise men would replie, There were no such Canons euer made, therefore hee toke paines further, to shew the considerations and causes, and the whole order and circumstance of the making, whereat, hee saith, hee himselfe was present. Foure score Canons (saith hee) were deuised in the whole, whereof forty were laid in in Latine by the Latines: and forty other in Greeke by the Grecians. Of this whole number of Canons (saith hee) the Fathers there tooke off ten Canons, and diuided them as they might, most handsomely among the rest, and so made vp only the number of threescore and ten Canons, thereby mystically to represent the threescore and ten Disciples: or else the number of the threescore and ten tongues that be knowen in the world. Thus of holesome and godly rules of Faith and maners, M. Hardings Athanasius hath leasure to fancie prety Mysteries.

Athan. in epist. ad Marcum.

But for better view hereof, I remember, Cardinall Cusanus, touching the Famous Donation of Constantine, writeth thus: In ipsa scriptura reperi manifesta argumenta falsitatis: Euen in the writing of it, I haue found manifest tokens of falshood. The like may bee said of these M. Hardings new Canons: Euen in the vtterance and writing of them, wee may finde plaine contrarietie, and therefore vndoubted tokens of vntruth. For the former twenty Canons, whereof there is no question, were made in the Councell of Nice: but the rest, whereof S. Augustine and the Bishops of Aphrica moued doubt, and whereby the Bishop of Rome would seeme to claime, were deuised at Rome, and not at Nice.

Nicol. Cusan. de Donatione Constantini.

This

The Pope a Forger.

This new Canon, here alleged, saith: The Bishop of Rome hath the rule and soueraigntie ouer all Patriarkes. But the very true and vndoubted Councell of Nice saith farre otherwise: Antiqua consuetudo seruetur per Ægyptum, Libyam, & Pentapolim: vt Alexandrinus Episcopus horum omnium habeat potestatem: quia & Vrbis Romæ Episcopo parilis mos est: Let the ancient custome be kept thorowout Ægypt, Libya, and Pentapolis: that the Bishop of Alexandria haue the gouernment ouer all these. For the Bishop of the Citie of Rome hath the like order. By this Canon the Bishop of Rome hath no soueraigntie ouer the other Patriarkes, as M. Harding fantasieth, but only a fellowship and equalitie with the rest, to walke carefully within his owne diuision, as others were bound to doe within theirs. And in this Canon these two words, Parilis mos, are specially to be noted, which cannot otherwise be expounded, but onely of like manner, order, and authoritie of Iurisdiction. M. Hardings Canon saith, S. Peter was Master and Ruler ouer all Christian Princes. And yet is not M. Harding able to proue, that while S. Peter liued, there was any one Prince Christened in the whole world. And if Peter had had power ouer Kings and Princes, it is not likely hee would haue taken vp his lodging with Cornelius the poore Tanner. In the end he concludeth with a terrour: If any man repine against this statute, accursed be he. Wherein he doth great wrong both to S. Augustine, and also to all the Bishops of Aphrica, Numidia, Mauritania, Pentapolis, and Bizancena: who not onely repined openlie against this Canon, but also said, It was falsified: and rebuked the Pope of pride and ambition for the same.

Concil. Nicen. Can. 6.

Parilis mos.

Actor. 10.

To bee short, what leadeth M. Harding to say, The Bishop of Rome hath these threescore and tenne Canons in safe keeping? Why doth he thus dissemble, and mocke the world? Certainly the Bishop of Rome himselfe vtterly disclaimeth it, and saith, hee hath them not. For thus he writeth touching the same: Viginti tantum capitula Nicenæ Synodi in sancta Romana Ecclesia habentur: sed quo neglectu alia defecerint, ambiguum est: There are in the Church of Rome only twenty Canons of the Councell of Nice. But by what negligence the rest are lost, it is not knowen. The Pope saith, There are but twenty Canons extant: M. Harding saith, There are threescore and ten Canons. I trow, it is no reason wee should beleeue M. Harding, and leaue the Pope.

Dist. 16. Viginti Stephanus pp.

But Steuen the Bishop of Rome saith, there were sometime in Rome the full threescore and ten Canons, which thing he gathereth only vpon this forgerie of M. Hardings Athanasius. And the same being the euidence whereby he holdeth his whole Title, and such euidence as was not to be found elsewhere in all the world, yet cannot he tell neither how he came by it, nor how long he kept it, nor how he lost it. But a thing is well lost, that cannot be auouched, and shewed without shame.

M. Hardinge Athanasius saith, Power to binde and loose is giuen to the holy See of Rome by speciall priuilege aboue all other. And yet the old Catholike Fathers could neuer vnderstand any such speciall priuilege. S. Cyprian saith: Quamuis Dominus Apostolis omnibus post Resurrectionem suam parem potestatem tribuat, tamen vt vnitatem manifestaret, vnitatis eiusdem originem ab vno incipientem sua authoritate disposuit. Hoc erant vtique & cæteri Apostoli, quod fuit Petrus, pari consortio prædit, & Honoris, & Potestatis: The Lord, after his Resurrection, gaue vnto his Apostles like power: Yet to declare vnitie, hee disposed by his authoritie the Originall of vnitie, beginning of one. The rest of the Apostles were euen the same that Peter was, endued with like fellowship, both of Honour, and of Power.

Cypr. de simplicitate prælator.

Et Honoris, & Potestatis.

Origen saith: An verò soli Petro dantur à Christo Claues Regni Cœlorum, nec alius beatorum quisquam eas accepturus est? Hoc dictum, Tibi dabo Claues Regni Cœlorum, cæteris quoque est commune: What, hath Christ giuen the Keies of the Kingdome of Heauen vnto Peter onely? And shall no holy man else receiue them? Verily this saying, To thee will I giue the Keies of the Kingdome of Heauen, is common also to the rest. S. Cyril saith: Apostolis, & eorum in Ecclesijs Successoribus, plenam concessit potestatem: Christ gaue full power vnto the Apostles, and vnto others that succeeded them in the Churches. And S. Basil saith: Christus Petrum post se suæ Ecclesiæ Pastorem constituit, & consequenter omnibus Pastoribus & Doctoribus eandem tribuit potestatem: cuius signum est, quòd omnes ex æquo & ligant, & absoluunt. quemadmodum ille: Christ appointed Peter to be Pastor of his Church after him, and so consequently gaue the same power vnto all Pastors and Doctors. A token whereof is this, that all Pastors doe equally both binde and loose as well as he.

Orig. in Matt. Tract. 1.

Cyril. in Iohan. lib. 3. cap. 20.

Basil. in Libello de vita solitaria, ca. 23.

Now, if Christ gaue like power to all his Apostles: If the rest of the Apostles were the same that Peter was, endued all with like honour, and like power: If Christs words were common to all the rest: If all Pastours doe equally both binde and loose, as well as Peter; What a Fable then is this, that M. Harding with his Athanasius hath brought in, That power to binde and loose is giuen to the holy See of Rome, by speciall priuilege aboue all others?

Now,

Now, gentle Reader, shortly and simply to lay all the effect hereof before thine eies; M. Hardings Canons were burnt before they were euer made. They were burnt, and yet were they falsified. They were falsified, and yet were they burnt too. This Athanasius informeth Marcus the Bishop of Rome of the burning of them, nine yeres before the fire was made.

The Pope a Forger.

The Pope is found in manifest forgerie, and that by the witnesse of the Patriarkes of Constantinople, and Antioch, and of all the Bishops, and the whole Councell of Aphrica, S. Augustine himselfe being present.

M. Harding saith, The Pope hath the custodie of these Inuisible Canons.

The Pope himselfe saith, he hath none of them.

These Canons be plaine contrarie, not only to the old Catholike Fathers, but also to other Canons of the same Councell.

The Bishops in the Councell of Aphrica openly mislike the Popes attempt in this behalfe, and call it worldly pride, and vaine ambition.

Such warrant hath M. Harding to aduance the state of the See of Rome.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuision.

For further declaration of this matter, it were easie heere to allege the Councell of Sardica, the Councell of Chalcedon, certaine Councels of Aphrica, yea some Councels also holden by Heretikes, and sundrie other: but such store of authorities commonly knowen, these may suffice.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

These Councels are brought forth, all in a mummerie, saying nothing. Therefore I might safely passe them ouer, vntill they had learned to speake somewhat. Yet forasmuch as these men thinke it good policie to huddle vp their matters in the darke, it will not be amisse to rip them abroad, and to bring them forth into the light.

In the Councell of Chalcedon it is decreed thus: Teneat & Ægyptus, vt Episcopus Alexandriæ omnium habeat potestatem: quoniam & Romano Episcopo hæc est consuetudo. Similiter & qui in Antiochia constitutus est: Let Ægypt hold this order, that the Bishop of Alexandria haue the Iurisdiction of all things there: For the Bishop of Rome holdeth the same order (within his Diuision.) So likewise let the Bishop of Antioch. By this Councell, euerie of these Patriarkes had his power limited within himselfe, and none of them to haue dominion ouer other. Concil. Chalcedon. Actio. 16.

The Fathers in the Councell of Aphrica, wherein M. Harding would seeme to haue some affiance, haue decreed thus: Ne primæ Sedis Episcopus appelletur Princeps Sacerdotum, aut Summus Sacerdos, aut aliquid huiusmodi: sed tantùm primæ Sedis Episcopus: That the Bishop of the First See be not called the chiefe of Priests, or the highest Priest, or by any other like Title: but only, the Bishop of the First See. And againe: If any shall thinke it good to appeale, let them appeale only to Councels to be holden within Aphrica, or else to the Primates of their owne Prouinces. But whosoeuer shall appeale beyond the Seas, (that is, to the Bishop of Rome) let no man within Aphrica receiue him to his Communion. Thus much onely for a taste. I thinke M. Harding will not gather hereof, that the Bishop of Rome was called Vniuersall Bishop, or the Head of the Vniuersall Church. Concil. Aphrican. Ca. 6. Can. 102.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuision.

The Christian Princes that ratified and confirmed, with their Proclamations and Edicts, the Decrees of the Canons concerning the Popes Primacie, and gaue not to him first that Authoritie, as the Aduersaries doe vntruly report, were (99) Iustinian and Phocas the Emperours. The words of Iustinians Edict be these: Sancimus, secundum Canonum definitiones, sanctissimum senioris Romæ Papam, primum esse omnium Sacerdotum: Wee ordaine, according to the determinations of the Canons, that the most holy Pope, of the elder Rome, be formost and chiefe of all Priests. In authen. De Episc. tit. The 99. vntruth. For Phocas gaue this title to the Bishop of Rome: but Iustinian gaue it neuer.

About threescore and ten yeeres after Iustinian, Phocas the Emperour, in the time of Bonifacius, to represse the arrogancie of the Bishop of Constantinople, as Paulus Diaconus writeth, who vainly, and, as Gregorie saith, contrarie to our Lords teachings, and the Decrees of the Canons, and for that, wickedly tooke vpon him the name of the Vniuersall or œcumenicall Bishop, and wrote himselfe chiefe of all Bishops, made the like Decree and Ordinance, that the holy See of the Roman and Apostolike Church, should be holden for the Head of all Churches. Lib. 4. hist. Longobardic. c. 36

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Emperours, Princes, and others, haue bene fauourably inclined sometime to the parties, in respect of their places: sometime to the places, for the admiration and reuerence of the parties. Theodosius the Emperour said, He neuer saw Bishop, that bare himselfe Theodoret. li. 5. ca. 18.

Papa.

Sozom. Lib. 7. cap. 24.

Socrat. Lib. 1. cap. 24.

Authen. de Eccleſiaſt. titulis, Collatione 9.

Ideóque Sancimus.

Cod. de Sacroſanctis Eccleſ. Decernimus Sacroſanctam.

Authen. Colla. 9. de Eccleſiaſt. Titulis.

Cœlius Rhodigin. li. 11. c. 21.

Iupiter Papa.

Cyprian. lib. 2. Epiſt. 7.

Pontius in paſſione Cypriani.

Inter Epiſtolas Auguſtini, Epiſt. 11.

Cod. de Sacroſanctis Eccleſ. Decernimus.

τὸ δευτέρου τάξιν.

Cod. de Sacroſanctis Eccleſ. Omni Innouatione.

ſelfe as a Biſhop indeed, but only S. Ambroſe. Conſtantinus the Emperour ſaid of Euſebius the Biſhop of Cæſaria: Dignus eſt qui ſit Epiſcopus, non tantùm vnius Ciuitatis, ſed etiam propè vniuerſi Orbis: Hee is worthy to be the Biſhop, not only of one Citie, but alſo in a maner of the whole World.

In reſpect of places, they were moued either for their Antiquitie, or for their Authoritie and Ciuill Power, or for the commoditie of the ſituation, or for ſome other good conſideration and circumſtance, to fauour them, and to grant them priuileges aboue others. Thus the Emperour Iuſtinian had a ſpeciall inclination to the Citie of Conſtantinople, for that it was now growen in wealth and puiſſance, and for the State and Nobilitie thereof, called Noua Roma, New Rome: And for that it was, as hee ſaith, Mater pietatis noſtræ, & Chriſtianorum Orthodoxæ Religionis omnium: That is, The Mother of his Maieſtie, and of all Chriſtian men of the Catholike Faith. For like conſideration, the Emperour gaue out this ſpeciall Priuilege, in fauour of the Sée of Rome: Sancimus, ſecundùm Canonum definitiones, ſanctiſſimum Senioris Romæ Papam primum eſſe omnium Sacerdotum: Wee decree, according to the determination of the Canons, that the moſt holy Pope of the Elder Rome be the firſt or formoſt of all Prieſts. And by the way, leſt any errour happen to grow of this word Papa, it behoueth thée (good Reader) to vnderſtand, that Papa, in old times, in the Greéke tongue, ſignified a Father, as appeareth by that Iupiter the great Idoll, that was honoured as God in Bithynia, was called Papa, ὁ ζεὺς, ὁ πάππας, Iupiter Papa. And further, that in S. Auguſtines time, and before, the ſame name was giuen, not only or ſpecially to the Biſhop of Rome, but alſo generally to all Biſhops. The Prieſts and Deacons of Rome write thus vnto S. Cyprian the Biſhop of Carthage: Cypriano Papæ: Vnto Pope Cyprian. And Galerius the Iudge, hauing S. Cyprian in examination for the Chriſtian Faith, ſaid thus vnto him: Tu es quem Chriſtiani Papam ſuum nominant? Art thou he whom the Chriſtians call their Pope? So likewiſe S. Hierome intitleth his Epiſtles vnto S. Auguſtine, being Biſhop of Hippo: Hieronymus beatiſſimo Papæ Auguſtino: Hierome vnto Auguſtine the moſt holy Pope. Thus much only by the way.

But to returne to the matter, M. Harding may not of euery thing that he readeth, conclude what he liſteth. This Priuilege granted vnto the Biſhop of Rome, to bée the firſt of all Prieſts, was not to beare the whole ſway, and to ouer-rule all the world; but only in generall meétings and Councels to ſit in place aboue all others; and for auoiding of confuſion, to direct and order them in their doings. The Emperours words bée plaine: Prærogatiua in Epiſcoporum Concilio, vel extra Concilium ante alios reſidendi: A Prerogatiue in the Councell of Biſhops, or without the Councell to ſit in order aboue others. This Prerogatiue in Greéke is called πρωτοθρόνια, that is, The priuilege of the firſt place. And theſe phraſes, in that Tongue, be knowen, and common: τὰ πρωτεῖα ἔχειν: τὸ δευτερεῖα: τὸ τριτεῖα: Like as alſo theſe in the Latine Tongue: Obtinere primas, ſecundas, tertias: That is, To haue the preeminence of the Firſt, Second, or Third place. And that the Emperour Iuſtinian meant onely thus, and none otherwiſe, it is manifeſt euen by the ſelfe ſame place that M. Harding hath héere alleged. His words ſtand thus: Sancimus, &c. Senioris Romæ Papam, primum eſſe omnium Sacerdotum: Beatiſſimum autem Archiepiſcopum Conſtantinopoleos, Nouæ Romæ, ſecundum habere locum: Wee ordaine, that the Pope of the Elder Rome ſhall bee the firſt of all Prieſts: and that the moſt holy Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople, which is named New Rome, haue the ſecond place. Héereby it is plaine, that this Priuilege ſtandeth only in placing the Biſhop of Rome in the firſt ſeat, aboue others. But I beſeech thée, gentle Reader, weigh well the words that follow in the ſame Law, and thou ſhalt ſée, both that M. Hardings dealing herein is not vpright, and alſo that the Biſhop of Rome was then excluded by plaine words from that Vniuerſall Power which hée now ſo déepely dreameth of. It followeth immediately: Beatiſſimum Archiepiſcopum Primæ Iuſtinianæ Patriæ noſtræ habere ſemper ſub ſua Iuriſdictione Epiſcopos Prouinciarum Daciæ, & Daniæ, & Dardaniæ, & Myſiæ, atque Pannoniæ: Et ab eo hos ordinari: ipſum verò à proprio ordinari Concilio: & in ſubiectis ſibi Prouincijs locum obtinere eum Sedis Apoſtolicæ Romæ: Wee ordaine, that the moſt holy Archbiſhop of Iuſtiniana the firſt, which is in our Country, ſhal haue for euer vnder his iuriſdiction, the Biſhops of the Prouinces of Dacia, Dania, Dardania, Myſia, and Pannonia: and that they ſhall bee inueſted by him: and hee onely by his owne Councell: and that he, in the Prouinces ſubiect vnto him, ſhall haue the place of the Apoſtolike See of Rome. Héere we ſée the Biſhop of Iuſtiniana ſet in as high Authoritie and Power, within his owne Iuriſdiction, as the Biſhop of Rome within his. In like ſort the Emperour Iuſtinian ſaith: Eccleſia Vrbis Conſtantinopolitanæ, Romæ Veteris Prærogatiua lætatur: The Church of the City of Conſtantinople exiſteth now the Prerogatiue of Rome the Elder.

Now if the Biſhop of Iuſtiniana and the Biſhop of Rome, in their ſeuerall Diuiſions, haue like authority. And if the Church of Constantinople in all prerogatiues and priuileges be made equall with the City of Rome, then is not the Bishop of Romes power Vniuersall, neither can he iustly be called the Head of the Vniuersall Church. Verily Iustinian himselfe writing vnto Epiphanius the Bishop of Constantinople, calleth him, The Vniuersall Patriarke: which thing he would not haue done, if he had thought that title of right had belonged to the Bishop of Rome.

haue

The first Bishop.

Authen. vt determinatus sit numerus Clericorum. ὁ βασιλεὺς Ἐπιφανίῳ οἰκουμενικῷ πατριάρχῃ.

The argument that M. Harding gathereth of Iustinians words, is this: The Bishop of Rome had the first place in Generall Councels; Ergo, he was an Vniuersall Bishop. Which argument what weight it beareth, I leaue to M. Harding to consider.

But the Emperour Phocas gaue this speciall grant to the See of Rome, that the Bishop there should be called, The Head of all Churches. But M. Harding knoweth, this grant was made vnto Bonifacius the third, which was Bishop in Rome in the yeare of our Lord fiue hundred and eight, euen at the same very time that Mahomet first began to plant his Doctrine in Arabia, and therefore maketh nothing to this purpose, as being without the compasse of six hundred yeares. Notwithstanding both Platina and Sabellicus say, that Bonifacius hardly, and with much adoe got the same then to be granted. Howbeit, forasmuch as M. Harding would seeme to found his Supremacy vpon some godly man, it may please thee, good Reader, to vnderstand, that this Phocas being but a Souldier, by treason and conspiracie laid hands vpon his liege Lord and Maister the Emperour Mauritius, and in cruell sort did him to death. The maner whereof was this: First he commanded forth the Emperours yongest sonne, and caused him to be slaine, euen in the sight of his Father: and so the second: and then the third: and afterward the wife: Mauritius heauily looking on, and lamenting, and saying vnto God, O Lord thou art iust, and iust is thy iudgement. Last of al, he vsed the like tyranny vpon him also, and laid the Emperour, his Wife, and his Children in a heape together. Afterward during the time of this Phocas, God seemed vtterly to withdraw his blessing: France, Spain, Germany, Lombardy, and the greatest part of the East, fell from the Empire for euer: such a wracke to the state as neuer had beene seene before. After that he had thus liued, and committed sundrie Murders, and other great mischieues (Post multa homicidia, & alia malefacta) the people toke him, and slew him, and threw him into the fire. This was hee, that first proclaimed the Bishop of Rome to be Head of the Vniuersall Church.

Anno Domini, 608. Platina. Sabellicus.

Abbas Vrspergensis in Mauritio.

Carion. in Chronicis. Abbas Vrspergensis.

M. Harding. The 9. Diuision.

Of the Doctours what shall I say? Verily this matter is so often, and so commonly reported of them, that their sayings laid together, would scantly be comprised within a great volume. The recitall of a few, shall heere giue a taste, as it were of the whole, and so suffice.

Irenæus hauing much praised the Church of Rome, at length vttereth these words, by which the soueraignty thereof is confessed; Ad hanc Ecclesiam propter potentiorem principalitatem, necesse est omnem conuenire Ecclesiam, hoc est eos qui vndique sunt fideles: To this Church (of Rome) it is necessary all the Church, that is to say, all that be faithfull any where, to repaire and come together, for the mightier principality of the same, that is to wit, for that it is of mightier power and authority than other Churches, and the principallest of all. Lib. 3.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Touching the Doctours, M. Harding findeth himselfe much troubled with the number of them: yet can he not finde any one of them all, that calleth the Bishop of Rome the Vniuersall Bishop, or Head of the Vniuersall Church.

Irenæus speaketh neither of Supremacie, nor of Headship of the Church, nor of any other Vniuersall power. Therefore M. Harding misteleth his authours tale, and auoucheth that he neuer meant. For Irenæus in that place writeth only against Valentinus, Cerdon and Marcion, which contrary to the Doctrine of the Apostles, had deuised sundry strange Heresies and Fantasies of their owne. For triall whereof, he biddeth them to beholde the Churches which the Apostles had planted. The Church of Ephesus (saith he) first instructed by S. Paul, and afterward continued by S. Iohn, is a sufficient witnesse of the Apostles learning. Polycarpus being conuerted, and taught by the Apostles, instructed the Church of Smyrna: and all the Churches of Asia follow it. Yet none of all these Churches euer allowed or receiued your strange doctrine. Yea the very wilde barbarous Nations, that haue receiued the faith of Christ at the Apostles hands, only by hearing, without any booke or letter, if they should heare of these heresies, they would stop their eares. Thus Irenæus calleth forth these Heretikes, as we doe now our Aduersaries, to be tried by the Doctrine and Churches of the Apostles. But he saith: Valdè longũ est, in hoc tali volumine omnium Ecclesiarum enumerare successiones: It would be very long in such a booke as this is, to reckon vp the successions of all Churches. Therefore he resteth specially vpon the example of the Church of Rome, which he calleth, Maxi-

Irenæus, li. 3. ca. 3.

Irenæus, li. 3. ca. 4.

Primatus.

mam antiquiſſimam & omnibus cognitam: The greateſt, moſt ancient, and knowen to all men. And ſaith: By the Example of this Curch, we confound all peruerſe Doctrine. And addeth further: Ad hanc Eccleſiam, propter potentiorem principalitatem, neceſſe eſt omnem Eccleſiam conuenire, quia in hac, ſemper conſeruata eſt ea, quæ eſt ab Apoſtolis Traditio: vnto this Church of Rome euery other Church muſt agree. The reaſon is: For that in this Church the Tradition of the Apoſtles hath euer beene kept. So the Emperours Gratian, Valentinian, and Theodoſius commanded all them to be called Catholikes, that followe the Faith, that S. Peter deliuered vnto the See of Rome. For the Apoſtles Doctrine is the triall and rule of Faith.

Cod. de Summa Trini. Cunctos popul.

Sozomen. lib. 7. cap. 4.

This Doctrine at the beginning was exactly obſerued in Rome without corruption: and therefore was that Church in reuerence and eſtimation aboue others.

But they will replie, Irenæus ſaith; Propter potentiorem principalitatem: Of theſe words groweth their errour. They dreame of a Kingdome and Principality. But Chriſt ſaith to his Diſciples, The Kings of Nations rule ouer them: Vos autem non ſic: But you may not ſo. And Origen ſaith; Qui vocatur ad Epiſcopatum, non vocatur ad Principatum, ſed ad ſeruitutem totius Eccleſiæ: He that is called to be a Biſhop, is not called to a principality, but vnto the Seruice of the whole Church. The Principality that Irenæus meant, was the Ciuill Dominion, and Temporall ſtate of the City of Rome, in which God had then planted the Empire of the World, and made all Nations ſubiect vnto it. And therefore the Church of God being once inkindled there, was more notable and better knowen vnto all nations. As for the Biſhops of Rome that then were, they had neither lands nor rents, but liued ſtill vnder the ſword in continuall perſecution: as S. Paul ſaith: The offſcouring of the World, and the vileſt of all people, farre from any ſhew or colour of Principality. Yet that notwithſtanding, the Church there was called a Principall, and a chiefe Church aboue others, becauſe of the Dominion and Principality of the City. And in this ſenſe Eccleſia principalis, is ſometimes vſed in the old Fathers. In the Councell of Carthage it is written thus: Placuit vt nemini ſit facultas, relicta principali Cathedra, ad aliquam Eccleſiam in Diœceſi conſtitutam ſe conferre: We thinke it good it be lawfull for no man, leauing the principall Chaire or Church, to goe to any other Church within the Dioceſſe. Likewiſe Paulinus vnto Alypius: Dominus in ſuis te ciuibus principalem cum principibus populi ſui, ſede Apoſtolica meritò collocauit: The Lord hath worthily placed thee in the See Apoſtolike, a principall one among his Citizens, with the Princes of his people. Thus the Principality that Irenæus meaneth, ſtood not in the preaching of the Goſpell, but in the Ciuill eſtate and Worldly Dominion: not in the Biſhop that profeſſed Chriſt, but in the Emperour that was an Heathen: not in the Church, but in the perſecutors & enemies of the Church. Therefore M. Harding reaſoning thus: Rome had the power and Princehood of the World: Ergo, The Biſhop there was Head of the Vniuerſall Church, ſeemeth not well to weigh his own concluſion. For of the ſame grounds we might well reaſon thus: Rome now hath loſt that power and Princehood of the World: Ergo, The Biſhop there, is not now the Head of the Vniuerſall Church.

7. Queſt. 1. Placuit.

Inter Epiſtolas Auguſtini, ep. 35.

To be ſhort, If the Church of Rome would now faithfully keepe the Traditions and Doctrine of the Apoſtles, we would frankly yeld her all that honour that Irenæus giueth her. But ſhe hath ſhaken off the yoke of Chriſt, and wilfully breaketh Gods commandements, to the intent to vphold her owne Traditions. For proofe whereof, to paſſe ouer an infinite number of other diſorders, the Biſhop there preſumeth now to intitle himſelfe, The Vniuerſall Biſhop. But S. Gregorie ſaith: Nemo deceſſorum meorum hoc tam profano vocabulo vti conſenſit: None of my predeceſſours euer conſented to vſe this vngodly name. Therefore like as Irenæus ſaith of his time, The Church of Rome hath euer hitherto kept the Tradition and Doctrine of the Apoſtles: Ergo, All Churches ought to take her for an example, and to agree vnto her. So may we in contrary wiſe ſay of our time: The Church of Rome hath now broken the Traditions and Doctrine of the Apoſtles: Ergo, No Church ought to follow her example, and to agree vnto her.

Gregor. li. 4. Epiſt. 36.

M. Harding. The 10. Diuiſion.

Andrew followed our Sauiour before that Peter did, Et tamen primatum non accepit Andreas, ſed Petrus: And yet Andrew receiued not the Primacie, but Peter, ſaith Ambroſe. In 2. Cor. 1.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

This errour holdeth only of the miſunderſtanding of this word, Primatus: which, by M. Hardings iudgement, muſt needs ſignifie an Vniuerſall Power ouer the whole World. But it is eaſie to be ſhewed, that Primatus, among the Old Fathers, is farre otherwiſe vſed, I meane, for any ſuperioritie, or preferment before others. And firſt to begin with S. Ambroſe, thus he writeth: Eſau per lentem, honorem Primatus amiſit: Eſau by a diſh of Rice potage loſt the honour of his Primacie. In like ſort writeth S. Auguſtine:

In Sermon. 35. De Ieiunio.

Eſau

Esau Primatus suos, non propter gallinam, sed propter lenticulam perdidit. Likewise the Councell of Chalcedon in the condemnation of the Heretike Abbat Eutyches, vseth these words: Decernimus eum extraneum esse ab omni officio Sacerdotali, & à nostra Communione, & à Primatu Monasterij: We decree, that he shall be remooued from his office of Priesthood, and from our Communion, and from the Primacie of his Abbey. So the Councell of Toledo: Primatu dignitatis honorabiles habentur in palatio: They are counted honorable in the Court, for the Primacy of their dignitie. In these places, I reckon, we need not to take Primatus, for an Vniuersall or infinite Gouernment.

Primatus.

August. in Euange. Iohan. Tract. 73.

Concil. Chalcedonen. Actione prima.

Concil. Tolet. 6. ca. 13.

Likewise the same word Primatus, is often taken for the Superiority of euery of the foure Patriarkes, and not only for the dominion that is claimed by the Bishop of Rome. In the Councell of Constantinople it is written thus: Alexandriæ Episcopi solius Orientis curam gerant, seruatis honoribus Primatus Ecclesiæ Antiochenæ: Let the Bishops of Alexandria haue the charge only of the East, the honour of Primacie euer reserued to the Church of Antioch. In like maner it is written in the Councell of Chalcedon: Episcopus qui in Antiochia constitutus est, & qui in cæteris prouincijs, habeant Primatus Ecclesiæ Ciuitatum ampliorum: The Bishop that is appointed for Antioch, and likewise others in other Prouinces, let them haue the Primacies of the greater Cities. So the Emperours Theodosius and Valentinian wrote vnto Dioscorus the Bishop of Alexandria, as it is reported in the Councell of Chalcedon: Authoritatem & Primatum tuæ præbemus Beatitudini.

Concil. Chalcedon. Actio. 16.

Concil. Chalcedon. Actio. 1.

Now if this word Primatus, must needs signifie that power and gouernment, that M. Harding fantasieth, then must it follow of necessity, that Esau, Eutyches, the Bishop of Antioch, and the Bishop of Alexandria, had the Vniuersall Power and gouernment of the whole World. But if it may well be taken for any maner preferrement or præeminence, or priority before others, then is M. Hardings argument much abused, and concludeth not so much, as is pretended. Verily Tertullian saith: Tot ac tantæ Ecclesiæ, vna est illa ab Apostolis prima, ex qua omnes. Sic omnes primæ, & omnes Apostolicæ, dum vnam omnes probant vnitatem: So many and so great Churches, are all that first one Church rested by the Apostles, from whence came all. And so are all Churches both the first, and also the Apostolike Churches, forasmuch as they all allow one truth.

Tertullian. De Præscriptio. contra Hæreti.

As touching S. Peters præeminence, Cyprian saith: Hoc erant alij, quod Petrus pari consortio præditi, & Honoris, & Potestatis: The rest of the Disciples were euen the same that Peter was, all endued with like fellowship, both of honour and also of power. Euen so saith S. Ambrose too, and that in the very same place that M. Harding hath alleged: Inter Petrum & Paulum, quis cui præponatur, incertum est: Of Peter and Paul, whether ought to be preferred before other, it is not knowen. Certainly if Peter had had the Vniuersall souereignety ouer all the Apostles, he should haue had the like ouer S. Paul. And so perhaps M. Harding will say, notwithstanding S. Ambrose by plaine words denieth it: and although S. Gregory say: Petrus vniuersalis Apostolus non vocatur: Peter is not called an vniuersall Apostle.

Cyprian. de Simplicitate Prælatorum.

Gregor. lib. 4. Epist. 32.

Of S. Ambrose words, M. Harding reasoneth thus: Peter was the chiefest of the Apostles: Ergo, The Pope is Head of the Vniuersall Church. This argument would be better considered: for as it is, it holdeth but weakely.

M. Harding. The 11. Diuision.

In the Epistle of Athanasius and the Bishops of Egypt to Liberius the Pope, in which they sue for helpe against the oppressions of the Arians, we finde these words: Huius rei gratia, vniuersalis vobis à Christo Iesu commissa est Ecclesia, &c. Euen for this cause the Vniuersall Church hath beene committed to you of Christ Iesus, that you should trauell for all, and not bee negligent to helpe euery one. For whiles the strong man being armed keepeth his house, all things that he possesseth are in peace.

This Epistle is forged, and not written by Athanasius.

Luc. 11.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

This Epistle vnder the name of Athanasius, besides that it is vaine and Childish, and full of needlesse and idle talke, hath also euident tokens of manifest forgerie. For further answer hereunto, I referre my selfe vnto that is before answered vnto the Epistle written vnder the name of Athanasius vnto Felix.

M. Harding. The 12. Diuision.

Hilarius speaking much to the extolling of Peter and his (100) Successour in that See, saith; Supereminentem beatæ fidei suæ confessione locum promeruit: That for the confession of his blessed Faith, he deserued a place of preeminence (101) aboue all other.

De Trinita. lib. 6.

The 100 vntruth. For Hilary speaketh not one word of Peters Successour.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Hilarius by M. Hardings report, speaketh much to the extolling of S. Peter and his Successour in that See. Here is first a great vntruth. For Hilarius in that whole place,

The 101. vntruth, standing in false translation.

ſpeaketh not one word neither of Rome, nor of the Sea, nor of the Succeſſour of Peter. Only he commendeth S. Peters faith, wherein he confeſſed that Chriſt is the Sonne of the liuing God, and ſaith: Hæc fides eſt fundamentum Eccleſiæ: Super hanc Confeſſionis Petram, Eccleſiæ edificatio eſt: This Faith is the Foundation of the Church: Vpon this Rocke of Confeſſion the Chriſt is built. And addeth further: By the Confeſſion of his bleſſed Faith, he obtained a place of preeminence, as M. Harding addeth of his owne, aboue all other. Wherein alſo he committeth another vntruth. For Hilarius ſaith only: He obtained a ſpeciall place, and ſpeaketh not one word of any other. * S. Auguſtine ſaith: Petrus pro omnibus dixit, & cum omnibus accepit: Peter ſpake for all the reſt: and receiued promiſe with all the reſt. As the Confeſſion was one, ſo the place of preeminence was all one. The preeminence was, that they ſhould be the firſt fruits of Gods Saints: The veſſels of Election: The Fathers of the people: The light of the World: The pillars of the Church: and the Angels of God. That they ſhould ſit vpon twelue ſeats, and iudge the twelue Tribes of Iſrael. This was the ſpeciall preeminence of the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and was equally giuen vnto them all.

De Trini. lib. 6.

 Auguſt. in Iohan. Tract. 11. & 124.*

1. Corinth. 15.
1. Corinth. 4.
Roman. 9.
Matth. 5.
1. Timoth. 3.
Luc. 22.
Act. 7.
Act. 6.
Reuelat. 1.
Reuelat. 2.

But M. Harding cannot beleeue, there is any place of preeminence, but only in Rome, and therefore imagineth, that vpon this confeſſion, Chriſt ſaid vnto Peter: Bleſſed art thou Simon Bariona, for thou ſhalt be Pope, and ſhalt be exalted aboue thy Brethren, and ſhalt bee furniſhed with all worldly power, and all the Princes of the world ſhall ſtoop vnto theee. This is the preeminence that by M. Hardings fantaſie, Chriſt promiſed vnto S. Peter.

Of theſe words of Hilary, M. Harding ſeemeth to reaſon thus: Peter obtained a place of Preeminence: Ergo, The Biſhop of Rome is head of the Vniuerſall Church. This argument is open, and ſheweth it ſelfe.

M. Harding. The 31. Diuiſion.

S. Ambroſe confeſſing himſelfe to beleeue that the largeneſſe of the Romane Empire was by Gods prouidence prepared, that the Goſpell might haue his courſe, and bee ſpread abroad the better, ſaith thus of Rome; Quæ tamen per Apoſtolici Sacerdotij principatum amplior facta eſt Arce Religionis, quàm ſolio poteſtatis: Which for all that, hath beene aduanced more by the chiefty of the Apoſtolike Prieſthood in the Towre of Religion, than in the Throne of Temporall power. De vocatione gentium lib. 1. cap. 6.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

These words of S. Ambroſe be true, and not denied, and further no part of M. Hardings purpoſe. But here is a whole ſentence ouerhipt, that quite ouerthroweth his whole purpoſe. The words that immediately goe before are theſe: Quamuis gratia Chriſtiana non contenta ſit, eoſdem limites habere, quos Roma, multoſque iam populorum ſceptro Crucis Chriſti illi ſubdiderit, quos armis ſuis iſta non domuit: Howbeit the grace of Chriſt is not content to haue the ſame limits that Rome hath: but hath ſubdued moe Nations by the Scepter of Chriſts Croſſe, than Rome euer ſubdued by force of warre. If the Grace and Saluation of God haue larger limits, and reach further than the power of Rome, how then claimeth the Biſhop of Rome his Vniuerſall power? Many that liue without the compaſſe or obedience of Rome are notwithſtanding partakers of the Grace of Chriſt. How then is it, that Bonifacius the Biſhop there ſaith; Subeſſe Romano Pontifici omni humanæ creaturæ declaramus, dicimus, definimus, pronuntiamus, omninò eſſe de neceſſitate ſalutis: Wee declare, ſay, determine, and pronounce, that to be ſubiect vnto the Biſhop of Rome, is vndoubtedly of the neceſſity of Saluation.

Extra. de Maiori. & Obedientia. Vnam Sanctam.

S. Ambroſe, that the Glory of the Goſpell of Chriſt might the better appeare, compareth it with the power and puiſſance of the Empire of Rome; which then ouerreached a great part of the world. One ſaid: Romanos rerum Dominos. S. Ambroſe ſaith: Roma principatum & Caput obtinet Nationum: Rome hath the Empire and Soueraignty of all Nations. Thus he ſeemeth to compare the Church with the Citie; the power of the Goſpell, with the power of the Empire; the Scepter of the Croſſe, with the Scepters of the Prince, and the Glory of the one ſide, with the Glory of the other. Although Rome were glorious for the Empire, yet was ſhe much more glorious for the Goſpell. The Emperour there with his power ſubdued Nations; but the Goſpell of Chriſt ſubdued the Emperour. Conſtantinus, Theodoſius, Valentinianus, and other Emperours of Rome, with all their power, confeſſed themſelues to be ſubiects vnto Chriſt. And S. Ambroſe writeth vnto Valentinian the Emperour: Quid honorificentius, quàm vt Imperator dicatur Filius Eccleſiæ? What can be more honorable, than that the Emperour be called a childe of the Church? This was the whole and only meaning of S. Ambroſe. And in that ſenſe S. Auguſtine ſaith; Oſtendatur mihi Romæ in honore tanto Templum Romuli, in quanto ego ibi oſtendo memoriam Petri. In Petro quis honoratur, niſi ille defunctus pro nobis? Summus enim Chriſtiani non Petriani: Shew mee the Temple of Romulus in Rome, in ſo great honour as I will ſhew you there

Ambroſ. in Sermone 66.

Ambroſ. epiſt. 32.

Auguſtin. in Pſalm. 44.

the

the memory of Peter. And who is honoured in Peter, but he that died for vs? For wee are Christian men, and not Peters men. So likewise Chrysostome: Contigit primum Antiochiæ Discipulos appellari Christianos. Hoc autem Ciuitatum quæ sunt in mundo, cunctarum habet nulla: nec ipsa Romuli Ciuitas: It chanced, that the Disciples in this City of Antioch were first called Christians. Of all the Cities that bein the World, none euer had this gift, no not the City of Romulus. Ad populum Antiochen. homil. 17. Therefore S. Ambrose meaning is: that Rome was neuer so noble before for the Empire of the World, as it was afterward for the Gospell of Christ. But S. Ambrose saith: Apostolici Sacerdotij principatum: The Principality of the Apostolike Priesthood. With which words worldly eies may sone be dazled. But M. Harding knoweth, that S. Peter being in Rome had no maner shew or state of Princehood. His whole power was spirituall, and stod only in the Preaching of the Gospell, with which armour God is able to pull downe Kings and Princes to the obedience of his Christ. Thus saith God vnto Hieremie: Constitui te super Gentes & Regna: I haue set thee ouer Nations and Kingdomes. 2. Cor. 10. Hierem. 1. And S. Peter speaking generally vnto all Christian people, saith Vos estis Regale Sacerdotium: You are that Kingly Priesthood. 1. Peter. 2. This principalitie & tower of Religion was not only in Rome, but also in euery place, where the name of Christ was receiued. Albeit, I grant, both for the multitude of Idols that there had bene honoured, and also for the Nobilitie of the Empire, the victory of Christ in Rome appeared most glorious.

Now let vs consider M. Hardings reasoning: The state of Rome was more famous for the Gospell, than euer it had beene before for the Empire; Ergo, The Pope was called the Head of the Vniuersall Church. This argument is such as neede th no answer.

M. Harding. The 14. Diuision.

Lib. 1. contra 2. Epistlas Pelagianorum. Ad Bonifacium ca. 1. Quamuis ipse in ea præminens cathedra sæpius sæculo profuerim. Lib. 2. de Baptismo contra Donatistas. cap. 17. Calumniæ auctoritatis obtinuit. Cui primus dare mihi, vel summæ rei cessisse impudentiæ est, vel præcipitis arrogantiæ.

S Augustine in his 162. Epistle saith; In Ecclesia Romana semper Apostolicæ Cathedræ viguit principatus: The Primacy or Principality of the Apostolike chaire, hath euer more beene in force in the Roman Church. The same S. Augustine speaking to Bonifacius Bishop of Rome. This care (saith hee, complaining of the Pelagians) is common to vs all, that haue the office of a Bishop, albeit therein thou thy selfe hast the preeminence ouer all, being on the top of the Pastorall watch-tower. In another place he hath these words; Cæterum magis vereri debeo, ne in Petrum conti meliosum existam. Quis enim nescit, illum Apostolatus principatum, cuilibet Episcopatui præferendum: But I ought rather to be afraid, lest I be reprochfull toward Peter. For who is he that knoweth not, that that Principality of Apostleship, is to be preferred before any Bishopricke that is? Another most euident place he hath in his Booke. De vtilitate credendi ad Honoratum. Cum tamen auxilium Dei, &c. Whereas (saith he) we see so great helpe of God, so great profit and fruit, shall we stand in doubt whether we may hide our selues in the lap of that Church, which (though Heretikes barke at it in vaine round about, condemned partly by the iudgement of the people themselues, partly by the sadnesse of Councels, and partly by the maiestie of miracles euen to the confession of mankind) for the Apostolike See by successions of Bishops, hath obtained the top or highest degree of authoritie? To which Church if wee will not giue and grant the Primacie, soothly it is a point either of most high wickednesse, or of headlong arrogancie.

The 102. vntruth, standing in the false translation and corruption of S. Augustines words.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

These places of S. Augustine may sone be answered. For here is neither Vniuersall Bishop; nor Head of the Vniuersall Church; nor superiority or dominion ouer all others; nor any other word tending to that end. M. Harding knoweth, that S. Augustine was present at the Councell of Carthage, and gaue his consent, That the Bishop of the first See, should not be called neither the Prince, or chiefe of Priests, nor the Highest Priest, nor by any other like title. Concil. Carthaginen. 3. ca. 26.

He knoweth also that S. Augustine afterward confirmed the same in a Councell holden at Hippo Regius in his owne Dioceese. Likewise he knoweth that the same S. Augustine Decreed among other Bishops to the number of 217. in the Councell of Aphrica, that it should not be lawfull for any man of those Countries, to seeke for aid ouer the Seas, and to appeale to the Bishop of Rome: and that whosoeuer so appealed should stand Excommunicate: and so vtterly condemned that Infinite Dominion, and Vniuersall Power, that so many haue sithence dreamed of. Againe, writing vpon the Gospell of S. Iohn, he saith: Petrus erat oculus in Capite: Peter was an eie in the Head: He saith not, Peter was the Head. In these words appeareth plainly S. Augustines certaine and vndoubted iudgement touching this matter. The rest, that is here brought in, standeth only vpon M. Hardings gathering. Concil. Hipponen. cap. 27. Concil. Aphrican. cap. 92. August. in Iohan. tract. 13.

It is true, that aswell S. Augustine, as also other godly Fathers, rightly and well, in old times yelded great reuerence to the See of Rome, both for the Antiquity of the Church: and for the honour and memory of S. Peter: and for the constancie of the holy Martyrs, that there had suffered: and also for the purity of Religion, which was preserued there a long time without spot, and might be a standard vnto others. But the greatest increase of outward estimation in the World vnto that See, was the imperiall seat, and Presence of the Prince, as notably appeareth by the first Councell of Constantinople. For theſe cauſes S. Auguſtine ſaith: The See of Rome had the higheſt place, and chiefe preeminence aboue others.

Concil. Constãtinopol. 1. ca. 5. Distinct. 22. Constantinopolitanæ.

Perhaps M. Harding will preſſe me further with this word Principatus, which he expoundeth, The Principality. Howbeit, I beleeue, he will not ſay, Principatus, ſignifieth an Vniuerſall power or Supreme gouernment: and ſo his aduantage of this word is not ſo great. Verily Princeps, in the Latine tongue, is often vſed for a man, that for his vertue or rome, or any ſingular quality, is to be had in eſtimation aboue others. So Cicero ſaith: Socrates princeps Philoſophorum: Grauitate dicendi princeps Plato: princeps orbis terrarum Pompeius. Like as alſo Chryſoſtome ſaith: Caput Prophetarum Elias: Elias the Head of the Prophets. In theſe places, Princeps is taken, not for a Prince or Gouernour, but onely for a man, that for his qualities is to be eſteemed aboue the reſt. And in this ſenſe S. Auguſtine calleth the See of Rome, as it was in his time, Principatus Sedis Apoſtolicæ, and not in reſpect of any Supreme gouernment: for that hee himſelfe in the Councell of Aphrica, as it is already proued, vtterly denied him. I grant, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, The Biſhop of Rome truly and diligently doing the part of a Biſhop, he that then would haue denied him the chiefe preeminence for the reſpects aboue touched, had beene wicked or arrogant. But the ſame Biſhop of Rome now claiming to himſelfe the title of Vniuerſall Biſhop, as S. Gregory ſaith. Is the forerunner of Antichriſt: and the conſenting to the ſame, as the ſame Gregory ſaith, Is the renouncing and forſaking of the faith.

De natura Deorum. De oratore. Pro domo ſua. Chryſoſtom. ad Roma. hom. 18.

Gregor. li. 6. Epiſt. 30. & li. 4. Epiſt. 39.

I could further ſay, that M. Harding in theſe authorities of S. Auguſtine hath left out and tranſpoſed what he thought good: and ſo hath ſhewed no ſimple dealing. In the firſt place, S. Auguſtines words be theſe: Epiſcopus videbat ſe Romanæ Eccleſiæ, in qua ſemper Apoſtolicæ Cathedræ viguit principatus, per Communicatorias literas eſſe coniunctum: Hee ſaw himſelfe by letters of Conference to be ioined with the Church of Rome, in which Church the chiefe preeminence of the Apoſtolike See had euer flouriſhed. S. Auguſtine ſaith: The Biſhop there was ioined with the Church of Rome, not by way of Obedience or Subiection, but by Letters of Conference, wherein is implied an equality or a fellowſhip. And afterward in the ſame Epiſtle S. Auguſtine ſaith, That Meltiades the Biſhop of Rome with certaine other Biſhops, heard the matter betweene Cæcilianus and Donatus, A caſis nigris, not by any his Vniuerſall or Supreme Power, as M. Harding imagineth, but by ſpeciall Commiſſion from the Emperour. And ſo was the Biſhop of Rome the Emperours Delegate: and that, not in any Soueraigne authority, but fellowlike, and equally ioined with other Biſhops: and, that afterward the ſame cauſe vpon complaint and miſliking of Donatus, was by the Emperour taken out of the Biſhop of Romes hands, and by a new Commiſſion was put ouer to the hearing of the Biſhop of Arle in France. But where was then the Biſhop of Romes Supreme gouernment?

Auguſt. Epiſt. 162.

In the ſecond place M. Harding hath notably falſified, both S. Auguſtines words in the Latine, and alſo his owne Tranſlation in the Engliſh. S. Auguſtines words be theſe: Communis eſt nobis omnibus, qui fungimur Epiſcopatus officio, quamuis ipſe in eo præemineas celſiore faſtigio, Specula paſtoralis: Which words M. Harding by wilfull depranation hath altered thus, Celſiore faſtigio ſpeculæ paſtoralis: and ſo hath left the Aduerbe Communis, without a Subſtantiue, and the principall Verbe, Eſt, without a Nominatiue Caſe: and to ſerue his turne hath cauſed S. Auguſtine to ſpeake falſe Latine. This place of S. Auguſtine may be Engliſhed thus: The paſtorall Watch Tower is common to vs all, that beare the office of Biſhops: albeit thy preeminence is greater, as ſitting in the higher roome. M. Hardings tranſlation is thus: Thou thy ſelfe haſt the preeminence ouer all, being in the top of the Paſtorall Tower: Wherein theſe words (Ouer all) are not found in S. Auguſtine, but only deuiſed at pleaſure by M. Harding. In the third place beſides, other corruption, he diſſembleth the words that S. Auguſtine in the very ſame place allegeth out of S. Cyprian very well ſeruing to this purpoſe. The words be theſe: Nec Petrus vendicauit ſibi aliquid aut arroganter aſſumpſit, vt diceret ſe primatum tenere, & obtemperari ſibi à nouellis, & poſteris potiùs debere: Neither did Peter challenge any thing, or proudly preſume of himſelfe, to ſay, that he had the Primacy, and that therefore others as Nouices and vnderlings ſhould bee obedient vnto him. All theſe things M. Harding diſſembleth, and ſo to furniſh out his matter, and to ſmoth his Reader, he leaueth out what he liſteth.

Augustin. li. 1. Contra Epiſt. Pelagianorum ca. 1.

De Baptiſmo contra Donatiſt. li. 2. ca. 1. Cyprian. ad Quirinum.

M. Harding. The 15. Diuiſion.

The 103. vntruth. For S. Hierome meaneth not the Pope, but any other ſeuerall Biſhop.

The notable ſaying of S Hierome may not be let paſſe, Eccleſiæ ſalus à ſummi Sacerdotis dignitate pendet: cui ſi non exors quædam, & ab omnibus eminens detur poteſtas, tot in Eccleſijs efficiuntur ſchiſmata, quot Sacerdotes: The ſafety of the Church hangeth of the worſhip of the high Prieſt (103) (he meaneth the Pope Peters Succeſſour) to whom if there be not giuen a power peereleſſe, and ſurmounting all others, in the Churches wee ſhall haue ſo many Schiſmes as there be Prieſts.

Contra Lutheranos.

The

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

This place of S. Hierome is notably well noted. But if it might haue pleaſed M. Harding to note but the two lines that went before, he ſhould ſone haue ſeene, that this note was not worth the noting. For it is certaine, that S. Hierome there ſpeaketh generally of all Biſhops, and not one word ſpecially of the Biſhop of Rome. He intreateth there of the order of Confirmation, which, he ſaith, by the vſage of the Church, for quietneſſe and vnitie, in many places, was miniſtred onely by the Biſhop, and not by any other Prieſt, and that, he ſaith, Ad honorem magis Sacerdotij, quàm ad neceſſitatem Legis: More for the honour of the ſtate of Biſhops, than for the neceſſitie of the Law. And this (as I ſaid) he ſpeaketh generally of all Biſhops. Immediately after he addeth theſe words that M. Harding heere allegeth: Eccleſiæ ſalus. &c. The ſafety of the Church hangeth of the dignity of the high Prieſt. Herein S. Hierome agreeth thorowly with S. Cyprian, that is That for auoiding of Sects and Schiſmes, one high Prieſt, that is to ſay, one Biſhop, was by good policie appointed in euery Dioceſſe, to whoſe doings and Doctrine the reſt of the Clergie ſhould conforme themſelues. And by this order the vnitie of the Church was well preſerued. S. Cyprian ſaith: Eccleſia coherentium ſibi inuicem Sacerdotum glutino copulatur: The Church is ioined together by the conſent of Biſhops agreeing in one. So ſaith S. Hiereme: Singuli Eccleſiarum Epiſcopi, ſinguli Archiepiſcopi, ſinguli Archidiaconi, & omnis ordo Eccleſiaſticus ſuis Rectoribus nititur: There be ſeuerall Biſhops of Churches, ſeuerall Archbiſhops, and ſeuerall Archdeacons: and all the Eccleſiaſticall Order is ſtaied by the Gouernors. And the Gloſſe thereupon ſaith thus: Hieronymus probat hîc, plures Prælatos non debere eſſe in vna Eccleſia: ſed ſingulos debere eſſe in ſingulis Eccleſijs: S. Hierome heere prooueth, that there may not be two or moe Biſhops in one Church: but that a ſeuerall Biſhop muſt bee in euery ſeuerall Church. To the like purpoſe S. Hierome writeth vpon the Epiſtle vnto Titus: Hæc propterea, vt oſtenderemus, apud Veteres eoſdem fuiſſe Presbyteros, quos & Epiſcopos. Paulatim verò, vt diſſenſionum plantaria euellerentur, ad vnum omnem ſollicitudinem eſſe delatam: Theſe things haue I ſpoken, to the intent to ſhew, that in old time Prieſts and Biſhops were all one: and that in proceſſe, and by degrees, the whole charge was brought vnto one man (he meaneth within one Dioceſſe) that the occaſions of diſſenſion might be rooted out. And therefore, as it is before declared, S. Cyprian ſaith, Heereof ſpring Schiſmes, for that the Prieſt of the Lord is not obeied. And therefore alſo ſaith S. Hierome, Vnleſſe the Biſhop haue a ſpeciall power aboue others, there will be as many Schiſmes in the Church, as there be Prieſts. But all theſe things thus vttered generally of all Biſhops, M. Harding wreſteth and forceth only vnto one Biſhop: and thus, that is Generall, he maketh Speciall, and that is Speciall, he maketh Generall, at his pleaſure: and as before he miſreported S. Cyprian, euen ſo doth hee now likewiſe miſreport S. Hierome, and ſo ſhoareth vp a ruinous matter with the falſification of his Doctours.

Cyprian. Li. 4. Epiſt. 9.
Hieron. ad Nepotian.
7. Queſt. 1. in Apibus.
Hieron. ad Titum, ca. 1.
Cyprian. Li. 1. Epiſt. 3.
Hieron. contra Luciferian.

But M. Harding will ſay, S. Hierome vſeth theſe ſpeciall words, Summus Sacerdos: The higheſt Prieſt: which cannot otherwiſe be taken, but only of the Pope. And therefore he gaue this note with a ſpeciall Parentheſis: (He meaneth the Pope, Peters ſucceſſour.) Yet M. Harding knoweth, there is no ſuch neceſſitie, wherefore theſe words ſhould be ſo taken. His owne Amphilochius calleth S. Baſil, Summus Sacerdos: and yet he knoweth S. Baſil was neuer Biſhop of Rome. Euery Biſhop, within his owne Dioceſſe, may be called the higheſt Prieſt, in reſpect of other Prieſts that liue vnder him: And in this ſenſe Lactantius ſeemeth to call euery Biſhop ricke, Maximum Sacerdotium.

Amphilochius.
Lactant. lib. 4. cap. 30.

As for the Biſhop of Rome, S. Hierome aduanceth him not ſo high as M. Harding would ſeeme, but rather maketh him equall and leuell with all other Biſhops. For thus he writeth vnto Euagrius: Si authoritas quæritur, Orbis maior eſt Vrbe. Vbicunque fuerit Epiſcopus, ſiue Romæ, ſiue Eugubij, ſiue Conſtantinopoli, ſiue Rhegij, &c. eiuſdem eſt meriti, eiuſdem Sacerdotij: If we ſeeke for authority, the world is greater than the City of Rome. Whereſoeuer there is a Biſhop, whether he be at Rome, or at Eugubium, or at Conſtantinople, or at Rhegium, &c. he is of like worthineſſe, and of like Prieſthood.

Hieronymus ad Euagrium.

Heere S. Hierome ſpecially, and by name, reckoneth the Biſhop of Rome among others, and maketh him equall to the reſt. And againe he ſaith: Quid mihi profers vnius Vrbis conſuetudinem? What ſheweſt thou me the order or maner of one City? So much S. Hierome ſeemeth to ſet by the See of Rome. And to this end S. Cyprian ſaith: Hoc erant cæteri Apoſtoli, quod fuit Petrus, pari conſortio prædoti, & Honoris, & Poteſtatis: The reſt of the Apoſtles were the ſame that Peter was, all endued with like fellowſhip, both of Honour, and alſo of Power. And ſo S. Cyprian calleth Cornelius Biſhop of Rome, his brother: and Cyrillus calleth Cœleſtinus likewiſe Biſhop of Rome, his fellow-ſeruant. And therefore when I heare M. Harding, by his ſtrange interpretation, giue vnto the Biſhop of Rome, A Cypr. de ſimplicitat. Prælator. Cyprian. Li. 1. Epiſt. 3. Cyril. in epiſt. ad Cœleſtin.

Power

Power peereleſſe, and ſurmounting all others: We thinketh I heare Doctour Durandus ſay,

Durand. lib.2. Hic eſt Melchiſedech, cuius Sacerdotium non eſt cæteris comparandum: Ille eſt Caput omnium Pontificum, à quo illi, tanquam à capite membra, deſcendunt, & de cuius plenitudine omnes accipiunt: This is Melchiſedech, whoſe Prieſthood is not comparable vnto others, He is the Head of all Biſhops, from whom all they grow, as members grow from the Head, and of whoſe fulneſſe all they receiue. We thinketh I heare that is written by the Canoniſts,

Extrauag. Iohan.22. Cùm inter. In Gloſſa.* Dominus Deus noſter Papa: Our Lord God the Pope. And whereas he further ſaith, the ſafetie of the Church hangeth of the high Prieſt, whom he ſuppoſeth to be the Biſhop of Rome, verily S. Gregorie ſaith, Quando is, qui appellatur Vniuerſalis, cadit, vniuerſa Eccleſia, à ſtatu ſuo corruit: Whenſoeuer he that is called the Vniuerſall Biſhop, falleth, the whole Church from her ſtate muſt needs fall to the ground.

Impreſſu Lugduni, an.1556. & antea Lugduni, an.1513.

M. Harding. The 16. Diuiſion.

Gregor. Lib.4. Epiſt.76. There is an Epiſtle of Theodoretus, Biſhop of Cyrus, extant in Greeke, written to Leo Biſhop of Rome, wherein we finde a worthy Witneſſe of the Primacie of the See Apoſtolike. His words may thus bee Engliſhed: If Paul (ſaith he) the Preacher of the truth, and trumpet of the holy Ghoſt, ran to Peter, to bring from him a determination and declaration, for them who at Antioch were in argument and contention, concerning liuing after Moſes Law; much more we, who are but ſmall, and vile, ſhall run vnto your throne Apoſtolike, that of you wee may haue ſalue for the ſores of the Churches: (there follow theſe words:)

πολλῆς γὰρ ὁ ὑμῖν πάντα γὰρ ὑμῖν τὸ πρωτεύειν ἁρμόττει: Id eſt, Per omnia enim vobis conuenit primas tenere: That is to ſay, For in all things (perteining to Faith or Religion, ſo he meaneth) it is meet that you haue the chiefe doings, or that you haue the Primacie. For your high ſeat or throne is endued with many prerogatiues and priuileges.

ὥσπερ θρόνῳ κοσμεῖται πλουσίως τὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας κτήματα.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Here might I ſay, that this Theodoret was a deadly enimie of S. Cyrillus, and a Neſtorian Heretike, and condemned by that name in the Generall Councell of Conſtantinople, as appeareth by Euagrius, Nicephorus, and others. Verily, although he were brought into the Councell of Chalcedon by the authoritie and fauour of the Emperour Martianus, yet the Biſhops of Illyricum, Ægypt, and Paleſtine, cried out againſt him, Fides perit: Iſtum Canones eijciunt: Mitte hunc foras, magiſtrum Neſtorij: Nolite iſtum dicere Epiſcopum: Non eſt Epiſcopus: Impugnatorem Dei foras mitte: Hæreticum foras mitte: Iudæum foras mitte: The Faith is loſt: This man the Canons throw out: Out with this fellow: Out with Neſtorius Schoolemaſter: Call him not Biſhop: Hee is no Biſhop: Out with him that fighteth againſt God: Out with this Heretike: Out with this Iew.

Concil. Conſtãtinop. Actio 5. Euagrius, li.4. cap.37. Nicephor.l.17. cap.27. Cone. Chalced. Actio.1.

But I will not vſe this aduantage. I iudge rather, that this Theodoretus, as he was a man of deepe learning, and great renoune, ſo he was alſo a carefull and godly Biſhop. As for the Neſtorian Hereſie, he defied it in the Councell of Conſtantinople, and openly pronounced, Anathema Neſtorio, Accurſed be Neſtorius.

Concil. Cõſtantinop. Actio.8.

In theſe words that M. Harding hath here alleged, he ſaith nothing that of our part is denied. Certainly here is not one word, neither of the Head of the Church, nor of Vniuerſall Biſhop.

But if Theodoretus thinke S. Paul went vp to Hieruſalem, either to viſit Peter, as the Head of the Church, as M. Harding ſeemeth to gheſſe, or elſe to be better reſolued of his Doctrine, as ſtanding in ſome doubt, whether he had thitherto preached the truth, or no, then doth he quite ouerthrow S. Pauls whole meaning. For it is plaine, that S. Paul knoweth not Peter for his Head, but contrariwiſe taketh him as his equall. For thus he ſaith:

Ad Galat.2. Videbant mihi concreditum eſſe Euangelium Præputij, ſicut Petro Circumciſionis: They ſaw, that I was put in truſt with the Goſpell ouer the Heathens, euen as Peter was ouer the Iewes.

Dextras dederunt ſocietatis. And againe: Iames, Peter, and Iohn, that ſeemed to be the Pillars gaue vnto me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowſhip. Here we ſee, betwéne Peter and Paul, a couenant of equalitie and neither ſuperioritie, nor ſubiection.

Ambroſ. Sermon 66. And therefore S. Ambroſe ſaith, as it is before noted, Inter Petrum & Paulum, quis cui præponatur, incertum eſt: Betweene Peter and Paul, whether ought to be preferred before other, I cannot tell.

Actor.15. Neither went he vp to be better informed of the truth, as being doubtfull of his owne Doctrine. All his reaſoning, and the whole drift of that Epiſtle, is to the contrarie. For thus lie his words: I neuer conferred with Fleſh and Blood, (that is to ſay, with any man)

Galat.ca.1. neither did I returne to Hieruſalem to them that had been Apoſtles before me: I receiued not the Goſpell that I haue preached, of any man, but by the reuelation of Ieſus Chriſt. If any preach vnto

Galat.ca.2. you any other Goſpell, than that I haue preached, accurſed be he. They that were in chiefe regard among the Apoſtles, touching the truth of the Goſpell, added nothing vnto me. I withſtood Peter, euen in the face, and ſpake vnto him before all the people: For hee walked not vprightly, but was worthy to be blamed. Hereby it may ſufficiently appeare, that S. Pauls going to Hieruſalem was not to bring from Peter a determination of any matter of Truth, that lay in question, as it is heere supposed. And therefore S. Hierome saith: Ad hoc iuit Hierosolymam, vt videret Apostolum (Petrum) non discendi studio, qui & ipse eundem prædicationis haberet authorem: sed honoris priori Apostolo deferendi: Paul went to Hierusalem, to the intent to see Peter the Apostle, not to learne any thing of him, as hauing the same Author of his preaching that Peter had: but to shew reuerence vnto him that had beene Apostle before him. And againe: Propterea quindecim ponit dies, vt ostendat non fuisse grande tempus, quo potuerit aliquid a Petro Discere: vt ad illum sensum, à quo cœpit, cuncta referantur, se non ab homine doctum esse, sed à Deo: Therefore he nameth fifteene daies, to shew that hee had no long time that he might learne any thing of Peter: to the intent to drine all his words to that sense, wherewith he began, That he was taught not by man, but by God. Likewise saith Hugo Cardinalis, a barbarous Writer: Secundum Literam instruimur de mutua dilectione, quam deberent habere Prædicatores & Doctores: quia Paulus venit videre Petrum, quoniam bona audierat de eius Doctrina: According to the Letter, wee are heere instructed of mutuall loue, which ought to be betweene all Preachers and Doctours. For Paul went to visit Peter, because he had heard good of his Doctrine. But what can be so plaine as that is written by Chrysostome touching the same? His words be these: Paulus nihil opus habebat Petro, nec eius egebat voce: sed honore par erat illi: nihil enim hîc dicam amplius: Paul had no need of Peter neither needed he to be taught at his mouth: but he was equall to him in honour. I will say no more. And immediately after: Sicut nunc multi fratrum nostrorum ad viros sanctos proficiscuntur eodem affectu tunc Paulus ad Petrum profectus est: Like as now adaies many of our brethren goe to holy men, so then, with like affection, went Paul vnto Peter.

was

Hieron. in epist. ad Galat. 1. ca.

Hieronym. eodem loco.

Galat. 2.

Hugo Cardinalis in epist. ad Galat ca. 1.

Chrys. in Epist. ad Galat. ca. 1.

As for the rest, that the Bishop of Rome had an estimation, and a credit, and a prerogatiue before others, it is not denied. For of the foure Patriarkes, he had the first place, both in Councell, and out of Councell: and therefore the greatest authoritie and direction of matters in all Assemblies. And this was, τὸ πρωτεύειν: To haue the first or highest roome: and πρεσβεῖον, A dignitie or priuiledge: Which words M. Harding hath noted in the Margin.

Heere M. Harding seemeth to reason thus:

The Bishop of Rome had a priuilege or dignitie aboue others:

Ergo, He was an Vniuersall Bishop.

This Argument concludeth A genere ad speciem affirmatiuè: and, as M. Harding knoweth, was neuer allowed in any Schooles.

Likewise he seemeth to say,

Paul went vp to Hierusalem, to visit Peter:

Ergo, The Bishop of Rome is Head of the Church.

Such weake geare M. Harding hath brought forth; And yet with his furniture of words it seemeth somewhat. By the same reason he may proue, that S. Iames also was Head of the Church, as well as Peter. For Paul saith, he visited him as well as Peter. And S. Hierome saith of himselfe, That hee purposely went to Alexandria, to see Didymus: yet was not Didymus therefore Head of the Church.

Galat cap. 1.

Hieron. in Proœmio in Epist. ad Ephesios.

Indeed Hugo Cardinalis saith: Heereof it first began, that Bishops and Archbishops made a Vow to visit the Pope, because Paul went to Hierusalem to see Peter: And saith further, That Custome hath added to the same this Commandement, written in the Deuteronomie: Non apparebis in conspectu Domini vacuus: Thou shalt not appeare in the presence of the Lord without somewhat.

Hugo Cardin. in Ep. ad Galat.

Deuter. 16.

M. Harding tripping, as he saith, so nicely ouer the Doctours, hath not yet once touched that thing that was loked for, and that he hath onely, and with such affiance, taken in hand. For notwithstanding a great pompe of words, and the names of many holy Fathers, yet hath he not hitherto shewed, that the Bishop of Rome, within the space of six hundred yeres after Christ, was euer called the Vniuersall Bishop, or the Head of the Vniuersall Church: which thing if he could haue shewed, I beleeue he would not so lightly haue tript it ouer.

M. Harding. The 17. Diuision.

Now let vs see whether this chiefe authoritie may be found necessary by reason. That a multitude which is in it selfe one, cannot continue one, vnlesse it be contained and holden in by one, both learned Philosophers haue declared, and the common nature of things teacheth. For euery multitude of their own nature goeth asunder into many; and from another it commeth that it is one, and that it continueth one. And that whereof it is one, and is kept in vnion or oneneſſe, it is necessary that it be one, else that selfe also shall need the helpe of another, that it be one. For which cause, that saying of Homer was alleged by Aristotle, as most notable: It is not good to haue many Rulers: Let one be Ruler. Whereby is meant, that plurality of soueraigne Rulers is not fit to conteine and keepe vnity of a multitude of Subiects. Therefore ἐκ ἀγαθὸν πολυκοιρανίη, εἷς κοίρανος ἔστω.

sith

ſith that the Church of Chriſt is one, (for as there is one Faith, one Baptiſme, one Calling, ſo there is one Church, yea all we are one Body, and members one of another, as S Paul ſaith, and in our Creed wee all profeſſe to beleeue one holy Catholike and Apoſtolike Church) therefore, I ſay, it hath need of one Prince and Ruler, to be kept and holden in. If it be otherwiſe, vnitie muſt needs foorthwith be ſparkled and broken aſunder. And therefore it behooued, that the rule and gouernment of the Church ſhould be committed to one.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

All this is proued by Ariſtotle the Philoſopher, by one verſe of the Poet Homer, and by M. Hardings drift of reaſon, and none otherwiſe. Ariſtotles and Homers authority in this caſe cannot be great. And yet they ſpake only of one Captaine Generall in one field, and of one King in one Realme, whereas number or fellowſhip muſt of neceſſitie breed confuſion. But neither of them euer dreamed this new fantaſie, that one King ſhould rule ouer the whole world.

M. Hardings reaſons would weigh the more, if either Chriſt, or Peter, or Paul, or any old Doctour, or Catholike Father, had euer vſed the ſame. Otherwiſe, S. Auguſtine ſpeaking of Diſcourſe of reaſon in the vnderſtanding of the Scriptures, ſaith thus: Hæc conſuetudo periculoſa eſt. Per Scripturas enim diuinas multò tutius ambulatur: This maner of expounding is very dangerous. The ſafer way is to walke by the Scriptures. The force of M. Hardings reaſon cauſed Alexander the ambitious King of Macedonie to ſay, As the Heauens can haue but one Sunne, ſo may the whole world haue but one King: And likewiſe Pope Bonifacius the eight to ſay, as is before, In principio creauit Deus Cœlum & Terram: non in principijs: In the beginning, as in one, God made Heauen and Earth: and not in the beginnings, as in many: Ergo, The Pope is Head of the Church.

Auguſt. de Doctrina Chriſtian. li. 3. ca. 28.

Quintus Curtius.

De Maioritate & Obedientia, Vnam Sanctam.

But (ſaith M. Harding) euery multitude naturally goeth aſunder, and the thing that keepeth it together muſt needs be one. That is to ſay, It is the Pope onely that preſerueth the vnitie of the Church, and maketh it one: And therefore the Pope himſelfe muſt néeds bée one: Otherwiſe, being two, or moe, ſaith M. Harding, they ſhould néed ſome other thing to make them one. And yet he remembreth, that the Councell of Syrmium, to take vp the contention betweene Felix and Liberius, that ambitiouſly ſtroue together for the Sée of Rome, willed them to be Biſhops there both together: which thing notwithſtanding, they meant not therefore neither to diſſolue the vnitie of the Church, nor to make the Church a Monſter with two Heads. And ſo Roſſenſis ſaith: The Church is one, not becauſe of Chriſt, but becauſe of the Pope, that keepeth it in one. This reaſon that M. Harding vſeth, is newly deuiſed, and was neuer remembred of any of the Old Fathers. S. Gregorie ſaith: None of my predeceſſors would euer take vpon him to vſe this vngodly name, to bee called the Vniuerſall Biſhop: And yet it appeareth not, but the Church was then kept in vnitie.

Sozomen. lib. 4. cap. 14. κοινὴ ἐκκλησία.

Roſſenſis.

Gregor. lib. 4. Epiſt. 32.

Neither can this infinite power, that is imagined, ſtand without infinite great dangers. And forasmuch as it pleaſeth M. Harding to auouch the gouernment of Chriſts Church by Philoſophers and Poets, that neuer knew Chriſt, it may alſo pleaſe him to remember, that his Poets likewiſe ſay, that when Phaeton, an vndiſcreet and a fond yong man, would néeds leape into Phebus his fathers Chariot, to carry the Sun beames about the Heauens, for lacke of ſkill, he ſone ſet a fire the whole world. It may not much diſpleaſe M. Harding, that I compare the Biſhop of Rome with Phaeton, a rath yong man: For S. Gregorie, for the ſame attempt and enterpriſe, as it plainly appeareth by his words, compareth him with Lucifer, and with Antichriſt. And further ſaith, Si hanc cauſam æquanimiter portamus vniuerſæ Eccleſiæ Fidem corrumpimus: If we take this matter quietly, we deſtroy the Faith of the whole Church.

Gregor. Lib. 4. Epiſt. 34. & Epiſt. 38.

This reaſon ſtandeth thus: The Church of Chriſt is one:

Ergo, The Pope is an Vniuerſall Biſhop.

Gregor. Lib. 7. Epiſt. 24.

If any man deny this Sequell, I maruell by what Logicke M. Harding will euer be able to make it good.

M. Harding. The 18. Diuiſion.

And whereas theſe Goſpellers ſay, that Chriſt is the gouernour of the Church, and that hee being one keepeth the Church in vnitie; we anſwer, that although the Church be firſt and principally gouerned by Chriſt, as all other things are, yet Gods high goodneſſe hath ſo ordeined, as each thing may be prouided for, according to his owne condition and nature. Therefore whereas mankind dependeth moſt of ſenſe, and receiueth all learning and inſtitution of ſenſible things, therefore it hath need of a man to be a gouernour and ruler, whom it may perceiue by outward ſenſe. And euen ſo the Sacraments, by which the grace of God is giuen vnto vs, in conſideration of mans nature, being ſo made of God, as it is, are ordeined in things ſenſible. Therefore it was behouefull, this gouernment of the Church to bee committed to one man, which at the firſt was Peter, and afterward each ſucceſſour of Peter for his time, as is afore declared. Neither can this one man haue this power of any conſent, or companie of men, but it is neceſſary he haue it of God. (104) For to ordeine and appoint the Vicar of Chriſt, it perteineth to none other, than to Chriſt. For

The 104. vntruth. For Chriſt neuer appointed any ſuch Vicar.

For whereas the Church, and all that is of the Church, is Chriſts, as well for other cauſes, as ſpecially for that we are bought with a great price, euen with his blood, as S. Paul ſaith, how can it pertaine to any other, than to him, to inſtitute and appoint to himſelfe a Vicar, that is, one to doe his ſtead? Chriſts Vicar.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

M. Harding ſtandeth very long in diſcourſing this matter by naturall reaſon. And for that he knew S. Auguſtine ſaith, Si ratio contra diuinarum Scripturarum authoritatem redditur, quamlibet accuta ſit, fallit veriſimilitudine: Nam vera eſſe non poteſt: If naturall reaſon be alleged againſt the authoritie of the holy Scriptures, be it neuer ſo ſubtile, it beguileth men by a likeneſſe or colour of the Truth: For true it cannot be. And for that he alſo ſaw, the reaſons he hath brought, are very ſimple, and carry no weight; he hath therefore thruſt a great many of them in a throng together, both to fill the hearers ſenſes, and alſo that the one might the better aid the other. Aug. ad Mar-cellin. Epiſt. 7.

For his entry, in mirth and game, he calleth vs Goſpellers. God open the eies of his heart, that he may ſee the brightneſſe of Gods Goſpell, and conſider what it is that he hath refuſed. Surely it is an horrible thing, for a Chriſtian man thus to make mockery of the Goſpell of Chriſt. S. Paul ſaith: Si opertum eſt Euangelium, in illis qui pereunt eſt opertum: If the Goſpell be couered, it is couered from them that periſh. 1. Cor. 4.

It miſliketh him, that we build the vnitie of the Church vpon Chriſt only, and not alſo vpon the Pope: and this he calleth theſe New Goſpellers Doctrine. God be thanked, theſe Goſpellers haue good warrant for their Doctrine. S Paul ſaith: Eum dedit Caput ſuper omnia ipſi Eccleſiæ, quæ eſt Corpus eius: God hath giuen Chriſt to bee Head ouer all, euen to the Church, which is his Body. And againe: Ille eſt Caput, qui dat ſalutem Corpori: Chriſt is the Head, that giueth health vnto the Body. Chriſt is our peace: All we are one in Chriſt Ieſus. Therefore S. Gregorie ſaith: Nos quoque à vobis non longè ſumus, quoniam in illo, qui vbique eſt, vnum ſumus. Agamus ergo ei gratias, qui, ſolutis inimicitijs in Carne ſua, fecit, vt in omni orbe terrarum vnus eſſet Grex, & vnum Ouile, ſub ſe vno Paſtore: We are not farre away from you, becauſe in him, that is euery where, we are all one. Therefore let vs giue him thankes, that, enmitie being broken in his fleſh, hath cauſed, that in all the World there ſhould be one Flocke, and one Fold, vnder himſelfe, being the one Shepheard. Theſe places and infinite other like, are good warrants of our Doctrine. Ad Epheſ. 1. Ad Epheſ. 5. Ad Epheſ. 2. Gregor. Lib. 4. Epiſt. 36. ad Eulogium. Iohan. 10.

Now if M. Harding be able by the Scriptures, or Holy Doctors, to ſay as much for the Biſhop of Rome, that he is the head of the Church, that is to ſay, the head of Chriſts body: Or, that the Church receiueth influence or health from him: Or, that he is our peace: Or, that we are all one in him: Or, that all the World is one Flocke, and one Fold, and he the one Shepheard: Or, that S. Paul, as he ſaid, There is one Lord, one Faith, one Baptiſme, ſo he ſaid alſo, There is one Pope: then haue we ſome cauſe to thinke, according to M. Hardings fantaſie, that the vnitie of the whole Church is founded and built vpon the Pope. Certainly it ſeemeth S. Auguſtine would not giue this Priuiledge vnto S. Paul. His words be plaine: Nec Paulus radix eorum erat, quos plantauerat; ſed ille potius, qui ait, Ego ſum vitis: vos eſtis ſarmenta. Caput etiam eorum quomodo eſſe poterat, cùm dicat, Nos omnes vnum eſſe Corpus in Chriſto, ipſumque Chriſtum Caput eſſe vniuerſi Corporis? Neither was Paul the root of them whom he had planted, but rather he that ſaith, I am the Vine, and you are the ſprigs. But the Head of them how could he be, ſeing he himſelfe ſaith, All we in Chriſt are one Body; and, that of that whole Body Chriſt himſelfe is the Head? If S. Paul, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, could not be Head of the Church, how may we then thinke, that the Biſhop of Rome may be Head of the Church? Ad Epheſ. 4. Auguſt. contra literas Petiliani. lib. 3. cap. 42. Iohan. 15. Epheſ. 1. Epheſ. 4.

But mankind (ſaith M. Harding) dependeth moſt of ſenſe: Therefore the whole Church muſt haue one man to rule and gouerne ouer it: and that man is Peters ſucceſſour, and Chriſts Vicar in Earth. I maruell that none of the old Fathers could euer vnderſtand either the neceſſity of this reaſon, or this ſpeciall name and Title of Chriſts Vicar. Howbeit, one true word M. Harding hath vttered amongſt many others, that is, that to appoint Chriſts Vicar, it perteineth only vnto Chriſt, and to none other. Of which ground we may well reaſon thus: Chriſt neuer ordeined, nor appointed, nor once named, the Biſhop of Rome, or his Succeſſour, to be his Vicar, that is, to be an Vniuerſall Biſhop ouer the whole Church: Therefore, by M. Hardings owne Poſition, the Biſhop of Rome hath of long time vſurped a Power, againſt Chriſt, without Commiſſion, and in deed is not Chriſts Vicar. S. Hierome ſaith generally of all Biſhops: Nouerint Epiſcopi, ſe magis Conſuetudine, quàm diſpoſitionis Dominicæ Veritate, Presbyteris eſſe maiores: Let Biſhops vnderſtand, that they bee greater than the Prieſts, by Order and Cuſtome (of the Church) and not by the Truth of Gods Ordinance. If Chriſt, as S. Hierome ſaith, appointed not one Prieſt aboue another, how then is it likely, hee appointed one Prieſt Hieron. in epiſt. ad Titum.

to

Christs Vicar.

to be, as M. Harding saith, Prince and Ruler ouer all Priests thorow out the whole World.

As for the vniuersall supplying of Christs rome, Tertullian saith, The Holy Ghost is Christs Vicar: For thus he writeth: Sedet ad dextram Dei Patris: misit Vicariam vim Spiritus Sancti, qui credentes agat: Christ sitteth at the right hand of God the Father: and in stead of himselfe, sent the power of the Holy Ghost, as his Vicar, to direct them that beleeue.

Tertull. de præscription. contra Hæreticos.

But because we are not onely lead inwardly by Gods Spirit, but also outwardly by our senses, therefore hath Christ appointed, not one man to be his Vicar generall ouer all, but euery of his Apostles, and so euery Priest, to be his Vicar within his Diuision. So saith Eusebius Bishop of Rome: Caput Ecclesiæ Christus est: Christi autem Vicarij Sacerdotes sunt, qui vice Christi, legatione funguntur in Ecclesia: Christ is the Head of the Church: and his Vicars be the Priests, that doe their message in the Church, in the stead of Christ. Wherefore saith S. Hierome: Potentia diuitiarum, & paupertatis humilitas, vel sublimiorem, vel inferiorem, Episcopum non facit. Cæterùm omnes Apostolorum successores sunt: The stoutnesse of riches, or the humilitie of pouertie, maketh a Bishop neither higher nor lower: But all Bishops be the Apostles successours. Other Vniuersall Vicar of Christ there is none named in the Scriptures, vnlesse it be hee of whom S. Paul forewarneth vs: Homo ille sceleratus, filius perditus, &c. That wicked man, that childe of perdition, that setteth himselfe vp against God, and that so farre foorth, that hee will sit in the Temple of God, and shew himselfe, as if hee were God. But this Vicar, Christ shall destroy with the Spirit of his mouth.

Euseb. Episcopi Rom. Epist. 2.

Hieron. ad Euagrium, to. 2. pag. 329.

2. Thess. 2.

To conclude, M. Harding seemeth to reason thus: Mankind dependeth most of sense: Ergo, The Pope is the Head of the Vniuersall Church. Heere is a very vnsensible argument: no sense, no reason can make it good. By as good Sequell hee might say, Mankind dependeth most of sense: Ergo, One King must rule ouer the whole World.

M. Harding. The 19. Diuision.

A sort of simple reasons.

Wherefore, to conclude, except wee would wickedly grant, that Gods prouidence hath lacked, or doth lacke to his Church, for loue of which he hath giuen his only begotten Sonne, and which he hath promised neuer to forget, so as the woman cannot forget the childe, she bare in her wombe: reason may soone induce vs to beleeue, that to one man, one Bishop, the chiefe and highest of all Bishops, the successour of Peter, the rule and gouernment of the Church by God hath beene deferred. For else, if God had ordeined, that in the Church should be sundry Heads and Rulers, and none constituted to be ouer other, but all of equall power, each one among their people; then he should seeme to haue set vp so many Churches, as he hath appointed gouernours: and so hee shall appeare to haue brought in among his faithfull people, that vnruly confusion, the destruction of all Common Weales so much abhorred of Princes, which the Greekes call. Anarchian, which is a state, for lacke of order in gouernours, without any gouernment at all. Which thing, sith that the wise and politicke men of this world doe shun and detest, in the gouernment of these earthly Kingdomes, as most pernicious and hurtfull; to attribute to the high wisdome of God, and to our Lord Christ, who is the author of the most ordinate disposition of all things in earth, and in heauen; it were hainous, and prophane impietie. Wherefore, if the state of a Kingdome cannot continue safe, vnlesse one haue power to rule, how shall not the Church, spread so farre abroad, bee in danger of great disorders, corruption, and vtter destruction, if, as occasion shall be giuen, among so great strifes and debates of men, among so many firebrands of discord, tossed to and fro by the Diuels, enemies of vnitie, there be not one Head and Ruler, of all to be consulted, of all to be heard, of all to be followed and obeied? If strife and contention be stirred about matters of Faith, if controuersie happen to arise about the sense of the Scriptures, shall it not bee necessarie there be one supreme Iudge, to whose sentence the parties may stand? If need require (as it hath beene often seene) that Generall Councels bee kept, how can the Bishops, to whom the matter belongeth, be brought together, but by the commandement of one head gouernour, whom they owe their obedience vnto? For else being summoned, perhaps they will not come. Finally, how shall the contumacie and pertinacie of mischieuous persons be repressed, specially if the Bishops be at dissension within themselues, if there bee not a supreme power, who towards some may vse the rod, towards other some the spirit of lenitie, with such discreet temperament, as malice be vanquished, right defended, and concord procured, lest if the small sparkes of strife bee not quenched by authoritie at the beginning, at length a great flame of Schismes and Heresies flash abroad, to the great danger of a multitude? Therefore, as there is one Body of Christ, one Flocke, one Church euen so is there one head of that his mysticall Body, one Shepheard, and one chiefe seruant, made steward, ouerseer, and ruler of Christs household in his absence, vntill his comming againe.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Whoso denieth the Bishop of Romes supreme gouernment, saith M. Harding, he vtterly denieth Gods prouidence: and thus the great prouidence of God is brought forth to serue M. Hardings simple reason. The like consideration, as may be supposed, moued Petrus Bertrandus to write this speciall Cloose vpon the Decretals: Non videretur Dominus discretus fuisse, vt cum reuerentia eius loquar, nisi vnicum post se talem Vicarium reliquisset: Otherwise Christ should not seeme to haue dealt discreetly, sauing his reuerence, vnlesse he had left some one such Vicar behinde him. And therefore he saith further: Christo data ta est omnis potestas in Cœlo, & in terra: Ergo Summus Pontifex, qui est eius Vicarius, habet eandem potestatem: All maner power both in Heauen and Earth is giuen to Christ. Therefore the highest Bishop, which is his Vicar, hath the same power. Likewise they say: [a] Papa potest facere omnia quæ Christus ipse potest: The Pope may doe whatsoeuer Christ himselfe may doe. And, [b] Papæ, & Christi, est vnum Tribunal: The Pope and Christ haue one Consistorie, and keepe one Court.

De Maioritate & Obedientia, Vnam Sanctã. In Glossa.

[a] De Sentent. Excommu. Ca. Si aliquid. Hostien.

[b] De translatione Episco. Ca. Quanto Innocen. 3.

Vpon occasion hereof, M. Harding saieth to reason in this sort: Vnlesse there bee one appointed by God to be the Vniuersall Bishop of the world, hauing Omnia iura in scrinio [c] pectoris sui, all maner law and right in the closet of his breast: [d] Cui sit pro ratione voluntas, Whose pleasure may stand in stead of law: Vnto whom, whatsoeuer he doe, no man may say, [e] Domine, cur ita facis? Sir, why doe you so? And the same neither exhort, nor teach, nor minister Sacrament, nor exercise Discipline, nor doe the dutie either of Bishop, or of Priest, or of Deacon, or any other the meanest officer of the Church, but onely take vpon him to rule, and gouerne the whole Church: Vnlesse there be some such one, then, saith M. Harding, God hath no prouidence, neither is carefull for his Church.

[c] Extr. de Cõstitutionibus licet Romanus.

[d] De transl. Episcop. Ca. Quanto in Glossa.

[e] De concessione prebende. Ad Apostolatus, in Glossa.

If controuersie grow about the vnderstanding and sense of Gods word, if it be necessarie that a Councell be called, if contention fall out betweene any other inferior Bishops; then saith M. Harding, it is necessary, there bee one supreme Iudge, that may infallibly declare Gods meaning, that may summon the Councell, that may heare, and determine matters betweene the Bishops. Touching the searching out of the sense of the Scriptures, S. Augustine giueth sundrie good rules: But this strange rule of recourse to the Pope, he toucheth not, nor taketh it for any rule.

De Doctrina Christian. li. 3.

But they say, The Scriptures be darke: therefore we must seeke the meaning of them in the Doctors. The Doctors agree not: Then must we weigh and trie them by the Master of the Sentences. The Master of the Sentences himselfe sometimes is not holden: then must we seeke further to the Schole Doctors. The Schole Doctors can in no wise agree: there is Scotus against Thomas: and Occam against Scotus: and Alliacensis against Occam: the Nominals against the Reals: the Scholasticals against the Canonists: the contention is greater, and the doubts darker, than euer they were before. Neither is there any resolution to be hoped for, but onely of the Bishop of Rome: whom M. Harding calleth the supreme Iudge: who, as one saith, is Doctor vtriusque Legis. Authoritate, non Scientia: Doctour of both Lawes, by Authority, not by Knowledge. Howbeit it appeareth his knowledge and authoritie in such cases are both like. For notwithstanding any his determination, the contention standeth still as it did before. Truely Alphonsus de Castro, a Doctor of the same side, saith: Cùm constet plures Papas adeò illiteratos esse, vt Grammaticam penitùs ignorent, quî fit, vt sacras Literas interpretari possint? Seeing it is well knowen, that many Popes be so void of learning, that they be vtterly ignorant of their Grammar, how may it be, that they can expound the holy Scriptures? Thus that supreme Iudge, at whose onely hands M. Harding would haue all the World to seeke for the very sense of Gods word, as Alphonsus saith, may goe to Schole to learne his Grammar. And what if the Pope be an Heretique, as Liberius was an Arian: Honorius an Eunomian: Anastasius was a Photinian: and as Lyra saith, Multi Papæ inuenti sunt Apostatæ: Many Popes haue beene runnagates of the Faith: Or what if he be a sorcerer, and haue league and conference with the Diuell, as had Syluester the second? Yet must we needs haue recourse vnto such an one, as vnto the mouth of God, for the certaine sense and meaning of Gods word? Verily in the old times, men that stood in doubt of any matter of learning, and would gladly be resolued, sought vnto the best learned, and not vnto the Pope. Pope Leo himselfe in a case of doubt, thought it good to conferre with other Bishops. The Bishops of Numidia sent, not to the Bishop of Rome to be resolued, but vnto S. Cyprian, and other Bishops within Aphrica. So likewise S. Hierome writeth of himselfe: Ob hanc causam vel maximè Alexandriam nuper perrexi, vt viderem Didymum, & ab eo in Scripturis omnibus, quæ habebam, dubia omnia exquirerem: For this cause chiefly I went of late to Alexandria, to the intent I might see Didymus, and be resolued by him in all such doubts, as I had found in the Scriptures. And S. Ambrose saith, that certaine learned men in matter of question, hauing receiued answer, and determination from the Bishop of Rome, yet notwithstanding for their better satisfaction, sought further vnto him. Thus he writeth: Post Romanæ Ecclesiæ definitionem, meam adhuc expectant sententiam: After the discussing of the Church of Rome, they yet looke for my sentence.

Baldus.

Alphonsus de Castro, li. 1. Ca. 4.

Alphonsus de Castro, lib. 1. Ca. 4. Nicola. Lyra in Matth. 16. ca. Platina in Syluestro. Leo Epist. 37. ad Episcopum Rauennatem. Cyprian. li. 1. Epist. 4. Hier. in proœmio in Epist. ad Ephes. Ambr. lib. 10. Epist. 83.

As for Generall Councels, it is well knowen, and God willing, shall appeare hereafter more at large, that they were called, and summoned by the Emperours onely, and not by the Bishops of Rome. Sozomenus saith: Imperator præceperat, Concilium Mediolani celebrari: The Emperour had commanded a Councell to be kept at Millane.

Sozomenus citatur inter Acta Liberij.

Matters of variance betweene Bishops were taken vp, not onely by the Bishop of Rome, whose greatest practise these many yeres hath bene to inflame, and maintaine discord among Princes, but also sometimes by the Prince, sometimes by Councels, sometimes by other Bishops, sometimes by some inferior persons, that were no Bishops. S. Ambrose was sent for into France, to pacifie the Bishops there. Bernard being but an Abbat, compounded that great dissension, that was betweene Pope Innocentius, and Peter in the Church of Rome. Therefore to these purposes, it is nothing needfull to erect a new Vicar Generall, or to giue any man this Vniuersall power ouer the Church of God.

Ambros. De obitu Valentiniani.
Bernardus in Cantica Canti. Serm. 22.

M. Hardings reasons proceed thus: God is carefull, and hath a speciall prouidence for his Church: Doubtfull places of the Scripture must be expounded: Generall Councels must bee summoned: Bishops being at variance must be reconciled: Ergo, The Bishop of Rome is Christs Vniuersall Vicar, and Head of the Vniuersall Church. Otherwise, saith he, the Church can neuer be rightly gouerned, nor preserued in Vnity. But Gods name be blessed for euer. God is able to gouerne his Church, not onely without such a Vicar, but also maugre such a Vicar. Miserable were Gods Church, if it stood onely at the Bishop of Romes gouernment. Long it were to open the lewdenesse and dissolution of his owne Church, that lieth before him. S. Bernard speaking of the same, saith thus: Mali ibi proficiunt: boni deficiunt: Ill men there goe forward: But good men goe backward. A planta pedis vsque ad verticem Capitis, non est in ea sanitas: From the sole of the foot, vnto the crowne of the head, there is no whole part in it. And againe: Serui Christi seruiunt Antichristo: They would be called the Seruants of Christ, and yet indeed they serue Antichrist. If the Bishop of Rome can no better rule a few Churches in one Citie, how then is he able to rule the infinite multitude of the whole Vniuersall Church of God?

Bernard. ad Eugen. li. 4.
Bernard. de Conuers. Paul.
Esai 1.
Bernard. in Cantica Canti.

But God hath other wayes and meanes, whereby he hath euer gouerned his Church. S. Cyprian saith: Idcò plures sunt in Ecclesia Sacerdotes, vt vno hæresim faciente, cæteri subueniant: Therefore there bee many Bishops in the Church, that one running into Heresie, the rest may helpe. And againe: The Church is preserued in vnitie, by the consent of Bishops agreeing in one. And to this end S. Hierome saith, as is before alleged: Nouerint Episcopi, se debere in commune Ecclesiam regere: Let Bishops vnderstand, that they ought to rule the Church, as all in one.

Cyprian. ad Stephan. li. 3. Epist. 13.
Cyprian. li. 4. Epist. 9.
Hieronym. in Ep. ad Titum. Ca. 1.

As for the vnitie, that M. Harding meaneth, it is a vile subiection and seruitude: it is no vnitie. S. Hierome saith: Nomine Vnitatis & Fidei, infidelitas scripta est: Nam illo tempore nihil tam pium, nihil tam conueniens seruo Dei videbatur, quàm vnitatem sequi, & a totius mundi communione non scindi: Infidelitie hath beene written vnder the name of Faith, and Vnitie. For at that time nothing seemed either so godly, or so meet for the seruant of God, as to follow vnitie, and not to bee diuided from the Communion of the whole world. They seemed, saith S. Hierome, to follow vnitie, and yet notwithstanding they hung in infidelitie. So likewise saith the wise man: In tanto viuentes ignorantiæ bello, tot & tanta mala pacem appellabant: Whereas they liued in such a warre of ignorance, so many and so great mischiefes they called Vnitie.

Hieron. contra Luciferianos.

Sapientiæ 14.

M. Harding. The 20. Diuision.

But heere perhaps some will say, it cannot appeare by the euent of things, and practise of the Church, that the Pope had this supreme power, and authority ouer all Bishops, and ouer all Christs flocke in matters touching Faith, and in cases Ecclesiasticall. Verily, whosoeuer perviseth the Ecclesiasticall stories, and vieweth the state of the Church of all times and ages, cannot but confesse this to bee most euident. And heere I might allege first certaine places of the New Testament, declaring that Peter practised this preeminence among the Disciples at the beginning, and that they yeelded the same, as of right appertaining vnto him. As when he first, and onely mooued them to chuse one in the stead of Iudas, and demeaned himselfe, as the chiefe author of all that was done therein: when he made answer for all, at what time they were gased, and wondred at, and of some mocked, as being drunken with new wine: for that in the 50. day they spake with tongues of so many Nations: when he vsed that dreadfull seueritie in punishing the falshood and hypocrisie of Ananias and Saphira his wife: when variance being risen about the obseruation of certaine points of Moses Law, he as chiefe, and head of the rest, said his mind before all others. Among many other places left out for breuitie, that is not of least weight, that Paul being returned to Damasco out of Arabia, after three yeeres went to Ierusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteene daies. Act. 1. Act. 2. Act. 5. Act. 15.

The 105. Vntruth, ioined with a slander.

(105) But because our aduersaries doe wreathe and wrest the Scriptures (bee they neuer so plaine) by their priuate and strange constructions, to an vnderstanding quite contrarie to the sense of the Catholike Church: I will referre the Reader for further proofe of this matter, to the stories bearing faithfull witnesse of the whole state and condition of the Church in all ages. In which stories, the practise of the Church is plainely reported to haue beene such, as thereby the primacie of Peters Successour may seeme to all men sufficiently declared. For, perusing the Ecclesiasticall stories with writings of the Fathers, beside many other things pertaining heereto, wee finde these practises, for declaration of this speciall authoritie, and power: First, that Bishops, (106) of euery Nation haue made their appeale in their weighty affaires to the Pope, and alwaies haue sued to the See Apostolike, as well for succour, and helpe against violence, iniuries, and oppressions, as for redresse of other disorders. Also, that the malice of wicked persons hath beene represt, and chastised of that authority by Excommunication, Election, and Expulsion out of their dignities, Gal. 1. 1 2

The 106. Vntruth, as afterward it shall appeare.

dignities and roomes, and by other cenſures of the Church. Furthermore, that the ordinances and elections of Biſhops of all prouinces haue beene confirmed by the Pope. Beſide this, that the approuing and diſallowing of Councels haue pertained to him. Item, that Biſhops wrongfully condemned and depriued by Councels, by him haue beene aſſoiled and reſtored to their Churches againe. Laſtly, that Biſhops and Patriarkes after long ſtrifes and contentions, haue at length vpon better aduice, beene reconciled vnto him againe. Peter Head.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Here M. Harding aſſaieth to proue the poſſeſſion and occupation of this Vniuerſall authoritie, by the practiſe both of S. Peter himſelfe, and alſo of other Biſhops in Rome, that followed after him. And touching S. Peter he thinketh it ſufficient to ſay thus: Peter being among the reſt, ſhewed his aduice firſt before all others, and at the ſound of his words, Ananias and Zaphira fell downe dead: Ergo, Peter was the Head, and had an Vniuerſall power ouer the whole Church. Here be very weake proofes to maintaine ſo great a Title. I thinke M. Harding himſelfe doth not beleeue, that whoſoeuer firſt vttereth his minde in any Councell, or worketh any ſtrange miracle by the power of God, is therefore the Head of all the world. For oftentimes in great Councels, the yongeſt or lowreſt beginneth firſt, and the eldeſt and Head of all ſpeaketh laſt. Certainly, in this aſſemblie of the Apoſtles, after that S. Peter had opened his minde, and all the reſt had done, laſt of all, not S. Peter, but S. Iames pronounced the Sentence, which thing belonged onely to the Head and Preſident of that Councell. He muſt be very ſimple, that will be led with ſuch ſimple gheſſes. Actor. 15.

But whoſoeuer well and thorowly conſidereth S. Peters whole dealing at all times among his Brethren, ſhall ſone ſee, that neither he bare himſelfe; nor the reſt receiued or vſed him, as the Head of the Vniuerſall Church. He calleth the reſt of the Diſciples, his Brethren: he calleth himſelfe Compresbyterum, Fellow elder. He commandeth not, nor chargeth any man, but heareth and intreateth others, as his equals and fellowes: being ſent into Samaria by his Brethren he repined not, as being their Head and Gouernour, but went his way as their meſſenger: and being reproued for going to Cornelius, and dealing with Heathens, he excuſed himſelfe, and came to his anſwer. Actorum 15. 1. Peter 5. Actor. 8. Actor. 11.

The reſt of the Apoſtles, no doubt, honoured S. Peter, as the ſpeciall member of Chriſts body, with all reuerence: but it appeareth not, that any of them euer take him, or vſed him as their Head, or yelded him this Infinite or Vniuerſall power. S. Paul comparеth himſelfe with him in Apoſtleſhip, and ſaith: Mihi concreditum eſt Euangelium Præputij, ſicut Petro Circumciſionis: To mee is committed the Goſpell among the Heathens, euen as vnto Peter among the Iewes. And Iames, Peter, and Iohn, which ſeemed to be pillars, gaue vnto mee and Barnabas the right hands of fellowſhip. And afterward he ſaith: I withſtood Peter euen vnto the face: for that he was worthy to be rebuked. And againe vnto the Corinthians: Arbitror me nihil inferiorem eſſe eximijs Apoſtolis: I take my ſelfe to bee nothing inferiour vnto the chiefe Apoſtles. Whereby it plainly appeareth, that Paul eſteemed and take Peter as his Fellow, and not as his Head. Galat. 2. 2. Corin. 2.

Whereas it liketh M. Harding to ſay, that we wreath and wreſt the Scriptures; if it would haue pleaſed him alſo particularly to ſhew, how, and wherein, he might haue had the more credit. But it is commonly ſaid: Doloſus verſatur in generalibus: Hee that walketh in generalities, meaneth not plainly. I truſt the indifferent Reader ſeeth, the Scriptures are plaine enough of our ſide, and need no wreſting. And therefore touching this caſe, S. Cyprian ſaith, as is before alleaged: Idem erant alij, quod Petrus: The reſt were the ſame that Peter was. And Origen likewiſe: Nos quoque efficimur Petrus: & nobis dicetur illud, quod huic ſermonem ſequitur: Tu es Petrus, & ſuper hanc Petram ædificabo Eccleſiam meam. Petra enim eſt, quiſquis eſt Diſcipulus Chriſti: Euen we are become Peter, and vnto vs the ſame ſhall be ſaid, that followeth theſe words: Thou art Peter, and vpon this Rocke I will build my Church. For he is the Rocke whoſoeuer is Chriſts Diſciple. And ſo it is written in S. Auguſtine againſt the Donatiſts: Clarus à Maſcula dixit, Manifeſta eſt ſententia Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti Apoſtolos mittentis, & ipſis ſolis poteſtatem à Patre ſibi datam permittentis: quibus nos ſucceſſimus, eadem poteſtate Eccleſiam Domini gubernantes: The ſaying of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt ſending out his Apoſtles, and giuing vnto them only the ſame power that he had receiued of his Father, is plaine: into which Apoſtles rooms we haue ſucceeded, gouerning the Church with the ſame power that they did. These be good witneſſes that wee wreſt not Gods words, but vſe them ſimplie, as they were ſpoken. Cyprian. de ſimplicitate Prælatorum. Origen. in Matt. tract. 1. Auguſt. de Baptiſmo contra Donat. lib. 7. cap. 43.

Now it were a long labour to ſhew at full, how M. Harding, with others of that ſide, haue haue dealt herein. The words that be specially and only spoken of God himselfe, and of his Christ, it is lawfull for them to applie the same vnto the Pope without any wresting or wresting of the Scriptures. Cornelius a Bishop in the last Councell of Trident vseth these words: Papa lux venit in mundum: sed dilexerunt homines magis tenebras, quàm lucem: The Pope being the light, is come into the World, but men loued the darknesse more than the Light. And Stephanus the Archbishop of Petraca, in the Councell of Laterane directly these words vnto the Pope: Tibi data est omnis potestas in Cælo, & in Terra: Vnto thee is all power giuen both in Heauen and Earth. Likewise saith Pope Bonifacius: Spiritualis à nemine iudicatur: The man that is spirituall, is iudged of no man: Ergo, No man may iudge the Pope. And againe: Quæ sunt potestates, à Deo ordinatæ sunt: The powers that be, are ordained of God: Ergo, The Pope is aboue the Emperour. Now to passe by other like places which are innumerable, whether this be wresting of the Scriptures, or no, I leaue to the discrete Reader to consider. Verily, as I haue said before, Camotensis thus reporteth of them: Vim faciunt Scripturis, vt habeant plenitudinem potestatis: To the intent they may haue the fulnesse of power, they do violence to the Scriptures, and deuise strange constructions contrarie to the sense of the Church of God.

Cornel. Episcopus Ritontinus, in Oratione ad Synodum.

Stephan. Archiepiscop. Patracen. in Concil. Lateran. sub Leone, Sessione 10.

De Maioritate & obedient. Vnam Sanctam.

1. Cor. 2.

Rome 13.

Citatur à Cornelio Agrippa, de Vani. scien.

But forasmuch as M. Harding vtterly leaueth the Scriptures, wherein he saith, he hath so simple hold, and referreth the whole right of his cause to the continuall practise of the Church, I trust it shall not seeme neither tedious nor vnprofitable vnto the Reader, only for a taste, and by the way, to touch somewhat concerning the same; nothing doubting, but euen thereby it shall well appeare, that within the compasse of six hundred yeares after Christ, the Bishop of Rome was neuer neither named, nor holden for the Head of the Vniuersall Church.

First of all, The Bishops of other Countries, writing to the Bishop of Rome, call him not their Head, but their Brother or Fellow. S. Cyprian vnto Cornelius writeth thus: Cyprianus Cornelio Fratri: Cyprian vnto Cornelius my Brother. The Bishops in the Councell of Carthage vnto Innocentius: Honoratissimo Fratri: To our most honourable Brother. And Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople vnto Hormisda: Frater in Christo Charissime: My deare Brother in Christ. So likewise Dionysius the Bishop of Alexandria calleth Stephanus and Sistus Bishops of Rome, his louing Brethren. So the Bishops of Aphrica call Anastasius, Consacerdotem, Their Fellow Bishop. Like as Cyrillus also calleth Cœlestinus: and Marcellus the Bishop of Ancyra calleth Iulius, Comministrum, His Fellow Seruant. These words, Brother and Fellow, seeme rather to signifie an Equality betweene Bishops, than any such Soueraigne Power or Vniuersall authoritie, as the Bishop of Rome now claimeth.

Cyprian. lib. 1. Epist. 3.

Concil. Carthaginen. 5.

In Decretal. Hormisde.

Euseb. lib. 7. cap. 4.

Euseb. lib. 7. cap. 8.

In Concil. Aphricano.

In Concil. Ephesino.

Epiphan. lib. 3. tom. 1. hæres. 72

Further, touching the order of outward gouernment, the Councell of Nice limiteth vnto the Bishop of Rome not the Iurisdiction of the whole World, but his owne seuerall portion among other Patriarkes. The Councell of Aphrica straitly forbiddeth any man out of that Countrie to appeale to Rome. The foure Patriarkes, of Rome, of Constantinople, of Antioch, and Alexandria, vsed to write letters of conference betweene themselues, thereby to professe their Religion one to an other; which was a token of Fellowship, and not of Dominion. The Councell of Alexandria committed full authoritie to Asterius to visit and to redresse all the Churches in the East part of the World, and to Eusebius, to doe the like in the West: and so seemed to haue small regard to the Bishop of Rome, or to acknowledge him as the Vniuersall Bishop. And what needeth many words? Æneas Syluius being himselfe afterward Bishop of Rome, for certaine proose hereof writeth thus: Ad Episcopos Romanos aliquis sanè, sed tamen paruus, ante Nicenum Concilium respectus erat: Some regard there was vnto the Bishops of Rome before the Councell of Nice, although but small. To be short, I trust it shall appeare euen by M. Hardings owne proses, that is to say, by the order of Appeales, by Excommunications, by the allowance of Elections, by the approuing of Councels, by restoring of Bishops, and by receiuing of Schismatikes into fauour, that the Bishop of Rome was not taken for the Head of the Church, nor had any such absolute authority as is supposed. And so M. Hardings six fold proose, which is noted in the Margin, in Conclusion will appeare but single fold.

Concil. Nicen. cap. 6.

Concil. Aphrican. cap. 92.

Litere Synodice.

Gregor. lib. 1. Epist. 25. & lib. 6. Epist. 24.

Ruffinus lib. 1. cap. 29.

Æneas Syluius.

M. Harding. The 21. Diuision.

First, for the appellation of Bishops to the See Apostolike, beside many other, wee haue the knowen examples of Athanasius, that worthy Bishop of Alexandria, and light of the World; who hauing sustained great and sundry wrongs at the Arians, appealed first to Iulius the Pope, and after his death to Felix; of Chrysostome, who appealed to Innocentius against the violence of Theophilus; of Theodoretus, who appealed to Leo. Neither made Bishops onely their appeale to the Pope by their Delegates, but also in certaine cases, being cited, appeare before him in their owne persons. Which is plainly gathered of Theodoretus his Ecclesiasticall story, who writeth thus; Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia (who

(who was the chiefe pillar of the Arians) and they that ioined with him in that faction, falsely accused Athanasius to Iulius the Bishop of Rome.

Appeales.

Iulius following the Ecclesiasticall rule, commanded them to come to Rome, and caused the reuerend Athanasius to be cited to iudgement, regulariter, after the order of the Canons. He came: the false accusers went not to Rome, knowing right well, that their forged lie might easily be deprehended. In this cause and defense of Iohn Chrysostome, these Bishops came from Constantinople to Innocentius the Pope, Pansophus Bishop of Pisidia, Pappus of Syria, Demetrius of the second Galatia, and Eugenius of Phrigia. These were suters for Chrysostome. He himselfe treated his matter with Innocentius by writing. In his Epistle among other things he writeth thus; Lest this outragious confusion run ouer all, and beare rule euery where, write (I pray you) and determine by your authoritie, such wicked acts done in our absence, and when we withdrew not our selues from iudgement, to be of no force, as by their owne nature truly they be void and vtterly none. Furthermore, who haue committed these euils (107) put you them vnder the Censure of the Church. And as for vs, sith that we are innocent, neither conuict, neither found in any default, nor prooued guilty of any crime; giue commandement, that wee be restored to our Churches againe, that we may enioy the accustomed charitie and peace with our brethren. Innocentius after that he vnderstood the whole matter, pronounced and decreed the iudgement of Theophilus, that was against Chrysostome, to be void and of no force. This whole Tragedie is at large set foorth by Palladius Bishop of Helenopolis, In vita Iohannis Chrysostomi, who liued at that time. By this appeale of Chrysostome, and by the whole handling of the matter, and specially by the purport of his Epistle to Innocentius, the Superioritie of the Pope is euidently acknowledged. And so is it plainly confessed by Athanasius and the Bishops, of Ægypt, Thebais, and Lybia, assembled in Councell at Alexandria, by these words of their Epistle to Fœlix; Vestrum est enim nobis manum porrigere, &c. It is your part (say they) to stretch foorth your helping hand vnto vs, because we are committed vnto you. It is your part to defend vs, and deliuer vs: it is our part to seeke helpe of you, and to obey your commandements. And a little after; For we know that you beare the cure and charge of the Vniuersall Church, and specially of Bishops, who in respect of their contemplation and speculation, are called the eies of our Lord, as alwaies the Prelates of your See, first the Apostles, then their successours haue done.

The 107. vntruth. S. Chrysostomes words vntruly reported.

Theodoretus that learned Bishop of Cyrus, beside the Epistle he wrote to Leo for succour and helpe in his troubles, in another that he wrote to Renatus a Priest neere about Leo, saith thus; Spoliarunt me Sacerdotio, &c. They haue violently robbed me of my Bishopricke, they haue cast me foorth of the Cities, neither hauing reuerenced mine age spent in Religion, nor my hoare haires. Wherefore, I beseech thee, that thou perswade the most holy Archbishop (he meaneth Leo) to vse his Apostolike authoritie, and to command vs to come vnto your Councell or Consistorie. For this holy See holdeth the Rudther, and hath the gouernment of the Churches of the whole world, partly for other respects, but specially for that it hath euermore continued cleare from stinch of heresie, and that none euer sate in it, who was of contrarie opinion, but rather hath euer kept the Apostolike grace vndefiled. In which words of Theodoretus, this chiefly is to be marked, that the holy See of Rome (as he saith) hath the gouernment of the Churches of all the World, most for this cause, that it was neuer infected with Heresie as all other Churches founded by the Apostles were.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

It is certaine, that the Bishops of Rome, to attaine the preeminence and fulnesse of power ouer all the World, letted not to vse many ambitious and importune meanes and manifestly to falsifie the Canons of the holy Councell of Nice. Sithence which time they haue not bene idle, but haue forged new Canons to this purpose vnder the name of Clemens, Anacletus, Euaristus, Telesphorus, Higinus, and other Martyrs: and besides, haue deuised other like Canons of their owne. The Decretall Epistle that is abroad vnder the name of Iulius, seemeth to sauour of some corruption, both for sundry other causes, and also for that it agreeth not with the very true Epistle of Iulius, which Athanasius allegeth in his Apologie: and yet ought both these Epistles to be all one without difference. Wherefore we haue good cause to thinke, That all is not Gospell that commeth from Rome.

Athanasius in Apologia 2.

Thus ambitiously to aduance themselues vnder pretence of such Appeales, ostentimes not vnderstanding the case, as it well appeareth by that is written of Apiarius, and by the story of Flauianus and Eutyches, they found fault with good Catholike Bishops, and receiued Heretikes into their fauour: wherewithall the Bishops in the Generall Councell of Aphrica, finde themselues much greeued.

First therefore I must shew, that there lay no such ordinary Appeale from all Countries of the World to the Bishop of Rome, and that therefore the same is by M. Harding vntruly auouched. That done, I trust, it shall not be hard to answer these places of Chrysostome, Athanasius, and Theodoretus here alleged. And that there lay not any such Appeale to Rome, it is plaine by consent of Generall Councels; by the authoritie of holy Fathers; and by the Lawes and Ordinances of Emperours and Princes: By which grounds, it is easie to vnderstand the practise and order of the Church in those daies.

In the Councell of Nice it is Decreed thus: Ab alijs excommunicati, ab alijs ad Communionem ne recipiantur: Let not them that stand Excommunicate by one Bishop, bee receiued againe to the Communion by any other. M. Hardings Appeales, and these words cannot well stand together. But he will say, The Bishop either of ignorance or of malice may Excommunicate the party wrongfully. In this case the same Councell hath prouided remedie of Appeale, not vnto the Bishop of Rome, but vnto a Prouinciall Synod within the Concil. Nicen. 1. cap. 5.

Appeales.

Countrey. These be the words: Ergo, vt hæc possint digna examinatione perquiri, recte visum est, per singulos annos, in singulis prouincijs, bis in anno, Episcoporum Concilium fieri, vt simul in vnum conuenientes ex communi Prouincia, huiusmodi quæstiones examinent: Therefore that these things may be well examined, it is well prouided, that euery yeere in euery Prouince, at two seuerall times, there be holden a Councell of Bishop, that, they meeting together out of all parts of the Prouince, may heare and determine such complaints.

Concil. Nicen. 1. Can. 5.

Concil. Telen. tempore Zosimi. Can. 17.

The Bishops in the Councell holden at Tela in Spaine, ordained thus: Presbyteri & Clerici, ne appellent, nisi ad Aphricana Concilia: Let it not be lawfull for Priests or Clerkes to Appeale (to Rome) but only to the Councels holden in Aphrica.

Concil. Milevitan. Can. 22.

So in the Milevitane Councell: Si ab Episcopis appellandum putauerint, non prouocent, nisi ad Aphricana Concilia, vel ad Primates Prouinciarum suarum. Ad transmarina autem qui putauerint appellandum, à nullo intra Aphricam in Communionem recipiantur: If they thinke it meet to Appeale from their Bishops, let them not Appeale, but only to the Councels of Aphrica, or vnto the Primates of their owne Prouinces. But if they shall make their Appeale beyond the Seas (that is, to Rome) let no man in Aphrica receiue them to the Communion.

Concil. Aphrican. Can. 63.

So likewise in the Councell of Aphrica: Si fuerit prouocatum, elegat is, qui prouocauerit Iudices, & cum eo & ille, contra quem prouocauerit, vt ab ipsis deinceps nulli liceat prouocare: If appeale be made, let him that shall Appeale, chuse other Iudges of his side, and likewise let the other doe the same against whom he Appealeth: that from them afterward, it be lawfull for neither of them to Appeale.

Concil. Aphrican. Can. 92.

And againe in the same Councell: Non prouocent nisi ad Aphricana Concilia: Let them not Appeale, but only vnto the Councels holden within Aphrica, and so forth word by word, as is alleged out of the Councell of Mileuita. But here I may not well passe ouer Gratians Glosse, touching this matter. For whereas the Councell hath determined, that if any man Appeale beyond the Seas, he stand Excommunicate, Gratian hath expounded and saued it with this prety exception: Nisi forte Romanam Sedem appellauerit: Vnlesse they Appeale to the See of Rome. And so by his construction, he excepteth that only thing out of the Law, for which only thing the whole Law was made. For it is plaine and without all question, that the Councell of Aphrica specially, and namely, meant to cut off all Appeales to the See of Rome. And yet those onely Appeales, Gratian by his Construction would haue to be saued.

2. Quæst. 6. ca. Placuit.

But what can be so plaine, as the Epistle of the two hundred and seuenténe Bishops in the Councell of Aphrica, sent vnto Cœlestinus Bishop of Rome, declaring at length both the state and conueiance of the cause, and also their griefe, and misliking of the whole matter. The words lie thus: Decreta Nicena siue inferioris gradus Clericos, &c. The Decrees of the Councell of Nice, haue euidently committed both the Clerkes of inferiour roomes, and also the Bishops themselues vnto their Metropolitanes: for both iustly and discreetly they prouided, that all maner actions should be determined in the same places where they began: and likewise though that no Prouince should want the Grace of the Holy Ghost, whereby Christian Bishops might be able both wisely to consider, and also constantly to maintaine the right. And specially seeing that liberty is giuen, that if either party mislike his Iudges order, he may lawfully Appeale either to a Conuocation of Bishops within the same Countrie, or else to a Generall Councell. Vnlesse any man will thinke, that God is able to inspire the iustice of triall into one man alone (meaning thereby the Bishop of Rome) and will deny the same to a great number of Bishops, being in Councell altogether. And how can your beyond Sea iudgement appeare good, seeing that the witnesses, which be parties necessary, either for that they be women, or for that they be aged and weake, or for many other incident impediments, cannot come vnto it? As for any Delegates that should be sent, as from your side, we finde no such matter determined in any Councell. And touching that you sent vs of late by Faustinus our Fellow-Bishop, as part of the Nicene Councell, in the very true Councels of Nice, which we haue receiued from holy Cyrillus the Bishop of Alexandria, and from Atticus the Bishop of Constantinople &c. we find no such matter, Neither send ye, nor grant ye, your Clerkes to execute causes at any mans request, least we seeme to bring a smokie puffe of worldly pride into the Church of Christ, which vnto them that desire to see God, sheweth the light of simplicity and humility, &c.

Epistola Aphricani Concilij ad Cœlestinum.

Iustitiam examinis vnicuilibet.

Executores Clericos vestros.

The Bishops of the East part of the World, being Arians, writing vnto Iulius the Bishop of Rome, toke it greuously, that he would presume to ouerrule them: and shewed him, It was not lawfull for him, by any sleight or colour of Appeale, to vndoe that thing, that they had done.

Sozomenus, li. 3. ca. 7.

S. Cyprian finding fault with such running to Rome, and defeating of Iustice, writeth vnto Cornelius the Bishop there in this sort: Cum æquum iustumque sit, vt vniuscuiusq; causa illic audiatur, vbi Crimen est admissum, & singulis pastoribus portio gregis sit adscripta, quam regat vniusquisque, & gubernet, rationem sui actus Domino redditurus, opportet Cyprian. li. 1. Epist. 3.

vtique

Appeales.

vtique eos, quibus præsumus, non circumcursare, nec Episcoporum concordiam cohærentem sua subdola & fallaci temeritate collidere: sed agere illic causam suam, vbi & accusatores habere, & testes sui criminis possint: nisi paucis desperatis & perditis, minor videtur esse authoritas Episcoporum in Aphrica constitutorum, qui iam de illis iudicauerunt, &c. Seeing it is meet and right, that euery mans cause be heard there, where the fault was committed, and seeing that euery Bishop hath a portion of the Flocke allotted vnto him, which he must rule and gouerne, and yeeld account vnto the Lord for the same, therefore it is not meet, that they, whom we are appointed to ouersee, do thus run about (with their Appeales) and so with their subtle and deceitfull rashnesse, breake that concord and consent of Bishops. But there ought they to plead their cause, where they may haue both accusers and witnesses of the fault: Vnlesse perhaps a few desperate and leaud fellowes thinke the authoritie of the Bishops of Aphrica, which haue already iudged and condemned them, to be lesse than is the authoritie of other Bishops. Leaud and desperate.

Hereby it is clere, that the godly Fathers and Bishops, in old times, misliked much this shifting of matters to Rome, for that they saw it was the hinderance of right, the increase of ambition, and the open breach of the holy Canons.

And therefore the Emperour Iustinian, foreseeing the disorders that hereof might grew, to bridle this ambitious outrage, thought it necessarie for his Subiects, to prouide a strait Law in this wise to the contrarie: Si quis Sanctissimorum Episcoporum eiusdem Synodi dubitationem aliquam adinuicem habeat, siue pro Ecclesiastico iure, siue pro alijs quibusdam rebus, prius Metropolita eorum, cum alijs de sua Synodo Episcopis, causam examinet & iudicet. Quod si vtraque pars rata non habuerit ea, quæ iudicata sunt, tunc beatissimus Patriarcha Dioceseos illius inter eos audiat, & illa determinet, quæ Ecclesiasticis Canonibus, & Legibus consonant, nulla parte eius sententiæ contradicere valente: If any of the most holy Bishops, being of one Synod, haue any matter of doubt or question among themselues, whether it be for Ecclesiasticall right, or any other matters, first let their Metropolitane, with other Bishops of the same Synode, examine and iudge the cause. But if both the parties stand not to his and their iudgements, then let the most holy Patriarke, of the same Prouince, heare and determine their matters, according to the Ecclesiasticall Lawes and Canons. And neither of the parties may withstand his determination. Auth. de Sanctiss. Episcopis, collatio. 9. Si quis verò. Ἐὰν δὲ τινες μέροις ἀντιλέγειν δύναιντο.

And immediately after: Patriarcha, secundùm Canones & Leges, præbeat finem: Let the Patriarke, according to the Lawes and Canons, make an end. In eodem. παρεχέτω πέρας.

By these words, all Appeales bee quite cut off from the See of Rome.

Likewise the Emperours, Honorius and Theodosius, haue taken Appeales away from the Bishops of Rome, and haue commanded the same to be entred before the Bishop and Synode of Constantinople. The Law is written thus: Omni innouatione cessante, vetustatem, & Canones pristinos Ecclesiasticos, qui vsque tunc tenuerunt, per omnes Illyrici Prouincias seruari præcipimus: vt si quid dubitatis emerserit, id oporteat, non absque sententia viri reuerendissimi Sacrosanctæ Legis Antistitis Ecclesiæ Vrbis Constantinopolitanæ, quæ Romæ Veteris prærogatiua lætatur, Conuentui Sacerdotali, & sancto iudicio reseruari: All innouation set apart, we command, that the old order, and the ancient Ecclesiasticall Canons, which hitherto haue holden, be kept still thorow all the Prouinces of Illyricum; that if any matter of doubt happen to arise, it be put ouer to be determined by the holy iudgement and assembly of Bishops, not without the discretion of the most Reuerend, the Bishop of the Citie of Constantinople, which Citie now enioieth the Prerogatiue of Old Rome. Cod. de Sacrosanct. Ecclesijs, Omni. Cod. de Episc. & Clericis. Actor in nullo alio foro, vel apud quenquam alterum Iudicem, Clericos (Ecclesiæ Constantinopolitanæ) litibus tentat irretire.

Here M. Harding may not forget, that the Church of Constantinople had as great Prerogatiue in all respects, of Preeminence, Superioritie, and Vniuersalitie of charge, as euer had the Church of Rome. Wherefore, if the Bishop of Rome were Head of the Vniuersall Church, it must nods follow, that the Bishop of Constantinople was likewise Head of the Vniuersall Church.

And againe, the Emperour Leo in plainer words: Omnes qui vbicunque sunt, vel posthac fuerint, Orthodoxæ Fidei Sacerdotes, & Cleri, cuiuscunque gradus sint, Monachi quoque, in causis ciuilibus, ex nullius penitus maioris minorisue sententia Iudicis commonitoria, ad extranea iudicia pertrahantur; aut prouinciam, vel locum, vel regionem quam habitant, exire cogantur: All that be, or hereafter shall be, Priests or Clerkes of the Catholicke Faith, of what degree soeuer they be, Monkes also, let them not in any Ciuill Actions, be drawen foorth to forraine iudgement, by the Summon or Commandement of any Iudge, more or lesse: neither let them be driuen to come foorth of, either the Prouince, or the place, or the Country, where they dwell. Thus, whether the Action were Ecclesiasticall, or Ciuill, the party was to be heard within his owne Prouince, and could not be forced to appeare abroad. Cod. de Epis. & Clericis. Omnes.

Certainly, what good liking S. Bernard had herein, it appeareth by his words. For thus he writeth to Eugenius the Bishop of Rome: Quousque non euigilat consideratio tua ad tantam Appellationum confusionem? Ambitio in Ecclesia per te regnare molitur: Bernar. ad Eugenium, de Consideration. li. 3.

præter

Appeales.

præter ius & fas, præter morem & ordinem, fiunt. Repertum ad remedium, reperitur ad mortem: Antidotum verſum eſt in venenum. Murmur loquor, & querimoniam communem Eccleſiarum. Truncari ſe clamant, & demembrari. Vel nullæ, vel paucæ admodum ſunt, quæ plagam iſtam aut non doleant, aut non timeant: When will thy conſideration awake, to behold this ſo great confuſion of Appeales? Ambition and pride ſtriueth through thee to reigne in the Church. Theſe Appeales be made beſide all Law and right, beſide all maner and good order. It was deuiſed for a remedy: it is found turned to death. That was Triakle, is charged into poiſon. I ſpeake of the murmuring and common complaint of the Churches. They complaine they be maimed and diſmembred. There be either no Churches, or very few, but either ſmart at this plague, or ſtand in feare of it. This is that worthy ground, whereupon M. Harding hath laid the firſt foundation of his Supremacie: A Confuſion, a Death, a Poiſon, a Terror, and Diſmembring of the Churches: practiſed againſt Law, againſt right, againſt maner, and againſt good order: miſliked by the holy Fathers, diſallowed by godly Councels, and vtterly abrogated and aboliſhed by ſundry worthy and noble Princes. This is M. Hardings principall foundation of his Primacie.

But yet theſe men will ſay, Chryſoſtome, Athanaſius, and Theodoretus, being godly Fathers, and holy Biſhops, appealed to Rome, and acknowledged the Popes authoritie, and beſought him to vſe the ſame. For the true vnderſtanding hereof, it ſhall bee neceſſarie to conſider the ſtate that theſe godly Fathers then ſtood in, and the miſerable confuſion of the Eaſt part of the world in thoſe daies. Chryſoſtome thereof writeth thus:

Epiſt. 2. Chryſ. ad Innocentiũ. Certamen eſt totius Orbis: Eccleſiæ vſque ad genua humiliatæ ſunt: Populi diſperſi: Clerus diuexatus: Epiſcopi exules: Conſtitutiones Patrum violatæ: It is the contention of the whole World: The Churches are brought vpon their knees: The people is ſcattered: The Miniſtrie is oppreſſed: The Biſhops are baniſhed: The Conſtitutions of our Fathers are broken.

Socrat. lib. 2. Cap. 8. Sozom. lib. 3. cap. 6. Athanaſ. in Epiſt. ad ſolitariã vitam agentes. Theodoret. lib. 2. cap. 14. The Emperours Captaine with a band of ſouldiers beſet the Church where Athanaſius was praying: Of the people that was with him, ſome were ſpoiled and baniſhed, ſome trodden vnder the ſouldiers feet, ſome ſlaine where they went. Paulus the Biſhop of Conſtantinople was hanged: Marcellus the Biſhop of Ancyra was depriued: Lucius the Biſhop of Adrianopolis died in priſon: Theodulus and Olympius, two Biſhops of Thracia, were commanded to be murdered. The Emperour had commanded Athanaſius to be brought vnto him, either dead, or aliue.

These godly Fathers, being thus in extreme miſerie, and ſeeing their whole Church in the Eaſt part ſo deſolate, were forced to ſeeke for comfort, whereſoeuer they had hope to finde any: and ſpecially they ſought to the Church of Rome, which then, both for multitude of people, and for puritie of Religion, and conſtancie in the ſame, and alſo for helping of the afflicted, and intreating for them, was moſt famous aboue all others. In like ſort ſometimes they fled for helpe vnto the Emperour. So Athanaſius being condemned in the Councell at Tyrus, fled to Conſtantinus the Emperour: Flauianus vnto the Emperours Theodoſius and Valentinianus: Donatus à Caſis Nigris vnto Conſtantinus. And the Emperours ſometimes called the parties, and heard the matter themſelues: Sometimes they wrote fauourable Letters in their behalfe. The Emperour Conſtance wrote vnto his Brother Conſtantius, to call before him the Biſhops of the Eaſt part, to yeld a reckoning of their doings againſt Athanaſius. The Emperour Honorius gaue his endeuour, that Athanaſius might be reſtored. Conſtantinus the Emperour, vpon Athanaſius complaint, commanded the Biſhops of the Councell of Tyrus to appeare before him. The words of his Summon be theſe: Quotquot Synodum Tyri habitam compleuiſtis, ſine mora ad Pietatis noſtræ Caſtra properetis: ac re ipſa, quàm ſincerè ac rectè iudicaueritis, oſtendatis: idque Coram me, quem ſincerum eſſe Dei Miniſtrum, ne vos quidem ipſi negabitis: As many of you as were at the Councell of Tyrus, high you vnto our Campe or Court without delay, and ſhew vs how ſincerely and vprightly yee haue dealt: and that euen Before Me, whom you your ſelues cannot denie to be the ſincere Seruant, of God.

Athan. Apol. 2. Socrat. Lib. 1. cap. 20. Caſſiodor. li. 4. cap. 20. Ambroſ. li. 10. Epiſt. 78. Auguſt. epiſt. 162. Inter Decreta Iulij, è Sozomeno Sozm. Lib. 8. cap. 28. Socrat. lib. 1. cap. 22.

Coram Me.

Thus holy men being in diſtreſſe, ſought helpe, whereſoeuer they had hope to finde it. This ſeeking of remedy by way of complaint, as it declareth their miſerie, ſo it is not ſufficient to proue an ordinarie Appeale.

But it is moſt certaine, and without all queſtion, that Chryſoſtome appealed vnto Innocentius. For M. Harding hath heere alleged his owne words. I grant, M. Harding hath heere alleged Chryſoſtome; but in ſuch faithfull and truſty ſort, as Pope Zoſimus ſometimes alleged the Councell of Nice. Good Chriſtian Reader, if thou haue Chryſoſtome, peruſe this place, and weigh well his words: if thou haue him not, yet be not ouer-haſtie of beleefe. M. Hardings dealing with thee herein is not plaine. The very words of Chryſoſtome in Latine ſtand thus: Ne confuſio hæc omnem, quæ ſub Cœlo eſt, nationem inuadat, obſecro, Epiſt Chryſoſt. ad Innocent. in Tom. 5. Ep. 1.

Appeales.

ſecro, vt ſcribas, quod hæc tam iniquè facta, & abſentibus nobis, & non declinantibus iudicium, non habeant robur: Sicut neque natura ſua habent. Illi autem, qui inique egerunt, pœnæ Eccleſiaſticarum Legum ſubiaceant. Nobis verò, qui nec conuicti, nec redarguti, nec habiti vt rei ſumus, literis veſtris, & charitate veſtra, aliorumque omnium quorum ante ſocietate fruebamur, frui concedite. Which words into English may truly be tranſlated thus: Leſt this confuſion ouer-run all Nations vnder Heauen, I pray thee write (or ſignifie) vnto them, that theſe things ſo vniuſtly done, I being abſent, and yet not flying iudgement, be of no force, as indeed of their owne nature they be of none: and (write) that they that haue done theſe things ſo wrongfully, be puniſhed by the Lawes of the Church: and grant you, that wee that are neither conuicted, nor reproued, nor found guilty, may enioy your letters, and your loue, and likewiſe the letters and loue of all others, whoſe fellowſhip we enioyed before. In theſe few words, M. Harding hath notably falſified three places, quite altering the words that hee found, and ſhuffling in, and interlacing other words of his owne. For theſe words in M. Hardings tranſlation, that ſeeme to ſignifie authoritie in the Biſhop of Rome, and to import the Appeale,

Write, and determine by your authoritie; Put you them vnder the cenſure of the Church; Giue commandement, that we be reſtored to our Churches; M. Hard. falſifieth, and vntruly trãſlateth S. Chryſoſtome.

Theſe words, I ſay, are not to be found in Chryſoſtome, neither in the Greeke, nor in the Latine; but only are prettily conueied in by M. Harding, the better to furniſh and fashion vp his Appeale. He ſeeth well, this matter will not ſtand vpright, without the manifeſt corruption and falſifying of the Doctours. This therefore is M. Hardings Appeale, and not Chryſoſtomes.

For, that Chryſoſtome made no ſuch Appeale to the Biſhop of Rome, it may ſufficiently appeare, both by Chryſoſtomes owne Epiſtles, and by the Biſhop of Romes dealing herein, and by the end and concluſion of the cauſe. Touching Chryſoſtome himſelfe, hee maketh no mention of any Appeale, nor deſireth the parties to bee cited to Rome, nor taketh Innocentius for the Biſhop of the whole Church, or for the vniuerſall Iudge of all the World; but only ſaluteth him thus: Innocentio Epiſcopo Romæ Iohannes: Iohn to Innocentius Biſhop of Rome ſendeth greeting. And againe, in the ſame Epiſtle, hee vtterly auoideth all ſuch forraine iudgements, according to the determinations of the Councels of Carthage, Mileuitum, and Aphrica. Theſe be his words: Neque congruum eſt, vt hi, qui in Ægypto ſunt, iudicent eos qui ſunt in Thracia: It is not meet, that they that be in Egypt ſhould be Iudges ouer them that be in Thracia. Ad Innocent. Epiſt. priore.

Neither do the Biſhop of Romes owne words import any Appeale, but rather the contrarie: for hee vſed not his familiar words of bidding or commanding, but only in gentle and friendly maner, exhorteth them to appeare; and that not before himſelfe, but only before the Councell of ſundry Biſhops, ſummoned ſpecially for that purpoſe. For thus Iulius writeth vnto the Biſhops of the Eaſt: Quæ eſt cauſa offenſionis? An quia adhortati vos ſumus, vt ad Synodum occurreretis? What is the cauſe of your diſpleaſure? Is it becauſe we exhorted you to come to the Councell? Heere he exhorteth and intreateth them: he commandeth them not: he calleth them to come, not before himſelfe, but before the Councell. Againe he ſaith: Legati veſtri, Macarius Presbyter, & Heſychius Dyaconus, Concilium indici poſtulauerunt: Your owne Ambaſſadors, Macarius being a Prieſt, and Heſychius being a Deacon, required that a Councell might be ſummoned. And againe: Vellem vos magis ad iam dictam Canonicam conuenire vocationem, vt coram Vniuerſali Synodo redditis rationem: I would you rather to come to this Canonicall calling, that ye may yeeld your account of your doings before the Generall Councell. So likewiſe S. Baſil writeth to Athanaſius, by way of Councell, in that heauy time of trouble: Viros igitur Eccleſiæ tuæ potentes ad Occidentales Epiſcopos mitte, qui, quibus calamitatibus premamur, illis exponant: Send ſome worthy men of your Churches (not vnto the Biſhop of Rome, but) vnto the Biſhops of the Weſt, that may let them vnderſtand with what miſeries we are beſet. Likewiſe againe he ſaith: Viſum mihi eſt conſentaneum, vt ſcribatur Epiſcopo Romæ, vt ea, quæ hîc geruntur, conſideret, detque Concilium: I thinke it good, ye write to the Biſhop of Rome, that he may conſider that is heere done, and may appoint vs a Councell. Epiſt. Iulij, in Athanaſij Apol. 2. In Apolog. 2. Epiſt. Iulij ad Orientales, inter Decreta Iulij. Baſil. Epiſt. 48. ad Athanaſ. Baſil. ad Athanaſ. Epiſt. 52.

Neither did the Biſhop of Rome, by his owne Authoritie, ſummon the Biſhops of the Eaſt, but by the councell and conference of other Biſhops. For ſo Athanaſius ſaith: Miſit omnium Italicorum Epiſcoporum conſilio Iulius ad Epiſcopos Orientales, certum illis Synodi diem denuntians: Iulius ſent vnto the Biſhops of the Eaſt, by the counſell of all the Biſhops of Italie, giuing them to vnderſtand the certaine day of the Councell. Which thing Iulius alſo himſelfe auoucheth by theſe words: Tametſi ſolus ſim, qui ſcripſi, tamen non meam ſolius ſententiam, ſed omnium Italorum, & omnium in his Regionibus Epiſcoporum ſcripſi: Notwithſtanding I alone wrote, yet it was not mine owne minde only, Athan. in epiſt. ad ſolitariam vitam agentes. Epiſt. Iulij in Apologia Athanaſij 2.

Appeales.

onely, that I wrote, but also the minde of the Bishops of Italie, and of all other Bishops of these Countries.

Nicephor. lib. 13. cap. 33.

So likewise Innocentius the Bishop of Rome, being very desirous to restore Chrysostome, and to recouer the vnitie of the Church, not of himselfe, or by his owne authoritie, but by the Decree and consent of a Councell holden in Italie, sent Messengers into the East. And sitting with others in the Councell, hee toke not vpon him that vniuersall power, that is now imagined, but had his voice equall with his brethren, as it appeareth by Miltiades Bishop of Rome, that sate with three Bishops of Gallia, and fourteene other Bishops of Italie, to determine the controuersie betwéene Cæcilianus and Donatus à Casis Nigris.

Optatus, lib. 1.

Now to come to the prosecution of the matter. M. Harding knoweth, that the Bishops of the East vnderstood not this singular authoritie or prerogatiue of the Bishop of Rome, and therefore being called, obeied not the summon, nor had any regard vnto his sentence, as it is many waies easie to be séene. Therefore they returned vnto Iulius this answer: Si nostris placitis assentiri volueritis, pacem vobiscum, & Communionem habere volumus. Sin verò aliter egeritis, & eis amplius quàm nobis assentiri iudicaueritis, contraria celebrabimus: & deinceps nec vobiscum congregari, nec vobis obedire, nec vobis vestrisue fauere volumus: If you will agree vnto our orders, wee will haue peace and Communion with you: But if you will otherwise doe, and rather agree vnto our aduersaries than vnto vs, then will we publish the contrary: and hencefoorth neither will wee sit in Councell with you, nor obey you, nor beare good will either to you, or to any of yours.

Inter Decreta Iulij Concil. Tomo. 1.

This imperfection and weakenesse of their owne doings, the Bishops of Rome themselues vnderstood, and confessed. For thus Innocentius writeth vnto S. Augustine, Alypius, and others in Aphrica touching Pelagius: Si adhuc taliter sentit, cùm sciat se damnandum esse; quibus acceptis literis, aut quando se nostro iudicio committet? Quod si accersendus esset, id ab illis melùs fieret, qui magis proximi, & non longo terrarum spatio videntur esse disiuncti: If he continue still in one minde, knowing that I will pronounce against him; at what request of letters, or when will he commit himselfe to our iudgement? If it be good he were called to make answer, it were better some others called him, that are neere at hand, &c.

Inter Decreta Innocent. epist. 27.

And therefore Iulius the Bishop of Rome, finding his owne infirmitie herein, wrote vnto the Emperour Constans, and opened vnto him the whole matter, and besought him to write vnto his brother Constantius, that it might please him to send the Bishops of the East, to make answer to that they had done against Athanasius. Euen so the Clergy of the Citie of Antioch, in the like case of trouble and spoile, wrote vnto Iohn the Patriarke of Constantinople, to intreat the Emperour in their behalfe. It appeareth hereby, that this Infinite Authoritie, and Prerogatiue Power ouer all the World, in those daies was not knowen.

Sozom. lib. 3. cap. 9.

Concil. Constantinop. quintum Actio. 1.

I thinke it hereby plainly and sufficiently proued, first, that the Bishop of Rome had no authoritie to receiue Appeales from all parts of the World, and that by the Councels of Nice, of Tele, of Mileuitum, and of Aphrica, by S. Cyprian, and by the Emperours Martian and Iustinian: Next, that M. Harding, the better to furnish his matter, hath notoriously falsified Chrysostomes words, three times in one place: Thirdly, that Chrysostomes Letter vnto Innocentius conteined matter of complaint, but no Appeale: which thing is also proued by the very words, and tenour of the Letter, by the Bishops of Romes owne confession, and by the imperfection and weakenesse of their doings. For the Law saith: Iurisdictio sine modica coerctione nulla est: Iurisdiction without some compulsion is no Iurisdiction.

De officio eius, cui mandata est Iurisdictio. Mandatam.

Indeed, by way of compromise and agrément of the parties, matters were sometimes brought to be heard and ended by the Bishop of Rome, as also by other Bishops; but not by any ordinarie processe, or course of Law. And so it appeareth, this matter betwéene Athanasius and the Arians, was first brought vnto Iulius: for that the Arians willingly desired him, for triall thereof, to call a Councell. For thus Iulius himselfe writeth vnto the Bishops of the East, as it is before alleged: Si Macario & Hesychio nullam Synodum postulantibus adhortator fuissem, vt ad Synodum, qui ad me scripsissent, conuocarentur, idque in gratiam fratrum, qui se iniuriam pati conquerebantur, etiam ita iusta fuisset mea cohortatio: Iam verò, vbi ijdem illi, qui à vobis pro grauibus viris, & fidedignis habiti sunt, authores mihi fuerint, vt vos conuocarem, certè id à vobis ægri ferri non debuit: If I had giuen aduice vnto (your messengers) Macarius and Hesychius, that they that had written vnto me, might be called to a Councell, and that in consideration of our brethren, which complained they suffered wrong, although neither of them had desired the same, yet had mine aduice beene void of iniury. But now, seeing the same men, whom you tooke to be graue, and worthy of credit, haue made sute vnto me, that I should call you, verily, yee should not take it in ill part.

Epist. Iulij, in Apol. Athan. 2.

Hereby

Hereby it is plaine, that Iulius toke vpon him to call these parties, not by any such Vniuersall Iurisdiction, as M. Harding fansieth, but onely by the consent and request of both parties. And therefore Iulius saith, he caused Athanasius to be cited Regulariter, that is, according to order: for the order of iudgement is, that a man bee first called, and then accused, and last of all condemned: but he meaneth not thereby the order of the Canons, as M. Harding expounded it. For touching Appeales to Rome, there was no Canon yet prouided. The counterfeit Epistle of Athanasius to Felix is answered before. Appeales. Regulariter.

Theodoretus was deposed, and banished, and cruelly intreated, as it appeareth by his Letters vnto Renatus: and therefore the words that he vseth, are rather tokens of his miseries and want of helpe, than certaine testimonies of his iudgement. For euery man is naturally inclined to extoll him, and to aduance his power, at whose hands he seketh helpe. Theodoretus.

But if it were granted, it was lawfull then for the Bishop of Rome to receiue all manner Appeales, in such order as it is pretended, yet cannot M. Harding thereof necessarily conclude, that the Bishop of Rome was the Head of the Vniuersall Church. For Ostiensis saith, Appeales may be made, not onely from the lower Iudge vnto the higher, but also from equall to equall. And in this order, as it shall afterward be shewed more at large, Donatus à Casis Nigris was by the Emperour lawfully remoued from the Bishop of Rome, to the Bishop of Arle in France. Ostiensis words be these: Non nocebit error, si appelletur ad maiorem, quàm debuerit, vel ad parem: The errour shall not hurt, if the Appeale be made either to a higher Iudge than was meet, or to an equall. Where also it is thus noted in the Margin: Appellari potest ad parem, si de hoc sit consuetudo: Appeale may be made vnto the equall, if there be a custome of it. Hereby it is plaine, that the right of Appeale, by fine force of Law, concludeth not any necessarie superioritie, much lesse this infinite power ouer the whole Vniuersall Church. Aug. epist. 162. Extra. de Appellationib. in Sexto. Roman. Eccles. in Gloss.

But M. Harding might soone haue foreseene, that this his first principle of Appeales would easily be turned against himselfe.

First, for that it is well knowen, that Appeales then, euen in the Ecclesiasticall causes, were made vnto the Emperours and Ciuill Princes. 1

Secondly, for that the Bishop of Rome determined such cases of Appeale, by warrant and Commission from the Emperour. 2

Thirdly, for that matters being once heard and determined by the Bishop of Rome, haue beene by Appeale from him remoued further vnto others. 3

As touching the first, that Appeales in Ecclesiasticall causes were lawfully made vnto the Prince, it is cleare by Eusebius, by Socrates, by Nicephorus, and by S. Augustine, in sundry places. Donatus being condemned by threescore and ten Bishops in Aphrica, appealed vnto the Emperour Constantinus, and was receiued. S. Augustine saith: Parmenianus vltrò passus est suos adire Constantinum: Parmenianus willingly suffered his fellowes to goe vnto the Emperour Constantinus. Againe he saith: Infero adhuc & verba Constantini ex Literis eius, vbi se inter partes cognouisse, & innocentem Cæcilianum comperisse, testatur: Heere I bring in the words of Constantine out of his owne Letters, wherein he confesseth, that he heard the parties, and found Cæcilianus to be innocent. Likewise he saith: An fortè de Religione fas non est, vt dicat Imperator, vel quos miserit Imperator? Cur ergo ad Imperatorem Legati vestri venerunt? What, is it not lawfull for the Emperour, or for such as shall be sent by the Emperour, to pronounce sentence of Religion? Wherefore then came your Ambassadours vnto the Emperour? And so likewise againe: Si nihil debent in his causis Imperatores iubere, si ad Imperatores Christianos hæc cura pertinere non debet, quis vrgebat maiores vestros causam Cæciliani ad Imperatorem mittere? If Emperours haue nothing to command in these cases, or if this matter nothing touch a Christian Emperours charge, who then forced your predecessours to remoone Cæcilianus matter vnto the Emperour? Therefore the Emperour Constantinus summoned the Bishops of the East, that had beene in the Councell of Tyrus, to appeare before him, to render account of their doings. His words be these: Vtre ipsa quàm sincerè ac rectè iudicaueritis, ostendatis: Idque coram me: I will you, to make your appearance, and to shew indeed, how sincerely and iustly ye haue dealt: And that euen before me. By these few examples it may well appeare, that Appeales in Ecclesiasticall causes, in those daies, were made vnto the Prince, and that it was thought lawfull then for the Prince to haue the hearing of the same. Yet was not the Prince therefore the Head of the Vniuersall Church. Certainly S. Gregory thought it not amisse to commit a spirituall matter, touching the purgation of a Bishop, to Brunichilda the French Queene. Notwithstanding it be noted thus in the Glosse: Fuit tamen hic nimium papaliter dispensatum. As touching the Bishop of Romes power herein, it is certaine, he heard such matters of Appeale, by warrant of the Emperours Commission, and not as hauing authoritie Euseb. lib. 10. cap. 5. Socrat. Lib. 1. cap. 21. Nicephor. li. 7. cap 43. Aug. epist. 162. Contra Epist. Parmen. lib. 1. cap. 5. Contra Cresconium Grãmati. lib. 3. cap. 71. Contra Epist. Parmen. lib. 1. cap. 7. Aug. epist. 68. Socrat. Lib. 1. cap. 22. Gregor. Li. 11. Epist. 8. 2. Quæst. 5. Mennam.

Appeales.

tie of himselfe. S. Augustine opening the contention betweene Cæcilianus and Donatus à Casis Nigris, vttereth this matter at large, in this wise: An fortè non debuit Romanæ Ecclesiæ Episcopus Miltiades cum Collegis transmarinis Episcopis illud sibi vsurpare iudicium, quod ab Aphris septuaginta, vbi Primas Tigisitanus præsedit, fuerat terminatum? Quid, quod nec ipse vsurpauit? Rogatus quippe Imperator, Iudices misit Episcopos, qui cum eo sederent: But should not the Bishop of Rome Miltiades, with other his fellowes, Bishops beyond the seas, ioined together in Commission, take vpon him the iudgement of that thing that was determined before by threescore and ten Bishops of Aphrica, amongst whom the Primate of Tigisita sate as President? And what if he neuer tooke it vpon him? (as of himselfe) For the Emperor being intreated by the party, sent other Bishops to sit with him. The very copy of this Commission is yet to be seene, both in Eusebius, and also in Nicephorus. Neither was the Bishop of Rome alone in that Commission, but ioined together with Rheticius, Maternus, Marinus, and Marcus, whom the Emperour calleth his Commission fellowes. The words of the Commission be these: Constantinus Imperator Miltiadi Episcopo Romano, & Marco, &c. Constantinus Emperour, vnto Miltiades the Bishop of Rome, and vnto Marcus. Forasmuch as sundry letters haue beene sent vnto me from Anilinus our most Noble President of Aphrica, wherein Cæcilianus the Bishop of Carthage is accused of many matters by certaine his fellowes of the same Country, &c. Therefore I haue thought it good, that the said Cæcilianus, together with ten Bishops his accusers, and other ten, such as he shall thinke meet, saile to Rome, that there in your presence, together with Rheticius, and Maternus, and Marinus, your Fellow-Commissioners, whom for that cause I haue willed to trauell to Rome, he may be heard, &c.

Aug. Ep. 162.

Euseb. Lib. 10. Cap. 10. Nicephor. Lib. 7. cap. 43. Colleg. 3.

Heere it is euident to be seene, that the Bishop of Rome was the Emperours Delegate, and in Ecclesiasticall Iurisdiction had his authoritie and power, not from S. Peter, but from the Emperour. Whereby it is easie to be gathered, that the Bishop of Romes power was not so vniuersall then, as M. Harding would seeme now to make it; and that the world then vnderstood not this Decree of Pope Clemens the fifth, which, as it is reported, he afterward published in the Councell of Vienna: Omne ius Regum pendet à Papa: All the right of the Prince is deriued from the Pope.

Clemens 5.

Neither was the Bishop of Romes determination of such force, but that it was lawfull then for the partie greeued, to refuse his iudgement, and to appeale further. And therefore Donatus, being condemned before Miltiades, appealed from him, and vpon his complaint vnto the Emperour, was put ouer vnto the Bishop of Arle in France, and to certaine others. And in conclusion, vnderstanding that iudgement there would passe against him, last of all, hee appealed to the Emperours owne Person. And the Emperour himselfe confesseth by his Letters, that he sate in iudgement, and heard both parties.

Aug. Epist. 68.

August. contra Cresconium Grammat. lib. 3. cap. 71.

Now if receiuing of Appeales necessarily import this vniuersall power, then was the Emperours power vniuersall: for he receiued all Appeales, out of all Countries, without exception, and that euen in Causes Ecclesiasticall. Againe, then was the Bishop of Romes power not vniuersall: for it was lawfull then to refuse him, and to appeale to some other. And thus M. Hardings reasons run roundly against himselfe.

M. Harding. The 22. Diuision.

For which cause, that See hath euer hitherto of all Christian Nations, and now also ought to bee heard and obeied in all points of Faith. For that See, though it hath failed sometimes in charitie, and hath beene in case, as it might truly say the words of the Gospell, spoken by the foolish Virgins, Our Lampes bee without light, yet it neuer failed in Faith, as Theodoretus witnesseth, and S. Augustine affirmeth the same: which speciall grace, and singular priuilege, is to be imputed vnto the praier of Christ, by which he obteined of God, for Peter and his successours, (108) that their Faith should not faile. Therefore the euill life of the Bishops of Rome ought not to withdraw vs from beleeuing and following the Doctrine preached and taught in the holy Church of Rome.

Matth. 25.

The 108. vntruth. For many Popes haue erred in Faith, as shall appeare.

For better credit heereof, that is earnestly to bee considered which S. Augustine writeth, Epistola 165. where, after that he hath rehearsed in order all the Popes that succeeded Peter, euen to him that was Pope in his time, he saith thus: In illum Ordinem Episcoporum, &c. Into that rew of Bishops, that reacheth from Peter himselfe to Anastasius, which now sitteth in the same Chaire, if any traitour had crept in, it should nothing hurt the Church, and the innocent Christian folke, ouer whom our Lord hauing prouidence, saith of euill Rulers; What they say vnto you, doe yee; but what they doe, doe yee not: For they say, and doe not, to the intent the hope of a faithfull person may be certaine, and such, as being set, not in man, but in our Lord, be neuer scattered abroad with tempest of wicked Schisme. And in his 166. Epistle (hee saith) Our heauenly master hath so farre forewarned vs to beware of all euill of dissension, that he assured the people also of euill Rulers, that for their sakes the seat of holesome doctrine should not be forsaken, in which seat euen the very euill men be compelled to say good things. For the things which they say, be not theirs, but Gods, who in the seat of vnitie hath put the doctrine of veritie.

Matth. 23.

S. August. speaketh generally of all Bishops, and not one word namely of the Bishop of Rome.

By this wee are plainly taught, that albeit the successours of Peter, Christs Vicars in Earth, bee found blame-worthy for their euill life, yet wee ought not to dissent from them in doctrine, nor seuer our selues from them in Faith, forasmuch as, notwithstanding they be euill, by Gods prouidence, for the suretie of his his people, they be compelled to say the things that be good, and to teach the truth: the things they speake not being theirs, but Gods, who hath put the Doctrine of Veritie in the seate or chaire of Vnitie: which singular Grace commeth specially to the See of Peter, either of the force of Christs praier, as is said before, or in respect of place and dignitie, which the Bishops of that See hold for Christ, as Balaam could be brought by no meanes to curse that people, whom God would haue to be blessed. And Caiphas also prophesied, because he was high Bishop of that yeere, and prophesied truely, being a man otherwise most wicked. And therefore the euill doings of the Bishops of Rome, make no argument of discrediting their Doctrine. To this purpose the example of Gregorie Nazianzene may very fitly be applied, of the Golden, Siluerne and Leaden Seale. As touching the value of Mettals, Gold and Siluer are better, but for the goodnesse of the Seale, aswell doth Lead imprint a figure in wax, as Siluer or Gold. For this cause, that the See of Rome hath neuer beene defiled with stinking Heresies, as Theodoretus saith, and God hath alwaies kept in the Chaire of Vnitie, the doctrine of Veritie, as Augustine writeth: For this cause (I say) it sitteth at the sterne, and gouerneth the Churches of the whole world: For this cause Bishops haue made their Appellations thither, iudgement in doubts of Doctrine, and determination in all controuersies and strifes, hath beene from thence alwaies demanded.

Whether the Pope may erre.

M. Harding compareth the Pope with Balaam and Caiphas.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

This is a very poore helpe indeed. M. Harding heere is faine to resemble the Bishops of Rome touching their Doctrine, to Balaam, to Caiphas, and to a Leaden Seale: and touching their liues, to Lamps without light. Yet (saith he) all this notwithstanding, we may not therefore depart from them. For Christ saith, The Scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses Chaire: Doe yee that they say: but that they doe, doe ye not: for they say, and doe not. Matth. 23.

For asmuch as it liketh M. Harding to vse these comparisons, it may not much mislike him, if some man vpon occasion heereof happen to say, as Christ said in the like case: Woe be vnto you Scribes and Pharises: ye blinde Guides: ye painted Graues: ye shut vp the Kingdome of Heauen before men: ye neither enter your selues, nor suffer others that would enter: yee haue made the House of God, a Caue of Theeues. Luc. 11.

Certainly Balaam, notwithstanding he were a false Prophet, yet he opened his mouth, and blessed the people of God: Caiphas, although he were a wicked Bishop, yet he prophesied, and spake the truth: A Seale, although it be cast in Lead, yet it giueth a perfit print: The Scribes and Pharises, although they were Hypocrites, and liued not well, yet they instructed the Congregation, and said well: The Maniches, although they were Heretiques, and taught not well, yet outwardly in the conuersation and sight of the world, as S. Augustine saith, they liued well. But these, vnto whom M. Harding claimeth the Vniuersall power ouer all the world, neither blesse the people of God, nor preach Gods Truth: nor giue any print of good life, or Doctrine: nor instruct the Congregation: nor say well, as the Scribes and Pharises did: nor, by M. Hardings owne Confession, liue well, as the Maniches did. S. Augustine saith: Qui nec regiminis in se rationem habet, nec sua crimina detersit, nec filiorum culpam correxit, canis impudicus dicendus est magis, quam Episcopus: He that neither regardeth to rule himselfe, nor hath washed off his owne sinnes, nor corrected the faults of his Children, may rather be called a filthy dogge, than a Bishop. Num. 23. & 24. Iohan. 11. Augustin. Confessi. lib. 3. ca. 6. Retract. lib. 1. cap. 7. 2. Quæst. 7. Qui nec.

Yet, all this corruption of life notwithstanding, M. Harding saith, The See of Rome can neuer faile in Faith. For Christ said vnto Peter, I haue praied for thee, that thy Faith may not faile. The like confidence and trust in themselues the Priests had in the old times, as it may appeare by these words of the Prophet Micheas: Sacerdotes in mercede docuerunt, & Prophetæ in pecunia Prophetauerunt, & super Dominum requiescebant, dicentes: Nonne Dominus est in medio nostri? The Priests taught for hire, and the Prophets Prophesied for mony: and yet they rested themselues vpon the Lord, and said: Is not the Lord in the middest amongst vs? With like confidence the Priests said, as it is written in the Prophet Hieremie: Non peribit lex à Sacerdote, nec consilium à Seniore: The Law shall not decay in the Priest, nor Counsell in the Elder. But God answereth them farre otherwise: Nox vobis erit pro visione, & tenebræ pro diuinatione: Ye shall haue darke night in stead of a Vision: and ye shall haue darknesse in stead of Prophesie. Certainly, the very Glosse vpon the Decretals putteth this matter vtterly out of doubt: These be the words: Certum est, quòd Papa errare potest: It is certaine, that the Pope may erre. And Alphonsus de Castro: Omnis homo errare potest in Fide, etiamsi Papa sit: Euery man may erre in the Faith: yea although it be the Pope. And for proofe heereof he saith: De Liberio Papa, constat fuisse Arianum: Touching Pope Liberius, it is certaine, he was an Arian Heretique. Pope Honorius was an Heretique, of the sect of them that were called Monothelitæ, condemned for the same in the first Councell holden at Constantinople. Pope Marcellinus openly made Sacrifice vnto an Idole. Pope Iohn the 22. held a wicked Heresie against the Immortalitie of the Soule, and for the same was reproued, not by his Cardinals, but by Gerson, and the Schole of Sorbona in Paris. Luc. 22. Mich. 3. Hierem. 18. Mich. 3. 24. Que. 1. in Glossa. Alphons. contra Hæreses lib. 1. cap. 4. Concil. Constantin. 6. Actio. 12. Concil. tomo. 1 in vita Marcellini. Gerson.

Pope Sylvester the 2. was a Sorcerer, and had familiar conference with the diuell, and Holcot. in lib.

Whether the Pope may erre.

and by his procurement was made Pope. Pope Anastasius Communicated with Photinus the Heretique, and therefore was forsaken of his Clergie. Pope Hildebrand, that first of all others in these Countries forbade the lawfull mariage of Priests, both for his life, and also for his Religion, is set out at large in a Councell holden at Brixia: where he is called and published to the world, to be a Vitious man: a burner of houses: a Robber of Churches: a maintainer of Murders and Periuries: an Heretique against the Apostolique Doctrine: the old Disciple of Berengarius: a Sorceter: a Necromancer: a man possessed with the Diuell: and therefore out of the Catholique Faith. The Fathers in the Councell of S. Basil say: Multi pontifices in errores & Hæreses lapsi esse leguntur: We reade that many Bishops of Rome haue fallen into errors and Heresies. And the Bishop of Rome himselfe saith: Notwithstanding the Pope draw innumerable companies of people by heaps with him into Hell, yet let no mortall man once dare to reproue him: Nisi deprehendatur à Fide deuius: Vnlesse it be found, that he stray from the Faith. To conclude, Nicolas Lyra is driuen to say: Multi Papæ inuenti sunt Apostatæ: We finde, that many Popes haue forsaken the Faith.

Sapien. lecti. 189.
Dist. 19. Anastasius.
Abbas Vrsper. in Chronicis.
Concil. Basil. in epist. Synodali.
Dist. 40. Si Papa.
Nic. Lyra in 16. cap. Matt.

All this notwithstanding, by M. Hardings resolution, the See of Rome neuer failed from the Faith, nor neuer can faile. The Valentinian Heretiques, as Irenæus reporteth were wont to say of themselues, that they were naturally made of an heauenly substance, and therefore néeded not to flee from sinne, as others néeded. For, liued they neuer so wickedly, yet said they, We are spirituall still: no sinne can hurt vs. For we are as pure tried Gold, which notwithstanding it be laid in a heape of dung, yet keepeth it still the brightnesse and nature of Gold, and receiueth no corruption of the dung. Euen so these men séeme to say, that whatsoeuer the Pope either beléeue, or speake, or do, his Faith still remaineth sound, and can neuer faile, because he sitteth in Peters Chaire: as if he had a Lease of the Church of God, without any maner Empeachment of Waste. And therefore they say: Quod si totus mundus sentiet in aliquo aduersus Papam, tamen videtur, quòd magis standum est sententiæ Papæ: If all the world giue sentence in any thing contrary to the Pope, it seemeth, we ought rather to stand to the Popes iudgement, than to the iudgement of all the world. Againe they say: In Papa si desint bona acquisita per meritum, sufficiunt ea quæ à loci prædecessore præstantur: If there want in the Pope good things gotten by merit, yet the things that he hath of (Peter) his predecessor in that place, are sufficient. Likewise againe: Papa sanctitatem recepit à Cathedra: The Pope receiueth his holinesse of his Chaire. [a] And Pope Sixtus saith: that Saint Peter dwelleth in the Bishop of Rome, and directeth him in his doings, and beareth all Burthens.

Irenæ. li. 1. ca. 1
De electi. & electi. potestate. Significasti.
In Glossa.
Idem Albert.
Pighius lib. 6. Ca. 13.
Dist. 40. Non nos.
Dist. 40. Si Papa.
[a] Epist. Sixti. 2

Thus they feast and cheare themselues, and smoth the world with vaine talke. But S. Iohn saith: Nolite dicere, Patrem habemus Abraham: Neuer say (Peter or) Abraham was our Father. S. Paul speaking of his successors, saith thus: Equidem scio, quòd post discessum meum, ingressuri sint ad vos lupi graues, non parcentes gregi: I know, that after my departure from you, there shall rauening wolues come among st you, that shall not spare the flocke. And S. Hierome saith: Non sunt Sanctorum filij, qui tenent loca sanctorum: They be not euermore the children of holy men, that sit in the roomes of holy men.

Dist. 19. Sic omnes.
In Glossa.
ἐν ὁλείῳ ὄλεια πάντα.
Matth. 3.
Actor. 20.

Now, whereas M. Harding saith, Christ praied for Peter, that his Faith should not faile, that prayer pertained to all the rest of the Apostles, and not only vnto Peter. Origen saith: Num audebimus dicere &c: Shall we dare to say, that the Gates of Hell preuailed not only against Peter: but shall preuaile against the rest? Why may wee not rather say, that the words that Christ spake, were verified in euery of them, of whom they were spoken? Nam & quæ prius dicta sunt, & quæ sequuntur, velut ad Petrum dicta, sunt omnium communia: For both the things that were spoken of before, and also the things that follow, as spoken vnto Peter, are common to all. So likewise Beda expoundeth the same generally of all the faithfull, and not of Peter only. And so Christ himselfe expoundeth his owne words: For thus he prayeth vnto his Father: Pater sancte, serua eos per nomen tuum &c. O holy Father, saue them for thy names sake. I pray not for them only, but for all them that by their preaching shall beleeue in me.

Dist. 40. Non est facile.
Origen. in Matt. tract. 1.
Bed. in Lucam Ca. 22.
Iohan. 17.

But (saith M. Harding) be the Bishop of Romes life neuer so wicked, yet may we not seuer our selues from the Church of Rome. Howbeit S. Cyprian saith otherwise: Plebs obsequens præceptis Dominicis, & Deum metuens, à peccatore Præposito separare se debet: The people obeying Gods commaundements, and fearing God, must seuer themselues from the wicked, that ruleth ouer them. And Pope Nicolas hath straitly commanded vpon paine of Excommunication, that no man should be present, to heare Masse said by a Priest, that he knoweth vndoubtedly to liue in aduoutry. Howbeit in déed, it is not their life only, that the Church of God is offended withall, but also and specially, the filth and corruption of their Religion, the oppressing of Gods word, the open deceiuing of the people, and the manifest maintenance of Idolattie. And what if the Siluer of Rome be turned into Drosse? What if Cyprian. Li. 1. Epist. 4.

Dist. 32. Nullus.
Esai 1.

the

the City that was Faithfull be become an Harlot? What if they can abide no ſound doctrine? What if they haue made the Houſe of God, a Caue of theeues? What if Rome be become the great Babylon, the Mother of Fornication, imbrewed and drunken with the Blod of the Saints of God? And what if Abomination ſit in the holy Place, euen in the Temple of God? Yet may we not depart from thence? Yet muſt that be the Rule and Standard of Gods Religion? Truly Chriſt ſaith: Take heed of the leauen of the Scribes and Phariſes: And God himſelfe ſaith: Exite de illa populus meus, ne participes ſitis delictorum eius, & de plagis eius ne accipiatis: O my people, come away from her, leſt ye be partakers of her ſinnes, and ſo receiue part of her plagues. Irenæus ſaith: Presbyteris illis, qui ſunt in Eccleſia, obaudire oportet, qui ſucceſſionem habent ab Apoſtolis: qui cum Epiſcopatus ſucceſſione charisma Veritatis certum, ſecundùm placitum Patris acceperunt: We ought to obey the Biſhops in the Church, that haue their ſucceſſion from the Apoſtles, which together with the Succeſſion of the Biſhopricke, haue receiued the certaine gift of the Truth, according to the will of the Father. This holy Father ſaith, Biſhops muſt be heard, and obeyed with a limitation, that is, not all, whatſoeuer they be, or whatſoeuer they ſay, but that haue the vndoubted gift of Gods Truth. And, for that M. Harding ſometh to clayme by the Authoritie of the Scribes and Phariſes, ſaying, They ſit in Moſes Chaire: and that therefore wee ought to do that they ſay; S. Auguſtine expoundeth the ſame place in this ſort: Sedendo in Cathedra, Legem Dei docent: Ergo per illos Deus docet. Sua verò ſi illi docere velint, nolite audire, nolite facere: By ſitting in the Chaire (is meant) they teach the Law of God: Therefore it is God that teacheth by them. But if they will teach any thing of their owne (as the Church of Rome had done, and yet doth aboue number) then ſaith S. Auguſtine, heare it not, then doe it not.

Whether the Pope may erre.

2. Timoth. 4. Hierem. 7. Matth. 21. Apocal. 17. Daniel 9. 2. Theſſal. 2. Matth. 16. Apocal. 18. Irenæus lib. 4. Ca. 43. Auguſtin. in Iohan. tractat. 46.

M. Harding. The 23. Diuiſion.

Now, that the Biſhop of Rome had alwayes cure and rule ouer all other Biſhops, (109) ſpecially of them of the Eaſt (for touching them of the Weſt Church it is generally confeſſed) beſide a hundred other euident arguments, this is one very ſufficient, that he had in the Eaſt to do his ſtead, three Delegates or Vicars, now commonly they be named Legates. And this for the commoditie of the Biſhops there, whoſe Churches were farre diſtant from Rome. The one was the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, as we finde it mentioned In Epiſtola Simplicij ad Achatium Conſtantinopolitanum. The ſecond was the Biſhop of Alexandria, as the Epiſtle of Bonifacius the ſecond to Eulalius recordeth. The third was the Biſhop of Theſſalonica, as it is at large declared in the 82. Epiſtle of Leo, ad Anaſtaſium Theſſalonicenſem. By peruſing theſe Epiſtles euery man may ſee, that all the Biſhops of Greece, Aſia, Syria, Ægypt, and to be ſhort, of all the Orient, rendred and exhibited their humble obedience to the Biſhop of Rome, and to his arbitrement referred their doubts, complaints and cauſes, and to him only made their appellations.

The 109. vntruth. For the Biſhops of the Eaſt neuer yeelded ſuch ſubiection to the Pope.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

What we may thinke of the other Hundred proſes, which M. Harding, as he ſaith, hath left vntouched, it may the ſoner appeare, for that this one proſe that is here brought forth in ſtead of all, is not only vntrue, but alſo vtterly without any ſhadow or colour of truth. Theſe authorities of Leo, Symmachus and Bonifacius, forasmuch as they are alleged without words, may likewiſe be paſt ouer without anſwer. Howbeit this Bonifacius the ſecond, in defence of this quarrell, is forced to ſay, that S. Auguſtine that godly Father, and all other the Biſhops of Aphrica, Numidia, Pentapolis, and other countries adioyning, that withſtood the proud attempt of the Biſhops of Rome, and found out their open forgerie in falſifying the Nicen Councel, were altogether inflamed & led by the diuel.

But how doth this appeare to M. Harding, that the Biſhop of Rome had all the Biſhops of the Eaſt in Subiection, to vſe and command them, as his Seruants? In what Councell was it euer decreed it ſhould be ſo? who ſubſcribed it? who recorded it? who euer ſaw ſuch Canons? The beſt plea that Pope Nicolas can make in this behalfe, is, that Peter was firſt Biſhop of Antioch, and after Rome: and S. Marke his Scholar, Biſhop of Alexandria. Whereof, he thinketh it may very well and ſubſtantially be gathered, that the Biſhops of Rome ought to haue all the world in Subiection. Indeed in the counterfet Charter, or Donation of the Emperour Conſtantine, authoritie is giuen to the Biſhop of Rome ouer the other foure Patriarkes, of Antioch, of Alexandria, of Conſtantinople, and of Hieruſalem. But the Biſhops of Rome themſelues, and of themſelues deuiſed and forged this Charter, and that ſo fondly, that a very Childe may eaſily eſpy the folly. For beſide a great number of other vntruths, at that very time, when it is imagined that Charter was drawen, there was neither Patriarke, nor Biſhop, nor Prieſt, nor Church in Conſtantinople, nor the Citie it ſelfe yet built, nor knowen to the world by that name. This notwithſtanding, the Biſhop of Rome vpon this ſimple title, hath be ſet his Miter with three Crownes, in token that he hath the Vniuerſall power ouer the three Diuiſions of the world, Europa, Aſia & Aphrica. And ſo as the king of Perſia in old times

Nicolaus PP. ad Michaelem Imperat.

intitled himſelfe, Frater Solis, & Lunæ, euen ſo Pope Nicolas calleth himſelfe, The Prince of all Lands and Countries.

Nicol. PP. ad Michaelem Imperatorem: Princeps ſuper omnem terrã.

But what duty the Biſhops of the Eaſt parts owed to the Biſhops of Rome, whoſoeuer hath read, and conſidered the ſtorie and practiſe of the times, may ſone perceiue. Firſt the Councell of Nice appointed euery of the three Patriarkes to his ſeuerall charge, none of them to interrupt or trouble other: and willed the Biſhop of Rome, as Rufinus reporteth the ſtorie, to ouerſee Eccleſias Suburbanas, which were the Churches within his Prouince and therefore Athanaſius calleth Rome, the Chiefe, or Mother Citie of the Roman Iuriſdiction. And for that cauſe, the Biſhops of the Eaſt in their Epiſtle vnto Iulius, call him their Fellow ſeruant and Cyrillus the Biſhop of Alexandria, writing vnto Cœleſtinus, calleth him his Brother. Fellowes, and Brothers be titles of Equalitie, and not of Subiection.

Concil. Nicen. Can. 6.

Rufin. li. 1. c. 6.

Athanaſi. in Epiſt. ad ſolitariã vitam agentes: Metropolis Romanæ ditionis.

Certaine it is, that ſundry of the Biſhops of Rome began very rathe, to ſeeke this Preeminence, euen with manifeſt forgerie, and corruption of Councels, as is alreadie proued. But the Biſhops of other countries neuer yelded vnto them, nor vnderſtood theſe vaine titles. The Biſhops of the Eaſt, writing vnto Iulius, allege, that the Faith, that then was in Rome, came firſt from them, and that their Churches, as Sozomenus writeth, ought not to be accounted inferiour to the Church of Rome: And as Socrates further reporteth, That they ought not to be ordred by the Roman Biſhop. Gennadius the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, together with the Councell there, thus writeth vnto the Biſhop of Rome: Curet ſanctitas tua vniuerſas tuas cuſtodias, tibique ſubiectos Epiſcopos: Let thy Holineſſe ſee vnto thine owne charge, and vnto the Biſhops appointed vnto thee.

Caſſiodor. li. 4. ca. 24.

Cyril. Epiſt. 27. pag. 294.

Sozo. li. 3. c. 7. τὰ παρὰ ταῦτα τὰ δεύτερα φέρειν οὐκ ἔνιον

Socrat. li. 2. c. 11. μηδὲν κατ' οἰκείαν ἐξουσίαν πράττειν.

The Councell of Alexandria committed the viſitation, and Reforming of all the Churches in the Eaſt, vnto Alterius: and of all the Churches in the Weſt, vnto Euſebius the Biſhop of Vercellæ. By Authoritie of which Commiſſion, Euſebius, together with Hilarius, viſited and corrected all the Churches of Illyricum, France and Italie. A man might ſay, where was then the vniuerſall power of the Biſhop of Rome? S. Baſil ſaith: The ſtate and ſafety of the Church of Antioch, dependeth of Athanaſius the Biſhop of Alexandria, and not (as M. Harding heere ſaith) of the Biſhop of Rome. And therefore he deſireth Athanaſius to ſee vnto it.

Rufin. li. 1. ca. 29.

Rufin. li. 1. ca. 30. & 31.

Baſil. epiſt. 48.

The Emperours Honorius and Theodoſius appointed ouer all matters of doubt ariſing within the Country of Illyricum, to be heard, and ended before the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, and not before the Biſhop of Rome. And the very Gloſſe vpon the Decres, expounding that ſame Law of Honorius, and Theodoſius, hath theſe words: Imperator dicit, quòd Patriarcha Conſtantinopolitanus habet idem in ſuis ſubditis, quod Papa habet in ſuis: The Emperour ſaith, the Patriarke of Conſtantinople hath the ſame authoritie ouer the people of his Province, that the Pope hath ouer his. The Emperours words be theſe Conſtantinopolitana Eccleſia Romæ veteris prærogatiua lætatur: The Church of Conſtantinople enioyeth now the Prerogatiue of old Rome. And therefore for more proofe hereof, whenſoeuer any Patriarke in any of theſe foure principall Sees, was newly choſen, he wrote letters of Conference and Friendſhip vnto the other Patriarkes; wherein euery of them declared vnto other their Religion and conſent of Faith. Thus did the Biſhop of Rome vnto others: and thus did others vnto him. This is an infallible token, that their authoritie was equall, and none of them had power and gouernment ouer his fellows. And therefore, when Eulogius the Biſhop of Alexandria had written thus vnto Gregory, being then Biſhop of Rome, Sicut iuſſiſtis, As ye commanded; Gregory vtterly ſhunned and refuſed that kinde of writing: for thus he anſwereth him: Hoc verbum Iuſſionis, quæſo, à meo auditu remouete. Scio enim quis ſim, & qui ſitis. Loco mihi Fratres eſtis: Moribus patres. Non ergo Iuſſi, ſed quæ vtilia viſa ſunt, indicare curaui: I pray you haue away this word of Commanding from my hearing. For I know, both what I am, and alſo, what you are. Touching your place, you are my Brethren: touching maners, you are my Fathers. Therefore I Commanded you not: but only ſhewed you what I thought good.

Codi. De Sacroſanctis Eccle. lege 6.

Diſt. 22. Renouantes. in Gloſſ.

Cod. De Sacro-Eccle. lege. 6.

Literæ Synodicæ.

Greg. li. 1. epiſt. 24. 25. & li. 6. Epiſt. 5.

Gregor. lib. 7. Epiſt. 30.

Finally, for that Michael Palæologus the Emperour of the Eaſt parts, in the Councell holden at Lions, about the yere of our Lord, 1442. after great intreaty made vnto him by the Biſhop of Rome, had acknowledged the Biſhops of the Eaſt to be ſubiect vnto him, after he returned home againe into his Empire, and was dead, his Clergie would not ſuffer him to be buried. Yet, ſaith M. Harding, All the Biſhops of Gracia, Aſia, Syria, Ægypt, and to be ſhort, all the Orient, rendred and exhibited their humble obedience to the Biſhop of Rome.

Paulus Æmilius in Hiſtoria Gallorum, li. 8.

M. Harding. The 24. Diuiſion.

Of the Biſhop of Rome his puniſhing of offenders, by Cenſures of the Church, and otherwiſe, as by Excommunication, Election, Depoſition, and enioyning penance for tranſgreſſions; we haue more examples than than I thinke good to recite heere. They that haue knowledge of the Ecclesiasticall stories, may remember, how Timotheus Bishop of Alexandria was excommunicated with Peter his Deacon, by Simplicius the Pope: Nestorius Bishop of Constantinople, by Cœlestinus: Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria with Arcadius the Emperour, and Eudoxia the Empresse, by Innocentius, for their wicked demeanour toward Chrysostome: How Dioscorus Bishop of Alexandria was deposed, though the whole second Ephesine Councell stood in his defence: How Peter Bishop of Antioch was not only put out of his Bishopricke, but also of all Priestly honour: How Photius was put out of the Patriarkship of Constantinople, into which he was intruded by fauour of Michael the Emperour, at the sute of his wicked vncle, by Nicolas the first.

For proofe of this authoritie. the Epistle of Cyprian which he wrote to Stephanus Pope in his time, against Martianus the Bishop of Arelate in Gallia, maketh an euident argument. For that this Martianus became a maintainer of the Heresie of Nouatianus, and therewith seduced the faithfull people. Cyprian hauing intelligence of it by Faustinus from Lions, aduertised Stephanus of it, and moued him expressly to direct his letters to the people of Arle, by authoritie of which, Martianus should be deposed, and another put in his roome, to the intent (saith he there) the flocke of Christ, which hitherto by him scattered abroad, and wounded, is contemned, may be gathered together. Which S. Cyprian would not haue written, had the Bishop of Rome had no such authoritie.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

This reason maketh no great proofe. For it was euer lawfull, not onely to the Bishop of Rome, but also to all other Bishops, both to rebuke, and also to excommunicate wicked doers. Anthymus with his fellowes was excommunicate by euery of the Patriarkall Sees: Paulus Samosatenus, as Nicephorus saith, by all the Bishops vnder Heauen: Auxentius, and Iouinianus, by S. Ambrose: Dioscorus, and Eutyches by the Councell of Constantinople: Cyrillus, albeit he were a Catholike, and a godly Bishop, by all the Bishops of the East. Yet were none of these, that thus vsed the right of excommunication, either Bishops of Rome, or heads of the Vniuersall Church. And, whereas M. Harding saith, we may remember by the Ecclesiasticall stories, that Innocentius the Bishop of Rome excommunicated Arcadius the Emperour, it may please him also to remember, by the same Ecclesiasticall stories, that S. Ambrose excommunicated the Emperour Theodosius: and Anastasius the Bishop of Antioch, both by priuate letters reproued the Emperour Iustinian for his Heresie, and also often times said of him openly in the Church: Whosoeuer followeth any other Gospell, accursed be he. Yet was neither S. Ambrose, nor Anastasius the Bishop of Rome.

Concil. Constãtinop. 5. Act. 1.
Nicephor. li. 6. Cap. 28.
Ambros. li. 10. Epist. 81.
Concil. Constãtino. 5. Actio. 5.
Concil. Chalcedon. Actio. 10.
Nicephor. lib. 13. Cap. 24.
Theodor. lib. 5. Cap. 17.
Euagr. li. 4. Cap. 37.

As for the Execution of Sentence, and Depriuing, or Deposing of Bishops, M. Harding knoweth, the Bishop of Romes authority was to weake. And therefore Innocentius saith of Pelagius: Quibus acceptis literis, aut quando committet se nostro Iudicio? Vpon what letters, or when will he yeeld himself to my iudgement? For this cause Felix the Bishop of Rome, prayed aid of the Emperour Zeno: And the Emperour answered: Admisimus depositionem Anthymi: Wee haue admitted the deposition of Anthymus. Otherwise the Popes sentence had beene in vaine. And therefore the Emperour Constantinus saith of himselfe: Si quis Episcoporum inconsulte tumultuatus sit, Ministri Dei, hoc est, mea executione, illius audacia coercebitur: If any Bishop vndiscreetly moue tumult, his rashe spirit shall be repressed by the hande of Gods Minister, that is, By my Execution. And likewise the Emperour Iustinian hath set out a law in this sort: Si quis Episcoporum ad ciuitatem tempus transcendit, &c. If any Bishop passe out his time appointed, and being called home refuse to come: let him be deprined, and put from his Church, and another better chosen in his roome. (he addeth) by the vertue of this present Law. By the force of this Law Bishops were deposed: For without it, the Pope was not able to put his sentence in execution.

Inter decreta Innocentij.
Concil. Constãtin. 5. Act. 1.
Concil. Constãtinop. 5. Act. 4.
Theodoret. li. 1. Cap. 19.
Anthon. De Ecclesiast. diuersis capitalib. κεφ. τῶν τῆς πατριάρχου νόμων Ἰουστινιανοῦ.

Now, if M. Harding will reason thus:

The Pope excommunicated other Bishops:

Ergo, He was Head of the Church:

Then of the same principle we may well to the contrary reason thus:

The Pope himselfe was Excommunicate by other Bishops:

Ergo, The Pope was not the Head of the Church.

Sozomen. lib. 3. Cap. 10.
Dist. 21. In Trullano.
Nicephor. li. 17. Cap. 26.
Concil. Constantinopol. 6. Actio. 13.

For the antecedent, that the Pope was pronounced Excommunicate by other Bishops, it is out of question. For it is recorded in the Ecclesiasticall story, that Iulius being Bishop of Rome was Excommunicate by the Bishops of the East: Pope Liberius was Excommunicate by Dioscorus: Pope Vigilius was Excommunicate by Menna the Bishop of Constantinople. And Pope Honorius was Excommunicate by the sixth Councell holden at Constantinople.

Sozomen. lib. 3. Cap. 10.
κεφ. τοῦ Ἰουλίου τοῦ Ῥώμης κοιμητ.
In Vita Vigilij.

Or if M. Harding repose more force in deposing of Bishops, than in Excommunication, then let him likewise remember, that Pope Iulius was deposed by the Bishops of the East, as it is recorded by Sozomenus: Pope Hildebrand, by the Councell of Brixia: Pope Iohn, by the Councell of Constance: Pope Eugenius, by the Councell of Basil; and two Popes together, Syluerius and Vigilius, by the Emperour Iustinian. Thus

M. Hardings owne grounds ouerthrow his whole building, and conclude plainly against himselfe.

M. Harding. The 25. Diuision.

The 110. vntruth. For the Bishop of Rome confirmed the Bishops of his owne Prouince, but not all Bishops thorow-out the world.

For the Popes authority concerning Confirmation of the Ordinances and Elections of (110) all Bishops, many examples might easily be alleged, as the request made to Iulius by the 90. Arian Bishops assembled in Councell at Antioch against Athanasius, that he would vouchsafe to ratifie and confirme those that they had chosen in place of Athanasius, Paules, Marcellus and others, to whom they had condemned and depriued.

Also the earnest sute which Theodosius the Emperour made to Leo for confirmation of Anatolius, and likewise that Martianus the Emperour made to him for confimation of Proterius, both Bishops of Alexandria, as it appeareth by their Letters written to Leo in their fauour. And as for Anatolius, Leo would not in any wise order and confirme him, vnlesse he would first professe that hee beleeued and held the doctrine which was contained in Leo his Epistle to Flauianus, and would further by writing witnesse, that he agreed with Cyrillus, and the other Catholike Fathers, against Nestorius. For this, if nothing else could be alleged, the testimony of holy Gregory were sufficient to make good credit: who vnderstanding, that Maximus was ordered Bishop of Salonæ a City in Illyrico, without the authority and confirmation of the See Apostolike, standing in doubt, lest perhaps that had beene done by commandement of Mauritius the Emperour, who did many other things wickedly, thereof writeth to Constantina the Empresse thus: Salonitanæ ciuitatis Episcopus, me, ac Responsali meo nesciente, ordinatus est. Et facta est res, quæ sub nullis anterioribus Principibus euenit: The Bishop of the City of Salonæ (saith he) is ordered, neither I, nor my Deputie made priuie to it. And heerein that thing hath beene done, which neuer happened in the time of any Princes before-our dayes. Thus it appeareth, that before a thousand yeeres past, Bishops had their Ordination and Election confirmed by the See Apostolike.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

If this reason may stand for good, and whosoeuer hath the allowing of the Election or Consecration of Bishops, must therefore be taken as Head of the Church, then must the Church of necessity haue many Heads. For it is certaine, the allowance hereof pertaineth to many. [a] S. Ambrose saith: That all the Bishops both of the East and of the West, gaue their consent and allowance to his Election. Theodosius the Emperour standing in the defence of Flauianus the Bishop of Constantinople saith, [b] That all the Bishops of the East, of Asia, Pontus, Thracia, and Illyricum, had allowed his Election. [c] Eudoxius entred into the Bishopricke of Antioch, without the allowance, and consent of Gregorius the Bishop of Laodicea, and of Marcus the Bishop of Arethusa, and of other Bishops that had interest therein: and is reproued for the same. [d] Gregorius Presbyter saith, For that the Election, and Installation of Gregorie Nazianzene was past, before the Bishops of Ægypt, and Macedonia were come, and so made without their consent, that therefore they vtterly refused to allow him, or to admit him as Bishop there, not for any misliking in the partie, but for that they thought themselues defrauded of their voices.

[a] Ambros. li. 10. epist. 82.

[b] Theodoret li. 5. ca. 23. αἱ τῆς ἑῴας ἐκκλησίαι τῆς φλαβιανοῦ ἀποφάσεως ἀντέχονται.

[c] Sozom. li. 4. ca. 12. μετὰ τῶν ἄλλων, ἧς ἡ χειροτονία ἀβέβαιος συνθήκων.

[d] Gregor. Presb. in vita Nazian. Ἀντέλεγον τῷ ψήφῳ.

Anacletus decreeth thus: Episcopus non minus, quàm à tribus Episcopis reliquisque omnibus assensum præbentibus, vllatenus ordinetur: Let a Bishop in no wise be ordred if lesse than three Bishops, all the rest giuing their assent to the same.

Anaclet. epist. 2

Hereby it appeareth, that to the ratifying of the Election of any one Bishop, the consent of all other Bishops within that Prouince was thought necessary. Which consent they testified among themselues, by writing letters of conference one to another. And therefore, when Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople had intitled himselfe the Vniuersal Bishop, Gregorie counselled Eulogius the Bishop of Alexandria, and other Bishops of the East, neither to write to him, nor to receiue letters from him by that title. Likewise the Bishops of the East, when they had excommunicate Iulius the Bishop of Rome, gaue commandement, that no man should either receiue his letters, or write vnto him, in token they held him for no Bishop.

Gregor. lib. 4. epist. 36.

Sozomen. li. 3. cap. 10.

Neither did onely Bishops allow such Elections, but also both the Prince, and the people. When S. Ambrose being once chosen, and appointed Bishop of Millane, began roughly to deale with the nobles of the Court, and to rebuke their faults, the Emperour Valentinian said: All this I knew before: and therefore I not onely said not nay, but also gaue my Voice, and Assent to his Election.

Theodoret li. 4. cap. 7. καὶ συμψηφίζεται τῆς χειροτονίας τὸ γήμμα.

Mourning the Election of Nectarius, Sozomenus writeth in this wise: The Bishops that were present at the Election, gaue vnto the Emperour in writing sundry names of such as they thought meet for that roome: The Emperour weighing the persons, set his seale vpon Nectarius name, and elected him.

Sozom. lib. 7. cap. 8. τὸν δὲ κλεκτίλιον ἐπιθεὶς τῷ πλούτιδι χαρτῇ

Gratianus the Emperour at his comming to Constantinople embraced Gregorie Nazianzene, and after some conference with him had, said vnto him: O Father, vnto thee, and vnto thy labours, God through vs, committeth this Church. Behold, I giue vnto thee this Holie House, and the Stall. And the people besought the Emperour, to set the Bishop in his Chaire.

Gregorium Presbyter in vita Nazianzeni. ἐκκαθεδίσαι τὸν ἀρχιέρεα τῷ θρόνῳ.

The like might be said of the Consent, and Allowance of the people, Anacletus, as he is commonly commonly alleged, writeth thus: Sacerdotes à proprio ordinentur Episcopo, ita vt Ciues & alij Sacerdotes assensum præbeant: Let Priests be ordered by their owne seuerall Bishops, so that the people and other Priests giue their assent thereto. S. Cyprian saith likewise: The people being obedient vnto Gods commandements, hath power especially, either to chuse worthy Priests, or to refuse the vnworthy. Anaclet. Ep. 2. Cyprian. lib. 1. Epist. 4.

Thus many voices were then thought necessary to the admission of any Bishop. Therefore this serueth no sufficient ground, to proue that the Bishop of Rome is Head of the Church. For M. Harding might some haue seene, that the Bishop of Rome himselfe, touching his owne Election, was wont to be allowed by other Bishops. Verily, S. Cyprian writeth thus of the allowance of Cornelius Bishop there: Vt Cornelium noueris Coepiscoporum testimonio, quorum numerus vniuersus per mundum concordi vnanimitate consensit: That thou maist know Cornelius by the testimonie of his Fellow-Bishops, the whole number of whom throughout the world hath agreed (to the allowing of his election) with one consent. Cyprian. lib. 4. Epist. 2.

Afterward, in an Epistle vnto Cornelius himselfe, he writeth thereof more at large: Ad comprobandam ordinationem tuam, facta authoritate maiore, placuit vt per Episcopos omnes omninò in ista Prouincia positos, literæ fierent, vt te vniuersi Collegæ nostri, & Communicationem tuam, id est, Ecclesiæ Catholicæ vnitatem, pariter & charitatem, probarent, pariter & tenerent: To allow thy Consecration, more authoritie being gathered, I thought it good, that letters should be sent vnto all the Bishops of this Prouince, that all our brethren might both allow and hold, both thee and thy Communion, that is to say, the vnity of the Catholike Church. Cyprian. lib. 4. Epist. 8.

If M. Harding will say, This was not the Confirmation of the Election of Cornelius, it followeth immediately: Sic Episcopatus tui veritas, pariter & dignitas, appertissima luce, & manifestissima & firmissima confirmatione fundata est: This is the truth and dignitie of thy Bishopricke founded in the open light, and with most manifest and most certaine confirmation. Thus whensoeuer any Bishop was either installed, or deposed, knowledge thereof was giuen vnto the other Bishops, and the same either allowed, or disallowed by his brethren.

But that the Bishop of Rome ordered and admitted all the Bishops throughout the World, besides that it hath no possibilitie, or colour of truth in it selfe, it is also easie, by good Record and Authoritie, to be reproued. Agapetus Bishop of Rome, about the yeare of our Lord 540. after he had, vpon occasion, Consecrate Menna, the Bishop of Constantinople, he vttered these words in commendation of the partie: Et hoc dignitati eius (Mennæ) accidere credimus, quòd à temporibus Petri Apostoli, nullum alium vnquam Orientalis Ecclesia suscepit Episcopum manibus nostræ Sedis ordinatum: And this is an augmentation of Mennaes dignitie, that sithence the time of Peter the Apostle, the East Church neuer receiued any other Bishop Consecrate by the hands of our See. Now aduise thy selfe (good Reader) whether thou wilt beléeue Pope Agapetus, or M. Harding. Concil. Constantinop. 5. Act. 2.

And let not M. Harding finde fault, for that I place the ordering of Bishops in stead of their confirmation. For he himselfe seemeth to make confirmation and ordering both one thing, or at least to ioine them both together. These be his words: Leo would not in any wise order and confirme Anatolius.

Truly Liberatus saith, the maner was in Alexandria, that whosoeuer was chosen Bishop there, should come to the Beare, and lay his Predecessours hand vpon his head, and put on S. Markes Cloke, and then was he sufficiently Confirmed Bishop, without any mention made of Rome. And S. Cyprian writeth vnto the Bishops of Spaine, that Sabinus, whom they had lawfully chosen Bishop, should so continue still, yea notwithstanding Cornelius, being then Bishop of Rome, misliked him, and would not confirme him. And that very Counterfeit Decree of Anacletus, that requireth all Bishops once in the yeare to present themselues in Rome, extendeth not his commandement throughout all the World, but only to the Bishops of the Prouince of Rome. Thus stand the words: Omnes Episcopi, qui huius Apostolicæ Sedis ordinationi subiacent, &c. All Bishops, that be bound to haue their orders confirmed by this Apostolicke See, &c. Whereby it may be gathered, that other Bishops were not subiect to the ordinance of that See. And this was the fault that Gregorie found in the Bishop of Salonæ, that being within the Iurisdiction of his Prouince, he was Consecrate without his knowledge. And that Gregorie meant it not of all Bishops, but onely of the Bishops within his owne charge, it is euident by his words. For thus he writeth: Episcopi mei: Episcopi mihi commissi: My Bishops: Bishops being within my Cure. And that the City of Salonæ, standing in Illyricum, was sometime within the Prouince of Rome, it is plaine by the epistle that Damasus the Bishop of Rome sent vnto the Bishops of Illyricum. These be his words: Par est, omnes qui sunt in orbe Romano Magistros, consentire: It is meet, that all the Teachers that be within the precincts of the Roman Iurisdiction, agree together. Anaclet. Ep. 3. Dist. 93. Iuxta Sanctorum. Liberat. c. 20. Cyprian. lib. 1. Epist. 4. Gregor. lib. 4. Epist. 34. Socrat. Lib. 6. Cap. 23. πάντας τὰς ἐν τῷ ῥωμαίων κ. ἔθνους ἡγεμόνας.

Whereas

Confirmation of Councels.

Whereas it is alleged, that the Bishop of Rome was required to ratifie the Election of Flauianus, Anatolius, and of the Arian Bishops; that was meant of a generall allowance, such as was common to all Bishops, specially to the foure Principall Patriarkes, and not only to the Bishop of Rome. Neither was the Bishop of Romes admission thought so necessarie, as if he onely had a Voice Negatiue, to take in, and put out, whom he liked; but only of Congruitie and Consent, that it might appeare, there was no Bishop in the Church, but was liked and allowed of all his brethren. For otherwise the Bishops of the East wrote thus vnto Iulius: Si ordinatos à nobis Episcopos, &c. If you will allow the Bishops that we haue ordered, we will be at peace, and Communicate with you: If not, we will proclaime the contrarie. And the Emperour Gratian made Nectarius Bishop of Constantinople, contrarie to the mindes of the most part of the Bishops. Therefore M. Hardings argument might better haue bene framed thus: The Bishop of Rome confirmed the Bishops within his owne Prouince, and had no other speciall authoritie to confirme all other Bishops in the world, no more than others had to confirme him: Therefore he was not then taken for the Head of the Church, nor was thought to haue this Vniuersall Power.

Sozom. Lib. 3. Cap. 8.

Sozom. Lib. 7. Cap. 8.

M. Harding. The 26. Diuision.

That the Bishops of Rome, by accustomed practise of the Church, had authority to approue or disproue Councels, I need to say nothing for proofe of it, seeing that the Ecclesiasticall rule (as we read in the Tripartite storie) commandeth (111) that no Councell be celebrate and kept, without the aduice and authoritie of the Pope. Verily the Councels holden at Ariminum, at Seleucia, at Syrmium, at Antiochia, and the second time at Ephesus, for that they were (112) not summoned nor approued by the Authoritie of the Bishop of Rome, haue not beene accounted for lawfull Councels; but as well for that reiected, as also for their Hereticall determinations. The Fathers assembled in the Councell of Nice, sent their Epistle to Syluester the Pope, beseeching him with his consent to ratifie and confirme whatsoeuer they had ordeined. Isidorus witnesseth, that the Nicene Councell had set forth rules, the which (saith he) the Church of Rome receiued, and confirmed. The second Generall Councell holden at Constantinople was likewise allowed and approued by Damasus, specially requested by the Fathers of the same, thereto. So was the third Councell holden at Ephesus ratified and confirmed by Cœlestinus, who had there, for his Vicars or Deputies, Cyrillus the famous Bishop of Alexandria, and one Arcadius a Bishopout of Italie. As for the fourth Councell kept at Chalcedon, the Fathers thereof also, in their Epistle to Leo the Pope, subscribed with the hands of 44. Bishops, made humble request vnto him, to establish, ratifie, and allow the Decrees and Ordinances of the same. This being found true, for the foure first chiefe Councels, we need not to say any thing of the rest that followed. But for the sure proofe of all this, that chiefly is to be alleged, that Constantius the Arian Emperour made so importune and so earnest sute to Liberius the Pope, to confirme the Acts of the Councell holden at Antioch by the 90. Arian Bishops, wherein Athanasius was depriued, and put out of his Bishopricke. For he beleeued, as Amianus Marcellinus writeth, that what had beene done in that Councell, should not stand, and take effect, vnlesse it had beene approued and confirmed by the authoritie of the Bishop of Rome, which he termeth the eternall City.

The 111. vntruth, standing in the wilfull falsifying of the Text.

The 112. vntruth. For in those daies the Bishop of Rome had no authority to summon Councels.

Lib. 4. cap. 13.

Quæ Romanus suscipiens confirmauit Ecclesia. In præfatione Nicæni Concilij. Lib. 15.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Here M. Harding hath auouched two great vntruths, the one in his translation in the English, the other in the allegation of the storie. Touching the first, Cassiodorus in his Latine translation writeth thus: Canones iubent, extra Romanum nihil decerni Pontificem: Socrates in the Greeke, out of which the Latine was taken, writeth thus: χωρὶς παρὰ γνώμην τοῦ ἐπισκόπου Ῥώμης, κανονίζειν τὰς ἐκκλησίας. The English hereof is this: It is prouided by the Canons, that Rules to binde the Church be not made without the consent of the Bishop of Rome. Wherein M. Harding hath purposely corrupted and falsified all together, both the Greeke, and the Latine, not reporting one word that he found in the Originall. Κανονίζειν, or, Decerne, he Englisheth to Keepe, or, as he termeth it, to Celebrate a Councell: Παρὰ γνώμην, which is, Præter sententiam, or, as Cassiodorus turneth it, Extra, he Englisheth, without the aduice and authoritie. No, he would not suffer, no not him, in whose quarrell he thus fighteth, to passe without a renew: for where he saw him named in the Greeke, ἐπίσκοπον Ῥώμης, and in the Latine, Romanum Pontificem, The Roman Bishop, he thought it best to leaue both the Greeke and the Latine, and to call him the Pope. And thus, to increase the Popes authoritie, he hath altered and corrupted the whole place, and not translated one word as he found it.

Cassiodor. li. 4. cap. 19.

Socrat. Lib. 2. cap. 17.

Touching the storie, he saith, The Arians Councels were not allowed, for that they were not summoned by the Pope. And yet he knoweth right well, it was no part of the Popes Office in those daies, to summon Councels. For it is euident, euen by the policie and practise of that time, that Constantinus the Emperour summoned the Councell of Nice: Theodosius the first, the Councell of Constantinople: Theodosius the second, the Councell of Ephesus: and Marcianus, the Councell of Chalcedon: And Socrates in his storie saith thus: Idcirco Imperatores in historia complexus sum, quia ex quo tempore cœperunt esse Christiani, Ecclesiastica negotia pendent ab illis, & maxima Concilia de illorum Socrat. Lib. 5. in præmio. τὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας πράγματα ἤρτηται ἐξ αὐτῶν.

lorum ſententia & facta ſunt, & fiunt : Therefore I haue compriſed the Emperours within my Storie, for that ſithence they began to be Chriſtened, the ſtate of the Church dependeth of them, and the greateſt Councels haue beene kept, and be ſtill kept by their aduice. And the Biſhops in the Councell of Conſtantinople, witneſſe, that they were ſummoned to come to the Roman Councell, by Damaſus the Biſhop of Rome : but they adde withall, By warrant of the Emperours Letters, not by any his owne authority. And likewiſe in their Epiſtle to the Emperour Theodoſius, they write thus : Literis, quibus nos conuocaſti, Eccleſiam honore proſecutus es : Your Maieſtie hath honoured the Church by the Letters, wherewith ye ſummoned vs together.

Confirmation of Councels.

Theodoret. lib. 5. cap. 9. Διὰ τῶν τῆ θεοφιλεστάτῃ βασιλέως γραμμάτων.

As for the Biſhop of Rome, he was not yet of authoritie, able to call a generall Councell. For the World as yet had no ſkill of his Vniuerſall Power ouer all others, neither would they haue appeared vpon his Summon. Gregorius being Biſhop of Rome, could not cauſe the Biſhop of Salonæ, being but one man, to come before him. Thus he writeth by way of complaint, vnto the Empreſſe Conſtantia : Contempto me atque deſpecto, ad me venire ſecundùm iuſſionem Dominorum noluit : Hee deſpiſed me, and ſet me at naught, and would not come vnto me, according to my Lords the Emperours commandement. Therefore Leo finding this weakeneſſe in himſelfe, wrote vnto the Clergie and people of Conſtantinople, and willed them to craue a Generall Councell at the Emperours hand : Expoſcite, vt petitioni noſtræ, qua plenariam indici Synodum poſtulamus, Clementiſſimus Imperator dignetur annuere : Make your requeſt, that the Emperours Maieſtie would vouchſafe to grant my humble petition, wherein I beſought him to ſummon a Generall Councell. Liberatus ſaid, that Leo the Biſhop of Rome, with other moe Biſhops of Italie, fell vpon their knées, and deſired the Emperour Valentinian, and the Empreſſe Eudoxia, to appoint a Councell, and yet could not obtaine it. Afterward he deſired the Emperour Theodoſius, that he would call a Councell to ſome place within Italie, and the Emperour contrarie to the Biſhop of Romes petition, appointed it to be holden at Epheſus. After that, he made the ſame requeſt to the Emperour Martianus, and the Emperour likewiſe contrarie to the Biſhops humble requeſt, commanded the Councell to be kept at Chalcedon. And whereas Leo had beſought both theſe Emperours, that it might pleaſe them to take a longer day for the Councell, for that the time of the Summon ſeemed very ſhort, and the waies were laid with enemies, and therefore dangerous for the Biſhops to trauell, yet would neither of them alter one day, but charged each man to appeare, as they were ſummoned. And Leo the Biſhop of Rome, withall his Vniuerſall Power, was faine to yéeld. Héereby we may ſone coniecture, how true it is, either that Pope Gelaſius writeth, That only the Apoſtolike See of Rome decreed by her authoritie, that the Councell of Chalcedon ſhould be ſummoned : Or elſe, that M. Harding would haue vs beléeue, That all Councells were ſummoned by the Pope.

Liberat. ca. 12. Genibus prouolutis.

Leo, Epiſt. 11. ad Theodoſ. Auguſt.

Leo, Epiſt. 13.

Leo, Epiſt. 50.

Leo, Epiſt. 13. 44. 58.

Neither was the Biſhop of Rome, nor his Legate in his abſence, euermore the Preſident, or chiefe of the Councell. For it is knowen, that in the Councell of Nice, Euſtathius, the Patriarke of Antioch, was the Preſident, and the Biſhop of Romes Legates, Vitus and Vincentius, ſate in the fourth rowme beneath. In the Councell of Conſtantinople, Menna was the chiefe. In the Councell of Sardica, Oſius of Corduba in Spaine : In the Councell of Aquileia, S. Ambroſe of Millaine : In the Councell of Carthage, Aurelius the Biſhop there : In the Councell of Chalcedon, Leo the Biſhop of Romes Legate had chiefe rowme, but by way of intreaty only, and by the Emperours ſpeciall grant, and not of due right, or vniuerſall authority.

Epiſt. Gelaſij ad Epiſcopos Dardaniæ.

But (ſaith M. Harding) the Biſhop of Rome allowed Generall Councels. This is not denied. So did others, not only Patriarkes, or Biſhops, but alſo Ciuill Princes. In the Councell of Chalcedon it is written thus : Diuæ memoriæ Theodoſius confirmauit omnia, quæ iudicata ſunt à Sancta & Vniuerſali Synodo Generali Lege : Theodoſius the Emperour of godly memorie, hath confirmed all things by a Generall Law, that were determined in the Vniuerſall Councell. So likewiſe the Emperour Martianus : Sacro noſtræ Serenitatis edicto, venerandam Synodum confirmamus : By the holy Edict of our Maieſtie, wee confirme that reuerend Councell. So Euſebius witneſſeth, that the Emperour Conſtantinus confirmed the Determinations of the Councell of Nice. So the Biſhops in the Councell of Conſtantinople wrote vnto the Emperour Theodoſius, by theſe words : Rogamus tuam clementiam, vt per Literas tuæ Pietatis ratum eſſe iubeas, confirmeſque Concilij Decretum : We deſire your fauour, by your Higneſſe Letters, to ratifie and confirme the Decree of the Councell.

Concil. Chalcedon. Action. 1.

Concil. Chalcedon. Action. 3.

Euſeb. in vita Conſtantini.

Inter acta Concil. Conſtant. 5.

Now ſeeing it was lawfull for Princes and Ciuill Gouernours, to confirme the Decrees and Determinations of Councels, how can we doubt, but it was lawfull for Biſhops alſo to doe the ſame ? Therefore Theodoretus ſaith, The Concluſions of the Councell of Theodoret. lib. 1. cap. 9. & lib. 2. ca. 8.

Confirmation of Councels.

Victorin.li.2. Leo epist.60. Inter Acta Concil.Chalcedon. Regula Iuris.

Euseb.Oratio 3. de Vita Constan. Theodoret.li.1.ca.7. τὰς ἐκκλησίας κανονίζειν. Leo Epist 61.

Leo epist.59.

Leo epist.59.

Sozom.li.6. ca.23.

Leo epist.13.

Liberatus ca. 13.

Hieronym.ad Euagrium.

of Nice, were sent abroad to other Bishops, that were away. And Victorinus saith: that many thousands of Bishops allowed that same Councell, and agreed vnto it.

Aboue all others, the Subscription and Confirmation of the foure principall Patriarkes was specially required, for that both their charge, and also their countenance and credite was greater than others. Among which foure, the Bishop of Rome was euer the first, and therefore his consent semed to beare greatest weight. And for that cause the Emperour Martianus required Leo the Bishop of Rome, to write vnto the Councell of Chalcedon, and to declare that he gaue his consent to the rule of Faith, that was there determined. And in like sort the Emperour Theodosius, requireth all Bishops to subscribe and to giue their assent to the Councell of Nice. For it is a rule agreeable vnto Law and Reason, Quod omnes tangit, ab omnibus debet approbari: The thing that toucheth all, ought to be allowed by all. And therefore Iulius being Bishop of Rome pronounced, that all the Acts of the Councell of Antioch were void, and of no force, for that he, being one of the foure Patriarkes, was not called thither, aswell as others. For it appeareth by Eusebius, Theodoretus and others, that to all Generall Councels, all Primates and Metropolitanes were specially summoned. And this semeth to be that Canon that Iulius alegeth, That it was not lawfull to make rules and orders for the whole Church, without the consent of the Bishop of Rome, being one of the foure chiefe Patriarkes, and hauing in his Prouince one great portion of the Church. And therefore Leo Bishop of Rome testifieth his consent to the Councell of Chalcedon by these words: Fraternitas vestra nouit, me definitionem Sanctæ Synodi toto corde complexum esse: Your brotherhood knoweth that I haue embraced with my whole heart the Determination of that holy Councell. And likewise vnto the Emperour Martianus he writeth thus: Constitutionibus Synodalibus libens adieci sententiam meam: Vnto these Constitutions of the Councell, I haue gladly giuen my assent. The end hereof was not to shew his Soueraigne Power aboue all others, but that the Decrees so ratified by him and others, might be had in more estimation. So Leo himselfe writeth: Clementia vestra arbitratur, malum facilius delendum, si per vniuersas Ecclesias, Definitiones sanctæ Synodi Apostolicæ Sedi placuisse doceantur: Your Highnesse thinketh this euill will the rather be suppressed, if it be declared thorowout all Churches, that the Decrees of the holy Councell be well liked of the Apostolike See.

But that the whole ratification of Councels depended, not only of the Bishop of Rome, but also of others, no lesse than of him, it is easie to be proued. The Bishops in the Roman Councell in the time of Damasus, condemned the Councell of the Arians holden at Ariminum, for that neither the Bishop of Rome, whose minde should haue bene knowen before all others, nor Vincentius, nor any of the rest had agreed vnto it. Likewise the Councell of Carthage and of Aphrica are allowed for good, notwithstanding the Bishop of Rome would not allow them. The Councell of Chalcedon decreed, that the Bishop of Constantinople should be in dignity next vnto the Bishop of Rome, and should Consecrate the Metropolitanes of Asia, Pontus and Thracia. This decree Leo the Bishop of Rome very much misliked, and would neuer assent vnto it: yet that notwithstanding, it is in force and continueth still. Liberatus thereof writeth thus: Cùm Anatolius consentiente Concilio Primatum obtinuisset, Legati verò Romani Episcopi contradicerent, à Iudicibus & Episcopis omnibus, illa contradictio susceptа non est. Et licèt sedes Apostolica nunc vsque contradicat, tamen quod a Synodo firmatum est, Imperatorio patrocinio permanet: When Anatolius by consent of the Councell had obtained the Primacie, and the Bishop of Romes Legates stood against it, their gainsaying of the Iudges and Bishops there was not received. And albeit the Apostolike See of Rome euen hitherto stand against it, yet the Decree of the Councell by the maintenance of the Emperour standeth still in force. Which thing semeth agreeable to that S. Hierome writeth: Maior est authoritas orbis, quàm vrbis: The authoritie of the world is greater than the authority of one City: meaning thereby the City of Rome.

It may appeare by that I haue thus shortly touched, that the Bishop of Rome had authority neither to Summon Councels, nor to be President or chiefe in Councels, nor to ratifie and confirme the Decrees of Councels, more than any other of the foure Patriarkes: and last of all, that Councels, may stand in force, although the Pope mislike them and allow them not. I thinke it will be hard hereof to gather M. Hardings conclusion,

That the Bishop of Rome was Head to the Vniuersall Church.

M. Harding. The 27. Diuision.

Now what authority the Bishops of Rome haue euer had, and exercised in the assoiling of Bishops vniustly condemned, and in restoring of them againe to their Churches, of which they were wrongfully thrust out by Heretikes or other disorder; it is a thing so well knowen of all that read the stories, in which the ancient state of the Church is described, that I need not but rehearse the names only. Athanasius of Alexandria,

Alexandria, and Paulus of Conſtantinople, depriued and thruſt out of their Biſhopricks, by the violence of the Arians, aſſiſted with the Emperour Conſtantius, appealed to Rome, to Iulius the Pope and Biſhop there, and by his (113) authoritie, were reſtored to their roomes againe. So Leo aſſoiled Flauianus the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, excommunicated by Dioſcorus. So Nicolaus the firſt reſtored Ignatius to the See of Conſtantinople, though Michael the Emperour wrought all that hee could againſt it. Many other Biſhops haue beene in all ages aſſoiled, and reſtored to their Churches by the authoritie of the See Apoſtolike, who haue beene (without deſert) excommunicated, depriued, and put from all their dignities. But to haue rehearſed theſe few, it may ſuffice.

The 113. vntruth. For the Emperour reſtored Athanaſius, and not the Pope. Pope Nicolas died in the yeere of our Lord 868.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Athanaſius and Paulus, ſaith M. Harding, being depoſed by the Arians, aſſiſted with the Emperour Conſtantius, appealed to the Pope, and by the Popes authoritie were reſtored. Here I appeale vnto the iudgement and diſcretion of the Reader, that can conſider the ſtate of that time, how likely it may ſeeme, either that Athanaſius ſhould appeale from the Emperour to the Pope, or that the Popes commandement ſhould be of ſufficient force and authoritie againſt the Emperour. For neither was Pope Bonifacius the eighth yet borne, that determined, that the Emperour ſhould be inferiour to the Pope, nor Pope Innocentius the third, or his Gloſſe, that rated the matter by good Geometricall proportion, and pronounced, that the Pope is fifty and ſeuen degrées aboue the Emperour, euen iuſt as much as the Sunne is aboue the Moone; nor Pope Alexander the third, that ſet his foot in the Emperours necke.

De Maior. & Obedien. Vnam Sanctam. Extra. de Maiorit. & Obed. Solite. Et in Gloſſa. Carion in Frederico.

Verily, the Pope then, by his authoritie, was able neither to depoſe, nor to reſtore, nor to call before him any Biſhop, as appeareth by that I haue already alleged of Pope Innocentius, and Pope Gregorie, by their owne Confeſſions. No, Pope Leo himſelfe confeſſeth, that he was not able to remoue a poore Monks, Abbat Eutyches, from his Abbie, but was faine to deſire the Empreſſe Pulcheria to ſée him remoued.

Epiſt. Decretalis Innocen. 27. Gregor. Lib. 4. Epiſt. 34. Leo, Epiſt. 45.

As touching Athanaſius, it was the Emperour Conſtantinus the Great that by his authoritie remoued and baniſhed him, as it appeareth by Socrates: and therefore the Emperour Iuſtinian ſaith, If any Biſhop offend heerein, let him be depriued by force of this Law. And as he was baniſhed by the Emperour Conſtantinus the Father, ſo by his ſonne Conſtantinus the Emperour, and not by the Pope, he was reſtored: which thing is teſtified, not only by Socrates, that wrote the ſtorie, but alſo by ſundry Epiſtles and Letters, taken out of the Emperours Records, concerning the ſame.

Socr. li. 1. c. 23. De Eccleſiaſt. diuerſ. capitul. κατὰ τὸν τὸ παρόντος νόμου Nouum.

First it is knowen, that the Emperour Conſtans, that ruled the Weſt part of the world, vnto whom Athanaſius, being depoſed, fled for aid, wrote in his behalfe vnto his brother Conſtantius, that then was the Emperour of the Eaſt, and beſought him, to ſée Athanaſius reſtored vnto his rome. Otherwiſe he threatned, that he himſelfe would come with his power to Alexandria, and reſtore him. Vpon the ſight of which Letters, the Emperour Conſtantius wrote vnto Athanaſius, and willed him to repaire with ſpéed vnto his Court, that he might be reſtored vnto his Countrey: and at his comming, hée directed out his Letters vnto the Clergy and people of Alexandria, commanding them to receiue him with fauour, and to aboliſh all ſuch Acts as they had before made againſt him. To report the whole Letters at large, it would be tedious. Among other words, the Emperour Conſtantius writeth thus: Recipiat voluntate Dei, noſtroque iudicio, Patriam ſuam, pariter & Eccleſiam. And againe: Omnes Epiſcopum, ſuperno iudicio noſtraque ſententia deſtinatum, libenter & piè ſuſcipite: Let him both by Gods appointment, and by our Decree, recouer both his Country and his Church, &c. Further ſaith Caſſiodorus: His Literis confidens Athanaſius, redijt in Orientem: Athanaſius, vpon truſt of theſe Letters, returned againe into the Eaſt. Likewiſe the Biſhops in the Councell of Hieruſalem wrote abroad Letters of gratulation vpon his returne, in this forme: Debetis ergo etiam, &c. You ought alſo continually to pray for the Emperours Maieſties, for that, vnderſtanding your deſires, they haue reſtored Athanaſius againe vnto you. And Theodoretus, touching the ſame, writeth thus: Procerum Senatorumque coniuges, &c. The Lords and Counſellers wiues beſought their huſbands to intreat the Emperours Maieſtie, that he would reſtore Athanaſius vnto his Flocke: and ſaid further, vnleſſe they would ſo doe, they would forſake them, and go to him.

Socr. li. 2. ca. 2. Sozom. Lib. 3. cap. 19. Theodoret. lib. 2. cap. 8. Theodoret. lib. 2. cap. 11. Caſſiodor. li. 4. cap. 31. Caſſiodor. li. 4. cap. 30. Caſſiodor. li. 4. cap. 36. Theodoret. lib. 2. cap. 17.

So likewiſe the Biſhops, that the Arians had depoſed with Flauianus, were reſtored againe by the Emperour, and not by the Pope. For Pope Leo himſelfe thereof writeth thus vnto the Empreſſe Pulcheria: Vos Sacerdotes Catholicos, qui de Eccleſijs ſuis iniuſta fuerunt electi ſententia, reduxiſtis: Your Maieſties haue reſtored home againe the Catholike Biſhops, which by wrongfull ſentence were thruſt from their Churches.

Leo, Epiſt. 39.

Pope Nicolas, as vpon occaſion I ſaid before, was the ſecond Biſhop in Rome, after Pope Ioane the Woman, which was almoſt 900. yéeres after Chriſt. Wherefore his authoritie authority might well haue bene spared. It is well knowne that as the Popes power increased, so the Empire abated. Therefore was Platina forced to say: Perijt & potestas Imperatorum, & virtus Pontificum: Now the Emperours haue lost their ciuill power, and the Popes haue lost their Holinesse. In old times the Emperour confirmed the Pope: now the Pope confirmeth the Emperour. In old times the Emperour called the Pope to the Councell: now contrariwise the Pope calleth the Emperour.

Platina in Adriano 2.

As touching the restoring of Athanasius, Pope Iulius intreated the Emperour in his behalfe, which, as it appeareth, was his greatest request. For thus he writeth vnto Liberius: Precamur vt vestris exhortationibus, tam per vos, quàm per Apocrisiarios vestros adiuuemur: We beseech you, that through your good exhortations, both by your selfe, and by other your agents we may be holpen. Moreouer for that he was a Patriarke he summoned a particular Councell, and laboured the Bishops. For the Arians said: There was an Ecclesiasticall Canon, That no man being once deposed should be restored againe, vnlesse hee had first cleared himselfe before a Councell: and that the Bishops that would restore him, ought to bee moe in number than were they, that had deposed him. And therefore Chrysostome was much blamed of his Aduersaries, for that he being once deposed, had recouered his roome without a Councell of other Bishops. And therefore Flauianus being wrongfully put from his Bishopricke, offered vp his bill of Appeale, not vnto the Bishop of Rome alone, but vnto him with other Bishops. The truth hereof may well appeare by these words of Leo Bishop of Rome vnto the Emperour Theodosius: Omnes partium nostrarum Ecclesiæ, omnes mansuetudini vestræ cum gemitibus & lachrymis supplicant Sacerdotes, vt quia eisdem Libellum Appellationis Flauianus Episcopus dedit, generalem Synodum iubeatis intra Italiam celebrari: All the Churches of these our Countries, and all the Priests with sighes and teares beseech your Highnesse, that forasmuch as Flauianus hath offered vp his Bill of Appeale vnto them, it may please you to command a Generall Councell to be kept in Italy.

Epistola Athanasij ad Liberium.
Sozomen. li. 4. ca. 7.
Orientalium Epistola ad Iulium.
Socr. li. 6. ca. 14.
Leonis epist. 24.

In such Councels the Bishop of Rome being sometimes the chiefe, pronounced the party worthy either to be restored, or to be deposed. But that sentence was not alwaies put in execution. The Councell of Antioch deposed Pope Iulius: yet was not Iulius therefore deposed. The Councell of Basil deposed Pope Eugenius: yet Eugenius continued Pope still. The decrée of Bishops in such cases without the Emperours authority was then of small force. And therefore Athanasius himselfe reporteth, that the Emperour gaue his consent to the determination of the Councell of Sardica, and so commanded him to be sent for home.

Sozom. lib. 3. ca. 10.
κῶδικον.
Concil. Basiliē.
Athanas. in Apolog. 2.

But M. Harding will say, The words be plaine, that Iulius restored Athanasius. It is true and not denied. But the meaning of these words is, that Iulius pronounced him cleare in that he was accused of, and therefore worthy to be restored. For it is certaine, and M. Harding well knoweth, that Athanasius vpon Pope Iulius letters was not restored. The like is also written of others. Cassiodorus saith: Maximus quoque restituit beato Athanasio, & Communionem, & dignitatem: Maximus also restored vnto Athanasius, both his Communion and also his dignity: That is to say, pronounced him worthy to be restored. For Maximus was not the Bishop of Rome.

Cassiodor. li. 4. ca. 34.
Sozomen. l. 3. ca. 7.
Cassiodor. li. 4. ca. 34.

These things considered, M. Harding may make vp his reason thus: The Pope had no authoritie to restore them that were deposed: Ergo, The Pope was not Head of the Church.

Or thus: The Emperour restored such as were deposed: Ergo, The Emperour was Head of the Church.

M. Harding. The 28. Diuision.

Concerning the Reconciliation of the Prelats of the Church, both Bishops and Patriarkes to the Bishop of Rome, (114) whereby his Primacie is acknowledged and confessed. I need not say much, the matter being so euident. After that the whole Church of Aphrica had continued in (a) Schisme, and withdrawen themselues from the obedience of the See Apostolike, through the entisement of Aurelius Archbishop of Carthago, for the space of one hundred yeeres, (b) during which time by Gods punishment they came into captiuity of the barbarous and cruel Vandals, who were Arians: at the length when it pleased God of his goodnesse to haue pity on his people of that Prouince, sending them Bellisarius the valiant Captaine that vanquished and destroied the Vandales, and likewise Eulalius that godly Archbishop of Carthago, that brought the Church home againe, and ioined the diuided members vnto the whole body the Catholike Church; a publike instrument containing the forme of their repentance, and of their humble submission, was offered and exhibited solemnly to Bonifacius the second then Pope, by Eulalius in the name of that whole Prouince, which was ioifully receiued, and he thereupon foorthwith reconciled. Of this reconciliation and restoring of the Aphricane Churches to the Catholike Church, the mysticall body of Christ, Bonifacius writeth his letters to Eulalius Bishop of Thessalonica, requiring him with the Churches thereabout, to giue Almighty God thankes for it.

But heere if I would shew what Bishops diuiding themselues through Heresie, Schisme, or other enormitie, from the obedience of the See of Rome, haue vpon better aduice submitted themselues to the same againe,

The 114. vntruth. For reconciliation is no necessary token neither of Primacy nor of Subiection.

(a) S. Augustine was one of these Schismatikes.

(b) During the same time Rome it selfe was six times sacked: Which thing M. Harding hath quite forgotten.

againe, and thereupon haue beene reconciled; I had a large Field to walke in. As inferiour Bishops of sundry Prouinces haue done it, so haue the great Patriarkes done likewise. Among them, that, to satisfie the malicious minde of Eudoxia the Empresse, practised their wicked conspiracy against Chrysostome, through which he was deposed and carried away into banishment, Alexander Bishop of Antioch, and Primate of the Orient, was one; (115) who at length stricken with repentance for that he had beene both a consenter and a promoter of that wicked act, submitted himselfe humbly to Innocentius the Pope, and by all meanes sought to be assoiled and reconciled. And therefore sent his Legate, to Rome, to exhibite to Innocentius a solemne instrument of his repentance and lowly submission, and to accept what should be enioyned. By which his humblenesse Innocentius mooued, granted to his petitions, receiued him into the lap of the Catholike Church againe: and thus was he reconciled. Sundrie the like reconciliations of the Patriarkes of Alexandria and Hierusalem to the See of Rome in like cases, might easily be recited; which for auoiding of tediousnesse I passe ouer, as likewise of the Patriaekes of Constantinople, which as we read in ancient stories, haue forsaken the Church of Rome twelue times, and haue beene reconciled to the same againe.

Reconciliation.

The 115. vntruth. For this story is heere interlaced with many vntruths.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

First, M. Harding supposeth, that this Latine word, Reconciliatio, can in no wise stand amongst equals: and besides that touching the Reconciliation of the Church of Antioch, as it shall appeare, he misreporteth the whole story. Upon such grounds these proues be builded. For M. Harding knoweth, that as Submission is made by the Subiect towards the Prince, so Reconciliation in proper maner of speech, is made betweene equall friends.

Concerning that is heere touched of Eulalius, the matter needeth no long answer. The story being truly knowen is sufficient to answer it selfe. It is certaine, as we haue before declared more at large, and as it plainly appeareth by the Acts of the Councell of Aphrica, that Zosimus the Bishop of Rome, to the intent to aduance himselfe ouer all other Bishops, manifestly falsified the Nicene Councell. This forgery in the Councell of Aphrica was disclosed and laid abroad to the eies of all the World. The Bishops there being in number two hundred and seuenténe, saw, that one Apiarius a Priest, whom they for his open outrage and wickednesse had Excommunicate, was without any further examining of the matter, onely vpon his bare complaint, admitted againe vnto the Communion, and receiued into fauour, in despight of all their doings, by the Bishop of Rome.

They saw, that the accusers and witnesses without whom no ordinary iudgement can proceed, either for age, or for sickenesse, and other causes, could not well trauell so farre: Therefore they desired the Bishop of Rome by their Letters, that hée would bring no such ambitious puffe of vanity into the Church: and made a strait Decrée in the Councell among themselues, that it should not be lawfull for any man to appeale out of Aphrica to any forren Bishop. An hundred yéares after that, this Eulalius the Bishop of Carthage, if it be true, that is reported of him, and not forged at Rome, as were many things moe, reconciled himselfe to the Church of Rome, in the time of Bonifacius the Second, as it is recorded in the Pontificall: for other Record thereof to my remembrance there is none. The words of the Reconciliation be these: Hanc professionem meam manu mea subscripsi, &c, This profession I haue subscribed with mine owne hand, and haue directed the same to Bonifacius the holy and reuerend Pope of the City of Rome, vtterly condemning my Predecessours and Successours, and all others that shall goe about to frustrate the Priuileges of the Apostolike See of Rome. Likewise Bonifacius writeth heereof vnto Eulalius the Bishop of Alexandria in this wise: Aurelius Carthaginensis Ecclesiæ olim Episcopus cum Collegis suis, instigante Diabolo, superbire temporibus prædecessorum nostrorum contra Romanam Ecclesiam cœpit: Aurelius sometime Bishop of Carthage together with his fellowes (his fellowes were S. Augustine, Alypius, and two hundred and fifténe other Bishops) being set on by the Diuell, in the time of my Predecessours, began to beare himselfe disdainfully against the Church of Rome. The one of these by a publike instrument vnder his hand and seale, vtterly condemneth and accurseth S. Augustine, with two hundred and sixténe other godly Bishops, together with foure Generall Councels, of Aphrica, Carthage, Mileuitum and Hippo: the other saith, they were all set a worke and prickt forth by the Diuell, and liued out of the Church of God, and died in Schisme.

Fumosum seculi Typhum.

Inter Decreta Bonifa. 2.

Epist. Bonifa. 2. ad Eulalium.

S. Augustine condemned and accursed, and set on by the Diuell.

If this be true, then ought S. Augustine no longer to be holden for a Saint, neither to haue any rome in the Calendar.

But if all these godly Fathers that iustly and truely defended the holy Councell of Nice, were led with the Diuell, with what spirit then was hée led, that openly and in the sight of all the World, durst to corrupt and falsifie the same Councell? Verily, Dionysius the Bishop of Corinth complaineth thus: Rogatu fratrum meorum scripsi, Epistolas: sed illas Apostoli Diaboli alia eximentes, alia interserentes, impleuerunt Zizanijs: quibus væ reponitur: At the request of my brethren, I wrote certaine Epistles:

Pope Zosimus a forger of Councels. Euseb. lib. 4. cap. 22. ὅτι τὰς Διαβόλου Ἀποστόλοι ζιζανίων ἐπλήρωσαν.

Reconciliation.

but the Diuels Apoſtles by putting to, and taking fro, haue filled them full of Tares and Cockle. But woe be vnto them.

But in the meane while (ſaith M. Harding) the Country of Aphrica euen by the puniſhment of God was brought into ſubiection, and ſpoiled by the Vandales Here M. Harding entreth into Gods Iudgements, and pronounceth that all this miſerie happned vnto that Countrey, for leauing the See of Rome, which thing he reckoneth all one, with the leauing and forſaking of God himſelfe. Howbeit M. Harding might ſone know, that about the very ſame time, while Aphrica was thus afflicted, the Citie of Rome it ſelfe was ſix times taken by wilde and barbarous enemies, the Viſigotthi, Oſtrogotthi, Heruli, Vandali, Hunni, and Longobardi, within the ſpace of an hundred and forty yeares. The Wals were raſed: the Towers throwen downe: the Houſes burnt: the Nobilitie taken Captiue: the People ſpoiled and baniſhed: the Citie it ſelfe a long time left waſte and deſolate without inhabiter. If M. Harding can gheſſe ſo rightly of the miſeries of Aphrica, how happeth it, that he can gheſſe nothing of ſirfold greater miſeries, that at the ſame time befell vpon Rome? If the Biſhops and people of Aphrica were thus plagued for their Schiſme, wherefore then were the Biſhops and people of Rome plagued, that, as it is ſuppoſed continued ſtill without Schiſme? Notwithſtanding Poſſidonius ſaith, That God of ſpeciall mercie granted S. Auguſtine, who then was beſieged by the enemies, that during his life, his Citie of Hippo ſhould not be taken. And yet was the ſame S. Auguſtine the greateſt diſcloſer of the forgery and pride of the Biſhop of Rome, that is to ſay, the greateſt authour and maintainer of all this Schiſme.

Rome ſix times taken by enemies and ſackt within the ſpace of 140. yeeres. Gregor. lib. 4. Epiſt. 32.

Touching the Reconciliation of Alexander the Biſhop of Antioch, M. Harding for the better furniture of the tale, hath wouen in and interlaced many words of his owne. For in all that is written thereof by Innocentius, there is no maner mention, neither of Solemne Inſtrument of Repentance, nor of accepting of Penance, nor of Subiection or humble Submiſſion. Indeed this Alexander at his firſt entrie into the Biſhoprick of Antioch, finding his Church full of Diuiſion, by meane of one Euſtathius, by his wiſdome and godly exhortations, brought the whole people there vnto vnitie: and afterward wrought the like godly policy in other churches, and ceaſed all the ſtrife that had long continued for the condemnation of Chryſoſtome, and cauſed his name that his enemies had raſed out, to be enrolled againe among other Catholike Biſhops: and likewiſe wrote vnto the Emperour Theodoſius the yonger, and to the Biſhops of other Countries to doe the like. In the end, hauing appeaſed all contentions, in token, not of ſubiection, as M. Harding ſurmiſeth, but of full conſent and agrament, he deſired that his Church might be ioined in Communion and fellowſhip with the Church of Rome, and other Churches of the Weſt, from whence before by reaſon of their Diſſenſions they had bene diuided. Which thing alſo appeareth by the words of Innocentius himſelfe vnto Alexander touching the ſame: Gratias agens Domino, Communionem Eccleſiæ veſtræ ita recepi, vt præ me feram, Apoſtolicæ Sedis Condiſcipulos primos dediſſe cæteris viam pacis: I giuing God thankes, ſo receiued the Communion and fellowſhip of your Church, that I profeſſe, that you being our Schoolefellowes of the Apoſtolike See, haue firſt opened vnto others the way of peace. Here Innocentius calleth Alexander his Schoolefellow, not his Subiect or Vnderling. And therefore he calleth him his Schoolefellow of the Apoſtolike See, for that S. Peter ſate firſt at Antioch, and after that in Rome, and for that cauſe, both theſe Seas of Peter the Apoſtle, were called Apoſtolike.

Theodoret. li. 5. cap. 35. Nicephor. lib. 14. cap. 26.

Innocent. epiſt. 37. ad Alexandrum.

Againe in another Epiſtle vnto the ſame Alexander he writeth thus: Voluit Compreſbyter noſter Caſſianus, hanc amicitiarum noſtrarum paginulam, quaſi primitias pacis noſtræ conſcribi, &c. Caſſianus our fellow-Prieſt, would haue this inſtrument of our friendſhip to be written, as the firſt fruits of our peace. Therefore I greet well your brotherhood, and all others of that Church that are of your minde. Here Innocentius himſelfe calleth this compoſition an inſtrument of friendſhip, or fellowſhip, not of Repentance or Humble Submiſſion, as it pleaſeth M. Harding vntruly to tranſlate it. Neither doth this word Reconciliation, neceſſarily import a Superiority or a Maſterſhip, but alſo, and that moſt commonly, a Fellowſhip or Equality, as it is ſaid before. So ſaith S. Paul: Chriſt hath reconciled both the Iew, and the Gentle in one Body. And what is meant by that Reconciliation, he expounded thus: Omnes vnum ſumus in Chriſto Ieſu: We are all one in Chriſt Ieſu. So ſaith Plinie the yonger: Principis eſt reconciliare æmulas Ciuitates: It is a Princes part to reconcile Cities that contend for the Soueraigntie. Not that the one may be brought into Subiection to the other: but that they may be made friends, and liue in peace. So likewiſe ſaith Chriſt: Vade, Reconcilieris Fratri tuo: Go, and be reconciled to thy Brother.

Innocentij Epiſt. 15.

Ephes. 2.

Galath. 3.

Plini. in Panegyrico.

Matt. 5.

Thus therefore was the Patriarke of Antioch reconciled to the Biſhop of Rome: not as a Subiect vnto his Prince, but, as in a body one member vnto another: and (forſ-much much as Innocentius himselfe vseth this word Condiscipuli) as in a Schole, one Scholar vnto his fellow.

Reconciliation.

So whereas there was matter of dissention betwéne the Church of Rome, and the Church of Alexandria, it séemed good to the Fathers in the Councell of Aphrica, to intreat betwéne them, not that the Church of Alexándria should submit her selfe, as vnto her Head, and liue in Subiection, but that they might be reconciled, and liue in peace together. So Liberatus saith, Petrus Moggus was reconciled vnto Acatius: not as vnto his Superiour, but as vnto his Brother. In this sense writeth Hormisda Bishop of Rome vnto Epiphanius the Bishop of Constantinople: Æquale studium, & æqualem curam suscipiamus, quibus vna est in Communione & fide amicitia: Seeing wee haue one friendship in Communion and in Faith, let vs therefore take like study and like care.

Innocent. Epist. 17. Concil. Aphrican. ca. 68. Liberatus ca. 18. Concil. Constantinop. 5. Actio. 2. Socrates lib. 4. cap. 11.

This maner of Reconciliation is largely set forth by Socrates in his storie, and may be abridged in this sort: The Macedonian Heretikes hauing forsaken their Heresies, sent their messengers Eustathius, Syluanus, and Theophilus vnto Liberius the Bishop of Rome, and to other the Bishops of the West. Liberius vnderstanding, that their Faith agreed fully with the Councell of Nice, and with the Faith that he himselfe and all the other Bishops of the West Church professed, receiued them vnto the Communion, and wrote fauourably vnto the Bishops of the East in their behalfe. These Messengers departing thence, went into Sicily, and in a Councell of the Bishops there, likewise Reconciled themselues vnto them: and being returned home, they sent abroad into all the Churches of those Countries, and willed them to consider the letters sent from Liberius the Bishop of Rome, and from other Bishops of Italy, Aphrica, France, Sicily, and all the West, and to agrée, and to Communicate together with them.

Another like example of Reconciliation we haue made by one Arsenius the Bishop of Hipsilitæ vnto Athanasius the Bishop of Alexandria. The words of the Reconciliation are these: Nos volentes Ecclesiastico Canoni &c. We desiring to be subiect to the Ecclesiasticall Canon, according to the ancient order, do write these vnto you (Dilecte Papa) beloued Pope, and likewise do promise in the name of our Lord, that wee hencefoorth will not Communicate with any Schismatikes, or with any that haue not peace with the Catholike Church, whether they be Bishops, Priests, or Deacons. This Submission or Reconciliation was made vnto Athanasius: yet was not Athanasius Bishop of Rome.

Athanas. Apolog. Secunda.

This then was the maner of Reconciliation of Churches, without any such Humble Subiection, as M. Harding fansieth, or knowledge or token of Supremacie, or any maner Vniuersall Power.

M. Harding. The 29. Diuision.

The 116. vntruth. For many great questions were neuer remooued to Rome.

The 117. vntruth. For Rome it selfe had her light from Græcia.

Thus hauing declared the Supreme authoritie and Primacie of the Pope by the common practise of the Church, I need not to shew further; how in (116) all questions, doubts, and controuersies, touching Faith and Religion, the See of Rome hath alwaies beene consulted, how the decision of all doubtfull cases, hath beene referred to the iudgement of that See; and to be short (117) how all the World hath euer fetched light from thence. For proofe whereof, because it cannot be heere declared briefly, I remit the learned Reader to the Ecclesiasticall stories, where he shall finde this matter amply treated.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

As Rome hauing atchieued the Empire of the whole World, both for renowme and honour, and also for wisdome and learning, which commonly follow the Empire, was the noblest and most famous of all other Cities; so for commoditie of accesse out of all Kingdomes and Countries, both of the East, and of the West, and also out of Aphrica and Ægypt, and other Countries of the South, and also for receiuing of Questions, and Resolution of doubts, it séemed to be planted in the fittest place of all the World. For as Thucydides calleth the Citie of Athens, Græcia of all Græcia, so some called the Citie of Rome in those daies of her honour, Epitome orbis terrarum: The abridgement of the whole world. The admiration of this glorie drew such resort of people thither, that Beda a learned man of this Countrie being there, and séeing the multitude of strangers that came only to gaze and to sée newes, expounded these foure solemne letters, S. P. Q. R. in this wise: Stultus Populus Quærit Romam: Foolish folke flie to Rome. Therefore for opportunitie of the place, and expedition of answer, many matters of question and doubtfull cases were brought thither. Many, I say, but not all. For men that wanted counsell, wrote and sought vnto them, that had the fame of learning, and were thought best able to make them answer. So Marcellinus, Dulcitius, Bonifacius, Euodius, and others, sent their questions to S. Augustine, and desired his Counsell. S. Ambrose saith, as it is before alleged, that many that had béene with the Bishop of Rome, would afterward for their better satisfaction send Ἀπὸ τῆς Ἑλλάδος. Cœlius Rhodiginus, lib. 18. ca. 25.

Ambros. li. 10. Epist. 83.

Leo Epiſt. 27. to him. And Leo himſelfe being Biſhop of Rome, and therefore as M. Harding thinketh, the Oracle of all the World, thought it not amiſſe to ſubmit himſelfe, and to aſke counſell of other Biſhops. Therefore this ſaying of M. Hardings neither is vniuerſally true, nor proueth his purpoſe. For if he will ſay, Some men in caſes of doubt ſought to Rome for counſell: Ergo, The Biſhop there was called the Head of the Church, this Concluſion will hardly follow.

Regum ca. 22. Paralipom. 2. ca. 34. Samuel. 2. ca. 20. King Ioſias in a great caſe of Religion, ſent to a woman named Olda, the wife of Sellum, to know her counſell: and it was a prouerbe among the Iewes, Qui interrogat, interroget in Abila: Who ſo will ſeeke counſell, let him ſeeke it in Abila. Yet neither was Olda the Head of the Church: nor Abila the chiefe towne in Iſrael or Iuda.

But all the world (ſaith M. Harding) hath receiued light from Rome. But all the World ſeeth this is another manifeſt vntruth: and neuer the leſſe being granted, yet would it not conclude of his ſide.

Indeed in a kinde of ſpeech both Rome, and Antioch, and Alexandria, and any other great Citie famous for Religion, may be called the Head or Spring of the Goſpell. So Apocalyp. 17. Arnob. li. 2. aduerſus gentes. Ambroſ. Serm. 66. S. Iohn calleth Babylon: Magna mater fornicationum, & abominationum terræ: The great mother of the Fornications, and of the Abominations of the earth. And ſo Arnobius calleth Hetruria which is the Countrey wherein Rome ſtandeth: and S. Ambroſe calleth Rome it ſelfe, Caput Superſtitionis: The Head of Superſtition.

But if we ſeeke the place it ſelfe, from whence the light of Religion firſt ſprang forth, we muſt needs confeſſe, it was Hieruſalem, and not Rome.

Eſay 2. For ſo it is written in the Prophet Eſay: De Sion exibit Lex, & verbum Domini de Hieruſalem: The Law ſhall proceed from Sion, and the word of God from Hieruſalem. And therefore the Biſhops of the Eaſt being in a Connocation at Conſtantinople, call Hieruſalem, The Mother of all Churches.

Theod. li. 5. ca. 9. Yet neuertheleſſe, euery great Metropolitane City within her owne Prouince, may be honoured with the like title. So ſaith Nazianzenus of the City of Cæſarea, where S. Baſil was Biſhop: Cæſarea propè Mater ominum Eccleſiarum, &c. Cæſarea is in a maner the Mother of all Churches, and the whole Chriſtian Common wealth ſo embraceth and beholdeth it, as the Circle embraceth and beholdeth the Center.

Gregor. Nazianzen. in Epiſt. ad Cæſarienſes. So Chryſoſtome likewiſe aduanceth the City of Antioch: Cogita Vrbis magnitudinem, quòd non de vna, vel de duabus, vel de tribus, vel de decem animabus, nunc nobis eſt conſideratio: ſed de millibus infinitis, de totius Orbis Capite: Conſider the greatneſſe of this City: we haue to deale not for one, two, three, or ten ſoules: but for infinite thouſands, euen for the Head of the World. Thus Chryſoſtome calleth Antioch, The Head of the World, for that, in that Prouince of Siria it was the Head: like as Rome alſo was the Head City, and principall Church of the Weſt.

Adpopulũ Antiochen. hom. 3.

M. Harding. The 30. Diuiſion.

Now for a briefe anſwer to M. Iewel, who denieth, that within 600. yeeres after Chriſt, the Biſhop of Rome was euer called an Vniuerſall Biſhop, or Head of the Vniuerſall Church, and maketh himſelfe very ſure of it, although it be a childiſh thing to ſticke at the name any thing is called by, the thing by the name ſignified being ſufficiently proued; yet to the intent good folke may vnderſtand that all is not truth of the old Goſpell, which our new Goſpellers either affirme or denie, I will bring good and ſufficient witneſſe; that the Biſhop of Rome was then called both Vniuerſall Biſhop, or Oecumenicall Patriarke, which is one, to wit, Biſhop or principall father of the whole world, and alſo Head of the Church. Leo that worthy Biſhop of Rome, was called the Vniuerſall Biſhop, and Vniuerſall Patriarke of ſix hundred and thirty Fathers aſſembled together from all parts of the World in a Generall Councel at Chalcedon; which is both (118) expreſſed in that Councel, and alſo clerely affirmed by S. Gregory in three ſundry Epiſtles, to Mauritius the Emperour, to Eulogius Patriarke of Alexandria, and to Anaſtaſius Patriarke of Antioch. Thus that name was deferred vnto the Pope by the Fathers of that great Counſell; which by them had not beene done, had it beene vnlawfull. In very deed neither Leo himſelfe, nor any other his Succeſſour, euer called or wrote himſelfe by that name, as S. Gregory ſaith, much leſſe preſumed they to take it vnto them, but rather vſed the name of humility, calling themſelues ech one Seruum Seruorum Dei. The Seruant of the Seruants of God. Yet ſundrie holy Martyrs Biſhops of Rome vſed to call themſelues Biſhops of the Vniuerſall Church, (119) which in effect is the ſame, as the Fathers of Chalcedon vnderſtood. *So did Sixtus in the time of Adrianus the Emperour, in his Epiſtle to the Biſhops of all the World. So did Victor writing to Theophilus of Alexandria. So did Pontianus writing to all that beleeued in Chriſt, before 1300. yeeres paſt. So did Stephanus in his Epiſtle to all Biſhops of all Prouinces, in the time of S. Ciprian. And alſo theſe were before Conſtantine the Great, and before the Councell of Nice, which times our aduerſaries acknowledge and confeſſe to haue beene without corruption. The ſame title was vſed likewiſe after the Nicene Councell, by Felix, by (120) Leo, and by diuers others, before the 600. yeeres after Chriſt were expired. Neither did the Biſhops of Rome vſe this title and name onely themſelues to their owne aduancement, as the Aduerſaries of the Church charge them, but they were honoured therewith alſo by others: as namely Innocentius, by the Fathers aſſembled in Councell at Carthago; and Marcus, by Athanaſius, and the Biſhops of Ægypt.

The 118. vntruth. For there is no mention made heereof in any Canon in that Councell.

The 119. vntruth. For theſe names import not one thing, as ſhall appeare.

*All theſe be baſtard Epiſtles without credit.

The 120. vntruth. For immediately before M. Harding confeſſeth, that Leo neuer wrote himſelfe by that name.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Yeare M. Harding ſecretly confeſſeth, that in all he hath hitherto alleged, he hath not yet found that the Biſhop of Rome was knowen in the World within the ſpace of the firſt firſt ſix hundred yeares after Chriſt, by the name either of the Vniuerſall Biſhop, or of the Head of the Vniuerſall Church: notwithſtanding he hath much ghelled about the matter, both by miſreporting the practiſe of gouernment that then was vſed, and alſo by wreſting and miſconſtruing the words of the holy Fathers. Thus hitherto hee hath taken great paines to ſmall purpoſe.

But hereunto he putteth his Rhetoricall correction, and ſaith: It is a childiſh thing to ſticke at the name of any thing. And ſo all this long talke is driuen in the end to a childiſh concluſion. Howbeit it appeareth, S. Gregorie was not ſo perſwaded of it, nor thought the matter to be ſo childiſh. For after that Iohn of Conſtantinople had intitled himſelfe the Vniuerſall Biſhop, Gregorie being then Biſhop of Rome, withſtood him earneſtly, and wrote againſt him in this wiſe: Deus ab vnitate, atque humilitate Eccleſiæ hoc malum Superbiæ & Confuſionis auertat: God turne away this miſchiefe of Pride and Confuſion, from the vnity and humility of the Church. Againe: Omnibus viribus prouidendum eſt, ne in vnius Veneno Sermonis, viuentia in Chriſti Corpore membra moriantur: We muſt labour and prouide, with all that we can doe, leſt the members that liue in Chriſts Body, happen to periſh in the poiſon of one word. Moreouer, as it is before at large declared, he calleth it a new, a peruerſe, a ſuperſtitious, an arrogant, an vngodly, an Antichriſtian name: a name of ſingularitie: a name of errour: a name of confuſion: a name of blaſphemie: againſt the Canons, againſt the whole Church, againſt S. Peter, and againſt the Goſpell. Yet, ſaith M. Harding, To ſticke at this name it is but a childiſh matter. Howbeit if the thing it ſelfe that this name importeth, had beene lawfull, then had this name not beene ſo horrible. But contrariwiſe, the very vſurpation of the name is horrible: therefore the thing it ſelfe thereby ſignified, muſt of neceſſitie be much more horrible.

Gregor. lib. 4. Epiſt. 36.

Now for a briefe anſwer, M. Harding hath found ſix hundred and thirty Biſhops, that gaue this title to Leo Biſhop of Rome, in the Councell of Chalcedon, and called him the Vniuerſall Biſhop: which thing (as he ſaith) is recorded by S. Gregorie in three ſundrie places. Heere, good Chriſtian Reader, by the way, this one thing (I truſt) thou wilt conſider of thy ſelfe. If the name of Vniuerſall Biſhop were giuen to the Biſhop of Rome in the Councell of Chalcedon, which was holden in the yeare of our Lord 488. then by M. Hardings owne grant, and by the witneſſe of this Counſell, the Biſhop of Rome before that time had not the name of Vniuerſall Biſhop. Otherwiſe, how could either they giue that they had not to beſtow, or he receiue that he had alreadie? Indeed ſuch beſtowing of gifts had beene very childiſh. Thus of the whole number of ſix hundred yeares, M. Harding freely, euen at the firſt, hath yelded vs backe foure hundred foureſcore and eight yeares towards the reckoning. Before we paſſe further, let vs ſee, what credit the Pope himſelfe giueth to this Councell of 630. Fathers holden at Chalcedon. Pope Gelaſius ſaith: The Apoſtolike See of Rome in part allowed it not: for that things were there borne out by inordinate preſumption. Pope Leo accuſeth the whole Councell of Ambition and wilfull Raſhneſſe. And S. Hierome in the caſe of Matrimonie Inter Raptorem & Raptam, is receiued againſt all thoſe 630. Biſhops, and againſt the determination of that whole Councel. In ſuch regard they haue the Councels when they liſt. But the Law ſaith: Abſurdum videtur, licere eidem partim comprobare iudicium defuncti, partem euertere: It is againſt reaſon, that one man ſhould in part allow the will of the dead (ſo farre forth as it maketh for him) and in part ouerthrow it (where it ſeemeth to make againſt him.)

Gelaſius inter Acta Concil. Tarracon. Per incompetentem preſumptionem ventilata. Leo, Ambitionē & inconſultam temeritatem. 36. Queſt. 2. Tria legitima. Pan. de bonis libertor. Nam abſurdū. Caius

But M. Harding will ſay: Of what credit ſoeuer this Councell ought to be, it gaue Leo the name of Vniuerſall Biſhop. And what if all this be vtterly vntrue? What if there were no ſuch title either giuen or offered in the Councell? Certainly, the whole Councell of Chalcedon is extant abroad both written and printed, and may ſone be ſeene. Why doth not M. Harding allege, either the place, or the Canon, or the words? At the leaſt, why giueth hee no note in the Margin, where this authoritie may be found?

Perhaps he will ſay, This Canon was burnt by ſome Heretikes, as he ſaid before of the Councell of Nice. Howbeit, it were much for him to ſay, That of that whole Counſell, onely ſix lines ſhould bee burnt, and that in all the examples throughout the World, and yet all the reſt of the ſame Councell remaine ſafe: Or, that the words whereby the Pope claimeth his title, ſhould ſo negligently bee loſt, and that in Rome it ſelfe, in the Popes owne Library: and yet the words that the Pope reproueth, and condemneth, ſhould ſtand whole. M. Harding hath no other Councell within ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt to hold by, but onely this, and yet the ſame cannot be found. But S. Gregorie is witneſſe ſufficient: he ſaith, That 630. Biſhops in the Councell of Chalcedon, named the Biſhop of Rome the Vniuerſall Biſhop. This is an vntruth to beguile the Reader. For Gregory ſaith not, The Biſhops in that Councell Saluted, Intitled, Proclamed, or Called the Biſhop of Rome by that name. Onely he ſaith: Romano Pontifici Vniuerſitatis nomen oblatum eſt: The name of Vniuerſall Biſhop, was offered by the Councell of Chalcedon to the Biſhop of Rome. He ſaith they offered to call him ſo: but that they called him ſo indeed, he ſaith not. Therefore M. Harding herein ouerreacheth and miſtelleth his authours tale. But S. Gregorie ſaith further: That neither Leo, nor any other of his Predeceſſours Biſhops of Rome would euer receiue that Arrogant and Vngodly name, or ſuffer himſelfe to be ſo called: notwithſtanding it were offered by the Councell. The Biſhops of Rome neuer ſo vſed that name, notwithſtanding it were offered them. Therefore they ought to loſe it by non vſure.

Pope not vniuerſall.

Greg. li. 4. epiſt. 32. & 36.

Superbum prophanum nomen.

M. Harding will ſay, This was only their humilitie, and not want of right. And therefore they choſe rather to be called Serui Sernorum Dei: The Seruants of Gods Seruants. Verily it may well be thought, that Gregory who firſt vſed theſe words, as his familiar ſtile, named himſelfe ſo without hypocriſie, only in reſpect of his intolerable paines and continuall trauels. For ſo he himſelfe complaineth: Veni in altitudinem Maris, & tempeſtas demerſit me: I am come into the deepe of the Sea, and the rage of tempeſt hath drowned me vp. So S. Auguſtine long before S. Gregories time, for that he was likewiſe troubled, vſed ſometimes the like ſtile. For thus he writeth of himſelfe: Auguſtinus Epiſcopus Seruus Chriſti, Seruorumque Chriſti: Auguſtine Biſhop the ſeruant of Chriſt, and the Seruant of Chriſts Seruants. But he that neither feedeth the flocke, nor ploweth the Lords ground, nor dreſſeth his Vine, nor miniſtreth the Sacraments, nor comforteth, nor exhorteth, nor teacheth: that is carried on high thorow the ſtreets on noble mens backes, and may not touch the ground for holineſſe: that cauſeth that noble Prince the French King to hold his ſtirrup: the Emperour of all Chriſtendome, to lead his horſe by the raine: and the Princes and Gouernours of the World to kiſſe his ſhoe: that doth no maner of Seruice or Miniſterie in Chriſts Church; how can he call himſelfe, either the Seruant of Chriſt, or the Seruant of Chriſts Seruants without hypocriſie? This indeed is open diſſimulation, and a childiſh playing with words, & an open mocking of the World. So one writeth of Iulius Cæſar: Depoſuit nomen Dictaturæ, at vim retinuit: He refuſed the name of Dictator, but the power and force thereof he kept ſtill. So likewiſe ſaith Appianus: The Princes of Rome name themſelues, Imperatores, Emperours, which was a name of gouernment in the field, and laſted but for the while: but Kings they wil in no wiſe be called, for that the name of a King among them then was odious. Howbeit (he ſaith) indeed they are very Kings. So Auguſtus Cæſar, notwithſtanding he were a Tyrant, and had oppreſſed the people, yet he choſe to be called Tribunus plebis: The Defender and Patron of the people. And Verres, notwithſtanding he had miſerably waſted and conſumed the whole Iland of Sicilie, yet in his title he would be called, Σωτὴρ, that is, The Keper and Sauiour of that Iland. Thus they diſſemble openly, and as one ſaith, With faire names they couer foule faults. But it was not any ſuch diſſimulation or countenance of humilitie, that moued Leo, Gregory, or any other godly Biſhop of Rome, to refuſe this name, as M. Harding imagineth, but the very iniquitie and iniurie therein conteined. For thus ſaith S. Gregory: Si vnus Patriarcha Vniuerſalis dicitur, Patriarcharum nomen cæteris derogatur &c. If one be called the Vniuerſall Patriarke, then is the name of Patriarkes taken from others. But God keepe it far from any Chriſtian minde, that any man ſhould take ſo much vpon him. The conſenting vnto this wicked name, is the loſing of the Faith. Therefore in the Councell of Carthage it is decreed thus: Primæ ſedis Epiſcopus ne appelletur Princeps Sacerdotum, vel Summus Sacerdos, vel aliquid huiuſmodi: ſed tantùm Primæ Sedis Epiſcopus. Vniuerſalis autem nec etiam Romanus Pontifex appelletur: Let not the Biſhop of the firſt See be called the chiefe of Biſhops, or the Higheſt Biſhop, or by any other like name. But the Biſhop of Rome himſelfe may not be called the Vniuerſall Biſhop. This latter clauſe of that Canon (Vniuerſalis autem Epiſcopus, nec etiam Romanus Pontifex appelletur) one Peter Crabbe the ſetter forth of the Councels, of purpoſe, and contrarie to good faith diſſembled and left out. Notwithſtanding the fraud is ſone diſcouered. For the ſame clauſe is to be found whole, both in written examples of the Councels, and alſo in Gratian, that compiled the Decrees: and in the very barbarous Glоſſe vpon the ſame, by theſe words: Hic dicitur, quòd Papa non debet vocari Vniuerſalis: Heere it is ſaid, that the Pope may not be called the Vniuerſall Biſhop. M. Harding ſaith, The Pope was called by that name. And for proofe thereof allegeth a Councell without a Canon. But the whole Generall Councell of Carthage ſaith, The Biſhop of Rome may not in any wiſe be ſo called: and the Canon thereof is apparent and may be ſeene. Now let the Chriſtian Reader iudge, to whether he will giue greater credit.

Dion.

Appianus.

εἰσὶ δὲ τὰ ἔργα βασιλεῖς.

Cornelius Tacitus in Auguſto.

Cicero in Verrem.

τῷ ὀνόματι περικαλύπτουσι τὴν μοχθηρίαν.

Gregor. lib. 4. Epiſt. 36.

Gregor. lib. 4. ca. 39.

Concil. Carthaginen. 3. Can. 26.

The Biſhop of Rome may not be called, The Vniuerſall Biſhop.

Diſt. 99. Primæ Sedis.

This Councell (ſaith M. Harding) would not haue offered this name vnto Leo, vnleſſe it had beene lawfull. Yet he knoweth all is not Law that is moued in Councell. Leo and Gelaſius, as it is before ſaid, condemned certaine Decrees of this ſame Councell of Calcedon, as vnlawfull: notwithſtanding the Determination of 630. Biſhops. The Fathers in the Councell

Inter Decreta Concil. Tarraꝛon.

Councell of Nice attempted, contrary to Gods commandements, to breake the lawful Matrimony of Priests and Bishops. But their attempt, because it was vnlawfull, was reproued and stated by Paphnutius. M. Harding therefore might better conclude thus, Leo, Gregorie, and other holy Fathers Bishops of Rome refused the name of Vniuersall Bishop, as it appeareth by their words, for that it was iniurious vnto other Bishops, and a corruption of the Faith: and for the same cause the Generall Counsell of Carthage determined, that the Bishop of Rome should not, ne might not so be called: Therefore that name was not lawfull.

Pope not Vniuersal.

Socrat. lib. 1. ca. 8.

All this notwithstanding, true it is, that M. Harding saith, Leo in that Councell of Chalcedon was thus called. The places be knowen: and may not be denied. He is so saluted in three sundry Epistles: the one sent by one Athanasius a Priest: the other by one Ischyrion a Deacon: the third by one Theodorus, likewise a Deacon. But of that whole number of six hundred and thirty Bishops there assembled, I trow M. Harding is not well able to shew, that any one euer saluted or called him so.

Concil. Chalcedon. Actio. 3.

Therefore, whereas M. Harding, the better to put his Reader in remembrance, hath set this note in the Margin, that the Bishop of Rome was called the Vniuersall Bishop, & Head of the Church aboue a thousand yeers sithence, he might with more truth, and much better haue noted his booke thus: S. Gregories words misalleged: The Councell falsified: This only Canon lost: all the rest whole and safe: A strange Priest, and two poore Deacons, in their Priuate suites for their goods, and Legacies, named Leo the Vniuersall Bishop. But of the six hundred and thirty Bishops, that had voices in the Councell, not one euer named him so. Thus much M. Harding might truely haue noted in the Margin.

Yet (saith M. Harding) the Bishops of Rome, that were godly Fathers and holy Martyres, vsed this name, as it appeareth by their Epistles. And heere are brought in the titles of Letters vnder the names of Sixtus, Pontianus. And certaine others, written, as it is before declared, a long time after the writers were dead. Such ruinous foundations M. Harding hath chosen to build vpon.

But what are these old Fathers taught to say? Or how is M. Harding relieued by their words? In their Salutation before their letters they write thus: Sixtus, Pontianus, Victor, Bishop of the Vniuersall Church. This (saith M. Harding) is euen all one thing with Vniuersalis Episcopus: there is no manner difference. O what ranging and hunting here is, to beat vp that thing, that will not be found. M. Harding, because he cannot finde the Vniuersall Bishop, that he sought for, therefore he hath sought out the nert of kinne, that is, the Bishop of the Vniuersall Church: and these two, he saith, be both one. Howbeit this matter needed no great seeking: euery childe might soone haue found it. But if an Vniuersall Bishop, and a Bishop of the Vniuersall Church, be all one thing, how then is it true, that S. Gregory saith, Nemo Prædecessorũ &c. None of my Predecessors would euer consent to this name? Or how can he finde such fault with the name of Vniuersall Bishop, and beare so easily with the name of Bishop of the Vniuersall Church, which he knew his Predecessors had vsed, if he take them both for one thing, without difference? To be short, if these names, as M. Harding assureth himselfe, be both one, how is the one Godly, the other Vngodly: the one Arrogant, the other not Arrogant: the one Blasphemous, the other not Blasphemous.

Greg. lib. 4. epist. 32. & 36.

This errour riseth of misunderstanding these words, Vniuersalis Ecclesia. For the Church Vniuersall, and the Church Catholike, the one being Greeke, the other Latine, are both one: and are commonly vsed of the learned Fathers, as contrary to a particular Church, as be the Churches of Heretikes, and Schismatikes. In this sense, euery godly Bishop is a Bishop of the Catholike, or Vniuersall Church: like as also euery godly man is a member of the same. Thus writeth Calixtus: Calixtus Archiepiscopus Ecclesiæ Catholicæ Vrbis Romæ. Thus Marcellus: Marcellus Episcopus Sanctæ & Apostolicæ, & Catholicæ Vrbis Romæ. In these places Rome is called a Catholike, that is to say, an Vniuersall Citie; partly to exclude the Churches of Heretikes, which were meere particular: and partly also to signifie, that the Church there, was then a Church of the Catholike and Vniuersall Doctrine. So likewise it is written in the Councell of Constantinople: Clerici, & Monachi Apostolici Throni Antiochenæ magnæ Ciuitatis, Catholicæ, Sanctæ Ecclesiæ Dei. The Clerkes, and Monkes of the Apostolike Throne of the great Citie of Antioch, of the Catholike, or Vniuersall Holy Church of God.

Calixti epist. Decret. 1. Marcelli Epist. 2.

Concil. Constantin. 5. Actio. 1.

Againe

Bishop of the Vniuersall Church.

Againe, euery Bishop may be called the Bishop of the Vniuersall Church, for that it is his duety to care, not onely for his owne flocke, but also for all others of the whole Church of God. So saith Origen, qui vocatur ad Episcopatum, vocatur ad Seruiturem totius Ecclesiæ: Whoso is called to a Bishopricke, is called to the Service of the whole Church. So Chrysost. exhorting the whole people together, saith vnto them, Vniuersæ Ecclesiæ curam geramus: Let euery one of vs take the care of the Vniuersall Church. So likewise Pope Eleutherius writeth vnto the Bishops of France: Huius rei gratia vniuersalis vobis à Christo commissa est Ecclesia, vt pro omnibus laboretis, & cunctis opem ferre non negligatis: For that cause the whole Vniuersall Church is committed vnto you, that you should trauell for all, and not be negligent to help all. Thus many waies the Bishops both of Rome, and of Antioch, and of France, were called the Bishops of the Vniuersall Church. But, the Vniuersall Bishop, none of them all was euer called. Of Iohn of Constantinople, that first began to vsurpe that name, Gregorie the Bishop of Rome writeth thus: Despectis omnibus, solus conatur appellari Episcopus: Despising all other Bishops, he would only be called a Bishop. So likewise saith Pope Pelagius: If the chiefe Patriarke be called Vniuersall, then the rest haue lost the name of Patriarkes.

Origen. in Esai. Hom. 6.
Chrysost. in 2. Corin. hom. 18.
Epist. Eleutherij ad Episcopos Galliæ.
Gregor. lib. 4. epist. 34.
Pelagij 2. Epist. 1.
Dist. 99. Nullus.

This is the meaning of an Vniuersall Bishop, and the very selfe same Infinite and Immoderate Power, that M. Harding claimeth for the Bishop of Rome. For so he hath already said, That the other three Patriarkes are no Patriarkes indeed, but only his Delegates, and Seruants to doe that shall please him to command them. In stead hereof M. Harding hath found out a Bishop of the Vniuersall Church: and so leauing the thing that is demanded, he answereth to that is not in question: and priuily confesseth by his silence, that hitherto he hath not found, nor can finde his Vniuersall Bishop.

Folio 86. Diuisio 23.

This answer may serue, to that is heere alleged of the Councell of Aphrica, and the Epistle of Athanasius: sauing that the Epistle bearing that holy Fathers name, as it is already proued, is nothing else but apparent forgerie. The Bishops in the Councell of Aphrica, besides that they vtterly denied the Popes Vniuersall Power, forbidding their Clerkes vpon paine of Excommunication to appeale to him, sundrie times in the same Councell writing vnto him, they vse the name of Familiaritie, and Equalitie, and call him their Brother.

Concil. Aphric. Can. 12.

Canon. 101. & 105.

Now, for a surplusage, forasmuch as M. Harding with all his studie, and conference with his friends, cannot yet finde out his Vniuersall Bishop in the Church of Rome, let vs see, whether we may finde him in some other place, and that not by the witnesse of a simple Priest, or a Deacon, but by the authority of Catholike Emperours and Councels, and of the Bishop of Rome himselfe: and that not by shifting of termes, one for another, as M. Harding is driuen for want, in stead of an Vniuersall Bishop, to bring in a Bishop of the Vniuersall Church, but in plaine, manifest, expresse words, and such, as in no wise may be denied.

In the Councell of Constantinople, the Bishop there is scarcely saluted, or intitled by other name. For this is his common stile: Oecumenico Patriarchæ Iohanni: To Iohn the Vniuersall Patriarke. To Iohn the Father of Fathers, and Vniuersall Bishop. The holy Vniuersall Archbishop, and Patriarke Mennas.

Concil. Constantino. 5. Actio. 1.

Nicephorus saith, The Bishop of Alexandria was intitled Iudex vniuersi orbis: The Iudge of the whole world. Clement vnto S. Iames the Bishop of Hierusalem writeth thus: Clemens Iacobo Fratri Domini, Episcopo Episcoporum, regenti Hebræorum Sanctam Ecclesiam Hierosolymis, sed & omnes Ecclesias, quæ vbique Dei prouidentia fundatæ sunt: Clement vnto Iames the Brother of our Lord, the Bishop of Bishops, gouerning the holy Church of the Iewes at Hierusalem, and besides that, all the Churches that be founded euery where by Gods prouidence. The Emperour Iustinian writeth thus: Vnto Epiphanius the Archbishop of this Imperiall Citie (Constantinople) and Vniuersall Patriarke. To conclude, the Bishop of Rome himselfe thus saluteth the Bishop of Constantinople: Therasio Generali Patriarchæ, Adrianus Seruus Seruorum Dei: Vnto Therasius the Generall Patriarke, Adrian the Seruant of Gods Seruants. And in the last Councell holden at Florence, Ioseph the Bishop of Constantinople being there, vsed the same title, and wrote himselfe, The Archbishop of New Rome, and the Vniuersall Patriarke. If M. Harding had so good euidence for the Bishop of Rome, I beleeue he would not thus passe it away in silence.

Nicephor. li. 14. ca. 34.
Clementis Epist. 1.
Authen. Constitutio. 3. εἰκουμενικῷ πατριάρχῃ.
Conc. Nicen. 2. Actio. 2.

M. Harding. The 31. Diuision.

Concerning the other name (Head of the Church) I maruell not a little that M. Iewell denieth that the Bishop of Rome was then so called. Either hee doth contrary to his owne knowledge, wherein hee must needs be condemned in his owne iudgement, and of his owne conscience, or he is not so well learned, as of that side he is thought to be. For whosoeuer trauelleth in the reading of the ancient Fathers, findeth that name almost euery where attributed to Peter the first Bishop of Rome, (121) and consequently to the Successour

This is a fresh kinde of Rhetorique.

The 121. vntruth. For Peter only is so called, yet was not Peter then Bishop of Rome.

Succeſſour of Peter, that name (I ſay) either in termes equiualent, or expreſly. Firſt the Scripture calleth Peter Primum, The firſt among the Apoſtles. The names of the twelue Apoſtles (ſaith Matthew) are theſe: * Primus Simon, qui dicitur Petrus, Firſt Simon, who is called Peter. And yet was not Peter firſt called of Chriſt, but his brother Andrew before him, as is before ſaid. Dionyſius that ancient writer calleth Peter ſometime Supremum decus, The higheſt honor, for that he was moſt honorable of all the Apoſtles: ſometime Summum, ſometime Verticalem, the chiefeſt and the higheſt Apoſtle. Origen vpon the beginning of Iohn ſaith: Let no man thinke that we ſet Iohn before Peter. Who may ſo doe? for who ſhould be higher of the Apoſtles than he, who is, and is called the top of them? Cyprian calleth the Church of Rome in conſideration of that Biſhops ſupreme authoritie, Eccleſiam principalem, vnde vnitas Sacerdotalis exorta eſt. The principall or chiefe Church, from whence the vnitie of Priests is ſprung. Euſebius Cæſarienſis ſpeaking of Peter ſent to Rome by Gods prouidence, to vanquiſh Simon Magus, calleth him, Petrum ſſimum, & maximum Apoſtolorum, & reliquorum omnium principem: The mightieſt of power, and greateſt of the Apoſtles, and Prince of all the reſt. Auguſtine commonly calleth Peter Primum Apoſtolorum, Firſt or chiefe of the Apoſtles. Hierome, Ambroſe, Leo, and other Doctours, Prince of the Apoſtles. Chryſoſtome vpon the place of Iohn cap. 21. Sequere me, Follow me, among other things ſaith thus: * If any would demand of me, how Iames tooke the See of Hieruſalem, that is to ſay, how he became Biſhop there, I would anſwer, that this (he meaneth Peter) maſter of the whole world, made him gouernour there. And in another place bringing in that God ſaid to Hieremie, I haue ſet thee like an yron Pillar, and like a braſen wall: But the Father (ſaith hee) made him ouer one nation, but Chriſt made this man (meaning Peter) ruler of the whole world &c. And leſt theſe places ſhould ſeeme to attribute this ſupreme Authoritie to Peter onely, and not alſo to his Succeſſors: it is to be remembred, that Irenæus and Cyprian acknowledge and call the Church of Rome chiefe and principall. And Theodoretus in an Epiſtle to Leo, calleth the ſame in conſideration of the Biſhop of that See his primacie, Orbi terrarum præſidentem, Preſident, or (122) bearing rule ouer the world. Ambroſe vpon that place of Paul, 1. Timoth. 3. where the Church is called the pillar and ſtay of the truth, ſaith thus: Cum totus mundus Dei ſit, Eccleſia tamen domus eius dicitur: Cuius hodie rector eſt Damaſus. Whereas the whole world is Gods, yet the Church is called his Houſe, the ruler whereof at theſe dayes is Damaſus

* I would not weary and trouble the Reader with ſuch a number of allegations, were it not that M. Iewell beareth the world in hand, we haue not one ſentence or clauſe for vs, to prooue, either this, or any other of all his Articles.

But perhaps ſome one will ſay, yet I heare not the Biſhop of Rome called Head of the Vniuerſall Church. What forceth it whether that very terme be found in any ancient Writer, or no? Other termes of the ſame vertue and power be often times found. Is it not one to ſay, Head of the Vniuerſall Church, and to ſay, Ruler of Gods Houſe, which Ambroſe ſaith? Whereof this argument may be made. * The Church, yea the vniuerſall Church is the houſe of God: But Damaſus Biſhop of Rome is ruler of the houſe of God after Ambroſe: Ergo, Damaſus is ruler of the Vniuerſall Church. And by like right and title is the Pope, who is Biſhop of Rome, now alſo ruler of the ſame. What other is it to call the Church of Rome the principall Church, reſpect had to the Biſhop there, and not otherwiſe (wherein a figure of ſpeech is vſed) as Irenæus and Cyprian doe, and Preſident, or (123) ſet in authoritie ouer the whole world, as Leo doth: than to call the Biſhop of Rome, Head of the Vniuerſall Church? What meaneth Chryſoſtome calling Peter, totius orbis magiſtrum, the maſter and teacher of all the world: and ſaying in another place * that Chriſt made Peter, not ruler ouer one nation, as the father made Ieremy ouer the Iewes, but ouer the whole world? What other (I ſay) meaneth he thereby, than that he is head of the whole world, and therefore of the Vniuerſall Church?

Peter chiefe.

* Theſe termes be not equiualent.

* Theſe words are craftily added to Chryſoſtome, as to the diſcreet Reader may ſoone appeare.

The 122. vntruth, ſtanding in vntrue tranſlation.

* All theſe words notwithſtanding, M. Harding hath not yet found the Head of the vniuerſall Church.

* A miſerable Syllogiſme. It concludeth in Secunda figura affirmatiue.

The 123. vntruth. For Leo hath not one ſuch word.

* Euen ſo Gregory ſaith of Paul, Obtinuit totum Eccleſiæ principatum, in 1. Reg. lib. 4. cap. 4.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Touching the name of the Vniuerſall Biſhop, M. Harding hath but one authoritie: and yet the ſame cannot be found. Touching the other name, of Head of the Church, he commeth in onely with ſolly brags, and great vants, as if he were playing at Poſte, and ſhould winne all by vying. He ſaith, If M. Iewell know this, then he ſpeaketh againſt his conſcience: If he know it not, then is he not learned. To contend for learning, it were a childiſh follie. He is ſufficiently learned that ſaith the truth. But if M. Harding with all his learning be able to finde out his Head of the Church, he ſhall haue his requeſt: I will grant him to be learned.

He ſaith, The Biſhop of Rome is ſo named, either in termes equiualent, or expreſly. Thus he doubteth at the matter and ſtammereth, and faltereth at the beginning. But if the Biſhop of Rome were the Head of the Church indeed, and ſo allowed, and taken in the world, why was he neuer expreſly and plainly named ſo? Was there no man then in the world, for the ſpace of ſix hundred yeres, able to expreſſe his name? His termes of like force and meaning, which he calleth equiualent, muſt needs import thus much, That the Biſhop of Rome is aboue all Generall Councels: that he only hath power to expound the Scriptures, and cannot erre, nor be iudged of any man: and that without him there is no health: and that all the world ought to know him for the Vniuerſall Head, vpon paine of damnation. Thus much the Pope himſelfe claimeth by that name. If M. Hardings termes ſound not thus, they are not equiualent. It had beene the ſimpler and plainer dealing for M. Harding to haue ſaid, This name cannot yet be found: and ſo to haue taken a longer day.

Termes equiualent.

As for the matter, the queſtion is moued of the Biſhop of Rome: the anſwer is made of S. Peter: as if S. Peter continued there Biſhop ſtill vntill this day. But it is preſumed, that whatſoeuer priuilege was in Peter, the ſame muſt needs be in the Biſhop of Rome by

Paul chiefe.

Exod. 6. Numer. 10. 4. Reg. 25. Dist. 44. Cum autem. In Bruto. Tusculana. 2. August. de verbis Dom. in Euang. Matth. ca. 14 Ambros. Sermon. 66. Cypr. De simplicitate prælatorum.

by Succession, yea although hee haue not one sparke of Peter. S. Peter in the old Fathers is diuersly called, the First, the Chiefe, the Top, the High Honour of the Apostles; and in Eusebius, and S. Augustine, ἀρχηγὸς, and Princeps Apostolorum. In which last words of S. Augustine and Eusebius, I must doe thee, good Reader, to vnderstand, that Princeps, is not alwaies taken for a Prince, or Gouernour endued with power, but often times for the first man, or best of a company. So we reade in the Scriptures, Princeps Familiæ: princeps Legationis: princeps Coquorum: that is, The Chiefe of the House, or stocke: The chiefe of the Embassage: The chiefe of the Cookes. In this sense Cicero saith, Seruius Princeps in iure ciuili: Philosophorum princeps Aristippus: Seruius the chiefe in the Ciuile Law: Aristippus the chiefe of Philosophers. So is S. Peter called Princeps Apostolorum: And therefore S. Augustine calleth him, Primum, & Præcipuum, that is, The First, and the chiefe of the Apostles.

We may not imagine, as M. Harding semeth to doe, that Peter was made a Lord, or Prince, and had power and dominion ouer his brethren. S. Ambrose, as it is before alleged, comparing Peter and Paul together, saith thus: Inter ipsos, quis cui præferatur, incertum est: Whether of these two I may set before the other, I cannot tell. Likewise S. Cyprian saith: Hoc erant cæteri Apostoli, quod fuit Petrus, pari consortio præditi, & Honoris, & Potestatis: The rest of the Apostles were the same that Peter was, endued with like Fellowship both of Honour and of Power. S. Ambrose saith: Hee cannot discerne betweene Peter and Paul, whether he may set before other. S. Cyprian saith: All the Apostles had like Honour, and like Power: Yet by M. Hardings fantasie, Peter onely was the Prince: and all the rest were subiects and vnderlings vnto him.

Chrysostom. in Matt. hom. 55. Matth. 28. Mar. 16. Psalm. 19. Rom. 10. Chrysost. in Iohan. hemil. 87. Chrysostom. in Acta. hom. 3. Chrysost. in Epist. ad Romanos. homil. 18. Greg. in Iob. lib. 27. ca. 6. Greg. in 1. Regum. li. 4. ca. 4.

But Chrysostome saith: Christ made Peter Ruler ouer the whole World. I know not what speciall power M. Harding will gather of these words. For the same Commission that was giuen to Peter, in as large and as ample sort was giuen also to the rest of the Apostles. Christ said vnto them all: Ite in vniuersum mundum &c. Goe into the whole world and preach the Gospell. And S. Paul saith it was prophesied of them before, In omnem terram exiuit sonus eorum: The sound of them went out into all the world. Therefore, that S. Chrysostome speaketh here of S. Peter, the same otherwhere he speaketh in like forme of words of all the Apostles. Thus he writeth vpon S. Iohn: Apostoli suscipiunt curam totius mundi: The Apostles receiue the charge of all the world. Likewise hee writeth of Saint Paul: Michaeli Gens commissa est Iudæorum: Paulo verò Terræ, ac Maria, atque Vniuersi Orbis habitatio: Vnto Michael is committed the nation of the Iewes: but Land and Sea, and all the habitation of the world is committed vnto Paul. And againe: Paulo Deus omnem prædicationem, & res Orbis, & Mysteria cuncta, vniuersamq; dispensationem concessit: God hath giuen vnto Paul all maner preaching, the matters of the world, all Mysteries, and the ordering of all. So likewise saith S. Gregorie: Paulus catenis vinctus Romam petit occupaturus Mundum: Paul being bound with chaines, went to Rome, to conquer the whole world. And againe he saith: Paulus ad Christum conuersus, Caput effectus est Nationum: quia obtinuit totius Ecclesiæ principatum: Paul being conuerted vnto Christ, was made the Head of Nations, because hee obteined the chiefrie of all the Church. This was that Vniuersall power, that Chrysostome saith was giuen vnto S. Peter: and that not seuerally vnto him alone, but ioyntly, and together, with all the rest of Christs Apostles. Which thing the same Chrysostome otherwhere plainly declareth by these words: Apostoli vniuersum Orbem terrarum peruaserunt, & omnibus Principibus fuerunt magis propriè Principes, Regibus potentiores: The Apostles ranged ouer the whole world, and were more like Princes, than the Princes indeed, and more mighty than the Kings. Thus was, not only Peter, but also all the rest, and euery of the Apostles made rulers ouer the whole world.

Chrysostom. in Psalm 44.

Chrysostom. in Iohan. hom. 87.

It is further alleged, That Peter appointed Iames Bishop of Hierusalem, and the same is touched by Chrysostome. Although this place of Chrysostome import not greatly, yet being well sifted and considered, it may seeme very suspitious, as nothing agreeing either with that went before, or with that followeth afterward: but altogether sauoring of some corruption. If M. Harding himselfe would consider the words with indifferent iudgement, I doubt not but he would marueil how they came thither.

Lucæ. 24. Iohan. 15. Act. 1. Iohan. 17. Iohan. 20. Galat. 1. Galat. 2.

Neither is it likely, That Iames toke authoritie of Peter, hauing before taken sufficient authoritie of Christ himselfe. For this Commission Christ gaue to euery of his Apostles all alike: As my louing Father sent me, so doe I send you: Ye shall be witnesses to me, euen to the ends of the world. And if Peter gaue authoritie vnto Iames; who then gaue authoritie vnto Paul? Certainly S. Paul dwelt in no Peculiar, but was as much subiect to Iurisdiction, as S. Iames. But S. Paul saith, He was an Apostle, Non ab hominibus, neque per hominem: Neither of men, nor by man, but by Iesus Christ, and God the Father. They that were the chiefe of the Apostles gaue nothing vnto me. The preaching of the Gospell among the Gentiles was committed vnto mee, euen as vnto Peter the preaching of the Gospell among the Iewes. And Chrysostome expounding the same place saith thus: Paulus nihil opus habebat Petro, nec illius egebat voce: Sed honore par erat illi: nihil hîc dicam amplius: Paul had no need of Peters helpe, nor stood in need of his voice: but was in honour as good as hee: I will say no more. Hereby it may appeare, that the rest of the Apostles toke not their Apostleship or authority of S. Peter.

was

Paul chiefe.

Chrysost. in Epist. ad Galat. ca. 2.

But being granted, that Peter appointed Iames to preach in Hierusalem, yet will it not follow therefore, that Peter had rule and dominion ouer the Apostles. For thereof would follow this great inconuenience: The Appostles at Hierusalem appointed Peter, to goe, and to preach in Samaria: Ergo, The Apostles had rule and dominion ouer Peter. Which were an ouerthrow of M. Hardings greatest principle.

Actor. 8.

But let vs grant, that Peter was the Head of the Apostles, as a matter nothing pertaining to this question: Will M. Harding thereof conclude, that the Pope is therefore the Head of the Vniuersall Church? For what is there in the Pope, that was in Peter? Preaching of the Gospell? He preacheth not. Feeding of the Flocke? He feedeth not. He will say, Succession, and sitting in Peters Chaire, which is in Rome. A man may answer, The Scribes and Pharisees sate in Moses Chaire. But M. Harding knoweth, that Peter, when he receiued this priuilege, was in Hierusalem, and not in Rome. Therefore this argument would better stand thus: Peter neither had Dominion ouer the rest of the Apostles: nor was Bishop of Rome, when Christ spake vnto him: Therefore the Bishop of Rome cannot iustly claime hereby the Vniuersall Power and Dominion ouer all the world. Verily S. Augustine saith, Paulus ipse non poterat esse Caput eorum, quos plantauerat &c. Paul himselfe could not be the Head of them that he had planted: For he saith, that we being many are one Body in Christ: and that Christ himselfe is the Head of that Vniuersall Body. Of these words of S. Augustine we may gather this reason: S. Paul could not be the Head of them that he had planted: Therefore much lesse may the Pope be the Head of them that he neuer planted.

Matth. 23.

Augustin. contra literas Petiliani lib. 1.

1. Corint. 12. Rom. 12. Ephes. 1.

Yet replie will be made, That Theodoretus calleth the Church of Rome τὴν διακριθεῖσαν πρωτεθρόνην, which words M. Harding vntruly translateth, President, or bearing rule ouer the world. For he knoweth, That the Greeke word πρωτεθρόνια, signifieth, Sitting in the first place, and forceth not of necessity any rule or gouernment ouer others. He might better haue turned it, Ecclesiam orbis terrarum primariam, The most notable, or chiefe Church of the world: And so would his translation haue well agréed with the Constitutions of the Emperour Iustinian: wherein the prœminence of sitting in the first place in all Councels and Assemblies, is by speciall Priuilege granted to the Bishop of Rome.

Authen. Collat. 9. De Eccles. tit. 1. Cod. de Sacrosanctis Eccl. ca. Decernimus.

Likewise it will be replied, That Cyprian calleth the Church of Rome, Ecclesiam Principalem: The principall Church: whereof it were much for M. Harding to reason thus:

The Church of Rome is a principall Church:

Ergo, the Bishop of Rome is Head of the Vniuersall Church.

For Cyprian himselfe in the same Epistle in plaine expresse words saith, The authoritie of the Bishops of Aphrica is as good, as the authoritie of the Bishop of Rome.

Cyprian. lib. 1. Epist. 3.

Cicero, to blaze the nobilitie of that citie, calleth it, Lucem orbis terrarum, atque Arcem omnium Gentium, The Light of the World, and the Castle of all Nations.

Cicero in Catil. Oratio. 4.

Frontinus likewise, Roma Vrbs indiges, terrarúmque Dea: Rome is a wantlesse Citie, and the Goddesse of the world. And S. Hierome of the same in his time saith, Romanum Imperium nunc Vniuersas Gentes tenet: The Empire of Rome now possesseth all Nations. And in the Councell of Chalcedon the Emperour of Rome is called, Dominus Omnis Terræ, and, Dominus Vniuersi Mundi: The Lord of all the Earth, and, the Lord of the whole World. In consideration aswell of this worldly state and maiesty, as also of the number, and constancie of Martyrs: of the place of Peters trauell: of the antiquitie of the Church: and of the puritie of Doctrine, the Church of Rome was called the Principall Church of all others. But hee addeth further, Vnde Vnitas Sacerdotalis exorta est: From whence the Vnitie of the Priesthood first began. For that these words seeme to weigh much, I thinke it good herein to heare the iudgement of some other man, that may seeme indifferent. Polydorus Virgilius expounding the same words of Cyprian writeth thus: Ne quis erret, nulla alia ratione Sacerdotalis ordo à Romano Episcopo profectus esse dici potest, nisi apud Italos duntaxat id factum esse intelligatur: cum perdiu ante aduentum Petri in vrbem Romam, apud Hierosolymos Sacerdotium rité institutum fuisse, liquidò liqueat: Lest any man heereby deceiue himselfe, it cannot in any other wise be said, that the order of Priesthood grew first from the Bishop of Rome, vnlesse we vnderstand it onely within Italy. For it is clere and out of question, that Priesthood was orderly appointed at Hierusalem a good while before Peter euer came to Rome. This commendation therefore, by the iudgement of Polydore, was giuen by S. Cyprian to the Church

Hieron. ad Algasiam quæs. 11 Concil. Chalcedon. Actio. 1.

Polydor. Virgil. de inuentorib. rerum lib. 4.

Church of Rome in respect of Italie, and not in respect of the whole world. And therefore S. Augustine saith, Ciuitas, quasi Mater, & Caput est Cæterarum: vnde etiam Metropolis appellatur: The Citie is as the Mother and the Head of other townes: and thereof (in respect of such townes) it is called the Mother Citie. And in this sense Chrysostome calleth the Citie of Antioch, Metropolim Fidei, The Mother of the Faith.

August. de consensu Euangelist. lib. 3.

Ad populum Antiochen. hom. 17.

M. Harding saith further, The Church is called the House of God: The ruler whereof (saith S. Ambrose) in these daies is Damasus. Here is narrow seeking to finde out somewhat: and yet the same somewhat will be worth nothing. First, what opinion S. Ambrose had herein, it is easie elsewhere of other his words to be seene. In his Epistle vnto the Emperour Valentinian, he calleth Damasus, not Prince of the People: nor Head of the Church: nor Vniuersall Bishop: but onely Bishop of the Church of Rome. And writing vnto Siricius the Bishop of Rome, he calleth him his Brother.

Ambrosius lib. 5. epist. 30.

Ambros. li. 10. epist. 81.

But he calleth Damasus by expresse words, the Ruler of Gods Church. He might haue had the like witnesse of S. Hierome, Damasus virgo, Ecclesiæ Virginis Doctor est: Damasus being a Virgin, is the teacher of the Church, that is a Virgin. And what will M. Harding gather hereof? Or what thinketh he of Ambrose himselfe, and of other Bishops: was not euery of them the Ruler of the Church of God? Verily S. Paul thus exhorteth the Clergie of Ephesus at his departing thence: Take heed to your selues, and to the whole flocke, wherein the Holy Ghost hath made you ouerseers to rule the Church of God, which he hath gotten with his Blood. There appeareth no other difference betwæn these words of S. Paul, and the other of S. Ambrose, sauing only, that S. Ambrose saith, Rector Ecclesiæ: and S. Paul saith, Regere Ecclesiam. Yet did not S. Paul by his words appoint the Ministers of Ephesus to rule ouer the whole Church of God. Thus S. Hierome calleth Origen, Magistrum Ecclesiarum, The Master or Teacher of the Churches. Thus Theodoretus calleth Chrysostome, Doctorem Orbis terrarum, The teacher of all the world. Thus Nazianzene calleth S. Basil, The Pillar and Buttresse of the Church.

De Apologia aduersus Iouinianum.

Actor. 20.

Hieron. de locis Hebraicis.

Theodoret. li. 5. ca. 32.

Nazianzen. in laudem patris sui. στῦλον καὶ ἐδραίωμα.

But marke well (gentle Reader) and thou shalt see, that M. Harding hath pretily wrested vp this place of S. Ambrose quite out of tune, and of an Indefinite, or a Particular Proposition, contrary to his rules of Logike, will nods conclude an Vniuersall, the better to maintaine the Popes Vniuersall power. For that S. Ambrose speaketh indefinitely of a Church, without limitation of one, or other, that M. Harding stretcheth and forceth to the whole Vniuersall Church: as if the whole Church of God had bæne at Rome. The like kind of error led Bonifacius the eight to reason thus: Dominus dixit generaliter, Pasce oues meas, non singulariter, has, aut illas: Ergo, commisisse intelligitur Vniuersas: The Lord said generally vnto Peter, Feed my sheepe: he said not specially, Feed these or them: Therefore we must vnderstand, that he committed them vnto Peter altogether. If M. Harding had not taken S. Ambrose vp so short, by the words that immediately follow, he might well haue knowen his meaning. For thus he openeth what he meant by the House of God: Ibi necesse est dicatur esse Domus Dei, & Veritas, vbi secundùm voluntatem suam timetur: There we must needs say, Gods Howse, and Truth is, wheresoeuer God is feared according to his will. This house was in all places where God was knowen and serued: and not only in the Church of Rome.

De Maior. & Obedien. Vnam Sanctam.

Iohan. 21.

Ambros. in 1. Tim. cap. 3.

Yet will M. Harding say, These be euasions. For S. Ambrose semeth to acknowledge a speciall rule and gouernment in Damasus, that was not common vnto others. Certainly his words import not so. And how can we know his meaning, but by his words? But to put the matter out of doubt, let vs consider whether the selfe same forme of speech, haue bæne applied vnto any others in like sort. Arsenius in his submission writeth thus vnto Athanasius: Nos quoque diligimus pacem, & vnitatem cum Ecclesia Catholica, cui tu per Dei gratiam præfectus es: Wee also loue Peace and Vnitie with the Catholique Church, ouer which you by the grace of God are made gouernour. Here Athanasius is pronounced Gouernour of the Catholique Church: Yet was he not the Bishop of Rome. So likewise saith S. Cyprian: Hæc Ecclesia vna est, quæ tenet, & possidet omnem sponsi sui in Gratiam: hac præsidemus: This Church is one, that keepeth and holdeth the grace of her Spouse: In this Church we are the Rulers. Here S. Cyprian calleth himselfe the President or Ruler of Gods Church: Yet was he the Bishop of Carthage, and not of Rome. To be short, in like sort Origen pronounceth generally of all Priests: Si tales fuerint, vt à Christo super illos ædificetur Ecclesia: If they be such, as vpon them the Church of God may be built. Here Origen imagineth, that euery Priest is the foundation of Gods Church: Yet were it hard to say, Euery Priest is Bishop of Rome. S. Ambroses meaning therefore is, that euery Bishop or Patriarke within his Precincts, or Prouince, is the ruler of the whole Church. And this is it that Cyprian semeth to say: Episcopatus vnus est, cuius à singulis in solidum pars tenetur: The Bishopricke is one, a portion whereof is possessed in whole of euery Bishop.

Athanas. in Apolog. 2.

Cyprian. ad Iubaianum de Hæreticis Baptizandis.

Orig. in Matt. tractatu 1.

Cyprian. de simplicitate Prælatorum.

Therefore

Therefore M. Harding ſeemeth to doe wrong to S. Ambroſe, thus violently to abuſe his words, to proue the Biſhop of Romes Vniuerſall Power.

Here M. Harding doubting leſt his Reader being weary of theſe cold ſlender ſhifts, and loking for ſome other more ſubſtantiall and formall reaſons, would ſay: I heare not yet the Head of the Vniuerſall Church, purpoſely preuenteth the matter, and ſaith: what forceth that, whether that verie terme be vſed in any ancient writers or no? Gentle Reader, I beſeech thee, marke well this dealing. This name, the Head of the Vniuerſall Church is the very thing that we denie, and that M. Harding hath taken in hand to proue, and boldly auoucheth, that he hath already plainly ſhewed and proued the ſame. Yet now in the end, finding himſelfe deſtitute, he turneth it off, as a thing of nought, and ſaith, What forceth that, whether he were called by that very name or no? As though he would ſay, All the old Fathers of the Church both Greekes and Latines, wanted words and eloquence, and either they could not, or they durſt not call the Head of the Church by his owne peculiar name. Howbeit, if the Biſhop of Rome be ſo called, it may be ſhewed: If not, then is my firſt aſſertion true. Verily, touching the title of Vniuerſall Biſhop, S. Gregory calleth it, Nouum nomen: A new name, vnacquainted, and vnknowen vnto the World. And ſaith further: If we quietly take this matter, we deſtroy the Faith of the Vniuerſall Church. This therefore was the cauſe that the ancient Doctours neuer called the Biſhop of Rome the Head of the Church: for that they knew he was neither reputed nor taken ſo, nor was indeed the Head of the Church. M. Harding hauing not yet found the thing that he ſo long ſought for, at the laſt is faine to make it vp by ſhift of reaſon: The Vniuerſall Church (ſaith he) is the houſe of God.

Gregor. lib. 4. Epiſt. 32. Gregor. li. 6. epiſt. 24. Vniuerſæ Eccleſiæ fidē corrumpimus.

Damaſus is the Ruler of the Houſe of God; Ergo, Damaſus is Ruler of the Vniuerſall Church.

This Syllogiſmus is a manifeſt Fallax, and hath as many faults as lines.

First, there is an Equiuocation or double vnderſtanding of theſe words: The houſe of God. For both the Vniuerſall Church, and alſo euery particular Church, is Gods houſe. 1

Againe, there is another Fallax, which they call, Ex meris particularibus, or, A non Diſtributo ad Diſtributum. 2

Thirdly, there is another foule fault in the very Forme of the Syllogiſme, eaſie for any Childe to eſpie: For contrary to all Logiks and order of Reaſon, he concludeth In Secunda Figura affirmatiuè; whereas M. Harding knoweth, all the Mods or Formes of the Second Figure muſt needs conclude Negatiuè. The weakneſſe hereof will the better appeare by the like: The Vniuerſall Church is the Catholike Church: But Arſenius ſaith: Athanaſius the Biſhop of Alexandria was Ruler of the Catholike Church: Ergo, Athanaſius the Biſhop of Alexandria was ruler of the Vniuerſall Church. 3

Thus hitherto M. Iewel may truly ſay, M. Harding hath yet brought neither Clauſe nor Sentence ſufficient to proue, that the Biſhop of Rome was called either the Vniuerſall Biſhop, or the Head of the Vniuerſall Church.

M. Harding. The 32. Diuiſion.

But to ſatisfie theſe men, and to take away occaſion of cauill, I will allege a few places where the expreſſe terme (Head) is attributed to Peter the firſt Biſhop of Rome, and by like right to his Succeſſours, and to the See Apoſtolike. Chryſoſtome ſpeaking of the vertue and power of Peter, and of the ſtedfaſtneſſe of the Church, in the 55. Homily vpon Matthew hath theſe words among other; Cuius Paſtor & caput homo piſcator, atque ignobilis &c. By which words he affirmeth that the Paſtor and head of the Church, being but a fiſher, a man, and one of baſe parentage, paſſeth in firmneſſe the nature of the diamant. Againe, in an Homilie of the praiſes of Paul, he ſaith thus: Neither was this man only ſuch a one, but he alſo which was the Head of the Apoſtles, who often times ſaid, he was ready to beſtow his life for Chriſt, and yet was full ſore afraid of death. If he were head of the Apoſtles, then was he head of the inferiour people, and ſo head of the Vniuerſall Church.

A Head for worthineſſe & boldneſſe of ſpirit. So S. Gregory ſaith; Paulus Caput effectus eſt Nationum. In 1. Regum. lib. 4. ca. 4.

Hierome writing againſt Iouinian ſaith; Propterea inter duodecim vnus eligitur, vt capite conſtituto Schiſmatis tollatur occaſio: For that cauſe among the twelue, one is ſpecially choſen out, that the head being ordained, occaſion of Schiſme may be taken away. Whereby it appeareth, that Peter was conſtituted head, for auoiding of diuiſion and ſchiſme. Now the danger of the inconuenience remaining ſtill, yea more than at that time, for the greater multitude of the Church, and for ſundry other imperfections; the ſame remedy muſt be thought to continue, vnleſſe we would ſay that Chriſt hath leſſe care ouer his Church now that it is ſo much increaſed, than he had at the beginning, when his flocke was ſmall. For this cauſe, except we denie Gods prouidence toward his Church, there is one head for auoiding of ſchiſme alſo now, aſwell as in the Apoſtles time. Which is the Succeſſour of him that was head by Chriſts appointment then, the Biſhop of Rome ſitting in the ſeat that Peter ſate in.

Serm. 124.

Cyrillus ſaith: Petrus vt Princeps Caputq; cæterorū primus exclamauit, Tu es Chriſtus Filius Dei viui: Peter as Prince and Head of the reſt, firſt cried out, Thou art Chriſt the Sonne of the liuing God. Auguſtine alſo in a Sermon to the people, calleth him Head of the Church, ſaying; Totius Corporis membrum in ipſo capite curat Eccleſia, & in ipſo vertice componit omnium membrorum Sanitatem: He healeth the member of the whole Body, in the Head it ſelfe of the Church, and in the top it ſelfe he ordereth the health of all the members. And in an other place; Saluator quando proſe, & Petro exolui iubet, pro omnibus exoluiſſe videtur. Quia ſicut in Saluatore erant omnes cauſa magiſterij, ita poſt Saluatorem in Petro omnes continentur: ipſum enim conſtituit Caput (124. omnium: Our Sauiour, ſaith Auguſtine, when as he commanded paiment (for the Emperour) to be made for himſelfe,

Li. Quæſt. vet. & noui Teſta. 57.

The 124. vntruth, ſtanding in the wilfull falſifying of S. Auguſtine.

Head.

* S. Augustine saith, Caput eorum, not Caput omnium.

selfe, and for Peter, he seemeth to haue paid for all. Because as all were in our Sauiour for cause of teaching, so after our Sauiour, all are contained in Peter, for he ordained him Head of all. Heere haue these men the plaine and expresse terme; Head of the rest, Head of the Church, Head* of all, and therefore of the Vniuersall Church. What will they haue more? Neither heere can they say, that although this title of the Head be giuen to Peter, yet it is not deriued and transferred from him to his Successours. For this is manifest, that Christ instituted his Church, so as it should continue to the worlds end, according to the saying of Esay the Prophet; Super solium David, &c. Vpon the seat of Dauid, and vpon his Kingdome, shall Messias sit to strengthen it, and to establish it in iudgement and righteousnesse, from this day for euermore. And thereof it is euident that he ordained those who then were in ministery, so as their authoritie and power should be deriued vnto their aftercommers for the vtility of the Church for euer; specially, whereas he said, Behold I am with you vntill the end of the World. And therefore, as Victor writeth in his story of persecution of the Vandales, Eugenius Bishop of Carthago conuented of Obadus a great Captaine of Hunerike King of the Vandales, about a Councell to be kept in Aphrica for matters of the Faith, betwixt the Arians supported by the King and the Catholikes, said in this wise, Si nostram fidem, &c. If the Kings power desire to know our Faith, which is one and the true, let him send to his friends. I will write also to my brethren that my fellow-Bishops come, who may declare the Faith that is common to you and vs, (there hee hath these words) Et præcipuè Ecclesia Romana, quæ Caput est omnium Ecclesiarum: And specially the Church of Rome which is the Head of all the Churches. Naming the Church of Rome, he meaneth the Bishop there, or his Legates to be sent in his stead

Cap. 9.

Matth. vlt. lib. 2.

Thus it is prooued by good and ancient authorities, that the name and title of the Head, Ruler, President, Chiefe and Principall Gouernour of the Church, is of the Fathers attributed, not only to Peter, but also to his Successours Bishops of the See Apostolike. And therefore M. Iewel may thinke himselfe by this charitably admonished, to remember his promise of yeelding and subscribing.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

I might well passe all these authorities ouer without answer, as being no part of this question. For, I trust, the indifferent Reader of himselfe will soone beleeue, we seeke no quarrell against S. Peter, nor goe about to scanne his titles, or to abridge him of his right. It is knowen that S. Peter by these Fathers heere alleged, Augustine, Hierome, Chrysostome, and Cyril, is called the Top and Head of the Apostles. And if need so required, the same might be auouched by authorities many moe. For who is he that knoweth not this?

But M. Harding knoweth, the case is moued, not of S. Peter, but specially and namely of the Bishops of Rome: and of them, he knoweth, he should haue answered, if his mind had beene to deale plainly, and as he saith, fully to satisfie his Reader. Within the space of the first fiue hundred yeeres, there were in Rome 68. Bishops, for their constancie in the Faith, for their Vertue and Learning farre exceeding the rest, that haue beene sithence. The number of them being so great, their learning so notable, their life so holy, it is maruell, M. Harding should not be able to shew, that any one of them all, in so long a time, was once called the Head of the Church, and therefore should thus rest only vpon S. Peter, who, when he receiued these titles, was not Bishop of Rome; and of whom there is no question moued. Wherefore M. Harding may better consider his note in the margin: and whereas he hath written thus: Peter and his Successors called the Head of the Church expressly: He may rather amend it, and make it thus Only Peter, and not one of his Successours, called Head of the Church expressly. So should his note and his text agree together: and so should he not deceiue his Reader.

M. Harding misalleageth the old Doctours.

Heere by the way, I must put M. Harding in remembrance, notwithstanding, for his estimations sake, he would faine haue his forth in these matters, yet should he not therefore thus beguile the eies of the simple, and thus misreport and falsifie the words of the ancient Fathers. For alleging S. Hierome, he leaueth out words, and altogether dissembleth the whole meaning. In S. Augustine he hath shifted and placed one word for another. S. Hierome in that place with great contention of words, commendeth S. Iohn aboue S. Peter, namely for that S. Peter was a Married man, and S. Iohn a Virgin. In the heat of his talke, he laieth this obiection against himselfe: At dices, Super Petrum fundatur Ecclesia: licet id ipsũ in alio loco super omnes Apostolos fiat, & cuncti Claues Regni Cœlorũ accipiant, & ex æquo super eos Ecclesiæ fortitudo solidetur: But then wilt say, the Church was built vpon Peter (and not vpon Iohn.) Albeit in another place the same is done (that is, the Church is built) vpon all the Apostles: and all receiue the Keies of the Kingdome of Heauen: and the strength of the Church is built equally vpon them all. M. Harding thought it good to skip and dissemble these words, notwithstanding they be ioined all together in one sentence with the rest. It followeth: Tamen propterea inter duodecim vnus eligitur, vt Capite constituto, Schismatis tollatur occasio. Sed cur non Iohannes electus est virgo? Ætati delatum est: quia Petrus Senior erat: ne adhuc Adolescens, & penè Puer progressæ etatis hominibus præferretur: Notwithstanding the Disciples were all equall, yet therefore one is chosen among the twelue, that a Head being appointed, occasion of Schisme might be taken away. Then wilt say againe, And why was not Iohn being a virgin, chosen to bee this Head? He answereth: Christ gaue the preeminence vnto age. For Peter was an aged man: lest that Iohn being a yong man,

Hieronym. aduersus Iouinianum, lib. 1.

The Apostles all equall.

man, and in maner a childe, should be placed before men of yeeres. This therefore is S. Hieromes meaning, that Christ, to auoid confusion, which lightly happeneth in all companies where as is none order, appointed S. Peter, for that he was the eldest man, to speake and to deale for the rest, as the Chiefe and Head of all his brethren. Which order also was afterward vniuersally taken throwout the world, that in euery Congregation of Priests, one should haue a speciall preeminence aboue others, and be called Episcopus, the Bishop. This was thought a good politike way to auoid contention in the Church; and not, as M. Harding imagineth, To make one man the Vniuersall Ruler ouer all the World. But touching this whole matter, I haue answered more at large in the 15. Diuision of this Article.

Head.

Hieronym. ad Nepotian. 7. Quæst. 1. in Apibus. Hieron. in epist. ad Titum, ca. 1. Hieron. contra Luciferian.

In the allegation of S. Augustines words, M. Harding for his pleasure, hath vttered manifest corruption, in the Head of this word Eorum, purposely vsing this word, Omnium. For whereas S. Augustine saith: Ipsum constituit Caput eorum: Christ appointed him to bee the Head of them: M. Harding thought it better to allege it thus: Ipsum constituit Caput Omnium: Christ appointed him to be Head of All. He saw right well, that corrupt Doctrine would not stand without some corruption.

M. Harding misreporteth S. Augustine. Augustin. in quæstio. Veter. & Noui Testa. quæstio. 75.

Further, I doubt not, but M. Harding doth well remember that the question that lieth betweene vs, riseth not of any extraordinary name, once or twice giuen vpon some speciall affection, but of the vsuall and knowen stile of the Bishops of Rome. For Theophrastus saith; Quæ semel aut bis accidunt, contemnunt Legislatores: The Law makers haue no regard to such things, as neuer happen but once or twice. Neither whatsoeuer name is giuen to any man of fauour or admiration of his vertue, is therefore to be reckoned as his ordinary title. S. Chrysostome writeth thus of the Emperor Theodosius: Læsus est, qui non habet parem vllum super terram: Summitas, & Caput omnium super terram hominum: He is offended that in the Earth hath no peere: the Toppe and the Head of all men in the World. Eleutherius the Bishop of Rome, gaue this title vnto Lucius the King of this Iland: Vos estis Vicarius Christi: You (being the King) are Christs Vicar. Chrysostome speaking of Elias, calleth him Prophetarum Caput: The Head of the Prophets. The Councell of Ephesus writing vnto the Emperours Theodosius and Valentinianus, expresseth Cyrillus the Bishop of Alexandria by this title: Caput Episcoporum congregatorum Cyrillus: Cyrillus the Head of the Bishops there assembled. Likewise Gregory intitleth S. Paul in this wise: Paulus ad Christum conuersus, Caput effectus est Nationum: Paul being conuerted vnto Christ, was made the Head of Nations. And to take nearer view of the Bishop of Romes owne speciall titles, Pope Nicolas thereof writeth thus: Constat Pontificem à pio Principe Constantino Deum appellatum: It is well knowen, that the Pope of that godly Prince Constantinus was called God. And further they say: Papa est in primatu Abel, in zelo Elias, in mansuetudine Dauid, in potestate Petrus, in vnctione Christus: The Pope in Primacie is Abel, in zeale is Elias, in mildnesse is Dauid, in power is Peter, in anointing is Christ. These names, as I haue said, of affection and fauour haue béne giuen: yet will not M. Harding therefore say, that either the Emperour ought to be called the Head of all men vpon earth; or the King, Christs Vicar; or Elias, the Head of the Prophets; or Cyrillus, the Head of the Councell; or S. Paul, the Head of Nations; or the Bishop of Rome, God or Christ, as by an vsuall and ordinary title. And although, as I haue said, S. Peters titles be nothing incident to this Question, yet we may examine M. Hardings argument touching the same: Peter (saith he) was Head of the Apostles:

Chrysost. in Epist. ad Roman. 11. hom. 18. Cyrill. Tom 4. Epist. 5. Gregor. in 1. Regum, lib 4. cap. 4. Dist. 96. Satis euidenter.

Ergo, He was Head of other inferiour people; and so Head of the Vniuersall Church.

This is a deceitfull kinde of argument, and riseth by degrées and steps, and in the Schooles is called Sorites. In like sort M. Harding might conclude thus:

Elias, as Chrysostome saith, was Head of the Prophets:

Ergo, He was Head of the inferiour people: and so of the whole Vniuersall Church.

But the errour hereof will better appeare by that argument that Themistocles the Gouernour of Athens sometimes made of himselfe, his Wife, and his Childe. Thus he said:

The people of Athens is ruled by me: I am ruled by my Wife.

My Wife is ruled by my Childe:

Ergo, The people of Athens is ruled by my Childe.

In this reason this one word Rule, hath three significations. For Themistocles ruled, as a Gouernour: his Wife, as a shrew: his Childe, as a wanton. And therein standeth the errour of the argument. So likewise this word Head, signifieth sometime the chiefe in Learning, sometime the chiefe in Dignity, sometime the chiefe in Gouernment. And héreof also in reasoning riseth great errour. For it were great follie to reason thus: Paul in learning and dignity was the Head of all others: Ergo, He was the Head in Gouernment ouer all others.

Touching Victor that wrote the story of the Vandales, he is neither Scripture, nor Peter not head.

Councell, nor Doctour, nor writeth the Order or Practise of the Primitiue Church: nor is it well knowen, either of what credit he was, or when he liued: nor doth he call the Bishop of Rome the Head of the Vniuersall Church. Onely he saith, Rome is the Chiefe or Head Church of all others. Which thing of our part, for that time is not denied: as may better appeare by that is written before in sundry places of this Article. So doth Prudentius call Bethleem the Head of the World: Sancta Bethlem Caput est Orbis. So likewise Chrysostome giuing instructions vnto Flauianus touching the City of Antioch, saith vnto him: Cogita de totius Orbis Capite: Thinke thou of (Antioch, that is) the Head of all the World. Whereby is meant a Head of Dignity or Honour, and not of Rule.

Prudentius in Enchiridio.

Chrysost. ad populum Antioch. hom. 3.

M. Harding finding not one of the whole number of the Bishops of Rome, once named the Head of the whole Church, therefore thought it best to found his proofe vpon S. Peter. And for that cause, others of his side haue aduanced S. Peter aboue all Creatures. Bonifacius saith, That God toke Peter, In Consortium Indiuiduæ Trinitatis: Into the fellowship euen of the Indiuisible Trinity: & that from him as from the Head, he powreth all his gifts into the Body. Whereof M. Harding forgeth his argument thus: Peter was the Head of the Apostles, and so of all other inferiours:

Extra. de election. & electi potestate Bonif. 8. Fundamẽta. Ab ipso, quasi quodam capite, dona sua omnia diffundit in Corpus.

Ergo, The Bishop of Rome is the Head of the vniuersall Church.

Thus, as Iulianus the Emperour in his phrensie sometime imagined, that the Great Alexanders soule was come by Succession to dwell in him: euen so now the Bishops of Rome imagine by like phantasie or phrensie, that S. Peters soule commeth by Succession to dwell in them: and that therefore they ought to haue whatsoeuer title or interest Peter had. And for that cause they say, We are Peters Successours. Euen as the Pharise is sometime said: We be the children of Abraham. But S. Iohn the Baptist said vnto them: Put not your affiance in such Succession. For God is able euen of the stones to raise vp Children vnto Abraham. And when the children of Scæua being Sorcerers and Infidels began to practise in the name of Christ and Paul, the man possest made them answer: Christ I know, and Paul I know, but what are you? Surely Peter was not the Head of the Apostles, because he was Bishop of Rome, For he was so appointed by Christ, in consideration of age, and boldnesse of spirit, long before he came to Rome: yea and had so bene, and so had continued, although he had neuer come to Rome. Therefore M. Hardings argument is a Fallax, and in the Schooles is called Fallacia accidentis.

Socrates lib. 3. ca. 18.

Matth. 3.

Actor. 19.

Thus notwithstanding S. Peter were Head of the Church, yet cannot the Bishop of Rome therefore of right claime the same title. And albeit S. Peter of speciall reuerence, and admiration of his spirit and vertues, were sometimes so called, as S. Paul sometimes also was, yet vnderstanding this chiefly for Vniuersall Power, & Gouernment, & Authority to command, S. Peter neither was the Head of the Vniuersall Church indeed, nor was so esteemed or taken among his brethren, as many wates it may well appeare. And therefore S. Gregory saith: Paulus membra Dominici Corporis certis extra Dominũ quasi capitibus, & ipsis quidem Apostolis subijci particulariter euitauit: S. Paul forbade that the members of Christs Body should not be subiect particularly vnto any certaine Heads besides the Lord, no not vnto the Apostles themselues. So saith S. Augustine, as it is before alleged: Nec Apostolus Paulus Caput est, & Origo eorum, quos plantauerat: Neither is Paul himselfe the Head of them whom he planted. Likewise againe he saith: Paulus Apostolus, quanquam sub Capite præcipuum membrum, tamen membrum est Corporis Christi: Paul the Apostle, although he be a speciall member vnder (Christ) the Head, yet is he a member (and not the Head) of Christs Body. To conclude, S. Gregory saith: Certè Petrus Apostolus primum membrum Sanctæ & Vniuersalis Ecclesiæ est. Paulus, Andreas, Iohannes, quid aliud, quàm singularium sunt plebium Capita? Et tamen sub vno Capite omnes membra sunt Ecclesiæ. Atque vt cuncta breui cingulo locutionis astringam, Sancti ante Legem, Sancti in Lege, Sancti sub Gratia: Omnes hi perficientes Corpus Domini, in membris sunt Ecclesiæ constituti: Et nemo se vnquam Vniuersalem vocari voluit: Indeed Peter the Apostle is the chiefe member of the holy Vniuersall Church. Paul, Andrew and Iohn, what are they else, but the Heads of seuerall people? Yet notwithstanding vnder one Head they are all members of the Church. To be short, the Saints before the Law, the Saints in the Law, the Saints vnder Grace, all accomplishing the Lords Body, are placed among the members of the Church: And there was neuer yet none that would call himselfe Vniuersall.

Paul the Head aswell as Peter.

Gregor. li. 4. Epist. 38.

Augustin. contra literas Petiliani, l. 1. c. 5.

Augustin. contra Epistolam Parmeniani, li. 2. ca. 8.

Gregor. li. 4. Epist. 38.

Whereof we may well conclude thus: S. Peter, touching Gouernment and Ordinary Rule, was not the Head of the Vniuersall Church: Ergo, Much lesse is the Pope the Head of the Vniuersall Church.

M. Harding. The 33. Diuision.

I will adde to all that hath beene hitherto said of this matter, a saying of Martin Luther, that such as doe little regard the grauity of ancient Fathers of the old Church, may yet somewhat be mooued with the lightnesse neſſe of the yong Father Luther, Patriarke and founder of their new Church. Lightneſſe I may well call it, for in thus ſaying which I ſhall heere rehearſe, he doth not ſo ſoberly allow the Popes Primacy, as in ſundrie other Treatiſes hee doth raſhly and furiouſly inueigh againſt the ſame. In a little Treatiſe intituled, Reſolutio Lutheriana ſuper propoſitione ſua 13. De poteſtate Papæ: His words bee theſe; Primum quod me mouet Romanum Pontificem eſſe aliis omnibus, quos ſaltem nouerimus ſe Pontifices gerere, Superiorem, eſt ipſa voluntas Dei, quam in ipſo facto videmus. Neque enim ſine voluntate Dei, in hanc Monarchiam vnquam venire potuiſſet Romanus Pontifex. At voluntas Dei, quoquo modo nota fuerit, cum reuerentia ſuſcipienda eſt, ideoque non licet temere Romano Pontifici in ſuo primatu reſiſtere. Hæc autem ratio tanta eſt, vt ſi etiam nulla ſcriptura, nulla alia cauſa eſſet, hæc tamen ſatis eſſet ad compeſcendam temeritatem reſiſtentium. Et hac ſola ratione glorioſiſſimus Martyr Cyprianus, per multas Epiſtolas confidentiſſimè gloriatur contra omnes Epiſcoporum quorumcunque aduerſarios. Sicut 3. Regum legimus, quod decem Tribus Iſrael diſceſſerunt à Roboam filio Salomonis, & tamen quia voluntate Dei, ſiue auctoritate factum eſt, ratum apud Deum fuit. Nam & apud Theologos omnes, voluntas ſigni, quam vocant operationem Dei, non minus quàm alia ſigna voluntatis Dei, vt præcepta prohibitiua &c. metuenda eſt. Ideo non video quomodo ſint excuſati à Schiſmatis reatu, qui huic voluntati contrauenientes, ſeſe à Romani Pontificis auctoritate ſubtrahunt. Ecce hæc eſt vna prima mihi inſuperabilis ratio, quæ me ſubijcit Romano Pontifici, & primatum eius confiteri cogit: The firſt thing that mooueth mee to thinke the Biſhop of Rome to bee ouer all other that we know to be Biſhops, is the very will of God, which wee ſee in the fact or deed it ſelfe: For without the will of God the Biſhop of Rome could neuer haue been commen vnto this Monarchy. But the wil of God, by what mean ſoeuer it be knowen, is to be receiued reuerently. And therefore it is not lawfull raſhly to reſiſt the Biſhop of Rome in his Primacie. And this is ſo great a reaſon for the ſame, that if there were no Scripture at all, nor other reaſon, yet this were enough to ſtay the raſhneſſe of them that reſiſt. And through this onely reaſon, the moſt glorious Martyr Cyprian in many of his Epiſtles vaunteth himſelfe very boldly againſt all the aduerſaries of Biſhops, whatſoeuer they were. As in the third Booke of the Kings, we read, that the ten Tribes of Iſrael departed from Roboam Salomons ſonne, Yet becauſe it was done by the wil or authority of God, it ſtood in effect with God. For among all the Diuines, the will of the Signe, which they call the working of God, is to bee feared no leſſe, than other Signes of Gods will, as commandements prohibitiue, &c. Therefore I ſee not how they may bee excuſed of the guilt of Schiſme, which going againſt this will, withdraw themſelues from the authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome. Lo this is one chiefe inuincible reaſon that maketh mee to bee vnder the Biſhop of Rome, and compelleth mee to confeſſe his Primacy. Thus farre Luther.

Thus I haue briefly touched ſome deale of the Scriptures, of the Canons and Councels, of the edicts of Emperours, of the Fathers ſayings, of the reaſons, and of the manifold practiſes of the Church, which are wont to be alleged for the Popes Primacy and ſupreme authority. Withall, I haue prooued that which M. Iewel denieth (125) that the Biſhop of Rome within ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, hath beene called the Vniuerſall Biſhop, of no ſmall number of men of great credit; and very often times head of the Vniuerſall Church, both in termes equiualent, and alſo expreſſly. Now to the next Article.

The 125. vntruth. For Peter only excepted, either of theſe titles reſteth yet vnreprooued.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

The caſe goeth ſomewhat hardly of M. Hardings ſide, when he is thus driuen for want of other authorities, to craue aid at Luthers hand. Touching alteration in Religion, which it pleaſeth him to name lightneſſe, if he would ſoberly remember his owne often changes, and the light occaſions of the ſame, he ſhould finde ſmall cauſe to condemne others. Certainly D. Luther, after God had once called him to be a Miniſter of his truth, neuer lokt backward from the plough, nor refuſed the Grace that God had offered him, notwithſtanding he ſaw, all the powers of the World were againſt him. His argument is taken of the effects or tokens of Gods will. The Pope, ſaid he, is aduanced vnto a Monarchie or Emperiall ſtate of a Kingdome. But he could neuer be ſo aduanced without Gods will: Ergo, It was Gods will it ſhould be ſo.

Arguments that be taken of Gods permiſſion, or of the tokens of his will, make no neceſſary proofe, either that the things in themſelues be good, or that God is pleaſed with them. For God ſuffered Nabuchodonozor, Sennacherib, Pharao, and others; and their Eſay 36. very eſtates and proceedings were euident tokens of Gods will. For if his will had been otherwiſe, they could not haue raigned: Yet neither were they good men, nor was God pleaſed with their doings. So ſhall God ſuffer Antichriſt to ſit euen in the holy place, Daniel. cap. 7. Daniel ſaith: Faciet, & proſperabitur: He ſhall take his pleaſure and ſhall proſper. And againe: Matth. 24. Roborabitur fortitudo eius, & non in viribus ſuis: His power ſhall be confirmed, but not through Daniel 8. his owne ſtrength, but through the ſtrength of God. Yet ſhall not God therefore loue or fauour Antichriſt, or delight in his wickednеſſe. For 2. Theſſal. 2. S. Paul ſaith: The Lord ſhall kill him with the ſpirit of his mouth, and ſhall deſtroy him with the brightneſſe and glory of his comming.

Now, forasmuch as it hath pleaſed M. Harding, for the concluſion hereof, to touch the Effects of Gods will, I truſt it ſhall not be painfull to thee, gentle Reader, likewiſe ſhortly to conſider the effects and ſequels of this Vniuerſall power. It is granted, that the Church of Rome, for ſundry cauſes before alleged, was euermore from the beginning, the chiefe and moſt notable aboue all others. Notwithſtanding Æneas Syluius being himſelfe a Biſhop of Rome, ſaith: Ad Romanos Pontifices ante Nicenum Concilium, aliquis ſanè, etſi non magnus, reſpectus fuit: Verily there was ſome reſpect had to the Biſhops of Rome before the Councell of Nice, although it were not great. S. Cyprian in his time complained, That Pride and Ambition ſeemed to lodge in Prieſts boſomes. Origen in his time complained, that the Miniſters of Chriſt ſeemed euen then to paſſe the outrage of Worldly Princes.

Æneas Syluius. Cypriã. in Sermone de Ieiunio & Tentatione. Origẽ in Matthe. tractat. 12.

Yet was the Church of God in those daies euery where vnder cruell and vehement persecution. Therefore to abate this ambitious courage, order was afterward taken in the Councell of Carthage: That no man should bee intitled the Highest Bishop, or the Prince of Bishops, or by any other like name. The Greeke Bishops in the Councell of Antioch, and the Bishops of Aphrica, being in number two hundred and seuentene, in the Councell there found themselues greeued with the pride and arrogancie of the See of Rome. For that Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople, toke vpon him to be called the Vniuersall Bishop, therefore Gregory the Bishop of Rome called him Lucifer, and the Messenger of Antichrist: and said, He had chosen vnto him a proud, an arrogant, a pernicious, and a blasphemous name. But after that by great sute made vnto the Emperour Phocas, the Bishops of Rome themselues had once obtained the same title, and had possessed and enioyed the same a long while, in the end, their pride was such, that it seemed intollerable. Then they began to decree and determine, That euery mortall man is bound to be Subiect to the See of Rome, and that vpon paine of damnation: and that without the obedience of that See, no man is saued: That the Bishop of Rome is an Vniuersall Iudge ouer all men: and that he himselfe may be iudged by no man, neither by Emperour, nor by King, nor by all the Clergie, nor by the whole people, for that it is written by the Prophet Esay: The Axe shall not glory against him that heweth with it. That whatsoeuer he doe, no man may presume to say vnto him, Domine cur ita facis? Sir, why doe you thus? That he hath all maner Law and Right in Scrinio pectoris sui: in the Closet of his breast. That all other Bishops receiue of his fulnesse: [a] That no Councels can make Lawes for the Church of Rome, and that the Bishop of Romes authority is plainly excepted out of all Councels: [b] That notwithstanding the Pope draw innumerable companies of people after him into Hell, yet no mortall man may dare to reproue him. [c] That the Popes will or pleasure standeth as a Law, In illis quæ vult, est ei pro ratione voluntas. And that there is none other reason to be yelded of his doings but only this: Quia ipse voluit: For he would. [d] For of that, that is nothing, he is able to make some thing: Quia de eo, quod nihil est, potest facere aliquid: [e] That he hath the right of both Swords, aswell of the Temporall, as of the Spirituall: That the Temporall Prince may not draw his Sword, but onely at his becke and sufferance: Ad nutum & Patientiam Ecclesiæ: [f] That he is Hæres Imperij, The heire apparent of the Empire, [g] and is seuen and fifty degrees greater than the Emperour: and that because in such proportion the Sunne is greater than the Moone: [h] That it is lawfull for him to depose Kings and Emperours: as he did the Emperour Henrie the sixth, and Childericus the French King.

Then he made the Emperour of Christendome to lie downe flat before him, and spared not to set his foot vpon his necke, adding withall these words of the Prophet Dauid: [i] Thou shalt walke ouer the aspe and the Cocatrice: [k] Then he was content that the Emperour should be called Procurator Ecclesiæ Romanæ: The Proctor or Steward of the Church of Rome: [l] Then as if he had beene Nabuchodonozor, or Alexander, or Antiochius, or Domician, he claimed vnto himselfe the name and title of Almighty God: and said further, That being God, he might not be iudged of any mortall man: [m] Then he suffereth men to say: Dominus Deus noster Papa: Our Lord God the Pope: [n] Tu es omnia, & super omnia: Thou art all, and aboue all. All power is giuen vnto thee as well in Heauen as in Earth. I leaue the miserable spoile of the Empire: the losing of sundry great Countries and Nations, that sometimes were Christened: the weakning of the Faith: the incouraging of the Turke: the ignorance and blindnesse of the people. These and other like be the effects of the Popes Vniuersall Power. Would to God he were indeed, that he would so faine be called, and would shew himselfe in his owne particular Church to be Christs Vicar, and the [o] Dispenser of Gods Mysteries. Then should godly men haue lesse cause to complaine against him. As now, although that he claimeth were his very right, yet by his owne iudgement he is worthy to lose it. [p] For Pope Gregory saith: Priuilegium meretur amittere, qui abutitur potestate: He that abuseth his authority is worthy to lose his priuiledge. And Pope Syluerius saith: [q] Etiam quod habuit, amittat, qui, quod non accepit, vsurpat: Hee that vsurpeth that hee receiued not, let him lose that he had.

Now briefly to lay abroad the whole Contents of this Article:

First, M. Harding hath wittingly alleged such testimonies vnder the names of Anacletus, Athanasius, and other holy Fathers, as he himselfe knoweth vndoubtedly to be forged, and with manifest absurdities and contradictions, do betray themselues, and haue no maner colour or shew of truth.

Dist. 99. Primæ Sedis. Sozo. li. 3. ca. 7. Concil. Aphric. Epist. ad Cælest. Gregor. li. 4. Epist. 34. 38. &c. Anno Domini, 602. De Maior. & Obedien. Vnam Sanctam. Ibidem in Glossa. 9. Quæst. 3. Nemo. Dist. 21. Inferior sedes. Esay 10. De Concessione Præbendæ, in Glossa. Extra. de Constitution. Licet. Durand. lib. 2. [a] De electio. & electi potestate. significasti. [b] Dist. 40. Si PP. [c] De translatio. Episcopi: Quanto in Glossa. [d] De Concessio. Præbendæ: Proposuit, In Glossa. [e] De Maior. & obedien. Vnam Sanctam. [f] Clem. de Appellationib. Pastoralis. [g] De Maior. & obedien. Solite in Glossa. [h] De Senten. & re iudicata. Ad Apostolicæ. [i] Psalm. 91. [k] Dist. 96. Si Imperator. In Glossa. [l] Dist. 96. Satis euidenter. [m] Iohan. 22. de verbor. signific. In Glossa. Cum Inter. [n] In 2. Sic decet. Concil. Lateranen. Sub Iulio. [o] 1. Corinth. 4. [p] 11. Quæst. 2. Priuilegium. [q] 25. Quæst.

2 He hath made his claime by certaine Canons of the Councel of Nice, and of the Councell of Chalcedon: and yet hée knoweth, that neither there are, nor neuer were any such Canons to be found.

3 He hath dismembred and mangled S. Gregories words, & contrary to his owne knowledge, he hath cut them off in the middest, the better to begule his Reader.

4 He hath violently, and perforce drawen, and rakt the Old godly Fathers, Irenæus, Cyprian, Ambrose, Cyrillus, Augustine, Theodoretus, Hierome and others, contrary to their owne sense and meaning.

5 Touching appeales to Rome, the gouernment of the East part of the world, Excommunications, Approbations of orders, allowance of Councels, Restitutions and Reconciliations, hée hath openly misreported the whole Vniuersall order and practise of the Church.

6 All this notwithstanding, he hath as yet found neither of these two glorious Titles, that he hath so narrowly sought for: notwithstanding great paines taken, and great promises, and vaunts made touching the same.

Therefore to conclude, I must subscribe, and rescribe, euen as before, That albeit M. Harding haue trauelled painfully herein, both by himselfe, and also with conference of his friends: Yet cannot he hitherto finde, neither in the Scriptures, nor in the old Councels, nor in any one of all the ancient Catholike Fathers, that the Bishop of Rome within the space of the first six hundred yéres after Christ, was euer intitled, either the Vniuersall Bishop, or the Head of the Vniuersall Church.

OF REALL PRESENCE.

THE FIFTH ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR that the people was then taught to beléeue, that Christs Body is Really, Substantially, Corporally, Carnally, or Naturally in the Sacrament.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuision.

(126) Christian people hath euer beene taught, that the Bodie and Blood of Iesus Christ by the vnspeakable working of the grace of God, and vertue of the holy Ghost is present in this most holy Sacrament, and that verily, and indeed. This doctrine is founded vpon the plaine words of Christ, which he vttered in the institution of this Sacrament, expressed by the Euangelists, and by S. Paul. As they were at Supper (saith Matthew) Iesus tooke bread and blessed it, and brake it, and gaue it to his Disciples and said: Take ye, Eate yee, This is my Bodie, And taking the Cup, he gaue thankes, and gaue it to them, saying: Drinke yee all of this: For this is my Blood of the New Testament, which shall be shed for many in remission of sinnes. With like words almost, Marke, Luke and Paul doe describe this diuine institution. Neither said our Lord onely, This is my Body; but lest some should doubt how his words are to be vnderstanded, for a plaine declaration of them, he addeth this further, which is giuen for you. Likewise of the Cup he saith not only, This is my Blood; but also, as it were to put it out of all doubt, Which shall be shed for many.

Matth. 26.

Mar. 14. Luc. 22. 1 Cor. 11. Luc. 22.

Now, as faithfull people do beleeue, that Christ gaue not a figure of his Body, but his owne true and verie Body in substance, and likewise not a figure of his Blood, but his verie pretious Blood it selfe at his Passion and death on the Crosse for our Redemption. so they beleeue also, that the words of institution of this Sacrament admit no other vnderstanding, but that hee giueth vnto vs in these holy Mysteries, his selfe same Body, and his selfe same Blood, in truth of substance, which was crucified and shed foorth for vs. Thus to the humble beleeuers, Scripture it selfe ministreth sufficient argument of the truth of Christs Bodie and Blood in the Sacrament, against the Sacramentaries, who hold opinion, that it is there but in a figure, signe, or token (128) onely.

The 126. vntruth. For M. Harding is not able to proue, that the people in the Primatue Church was thus taught.

The 127. vntruth. For this is no part of our Doctrine.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

I know not well, whether M. Harding doe this of purpose, or else it be his maner of writing. But this I see, that being demanded of one thing, he alwaies turneth his answer to another. The question is héere moued, Whether Christs Body be Really and Corporall in the Sacrament. His answer is: That Christs Body is ioined, and vnited, Really and Corporally vnto vs: And héerein hée bestoweth his whole treatie, and answereth not one word vnto the question.

In

Dissensiō and Contradiction of M. Hardings side.

In the former Articles he was able to allege some forged Authorities: some counterfet practise of the Church: some words of the ancient Doctours, although mistaken: some shew of naturall and worldly reason: or at the least wise, some colour or shift of words. But in this matter, for direct proufe he is able to allege nothing: no not so much as the helpe and drift of naturall Reason.

Where he saith, Christian people hath ever beene thus taught from the beginning, It is great marueil, that either they should be so taught, without a teacher: or their teacher should thus instruct them, without words; or such words should be spoken, and neuer written. Verily M. Harding by his silence, and want herein, secretly confesseth, that these words, Really, Carnally, &c. in this matter of the Sacrament, were neuer vsed of any Ancient Writer: For if they were, either he, or his fellowes would haue found them.

But Christ saith, This is my Body: This is my Blood: And to put the matter out of doubt, he addeth, Which is giuen for you: which shall be shed for you. Hereupon M. Harding foundeth his Carnall Presence: notwithstanding Christ himselfe vseth not any of these words, nor any other word leading thereunto. And doctor Fisher, sometime Bishop of Rochester, a famous man of M. Hardings side, saith erpresly, that this sense cannot in any wise be gathered of the bare words of Christ. For thus he writeth: Hactenus Matthæus: qui & solus Testamenti Nouimeminit. Neque vllum hic verbum positum est, quo probetur, in nostra Missa veram fieri Carnis, & sanguinis Christi præsentiam: Hitherto S. Matthew: who onely maketh mention of the New Testament. Neither are there any words heere written, whereby it may be prooued, that in our Masse is made the very presence of the Bodie and Blood of Christ. And further he auoucheth it thus: Non potest igitur per vllam Scripturam probari: Therefore it cannot be prooued by any Scripture: Here we se great varietie of iudgement in M. Hardings owne side, and that in matters of greatest weight. M. Harding thinketh his Carnall Presence is proued sufficiently by these words of Christ, This is my Body: Doctor Fisher contrariwise saith: It cannot be prooued, neither by these words of the Scripture, nor by any other. And yet it was euer thought, M. Fisher was as learned in euery respect as M. Harding.

Io. Fisherus contra Captiuita. Babylonicam. N. 8. & 9.

And, albeit M. Harding lay such hold vpon these words of Christ, as if they were so plaine, yet others of his friends, by their diuerse and sundry constructions touching the same, haue made them somewhat darke and doubtfull, and cannot yet throughly agree vpon them. Some of them say: Christs Naturall Bodie is in the Sacrament, howbeit, not Naturally: Some others say: It is there both Naturally, and also Sensibly: Some of them say precisely: Neuer man vsed either of these two termes, Naturally, or Sensibly in this case of Christs Presence in the Sacrament. Yet others of them put the matter out of doubt, and say, Christ is there present Naturally: And in the Councell holden in Rome vnder Pope Nicolas the second it was determined, and Berengarius forced to subscribe, That Christ is in the Sacrament Sensibly; or, as they then grossely vttered it in Latine, Sensualiter: Some of them say, Christs Body is not diuided, or broken in the Sacrament, but only the Accidents. But pope Nicolas, with his whole Councell saith, Christs Body it selfe is touched with fingers, and diuided, and broken, and rent with teeth, and not onely the Accidents. Thus to leaue other moe contrarieties, it is plaine hereby, that the best learned of that side are not yet fully agreed vpon the sense of Christs words: notwithstanding their suters and well-willers are otherwise perswaded of them. And doth M. Harding beleeue, that Christian people were thorowly resolued herein, when their Doctours and Teachers were not resolued: or that the Scholars were better instructed than their Masters?

D. Smyth De Eucharist. Stephan. Gardinerus. D. Smyth. Ste. Gardiner in the Diuels Sophistry fol. 6. De Con. dist. 2. Ego Berengar. Ste. Gardiner in the Diuels Sophistry. fo. 15 Ego Berengar. Manibus tractari, frangi: dentibus atteri.

Now, if this Article cannot be proued, neither by any words of the Scriptures, as doctor Fisher saith, & as it further appeareth by the dissension of the Teachers; nor by any one of all the old Doctors, and fathers, as M. Harding granteth by his silence: then may godly and Catholique Christian people wel stay their iudgements, and stand in doubt of this Carnall and Fleshly Presence. Indeed the question betweene vs this day, is not of the Letters or Syllables of Christs Words: for they are knowen and confessed of either partie: but onely of the Sense and Meaning of his words: which, as S. Hierome saith, is the very pith and substance of the Scriptures. And the law it selfe saith: In fraudem Legis facit, qui saluis verbis Legis, Sententiam eius circumuenit: Hee committeth fraude against the Lawes, that, sauing the words of the Law, ouerthroweth the meaning. And S. Augustine seemeth herein to finde fault with certaine in his time. His words be these: Cum in vnam partem procliuiter ire cœperint, non respiciunt Diuinæ authoritatis alia testimonia, quibus possint ab illa intentione reuocari, & in ea, quæ ex vtrisque temperata est, Veritate, ac moderatione consistere: When they once beginne to runne headlong of one side, they neuer consider other testimonies of Diuine authoritie, whereby they might be withdrawen from their purpose, and so might rest in that Truth and measure that is tempered and tuned of both. If it be Hieron. ad Galat cap. 1. Pan. de Leg & Senatusc on. & longa consuet. Contra Legem. August. de fide & operib, ca. 4.

true

true that M. Harding ſaith, That this is the only ſenſe and meaning of Chriſts wordes, That his Bodie is in ſuch groſſe ſort Really and fleſhly in the Sacrament, and that vnleſſe Chriſt meane ſo, he meaneth nothing: it is great wonder, that none of the Ancient Catholique Doctors of the Church, no not one, could euer ſée it: or if they ſaw it, yet, being ſo eloquent, lacked wordes, and were neuer able to expreſſe it.

Figure.

But he ſaith, It is no bare Figure, as the Sacramentaries hold opinion, And therefore he thinketh he may conclude, that Chriſts Body is Really preſent. So might hée alſo ſay, The Sacrament of Baptiſme is no Bare Figure, Therefore Chriſt is therein Really preſent. Certainly S. Auguſtine ſpeaking of the Rocke in the wilderneſſe, writeth thus: Hinc eſt, quod dictum eſt, Petra erat Chriſtus. Non enim dixit, Petra ſignificat Chriſtum, ſed tanquam hoc eſſet: quod vtique per Subſtantiam non hoc erat, ſed per Significationem: Therefore it is written, The Rocke was Chriſt. For S. Paul ſaith not, The Rocke ſignified Chriſt, but as though it had beene Chriſt indeed: whereas it was not Chriſt in Subſtance, but by way of Signification, or by a Figure. S. Paul ſaith not, The Rocke was a Figure of Chriſt, but the Rocke was Chriſt. And S. Baſile in the like ſort ſaith: Chriſtus re vera Petra eſt immobilis, & inconcuſſa: Chriſt indeed is the ſure and the firme Rocke. Yet I trow M. Harding will not therefore ſay, Chriſt was Really or Carnally in the Rocke.

Auguſt. Super Leuiticum quæſt. 57.

1. Corint. 10.

Baſil. De Pœnitentia.

Neither can I thinke M. Harding is ſuch a deadly enemie vnto Figures, as hée would now ſeeme to be. For he himſelfe in theſe few wordes of Chriſt, touching the Inſtitution of this holy Sacrament, as it ſhall be ſhewed hereafter more at large, is faine to ſeeke help of ſixteene or moe ſundry Figures: and the ſame ſo ſtrange, ſo groſſe, and ſo inſenſible that neither S. Auguſtine, nor S. Hierome, nor any other old Diuine euer knew them, nor any good Grammarian would allow them. So many, and ſuch figures, it is lawfull for him to deuiſe and vſe, to maintaine the Falſhood. But for vs, in defence of the Truth, it may not be lawfull to vſe one.

Verily the old Catholique Fathers were neuer ſo curious in this behalfe, nor thought it ſuch Hereſie, to expound Chriſts wordes by a Figure. Briefly for a taſte hereof, S. Auguſtine ſaith, Chriſtus adhibuit Iudam ad Conuiuium, in quo, Corporis & Sanguinis ſui Figuram Diſcipulis ſuis commendauit, & tradidit: Chriſt receiued Iudas to his banket, wherein hee gaue vnto his Diſciples the Figure of his Bodie and Blood. Likewiſe Tertullian ſaith: Chriſtus acceptum Panem, & diſtributum Diſcipulis, Corpus ſuum illum fecit, Dicendo hoc eſt Corpus meum, hoc eſt, Figura Corporis mei: Chriſt receiuing the Bread, and the ſame being diuided vnto his Diſciples, made it his Body: ſaying, This is my Body, that is to ſay, The figure of my Body. S. Ambroſe ſaith: Antè Benedictionem verborum Cæleſtium alia ſpecies nominatur: poſt Conſecrationem Corpus Chriſti Significatur: Before the Bleſſing of the Heauenly Words, it is called another kinde: after the Conſecration, the Body of Chriſt is Signified. Here I muſt proteſt, That as M. Harding is troubled with want of witneſſe in this caſe, ſo am I oppreſſed with multitude. If I ſhould allege all the reſt of the Ancient Godly Fathers that write the like, I ſhould be ouer tedious to the Reader. And another place hereafter following, will ſerue more aptly to this purpoſe. But by the way gentle Reader, I muſt giue thee to vnderſtand, that S. Auguſtine hereof writeth thus: Ea demum eſt miſerabilis Animæ ſeruitus, Signa pro rebus accipere: & ſupra creaturã corpoream, oculum mentis ad hauriẽdum æternum lumen leuare non poſſe: Indeed this is a miſerable bondage of the Soule, to take the Signes in the ſtead of things that be ſignified: and not to haue power, to lift vp the eie of the minde aboue the bodily creature, to receiue the light that is euerlaſting. And againe: In principio cauendum eſt, ne Figuratam locutionem ad Literam accipias. Et ad hoc enim pertinet, quod ait Apoſtolus, Litera occidit: Spiritus autem viuificat. Cum enim Figuratè dictum ſic accipitur, tanquam propriè dictum ſit, carnaliter ſapitur. Neque vlla mors animæ congruentiùs appellatur: Firſt of all, thou muſt beware that thou take not a Figuratiue ſpeech according to the Letter. For therevnto alſo it appertaineth that the Apoſtle ſaith: The Letter killeth, the Spirit giueth life. For when the thing that is ſpoken in a figure, is ſo taken, as if it were plainly ſpoken (without Figure) there is fleſhly vnderſtanding: neither is there any death more fitly called, the death of the Soule. By theſe wordes good Reader, S. Auguſtine ſtirreth vp thy ſenſes, to conſider well what thou doeſt, leſt perhaps thou be deceiued.

Auguſtin. in Pſalmum 3.

Tertull. contra Marcion. li. 4.

Ambroſ. de illis qui initiantur Myſteriis. Cap. vltimo.

Auguſt. de Doctrina Chriſtiana. li. 3. cap. 5. The Bondage of the Soule.

Ibidem.

The Death of the Soule.

And whereas M. Harding thus vniuſtly reporteth of vs, That we maintaine a naked Figure, and a bare Signe, or Token only, and nothing elſe: If he be of God, he knoweth well, he ſhould not thus beſtow his tongue, or hand, to beare falſe witneſſe. It is written, God will deſtroy them all that ſpeake vntruth. He knoweth well, we feed not the people of God with bare Signes and Figures: but teach them, that the Sacraments of Chriſt be holy Myſteries, and that in the miniſtration thereof, Chriſt is ſet before vs, euen as he was crucified vpon the Croſſe: and that therein we may behold the Remiſſion of our ſins, and our Reconciliation vnto God: and as Chryſoſtome briefly ſaith: Chriſts great Benefit, and our Salvation.

Deuteron. 5. Exod. 22. Pſalm. 5. Galat. 3. Roman. 5.

Chryſoſt. ad populũ Antioch. Homil. 60.

Figure.

Epheſ. 5.
1. Iohan .4.

uation. Herein we teach the people, not that a naked Signe, or token, but that Chriſts Body and Blood indeed, and verily, is giuen vnto vs: that we verily eat it: that we verily drinke it: that we verily be relæued and liue by it: that we are Bones of his Bones, and Fleſh of his Fleſh: that Chriſt dwelleth in vs, and we in him. Yet we ſay not, either that the Subſtance of the Bread or Wine is done away: or that Chriſts Body is let downe from Heauen, or made Really, or Fleſhly preſent in the Sacrament. We are taught, according to the Doctrine of the old Fathers, to lift vp our hearts to Heauen, and there to feed vpon the Lambe of God. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Ad alta contendat oportet, quiad hoc Corpus accedit: Whoſo will reach to that Body, muſt mount on high. S. Auguſtine likewiſe ſaith: Quomodo tenebo abſentem? Quomodo in Cœlum manum mittam, vt ibi ſedentem teneam? Fidem mitte, & tenuiſti: How ſhall I take hold of him being abſent? How ſhall I reach vp my hand into Heauen, and hold him ſitting there? Send vp thy Faith, and thou haſt taken him. Thus ſpiritually, and with the mouth of our faith we eat the Body of Chriſt and drinke his Blood, euen as verily, as his Body was Verily broken, and his Blood Verily ſhed vpon the Croſſe. And thus S. Auguſtine, and S. Chryſoſtome, and other holie Fathers taught the people in their time to beleeue. Indeed the Bread that we receiue with our bodily mouths, is an earthly thing, and therefore a Figure: as the water in Baptiſme is likewiſe alſo a Figure: But the Body of Chriſt, that thereby is repreſented, and there is offered vnto our Faith, is the thing it ſelfe, and no Figure. And in reſpect of the glorie thereof, we haue no regard vnto the Figure. Therefore S. Bernard alluding to the ſame, ſaith thus: Annulus non valet quicquam: hæreditas eſt, quam quærebam: The ſealing-ring is nothing worth: it is the inheritance that I ſought for.

Surſum corda.
Chryſoſt. in 1. Cori. 10. ho. 24.
Auguſt. in Iohan. tractat. 50.

Bernard. De Cœna Domini.

1 To conclude, three things herein we muſt conſider: Firſt, that we put a difference betweene the Signe, and the thing it ſelfe that is ſignified.

2 Secondly, that we ſeeke Chriſt aboue in Heauen, and imagine not him to be preſent bodily vpon the Earth.

3 Thirdly, that the Bodie of Chriſt is to be eaten by Faith only, and none otherwiſe.

And in this laſt point appeareth a notable difference betweene vs, and M. Harding: For we place Chriſt in the heart, according to the Doctrine of S. Paul: M. Harding placeth him in the mouth. We ſay, Chriſt is eaten only by Faith: M. Harding ſaith, He is eaten with the mouth, and teeth. But Gods name be bleſſed: a great number of godly people doth already perceiue the vncomfortable, and vnſauory vanitie of this Doctrine. For they haue learned of S. Cyprian, that Chriſts bleſſed Bodie is Cibus mentis, non ventris: Meat for the minde, not for the belly: And they haue heard S. Auguſtine ſay: Quid paras dentem, & ventrem? Crede, & manducaſti; What prepareſt thou thy tooth, and thy belly? Beleeue, and thou haſt already eaten.

Epheſ. 3.

Now conſider thou good Chriſtian Reader, with thy ſelfe, whether it be better to vſe this word, Figure, which word hath beene often vſed of Tertullian, S. Auguſtine, and al the reſt of the Ancient Fathers, without controlment: or elſe theſe new fangled words, Really, Corporally, Carnally, &c. Which words M. Harding is not able to ſhew, that in this caſe of being Really in the Sacrament, any one of all the Old Fathers euer vſed.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

The 128. vntruth, ioined with dangerous Doctrine.

Againe (128) we cannot finde, where our Lord performed the promiſe he had made in the 6. chapter of Iohn: The Bread which I will giue, is my Fleſh, which I will giue for the life of the world: but only in his laſt Supper. Where, if he gaue his Fleſh to his Apoſtles, and that none other, but the very ſame, which he gaue for the life of the world: it followeth, that in the bleſſed Sacrament is not meere Bread, but that ſame his very Body in ſubſtance. For it was not meere Bread, but his very Bodie that was giuen and offered vp vpon the Croſſe.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

This Principle is not onely falſe in it ſelfe, but alſo full of dangerous Doctrine, and may ſone leade to Deſperation. For if no man may eat the Fleſh of Chriſt, but only in the Sacrament, as here by M. Harding it is ſuppoſed; then all Chriſtian Children, and all others whoſoeuer, that depart this life without receiuing the Sacrament, muſt needs be damned, and die the Children of Gods anger. For Chriſts words be plaine and generall: Vnleſſe yee eat the Fleſh of the Sonne of Man, ye ſhall haue no life in you. Whereunto we may adde this Minor: Chriſtian Children receiue not the Sacrament; and therefore by M. Hardings iudgement, eat not the Fleſh of the Sonne of Man: Hereof it muſt needs follow, That Chriſtian Children haue no life in them, but are the Children of Damnation. This is the Concluſion of M. Hardings Doctrine. But little care theſe men, who, or how many periſh, ſo their fantaſies may ſtand vpright. But our Doctrine grounded vpon Gods holy

Iohan. 6.

Word,

Word, is this, That as certainly as Christ gaue his Body vpon the Crosse, so certainly he giueth now the selfe same Bodie vnto the Faithfull: and that, not onely in the Ministration of the Sacrament, as M. Harding vntruly imagineth, but also at all times, whensoeuer we be able to say with S. Paul, I thinke I know nothing, but Iesus Christ, and the same Christ crucified vpon the Crosse. Therefore S. Ambrose writeth thus: Quid petis O Iudæe? vt tibi auferat tibi Panem, quem dat omnibus, dat quotidie, dat semper? O thou Iew, what desirest thou? That Christ should giue thee Bread? He giueth it to all men: he giueth it daily: he giueth it at all times. If it be true that S. Ambrose saith, that Christ giueth that Bread, which is his Bodie, at all times, then is it false that M. Harding saith, that Christ performeth his promise, and giueth his Bodie onely at the Ministration of the Sacrament. and therefore S. Augustine saith, Non tantùm in Sacramento, sed etiam re ipsa comedunt Corpus Christi: They eat Christs Bodie, not onely in the Sacrament, but also in very deed. Heere S. Augustine saith, contrary to M. Hardinge Doctrine, that wee eat Christs Bodie, not onely in the Sacrament, but also otherwise: yea, and so farre he forceth this difference, that he maketh the eating of Christs Bodie in the Sacrament, to be one thing, and the very true eating thereof indeed to be an other thing. Againe, touching the Fathers of the Old law, he saith, that Abraham, Moses, Aaron, and others receiued the Body of Christ truly and effectually, long time before that Christ, either had receiued Flesh of the Blessed Virgin, or had ordained the Sacrament: and that euen the selfe same Bodie, that is receiued now of the Faithfull. To be short, of Christian Children, and other Faithfull that neuer receiued the Sacrament, he writeth thus: Nulli est aliquatenus ambigendum, tunc vnumquemq; Fidelium Corporis Saguinisq; Domini participem fieri, quando in Baptismate efficitur Membrum Christi, &c. No man may in any wise doubt, but that euery faithfull man is then made partaker of the Body and Blood of Christ, when in Baptisme he is made a Member of Christ: and that he is not without the fellowship of that Bread, and of that Cup, although before hee eat of that Bread, and drinke of that Cup, hee depart this world, being in the Vnitie of Christs Bodie. For he is not made frustrate of the Communion, and benefit of that Sacrament, while hee findeth that thing which is signified by the Sacrament. So farre S. Augustine. By these wee may see, It is not all true, that M. Harding so constantly auoucheth. If it might haue pleased him to take aduice of Beda, S. Augustine, S. Ambrose, and other godly Fathers, he should some haue found, that the Faithfull may otherwise eat Christs Body, and that verily, and indeed: and not onely in the Sacrament.

Figure. 1. Corinth. 2.

Ambros. in Psalm. 118. Serm. 18.

August. de Ciuitat. lib. 21. ca. 20. Non solùm.

August. de Vtilitate pœnitentiæ, ca. 1. Manducauerunt eundem cibum quem nos. Augustin. in Sermone ad infantes. Citatur à Beda. 1. Cor. 10. Quando ipse hoc, quod illud Sacramentum significat, inuenit.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuision.

If the words spoken by Christ in S. Iohn of promise, that hee performed in his holy Supper, The Bread that I will giue is my Flesh, had beene to be taken, not as they seeme to meane, plainly and truly, but Metaphorically, Tropically, Symbolically, and Figuratiuely, so as the truth of our Lords Flesh be excluded, (129) as our Aduersaries do vnderstand them, then the Capernaites had not any occasion at all of their great offence. Then should not they haue had cause to murmure against Christ, as the Euangelist theweth: Cap 6. The Iewes (saith S. Iohn) stroue among themselues, saying, How can he giue vs his Fleth to eat? And much lesse his deare Disciples, to whom he had shewed so many and so great miracles, to whom he had before declared so many parables, and so high secrets, should haue had any occasion of offence. And doubtlesse, if Christ had meant they should eat but the signe or figure of his Bodie, they would not haue said, Durus est hic Sermo, This is a hard saying, and who can abide to heare it? For then should they haue done no greater thing, than they had done often times before in eating the Easter Lambe. And how could it seeme a hard word or saying, if Christ had meant nothing else but this; The Bread that I will giue, is a Figure of my Bodie, that shall cause you to remember me?

The 129. vntruth, ioyned with vntrue report. For we vnderstand these words of Christs very Flesh and Blood.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

This reason holdeth onely of the ignorance of the Capernaites, and hangeth thus: The Capernaites mistooke Christs words, and vnderstood not what he meant: Ergo, Christs Bodie is Really and Carnally in the Sacrament. And thus M. Harding, as his maner is, buildeth one errour vpon another.

For vnderstanding hereof, it shall be necessary, first, to open the verie sense, and meaning of Christs words: Next, to shew how peruerstly and grosly the Capernaites were deceiued: and last of all, to consider M. Hardings conclusion.

First of all, the Iewes desired Christ to giue them Bread in the Wildernes, as Moses had giuen before vnto their Fathers. Christ to pull them from the grosse and materiall cogitations of their bellies, promised them another kind of Bread, that should be spirituall, and last for euer. Thus he said vnto them: My Father giueth you true Bread from Heauen. Whoso eateth of this Bread shall liue for euer. And that they might vnderstand what hee meant, hee saith further: I am the Bread that came from Heauen. The Bread that I will giue you, is my Flesh, which I shall giue for the life of the world. Thus he spake of the spiritnall eating and digesting of his Flesh in the hearts of the Faithfull. And so immediatly after hee opened

Iohn. 6.

Spirituall eating.

opened his owne minde. For when he ſaw the Iewes, for that they vnderſtood him not, were offended, he ſaid further vnto them, It is the ſpirit that giueth life: the Fleſh profiteth nothing. The words that I ſpeake, are ſpirit and life. Which words S. Auguſtine in plaine ſort expounndeth thus: Spiritualiter intelligite, quod locutus ſum. Non hoc Corpus, quod videtis, manducaturi eſtis, & bibituri illum Sanguinem, quem fuſuri ſunt, qui me Crucifigent. Sacramentum aliquod vobis commendaui: Spiritualiter intellectum viuificat vos. Vnderſtand ye ſpiritually that I haue ſpoken. Ye ſhall not eate (with your bodily mouth) this Body that you ſee: nor ſhall ye (with your bodily mouth) drinke that Blood which they ſhall ſhead, that ſhall Crucifie mee. I giue you a certaine Sacrament. The ſame being ſpiritually vnderſtanded giueth you life. So ſaith S. Baſil, Guſtate, & videte, quoniam ſuauis eſt Dominus: Taſte ye, and ſee, that the Lord is gratious. And further he ſaith: We haue often times marked (in the Scriptures) that the inward powers of the minde, haue their names of the outward members of the Body. Therefore, foraſmuch as our Lord is the true Bread, and his Fleſh the true Food, it muſt needs be, that the delectation and pleaſure of the ſame, be mooued and cauſed within vs, by a ſpirituall kinde of taſte. Againe he ſaith, Further we ſay, that there is a certaine Spirituall mouth of the inner man, wherewith he is fed, receiuing the Word of life, which is the Bread that came from Heauen. Likewiſe ſaith S. Auguſtine, Fides habet oculos ſuos: Faith hath eies of her owne to ſee withall. Againe, Intus bibendo fælix ſum: Happy am I when I drinke (in my heart) within. And againe, Panis iſte interioris hominis quærit eſuriem: This Bread ſeeketh the hunger of the inner man. So ſaith Leo, Circa hoc Corpus Aquilæ ſunt, quæ alis circumuolant ſpiritualibus: About this body be Eagles, that flee about it with ſpirituall wings. So likewiſe Origen, Idcirco & verum lumen dicitur, vt habeant oculi animæ, quo illuminentur: Idcirco & verbum, vt habeant aures, quod audiant: & idcirco Panis vitæ, vt habeat guſtus animæ, quod deguſtet: Therefore is Chriſt called the Light, that the eies of the Soule may haue whereby they may be lightned: Therefore hee is called the Word, that the eares of the ſoule may haue what to heare: and therefore he is called the Bread of life, that the ſenſe of the ſoule may haue what to taſte. So Tertullian, Auditu deuorandus eſt, intellectu ruminandus, & Fide digerendus: Chriſt by hearing muſt be deuoured: by vnderſtanding muſt be chewed: and by Faith muſt be digeſted. In like ſort Chryſoſtome, Magnus iſte Panis, qui replet mentem, non ventrem: This is that great Bread, that feedeth not the belly, but the minde. Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith: Chriſtus dixit, ſe eſſe Panem, qui de Cœlo deſcendit, hortans vt credamus in ipſum. Credere enim in eum, hoc eſt manducare Panem viuum: Chriſt named himſelfe the Bread that came from Heauen, exhorting vs to beleeue in him. For beleeuing in him, is the eating of the Bread of life.

Auguſt. in Pſalm. 98.

Baſil. in Pſal. 33.

ἀναγκη τὸν νοῦν τῇ ἀῤῥ διὰ γεύσεως ἡμῶν νοητῆς ἐγγίνεσθ. ἐστὶ μέν τι καὶ νοητὸν στόμα τῦ ἔνδον ἀνθρώπε.

Aug. epiſt. 95.

Auguſt. in Ioan. tractat. 26.

Ibidem.

De conſecratione. Diſt. 2. In quibus.

Origen. in Cantic. Cantic. hom. 2.

Tertul. de Reſurrect. carnis.

Chryſoſt. ex. varijs locis in Matth. hom. 9.

Auguſt. in Ioan. tractat. 26.

Hereby it is plaine, that Chriſts meaning is ſpirituall, as Chriſt himſelfe, and all the Old Fathers and Doctors of the Church haue expounded it: not Reall, Carnall, Groſſe and Fleſhly, as M. Harding imagineth. M. Harding will ſay, That the Eating with the mouth, and the grinding with the teeth, is a worke Spirituall. By this ſenſe he is a good Proctor for the Capernaites, and muſt néds ſay, that they had a Spirituall vnderſtanding. Howbeit Chryſoſtome will not well ſuffer this euaſion. His words be plaine: Quid eſt Carnaliter inteligere? Simpliciter, vt res dicunter: neque aliud quippiam cogitare. What is it to vnderſtand Carnally? It is to vnderſtand plainely, euen as the things be vttered: and to thinke vpon nothing elſe. Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, Figura eſt, Præcipiens Paſſioni Domini communicandum eſſe, & ſuauiter atque vtiliter recondendum in memoria, quòd Chriſtus pro nobis mortuus ſit: The ſaying of Chriſt, touching the eating of his Fleſh, is a Figure, or maner of ſpeech, commanding vs to be partakers of Chriſts Paſſion, and with comfort and profit to lay vp in our memorie, that Chriſt hath ſuffered death for vs. This therefore was Chriſts meaning, and this is the very Eating of his Fleſh.

Chryſoſtom. in Iohan. hom. 46.

Auguſt. de Doctrina Chriſtiana, li. 3. ca. 16

Origen. in Prolog. in Cantic. Canticorum.

Now let vs ſee what ſenſe the Capernaites gathered hereof. Origen ſaith: Accidit, vt ſimpliciores neſcientes diſtinguere, quæ ſint, quæ in Scripturis Diuinis interiori homini, quæ exteriori deputanda ſint, vocabulorum ſimilitudinibus falſi, ad ineptas quaſdam fabulas, & figmenta inania ſe contulerint: It hapneth ſometime, that ſimple men, being not able to put difference betweene thoſe things in the Scriptures that pertaine to the inner man, and thoſe things that pertaine to the outer man, are deceiued by the likeneſſe of words, and ſo fall into fooliſh fables and vaine fantaſies. So ſaith S. Hierome: Cum Seniores putentur in Eccleſia, & Principes Sacerdotum, Simplicem ſequendo Literam, occidunt Filium Dei: Whereas they are taken for the Elders in the Church, and the Chiefe of the Prieſts, by following the Plaine Letter, they kill the Sonne of God. Euen thus it hapned vnto the Capernaites: that Chriſt ſpake Spiritually of eating with Faith, they vnderſtood groſſely of eating with the téth: as though they ſhould ſwallow downe his Fleſh into their bodies, as other meates: euen in ſuch groſſe ſort as M. Harding would now teach the people to eat Chriſts Body.

Hieronym. li. 3. in Matt. ca. 16

Auguſt. in Iohan. tractat 11.

Tertul. De Reſurrect. carnis.

Tertullian openeth their errour in this wiſe: Durum, & intolerabilem exiſtimarunt ſermonem monem eius : quasi verè carnem suam illis edendam determinasset : They thought his speech was hard and intolerable : as though he had determined to giue them his Flesh verily, and indeed to be eaten (with their mouthes.) Therein, saith Tertullian, stood their errour. Now, to consider M. Hardings ghesses : first hee saith : The Capernaits were offended with Christs words : Ergo, It is likely, Christ meant, hee would giue his Body Really and Carnally in the Sacrament. First, Nicolas Lyra, M. Hardings owne Doctour, saith, That these words of Christ in the sixth of Iohn, pertaine not vnto the Sacrament. Againe, it is but a simple ghesse, to build Religion vpon an Errour. He might rather say thus : The Capernaits thought they should eat Christs Flesh Really, and Fleshly with their mouthes : but that was not Christs meaning, as it well appeareth, for they were deceiued : Ergo, Christ meant not, they should eat his Flesh, Really and Fleshly, with their mouthes. Nicol. Lyra in Psalm.110.

He addeth further : If Christ had meant, he would giue them only a Figure of his Bodie in his remembrance, there had beene no cause, why either the Capernaits or any other should be offended. Neither doe we say, that Christ in the sixth Chapter of Iohn, speaking of the Spirituall eating by Faith, made mention of any Figure, but onely of his very Flesh, and very Blood, indeed, and verily to be eaten and drunken. Notwithstanding we say, that Christ afterward in his last Supper, vnto the same Spirituall Eating, added also an outward Sacrament, which of the Old Fathers is often times, and commonly called a Figure. But hereof groweth M. Hardings errour, for that, as Origen saith, Hee putteth no difference betweene the Body and the Spirit : and things seuerally pertaining to them both. The Bread is a Figure, but Christs Body is the thing it selfe, and no Figure. The Bread is in the Earth : Christs Body is in Heauen. The Bread is subiect to corruption : Christs Bodie is Immortall, and Glorious, and subiect to no Corruption. Therefore Rabanus Maurus saith : Sacramentum ore percipitur : virtute Sacramenti interior homo satiatur. Sacramentum in alimentum Corporis redigitur : virtute Sacramenti æternam vitam adipiscimur : The Sacrament is receiued with the mouth : by the vertue of the Sacrament the Inner man is repaired. The Sacrament is turned into the nourishing of the Body : by the vertue of the Sacrament we get euerlasting life. And S. Augustine saith : Sacramentum de Mensa Dominica sumitur, quibusdam ad vitam, quibusdam ad exitium : Res verò ipsa, cuius Sacramentum est, omni homini ad vitam, nulli ad exitium, quicunque eius particeps fuerit : The Sacrament is receiued from the Lords Table, of some vnto life, of some vnto destruction. But the thing it selfe whereof it is a Sacrament (that is, the Body of Christ) is receiued of euery man vnto life, and of no man vnto destruction, whosoeuer be partaker of it. Origen. in Prologo in Cantica Canticorum. Raban. Maurus li. 1. ca. 31. August. in Iohan. Tract. 26.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuision.

To conclude shortly : If Christ would so haue beene vnderstanded, as though he had meant to giue but a Figure only of his Bodie, it had beene no need for him to haue alleged his Omnipotencie and Almightie power to his Disciples, thereby the rather to bring them to beleefe of his true Bodie to bee giuen them to eat. Hoc vos scandalizat ? Doth this offend you ? saith he. What if you see the Sonne of man ascend where he was before ? It is the spirit that giueth life, &c. As though he had said : Yee consider only my humanitie, that seemeth weake and fraile, neither doe you esteeme my diuine power by the great miracles I haue wrought : But when as ye shall see me by power of my Godhead ascend into Heauen, from whence I came vnto you, will you then also stand in doubt whether yee may beleeue, that I giue you my very Bodie to be eaten ? Thus by signifying his diuine power, Christ confounded their vnbeleefe, touching the veritie and substance of his Body, that he promised to giue them in meat. A simple proofe. For Christ likewise sheweth his Omnipotent power in the water of Baptisme.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding wandreth still about his Figures, and out of Gods Omnipotent Power, deuiseth a very feeble Argument. For thus he reasoneth :

Christ maketh mention of his Ascension into Heauen :
Ergo, His Body is Really in the Sacrament.

He hath no iust cause to be offended, for that I lay his Logicke thus abroad. It behoueth the Reader to see, by what force each thing is proued. Verily, if he conclude not thus, he ranneth at riot, and concludeth nothing. August. in Iohan. Tract. 27.

As touching Christs Ascension into Heauen, S. Augustine and other ancient Fathers seeme to vse the same, to proue, That there is no such grosse presence in the Sacrament. S. Augustine thereof writeth thus : Si ergo videritis Filium hominis ascendentem, &c. If you shall see the Sonne of man ascending vp, where he was before, &c. And what is this ? Heereby he openeth that thing, wherewith they were offended. For they thought, he would giue them his Body : But hee told them, that he would ascend into Heauen, and that whole as hee was. When yee shall see the Sonne of man ascend thither, where he was before, then shall you see, that he giueth not his Body in such sort, as you imagine : then shall you perceiue, that his Grace is not consumed or wasted by morsels. Illi enim putabam eum erogaturum corpus suum. Certè vel tunc intelligetis, quòd Gratia eius non consumitur morsibus Chrysost. in 1. Cor. 10. ho-

S. Chrysostome saith, as it is before alleged : Ad alta oportet eum contendere, qui ad hoc hoc Corpus accedit. Aquilarum, non Graculorum, eſt hæc Menſa: He muſt mount on high, that will come to this Bodie. For this Table ſerueth for Eagles, and not for Iaies. So ſaith Saint Hierome: Aſcendamus cum Domino in Cœnaculum, magnum, ſtratum, & mundatum: & accipiamus ab eo Surſum Calicem Noui Teſtamenti: Let vs goe vp with the Lord (into Heauen) into that great Parlar ſpread, and cleane: and let vs receiue of him aboue the Cup of the New Teſtament. The like might be alleged of other mee Catholike and ancient Fathers. For Cyrillus ſaith in moſt plaine wordes: Sacramentum noſtrum Hominis manducationem non aſſerit, mentes credentium ad craſſas cogitationes irreligioſè inducens: Our Sacrament auoucheth not the eating of a Man, leading the mindes of the Faithfull in vngodly maner to groſſe (or fleſhly) cogitations.

Hieronym. ad Hedibiam quæ. 2.

Cyril. ad obiection. Theodor. Anathem. 11. Ἀνέφικτα.

Doubtleſſe it ſeemeth to make very ſimple proofes of M. Hardings ſide, to ſay thus:

Chriſts Body is aſcended into Heauen:

Ergo, The ſame Body is Really and Fleſhly in the Sacrament.

But M. Harding will ſay, Chriſt ſpeaking to the Capernaits, made mention of his Omnipotent power: therefore in the Sacrament there muſt néds be a Fleſhly Preſence. Firſt, as it is before alleged, Nicolas Lyra ſaith: Chriſts words to the Capernaits pertaine nothing to the Sacrament, but onely vnto the Spirituall eating of Chriſts Body, which indeed is the Omnipotent Worke of the Spirit of God.

Nicol. Lyra in Pſalm. 110.

And againe, would M. Harding make all the World beléeue, if Chriſts Bodie be not fleſhly and groſſely in the Sacrament, according to his fantaſie, that then God therefore is not Omnipotent? Verily, the old Catholike Fathers acknowledge Gods Omnipotencie in the Water of Baptiſme: yet is not Chriſt therefore Really preſent in the water. S. Chryſoſt. me ſaith: Cùm Baptizatis, Sacerdos te non Baptizat: Sed Deus eſt, qui Caput tuum Inuiſibili potentia continet: & nec Angelus, nec Archangelus, nec vllus alius auder accedere, & tangere: When thou art Baptized, it is not the Prieſt that dippeth thee: but it is God, that by his inuiſible power holdeth thy head: and neither Angell, nor Archangell, nor any other power dareth to approch and touch thee. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Paulus Baptizauit tanquam Miniſter: Dominus Baptizauit tanquam poteſtas: Paul Baptized as a Seruant: The Lord Baptized as the power it ſelfe. Againe: Nec iam Baptizare ceſſauit Dominus: ſed adhuc id agit: Non miniſterio Corporis, ſed Inuiſibili opere Maieſtatis: The Lord letteth not yet to Baptize: but continueth Baptizing ſtill: not by the Miniſterie of his Bodie, but by the Inuiſible worke of his Maieſtie. So likewiſe ſaith Leo the Biſhop of Rome: Chriſtus dedit Aquæ, quod dedit Matri. Virtus enim Altiſſimi, & obumbratio Spiritus Sancti, quæ fecit vt Maria pareret Saluatorem; eadem facit, vt Regeneret Vnda Credentem: Chriſt gaue vnto the Water, the ſame that he gaue vnto his Mother. For the power of the Higheſt, and the ouerſhadowing of the holy Ghoſt, that cauſed Mary to beare the Sauiour, the ſame cauſeth that Water doth regenerate the Beleeuer. It appeareth by theſe Authorities, that Chriſt in the Water of Baptiſme sheweth his Inuiſible and Omnipotent power. Yet will not M. Harding ſay, that Chriſt is therefore Really and Fleſhly preſent in the Water of Baptiſme.

Chryſoſtom. in Matt. hom. 51.

Auguſt. in Iohan. Tract. 5.

Auguſt. contra literas Petiliani li. 3. ca. 49.

Leo de Natiuita. Sermone 4.

Therefore it was but vaine labour to allege Chriſts Omnipotent power to proue this Fleſhly Preſence in the Sacrament.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuiſion.

The 130. Vntruth. For not one of the ancient Fathers euer vſed any of theſe termes, touching Chriſts preſence in the Sacrament. The 131. Vntruth. For M. Harding himſelf is forced in the ſame words to acknowledge a great many figures.

Theſe places of the Scripture, and many other reporting plainly, that Chriſt at his Supper gaue to his Diſciples his very Body, euen that ſame which the day following ſuffered Death on the Croſſe, haue miniſtred iuſt cauſe to the (130) godly and learned Fathers of the Church, to ſay, that Chriſts Body is Preſent in this Sacrament Really, Subſtantially, Corporally, Carnally, and Naturally. By vſe of which Aduerbs they haue meant only a truth of being, and not a way, or meane of being. And though this maner of ſpeaking be not thus expreſſed in the Scripture, yet is it deduced out of the Scripture. For if Chriſt ſpake plainly, (131) and vſed no Trope, Figure, nor Metaphor, as the Scripture it ſelfe ſufficiently declareth to an humble beleeuer, and would his Diſciples to vnderſtand him, ſo as hee ſpake in manifeſt termes, when he ſaid, This is my Body which is giuen for you; then may we ſay, that in the Sacrament his very Body is Preſent, yea Really, that is to ſay, indeed; Subſtantially, that is, in Subſtance, and Corporally, Carnally, and Naturally; by which words is meant, that his very Body, his very Fleſh, and his very humane Nature, is there, not after Corporall, Carnall or Naturall wiſe, but inuiſibly, vnſpeakably, miraculouſly, ſupernaturally, ſpiritually, diuinely, and by way to him only knowen.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

By theſe words that Chriſt at his laſt Supper ſpake vnto his Diſciples, This is my Body, it is plaine (ſaith M. Harding) that he gaue vnto them the very ſame Bodie that was crucified the next day vpon the Croſſe; and vpon occaſion thereof the learned Fathers had iuſt cauſe to ſay, that Chriſts Body is Really and Carnally in the Sacrament. This argument is called Petitio Principij. which is, when a thing is taken to make proofe, that is doubtfull, and ſtandeth in queſtion, and ought it ſelfe to be proued. This Fallax may well beguile Children; but among the learned, it is counted in reaſoning a great follie. The Order or Forme hereof is naught: the Antecedent vnproued: the Conſequent falſe, as ſhall appeare.

M. Harding

M. Harding ſaith, theſe woꝛds, This is my Bodie, muſt nœds bee taken without Metaphoꝛ, Tꝛope oꝛ Figure, euen as the plaine letter lieth, and none otherwiſe. So ſaith M. Harding only vpon his owne credit. But the old Catholike Doctours of the Church, of whom (hee ſaith) hee hath ſuch ſtoꝛe, ſay not ſo. S. Auguſtine, S. Ambroſe, S. Hierome, S. Chryſoſtome, S. Baſil, Tertullian, and others call the Sacrament a Figure, a Token, a Signe, an Example, an Image, a Similitude, a Remembꝛance: as hereafter, God willing, ſhall be ſhewed moꝛe at large vpon better occaſion, in an Article ſpecially touching the ſame. Euen Duns himſelfe, with ſundꝛy others of that ſide, ſaw, that following the very bare Letter, we muſt nœds ſay, That the Bread it ſelfe is Chriſts Body. Foꝛ ſo the woꝛds ſtand. This (Bꝛead) is my Body: which were a great inconuenience, and a repugnance in Nature. Foꝛ auoiding whereof, they are dꝛiuen to ſay, That Chꝛiſt, when he pointed to the Bꝛead, and ſaid, This, meant not, This Bread, but, as they call it, Indiuiduum vagum, which is one certaine thing in generall: but what one thing they cannot tell: but ſure they be, it was no Bꝛead. Eſt, they expound Erit, that is to ſay, This ſhall be: Againe: Erit, hoc eſt, tranſubſtantiabitur: that is, The ſubſtance of this vncertaine Generall one thing, that no man knoweth, ſhall be changed into the Subſtance of my Bodie. Is giuen, they expound, ſhall be giuen: Is broken, they expound, ſhall be broken: Doe yee this, they expound, Sacrifice ye this. This Bread, they expound thus, This, that was Bread. And whereas theſe Wꝛbes ſtand together in oꝛdeꝛ and conſtruction, and rule all one caſe, Accepit, Benedixit, Fregit, Dedit: He tooke, He bleſſed, He brake, He gaue: They are faine to ſhift it thus: He tooke the Bread: He bleſſed it away, and in place of it put another ſubſtance: He Brake the Accidents or Shewes of Bread: He gaue his Body. Vpon theſe few woꝛds of Chꝛiſt, thus many Figuꝛes haue they imagined: and beſides theſe, a great many moe, as in place moꝛe conuenient, it ſhall be declared: Yet ſaith M. Harding, Theſe woꝛds of Chꝛiſt muſt of fine foꝛce be taken euen accoꝛding to the oꝛdeꝛ and nature of the bare letter. And this, he ſaith, is ſufficiant to the humble beleeuer. Howbeit, Chꝛiſtian humilitie ſtandeth not in errour, but in truth: And S. Auguſtine ſaith, as it is beſoꝛe alleged: Ea demum eſt miſerabilis animæ Seruitus, Signa pro Rebus accipere: To take the Signes inſtead of the things that thereby be ſignified, is (not the humility of a Chꝛiſtian Faith, but) the miſerable Seruitude of the ſoule. And Origen that old learned Fatheꝛ ſaith: Si ſecundùm Literam ſequaris id, quod dictum eſt, (Niſi manducaueritis carnem Filij hominis, non habebitis vitam in vobis) Litera illa occidit: If you follow theſe words of Chriſt according to the Letter, (Vnleſſe yee eat the Fleſh of the Sonne of Man, ye ſhall haue no life in you) this Letter killeth.

According to the Letter.

Hoc.

Eſt.

Erit.

Traditur.

Frangitur.

Facite.

Panis.

Accepit:

Benedixit.

Fregit.

Dedit.

Auguſt. de Doctrina Chriſtiana, li. 3. ca. 5.

Origen. hom. 7. in Leuiticum.

Vpon theſe grounds of his owne; M. Harding reareth vp this Concluſion: Then, ſaith he, may we ſay, that Chꝛiſt is in the Sacrament Really, &c Indeed a man may ſay much that hath no regard what he ſay. But if he will ſay, as the Old godly Fathers ſaid, then muſt hee ſay: Hoc eſt Corpus meum: hoc eſt, Figura Corporis mei: This is my Body: that is to ſay, a Figure of my Body. Foꝛ ſo the old learned Fatheꝛ Tertullian ſaith. Then muſt hee ſay: Chriſtus Corporis ſui Figuram Diſcipulis ſuis commendauit: Chriſt deliuered vnto his Diſciples a Figure of his body. Foꝛ ſo the old learned Fatheꝛ S. Auguſtine ſaith. Then muſt he ſay: Sacramentum Corporis Chriſti ſecundum quendam modum Corpus Chriſti eſt: The Sacrament of Chriſts Body after a certaine phraſe, oꝛ maner, oꝛ Tꝛope, oꝛ Figure of ſpeech, is the Bodie of Chriſt. Foꝛ ſo againe S. Auguſtine ſaith.

Tertull. contra Marcion. li. 4.

Auguſt. in Pſalm. 3.

Auguſtin. Ad Bonifacium, Epiſt. 23.

Hœre M. Harding ſeing the inconueniences and abſurdities of his Doctrine, thought good to heale it vp with ſome plaſter. By theſe woꝛds, Really, Carnally, &c. the godly learned Fathers (ſaith he) meant that Chriſts very Body and Fleſh is there, but not in any Naturall oꝛ Carnall wiſe. And thus M. Hardings Doctours wꝛote one thing, and meant another. Foꝛ M. Harding knoweth, that all Aduerbes taken of Nounes, ſignifie euermoꝛe a qualitie, and neuer the Subſtance: which thing Chꝛildꝛen are taught to know in the Gꝛammar Schole: and may be reſolued thus: Viriliter, virili modo: muliebriter, muliebri modo. And theꝛefoꝛe his very Canoniſts ſay in their maner of eloquence: Deus non eſt remunerator Nominum, ſed Aduerbiorum: God rewardeth not Nounes, but Aduerbs: that is to ſay, God regardeth not the Doing of any thing, but the maner of the Doing. But M. Harding thinketh hee may take vpon him to ouerlooke and to maſter the Gꝛammar Rules. Foꝛ vnleſſe wee make Nounes Aduerbes, and Aduerbes Nounes, theſe mens Diuinitie cannot ſtand. Theꝛefoꝛe, as they haue deuiſed a new Diuinitie, ſo muſt our Chilꝛen learne foꝛ their pleaſure a new Gꝛammar.

But what are theſe old learned Fathers, that ſay, Chꝛiſts Body is thus Really and Fleſhly in the Sacrament? Where bee their Woꝛds? What bee their Names? If they haue neither Names noꝛ Woꝛds, how can they bee alloWed foꝛ ſufficient Witneſſes? M. Harding well knoweth, that the Old learned Fathers neuer ſaid ſo: Yet muſt he nœds imagine both cauſes, that moued them ſo to ſay: and alſo expoſitions, what they meant by so saying. So Montanus the blinde Senatour, being at Supper with the Emperour Tiberius, highly commended the great Mullet, that he heard say, was set on the Table before them: and shewed, how round, how faire, how fat it was, how it filled the Charger, and how it lay, and euermore turned his face, and pointed with his finger to the higher end of the Table: and yet was not the Mullet there, but farre beneath at the lower end. Reason would that M. Harding had first bene sure of the effect, before he had thus gone about to ghesse the causes.

Berengarius.

M. Harding. The 6. Diuision.

The 132. Vntruth. For the Fathers neuer vsed these termes.

(132) And the Fathers haue beene driuen to vse these termes for the more ample and full declaration of the truth, and also for withstanding and stopping obiections made by Heretikes. And because the Catholike faith touching the veritie of Christs Body in the Sacrament, was not impugned by any man for the space of a thousand yeeres after Christs being in Earth, and about that time (133) Berengarius first began openly to sow the wicked seed of the Sacramentarie heresie, which then soone confuted by learned men, and by the same first authour abiured and recanted, now is with no lesse wickednesse, but more busily, and more earnestly set foorth againe; the Doctours that sithence haue written in the defense of the true and Catholike Faith heerein, haue (134) more often vsed the termes before mentioned, than the old and Ancient Fathers that wrote within M. Iewels six hundred yeeres after Christ. Who doubtlesse would no lesse haue vsed them, if that matter had beene in question or doubt in their time. And albeit these termes were strange and new, as vsed within these fiue hundred yeeres only, and that the people were neuer taught for six hundred yeeres after Christ, as M. Iewell saith more boldly than truly, and therefore more rashly than wisely; yet the Faith by them opened and declared, is Vniuersall and old; verily no lesse old, than is our Lords Supper, where this Sacrament was first instituted.

The 133. Vntruth. For beside S. Augustine, S. Hierome, S. Ambrose & others, Iohan. Scotus, and Bertramus wrote heereof 200. yeers before Berengarius.

The 134. Vntruth. For the Old Writers in this case vsed them neuer.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding thinketh he may lead along his simple Reader, and easily carrie away the matter vnder the bare Titles and Names of the learned Fathers. But what priuie mystery is this: As I said before, haue M. Hardings Doctours no names? Or is not he able to name his owne Fathers? He should haue set them out, as his wont is, with all their Circumstances, what they were, when, and where they liued, what they wrote, and how they haue bene euer, and are now esteemed among the learned. But he well knew that these good Fathers liued all within the compasse of two hundred or three hundred yeres past, as Thomas, Duns, Ockam, Henricus de Gandauo, Robertus de collo torto, and such others. These be M. Hardings great Fathers, by whom he claimeth his new Doctrine: in respect of S. Augustine, S. Hierome, S. Chrysostome, S. Ambrose, and others, not worthy to haue the name of Children.

But the Catholike Faith touching the Sacrament, saith M. Harding, for the space of a thousand yeeres stood vpright. Berengarius was the first that began to sow the seed of the Sacramentarie Heresie.

The 33. Diuision.

It is likely M. Harding hath no great regard how his tales hang together. For before in the First Article, to serue his turne, hee said, The Messalians were the first Fathers of this Heresie. Now he seemeth to be otherwise aduised, and saith: This Heresie was neuer heard of within six hundred yeres after the Messalians were repressed: and that the first founder of it was Berengarius. Yet M. Harding might soone haue knowen, that one Iohannes Scotus, a famous learned man, and Scholar vnto Beda, and one Bertramus, as appeareth by his booke, held and maintained the same Doctrine in the time of the Emperour Lotharius, two hundred yeres and more before Berengarius. Wherefore it seemeth not to be so true, as M. Harding alloweth it, That Berengarius was the first Authour of this Doctrine.

Iohannes Scotus.
Bertramus.

But, for further declaration hereof, it shalbe necessary to open Berengarius whole iudgment in this matter, and afterward to consider the Confutation of the same. Thus therefore Berengarius wrote, as his greatest Aduersary Lanfrancus reporteth of him: Per Consecrationem Altaris, Panis, & Vinum fiunt Sacramentum Religionis: non vt desinant esse quæ erant, &c. By the Consecration of the Altar, the Bread and the Wine are made a Sacrament of Religion, not that they leaue to be the same they were before, but that they bee altered into another thing, and become that they were not before, as S. Ambrose writeth. And the Sacrifice of the Church standeth of two things, the one Visible, the other Inuisible: that is to say, the Sacrament, and the matter or Substance of the Sacrament. Which Substance notwithstanding, that is to say, the Body of Christ, if it were before our eies, it should be Visible. But being taken vp into Heauen, and sitting at the right hand of the Father, vntill all things bee restored, according to the words of the Apostle S. Peter, it cannot be called thence. Therefore S. Augustine saith, When Christ is eaten, life is eaten: and when we eat him, we make no parts of him. And againe, S. Augustine saith: Sacramentum est sacrum signum: A Sacrament is a holy token. And what this word Signum meaneth, he declareth in his Booke, De doctrina Christiana: Signum est res præter speciem, quam ingerit sensibus, aliud quiddam faciens in cogitationem venire: A Signe is a thing, that besides the sight that it offereth vnto the eies, causeth another thing to come into our Lanfrancus. de Sacramen. Eucharistiæ.

Ambros. de Sacramentis, li. 4. c. 4. Sacramentum, & res Sacramenti.
Act. Apost. c. 3.
Augustin. De Con. Dist. 2. Qui manducas
Augustin. De Doctrin. Christiana.

our minde. Againe, vnto Bonifacius: Vnleſſe Sacraments had ſome likeneſſe of the things whereof they be Sacraments, then were they no Sacraments at all. And againe: Sacraments be Viſible Signes of heauenly things: but the things themſelues being Inuiſible, are honoured in them: neither is that Element being Conſecrate by the bleſſing, ſo to be taken, as it is in other vſes. This is the iudgement of Berengarius, agreeing thoroughly with the words and ſenſe of the Holy Fathers, and confirmed and auouched by the ſame.

Berengarius.

Auguſtin. ad Bonifac. epiſt. 23.

Auguſtin. de Catechizandis Rudibus.

De Con. Diſt. 2. Ego Berengarius.

This is an horrible blaſphemie.

Gloſſa. ibidem.

Now let vs ſee the Confutation hereof. In a Councell holden at Rome vnder Pope Nicolas the 2. Berengarius was forced to recant in this wiſe: Credo Corpus Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti ſenſualiter, & in veritate, manibus Sacerdotum tractari, & frangi, & fidelium dentibus atteri: I beleeue that the Body of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt ſenſibly and in very deed, is touched with the hands of the Prieſts, and broken, and rent, and ground with the teeth of the Faithfull. This was the conſent and iudgement of that Councell. And what thinketh M. Harding of the ſame? Certainly the verie rude Gloſſe findeth fault here withall, and giueth this warning thereof vnto the Reader: Niſi ſanè intelligas verba Berengarij, &c. Vnleſſe you warily vnderſtand theſe words of Berengarius, you will fall into a greater hereſie, than euer he held any. Thus theſe Fathers by their owne friends Confeſſion, reiecte the leſſe errour by the greater: and in plaine words in Generall Councell, by ſolemne vow of Recantation, profeſſe a greater Hereſie, than by their owne iudgement euer was defended by Berengarius.

Further, if this be indeed the Catholike Faith, as M. Harding would ſo faine haue all the World to beleeue, and Bertramus, and Iohannes Scotus, both very famous and great learned men, wrote openly againſt it, with the good contentation of the world, and without the apparent controulment of any man, two hundred yeares or more before Berengarius was borne: let him better aduiſe himſelfe, whether theſe words were truly, or boldly, or rashly, or wiſely, with ſuch affiance vttered and auouched of his ſide, That this his Faith was neuer impugned by any man before the time of Berengarius.

But that M. Harding calleth the Catholike Faith, is indeed a Catholike errour, the contrarie whereof hath euermore beene taught and defended by all the old learned Catholike Fathers, as may well appeare by that is alreadie, and hereafter ſhall be alleged of their writings. Certainly, they that now condemne Berengarius for vſing the plaine words and Expoſitions of the Old Fathers, would as well condemne S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, S. Ambroſe, and the reſt, were it not for the Credit and Authority of their Names.

The Doctours that haue beene ſithence the time of Berengarius, (ſaith M. Harding) haue more often vſed theſe termes, Really, Carnally, &c. than other Old Doctours within ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt. In theſe few words, M. Harding hath handſomely conueyed in a great vntrueth. For this Comparatiue (More often) preſuppoſeth the Poſitiue. Therefore the ſenſe hereof muſt be this: The Old Doctours often vſed theſe termes, Really, Fleſhly, &c. albeit not ſo often as others of the latter yeares. But M. Harding knoweth this is vntrue. For neither hath he here yet ſhewed, nor is he able to ſhew, that in this caſe of the Sacrament, any of theſe termes was euer vſed by any one of all the Old Ancient Writers. Whereof we may well reaſon thus: The Old Catholike Fathers intreating of the Subſtance of the Sacrament, neuer vſed any of theſe words, Really, Carnally, &c. Therefore it is likely, they neuer taught the people to beleeue, that Chriſts Body is preſent Really and Fleſhly in the Sacrament. Contrarywiſe, they in their Sermons called the Sacrament a Figure, a Signe, a Remembrance of Chriſts Body: therefore it is likely, they would haue the Catholike people ſo to iudge and beleeue of the Sacrament.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuiſion.

Heere before that I bring in places of ancient Fathers, reporting the ſame Doctrine, and in like termes as the Catholike Church doth hold concerning this Article, leſt our opinion heerein might happily appeare ouer Carnall and Groſſe; I thinke it neceſſary briefly to declare what maner a true Body and Blood is in the Sacrament. Chriſt in himſelfe, hath but one Fleſh and Blood in Subſtance, which his Goodhead tooke of the Virgin Mary once, and neuer afterward left it off. But this one Fleſh and Blood in reſpect of double qualitie, hath a double conſideration. For at what time Chriſt liued heere in Earth among men, in the ſhape of man, his fleſh was thrall and ſubiect to the frailtie of mans nature, ſinne and ignorance excepted. That fleſh being paſſible vnto death, the ſouldiers at the procurement of the Iewes crucified. And ſuch maner Blood was at his paſſion ſhed foorth of his Body, in ſight of them which were then preſent. But after that Chriſt roſe againe from the dead, his Body from that time forward euer remaineth immortall, and liuely, in danger no more of any infirmitie or ſuffering, much leſſe of death; but is become by diuine gifts and endowments, a ſpirituall and a diuine Body, as to whom the Godhead hath communicated Diuine and Godly properties and excellencies, that beene aboue all mans capacitie of vnderſtanding. This Fleſh and Body thus conſidered, which ſundry Doctours call, Corpus Spirituale, & Deificatum, A Spirituall, and a Deified Body, is giuen to vs in the bleſſed Sacrament. This the Doctrine of the Church, vttered by meant by ſo ſaying. So Montanus the blinde Senatour, being at Supper with the Emperour Tiberius, highly commended the great Mullet, that he heard ſay, was ſet on the Table before them: and ſhewed, how round, how faire, how fat it was, how it filled the Charger, and how it lay, and euermore turned his face, and pointed with his finger to the higher end of the Table: and yet was not the Mullet there, but farre beneath at the lower end. Reaſon would that M. Harding had firſt bene ſure of the effect, before he had thus gone about to gheſſe the cauſes.

Berengarius.

M. Harding. The 6. Diuiſion.

The 132. Vntruth. For the Fathers neuer vſed theſe termes.

The 133. Vntruth. For beſide S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, S. Ambroſe & others, Iohan. Scotus, and Bertramus wrote heereof 200. yeers before Berengarius.

The 134. Vntruth. For the Old Writers in this caſe vſed them neuer.

(132) And the Fathers haue beene driuen to vſe theſe termes for the more ample and full declaration of the truth, and alſo for withſtanding and ſtopping obiections made by Heretikes. And becauſe the Catholike faith touching the veritie of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, was not impugned by any man for the ſpace of a thouſand yeeres after Chriſts being in Earth, and about that time (133) Berengarius firſt began openly to ſow the wicked ſeed of the Sacramentarie hereſie, which then ſoone confuted by learned men, and by the ſame firſt authour abiured and recanted, now is with no leſſe wickednesſe, but more buſily, and more earneſtly ſet foorth againe; the Doctours that ſithence haue written in the defenſe of the true and Catholike Faith heerein, haue (134) more often vſed the termes before mentioned, than the old and Ancient Fathers that wrote within M. Iewels ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt. Who doubtleſſe would no leſſe haue vſed them, if that matter had beene in queſtion or doubt in their time. And albeit theſe termes were ſtrange and new, as vſed within theſe fiue hundred yeeres only, and that the people were neuer taught for ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt, as M. Iewell ſaith more boldly than truly, and therefore more raſhly than wiſely; yet the Faith by them opened and declared, is Vniuerſall and old; verily no leſſe old, than is our Lords Supper, where this Sacrament was firſt inſtituted.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding thinketh he may lead along his ſimple Reader, and eaſily carrie away the matter vnder the bare Titles and Names of the learned Fathers. But what priuie myſtery is this: As I ſaid before, haue M. Hardings Doctours no names? Or is not he able to name his owne Fathers? He ſhould haue ſet them out, as his wont is, with all their Circumſtances, what they were, when, and where they liued, what they wrote, and how they haue bene euer, and are now eſteemed among the learned. But he well knew that theſe good Fathers liued all within the compaſſe of two hundred or three hundred yeres paſt, as Thomas, Duns, Ockam, Henricus de Gandauo, Robertus de collo torto, and ſuch others. Theſe be M. Hardings great Fathers, by whom he claimeth his new Doctrine: in reſpect of S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, S. Chryſoſtome, S. Ambroſe, and others, not worthy to haue the name of Children.

But the Catholike Faith touching the Sacrament, ſaith M. Harding, for the ſpace of a thouſand yeeres ſtood vpright. Berengarius was the firſt that began to ſow the ſeed of the Sacramentarie Hereſie.

The 33. Diuiſion.

It is likely M. Harding hath no great regard how his tales hang together. For before in the Firſt Article, to ſerue his turne, hee ſaid, The Meſſalians were the firſt Fathers of this Hereſie. Now he ſeemeth to be otherwiſe aduiſed, and ſaith: This Hereſie was neuer heard of within ſix hundred yeeres after the Meſſalians were repreſſed: and that the firſt founder of it was Berengarius. Yet M. Harding might ſone haue knowen, that one Iohannes Scotus, a famous learned man, and Scholar vnto Beda, and one Bertramus, as appeareth by his booke, held and maintained the ſame Doctrine in the time of the Emperour Lotharius, two hundred yeeres and more before Berengarius. Wherefore it ſeemeth not to be ſo true, as M. Harding aſſureth it, That Berengarius was the firſt Authour of this Doctrine.

Iohannes Scotus. Bertramus.

But, for further declaration hereof, it ſhalbe neceſſary to open Berengarius whole iudgment in this matter, and afterward to conſider the Confutation of the ſame. Thus therefore Berengarius wrote, as his greateſt Aduerſary Lanfrancus reporteth of him: Per Conſecrationem Altaris, Panis, & Vinum fiunt Sacramentum Religionis: non vt deſinant eſſe quæ erant, &c. By the Conſecration of the Altar, the Bread and the Wine are made a Sacrament of Religion, not that they leaue to be the ſame they were before, but that they bee altered into another thing, and become that they were not before, as S. Ambroſe writeth. And the Sacrifice of the Church ſtandeth of two things, the one Viſible, the other Inuiſible: that is to ſay, the Sacrament, and the matter or Subſtance of the Sacrament. Which Subſtance notwithſtanding, that is to ſay, the Body of Chriſt, if it were before our eies, it ſhould be Viſible. But being taken vp into Heauen, and ſitting at the right hand of the Father, vntill all things bee reſtored, according to the words of the Apoſtle S. Peter, it cannot be called thence. Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, When Chriſt is eaten, life is eaten: and when we eat him, we make no parts of him. And againe, S. Auguſtine ſaith: Sacramentum eſt ſacrum ſignum: A Sacrament is a holy token. And what this word Signum meaneth, he declareth in his Booke, De doctrina Chriſtiana: Signum eſt res præter ſpeciem, quam ingerit ſenſibus, aliud quiddam faciens in cogitationem venire: A Signe is a thing, that beſides the ſight that it offereth vnto the eies, cauſeth another thing to come into Lanfrancus. de Sacramen. Euchariſtiæ. Ambroſ. de Sacramentis, li. 4. c. 4. Sacramentum, & res Sacramenti. Act. Apoſt. c. 3. Auguſtin. De Con. Diſt. 2. Qui manducat. Auguſtin. De Doctrin. Chriſtiana.

our

our minde. Againe, vnto Bonifacius: Vnleſſe Sacraments had ſome likeneſſe of the things whereof they be Sacraments, then were they no Sacraments at all. And againe: Sacraments be Viſible Signes of heauenly things: but the things themſelues being Inuiſible, are honoured in them: neither is that Element being Conſecrate by the bleſſing, ſo to be taken, as it is in other vſes. This is the iudgement of Berengarius, agreeing thoroughly with the words and ſenſe of the Holy Fathers, and confirmed and auouched by the ſame.

Berengarius.

Auguſtin. ad Bonifac. epiſt. 23.

Auguſtin. de Catechizandis Rudibus.

De Con. Diſt. 2. Ego Berengarius.

This is an horrible blaſphemie.

Gloſſa. ibidem.

Now let vs ſee the Confutation hereof. In a Councell holden at Rome vnder Pope Nicolas the 2. Berengarius was forced to recant in this wiſe: Credo Corpus Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti ſenſualiter, & in veritate, manibus Sacerdotum tractari, & frangi, & fidelium dentibus atteri: I beleeue that the Body of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt ſenſibly and in very deed, is touched with the hands of the Prieſts, and broken, and rent, and ground with the teeth of the Faithfull. This was the conſent and iudgement of that Councell. And what thinketh M. Harding of the ſame? Certainly the verie rude Gloſſe findeth fault here withall, and giueth this warning thereof vnto the Reader: Niſi ſanè intelligas verba Berengarij, &c. Vnleſſe you warily vnderſtand theſe words of Berengarius, you will fall into a greater hereſie, than euer he held any. Thus theſe Fathers by their owne friends Confeſſion, reuerſe the leſſe errour by the greater: and in plaine words in Generall Councell, by ſolemne way of Recantation, profeſſe a greater Hereſie, than by their owne iudgement euer was defended by Berengarius.

Further, if this be indeed the Catholike Faith, as M. Harding would ſo faine haue all the World to beleeue, and Bertramus, and Iohannes Scotus, both very famous and great learned men, wrote openly againſt it, with the good contentation of the world, and without the apparent controulment of any man, two hundred yeares or more before Berengarius was borne: let him better aduiſe himſelfe, whether theſe words were truly, or boldly, or rashly, or wiſely, with ſuch affiance vttered and auouched of his ſide, That this his Faith was neuer impugned by any man before the time of Berengarius.

But that M. Harding calleth the Catholike Faith, is indeed a Catholike errour, the contrarie whereof hath euermore beene taught and defended by all the old learned Catholike Fathers, as may well appeare by that is alreadie, and hereafter ſhall be alleged of their writings. Certainly, they that now condemne Berengarius for vſing the plaine words and Expoſitions of the Old Fathers, would as well condemne S. Auguſtine, S. Hierome, S. Ambroſe, and the reſt, were it not for the Credit and Authority of their Names.

The Doctours that haue beene ſithence the time of Berengarius, (ſaith M. Harding) haue more often vſed theſe termes, Really, Carnally, &c. than other Old Doctours within ſix hundred yeeres after Chriſt. In theſe few words, M. Harding hath handſomely conueyed in a great vntrueth. For this Comparatiue (More often) preſuppoſeth the Poſitiue. Therefore the ſenſe hereof muſt be this: The Old Doctours often vſed theſe termes, Really, Fleſhly, &c. albeit not ſo often as others of the latter yeeres. But M. Harding knoweth this is vntrue. For neither hath he here yet ſhewed, nor is he able to ſhew, that in this caſe of the Sacrament, any of theſe termes was euer vſed by any one of all the Old Ancient Writers. Whereof we may well reaſon thus: The Old Catholike Fathers intreating of the Subſtance of the Sacrament, neuer vſed any of theſe words, Really, Carnally, &c. Therefore it is likely, they neuer taught the people to beleeue, that Chriſts Body is preſent Really and Fleſhly in the Sacrament. Contrarywiſe, they in their Sermons called the Sacrament a Figure, a Signe, a Remembrance of Chriſts Body: therefore it is likely, they would haue the Catholike people ſo to iudge and beleeue of the Sacrament.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuiſion.

Heere before that I bring in places of ancient Fathers, reporting the ſame Doctrine, and in like termes as the Catholike Church doth hold concerning this Article, leſt our opinion heerein might happily appeare ouer Carnall and Groſſe; I thinke it neceſſary briefly to declare what maner a true Body and Blood is in the Sacrament. Chriſt in himſelfe, hath but one Fleſh and Blood in Subſtance, which his Goodhead tooke of the Virgin Mary once, and neuer afterward left it off. But this one Fleſh and Blood in reſpect of double qualitie, hath a double conſideration. For at what time Chriſt liued heere in Earth among men, in the ſhape of man, his fleſh was thrall and ſubiect to the frailtie of mans nature, ſinne and ignorance excepted. That fleſh being paſſible vnto death, the ſouldiers at the procurement of the Ieweſ crucified. And ſuch maner Blood was at his paſſion ſhed foorth of his Body, in ſight of them which were then preſent. But after that Chriſt roſe againe from the dead, his Body from that time forward euer remaineth immortall, and liuely, in danger no more of any infirmitie or ſuffering, much leſſe of death; but is become by diuine gifts and endowments, a ſpirituall and a diuine Body, as to whom the Godhead hath communicated Diuine and Godly properties and excellencies, that beene aboue all mans capacitie of vnderſtanding. This Fleſh and Body thus conſidered, which ſundry Doctours call, Corpus Spirituale, & Deificatum, A Spirituall, and a Deified Body, is giuen to vs in the bleſſed Sacrament. This the Doctrine of the Church, vttered by

Chriſts Body Deified.

S. Hierome in his Commentaries vpon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, where he hath theſe words: Duplicitèr verò Sanguis & Caro intelligitur, vel Spiritualis illa atque Diuina, de qua ipſe dixit; Caro mea, verè eſt Cibus, & Sanguis meus verè eſt potus; Et, niſi manducaueritis Carnem meam, & Sanguinem meum biberitis, non habebitis vitam æternam; Vel Caro quæ Crucifixa eſt, & Sanguis, qui militis effuſus eſt lancea. That is, The Blood and Fleſh of Chriſt is vnderſtanded two waies; either that it is that ſpirituall and diuine Fleſh, of which he ſpake himſelfe; My Fleſh is verily meat, and my Blood is verily drinke; and, Except yee eat my Fleſh, and drinke my Blood, ye ſhall not haue life in you; Or that Fleſh which was crucified, and that Blood which was ſhed by piercing of the ſouldiers ſpeare. And to the intent a man ſhould not take this difference according to the ſubſtance of Chriſts Fleſh and Blood, but according to the qualitie only; S. Hierome bringeth a ſimilitude of our Fleſh, as of which it hath beene in double reſpect ſaid; Iuxta hanc diuiſionem, & in Sanctis etiam diuerſitas Sanguinis & Carnis accipitur; vt alia ſit Caro, quæ viſura eſt ſalutare Dei, alia Caro & Sanguis, quæ Regnum Dei non queant poſſidere: According to this diuiſion, diuerſitie of Blood and Fleſh is to be vnderſtanded in Saints alſo, ſo as there is one Fleſh which ſhall ſee the ſaluation of God; and another Fleſh and blood, which may not poſſeſſe the Kingdome of God. Which two ſtates of Fleſh and Blood ſeeme (as it appeareth to the vnlearned) quite contrarie. Lib. 1. Cap 1. Luc. 3.

But S. Paul diſſolueth this doubt, in the fifteenth Chapter of his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, ſaying, that Fleſh of ſuch ſort as we beare about vs in this life, earthly, mortall, fraile, and burdenous to the ſoule, cannot poſſeſſe the Kingdome of God, becauſe corruption ſhall not poſſeſſe incorruption. But after Reſurrection wee ſhall haue a ſpirituall, glorious, incorruptible, and immortall Fleſh, and like in figure to the glorious Body of Chriſt, as S. Paul ſaith; This corruptible Body muſt put on incorruption; and this mortall, immortalitie. Then ſuch Fleſh, or our Fleſh of that maner and ſort, ſhall poſſeſſe the Kingdome of God, and ſhall behold God himſelfe. And yet our Fleſh now corruptible, and then incorruptible, is but one Fleſh in ſubſtance, but diuers in qualitie and propertie. Euen ſo it is to bee thought of our Lords Fleſh, as is aforeſaid. The due weighing of this difference giueth much light to this matter, and ought to ſtay many horrible blaſphemies, wickedly vttered againſt this moſt bleſſed Sacrament. 1. Cor. 15.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Yéere M. Harding much troubleth his head with a nédleſſe labour, and in the end concludeth againſt himſelfe. For that the Sonne of God was made man, euen like vnto one of vs, thrall and ſubiect to the infirmities and miſeries of this mortall life: and that, as he himſelfe complaineth in the Pſalme, he ſéemed a vile wormе and no man: the ſhame of the world, and the outcaſt of the people: and that God the Father afterward aduanced him with glory, and ſet him at his right hand, aboue all Powers and Principalities, and gaue him a name aboue all names, and endued him with a ſpirituall and a glorious Bodie: and vnited the ſame vnto the Godhead, and crowned him with Honour and Glory: All theſe things are knowen euen vnto Babes and Children, that haue béene Godly brought vp, and haue learned the principles of their Faith: And are ſo farre from all doubt amongſt vs, that wée beléeue Chriſt ſhall tranſforme our mortall bodies, and make them like vnto the Bodie of his glory. And therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith: Corpus Domini pro ipſa cœleſti habitatione, cœleſtem accepit mutationem: & hoc nos ſperare in die vltimo iuſſi ſumus. Ideo dicit Apoſtolus, qualis Cœleſtis, tales & Cœleſtes: id eſt, immortales, non ſolùm animis, ſed etiam corporibus: The Bodie of our Lord, according to that Heauenly habitation hath receiued an heauenly change: and we our ſelues are commanded at the laſt day to hope for the ſame. Therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, As hee is that is Heauenly, ſo are they that are Heauenly: that is to ſay, Immortall, and that, not onely in Soule, but alſo in Bodie. This is the comfortableſt Article of our Beléeue, and therefore with vs, and with all other faithfull, it is out of all doubt and queſtion.

Pſalm. 21. Epheſ. 1. Philippen. 2. Philippen. 3. Auguſt. contra Adimantum, ca. 12. 1. Cor. 15.

Only Steuen Gardiner, who for his conſtancie and faſtneſſe in his Religion, would néeds be called Conſtantius, hath giuen the World to vnderſtand by publike writing, that Chriſt is not yet fully poſſeſſed in this glory. Theſe be his words: Tempus humiliratis Chriſti in conuerſatione viſibili & terrena præſtandæ planè præteriit: Sed humilis Diſpenſationis tempus eo vſque manet, donec tradiderit Regnum Deo & Patri: The time of Chriſts humilitie in viſible and earthly converſation is vndoubtedly paſt. But the time of the Diſpenſation or ſeruice of his humilitie remaineth ſtill, vntill hee deliuer vp the Kingdome vnto God his Father. Thus one of them ſaith: Chriſts Bodie is Deified and become God. Another ſaith, it is yet ſtill in the diſpenſation and ſeruice of humilitie, and therefore is not yet Deified. It ſéemeth they be not yet well reſolued of Chriſts Glory, how much or how little they may allow him. Neither indéed haue they any certaine direction to guide themſelues héerein: but only as occaſion is offered, to ſhift off obiections, they are faine to take hold in any thing, true or falſe, to ſerue their turne. A man may well ſay vnto them, as S. Auguſtine ſometime ſaid vnto the Heretike Fauſtus Manicheus: Dices, Hoc pro me facit: illud contra me. Tu eſt ergo Regula veritatis. Quicquid contra te fuerit, non eſt verum: Thou wilt ſay, This thing is for me: That thing is againſt me. Then art thou the rule of truth. Whatſoeuer is againſt thee is not true.

Marcus Antonius Conſtantius. Ad obiectum 144. Auguſt. contra Fauſt. Manichæum, lib. 11. ca. 2.

But to what end allegeth M. Harding the Spirituall ſtate of Chriſts glorious Bodie? Doth hée not remember that the Old Heretike Abbat Eutyches maintained his fantaſies fantasies by the same, and was deceiued? Christs Body, said he, is glorious: Therefore it is changed into the very substance and nature of God, and hath now no shape or proportion of a Bodie. This is an old Heresie, long sithence reproued by Leo, Gelasius, and other Old Fathers, and condemned by the Councell of Chalcedon; very much like vnto this of M. Hardings, if it be not fully the same. We beleeue, The Body of Christ is endued with Immortalitie, Brightnesse, Light, and Glory: Yet is it neuertheless the same Bodie it was before. And therefore S. Augustine saith: Corpus Domini secundùm substantiam, etiam post Resurrectionem Caro appellata est: The Body of our Lord in respect of the Substance of it, yea after it is risen againe, is called Flesh. And againe, Dominus Corpori suo immortalitatem dedit: Naturam non abstulit: The Lord gaue to his Bodie immortalitie: But hee tooke not away the Nature or Substance of it.

Eutyches in Concilio Chalcedon.

Christs Body Deified.

August. Retract. li. 1. ca. 22.

August. in epist. 57. ad Dardanum.

And, notwithstanding certaine of the Old Fathers call the Body of Christ, Corpus Deificatum, as M. Harding allegeth, yet it is not their meaning, that the same Body, according to the naturall signification and sound of that word, is changed, and transformed into a Diuine Nature, and made God: and so is no longer a naturall Body. For, as it is true, That God was made man, euen so, and in like sense, it is also true, that Man was made God, without any change of Substance of either Nature. And therefore the Fathers say, Christs Body is Deified, or made God, for that it is united in person and Glorie with the Nature of God. To this purpose, although not altogether in like sense, S. Augustine seemeth to say, that men are Deified, and made gods. Thus he writeth: Homines dixit Deos, & Gratia sua Deificatos; non de Substantia sua natos: He called men Gods, as being Deified, and so made by his Grace: but not as borne so of his Substance. So saith Dionysius: pontifex ipse mutatur in Deum: The Bishop himselfe is turned into God. Likewise S. Cyprian calleth the Scriptures, Scripturas Deificas: The Scriptures that make men Gods. And Clemens Alexandrinus saith, Sacræ literæ nos Deificant: The holy Scriptures make vs Gods. By these and other like words is meant, not that men are changed from their owne Naturall Substance, and indeed become Gods, as the letter seemeth to import; but only, that men are indued with Godly vertues and qualities, and so made the Children of God. And so Dionysius himselfe saith: Hæc mutatio nostri in Deum, est Dei in nobis similitudo, quantam capere natura potest: This changing of vs into God, is the Likenesse or image of God within vs, as farre as Nature can receiue.

Augustin. in Psalm. 49.

Dionysius de Eccles. Hierar. cap. 1.

ἐχει δεδῶν αὐ.

Cypri. de zele, & liuore, Et li. 2. Epist. 8.

Clemens in Protreptico.

Dionys. de Eccleſiaſt. Hierar. cap. 1.

But S. Hierome saith, Christs Flesh hath double vnderstanding, and may be taken, either for his Spirituall, or Diuine Flesh, or else for his Mortall Flesh, as it was Crucified: and is thought to make much for M. Harding. For answer hereunto, first of all, this one thing I pray thee, good Reader, to consider, that S. Hierome in that whole place speaketh not one word, neither of the Sacrament, nor of any Reall or Fleshly Presence. Therefore M. Harding can haue but very poore helpe hereof to prooue his purpose. Only he expoundeth what S. Paul meant by these words, We haue Redemption by his Blood. and his meaning, as it appeareth by the whole drift of his words, is this, That the Saluation which we haue in Christ, standeth not in that hee was a meere naturall man, as were Codrus, Decius, Curtius, or such others, that died for the safetie and deliuerie of their Countries: but in that his Humanity was united and ioined in one person with the nature of God. His words be these: Quis iste, aiunt, tantus, ac talis, qui possit pretio suo Totum Orbem redimere? Iesus Christus Filius Dei proprium Sanguinem dedit, & nos de Seruitute eripiens libertate donauit. Et reuera, si historijs Gentilium credimus, quòd Codrus, & Curtius, & Decij Mures pestilentias vrbium, & fames, & bella suis mortibus repressérint: quantò magis hoc in Dei Filio possibile iudicandum est, quòd cruore suo, non Vrbem vnam purgauerit, sed Totum Orbem? They say, what was he, such a one, and so mighty, that by his price was able to redeeme the whole world? Iesus Christ the Sonne of God gaue his owne Blood, and deliuering vs from bondage, hath made vs free. And indeed, if wee beleeue the Heathen story, that Codrus, Curtius, and Decij Mures remooued Pestilences, Famines and Warres from their Cities by their death: how much more may wee iudge the same possible in the Sonne of God, that he by his Blood hath purged, not only one City, but also the whole world? Immediately after this follow the words that M. Harding hath here alleged: Dupliciter verò, &c. For the Blood and Flesh of Christ hath double vnderstanding. By the whole course of these words thus going before, it is easie to perceiue S. Hieromes meaning: that is, That we haue our Saluation in Christ, and doe Eat him, and Drinke him, and liue by him, not for that his Flesh was mortall only, and Crucified vpon the Crosse: but for that it was Spirituall and Diuine, that is to say, the Flesh of the Sonne of God. And herein stood that great contention, that Cyrillus and other Godly Fathers had against Nestorius: as it is well knowen vnto the learned. And therefore S. Paul saith, That I liue now, I liue in the Flesh of the Sonne of God.

Ad Ephes. 1.

Hieronym. ad Ephes. cap. 1.

Galat. 2.

August. in Iohan. tractat. 88.

Therefore, notwithstanding S. Augustine say, Christus Crucifixus est Lac sugentibus, &

Chriſts Body Deified.

& Cibus proficientibus : Chriſt Crucified is Milke vnto the ſucklings, and harder meat vnto the ſtrong. And notwithſtanding Angelomus ſay, Chriſts Body is hay, whereby the Gentiles are fed; yet muſt both theſe, and alſo all other like places be taken, not of bare mortall Fleſh alone, but of the Fleſh of the Sonne of God: which S. Hierome calleth Diuine and Spirituall, for that it is perſonally, and inſeparably ioyned with the Godhead.

Angelomus in 1. Regum. ca. 1.

Againe, S. Hieromes meaning is, that the ſame Fleſh of Chriſt, being thus Diuine and Spirituall, muſt alſo Spiritually be receiued, and not in any ſuch Carnall or Fleſhly wiſe, as it is heere imagined by M. Harding. For notwithſtanding Chriſts Bodie be Spirituall, yet is that no ſufficient warrant, to proue, that therefore M. Hardings Opinion is not, as he ſaith, ouer Groſſe and Carnall. For the Manichees and the Pellalian Heretiques had Groſſe and Carnall imaginations of God himſelfe, notwithſtanding God be only Spirit, and moſt Spirituall. And therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith of them: Ecce ego derideo Carnales homines, qui nondum poſſunt Spiritualia cogitare: Behold I laugh to ſcorne theſe Carnall and Fleſhly men, that are not yet able to conceiue things Spirituall.

Auguſtin. contra epiſtolam Fundamenti. cap. 23.

For proofe hereof S. Hierome himſelfe ſaith: De hac quidem hoſtia, quæ in Chriſti Commemoratione mirabiliter fit, edere licet: De illa verò, quam Chriſtus in Ara Crucis obtulit, ſecundùm ſe nulli edere licet: Of this Oblation, which is marueilouſly made in the remembrance of Chriſt, it is lawfull to eat: But of that Oblation, which Chriſt offered vpon the Altar of the Croſſe, according to it ſelfe (that is to ſay, in Groſſe and Fleſhly maner) it is lawfull for no man to eat. By theſe words S. Hierome alſo ſheweth a great difference betweene the Sacrifice, that is made in the remembrance of Chriſt, and the very Sacrifice indeed that Chriſt made vpon the Croſſe. So S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Si Carnaliter quis accipiat, nihil lucratur: If a man take it Fleſhly, he gaineth nothing. So likewiſe S. Auguſtine ſaith, as it is alleged before: It is a Figure or Forme of ſpeech, willing vs to be partakers of Chriſts Paſſion, and comfortably to remember that Chriſt hath died for vs. This S. Hierome calleth the Eating of the Diuine and Spirituall Fleſh of Chriſt. Therefore Clemens Alexandrinus ſaith, not only in like ſenſe, but alſo in like forme of words: Duplex eſt Sanguis Domini: alter Carnalis, quo redempti ſumus: alter Spiritualis, quo vncti ſumus. Et hoc eſt Bibere Ieſu Sanguinem, participem eſſe incorruptionis Domini: There are two ſorts of Chriſts Blood: the one Fleſhly, wherewith we are redeemed: the other Spirituall, wherewith we are anointed. And this is the drinking of the Blood of Chriſt, to be partakers of his Immortalitie. In like ſort S. Auguſtine ſaith: Iudas Chriſtum Carnalem tradidit, tu Spiritualem: Furens Euangelium Sanctum flammis Sacrilegis tradidiſti: Iudas betrayed Chriſt Carnall: but thou haſt betrayed Chriſt Spirituall. For in thy fury thou betrayedſt the Holy Goſpell to be burnt in wicked fire. Here S. Auguſtine calleth Chriſt Spirituall, for that the maner of the betraying was Spirituall. Likewiſe that Ancient Father Clemens calleth Chriſts Blood Spirituall, not in reſpect of difference in it ſelfe, but only in reſpect of the Spirituall receiuing. And I thinke M. Harding will not deny, but theſe words of Clemens and Auguſtine agreeing ſo neere both in ſenſe and phraſe, with the words of Hierome, may ſtand for ſufficient expoſition to the ſame. Certainly, as Chriſts Blood is not Really or Bloodily Preſent to annoint vs; ſo is it not Really or Bloodily Preſent to nourith vs. For this Nourithing, and this Anointing are both Spirituall. And therefore the Old learned Father Athanaſius writeth thus: Quomodò vnum vnius hominis Corpus Vniuerſo Mundo ſufficeret? Quod, tanquam in illorum cogitationibus verſatum, Chriſtus commemorat. A quibus cogitationibus vt eos auocaret, quemadmodum paulò ante ſui Deſcenſus è Cœlis, ita nunc Reditus ſui in Cœlum mentionem facit: The Capernaites demanded, how one Body of one man might ſuffice the whole world: which thing, as being in their cogitations, Chriſt calleth to remembrance. To remoone them from which cogitations (of Groſſe and Fleſhly eating) as hee before made mention of his comming downe from Heauen, ſo now likewiſe hee maketh mention of his repaire againe into Heauen.

Chryſoſtom. in Iohan. hom. 46.
Auguſtin. de Doctrina Chriſtian. li. 3. c. 16.
Clemens Alexandrin. in pædagog. li. 2. c. 2.
Auguſt. contra liter. Petilian. lib. 2. ca. 8.
Athanaſius de Peccato in Spiritum ſanctum.

To conclude, once againe (gentle Reader) I muſt doe this to remember, that S. Hierome in this whole place neuer ſpake one word, neither of any Reall or Fleſhly Preſence, nor of the Sacrament. Yet notwithſtanding, M. Harding, as though S. Hierome had plainly and vndoubtedly ſpoken of both, hereof gathereth his reaſon thus: S. Hierome ſaith, We eat not the Fleſh of Chriſt that was Crucified: Ergo, Chriſts Fleſh is Really and Fleſhly in the Sacrament: This Argument is euident to the eie, and needeth no anſwer.

His Reaſon would better haue framed thus: S. Hierome ſaith: We cannot eat the Fleſh of Chriſt that was Crucified: Ergo, We cannot Really and Carnally eat the Fleſh of Chriſt. Whereof it muſt neceſſarily follow euen by the authoritie that M. Harding hath heere alleged, that Chriſts Body is not Really and Fleſhly in the Sacrament. Such reliefe hath M. Harding found in theſe words of S. Hierome.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuision.

Now, whereas M. Iewell denieth, that Christian people were of old time taught to beleeue, that Christs Body is Really, Substantially, Corporally, Carnally, or Naturally in the Sacrament, I do plainly affirme the contrarie. Yet I acknowledge, that the learned Fathers (135) which haue so taught, would not thereby seeme to make it heere outwardly sensible or perceptible. For they confesse all with S. Chrysostome, that the thing which is heere giuen vs, is not sensible, but that vnder visible signes, inuisible things be deliuered vnto vs. But they thought good * to vse the aforesaid termes, to put away all doubt of the being of his very Body in these holy Mysteries, and to exclude the only imagination, fantasie, figure, signe, token, vertue, or signification thereof. For in such wise the Sacramentaries haue vttered their Doctrine in this point, as they may seeme by their maner of speaking and writing, heere to represent our Lords Body onely, indeed being absent, as Kings often times are represented in a Tragedie, or meane persons in a Comedie. Verily, the maner and way, by which it is heere present, and giuen to vs, and receiued of vs, is secret, not humane, ne naturall: true for all that. And we doe not attaine it by sense, reason, or nature, but by faith. For which cause we doe not ouer basely consider, and attend the visible elements, but as wee are taught by the Counsell of Nice, lifting vp our minde and spirit, wee behold by Faith on that holy Table put and laid (so for the better signification the Reall Presence their terme soundeth) the Lambe of God that taketh away the sins of the world. And heere (say they) we receiue his Precious Body and Blood, ἀληθῶς, that is to say, verily, and indeed: which is no otherwise, nor lesse, than this terme Really importeth.

The 135. Vntruth. For the old Fathers neuer taught vs so.

* Another vntruth, as afore.

Lifting vp the minde. Behold by Faith.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Here M. Harding once againe, as before, will teach vs, what the old Fathers meant by those words that they neuer vttered. I trow hee hath some priuie Diuination, that thus taketh vpon him to know what men meane, before they speake. Cicero saith: Peritum esse necesse est eum, qui, Silentium quid sit, intelligat: It must needs be some cunning fellow that vnderstandeth what Silence meaneth, and knoweth what they speake, that speake nothing. He saith, The Fathers thought good, to vse the aforesaid terme, to put away all doubt of the being of Christs very Body in these holy Mysteries. Verily, this is a maruellous boldnesse, so often, and with such confidence and countenance to say, The old Fathers vsed these termes, and yet not once to shew any one of them all that euer vsed them. It may be thought, that he hath either too great affiance in himselfe, or too little regard vnto his Reader. As for this vaine musker of names, of Chrysostome, Hilarie, Gregorie Nyssene and Cyril, as it shall appeare by the view, it helpeth him nothing.

Cicero de Diuinatione, 2.

The Sacramentaries (saith M. Harding) vter their Doctrine by these termes, Figure, Signe, Token, Signification and Vertue. I may not answer this discourtesie of talke with like discourtesie. Onely I will say of these men, as S. Augustine sometime said of the Arians: Cùm se tanta voragine impietatis immergant, nos, tanquam opprobrio noui Nominis, Homousianos vocant: quia contra illorum errorem Homousion defendimus: Whereas they haue drowned themselues in such a dungeon of wickednesse, now they call vs Homousians, to reproch vs with a new name: because wee defend the Vnitie of the Holy Trinitie against their errour. But if they be all Sacramentaries that vse these termes, then must S. Augustine, S. Hierome, S. Chrysostome, S. Ambrose, and all other the holy Fathers that vsed the same, néeds be condemned for Sacramentaries. But if they bee Sacramentaries, that shamefully abuse, and corrupt the holy Sacraments, then may M. Harding and his friends rightly bee called Sacramentaries. M. Harding addeth, Chrysostome saith, Inuisible signes, things Inuisible bee deliuered: Ergo, The Body of Christ is Really and Fleshly in the Sacrament. First, if M. Harding had well considered that whole Homilie, happily hee would haue charged Chrysostome himselfe with his Sacramentarie quarrell, as now he doth others. For, touching the Sacrament, Chrysostome euen there writeth thus: Quando dicunt, Vnde patet, Christum fuisse immolatum, hæc afferentes Mysteria, ora ipsorum consuimus. Si enim mortuus Iesus non est, cuius Symbolum, ac Signum hoc Sacrificium est? When they say, How may wee know, that Christ was offered, bringing foorth these Mysteries, we stop their mouthes. For if Christ died not, whose Signe and Token is this Sacrifice? But to returne to the matter: O how light occasions these men take to deceiue the simple! M. Harding knoweth, that Chrysostome speaketh not these words onely of the Sacrament of Christs Bodie, but also generally of all other Mysteries. For he addeth immediately: Sic & in Baptismo, per Aquam, quæ res Sensibilis est, donum illud conceditur. Quod autem in ea conficitur, Regeneratio, scilicet, & Renouatio, Intelligibile quiddam est: Euen so in Baptisme, the gift is granted by Water, which is a thing Sensible. But the Regeneration, and Renouation that therein is wrought, is a thing Spirituall. Wherefore, if M. Harding, vpon occasion of these words, will force his Reall and Fleshly presence in the one Sacrament, he must likewise force the same in the other.

Augustin. cont. Sermon. Arianorum, ca. 36.

Chrysostom. in Matt. hom. 83.

And forasmuch as these two Sacraments, being both of force like, these men to aduance their Fantasies in the one, by comparison so much abase the other: and specially for the better opening of Chrysostomes minde, I thinke it good, briefly, and by the way, somewhat to touch what the old Catholike Fathers haue written of Gods inuisible working in Laied on the Table.

in the Sacrament of Baptiſme. Dionyſius generally of all Myſteries writeth thus: Angeli Deum, &c. The Angels being creatures ſpirituall, ſo farre forth as it is lawfull for them, behold God, and his godly power. But we are led as we may, by Senſible outward tokens, (which he calleth Images) vnto the Contemplation of Heauenly things. The Fathers in the Councell of Nice ſay thus: Baptiſme muſt be conſidered, not with our Bodily eies, but with the eies of our minde. Thou ſeeſt the Water: Thinke thou of the power of God, that in the Water is hidden. Thinke thou, that the Water is full of heauenly fire, and of the Sanctification of the holy Ghoſt. Chryſoſtome ſpeaking likewiſe of Baptiſme, ſaith thus: Ego non aſpectu iudico ea, quæ videntur, ſed mentis oculis, &c. The things that I ſee, I iudge not by ſight, but by the eies of my minde. The Heathen, when he heareth the Water of Baptiſme, taketh it only for plaine Water: But I ſee not ſimply, or barely, that I ſee: I ſee the cleanſing of the Soule by the Spirit of God. So likewiſe ſaith Nazianzenus: Myſterium (Baptiſmi) maius eſt, quàm ea quæ videntur: The Myſterie of Baptiſme is greater, than it appeareth to the eie. So S. Ambroſe: Aliud eſt, quod Viſibiliter agitur: aliud quod Inuiſibiliter celebratur: In Baptiſme there is one thing done Viſibly to the eie: another thing is wrought Inuiſibly to the minde. Againe hee ſaith: Ne ſolis Corporis tui oculis credas: magis videtur, quod non videtur, &c. Beleeue not onely the bodily eies (in this Sacrament of Baptiſme:) the thing that is not ſeene, is better ſeene: The thing that thou ſeeſt, is corruptible: The thing that thou ſeeſt not, is for euer. To be ſhort, in conſideration of theſe Inuiſible effects, Tertullian ſaith: The holy Ghoſt commeth downe and halloweth the Water. S. Baſil ſaith: The Kingdome of Heauen is there ſet open. Chryſoſtome ſaith: God himſelfe in Baptiſme, by his Inuiſible Power holdeth thy head. S. Ambroſe ſaith: The Water hath the Grace of Chriſt: in it is the Preſence of the Trinitie. S. Bernard ſaith: Lauemur in ſanguine eius; Let vs be waſhed in his blood.

Dionyſ. Eccleſiaſt. hierar. c. 1.
Concil. Nicen. πάσῃ τοῖς πυρὸς ἐξ τοῦ ὕδατος.
Chryſoſtom. in 1. Corin. ca. 2. hom. 7.
Ego non ſimpliciter video, quod video.
Nazianzen. De ſancto Baptiſmate. μεῖζον τῶν ὁρωμένων ἐστὶ τὸ μυστήριον.
Ambroſ. de Spiritu ſancto. lib. 3. ca. 11.
Ambroſ. de his, qui initiantur Myſter. ca. 3.
Ter. de Baptiſ.
Baſil. de ſancto Baptiſmo.
Chryſoſtom. in Mat. hom. 51.
Amb. de Sacr. lib. 1. ca. 5.
Bernard. ſuper Miſſus eſt Gabriel. Serm. 3.

By the authorities of thus many Ancient Fathers it is plaine, that in the Sacrament of Baptiſme by the Senſible ſigne of Water, the Inuiſible Grace of God is giuen vnto vs. Wherefore, as M. Harding, by force of Chryſoſtomes words, proueth his Fleſhly Preſence in the one Sacrament, ſo may he by the force of the ſame words as well proue, that the Power of God, the Heauenly Fire, the Grace, and the Blod of Chriſt is Really, and Fleſhly Preſent in the other.

All this notwithſtanding, hee hopeth to finde ſome helpe in two words, vttered, as hee ſaith, in the Councell of Nice: Κεῖται, and Ἀληθῶς; One of which words, either of forgetfulneſſe, or of purpoſe, hee hath deuiſed, and ſet to of himſelfe. For as this whole Greeke Authoritie, alleged heere by M. Harding, was neuer found in the Old allowed Nicene Councell, but only hath beene ſought out, and publiſhed of late yeeres: euen ſo this word, Κεῖται, was neuer found in the Greecke, neither as it is commonly ſet abroad, nor, as it is alleged by D. Cuthbert Tonſtall.

Κεῖται. Ἀληθῶς
De Euchariſtia, lib. 1.

But let it be lawfull for M. Harding to vſe ſome corruption, and to doe in this place, as he commonly doth in other, the better to furniſh out the matter. Yet muſt this word, Κεῖται, which ſignifieth to be Set, or Placed, needs ſound a Reall Preſence? Or when S. Paul ſaith: Chriſtus habitat in cordibus noſtris per Fidem: Chriſt dwelleth in our hearts by Faith; muſt he needs meane, that Chriſt is Really and Fleſhly placed within our hearts? Verily, S. Hierome writing vnto Marcella of the holy Graue, wherein Chriſts Bodie ſometime was laied, hath theſe words: Quoties ingredimur in Sepulchrum Domini, toties iacere in ſindone cernimus Saluatorem: As often as wee enter into the Sepulcher of the Lord, ſo often we ſee our Sauiour lying in his ſhrowd. And in the Councell of Chalcedon it is written thus: In qua Scriptura duæ naturæ iacent? In what Scripture lie theſe two Natures of Chriſt? Heere is the ſelfe ſame word that M. Harding hath added of his owne to the Councell of Nice. Yet, I thinke, hee will not therefore ſay, that either the two Natures of Chriſt are Really contained in the Scriptures, or the very Bodie of Chriſt lieth ſtill ſhrowded Fleſhly and Really in the Graue. Againe, this word, Κεῖται, which ſignifieth to be Laied, or Placed, in the naturall ſignification requireth both ſituation of place, and alſo a bodily Deſcription, and order of parts. But M. Harding himſelfe in the next Article following ſaith: Chriſts Body is not heere by Locall Preſence, either by filling, or by changing of place: Therefore it followeth, that Chriſts Body is not laied on the Table by any Naturall or Fleſhly Preſence.

Hieronym. ad Marcellam.
Concil. Chalcedon. Actio. 1. κεῖται.
In the next Article, Diuiſion 1.

The words of the Councell of Nice, only withdraw vs from the Naturall & Viſible Elements of the Bread and the Wine, and require our Inner Spirituall ſight, & the contemplation of the minde. The words be plaine: Ne propoſito Pani, & Poculo humiliter intenti ſimus: That wee conſider not baſely the Bread and the Wine, that are ſet before vs. And therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith: In Sacramentis Fidelium dicitur, Surſum corda: In the Sacraments of the Faithfull it is ſaid, Lift vp your hearts. By which words wee are put in remembrance, that there is nothing in the action to be conſidered, but only Chriſt the Lambe of God,

Τῷ παρακειμένῳ ἄρτῳ, καὶ τῷ ποτηρίῳ
Auguſtin. de Bono perſeuerantiæ.

God, that hath taken away the ſinnes of the world. And therefore Chryſoſtome ſaith: Wee muſt become Eagles, and ſoare above, if we liſt to come neere to that Bodie. Thus with the Spirituall eies of our hearts wee ſee the Lambe of God. And as S. Ambroſe ſaith, Magis videtur quod non videtur: The thing is better ſeene, that (with our bodily eies) is not ſeene. For the ſame cauſe S. Auguſtine ſaith, In Sacramentis videndum eſt, non quid ſint, ſed quid oſtendant. Signa enim rerum ſunt, aliud exiſtentia, & aliud ſignificantia: In Sacraments wee muſt conſider, not what they be indeed, but what they repreſent. For they are tokens of things, being one thing in themſelues, and ſignifying another. And as touching our beholding of Chriſt in the Sacrament, in moſt plaine wiſe he writeth thus: Sic nos facit moueri, tanquam videamus Præſentem Dominum in Cruce: It worketh ſuch motions in vs, as if wee ſaw our Lord himſelfe Preſent vpon the Croſſe. And this is it that Euſebius Emiſſenus writeth, as hee is alleged of Gratian, Vt coleretur iugiter per Myſterium: & perennis illa victima viueret in Memoria, & Semper Præſens eſſet in Gratia: That the Body (that was once offered for our Price) ſhould euermore be worſhipped by a Myſterie: and that, that Euerlaſting Sacrifice ſhould liue in Remembrance, and be Preſent in Grace for euer. In this Spirituall ſort is Chriſt laid Preſent vpon the Table: but not in M. Hardings Groſſe and Fleſhly manner. And therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith in like ſenſe vnto the Faithfull Communicants: Vos eſtis in Menſa, vos eſtis in Calice: You are vpon the Table, you are in the Cuppe. As S. Auguſtine ſaith, The people is laid vpon the Table, euen ſo, and none otherwiſe, the Councell of Nice ſaith, The Lambe of God is laid vpon the Table.

Laid on the Table.

Chryſoſt. 1. Cor. hom. 24. Ambroſ. de his qui initiantur myſter. ca. 3. Auguſtin. contra Maximin. lib. 3. ca. 22. De Conſec. diſt. 2. Semel Chriſtus. Et in Pſal. 20. De Conſec. diſt. 2. Quia Corpus. Auguſtin. in Sermone ad Infantes. Citatur à Beda in 1. Cor. 10.

The other Greeke word, that M. Harding helpeth by, is, ἀληθῶς, which is, Verily, or Truly: and that, in his iudgement, ſoundeth no leſſe, than Really, or Fleſhly. And thus, although he hunt like a wanton Spaniell, and range at riot, and beat vp Butterflies, yet at the laſt he thinketh he hath found ſomewhat. Howbeit, I marueil he ſeeth no better his owne errour. For he might ſone haue knowen, that theſe two words, Truly, and Fleſhly, haue ſundry meanings: and that in the ſenſe, that Chriſt ſpake vnto the Iewes, the one of them doth vtterly exclude the other. For neither doth he that eateth groſſely, and ſenſibly with his teeth, eat Truly, and Verily, as Chriſt meant: nor doth he that eateth Spiritually with his Faith, eat Groſſely, and Fleſhly, as the Capernaits meant. Therefore it is great follie to ſay, Verily, and Fleſhly, are all one thing. Indeed, the Spirituall Eating of Chriſts Bodie by Faith, is the true Eating: And hee that Eateth the ſame moſt Spiritually, Eateth moſt truly. Otherwiſe Chriſt ſaith: Ego ſum vitis vera: I am the true Vine. S. Hierome calleth the Faithfull people, Vitem Veram: The true Vine. Cyrillus calleth Chriſt, Verum Manna: The True Manna. S. Hierome ſaith: Nos Verè ſumus vnus Panis: We are Verily one Bread. Origen ſaith: Apoſtoli verè erant Cœli: The Apoſtles verily were the Heauens. And to be ſhort, they were wont to ſing at the bleſſing of the Paſchall Taper, Hæc ſunt feſta Paſchalia, in quibus verè Agnus occiditur: This is the Paſchall Feaſt, wherein verily, and indeed the Lambe is ſlaine. By theſe few examples, both the difference betweene theſe two words, Truly, and Fleſhly, and alſo the ſlendernes of M. Hardings Collection may ſone appeare. For, notwithſtanding we doe verily Eat Chriſt, yet it followeth not, that we do Groſſely & Naturally Eat him with our bodily mouthes: and although Chriſt be verily meat, yet it followeth not, that he is therefore Really, and Fleſhly in the Sacrament. And therfore S. Auguſtine in this reſpect vtterly remoueth the naturall office of the Body. His words be plaine: Quid paras dentem, aut ventrem? Crede, & manducaſti: What prepareſt thou thy tooth, or thy belly? Beleeue, and thou haſt eaten. Againe, Credere in eum, hoc eſt manducare Panem Viuum: Beleeuing in him, is the Eating of the Bread of Life.

Iohan. 15. Hieronym. in 2. ca. Hierem. li. 1 Cyril. li. 3. ca. 24. in Iohan. Hieronym. ad Galat. ca. 4. Origen. in Geneſ. c. 1. hom. 1. In Manuali.

Auguſt. in Iohan. tract. 26.

M. Harding. The 9. Diuiſion.

And touching theſe termes: firſt, Verily, or (136) which is all one, Really, and Subſtantially, mee thinketh M. Iewel ſhould beare the more with vs for vſe of the ſame, ſith that Bucer himſelfe, one of the greateſt learned men of that ſide, hath allowed them: yea, and that after much writing againſt Luther in defence of Zwinglius, and Oecolampadius by him ſet foorth, and after that he had aſſured himſelfe of the truth in this Article by Diuine Inſpiration; as moſt conſtantly he affirmeth with theſe words: Hæc non Dubitamus diuinitus nobis, & per Scripturam reuelata de hoc Sacramento: Wee doubt not (ſaith he) but theſe things, concerning the Sacrament, be reuealed vnto vs from God, and by the Scripture. If you demand, where this may bee found: in the Acts of a Councell holden betweene the Lutherans and Zwinglians, for this very purpoſe in Martin Luthers houſe at Wittenberg, in the yeere of our Lord 1536. you ſhall finde theſe words: Audiuimus D Bucerum explicantem ſuam ſententiam de Sacramento Corporis & Sanguinis Domini, hoc modo: Cum Pane, & Vino, Verè, & Subſtantialiter adeſt, exhibetur, &c. Sumitur Corpus Chriſti, & Sanguis. Et Sacramentali Vnione Panis eſt Corpus Chriſti: & porrectus Pane, verè adeſt, & verè exhibetur Corpus Chriſti: Wee haue heard M. Bucer declaring his minde touching the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Lord, in this ſort; With the Bread and Wine, the Bodie of Chriſt, and his Blood is preſent, exhibited, and receiued Verily and Subſtantially. And by Sacramentall Vnion, the Bread is the Bodie of Chriſt; and the Bread being giuen, the Bodie of Chriſt is verily preſent, and verily deliuered.

The 136. vntruth. For theſe termes are not all one.

In reſponſione ad Luther.

Though

Though this opinion of Bucer, by which he receiued his former Zuinglian Hereſie, be in ſundrie points falſe and Hereticall, yet in this he agreeth with the Catholike Church againſt M. Iewels negatiue aſſertion, that the Body and Blood of Chriſt is preſent in the Sacrament Verily, that is, Truly, and Really, or Indeed, and Subſtantially: (137) wherein he ſpeaketh as the Ancient Fathers ſpake long before, a thouſand yeeres paſt.

The 137. Vntruth. For the Ancient Fathers in this matter of the Sacrament ſpake not ſo.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Hitherto M. Harding hath alleged neither ancient Doctor, nor Old Councell, to ſerue his purpoſe. The firſt that hee can finde, is Doctour Bucer, that died in Cambridge the fourth yeere of King Edward the Sixth, in the yeere of our Lord 1551. Of his iudgement heereis I will ſay nothing. What reaſons led him to yeild to the other ſide, for quietneſſe ſake, I remit it wholly vnto God. But thus much I may well and iuſtly ſay: If M. Harding could haue found any other Doctour, hee would not thus haue made his entrie with M. Bucer.

Touching that brotherly and ſober Conference, that was betweene D. Luther and D. Bucer, Philip Melanchthon, and other godly learned men of Germanie in the Vniuerſitie of Wittenberg, I ſee no great cauſe, why M. Harding ſhould thus ſport himſelfe with it, and call it a Councell. Hee might rather, and more iuſtly haue ſcoffed at the vaine Councell of the Eight Speciall Choſen Cardinals holden in Rome vnder Pope Paulus the third, Anno Domini 1538. two yeeres after that Conference at Wittenberg.

Concil. ſelect. Cardinalium Rome Anno 1538.

For if he will compare voices, they of Wittenberg were moe in number: if knowledge, they were better learned: if Purpoſes, they ſought Peace in Truth, and the Glory of God: if Iſſue, God hath bleſſed their doings, and giuen force, and increaſe vnto his word, as it appeareth this day. His holy name be praiſed therefore for euer. But theſe eight picked Cardinals, after great ſtudie, and long debating of the matter, eſpied out onely ſuch faults, as euery Child might haue ſone found without ſtudie: and yet neuer redreſſed any of the ſame.

If Maſter Harding had beene in the Apoſtles times, perhaps hee would haue made ſome ſport at their Councels. For, where, or in what houſe aſſembled they together? What Biſhop or Phariſie was among them? Certainly Saint Auguſtine had Conference and Diſputation with Paſcentius the Arian at Hippo in the priuate houſe of one Anitius: and yet was neuer ſcoffed at for his doing. Thus there be euer ſome that laugh, and ſcorne at the repairing of Hieruſalem. Origen ſaith: Inimici Veritatis videntes, ſine Philoſophia conſurgere muros Euangelij, cum irriſione dicunt, Hoc facilè poſſe deſtrui calliditate Sermonum, & per aſturas fallacias: The enemies of the Truth ſeeing the walles of the Goſpell riſe without worldly policie, ſay ſcornefully among themſelues, All this by our craftie ſpeech and falſhood, will ſoone be ouerthrowen. But hee that ſitteth in Heauen, will laugh them to ſcorne.

Auguſt. epiſt. 178. in Domo Anitiana. Orig. in Cantica Cant. ho. 4.

M. Harding. The 10. Diuiſion.

Let Chryſoſtome for proofe of this be in ſtead of many that might bee alleged. His words be theſe: Nos ſecum in vnam (vt ita dicam) Maſſam reduxit, neque id fide ſolùm, ſed re ipſa Corpus ſuum efficit. By this Sacrament (ſaith he) Chriſt reduceth vs (as it were) into one lumpe with himſelfe, and that not by Faith only: but he maketh vs his owne Body in very deed, Re ipſa: which is no other to ſay, than Really. * The other Aduerbs, Corporally, Carnally, Naturally, be found in the Fathers not ſeldome: ſpecially where they diſpute againſt the Arians. And therefore it had beene more conuenient for M. Iewel, to haue modeſtly interpreted them, than vtterly to haue denied them. The old Fathers of the Greeke and Latine Church, deny that faithfull people haue an habitude or diſpoſition, Vnion or Coniunction, with Chriſt onely by Faith, and Charitie, or that wee are ſpiritually ioined and vnited to him only by hope, loue, religion, obedience and will. Yea further they affirme, that by the vertue and efficacie of this Sacrament duly and worthily receiued, Chriſt is Really, and indeed, commmunicated by true Communication, and participation of the nature and Subſtance of his Body and Blood, and that hee is, and dwelleth in vs truly, becauſe of our receiuing the ſame in this Sacrament. The benefit whereof is ſuch, as we be in Chriſt, and Chriſt in vs, according to that he ſaith: Qui manducat meam carnem, manet in me, & ego in illo: Who eateth my Fleſh, he dwelleth in me, and I in him. The which dwelling, vnion, and ioining together of him with vs, and of vs with him, that it might the better be expreſſed, and recommended vnto vs; they thought good in their writings to vſe the aforeſaid Aduerbs.

In 26. cap. Matth. Homil. 83.

Chriſt maketh himſelfe one with vs; not with the Sacrament.

* Vntruth, as afore.

For they proued the ſame by the Sacrament of Baptiſme, by Faith, by the Birth of Chriſt, &c.

Hilarius writing againſt the Arians, alleging the words of Chriſt, 17. Iohn: Vt omnes vnum ſint, ſicut tu Pater in me, & ego in te, vt & ipſi in nobis vnum ſint: That all may be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, they alſo may be one in vs: going about by thoſe words to ſhew, that the Sonne and the Father were not one in Nature, and Subſtance, but onely in Concord and Vnitie of Will: among other many and long ſentences for proofe of vnitie in Subſtance, both betweene Chriſt and the Father, and alſo betweene Chriſt and vs, hath theſe words: Si enim verè Verbum caro factum eſt, & nos verè Verbum carnem Cibo Dominico ſumimus, quomodo non Naturaliter manere in nobis exiſtimandus eſt, qui & Naturam Carnis noſtræ iam inſeparabilem ſibi homo natus aſſumpſit, & Naturam Carnis ſuæ ad Naturam æternitatis ſub Sacramento nobis Communicandæ Carnis admiſcuit? If the Word be made Fleſh verily, and wee receiue the Word being Fleſh in our Lords meat verily; how is it to bee thought not to dwell in vs naturally, who both hath taken the nature of our fleſh

Flesh now inseparable to himselfe, in that he is borne man, and also hath mingled the nature of his owne flesh to the nature of his euerlastingnesse vnder the Sacrament of his flesh to be receiued of vs in the Communion? There afterward this word, Naturaliter, in this sense, that by the Sacrament worthily receiued, Christ is in vs, and we in Christ naturally, that is, in truth of nature, is sundrie times put and rehearsed: whoso listeth to read further his eighth booke, De Trinitate, hee shall finde him agnise, * Manentem in nobis carnaliter Filium, That the Sonne of God (through the Sacrament) dwelleth in vs Carnally, that is, in truth of flesh, and that by the same Sacrament, we with him, and hee with vs are vnited and knit together, Corporaliter & Inseparabiliter, Corporally and Inseparably, for they bee his very words. Gregory Nyssene speaking to this purpose, saith: Panis qui de Cœlo descendit, non incorporea quædam res est. Quo enim pacto res incorporea corporitibus fiet? res verò quæ incorporea non est, corpus omninò est. Huius Corporis panem non aratio, non satio, non agricolarum opus efficit, sed terra intacta permansit: & tamen pane plena fuit, quo famescentes, Mysterium Virginis perdocti, facilè saturantur: (138) which words report so plainly the truth of Christs Body in the Sacrament, as all maner of figure and signification must be excluded. And thus they may be Englished: The Bread that came downe from Heauen, is not a bodilesse thing. For by what meane shall a bodilesse thing bee made meat to a body? And the thing which is not bodilesse is a body, without doubt. It is not earing nor sowing, not the worke of tillers, that hath brought foorth the Bread of this Body; but the earth which remained vntouched, and yet was full of the Bread, whereof they that wax hungrie, being thorowly taught the Mysterie of the Virgin, soone haue their fill. Of these words may easily bee inferred a conclusion, that in the Sacrament is Christ, and that in the same we receiue him Corporally, that is, in veritie and substance of his Body; Forasmuch as that is there, and that is of vs receiued, which was brought foorth and borne of the Virgin Mary.

S Hilarie saith, Christ dwelleth Naturally in vs: but not in the Sacrament.
* Not in the Sacrament, but in vs

Iulian. vita Mss.

The 138. vntruth. For Gregory Nyssenus in this place speaketh not one word of the Sacrament.

Cyrillus that ancient Father and worthy Bishop of Alexandria, for confirmation of the Catholike Faith in this point, saith thus: Non negamus vtrà nos Fide, Charitateque syncera Christo Spiritualiter coniungi: Sed nullam nobis Coniunctionis rationem secundum Carnem cum illo esse, id profectò pernegamus, idque a Diuinis Scripturis omninò alienum dicimus: We deny not, but that we are ioined Spiritually with Christ, by right Faith, and pure Charitie, but that wee haue no maner of ioining with him according to the Flesh (which is one as to say Carnaliter, Carnally) that wee vtterly denie and say, that it is not agreeable with the Scriptures. Againe, lest any man should thinke this ioining of vs and Christ together to be (139) by other meanes, than by the Participation of his Body in the Sacrament, in the same place afterward he saith further: An fortassis putat ignotam nobis Mysticæ Benedictionis virtutem esse? Quæ cùm in nobis fiat, nempe Corporaliter quoque facit Communicatione Corporis Christi, Christum in nobis habitare? What, troweth this Arian Heretike perhaps, that we know not the vertue of the Mysticall blessing? (whereby is meant this Sacrament) which when it is become to be in vs, doth it not cause Christ to dwell in vs Corporally by receiuing of Christs Body in the Communion? And after this he saith as plainly, that Christ is in vs, Non habitudine solùm, quæ per Charitatem intelligitur, verumetiam & Participatione Naturali: Not by Charity only, but also by Naturall Participation.

Cyrill. lib. 10. in Ioan.

The 139. vntruth. For Christ dwelleth in vs, and we are incorporate into him by Baptisme &c. as shall appeare.

In vs.

The same Cyril saith in another place, that through the holy Communion of Christs Body, wee are ioined to him in Naturall Vnion; Quis enim eos, qui vnius Sancti Corporis vnione in vno Christo vniti sunt, ab hac Naturali vnione alienos putabit? Who will thinke (saith he) that they which be vnited together by the Vnion of that one holy Body in one Christ, be not of this Naturall Vnion? Hee calleth this also a Corporall Vnion in the same Booke, and at length after large discussion, how wee bee vnited vnto Christ, not onely by Charitie and obedience of Religion, but also in substance, concludeth thus: Sed de Vnione Corporali satis: But wee haue treated enough of the Corporall Vnion. Yet afterward in diuers sentences hee vseth these Aduerbs (140) for declaring of the veritie of Christs Body in the Sacrament, Naturaliter, Substantialiter, secundùm Carnem, or Carnaliter, Corporaliter, as most manifestly in the 27. Chapter of the same Booke: Corporaliter Filius per benedictionem mysticam nobis, vt homo vnitur, Spiritualiter autem vt Deus: The Sonne of God is vnited vnto vs Corporally, as man; and Spiritually, as God.

Lib. 11. cap. 26.

The 140. vntruth. For heere is not one word of presence in the Sacrament.

Againe, whereas he saith there; Filium Dei natura Patri vnitum Corporaliter, Substantialiterque accipientes, clarificamur, glorificamurque, &c. We receiuing the Sonne of God, vnited to the Father by nature Corporally, and Substantially, are clarified, and glorified, or made glorious, being made partakers of the Supreme nature. The like saying hee hath Lib. 12. cap. 58. Now this being and remaining of Christ in vs, and of vs in Christ Naturally and Carnally, and this vniting of vs and Christ together Corporally, presupposeth a participation of his very Body (141) which Body wee cannot truly participate, but in this blessed Sacrament. And therefore Christ is in the Sacrament, Naturally, Carnally, Corporally, that is to say, according to the truth of his Nature, of his Flesh, and of his Body. (142) For were not hee so in the Sacrament, we could not be ioined vnto him, nor he and wee could not bee ioined and vnited together Corporally.

The 141. vntruth, ioined with pernicious and dangerous Doctrine.
The 142. vntruth. For Christ is likewise ioined Corporally to vs by the Sacrament of Baptisme.

Diuers other ancient Fathers haue vsed the like maner of speech: but none so much as Hilarius and Cyrillus: (143) whereby they vnderstand, that Christ is present in the Sacrament, as we haue said, according to the truth of his substance, of his Nature, of his Flesh, of his Body and Blood.

The 143. vntruth. For they neither vnderstand so, nor write so.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Now at the last M. Harding draweth nere the matter, and bringeth forth the old Fathers with these very Termes, Really, Substantially, Corporally, Carnally, &c. and allegeth these few, as he saith, in stead of many, hauing indede no moe to bring. And although these Fathers speake not any one word, that is either denied by vs, or any wise serueth to this purpose, yet he cunningly leadeth away the eies of the ignorant, with the shew of old names, and like a Iugglar, changeth the naturall countenance of things, and maketh them appeare what him listeth.

For whereas he hath taken in hand to proue, that Christs Body is Really and Fleshly in the Sacrament, he finding his weakenesse, and want therein, altereth the whole case, and proueth that Christs Bodie is Really, Fleshly, and Naturally within vs. But this matter was not in question, and therefore needeth no proofe at all. Herein standeth the Chriſt dwelleth in vs.

the whole guile: and thus the ſimple is deceiued. To this end M. Harding ſo vſeth the words and witneſſe of theſe Holy Fathers, as Cacus the Outlaw ſometime vſed Hercules Kine: becauſe hee cannot handſomely driue them forward, hee taketh them by the tailes, and pulleth them backward.

But becauſe M. Harding will hereof reaſon thus: If Chriſts Body by meane of the Sacrament be Really and Carnally in vs: it is likely the ſame Body is alſo Really, and Carnally in the Sacrament. For anſwer hereunto, it ſhall be neceſſary, firſt to vnderſtand, how many waies Chriſts Body dwelleth in our Bodies, and therby afterward to view M. Hardings reaſon. Foure ſpeciall meanes there be, whereby Chriſt dwelleth in vs, and wee in him: His Natiuity, whereby he embraced vs: Our Faith, whereby wee embrace him: The Sacrament of Baptiſme: and the Sacrament of his Body. By euery of theſe meanes, Chriſts Body dwelleth in our Bodies: and that not by way of Imagination, or by Figure, or Fantaſie: but Really, Naturally, Subſtantially, Fleſhly, and indeed.

Bernar. de Epiph. Serm. 1. And touching Chriſts Natiuitie, S. Bernard ſaith: Corpus Chriſti de meo eſt, & meum eſt: Paruulus enim natus eſt nobis, & Filius datus eſt nobis: The Body of Chriſt is of my Body, and is now become mine: For a Babe is borne vnto vs: and a Sonne is giuen vnto vs. So ſaith S. Baſil: Participes facti ſumus Verbi, & Sapientiæ per Incarnationem & Senſibilem vitam. Carnem enim, & Sanguinem appellauit omnem illam Myſticam Conuerſationem: Wee are partakers of the Word, and of the Wiſdome (which is Chriſt) by his Incarnation, and by his Senſible life. For Fleſh and Blood hee called all his Myſticall Converſation. * So ſaith Gregorius Nyſſenus: Corpus Chriſti eſt omnis humana Natura, cui admixtus eſt: His Body is all mankinde, whereunto he is mingled. And thus, Chriſt being in the Wombe of the Bleſſed Virgin, became Fleſh of our Fleſh, and Bone of our Bones. And in that ſenſe, S. Iohn ſaith, Verbum Caro factum eſt, & habitauit in nobis: The Word was made Fleſh, and dwelt in vs. And therefore Chriſt calleth himſelfe the Vine, and vs the Branches: S. Paul calleth Chriſt the Head, and vs the Body: which bee names of moſt neere and Naturall Coniunction.

Touching Faith, S. Paul ſaith: Chriſtus habitat in Cordibus noſtris per Fidem: Chriſt by Faith dwelleth in our hearts. And S. Peter ſaith: Hereby we are made partakers of the Diuine Nature. So ſaith Ignatius: By his Paſſion and Reſurrection (that is, by our Faith in the ſame) we are made the members of his Body.

And notwithſtanding by theſe meanes Chriſt be in vs, and wee in him, yet foraſmuch as both our Life, and Faith is vnperfect, as we daily deſire God to amend our Life, and to augment our Faith, euen ſo we daily pray, that this Coniunction betweene Chriſt and vs may bee increaſed, that Chriſt may come nearer and nearer into vs, and that wee may grow into a perfect man in him. And to this end God hath ſpecially appointed vs his holy Sacraments. And therefore S. Paul ſaith, concerning the Sacrament of Baptiſme: They that are Baptized, are planted into Chriſt: they haue put Chriſt vpon them: by one Spirit, they are Baptized into one Body. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Ad hoc Baptiſmus valet, vt Baptizati Chriſto incorporentur: This is the vſe of Baptiſme, that they that bee Baptized, may be incorporate into Chriſt. Which word, Incorporari, hee vſeth alſo in ſundrie other places, ſpeaking of Baptiſme. In this reſpect Dionyſius ſaith: Baptizati tranſimus in Deum: Being Baptized, we are turned into God. And Pachymeres ſaith: Wee are graft into Chriſt, and made one nature with him by holy Baptiſme.

Ignatius ad Trallian. Ephes. 4. Rom. 6. Galat. 3. 1. Cor. 12. De Conſe. diſt. 4. Ad hoc. De Eccleſiaſt. Hierar. cap. 1. Pachymeres in Dionyſ. ca. 4. συμφυτοι γεγονότες αυτῷ διὰ τοῦ βαπτίσματος.

Thus much may ſuffice to deſcrie M. Hardings ſlender argument. For notwithſtanding by the Sacrament of Baptiſme Chriſt bee Naturally in vs, yet may not he therefore conclude, that Chriſt is Naturally in the Sacrament of Baptiſme. Bonauentura ſaith well: Non eſt aliquo modo dicendum, quòd Gratia continetur in Sacramentis eſſentialiter, tanquam aqua in vaſe. Hoc enim dicere, eſt erroneum. Sed dicuntur continere Gratiam, quia eam Significant: We may not in any wiſe ſay, that the Grace of God is conteined in the Sacraments, as Water in a Veſſell. For ſo to ſay, it were an errour. But they are ſaid to containe Gods Grace, becauſe they Signifie Gods Grace.

Bonauent. in 4. Sent. Diſt. 1. qua. 3.

But Chryſoſtome ſaith: Chriſt mingleth his Bodie with our Bodies, and driueth vs, as it were, into one lumpe of dough with himſelfe. This place would haue ſtood M. Harding in better ſtead, if Chryſoſtome had ſaid, Chriſt mingleth his Bodie with the Sacrament, and driueth himſelfe and it into one lumpe. For this is it, that ſhould be proued. Neither will M. Harding ſay, That either Chriſt mingleth himſelfe with vs, or wee are made one lumpe of dough with him ſimply and according to the Letter, and without Figure. Whereof hee ſeeth, it muſt needs follow, that much leſſe is Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, according to that he would haue the Letter to ſound, Plainly, Simply, or as he ſaith, Really and Fleſhly, and without Figure. It is a vehement, and a hot kinde of ſpeech, ſuch as Chryſoſtome was moſt delighted with, farre paſſing the common ſenſe,

ſenſe and courſe of truth: and therefore he himſelfe thought it neceſſarie to correct and to qualifie the rigour of the ſame, by theſe words, Vt ita dicam, which is, As it were, or, If I may be bold ſo to ſay. In ſuch phraſe of talke Anacletus ſaith: In oleo virtus Spiritus Sancti inuiſibilis permiſta eſt: The inuiſible power of the Holy Ghoſt is mingled with the Oile. And Alexander ſaith: In Sacramentorum Oblationibus Paſſio Domini miſcenda eſt: The Paſſion of Chriſt muſt be mingled with the Oblations of the Sacraments. So ſaith Gregorius Nyſſenus of S. Steuen: Gratia Sancti Spiritus permixtus, & contemperatus, per illum ſublatus, & euectus eſt ad contemplationem Dei: S. Steuen being mingled and tempered with the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt, was by him aduanced, and taken vp to the ſight of God. These and other ſuch like ſayings of holy Fathers, may not be hardly preſt according to the ſound of the letter: but rather muſt be gently expounded and qualified, according to the ſenſe and meaning of the Writer.

Chriſt mingled with vs.

Anacle. epiſt. 2. Inter Decret. Alexandri 1. Greg. Nyſſen. de S. Stephano.

Chryſoſtomes purpoſe was, by this word Maſſa, which in this place ſignifieth a lumpe of dough, to make reſemblance vnto theſe words of S. Paul, We are one Loafe, and one Body: And by ſuch Maieſtie of ſpeech, the more to quicken and lift vp our ſpirits, and to cauſe vs thereby the better to conſider that wonderfull coniunction and knitting that is betweene Chriſt and vs, whereby either is in other, he in vs, and we in him: and that euen in one perſon: in ſuch ſort as he is neither in the Angels, nor in the Archangels, nor in any other power in Heauen. And therefore S. Paul ſaith: The Angels hee tooke not, but hee tooke the ſeed of Abraham. But this wonderfull Coniunction, and, as Chryſoſtome calleth it, this mixture is wrought, not onely in the holy Myſteries, but alſo in the Sacrament of Baptiſme. And in that ſenſe Leo ſaith: Suſceptus à Chriſto, Chriſtumque ſuſcipiens, non eſt idem poſt Lauacrum, qui ante Baptiſmum fuit: Sed Corpus Regenerati ſit Caro Crucifixi: A man receiued of Chriſt, and receiuing Chriſt (in Baptiſme) is not the ſame after Baptiſme, that he was before: But the Body of him that is Regenerate, is made the Fleſh of him that was Crucified. Likewiſe S. Auguſtine ſaith: Ergo gratulemur, & agamus gratias, non ſolùm nos Chriſtianos factos eſſe, ſed etiam Chriſtum. Intelligitis, Fratres, Gratiam Dei ſuper nos: Capitis: Admiramini: Gaudete: Chriſtus facti ſumus. Si enim ille Caput eſt, & nos membra, totus ille homo, & nos: Let vs reioice and giue thankes, that wee are not onely made Chriſtian men, but alſo made Chriſt. Brethren ye vnderſtand the grace of God, that is vpon vs: Ye vnderſtand it: Ye wonder at it: Reioice yee: We are made Chriſt. For if he be the head, and we the members, both he and we are one whole man.

Corinth. 10.

Ad Hebr. 2.

Leo Serm. 14. De Paſſione.

Auguſt. in Iohan. Tract. 21.

Now, gentle Reader, as Leo ſaith, our Bodies by Baptiſme are made Chriſts Fleſh: as S. Auguſtine ſaith, we are made Chriſt himſelfe: and as Gregorie Nyſſene ſaith, Saint Steuen was tempered and mingled with the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt: euen ſo, and in the ſame ſenſe Chryſoſtome ſaith: We are made one lumpe of dough with Chriſt, and Chriſt hath tempered and mingled himſelfe with vs. These things conſidered, the force of M. Hardings reaſon muſt needes faile. Certainely Primaſius ſaith: As the Breaking of this Bread is the Partaking of the Body of our Lord, euen ſo the Bread of Idols is the Partaking of Diuels. And addeth further: Si de eodem Pane manducamus, quo Idololatræ, vnum cum illis Corpus efficimur: If we eat of one Bread with Idolaters, wee are made one Body with them.

Primaſius in 1. Corinth. 11.

These other three authorities, of Hilarie, Gregorie Nyſſene and Cyril, may well bee diſcharged with one anſwer: ſauing that Gregory Nyſſene an old Writer, newly ſet abroad with ſundry corruptions, is brought in only to make a ſhew, not ſpeaking any one word, neither of Chriſts Naturall dwelling in vs, nor of the Sacrament. His purpoſe was only to ſpeake of Chriſts Birth, and of that Bodie which hee receiued of the Bleſſed Virgin, which was not a ſhadow, or a fantaſie, but Reall, Fleſhly, and indeed. And in like maner of ſpeech S. Hierome ſaith: Triticum, de quo Panis Cœleſtis efficitur, illud eſt, de quo loquitur Dominus, Caro mea verè eſt cibus: The wheat whereof the Heauenly Bread is made, is that, of which Our Lord ſaith, My Fleſh is meat indeed. And to this purpoſe Amphilochius ſaith, as hee is alleged by Cyrillus: Niſi Chriſtus natus fuiſſet Carnaliter, tu natus non fuiſſes Spiritualiter: Vnleſſe Chriſt had beene borne Carnally, thou haddeſt not beene borne Spiritually. Touching Gregorius Nyſſenus, as he ſaith, Chriſt is made our Bread, ſo hee ſaith likewiſe in the ſame place: Quicquid aſſumenti conueniens ſit, in id mutatur. Fit perfectioribus ſolidus cibus, inferioribus olus, infantibus lac: Whatſoeuer thing is conuenient for the receiuer, into the ſame thing Chriſt turneth himſelfe. He becommeth ſtrong meat vnto the perfect; Herbes vnto the weaker; and Milke vnto Children. And as Chriſt is Herbes or Milke, euen ſo, and none otherwiſe, he is Bread or Fleſh. Neither will this ancient Father agree vnto M. Hardings errour, That we cannot receiue Chriſts Bodie, but onely in the Sacrament. For euen in the ſame place hee holdeth the contrarie. His words bee theſe: Qui abundanter ex Apoſtolicis fontibus biberit, is iam totum recepit Chriſtum:

Gregorius Nyſſenus.

Hieronym. in Eſai. cap. 62.

Cyrillus in Apologetico.

Greg. Nyſſen. in vita Moſis.

Ibidem.

Corporally, Naturally.

Whoſo hath abundantly drunken of the Apoſtles ſprings, hath already receiued whole Chriſt. The argument, that M. Harding gathereth hereof, muſt néds ſtand thus: Chriſt was borne of the Virgin: Ergo, His Body is Really and Fleſhly in the Sacrament. This concluſion is but childiſh: Yet if he conclude not thus, he concludeth nothing.

Hilarius de Trinitate, li. 8.

The greateſt weight of this matter lieth vpon two Old Fathers, Cyril and Hilary. For Hilary ſaith: We receiue Chriſt, verè ſub myſterio, verily vnder a myſterie: And either of them vſeth theſe termes, Carnally, Corporally, Naturally: and that not once or twice, but in ſundrie places. The authorities bée great: the words bée plaine. But God be thanked, theſe places be common, and not vnknowen. And for anſwer of the ſame, once againe remember, good Chriſtian Reader, that notwithſtanding M. Harding haue ſound in theſe two Fathers, that Chriſts Body is Corporally and Naturally in vs, yet hath hée not hitherto found that thing that he ſought for, neither in theſe Fathers, nor in any other: that is, that Chriſts Body is Naturally or Corporally in the Sacrament. Wherefore I much maruell, that either hee would auouch this matter ſo ſtrongly, finding himſelfe ſo weake: or elſe thus vainly dally, and ſhew one thing for another, and deceiue his Reader.

Auguſtin. in Pſalm. 103.

That we verily and vndoubtedly receiue Chriſts Bodie in the Sacrament it is neither denied, nor in queſtion. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Panis eſt Cordis: Intus eſuri: intus ſiti: It is the Bread of the Heart: Hunger thou within: Thirſt thou within. And the thing that is inwardly receiued in Faith, and in Spirit, is receiued verily and indéd. S. Bernard meant no falſhood when he ſaid: Lauemur in Sanguine eius: Let vs bee waſht in the Blood of Chriſt. Notwithſtanding he meant not, that our Bodies Really, and indéd ſhould bée waſht with the Blood of Chriſt. And whereas S. Auguſtine ſaith: Quid paras dentem & ventrem? Crede & manducaſti: What prepareſt thou thy tooth and thy belly? Beleeue, and thou haſt eaten: We may not thinke that hée meant any fantaſticall or falſe eating: notwithſtanding hée vtterly refuſeth in this behalfe, both the teeth and the bellie, and all other office of the Body. And therefore Cyrillus ſaith: Sacramentum noſtrum hominis manducationem non aſſerit, mentes credentium ad craſſas cogitationes irreligiosè introducens: Our Sacrament teacheth vs not to eat a man (with the materiall mouth of our Bodie) in vngodly ſort leading the mindes of the faithfull vnto groſſe cogitations. It is a holy Myſterie, and a heauenly action, forcing our mindes vp into Heauen, and there teaching vs to eat the Bodie of Chriſt, & to drinke his Blood: not outwardly by the ſeruice of our Bodies, but inwardly by our Faith, & that verily and indéd. The truth hereof ſtandeth not in any Real, or Corporall Preſence, but as Hilarius ſaith, in a Myſterie, which is in a Sacrament: whereby outwardly & vnto our ſenſes, we erpreſſe that thing in our Bodies, that muſt be wrought inwardly in our mindes. For this cauſe Dionyſius ſaith: Regeneratio naturali illa purgatione, quæ fit per aquam, Corporali quodam modo denuntiat animæ purgationem: Our Regeneration, which wee haue in Baptiſme, by that Naturall Purgation, that is wrought by Water, in a certaine bodily ſort teacheth vs the purgation of the minde. Thus are wée truly waſht with Chriſts Blood in the holy Myſterie of Baptiſme: thus are wée truly and indéd fed with Chriſts Body in the holy Myſterie of his Supper. And albeit Chriſt be in neither of theſe Myſteries in Bodily and Fleſhly Preſence, yet doth not that thing any wiſe hinder, either the Subſtance of the holy Myſterie, or the Truth of our receiuing. And for that cauſe S. Auguſtine ſaith: Non fallit nos Apoſtolus, qui dicit, Chriſtum habitare in cordibus noſtris per Fidem. In te eſt, quia ipſa fides in te eſt: The Apoſtle deceiueth vs not in ſaying, that Chriſt dwelleth in our hearts by Faith. He is in thee (not Really, or Bodily, but) becauſe his Faith is within thee. M. Harding will replie: This cannot ſuffice. For Cyril, and Hilary ſay, That Chriſt, not onely by Faith, but alſo Corporally, Carnally, and Naturally is within vs. Theſe words in their owne rigour, without ſome gentle conſtruction, ſeeme very hard. Euen ſo Hilarius in the ſame Booke of the Trinitie, ſaith: That we are one with God the Father, and the Son, not only by Adoption or Conſent of mind, but alſo by Nature. Which ſaying, according to the ſound of the Letter, cannot be true. Therefore the Fathers haue bœne faine to expound and to mollifie ſuch violent and exceſſiue kindes of ſpéech. Chryſoſtome where hée ſaith, Wee are made one lumpe with Chriſt, addeth, as it is ſaid before, his correction withall, Vt ita dicam, As it were, or, If I may vſe ſuch manner of ſpeech. In like manner ſaith S. Auguſtine: Qui in Chriſtum credit, credendo in Chriſtum venit, & in eum Chriſtus, & quodammodo vnitur in eum, & membrum in Corpore eius efficitur: Hee that beleeueth in Chriſt, by beleeuing commeth into Chriſt, and Chriſt into him, and, after a certaine maner, is vnited vnto him, and made a member in his Body. In a maner, he ſaith, but not according to the force of the letter. Againe hee expoundeth this word, Corporaliter, in this wiſe: Non vmbraliter, ſed verè, & ſolidè: Not, as in a ſhadow, but truly, and perfectly. So Cyrillus expoundeth his owne meaning: Naturalis vnio non aliud eſt, Dionyſ. Eccleſiaſt. hierar. ca. 2. σωματικώτερον ἐστὶ διαγόμενον.

Auguſtin. de verbis Apoſtoli Sermon. 16. Hilarius lib. 8. de Trinitate. Non tantùm adoptione, aut conſenſu, ſed etiam natura. Chryſoſtom. in Matt. hom. 83. Auguſtin. de Verbis Domini ſecund. Iohan. Sermon. 60. Auguſtin. in Pſalm. 67. Cyrillus in Apologetico, ad Anathem. 3.

quàm

quàm vera. Natura ſumus filij iræ, id eſt, verè: Naturall Vnion is nothing elſe, but a true Vnion. Wee are by Nature the children of Anger, that is, we are indeed and truly the children of Anger. In which ſenſe S. Paul ſaith: Gentes factæ ſunt Cohæredes, & Concorporales, & Comparticipes promiſſionis in Chriſto Ieſu: The Heathens are become Coinheritours, Concorporall, and partakers of the promiſe in Chriſt Ieſus. Thus much of theſe woꝛds Coꝛpoꝛally, Naturally, &c. Whereby is meant a full perfect ſpirituall Coniunction, excluding all maner of Imagination oꝛ fantaſie: not a Gꝛoſſe and Fleſhly being of Chꝛiſts Body in our Bodies, accoꝛding to the appearance of the Letter. Otherwiſe there muſt nꝛds follow this great inconvenience, that our Bodies muſt be in like maner Coꝛpoꝛally, Naturally, and Fleſhly in Chꝛiſts Body. Foꝛ Hilarius ſaith: Nos quoque in eo ſumus Naturaliter: Wee alſo are Naturally in him. And Cyrillus, as hꝛ ſaith, Chriſt is Corporally in vs: ſo hꝛ ſaith, We are Corporally in Chriſt.

Corporally, Naturally.

Epheſ. 2. συσσώματα.

Hil. de Tri. l. 8. Cyril. in Iohan. lib. 10. cap. 13.

Further, that we be thus in Chꝛiſt, and Chꝛiſt in vs, requiꝛeth not any Coꝛpoꝛall oꝛ Locall Being, as in things Naturall. Wꝛ aꝛe in Chꝛiſt ſitting in Heauen: and Chꝛiſt ſitting in Hequen is hꝛre in vs, not by a Naturall, but by a ſpirituall meane of Being. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Poſtquam ex mortuis Reſurrexit, & Aſcendit ad Patrem, eſt in nobis per Spiritum: After that Chriſt is Riſen from the dead, and Aſcended vnto his Father, he is in vs by his Spirit. Which ſaying agꝛeth well with theſe woꝛds of S. Baſil: Paulus ait, Si quis Spiritum Chriſti non habet, hic non eſt eius. Deinde addit, Si tamen Chriſtus ſit in vobis: ac ſi diceret, Si Spiritus Chriſti ſit in vobis: S. Paul ſaith, If any man haue not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is not of him. Hee addeth further theſe words: If Chriſt be in you: which is as much as if he had ſaid, If the Spirit of Chriſt be within you. So likewiſe S. Auguſtine imagineth Chꝛiſt to ſay vnto Mary Maudlen: Aſcendam ad Patrem meum: tum tange me: I will aſcend vp vnto my Father: then touch thou me. Meaning thereby, that diſtance of place cannot hinder Spirituall touching. Againe S. Auguſtine imagineth Chꝛiſt thus to ſay vnto the people: Qui venit ad me, incorporatur mihi: He that commeth vnto me, is Incorporate into me. He addeth of his owne: Veniamus ad eum: Incremus ad eum: Incorporemur ei: Let vs goe vnto him: let vs enter vnto him: let vs be Incorporate into him. Thus, notwithſtanding Chꝛiſt were in Heauen, and diſtant in place, yet was hꝛ pꝛeſent in S. Paul: foꝛ ſo S. Paul ſaith, Will ye haue a triall of Chriſt, that ſpeaketh within me? This Coniunction is Spirituall, and theꝛefoꝛe nꝛdeth not, neither Circumſtance of Place, noꝛ Coꝛpoꝛall Pꝛeſence. Likewiſe Saint Cyprian ſaith: Noſtra & Chriſti Coniunctio, nec miſcet Perſonas, nec vnit Subſtantias: ſed affectus conſociat, & conſœderat voluntates: The Coniunction that is betweene Chriſt and vs, neither doth mingle perſons, nor vnite Subſtances: but it doth knit our affects together, and ioine our willes. Yet notwithſtanding, the ſame Coniunction, becauſe it is Spirituall, true, ful, and perfect, theꝛefoꝛe is exꝛpꝛeſſed of theſe holy Fathers by this terme, Coꝛpoꝛall: which remoueth all maner light, and Accidentall ioining: and Naturall, whereby all maner Imagination oꝛ Fantaſie, and Coniunction only of Will and Conſent is excluded: not that Chꝛiſts Body is Coꝛpoꝛally oꝛ Naturally in our Body, as is befoꝛe ſaid: no moꝛe than our Bodies are Coꝛpoꝛally oꝛ Naturally in Chꝛiſts Body: but that we haue life in vs, and are become Immoꝛtall, becauſe by Faith and Spirit, we are partakers of the Naturall Body of Chꝛiſt. M. Harding ſaith: We are thus ioined vnto Chꝛiſt, and haue him Coꝛpoꝛally within vs, onely by receiuing the Sacrament, and by none other meanes. This is vtterly vntrue, as it is already pꝛoued, by the authoꝛities of S. Auguſtine, S. Baſil, Gregory Nazianzene, Leo, Ignatius, Bernard, and other holy Fathers: neither doth either Cyrillus oꝛ Hilarie ſo auouch it. Certainly, neither haue they all Chꝛiſt dwelling in them, that receiue the Sacrament: noꝛ are they all void of Chꝛiſt, that neuer receiued the Sacrament. Beſides the vntruth hꝛreof, this Doctrine were alſo many waies very vncomfoꝛtable. Foꝛ what may the godly Father thinke of his Childe, that being Baptized, departeth this life, without receiuing the Sacrament of Chꝛiſts Bodie? By M. Hardings conſtruction, hꝛ muſt nꝛds thinke, his Childe is damned: foꝛ that it had no Naturall Participation of Chꝛiſts Fleſh, without which there is no Saluation: which Participation, as M. Harding aſſureth vs, is had by none other meanes, but onely by receiuing of the Sacrament. Yet S. Chryſoſtome ſaith: In the Sacrament of Baptiſme we are made Fleſh of Chriſts Fleſh, and Bone of his Bones.

Cyprian. De Cœna Domini.

Chryſoſtom. in epiſt. ad Epheſ. hom. 20.

Foꝛ better triall hꝛreof, vnderſtand thou, gentle Reader, that both Cyrillus and Hilarius, in thoſe places diſpute againſt the Arians, whoſe errour was this, that God the Father, and the Sonne are one, not by Nature, but onely by Will and Conſent. Againſt them Hilarius reaſoned thus:

Chriſt is as really ioined vnto the Father, as vnto vs:
But Chriſt is ioined vnto vs by Nature:
Therefore Chriſt is ioined to God the Father by Nature.

Naturally: Corporally.

The Minor, that is, That Chriſt is ioined vnto vs by nature, he proueth thus: We are ioined vnto Chriſt by Faith, that is, by the nature of one Faith, and that is to ſay, Naturally. Likewiſe he ſaith: We are ioined vnto Chriſt by the Regeneration of one Nature. And againe: We are ioined to Chriſt by the Nature of one Baptiſme. Hereof he concludeth: Therefore are we Naturally ioyned vnto him. Thus it appeareth by S. Hilary, we may haue Chriſt Naturally within vs, by theſe other ſundry meanes: and therefore not only, as M. Harding holdeth, by receiuing of the Sacrament. And like as Chriſt is Naturally, Corporally, and Carnally in vs by Faith, by Regeneration, and by Baptiſme: euen ſo, and none otherwiſe, he is in vs by the Sacrament of his Body. In which holy Myſterie Chriſt is ioined vnto vs Corporally, as being man, becauſe we are fed indeed and verily, with his Flesh: and Spiritually is ioined to vs, as God.

Hilar. de Trinitat. lib 8.
Per Naturam vnius Fidei, id eſt, naturaliter.
Eiuſdem Regeneratione Naturæ.
Per Naturam eiuſdem Baptiſmi.

Thus much vnto Cyrillus and Hilarius, in whom M. Harding is not yet able to find, that Chriſts Body is either Corporally receiued into our Bodies: or Corporally preſent in the Sacrament: which was the only thing, that M. Harding hath here taken in hand, and ſhould haue proued: and now not hauing proued that, notwithſtanding all this great adoe, hath proued nothing.

But he ſaith, It had beene more conuenient, rather modeſtly to haue interpreted theſe words, than thus vtterly to haue denied them. Verily, perhaps it were ſo for him, that can make ſomewhat of nothing: and deuiſe a Commentary without a Text; and imagine Conſtructions, as M. Harding doth, of words that were neuer ſpoken.

Hereof M. Harding gheſſeth thus:

Theſe Fathers ſay, That Chriſt is Naturally and Corporally in vs: Ergo, It is likely, their meaning was, that Chriſt is Naturally and Corporally preſent in the Sacrament. This reaſon is very ſimple: For notwithſtanding Chriſt were Naturally within our bodies, yet the like Being in the Sacrament would not follow. But this argument would conclude the contrary, and hold better in this wiſe:

Chriſts Body is not Naturally, or Corporally preſent within vs:
Therefore much leſſe it is Corporally preſent in the Sacrament.

M. Harding. The 11. Diuiſion.

All theſe were very yong Fathers.

And the Catholike Fathers, that ſithence the time of Berengarius haue written in defence of the truth in this point, vſing theſe termes ſometimes for excluding of Metaphors, Allegories, Figures and Significations only, whereby the Sacramentaries would defraud faithfull people of the truth of Chriſts precious Body in this Sacrament: doe not thereby meane, that the maner, meane, or way of Chriſts Preſence, dwelling, vnion, and coniunction with vs, and of vs with him, is therefore Naturall, Subſtantiall, Corporall or Carnall: but they and all other Catholike men confeſſe the contrary, that it is farre higher, and worthier, ſupernaturall, ſuperſubſtantiall, inuiſible, vnſpeakeable, ſpeciall and proper to this Sacrament, True, Reall, and indeed notwithſtanding: and not only Tropicall, Symbolicall, Metaphoricall, Allegoricall; not Spirituall only, and yet Spirituall; not Figuratiue or Significatiue onely. And likewiſe concerning the maner of the Preſence, and being of that Body and Blood in the Sacrament, they & we acknowledge and confeſſe, that it is not Locall, Circumſcriptiue, Diffinitiue, or Subiectiue, or Naturall: but ſuch, as is knowne to God only.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

De Con. diſt. 2. Tribus gradibus. In Gloſſa.
The abſurdities of M. Hardings Doctrine.

Theſe Doctours liued within theſe two or three hundred yéeres, and are ſuch, as M. Harding thought not worth the naming. Their doctrine in theſe caſes is very vnſauory and without comfort. Generally, they hold that Chriſts Body remaineth no longer in our Bodies, but only vntill the formes of the Bread and Wine begin to alter. Some others ſay, that aſſone as our téeth touch the Bread, ſtraightwaies Chriſts Body is taken vp into Heauen. The words be theſe: Certum eſt, quòd quàm citò Species dentibus teruntur, tam citò in Cœlum rapitur Corpus Chriſti. This Doctrine notwithſtanding, they ſay, That Chriſt is Naturallie and Corporallie within vs. Héere a man may ſay vnto M. Harding, as he did before to the Arian Heretike: What, troweth M. Harding, or his new Doctours, that Chriſt commeth to vs from Heauen, and by and by forſaketh vs? Or, that we eat Chriſt, and yet receiue him not? Or, that we receiue Chriſt, and yet haue him not? Or, that Chriſt is Corporally within vs, and yet entreth not? Is this Chriſts naturall Being in vs? Is this the Vertue of the Myſticall Benediction? Is this the meaning of theſe holy Fathers? Or troweth M. Harding, that holding and maintaining ſuch abſurdities, his Reader, be he neuer ſo ſimple, will beleeue him?

Laſt of all, to declare the maner of Chriſts Preſence in the Sacrament, he ſaith, it is not Locall, not Circumſcriptiue, not Diffinitiue, not Subiectiue. By theſe termes his Reader may rather wonder at his ſtrange Diuinity and Eloquence, then well coniecture what he meaneth. And as it appeareth, he himſelfe is not yet able to conceiue his owne meaning. For thus he ſaith: This preſence is knowen to God only. Then it followeth, M. Harding knoweth it not. And ſo this Article at laſt is concluded with an Ignoramus.

Notwithſtanding

Nowbeit, the Old learned Fathers neuer left vs in such doubts. Emissenus saith, as it is before alleged: Præsens est in Gratia: Christ is Present by his Grace. S. Augustine saith, Est in nobis per Spiritum: Christ is in vs by his Spirit. Likewise againe he saith, Non hoc Corpus, quod videtis, manducatori estis: Sacramentum aliquod vobis trado: Yee shall not eat this Bodie, that yee see. It is a certaine Sacrament, that I deliuer you. Thus the Holy Fathers say, Christ is Present: not Corporally, Carnally, Naturally: but, as in a Sacrament, by his Spirit, and by his Grace.

De Cons. dist. 2. Quia Corpus.
Augustin. de Trinit.
Augustin. in Psalm. 98.

OF BEING IN MANY PLACES.

The Sixth Article.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR, that Christs Body is, or may be in a thousand places, or moe at one time.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuision.

(144) Among the miracles of this blessed Sacrament, one is, that one and the same Bodie may bee in many places at once, to wit, vnder all consecrated Hosts. As for God, it is agreeable to his Godhead to be euery where, Simpliciter & proprie. But as for a creature, to be but in one place only. But as for the Body of Christ, (145) it is after a maner betweene both. For whereas it is a creature, it ought not to bee made equall with the Creator in this behalfe, that it bee euery where. But, whereas it is vnited to the Godhead, heerein it ought to excell other Bodies, so as it may in one (146) time bee in moe places vnder this holy Sacrament. For the vniting of Christs naturall body vnto the almightie Godhead, duly considered, bringeth a true Christian man in respect of the same, to forsake reason, and to leane to Faith, to put apart all doubts and discourses of humane vnderstanding, and to rest in reuerent simplicitie of beleefe.

The 144. Vntruth. For none of the ancient Fathers euer knew this miracle.
The 145. Vntruth. And a Doctrine hitherto seldom heard of.
The 146. Vntruth. For, notwithstãding the Body of Christ be ioined with the Godhead, yet it remaineth still a creature.

Thereby through the holy Ghost perswaded, he knoweth, that although the Body of Christ bee naturall, and humane indeed, yet, through the vnion and coniunction, many things bee possible to the same now, that to all other bodies be impossible: as to walke vpon waters, to vanish away out of sight, to be transfigured, and made bright as the Sunne, to ascend vp thorow the Cloudes: and after it became immortall, death being conquered, to rise vp againe out of the graue, and to enter thorow doores fast shut. Through the same Faith, he beleeueth, and acknowledgeth, that (147) according vnto his word, by his power it is made present in the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, vnder the forme of Bread and Wine, whersoeuer the same is duly consecrated, according vnto his institution in his holy Supper: and that not after a grosse, or carnall maner, but spiritually, and supernaturally, and yet substantially: not by locall, but by substannall presence: not by maner of quantitie, or filling of a place, or by changing of place, or by leauing his sitting on the right hand of the Father, but in such a maner, as God only knoweth, and yet doth vs to vnderstand by faith the truth of his very presence, farre passing all mans capacitie, to comprehend the maner how.

Matth. 14. Luc. 24. Matth. 17. Luc. 24. Act. 1. Matth. 28. Iohan. 20.

The 147. Vntruth. For Christ vttereth no such word: and Faith without Gods word is no Faith.

Whereas some against this point of beleefe doe allege the Article of Christs Ascension, and of his Being in heauen at the right hand of God the Father, bringing certaine texts of the Scriptures pertaining to the same, and testimonies of ancient Doctours signifying Christs absence from the Earth: it may bee rightly vnderstanded, that hee is verily both in heauen at the right hand of his Father, in his visible and corporall forme, very God and man, after which maner he is there, and not heere; and also in the Sacrament inuisibly, and spiritually, both God and man in a mysterie: so as the granting of the one may stand without denial of the other, no contradiction found in these Beings, but only a distinction in the way and maner of Being.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Hauing somewhat largely answered the fiue first Articles, wherein semed to lie the greatest weight, I trust, I may now the more slightly passe ouer the rest. Herein M. Harding semeth in words thorowly to yeld vnto vs without exception. For whereas the question is moued of the Being of Christs Bodie in a thousand places, or moe, his answer is, that Christs Bodie is Locall onely in one place, and so cannot bee in a thousand places, but only in one place at one time. Nowbeit, thus saying, he swarueth much from the old Fathers, whose words, as it shall appeare, sound farre otherwise.

Further, for the better vnderstanding hereof, it shall behoue thee, gentle Reader, to vnderstand, that touching the Body of Christ, there haue beene sundry great errours raised and maintained in the Church of old time, and that not only by Heretikes, but also by holy learned Fathers. The Manichees held, that Christ had onely a fantasticall Bodie, without any materiall Flesh, Blood, or Bone, in appearance and in sight somewhat, but

in

Errours touching Christs Bodie.

in very deed, and in substance nothing. Eutyches held, that Christs Body after his incarnation, was made equall with his Diuinitie: an errour much like vnto this, that is now maintained by M. Harding. S. Hilarie held, that Christ receiued no Flesh of the Blessed Virgin, but brought the same from Heauen: and, that his Body was impassible, and felt no more griefe, when it was stricken, than water, fire, or aire, when it is diuided with a knife. Theodoretus saith, that the Heretikes called Helcesæi held, that there be sundrie Christs, two at the least: the one dwelling in Heauen aboue: the other in the world here beneath. All these, and other such like errours and Heresies, grew only of admiration, and reuerence towards Christs Diuine Nature: and the Authors and Maintainers of the same, leauing reason, according to M. Hardings counsell, and cleauing wholly to their imagination, which they called Faith, were farre deceiued.

Augustin. ad Quodvult-Deum. Leo epist. 95. Epist. Flauiani ad Leonem. Hilar. de Trinitate lib. 10. Theodoret. De Fabulis Hæreticorum lib. 2. Augustin. de Mirabilibus Sacræ Scripturæ, tom. 3. Nazianzen. Aug. de Trinit. li. 3. c. 10.

But M. Harding laieth the foundation hereof vpon a Miracle: whereof notwithstanding, touching this grosse and fleshly Presence, he hath no maner warrant, neither in the Scriptures, nor in any of the Holy Fathers. As for that is alleaged of Chrysostome and Basil, it is to a farre other purpose, as shall appeare, and may soone be answered. S. Augustine wrote three speciall Bookes, namely of the Miracles of the Old & New Testament: and Gregorie Nazianzene wrote in like sort of the same: yet did neither of them both euer make mention of this Miracle. And albeit this kinde of reasoning, Ab authoritate negatiue, in such cases implie no great necessitie, yet must it néeds bee thought either great negligence, or great forgetfulnesse, writing purposely, and namely of Miracles, to leaue out vntouched the greatest Miracle. Certainly, S. Augustine hereof writeth thus: Quia hæc hominibus nota sunt, quia per homines fiunt, honorem, tanquam religiosa, habere Possunt: stuporem, tanquam mira, non possunt: These things (speaking of the Sacrament of Christs Bodie) because they are knowen vnto men, and by men are wrought, may haue honour, as things appointed to Religion: but wonder, as things maruellous, they cannot haue. Thus S. Augustine ouerthroweth M. Hardings whole foundation: and saith, that in his great Miracle, there is no wonder or Miracle at all.

Gerson contra Floretum.

He saith further, It is agreeable to the Godhead, to be euery where, Simpliciter, and Proprie: For a Creature, it is agreeable to be in one place. But as for the Bodie of Christ, he saith, it is after a maner betweene both. This is the whole countenance of this matter. And this whole place M. Harding hath borrowed euen word by word out of Gerson. But whereas he addeth, That the Bodie of Christ, as it is vnited vnto the Godhead, may be at one time in sundrie places, he should haue remembred, that this is an old errour, long sithence reproued, and condemned by S. Augustine, and other learned Fathers. S. Augustine saith thus: Cauendum est, ne ita Diuinitatem astruamus Hominis, vt veritatem Corporis auferamus. Non est autem consequens, vt, quod in Deo est, ita sit vbique, vt Deus: Wee must beware, that wee doe not so maintaine the Diuine Nature of Christ being Man, that wee take away the Truth of his Bodie. Neither doth it follow, that the thing that is in God, is therefore euery where, as God is. S. Augustines words be plaine, that whoso saith, The Bodie of Christ is euery where, (or in infinite places at one time, which is all one thing, the reason and miracle being like) vtterly denieth the veritie of Christs Body.

Augustinus ad Dardanum, Epist. 57.

But what a fantasie is this, That Christs Bodie is neither the Creator, nor a Creature, but as it is here auouched, after a maner betweene both? Who euer would warrant this Doctrine, but that old Heretike Abbat Eutyches? Verily S. Augustine saith: Omnis substantia, quæ Deus non est, Creatura est: & quæ Creatura non est, Deus est. Et quod Deo minus est, Deus non est: Euery Substance, that is not God, is a Creature: and that is not a Creature, is God: and, what soeuer is lesse then God, is not God. Here S. Augustine knoweth a Creator, and a Creature: but M. Hardings meane betweene both he knoweth not. Leo writing against Eutyches, of whom M. Harding seemeth to haue receiued this learning, writeth thus: Emergunt alij, qui Carnem Domini, & Diuinitatem dicunt vnius esse Naturæ. Quæ tantum Sacrilegium inferna vomuere? Tolerabiliores sunt Ariani, &c. Vp there start others that say, The Flesh of Christ, and his Diuinitie are both of one Nature. What Hell hath powred vs out such wicked sacrilege? The very Arians are more to bee borne withall, than these men. S. Augustine saith: Quod ad Hominem attinet, Creatura est Christus: Christ, as concerning his Manhood, is (not a meane betweene both, but) a Creature. Againe he saith: Duas Substantias, id est, Naturas esse fatemur: Diuinitatis, scilicet, & Humanitatis: Creatricis, & Creatæ: quæ tamen Substantiæ, non confusæ, sed vnitæ, atque in vna eademque Persona inseparabiles, & in sua semper proprietate manentes: We confesse there are in Christ two Substances, or Natures: The one, of the Godhead, the other, of the Manhood: The one, of the Creator, the other, of the Creature: Which Substances notwithstanding are not Confused, but Vnited, and in one selfe same Person inseparable, and remaining euermore in their owne Properties. The like writeth Leo, Cyrillus, Gelasius, and all the rest of the old Learned Fathers.

In lib. Sententiar. Prosperi.

Leo epi. 95. ad Leonem Aug.

Augustin. Epist. 57. De verbis Domini in Euangelio secundùm Iohan. ca. 58.

Therefore

Therefore M. Harding was much ouerſéne, either to teach the people, that Chriſts Bodie, is neither the Creator, nor the Creature, but a meane betwéne both: or elſe to ſay, that the ſame Bodie, being vnited vnto the Godhead, may therefore be in ſundrie places at one time. Hérein reſted the old Hereſie of Eutyches. For thus Flauianus writeth of him: Corpus Domini Humanum quidem vocat: tamen negat eſſe nobis Conſubſtantiale: He calleth the Bodie of our Lord, a Mans Bodie: but yet he ſaith, it is not one in Subſtance with our bodies.

A meane betweene Both.

Flauianus ad Leonem.

But M. Harding replieth, Chriſts Body is now become Immortall and glorious. This is moſt true, and without all queſtion. Howbeit, it may pleaſe him to remember, that, when Chriſt miniſtred the holy Communion to his Diſciples, his Bodie was then Mortall, and ſubiect to death and other iniuries, and not Glorious. Therefore if Chriſts Body in the Sacrament bée Immortall and Glorious, it muſt follow, that, for that preſent, Chriſt had two manner Bodies: the one Mortall, the other Immortall: the one Glorious, the other not Glorious. Thus M. Hardings Rules and Examples match not together.

He addeth further, Chriſts Body walked vpon the waters: vaniſhed out of ſight: aſcended thorow the Cloudes: and entered thorow the doores being faſt ſhut, &c. These were the reaſons that deceiued the old Manichées. I maruell that M. Harding, being, as he ſaith, lately become a Profeſſor of the Catholike Faith, would found the whole ſubſtance of his Doctrine vpon Heretiques. Touching the ſpeciall truſt that the Manichées repoſed in this argument, S. Hierome writeth thus: Cùm dicit Manichæus, & ſimilis Manichæorum, Dominus non Reſurrexit in Corporis Veritate, &, vt ſcias non fuiſſe verum Corpus, clauſis ingreſſus eſt oſtijs, nos quid dicemus? Domine libera animam meam à labijs iniquis, & à lingua doloſa? When the Manichee, or any other like the Manichees, ſaith, The Lord aroſe not againe in the Truth of his Bodie, and for proofe thereof, ſaith thus, Hee entred in, when the doores were ſhut, what then ſhall we ſay? Euen thus: O Lord, deliuer my ſoule from wicked lippes, and deceitfull tongues.

Hieronym. in Pſalm. 119.

Héere we ſée M. Harding is driuen to ſéeke vpon old condemned Heretikes, and to borrow their weapons: wherefore it ſhall be good to follow S. Hieromes counſell, and to ſay, O Lord deliuer my ſoule from wicked lippes, and deceitfull tongues.

Likewiſe S. Ambroſe ſaith, The Apoſtles of Chriſt, by the ſame maner of reaſoning, were deceiued. For vpon that, Chriſt entred, the gates being ſhut, he writeth thus: Denique conturbati Diſcipuli æſtimabant, ſe Spiritum videre. Et ideò Dominus, vt ſpeciem nobis Reſurrectionis oſtenderet, Palpate, inquit, & videte: quia Spiritus Carnem & Oſſa non habet, ſicut me videtis habere: The Diſciples being aſtonied, thought they ſaw a ſpirit, or a Fantaſie. Therefore the Lord, to ſhew a token of his Reſurrection, ſaid vnto them, Feele, and ſee: for a Spirit, or Fantaſie, hath not Fleſh and Bone, as you ſee that I haue.

Ambroſ. in Lucam, l. 10. c. 24.

Now if theſe arguments were able to deceiue the Apoſtles of Chriſt, it is not impoſſible, but they may likewiſe deceiue M. Harding. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Clauſa erant oſtia, & ingreſſus eſt Ieſus: Non erat phantaſma: Non erat Spiritus: Verè Corpus erat: habebat carnes, & oſſa: The doores were ſhut, and Ieſus entred: it was no Fantaſie: it was no Spirit: it was verily a Body: it had Fleſh and bones.

Chryſoſt. in homil. De Iohan. Baptiſta.

Thus, notwithſtanding theſe Maruellous effects, yet the Ancient godly Fathers ſaid, Chriſts Bodie neuertheleſſe is, and continueth ſtill a Creature: not a meane betwéne both: as M. Harding héere ſtrangely hath imagined. Now let vs conſider M. Hardings arguments:

Chriſts body walked vpon the waters:
It entred thorow the doores being ſhut:
It aſcended thorow the Cloudes:
Ergo, It may be at one time in ſundry places.

Although this argument may ſone be eſpied, hauing vtterly no maner ſequell in reaſon, yet the follie thereof may the better appeare by the like:

S. Peter walked vpon the water: Matth. 14.
Elias was taken vp into the Cloudes: 2. Reg. 2.
S. Bartholomew entred thorow the doores being ſhut:
Ergo, S. Peter, Elias, and S. Bartholomew may be at one time in ſundry places.

And that I alleage héere of S. Bartholomew, although it bée but a vaine Fable, yet it may not eaſily be denied. For it is recorded by Abdias the Biſhop of Babylon, who, as Maiſter Harding ſuppoſeth, ſaw Chriſt in the Fleſh, and was one of the Apoſtles Fellowes.

Abdias in Bartholomæo.

Ouer all this M. Harding throweth a ſweat miſt, to carry away the ſimple in the darke: Chriſts Bodie (ſaith hée) is in the Sacrament, not by Locall, but by Subſtantiall preſence: Carnally, but not in Carnall maner: placed in the Pix, in the hand, in the mouth: and yet in no place at all: a very Naturall Bodie, euen as it was vpon the Croſſe: yet without all maner Quantitie, and Dimenſions, or Proportions portions of a Bodie, that is, neither thicke, nor broad, nor ſhort, nor long: there now, where before it was not: and yet without any ſhifting or Change of places. Vnleſſe this man were faſt aſlæpe, he could neuer fall into ſo deepe a Dreame. In theſe Fantaſies hee ſeemeth well to agree with the old Heretikes, Eutyches and Manichee. For euen ſuch a Bodie they imagined, that Chriſt receiued of the Bleſſed Virgin: and yet were they Heretikes notwithſtanding. For which of all the old learned Fathers euer taught vs this ſtrange Doctrine? Who euer durſt to ſpoile Chriſt of his Place, of his Quantitie, and of the naturall Proportions of his Bodie? If the Doctours of the Church ſay thus, why are they not alleaged? If they ſay not thus, why is this matter carried away with ſuch countenance of Antiquitie? Or why doth M. Harding thus auouch this vnſenſible and vnſauorie learning, only vpon his owne credit, without the Authoritie of any Doctour? The Manichees in old times, the better to maintaine their errour, and to auoid abſurdities, were driuen to ſay, there were two gods: The one God, the other Ill. Euen ſo M. Harding, to maintaine his errours, and to auoid infinit abſurdities, is driuen to ſay, There are two Chriſts: The one Locall the other not Locall: The one aboue: the other beneath: the one with proportion of Bodie, the other without proportion. Howbeit, he ſeemeth to publiſh this principle vnawares againſt himſelfe. For if Chriſts Body in the Sacrament be not Locall, as he ſaith, then is it no Naturall, or Reall Body. This rule S. Auguſtine taketh to bee infallible. His words be theſe: Tolle loca Corporibus, & nuſquam erunt: & quia nuſquam erunt, nec erunt: Take away the places from the Bodies, and the Bodies ſhalbe no where: and becauſe they ſhalbe no where, they ſhall haue no Being: and ſo ſhall be no Bodies at all. And he ſpeaketh not thus only of other naturall Bodies, but ſpeacially, and namely of the Body of Chriſt.

Epiphanius. Auguſtin. ad Quod-vult Deum.

Aug. epiſt. 57.

Certainly, the more ſpirituall a thing is, the more it is void from the circumſtance, and neceſſitie of place. Wherefore, when M. Harding ſaith, The Body of Chriſt is in heauen, as in a place, and in the Sacrament without place: he ſeemeth ſecretly to ſay, that Chriſts Bodie in the Sacrament is more Glorious, more Spirituall, and Diuine, that is the very Bodie of Chriſt indeed, that is in Heauen, in the Glorie of God the Father. Which concluſion, how well it may ſtand either with the reſt of his owne Doctrine, or with the truth of our Chriſtian Religion, I leaue it in conſideration to the Reader.

Chriſts Bodie more Glorious in the Sacrament, than in Heauen.

But what needeth this new deuiſed difference, of Chriſts Bodie Locall, and Chriſts Bodie not Locall? Or what forceth theſe men to ſay, that onely the bare Subſtance of Chriſts Bodie is in the Sacrament, without length, breadeth, or any other reſpect of Quantitie? Will M. Harding now at the laſt forſake the Reuerend Simplicitie of his beleefe, and leane to Reaſon? Or will he in Gods ſecret Myſteries giue credit to his eies, and hearken to the courſe of Nature? Verily God, as he is able by his Omnipotent Power, to make Chriſts Bodie preſent without Place and Quantitie: ſo is he likewiſe able to make the ſame Bodie preſent in Place, and with Quantitie, and all other naturall Dimenſions. If M. Harding will ſay nay, Duns himſelfe, his owne Doctour will reproue him. His words be plaine: Idem Corpus localiter, & dimenſiuè poteſt eſſe in diuerſis locis. Et Deus poteſt quodcunque Corpus vniuerſi conuertere in Corpus Chriſti, ſicut Panem: & facere Corpus Chriſti vbique eſſe, non ſolùm Sacramentaliter, ſed etiam Localiter, & Dimenſionaliter: One Body both Locally, and with the naturall Dimenſions of a Bodie, may be in ſundry places. And God is able to turne any Bodie in the world, into the Bodie of Chriſt, as well as Bread: and to cauſe Chriſts Body to be euery where, not only by way of Sacrament, but alſo by way of place and Dimenſions. Which ſaying ſeemeth alſo to be well liked and alowed of Durandus. Therefore M. Harding ſhould not thus nicely ſhrinke backe, and ſo diſſemble in darke ſpeeches: but ſhould rather boldly, and plainly ſay, Chriſts Body is in the Sacrament, not only Subſtantially, but alſo Locally, and by way of place: as hauing as good warrant for the one, as for the other. For it is a Catholike mans part, to be bold of Gods Omnipotent Power: and whatſoeuer God, being Omnipotent, is able to doe, to beleeue, it is already done, without any regard had to his will, or promiſe. If he thinke it lawfull for him, without cauſe to deny this maner of Chriſts Preſence, let him not be offended, if we vpon good and iuſt cauſe, deny the other. Verily Alexander de Hales, a great Doctour of that ſide, reckoneth M. Harding to be in a great errour in this behalfe. This is his Reſolution: Quidam ponebant Corpus Chriſti eſſe ſub Sacramento, non ſecundum quantitatem &c. Sed hæc poſitio eſt erronea: Some hold that Chriſts Bodie is vnder the Sacrament, not according vnto Quantitie: But this Opinion is erroneous. Thus much I thought good only to touch: not ſo much for any great credit of the Author, but that it may appeare, That notwithſtanding all theſe men would ſo faine haue Chriſt Really and Fleſhly Preſent, yet they reproue one another of error and ignorance, and cannot agree among themſelues, in what ſort they may haue him Preſent. Howbeit, the Ancient Fathers of the Church haue written farre otherwiſe in this behalfe. For like as Athanaſius ſaith: Æ-

Scotus 4. Sen. Diſt. 10. q. 2.

Lib. 4. de 6. parte Canonis.

Alexander de Hales, 4. q. 40. m. 3.

qualis

qualis Patri ſecundùm Diuinitatem: Minor Patre ſecundùm humanitatem: Chriſt according to his Diuine Nature, is equall vnto the Father: and according to his Manhood, is inferior vnto the Father. Euen ſo ſaith Gregorie Nazianzene, Chriſt according to his Body, is neither in the limitation of place: according to his ſpirit, and Godhead, he is without the limits of any place. But, that any one of all the Old Fathers euer ſaid, Chriſts Body is ſometime in one place, and ſometime in many: ſometime limited, and ſometime not limited; I thinke it not eaſie for M. Harding well to proue.

Gregor. Nazianzen. contra Apollinarium. πῶς χωρητὸν θεότητι καὶ σώματι τὸ ἀπερίγραπτον καὶ ἀχώρητον καὶ ἀχώριστον.

As for the difference that he hath deuiſed, of Viſible, and Inuiſible; Locall, and not Locall: which is both Trench and Bulwarke to maintaine this peece, it is a very toy, onely meet to beguile Children: as neither hauing foundation in the Scriptures, or Holy Fathers, nor effectually ſerning to proue his purpoſe. For wee reaſon not of Reſpects and Qualities: but as S. Auguſtine, S. Cyril, and other Catholike Doctours doe, of the very Nature and Subſtance of Chriſts Body. Neither can M. Harding well maintaine, That whatſoeuer is Inuiſible, is therefore of Nature Infinite, or may be at one time in a thouſand places. As touching Chriſts being in a Myſterie, as it requireth no Locall Preſence, according to M. Hardings owne Confeſſion, ſo likewiſe it requireth no Naturall, or Reall Bodie: as hereafter, God willing, it ſhall be ſhewed more at large.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuiſion.

And how the ancient Fathers of the Church haue confeſſed, and taught both theſe beings, of Chriſt in Heauen, and in the Sacrament together, contrary to M. Iewels Negatiue, by witneſſe of their own words we may perceiue. Baſil in his Liturgie, that is to ſay, Seruice of Maſſe, ſaith thus in a praier: Looke downe vpon vs Lord Ieſus Chriſt our God from thy holy Tabernacle, and from the throne of Glorie of thy Kingdome, and come to ſanctifie vs, which ſitteſt aboue with thy Father, and art * conuerſant heere Inuiſibly: and vouchſafe to impart vnto vs thine vndefiled Body, and precious Blood, and by vs, to all thy people.

*Not Bodily, but by Spirit and Grace.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Touching theſe Ancient Fathers that here be alleged, notwithſtanding the credit of ſome of them might well come in queſtion, as namely that Chryſoſtome in his Liturgie praieth for the Emperour of Alexius, which was not borne within 500. yeres after that Chryſoſtome was dead: yet will I ſpare both this, and alſo all other like aduantages, and receiue all theſe Authorities, as if they were good and perfect without exception.

But firſt, for the clearer conceiuing of the anſwer hereunto, vnderſtand, good Chriſtian Reader, that by the record of the Old Fathers, Chriſt is preſent amongſt vs ſundrie waies. By his holy Spirit, as Cyrillus ſaith; by his Grace, as Euſebius Emiſſenus ſaith: by his Diuinitie and Maieſtie, as S. Auguſtine ſaith: by Faith dwelling in our hearts, as S. Paul ſaith. Thus is Chriſt moſt comfortably Preſent in his holy Word: in the Myſterie of Baptiſme: and in the Sacrament of his Bodie. We denie onely that Groſſe and Fleſhly Preſence that M. Harding here defendeth: wherein we haue the authoritie, and conſent of the Old learned Fathers. For to alleage one in ſtead of many, S. Auguſtine ſaith: Corpus, in quo Reſurrexit, in vno loco eſſe oportet: The Bodie, wherein Chriſt roſe againe, muſt be in one place.

Cyril. in Iohan. li. 8. ca. 7. Emiſſen De Con. Diſt. 2. Quia Corpus. Aug. in Tract. in Iohan. 50. Epheſ. 3. Auguſtin. De Conſec. Diſt. 2. Prima.

Here M. Harding, as his manner is, taketh one thing in hand, and proueth another. For to proue, that Chriſt is Really, and Fleſhly Preſent in the Sacrament, he alleageth the old Fathers, that neuer ſpake one word of this Reall or Fleſhly Preſence. And therefore ſetting ſuch countenance vpon the matter, with the names of holy Fathers, and not once comming nere that thing, wherein ſtandeth the whole queſtion, he dallieth vainely, and abuſeth the ſimplicitie of the people. For touching Chryſoſtome and Baſil, wee grant, that Chriſt being in Heauen in his Humanitie, and in the Subſtance of his Bodie, is neuertheleſſe by his Spirit and Grace, Inuiſibly Preſent in his Sacraments. Which anſwer, notwithſtanding it might ſerue generally to all theſe authorities here brought in, yet I haue thought it not amiſſe, to conſider them all ſeuerally, as they come.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuiſion.

Ἐπιτελοῦμεν ἀπάντων τῶν παρ' αὐτοῦ γινομένων ἀναφορὰν ποιούμενοι.

S. Chryſoſtome praieth with the very ſame words alſo in his Liturgie, or Maſſe. Where wee reade further, that the Prieſt, and the Deacon doe adore, and worſhip, ſaying three times ſecretly; God bee mercifull to me a ſinner, and that the people doe all likewiſe deuoutly adore. Now ſith hee will adoration to be made, he acknowledgeth Chriſt preſent, whom he granteth to be alſo at the ſame time in Heauen.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

It is likely, ſaith Maiſter Harding, that Chriſt is Fleſhly Preſent in the Sacrament, for Miracle.

for that the Priest and the people adoreth him. This ghesse hath very slender hold. For would he, that the people should neuer worship Christ, but only when they haue him present before their face? Certainly S. Hierome writeth thus of a Gentlewoman named Melania, Ad Christi pedes prouoluta est: Shee fell downe and worshipped at Christs feet: notwithstanding she had not Christ there bodily present. Likewise Chrysostome teacheth vs, to worship Christ in the Sacrament of Baptisme. For thus he saith vnto the people: Et vos, qui accepturi estis Baptisma, Tenete pedes Saluatoris: Lauate lachrymis: Crine tergite: You, that will receiue Baptisme, Hold the feet of our Sauiour: Wash them with your teares: Wipe them with your haire. Yet will not M. Harding therefore say, that Christ is Bodily, and Carnally present in the water of Baptisme. Thus the Faithfull then were taught to worship Christ, although they had him not Corporally in Reall Presence. The Idolaters worshipped the Sunne, and the Moone: yet they pulled them not downe from Heauen, to receiue their worship. Therefore M. Hardings argument of Adoration, can stand him but in little stead. For we are taught to worship Christ sitting in Heauen: not lying Bodily Present before our eies.

Hieronym. ad Paulam de obitu Blesillæ.

Chrysostom. in Marc. ho. 14.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuision.

Which he vttereth more plainly in these words, O Miraculum, O Dei Benignitatem, &c. O Miracle, O the goodnesse of God, who sitteth aboue with the Father, at that very instant of time, is handled with the hands of all, and giueth himselfe to those, that will receiue, and embrace him. And that is done by no craftie slightnesse, but openly in the sight of all that stand about. How saist thou, seeme these things no better to thee, than to be contemned and despised? By which words of S. Chrysostome we may see, that Christs being in heauen, maketh no proofe, that he is not in earth, sith both these verities may well stand together.

Chrysost. de Sacerdotio, li. 3.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

This argument would serue well, if there were none other Miracle, but Carnall Presence. But if M. Harding had conferred with the Old Catholike Fathers, he should haue found Miracles in the Sacrament of Baptisme, no lesse, than in this Sacrament of Christs Bodie. Leo saith, Deus Mirabile nobis Sacramentum Regenerationis indulsit: God hath granted vs the Maruellous Sacrament of Regeneration. So saith Eusebius Emissenus: Veniant nunc, qui futuræ Resurrectionis gloriam fictiunt: iam nunc de Remissione peccatorum digno Miraculo reficiant Fidem suam. Homo in fonte tingitur, &c. Let them draw neere, that thirst after the Glorie of the Resurrection that is to come: euen now let them refresh their Faith with that worthy Miracle of Remission of sinne. A man is washed in the font, &c. In like sort writeth Chrysostome touching the same: Nullo pacto de intellectuali per Baptismum Regeneratione, & Admirabili partu rationem reddemus. Nam & Angeli, qui adfuerunt, tam inenarrabilis operis modum minimè possunt enarrare. Adfuerunt tantùm, & viderunt: nihil autem operati sunt: Sed Pater tantùm, & Filius, & Spiritus Sanctus. Wee are neuer able to yeeld a reason of the Spirituall Regeneration, and Miraculous Birth, that wee haue by Baptisme. The very Angels that were present, are not able to vtter the maner of that vnspeakable worke. They were present only, and saw: but they wrought nothing: but only the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghost. Here we see a Miracle in Baptisme: and such a Miracle as the Angels of God are not able to vtter it. Yet will not M. Harding say, that Christs Bodie is therefore Really Present in the Water of Baptisme. So weakely these proues hang together.

Leo epist. 13.

Homil. Sextæ Feriæ De Baptismo.

Chrysost. in Iohan. hom. 24.

But Chrysostomes words are very vehement: That Christ is Present at the holy Ministration: that euery man, both toucheth him with his fingers, and also seth him with his eies, and that clerely, and openly, without guile, or errour. I grant, these words be very vehement, and much exceed the common sense. But here would I learne of Maister Harding, whether he will take these words plainly, and simply, as they lie, or else will rather qualifie them with a courteous and gentle Interpretation. If he follow the rigour of the words, then appeareth there a manifest contradiction: and Chrysostome in vttering one sentence is found cleane contrary to himselfe. For first hee saith, Christ is there inuisibly, in such sort as no man can see him: And yet immediately after, with one breath he saith, Euery man seeth him with his eies plainly, and without guile, or errour. Againe, by the rigour of the same words, we must needs grant, that the people both verily, and indeed seth Christs very Bodie, and also handleth, and toucheth it with their fingers: which is not only a manifest vntruth, but also a greater Heresie, than euer was defended by Berengarius, as it is confessed by the Doctours of M. Hardings owne side. Indeed, the maruellous effects that God worketh in the Faithfull, in that dreadfull time of the holy Communion, wherein the whole Mysterie of our Redemption, that we haue in the Blood of Christ, is expressed, Chrysostome calleth a Miracle: and therefore the more to stirre the peoples mindes to the consideration of the same, he inflameth his speech with Rhetoricall

De Consecra. dist. 2. Ego Berengarius. In Glossa.

Amplifica-

Amplifications, and heat of wordes. He saith: Christ is Crucified before our eies: his blood gusheth out of his side, and streameth, and floweth ouer the holy Table: and the people is therwith made red and bloody. This aduancing and rauishing of the minde, he calleth a Miracle: but of any Corporall or Fleshly Presence, he speaketh nothing. By such figuratiue, and fiery speech, he meant not that we should vnderstand him precisely according to the sound of his wordes, but sought only to lift vp, and inkindle his hearers mindes. So S. Paul saith to the Galathians: Christ was Crucified before your eies. So S. Hierome: Our faces are marked in Baptisme with the Blood of Christ. So saith Tertullian: Wee are washed in the Passion of our Lord. So S. Gregory saith: Eundem Agnum Iohannes ostendendo, Esaias præuidendo, Abel offerendo locutus est: Et quem Iohannes in ostensione, quem Esaias in locutione, hunc Abel Significando in manibus tenuit: S. Iohn the Baptist spake of the same Lambe by pointing, Esaias by seeing, Abel by offering. And the Lambe that Iohn held in his hand by pointing, and Esay by speaking, the same Lambe Abel held in his hand by Signifying. These sayings, and other like are vehement, as is that of Chrysostome: and, as M. Harding knoweth, may not be taken as they lie, but must be mollified with a gentle Construction.

Galat. 3. Hieronym. in Psalm. 85. Tertul. De Baptismo, Gregor. In Iob lib. 29. cap. 16.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuision.

Hom. 2. The same Father confesseth the Body of Christ to be in diuers places likewise in his Homilies Ad populum Antiochenum, most plainly alludding to Elias. Elias, saith he, Melotem quidem Discipulo reliquit: Filius autem Dei ascendens suam nobis Carnem dimisit. Sed Elias quidem exuit se: Christus autem & nobis reliquit, & ipsam habens ascendit: Elias (when he was carried vp in the fiery Chariot) left to his Disciple Elizeus his mantle of Sheepes skins: but the Sonne of God, when he ascended left to vs his Flesh. But Elias did put off his Mantle: and Christ both left his Flesh to vs, and also ascended hauing it with him. Nothing can be spoken more plainly, whereby to shew, that we haue the same flesh heere in Earth, that was receiued into Heauen, which Christ hath not put off, to giue it to vs. By which Doctrine of S. Chrysostome, (148) wee are taught to beleeue, that Christs Flesh or his Bodie, is both in Heauen, and also in the Earth, in how many places soeuer this Blessed Sacrament is rightly celebrated.

Chrisostomes words not iustly & fully reported The 148. vntruth. For the very order of the comparison plainly concludeth the contrary.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

This place well considered, both openeth it selfe, and also giueth light vnto other like. Chrysostome sheweth, in what sort Christ hath both taken vp his Flesh into Heauen, and also left the same heere amongst the faithfull in the Earth: and to that end compareth Elias and Christ together. The story is knowne, that when Elias was taken vp in a fiery Chariot, he let downe his Coat vnto Elizæus that stood beneath: who toke it vp, and by the power of the same diuided the water of Iordan. Vpon occasion hereof, Chrysostome saith: Tanquam maximam hæreditatem Elizæus melotem suscepit. Etenim vere maxima fuit hæreditas omni auro pretiosior. Et erat postea duplex Elias: Et erat sursum Elias, & deorsum Elias: Elizæus receiued the Coat made of Sheepes skins, as a great inheritance. And doubtlesse it was an inheritance more pretious than any gold. After that time, Elias was double. For there was Elias aboue, and Elias beneath. Aboue was the very true Elias in the Naturall Substance and Presence of his Body: Beneath was nothing else, but Elias coat: which coat notwithstanding, because of the powers that were wrought with it, he calleth Elias. Thus Chrysostome compareth Elias with Christ, and Elias coat with the Sacrament: and thus he saith: Christ is aboue, and Christ is beneath: as he saith: Elias is aboue, and Elias is beneath. For as Elias coat was called Elias, euen so the Sacrament of Christs Body, is called Christs Body. Which saying agreeth well with these wordes of S. Augustine: Sacramentum Corporis Christi secundum quendam modum Corpus Christi est: The Sacrament of Christs Bodie, after a certaine maner, is the Body of Christ: not Substantially or Really, or indeed, but as Elias coat is Elias.

4. Reg. 2.

Chrysost. ad populum Antiochen. hom. 2.

August. epist. 23. ad Bonifacium.

Hereof M. Harding might well haue formed this argument:

Elias being aboue, was not verily and indeed, present beneath in his Coat.

Therefore by Chrysostomes comparison, Christs Body is not indeed Really and Fleshly present in the Sacrament.

M. Harding. The 6. Diuision.

(149) And whereas many measuring all things by the common order and Lawes of Nature, beleeue nothing can be done aboue Nature, and therefore thinke, that the Bodie of Christ, forasmuch as it is of Nature finite, cannot by power of God be in many places at once; of which opinion M. Iewel seemeth to be himselfe: it shall not be beside the purpose, though the places already alleged proue the contrarie, to recite the testimonies of an Old Doctour or two, wherein they confesse most plainly, that which by this Article is most vntruly denied.

The 149. vntruth, ioined with a slander.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

M. Harding hopeeth to win the Victorie by vntrue reports. For with what truth or modestly can he say, That we measure all things by the Lawes of Nature, and beleeue nothing aboue the iudgement of our senses? He knoweth well, Our Doctrine is, accordyng to the Doctrine of S. Cyprian, S. Augustine, and other Old Fathers, that Christs Body is meat for our mindes, and not for our bellies: and that the same cannot be eaten with our Mouth or Teeth, or by any other Naturall or Materiall meanes, but only Spiritually by Faith, which is the mouth of the Inner Man. He knoweth, we teach the people to lift vp their hearts, and, as S. Chrisostome saith: To become Eagles in this life, and to mount vp vnto the gates of Heauen, euen vnto the Heauens of Heauen, and so to draw neere to Christs Body. He knoweth, we say, Christ is present by his Godhead, by his Spirit, and by his Grace, and worketh miraculously in the Sacrament of his Body, as he doth in the Sacrament of Baptisme. All this it pleaseth M. Harding to call the Law of Nature, and the iudgement of our senses. Verily we yeld no more vnto Nature, than it is meet we should. Neither do we abridge Gods omnipotent power. But all vaine fantasies of mans head, may not be measured by the power of God. This argument the Heretike Praxeas vsed against Tertullian. For thus he said: God is Omnipotent, and can doe it: Therefore we must beleeue that he doth it. But Tertullian answereth him: Si tam abruptè in præsumptionibus nostris hac sententia vtamur, quiduis de Deo confingere poterimus: quasi fecerit, quia facere potuerit. Non autem, quia omnia potest facere, ideo credendum est illum fecisse: Sed an fecerit, requirendum: If we vse this saying so rashly in our presumptions, we may imagine of God what we list: as though, because God can doe it, that therefore indeed he hath done it. But we may not beleeue, that God hath done euery thing because he is able to doe it: but rather we must search out, whether he haue done it or no. Thus M. Hardings New Catholike Faith, is called of Tertullian, A vaine Presumption.

Cyprian. de Cœna Domini. Cibus mentis, non ventris.

Chrysost. 1. Corinth. hom. 24.

Tertullian. aduersus Praxeã.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuision.

S. Ambrose hath these words: Etsi Christus nunc non videtur offerre, tamen ipse offertur in terris, quando Christi Corpus offertur. Imò ipse offerre manifestatur in nobis, cuius sermo sanctificat Sacrificium quod offertur: If Christ now bee not seene to offer, yet he is offered in earth, when the Body of Christ is offered. Yea it is manifest, that himselfe offereth in vs, whose word Sanctifieth and Consecrateth the Sacrifice that is offered. Now if Christs Body be offered in Earth, as this Father affirmeth, and that of Christ himselfe, in respect that the Sacrifice which is offered, is by his word Consecrated: then it followeth, Christs Body to be in so many places, as it is offered in. Where by the way this may be noted, that the Sacrifice of the Church, (159) is not thanksgiuing (as our new Masters do teach) but the Body of Christ it selfe, which of the Fathers is called an vnbloody and quickning, or life giuing Sacrifice.

In Psal. 38.

Sacrificium Ecclesiæ non visibile.

S. Ambrose speaketh onely of the Spirituall sight, & fruition of the mind, and requireth no maner Grosse or Corporall Presence. The 150. vntruth. For S. Augustine calleth it the Sacrifice of Praise & thanksgiuing.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

In all these words, there is no mention of Carnall Presence: and therefore M. Hardings purpose is hereby but weakly furthered. But (good Christian Reader) to put this out of all doubt of S. Ambroses iudgement in this behalfe, I beseech thee to consider these words, that he writeth vpon the Gospell of S. Luke: Quæ sursum sunt, sapite: non quæ supra Terram. Ergo non supra Terram, nec in Terra, nec secundum Carnem te quærere debemus, si volumus inuenire: Seeke the things that bee aboue: not the things that be vpon Earth. Therefore wee must seeke thee neither vpon the Earth, nor in the Earth, nor according to the Flesh, if wee list to finde thee. This is S. Ambroses vndoubted and most certaine iudgement: from which wee may not be remoued by any amplification or shew of words. If M. Harding will néeds force and presse the bare letter, as I said before of S. Chrysostome, he will make S. Ambrose in one sentence plaine contrary to himselfe. For first he saith: Vidimus Principem Sacerdotum, &c. We haue seene (Christ) the Prince of Priests coming vnto vs: we haue seene him and heard him offering vp for vs his Blood. He addeth immediately: Et si nunc Christus non videtur offerre, &c. Although Christ be not seene to offer, yet is he offered in the Earth. If wee follow the very force and sound of the words, this Contradiction of séeing and not séeing cannot be saued. Wherefore to auoid this inconuenience, wee must say, that S. Ambrose speaketh of the Spirituall eies of our Faith, with which eies wee see Christ indeed offering vp himselfe vpon the Crosse. And thus, as S. Ambrose saith: Magis videtur, quod non videtur: The thing is the better seene, that is not seene. It is best séene with our Faith, that is least séene with our Body. For our Faith is sharper than our eie. And in like sense S. Augustine saith: Non vides, quomodo rubeat pars Christi? Interroga oculos Fidei. Si Crucem vides, attende & cruorem. Si vides, quod pendet, attende, quod fudit: Seest thou not, how Christs portion is red with Blood? Aske the eies of thy Faith. If thou see the Crosse, behold also the Blood. If thou see, that hangeth, behold also that is shed. Of these eies, and of this sight S. Ambrose speaketh: vnto which is required, neither circumstance of place, nor any maner Corporall or Fleshly Presence. In this sense, S. Ambrose

Coloss. 3.

Ambr. in Lucã lib. 10. cap. 24.

De iis qui initiantur Mysteriis, ca. 3.

Augustin. Sermon. 119. De tempore.

Ambroſe writeth vnto certaine holy Virgins: Veſtras mentes confidenter altaria dixerim, in quibus quotidiè pro Redemptione Corporis, Chriſtus offertur: I may boldly call your mindes Altars, for that in them Chriſt is daily offered for the Redempion of the Body. Ambr. de Virginib. li. 2.

Hereof M. Harding reaſoneth thus.

Chriſt is offered in the Earth:

Ergo, Chriſts Bodie is at one time in many places.

If this argument were good, then would this argument likewiſe be good:

The Lambe, that is, Chriſt, was offered from the beginning of the World: Apocal. ca. 5.

Ergo, Chriſts Body was Really in ſundry places, before it was borne in the World.

M. Harding might better haue reaſoned thus, and haue concluded the contrary:

Chriſt is not now Really and Fleſhly offered in the Earth:

Ergo, Chriſts Body is not Really and Fleſhly preſent in many places.

But M. Harding ſaith: The Sacrifice of the Church is not Thankeſgiuing, as our new Maſters teach vs. Certainly our Sacrifice is the very Body of Chriſt, and that for euer, according to the order of Melchiſedech, euermore ſtanding in Gods preſence, and euermore obtaining pardon for vs: not offered vp by vs, but offering vs vp vnto God the Father. For the ſame, it is our part to offer vnto God our Sacrifice of Praiſe and Thankeſgiuing. And this is the Doctrine, not only of them, whom it liketh M. Harding to call new Maſters, but alſo of the Olde ſt, and moſt Catholike Doctours of the Church. And to allege one in ſtead of many, S. Auguſtine hereof writeth thus: In illis Carnalibus victimis, Figuratio fuit Carnis, quam Chriſtus fuerat oblaturus. In iſto autem Sacrificio eſt gratiarum actio, & Commemoratio Carnis, quam pro nobis obtulit: In thoſe Fleſhly Sacrifices (of the Iewes) there was a Figure of the Fleſh, that Chriſt afterward would offer: but in this Sacrifice of the Church, there is Thankeſgiuing, and a Remembrance of that Fleſh, which Chriſt hath already offered for vs. Hebr. 6. 7. 10. Roman. 8. Auguſt. ad Petrum Diacon. cap. 19.

If M. Harding will happily refuſe S. Auguſtine, as miſtruſted for one of theſe new Maſters, yet he may not will refuſe his owne Maſſe Booke. There he himſelfe euen at his Maſſe is taught to ſay: Qui tibi offerimus hoc Sacrificium Laudis: We, that doe offer vp to thee, this Sacrifice of Praiſe. Wherefore, vnleſſe M. Harding will leaue his Maſſe, he himſelfe muſt néds paſſe in the number of theſe New Maſters.

But to conclude who can better expound S. Ambroſes meaning, than S. Auguſtine, that was ſometime his Scholar? He ſheweth vs by how many waies we may haue Chriſt preſent among vs. His words be theſe: Habes Chriſtum & in præſenti, & in futuro. In præſenti per Fidem: in præſenti per Signum: in præſenti per Baptiſmatis Sacramentum: in præſenti per Altaris Cibum & Potum: Thou haſt Chriſt both in the time preſent, and alſo in the time to come. In the time preſent thou haſt Chriſt by Faith: in the time preſent by his Token: in the time preſent by the Sacrament of Baptiſme: in the time preſent by the Meat and Drinke of the Altar. Auguſt. in Iohan. Tract. 50.

The like hereof is written alſo by Origen, and that in like order and forme of words: ſauing that he addeth, By the Preaching of the Apoſtles: and in ſtead of Signum, hath theſe words: Per glorioſum Crucis Signaculum. Verily the ſame Origen ſaith: Si virtus Ieſu vnà ſit cùm eis, qui congregantur in nomine eius, non peregrinatur à ſuis, ſed ſemper præſto eſt eis: If the power of Ieſus be together with them that be aſſembled in his name, he is not away from his owne, but is ſtill preſent with them. And againe he ſaith: Nihil eſt contrarium, ipſum Ieſum ſecundùm quendam intellectum eſſe vbique: ſecundùm alium intellectum peregrinari: It is no inconuenience nor contrariety, that Chriſt in one ſenſe, be euery where: and in another ſenſe, be a ſtranger, and abſent from vs. Thus many waies, ſaith S. Auguſtine and Origen, we haue Chriſt preſent amongſt vs: and euen thus, ſaith S. Ambroſe, Chriſt is offered in the Earth. Whereupon we may conclude thus: We haue Chriſt in Faith, in the Signe and in the Sacrament of Baptiſme without Real or Fleſhly Preſence: Therefore, we haue him likewiſe without any ſuch Reall Preſence in the Sacrament of his Body. Origen. in Diuerſos, hom. 1. Origen. in Matth. Tract. 33. Origen. eodem. tract.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuiſion.

We finde in Chryſoſtome a moſt manifeſt place for the being of Chriſts Body in many places at once, ſo as, though he be offered in many places, yet is he but one Chriſt, not many Chriſts. His words be theſe: Vnum eſt hoc Sacrificium: aliquin hac ratione, quoniam multis in locis offertur, multi Chriſti ſunt? Nequaquam: ſed vnus vbique eſt Chriſtus, & hic plenus exiſtens, & illic plenus. Vnum Corpus. Sicut enim qui vbique offertur, Vnum Corpus eſt, & non multa Corpora: ita etiam & vnum Sacrificium: This Sacrifice is one, elſe by this reaſon, ſithit is offered in many places, bee there many Chriſts? Not ſo: but there is but one Chriſt euery where, being heere both fully, and there fully alſo, one Body. For as he that is offered euery where, is but one Body, and not many Bodies, ſo likewiſe it is but one Sacrifice. By this place of Chryſoſtome wee ſee what hath been the Faith of the Old Fathers touching this Article: euen the ſame, which the Catholike Church profeſſeth at theſe daies, that one Chriſt is offered in many places, ſo as he be fully and perfectly heere and fully and perfectly there. And thus we perceiue what force their arguments haue in the iudgement of the learned Fathers, by which they take away from Chriſt power to make his Body preſent in many places at once. S. Bernard vttereth the Faith of the Church in his time, agreeable with this, in theſe words: Sed vnde hoc nobis

Iuxta Hebr. 17. Serm. in Cœna Domini.

Chryſoſtome expoundeth himſelfe. He calleth it a Commemoration, a Figure, a Remembrance: whereunto is required no Corporall Preſence. Bernard lived after Chriſt, Anno 1120.

Chriſt whole here, & whole there.

nobis piſſime Domine, vt nos vermiculi reptantes, &c. From whence commeth this, moſt louing Lord, that wee ſilly wormes creeping on the face of the earth, yea, wee that are but duſt and aſhes, be admitted to haue thee preſent in our hands, and before our eies, which all and whole ſitteſt at the right hand of thy Father, which alſo art preſent all in one moment of time from the Eaſt, to the Weſt: from the North to the South; one in many, the ſame in diuers places: from whence (I ſay) commeth this? Soothly, not of our dutie or deſert, but of thy good will, and of the good pleaſure of thy ſweetneſſe: for thou haſt prepared in thy ſweetneſſe for the poore one, O God. In the ſame Sermon exhorting the Church to reioice of the preſence of Chriſt, he ſaith: In terra Sponſum habes in Sacramento, in Cœlis habitura es ſine velamento; & hîc, & ibi veritas; ſed hîc velata, ibi manifeſtata; In the earth thou haſt thy ſpouſe in the Sacrament, in heauen thou ſhalt haue him without vaile or couering: both heere & there, is the truth (of his preſence) but heere couered, there opened.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

This place is vttered by S. Ambroſe, Primaſius, Remigius, Haimo, Sedulius, in like maner and forme of words, and hath beene often alleged, and often anſwered. If it had pleaſed M. Harding to ſuffer S. Chryſoſtome to tell out his owne tale, the place had beene plaine of it ſelfe. For thus he ſaith: Offerimus quidem, ſed Recordationem facientes Mortis eius. Hoc Sacrificium Exemplar illius eſt. Hoc, quod nos facimus, in Commemorationem fit eius, quod factum eſt. Chriſtus enim ait, Hoc facite in meam commemorationem: Id ipſum ſemper offerimus: magis autem Sacrificij Recordationem operamur: We offer indeed, but wee doe it in Remembrance of his Death. This Sacrifice is an Exemplar, or Figure of that Sacrifice. The thing that wee doe, is done in Remembrance of that thing that was done before. For Chriſt, ſaith, Doe this in my Remembrance. We offer vp the ſame thing: Nay, rather wee worke the Remembrance of a Sacrifice. By thus many ſundry waies, Chryſoſtome opened his owne meaning. Yet all this M. Harding thought beſt to diſſemble cloſely, and to paſſe it in ſilence. Certainly, the Commemoration or Figure, or Remembrance of Chriſts Death, maketh ſmall proofe for Corporall or Fleſhly Preſence. True it is, that whole Chriſt is fully at euery Communion, as Chryſoſtome ſaith: not, that he is there in Fleſhly or Bodily Preſence: For ſo S. Chryſoſtome ſaith not: but for that by his Grace and Holy Spirit, he worketh wholly and effectually in the hearts of the Faithfull. S. Auguſtine and other learned Fathers, haue vſed the like maner of ſpeech, and in the ſame ſeeme fully to expreſſe Chryſoſtomes minde. S. Auguſtine writeth thus: Veritas vna eſt, qua illuſtrantur animæ Sanctæ: ſed quoniam multæ ſunt animæ, in ipſis multæ Veritates dici poſſunt. Sicut ab vna facie multæ in ſpeculis imagines apparent: There is but one Truth, wherewith the Bleſſed Soules are lightned. But, forasmuch as the Soules be many, it may be ſaid, that in the ſame are many Truthes: as ſundrie Images appeare in ſundry glaſſes, notwithſtanding the face bee one. Againe S. Auguſtine ſaith: Sapientia Dei, Verbum Dei, Dominus Ieſus Chriſtus vbique præſens eſt: quia vbique eſt Veritas, vbique eſt Sapientia. Intelligit quis in Oriente iuſtitiam: intelligit quis in Occidente iuſtitiam. Nunquid alia eſt iuſtitia, quam ille intelligit, alia, quam iſte? The Wiſedome of God, the Word of God, our Lord Ieſus Chriſt is euery where preſent: for the Truth is euery where, and Wiſedome is euery where. One Man vnderſtandeth Righteouſneſſe in the Eaſt, another vnderſtandeth Righteouſneſſe in the Weſt. And doth the one of them vnderſtand one Righteouſneſſe, and the other another? So likewiſe, and somewhat neere to the maner of Chryſoſtomes ſpeech, Origen ſpeaketh: Et hodiè in hac Congregatione Dominus loquitur: & non ſolùm in hac, ſed etiam in alio Cœtu, & in toto orbe docet Ieſus, quærens organa, per quæ doceat: And euen this day, in this Congregation the Lord ſpeaketh: and not only in this, but alſo in another company, and in the whole world Ieſus teacheth, ſeeking inſtruments, by which he may teach. In this ſort is Chriſt preſent at the holy Miniſtration, becauſe his Truth, his Wiſedome, his Righteouſneſſe, his Word is there preſent, as the Face is Preſent in the Glaſſe: not by any Bodily or Fleſhly Preſence. In this maner S. Ambroſe writeth: Cœlum aſpice: Ieſus illic eſt. Terram intuere: Ieſus adeſt. Si Aſcenderis in Cœlum, Ieſus illic eſt: ſi deſcenderis ad Infernum, adeſt. Hodie, cum loquor, mecum eſt: intra hunc punctum, intra hoc momentum. Et ſi in Armenia nunc loquatur Chriſtus, Ieſus adeſt. Nemo enim dicit Dominum Ieſum, niſi in Spiritu Sancto: Looke vp into the Heauen: there is Ieſus. Behold the Earth: Ieſus is there. If thou mount vp into Heauen, there is Ieſus. If thou go down into Hell, Ieſus is preſent. Euen now while I ſpeake, Ieſus is with me, euen at this houre, euen at this minute. And if any Chriſtian man ſpeake now in Armenia, ſo far hence Ieſus is with him. For no man ſaith, The Lord Ieſus, but in the holy Ghoſt. And ſuch kinde of Preſence at one time in ſundry places, is auouched by S. Chryſoſtome, not only of Chriſts Body, which is Immortall and Glorious, but alſo of any other godly mortall man. For thus he writeth: Vidiſtis charitatis excellentiam, quemadmodum vnum hominem inexpugnabilem reddat, & multiplicet: & quemadmodum vnus in multis locis eſſe poſſit: idem & in Perſide, & Romæ. Nam quod natura non poteſt, poteſt charitas. Nam eius hoc quidem hîc erit, hoc autem illic. Quin potiùs integer hîc, & integer illic. Itaque ſi mille habeas amicos, vel duo millia, perpende quorſum Chryſoſtom. in epiſt. ad Hebr. homil. 17.

Auguſt. in Pſalm. 11.

Auguſt. in Iohan. Tract. 35.

Origen. in Lucam, homil. 32.

Ambr. in Lucam. li. 2. ca. 1.

Chryſoſt. ad populum Antiochen. hom. 51.

quorſum poſſit potentia peruenire. Vides quemadmodum Charitas res ſit augmentatiua. Hoc enim eſt mirabile, quòd vnum facit millecuplum: Thou haſt ſeene the excellent working of Charity, how it fortifieth a man, as it were, in a Caſtle, and multiplieth him, and being one man, maketh him many. Thou haſt ſeene, how one Man may be in many places: one man in Perſia, and the ſame man in Rome. For charity can doe, that nature cannot doe. Of one man, one portion ſhall be heere, and another portion there. Nay rather, he ſhall be whole heere, and whole there. Therefore if one man haue a thouſand friends, or two thouſand, conſider, how farre he may reach by his power. Thou ſeeſt, how that Charity is a matter of increaſe. And this is a wonder, It maketh one man to be a thouſand fold more, than he is, and as if he were a thouſand men.

Arguments taken of Chriſts humanity.

The ſame anſwer may ſerue alſo for S. Bernard: Howbeit his authoritie in this caſe is not great, as liuing in the very time of Corruption, at the leaſt eleuen hundred yeares after Chriſt, and ſo fiue hundred yeares at the leaſt without the compaſſe of the firſt ſix hundred yeares.

M. Harding. The 9. Diuiſion.

Thus all theſe Fathers, as likewiſe the reſt, confeſſe as it were with one mouth, that Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of his Father, and yet is heere preſent in the Sacrament the ſame time, that he is in Heauen and in Earth at once, in many and diuers places, one and the ſame is euery where offered, the one true Sacrifice of the Church. And this Article is by them ſo cleerely and plainly vttered, that (151) Figures, Significations, Tropes, and Metaphors, can finde no appearance or colour at all. Whereby the new Maſters reaſons ſeeme very peeuiſh: Chriſt is aſcended: Ergo, he is not in the Sacrament. Chriſt is in Heauen ſitting at the right hand of his Father: Ergo, He is not in Earth. Chriſts Bodie is of nature finite: Ergo, It is contained in a place circumſcriptiuely: Ergo, It is not in many places.

The 151. vntruth. For theſe very words of Ambroſe and Chryſoſtome, are ful of figures; as ſhall appeare.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

M. Harding nedeth no great ſtudy to anſwer our Arguments. It is ſufficient for him to pronounce by authority, Theſe New Maſters Arguments be all peeuiſh. Verily it appeareth by the whole Subſtance and Courſe of M. Hardings Booke, that he hath ſome good pretty ſkill in peeuiſh Arguments: otherwiſe he could not haue them, and vſe them in ſuch plenty. But the old learned Fathers often times and commonly vſed ſuch Arguments of Chriſts Humanity, and yet were they neuer reproued, as peeuiſh for the ſame, but only by Heretikes. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Donec ſæculum finiatur, ſurſum eſt Dominus: Sed tamen etiam hîc nobiſcum eſt Veritas Domini. Corpus enim, in quo Reſurrexit, in vno loco eſſe oportet: Vntill the World be ended, the Lord is aboue; yet notwithſtanding, euen heere is the truth of the Lord. For the Bodie wherein he roſe againe, muſt needs bee in one place. S. Cyrillus ſaith: Chriſtus non poterat in Carne verſari cum Apoſtolis, poſt quam Aſcendiſſet ad Patrem: Chriſt could not be conuerſant with his Apoſtles in his Fleſh, after that hee had Aſcended vnto his Father. So S. Auguſtine writing againſt the Heretike Manichee, that ſeemed much to ſauour of M. Hardings errour, ſaith: Chriſtus ſecundum Præſentiam Corporalem, ſimul & in Sole, & in Luna, & in Cruce eſſe non potuit: Chriſt, according to the preſence of his Body, could not be both in the Sunne, and in the Moone, and vpon the Croſſe at one time. Againe he ſaith: Chriſtus venturus eſt, illa Angelica voce teſtante, quemadmodum ire viſus eſt in Cœlum, id eſt, in eadem Carnis Forma atque Subſtantia: Cui Profectò Immortalitatem dedit, Naturam non abſtulit: Chriſt ſhall come againe, as it is witneſſed by the Angell, euen as he was ſeene to go into Heauen: that is, in the ſame ſhape and ſubſtance of his Fleſh; vnto which Fleſh as he hath giuen Immortality, ſo hath he left vnto it the ſame Nature, that it had before. Thus S. Auguſtine. And further he ſaith: That whoſo holdeth, that Chriſts Body is both in Heauen and in Earth at one time, vtterly diſſolueth, and deſtroieth the nature of the Body of Chriſt. To be ſhort, and not to ouercharge the Reader with allegations, S. Auguſtine ſeemeth to giue a ſpeciall note by way of Prophecie, touching the ſame. For thus he ſaith: His dictis mox Aſcendit in Cœlum: præmunire voluit aures noſtras aduerſus eos, quos, procedentibus temporibus, exurrecturos eſſe prædixerat, & dicturos: Ecce hîc Chriſtus, Ecce illic: quibus, ne crederemus, admonuit. Nec vlla nobis excuſatio eſt, ſi crediderimus aduerſus vocem Paſtoris noſtri tam claram, tam apertam, tam manifeſtam, vt nemo vel obtuſus, & tardus corde, poſſit dicere, Non intellexi: Theſe words ſpoken, he Aſcended into Heauen. Heereby he gaue our eares a Premunire againſt them, which hee fore-told vs, would riſe in proceſſe of time, and ſay: Behold, heere is Chriſt: behold, there is Chriſt. Vnto whom he warned vs, we ſhould giue no credit. Neither haue wee now any maner excuſe, if wee beleeue them againſt the voice of our Shepheard, beeing ſo cleare, ſo open, and ſo plaine, that no man, be he neuer ſo heauy or dull of heart, can iuſtly ſay, I vnderſtood him not. Thus the old Catholike Doctours thought they might warrant the Arguments for good and effectuall, that they tooke of Chriſts Humanitie, and of the Naturall Subſtance of his Body. But perhaps they muſt all goe for new Maſters, and their arguments likewiſe be condemned for peeuiſh.

De Con. diſt. 2. Prima.

Cyril. in Iohan. lib. 11. cap. 3.

Auguſt. contra Fauſtum Manichæum, li. 20. cap. 11.

Auguſt. epiſt. 57.

Auguſtin. de vnitate Eccleſia, cap. 10.

Math. 24. Lucæ. 17.

Arguments taken of Christs humanity.

Let vs therefore consider the arguments that M. Harding and his company haue founded hereupon. Thus therefore reason they: Christ is ascended into Heauen in his Humanitie: The Heauens must hold his Body, as S. Peter saith, vntill all things be restored: S. Paul saith, Our Conuersation is in Heauen, from whence we looke for our Sauiour Iesus Christ: Christ saith, I leaue the World, and goe to my Father: The poore yee shall still haue among you, but mee yee shall not haue: Ergo, say they, Christ is still heere in the World in his Corporall and Fleshly Presence. Christs Body is of Nature and Substance Finite: Ergo, It is in places infinite. Christ hath two sorts of Bodies: One only Locall: all the rest of the other sort not Locall. It is in place, yet it occupieth, or filleth no place. It is a very naturall Mans body: yet is it neither round, nor square, nor thicke, nor broad, nor short nor long. It hath in it no distance, or difference of parts: as betweene eie and eie: or eie and eare: or head and foot: but eie, eare, arme, hand, heele, toe, head and foot are all together, and ech is other, and all is one. In ten thousand seuerall places Christs Body is full and whole: and yet all these are but one Body. Thus One is Many, and Many are One: Aboue is Beneath, and Beneath is Aboue: Locall is not Locall, and not Locall is Locall: and all this without the authority, either of Gods holy Word, or of any one Old Catholike Father. These be M. Hardings Catholike conclusions: euen the very same, that were vsed and auouched by Eutyches, Apollinarius, Manichæus, and other like Heretikes in old times: and therefore they may not now be counted peruish. And that thou maiest the better feele the sauour and soundnesse of these mens Doctrine, I beseech thee, gentle Reader, to consider these words of Robert Holcot, a great Doctor of that side: Si fuissent mille hostiæ in mille locis, eo tempore, quo Christus pependit in Cruce, Christus fuisset Crucifixus in mille locis: If there had beene a thousand hosts in a thousand places, at that very time when Christ hung vpon the Crosse, then had Christ beene Crucified in a thousand places. Againe he saith: Pono, quòd tempore illos &c. I suppose, that at the same time, the soule of Christ, departing from his Body vpon the Crosse, had come vnto, and rested at one of the said hosts: if so, then had Christs Body beene both quicke and dead in one time. Thus much D. Holcot. Heere hast thou, good Reader, a taste of M. Hardings Doctrine, in respect whereof all other Doctrine must needs be condemned, and cast as peruish. Alas, they wander vp and downe in meere vanities, and, as S. Paul saith, They would be the Doctours of the Law, not vnderstanding, neither what they say, nor what they affirme. Verily S. Augustine saith: Quando de forma Serui cogitas in Christo, Humanam effigiem cogita, si est in te Fides: When thou thinkest of the forme of a Seruant in Christ, thinke of the forme of a man, if thou haue any Faith in thee.

Actor. 1.
Actor. 3.
Phillippen. 3.
Iohan. 16.
Matth. 26.
Thomas in 3. qua. 76. ar. 3.
Holcot. in 4. Senten. q. 3.
1. Timoth. 1.
August. in Iohan. Tract. 40.

This matter, saith M. Harding, is so clearely vttered by these Fathers, that Figures, Significations, Tropes and Metaphors can haue no place. M. Harding would not thus haue said, if he had any regard vnto his Reader. By the very order and tenour of these Fathers words: Christ commeth, and yet commeth not. Christ is not seene, and yet is seen. Christ is touched with hands, yet no man can touch him. Euery man seeth him without guile or error: yet no man seeth him. Elias is aboue, and at the same time, the same Elias is beneath. Elias Coat is called Elias: Chrysostome and Ambrose are faine both to correct the rigour of their speech, and to vse these words Memory, Exemplar, Commemoration, and Remembrance. And what is there heere else but Figures? Yet saith M. Harding, Significations, and Figures heere can haue no place. It is too great tyranny, so much to mocke and abuse Gods people.

M. Harding. The 10. Diuision.

In making of which slender arguments, they will not seeme to acknowledge whose Body it is, euen that which is proper to God, whose power is ouer all, and to whom all things obey.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Yes vndoubtedly, we acknowledge the Body of Christ to be the Body of the Sonne of God, and therefore the Body of very God. Yet neuertheless we know, and M. Harding also ought to know, that the same Body of Christ is a Creature, and therefore no God. And surely, if M. Harding had well considered the Principles of his owne Doctrine, he might soone haue found out the follie of this reason. For Albertus Magnus his owne Doctour is full against him. Thus he writeth Corpus Christi non est in pluribus locis ratione Vnionis, sed ratione Consecrationis, quia Consecratur in pluribus locis: The Body of Christ is not in many places by meane of the Vnion it hath with the Godhead, but by meane of the Consecration, because it is Consecrate in many places. Thus Albertus wrote of Christs Body, contrary to M. Hardings meaning, notwithstanding he was not ignorant whose Body it was.

Albertus Magnus in Dion. de Eccl. Hierarch.

Indeed Eutychianus saith: Hæc fallendi simplices, atque ignorantes Hæreticis occasio est, &c. This occasion Heretikes haue, to beguile the simple and the ignorant: that the things that are spoken of Christ according to his Man-hood, they imagine the same to be spoken according to the Eutychiani in Epist. 1.

the infirmitie of the Diuine Nature: & because Christ being one Person, speaketh all things of himselfe, they say, he spake all things of his Godhead. Thus Eutychianus saith, M. Hardings reason serued well Heretikes in old times, therewith to beguile the people then, as he doth now. So the old Heretikes, Saturninus, Manichæus, and Marcion denied the veritie of Christs Flesh, because it is ioined, and vnited to the Godhead. So Athanasius, and Epiphanius say, that the Heretike Apollinarius held and taught the people, that Christs Bodie was of one Substance with the Deitie.

Athanasius De Incarnatione Christi. Epiphanius De Ebionæis.

In consideration of the same Union, the Emperour Iustinian was led into the Heresie of certaine that were called Ἀφθαρτοδοκῆται, and held, that Christs Body was euermore Glorious, and without corruption. So likewise was Eutyches deceiued: likewise the Godly learned Father S. Hilarie, as it is said before. All these Heresies and errors sprang onely of M. Hardings reason, for that the Authors and maintainers thereof, yeelding reuerence vnto Christs Bodie, as dutie required, ouermuch considered, whose Body it was.

τὸ σῶμα χριστοῦ ὁμοούσιον εἶναι τῇ θεότητι. Euagr. li. 4. c. 39. Niceph. lib. 17. ca. 29. Hilar. lib. 10. De Trinita.

It is indeed, as I said before, the Body of God. But S. Augustine saith: Non, quod in Deo est, est vbique, vt Deus: Whatsoeuer is in God, is not therefore euery where, as God is. And againe: Cauendum est, ne ita Diuinitatem astruamus Hominis, vt veritatem Corporis auferamus: Wee must beware, that wee doe not so defend the Godhead of the Man, that wee destroy the truth of his Bodie. And therefore Epiphanius expressing the state of Christs Immortall Bodie, as it is now in Heauen, writeth thus: Sedet ad Dextram Patris, &c. He sitteth at his Fathers Right hand in Glorie, not putting away his Body, but ioining the same in Spirituall condition in the perfection of one Godhead: euen as our Bodies, that now are sowen according to the Flesh, shall be raised againe according to the Spirit. So saith the godly Martyr Vigilius: Caro Christi, quando in terra fuit, non erat in Cœlo: & nunc, quia est in Cœlo, non est vtique in terris: The Flesh of Christ, when it was in the Earth, was not in Heauen: and now because it is in Heauen, is not verily in the Earth. This holy Father affirmeth it, and auoucheth it for true, and saith: Verily it is not in the Earth: And his reason is onely this: Because it is in Heauen. And he concludeth thus at the last: Hæc est Fides, & Professio Catholica, quam Apostoli tradiderunt, Martyres roborauerunt, & Fideles hucusque custodiunt: This is the Catholike Profession, and Faith, which the Apostles haue deliuered, the Martyrs haue confirmed, and the Faithfull hitherto doe continue. Thus the Old Catholike Fathers in old times beleeued, and wrote of Christs Body: and yet they had not forgotten whose body it was.

Augustinus Epist. 57. ad Dardanum. Epiphan. lib. 3. In breui declaratione de Fide Catholica. οὐ κατὰ τὰ ἡμῶν σώματα μένει &c. Vigilius contra Eutychem. li. 1. Quia est in Cœlo. The Catholike Faith.

M. Harding. The 11. Diuision.

But because M. Iewel, and they of that sect, seeme to set little by these Fathers, though very ancient, S. Bernard excepted, and of the Church holden for Saints, I will bring forth the Authoritie of Martin Bucer, a late Doctour of their side, though not Canonizate for a Saint as yet, for that I know. This new Father, whom they esteeme so much, and was the Reader of Diuinitie in Cambridge in King Edwards time, verie vehemently, and for so much truly, affirmeth the true Reall presence of Christs Body in the Sacrament. For he saith, Christ said not, This is my Spirit: This is my Vertue: But, This is my Bodie. Wherefore we must beleeue (saith he) Christs Bodie to be there, euen the same that did hang vpon the Crosse, our Lord himselfe. Which in some part to declare, he vseth the similitude of the Sunne for his purpose, contrary to M. Iewels Negatiue, to proue Christs Body present, and that Really, and Substantially, in what places soeuer the Sacrament is rightly Ministred. His words be these. Vt sol verè vno in loco Cœli visibilis circumscriptus est, radijs tamen suis præsens verè & Substantialiter exhibetur vbilibet Orbi: ita Dominus, etsamsi circumscribatur vno loco Cœli Arcani, & Diuini, id est, Gloriæ Patris; Verbo tamen suo, & Sacris Symbolis, verè, & totus ipse Deus, & homo præsens exhibetur in Sacra Cœna, eóque Substantialiter; quam præsentiam non minus certò agnoscit mens credens Verbis hu Domini, & Symbolis, quàm oculi vident, & habent Solem præsentem demonstratum, & exhibitum sua corporali luce. Restitta arcana est, & Noui Testamenti, res Fidei: non sunt igitur huc admittendæ cogitationes de præsentatione Corporis, quæ constat ratione huius vitæ etiam passibilis & fluxæ. Verbo Domini Simpliciter inhærendum est, & debet Fidei sensuum defectui præbere supplementum. Which may thus be Englished. As the Sunne is truly placed determinately in one place of the visible heauen, and yet is exhibited truly and substantially by his beames euerie where abroad in the world: So our Lord, although he be contained in one place of the Secret and Diuine Heauen, that is to wit, the Glorie of his Father, yet for all that, by his Word, and holy Tokens, he is exhibited present in his holy Supper truly, and himselfe whole, God, and Man, and therefore Substantially, or in Substance. Which presence the minde giuing credit to these our Lords words and tokens, doth no lesse certainly acknowledge, than our eies see, and haue the Sunne present shewed and exhibited with his Corporall light. This is a secret matter, and of the New Testament: a matter of Faith: therefore heerein thoughts be not to be admitted of such presentation of the Bodie, as consisteth in the maner of this life passible, and transitorie. We must simply cleaue to the word of our Lord, and where our senses faile, there must Faith helpe to supplie. Thus we see, how Bucer in sundrie other points of Faith both deceiued, and also a deceiuer, confirmeth the truth of this article pithily and plainly. Such is the force of Truth, that oftentimes it is confessed by the very enemies of truth.

In Comment. in 16. cap. Matthæi.

This Similitude of the Sunne clearely openeth the whole matter. For the Substance, or Bodie of the Sunne is Really present onely in one place.

Fight not with the Church M. Iewel, but fight with the enemie of the Church. Fight with him whom you haue followed in departing from the Church, who neuertheless by force of truth, is driuen against you to confesse the truth in those most plain words, Verè & totus ipse, Deus & homo, præsens exhibetur in Sacra Cœna, eóq; Substantialiter: In this holy Supper himselfe, God, and man, is exhibited present truly, and whole, and therefore Substantially.

The

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Gods name be praiſed: neither doe wee refuſe the iudgement of the Ancient Fathers in theſe caſes: neither hath Maſter Harding, for ought that may yet appeare, any iuſt cauſe, thus to vant himſelfe of the ſame. Here he allegeth the Authoritie of Doctour Bucer, euen as the Heretique Eutyches ſometime, to maintaine his Herеſie alleaged S. Cyprian: or as the Neſtorian Heretiques alleaged the Authoritie of the Nicene Councell. For, notwithſtanding Doctour Bucer, to auoid contention, as a man deſirous of peace, was content to yeeld vnto certaine indifferent terms, as Oſius that learned Father ſometime did in the Councell of Ariminum to the Arians, yet was his reſolution herein euermore thoroughly, and fully knowen. And the very ſimilitude, or example, that he vſeth of the Sunne, putteth the matter out of all queſtion. For like as the Body or Compaſſe of the Sunne being in one certaine place of the Heauens reacheth out his beames, and giueth influence into the world: euen ſo Chriſt the Sonne of Iuſtice, being in Heauen in one place at the right hand of God, likewiſe reacheth out his beames, and giueth his influence into the Faithfull, and ſo feedeth them, not by bare Imagination, or Fantaſie: but Truly, Subſtantially, and indeed. And as the Sunne is more comfortable, and more refreſheth the world, being abſent, by his beames, than if his very Naturall Subſtance, and Compaſſe lay here vpon the Earth: euen ſo the Body of Chriſt being in the Glorie of his Father, in the very Subſtance and Nature of our Fleſh, and there euermore intreating Mercy for our ſinnes, is much more comfortable vnto vs, and more quickeneth both our Bodies and Soules by his heauenly and Spirituall influence, than if it were here preſent Fleſhly before our eies. And as the Sunne not comming downe from heauen, nor leauing his place, is neuertheleſſe preſent with vs in our houſes, in our faces, in our hands, and in our boſoms: euen ſo Chriſt being in heauen, not comming downe, nor leauing his rome there, yet neuertheleſſe is preſent with vs in our Congregations: in our hearts: in our Prayers: in the Myſterie of Baptiſme: and in the Sacrament of his Body and Blood. Therefore Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Maria, quia quærebat in terra, tangere non potuit: Stephanus tetigit, quia quærebat in Cœlo: Mary could not touch Chriſt, becauſe ſhee ſought him vpon the Earth: But Stenen touched him, becauſe he ſought him in heauen. And againe he ſaith: Non enim corporali tactu, ſed Fide tangimus: For wee touch not Chriſt by any bodily meane, but by our Faith. And therefore againe hee ſaith: Stephanus intra Cœlos Dominum cernit abſentem: Stephen ſeeth Chriſt being abſent, within the Heauens. So ſaith Origen: Per Euangeliſtarum, & Apoſtolorum prædicationem: per ſui ſancti Corporis, & Sanguinis Sacramentum: per Glorioſum Crucis ſignaculum nobiſcum Deus: God is with vs by the preaching of the Euangeliſts and Apoſtles: By the Sacrament of his Body and Blood: and by the glorious Signe of his Croſſe. So Saint Auguſtine: O ſtulta infidelitas perſequentis! Si quæris exilium, quò Chriſtianus iubeatur ire, priùs ſi potes inueni, quò Chriſtus cogatur exire: O the fond infidelitie of this perſecuter. If thou ſeeke a place of baniſhment, whither thou maieſt command a Chriſtian man to goe: firſt, if thou can, finde a place, from whence thou maieſt command Chriſt to depart. And againe, thus hee writeth vnto the Godlie widow Italica. Non debes te deſolatam arbitrari, cùm in interiore homine habeas Chriſtum preſentem per fidem in corde tuo: Then maieſt not thinke thy ſelfe to be deſolate, while thou haſt Chriſt preſent in thy heart, in the Inner man by Faith. So againe: Non eſt Iudæus? non eſt Græcus, &c. Sed omnia, & in omnibus Chriſtus. There is no Iew, there is no Gentile: but Chriſt is all, and in all. In like ſorte S. Hierome ſaith: Tangat digitulo: & vltro exibimus. Domini eſt terra, & plenitudo eius. Chriſtus loco non tenetur incluſus: Let him puſh vs with his finger: and wee will foorth willingly. The Earth is the Lords and the fulneſſe thereof. Chriſt is not holden priſoner in any place.

In Cõcil. Chalcedon. Actio. 1. Concil. tom. 1. in Apologetico Cyrilli. In præfatione Concil. Sardicen. Hilarius. The Sunne.

Amlroſ. in Lucam. li. 10. c. 24

Ibidem. Ambroſ. Serm. 58. De Maria Magdal. Origen. in diuerſos Euangelij locos. hom. 1. Auguſt. de Natali B. Cypriani Serm. 12. Aug. Epiſt. 6. Auguſt. de Sermone Domini in monte, lib. 1.

Hieronym. aduerſus errores Iohan. Hieroſ.

Thus is Chriſt preſent among vs: thus we feele him: thus we ſee him. But all this is the worke of Faith: it needeth no Fleſhly or Locall preſence. Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith: Non recte tangitur, id eſt, non recte in illum creditur: Hee is not touched well: that is to ſay, hee is not beleeued well. So ſaith S. Bernard: Tangitur, ſed affectu, non manu: voto, non oculo: fide, non ſenſibus: He is touched, but with deuotion, not with hand: with zeale, not with eie: with Faith: not with ſenſe. And thus we ſay, we haue Chriſt preſent, not as M. Harding ſaith, only for a minute of an houre, wherein is neither ſauour nor comfort: but verily effectually, and, if he be delighted with that word, Subſtantially, and for euer, euen vnto the conſummation of the World. Neither doth he denie, that Chriſt is preſent, that denieth this Imagination of Groſſe and Fleſhly Preſence. Origen ſaith: Si Virtus Ieſu congregatur cum his, qui congregantur in nomine eius, non peregrinatur à ſuis, ſed ſemper præſtò eſt eis: If the power of Ieſus bee together with them that are gathered in his name, then is not he abſent from his owne, but is euermore preſent with them.

Auguſt. in Iohan. tract. 121. Bernar. in Cãtica Cantic. Serm. 26.

Orig. in Matthæ. tractat 33.

By

By theſe few, I truſt, it may appeare, that we neither are departed from the Church of God, nor fight againſt the Church. But you, M. Harding, vnder this glorious title of the Church, thinke to carrie your ſelfe inuiſible. Howbeit, as there be two ſorts of Faiths, ſo are there two ſorts of Churches: the one True, the other Falſe. Your Church, being as now vtterly void of Gods word, is as a Lanterne without Light. Leo writing againſt ſuch as you be, ſaith thus: Eccleſiæ nomine armamini, & contra Eccleſiam dimicatis: Ye arme your ſelues with the name of the Church: and yet ye fight againſt the Church. S. Iohn in his Reuelations ſaith: They name themſelues Iewes, that is, The people of God, but they are the Synagogue of Satan. O fight not M. Harding, thus againſt God: fight not againſt your owne Conſcience. It is hard for you, thus to kicke againſt the pricke. The more ye fight, the more ye bewray your owne nakednesſe. Theſe colours and ſhadowes muſt needs fade: God with his Truth will haue the Victorie. Amen.

Leo ad Palaſtinos. Apocalyp. 2. Act. 9.

M. Harding. The 12. Diuiſion.

Now to be ſhort, whereas the chiefe arguments, that be made againſt the being of Chriſts Body in many places at once, be deduced of nature, in reſpect that this article ſeemeth to them, to aboliſh nature; it may pleaſe them to vnderſtand, that God, who is Author of nature, can by his power do with a Body, that which is aboue the nature of a Body, nature not deſtroied, but kept and preſerued whole. Which Plato the Hea-then Philoſopher would ſoone haue beene induced to beleeue, if hee were aliue: who asked; What was nature; anſwered, Quod Deus vult, That which God will. And therefore we beleeue, that Enoch, and Eſias, yet mortall by nature, do by power of God liue in Body, and that aboue nature. Abacuc was by the ſame power caught vp, and in a moment carried from Iewrie to Babylon, his nature reſerued whole. S. Peter by God according to nature walked on the earth, the ſame by God beſides nature, walked vpon the waters. Chriſt after condition of nature aſſumpted, ſuffered death in Body: the ſame Chriſt by his diuine power entred with his Body into his Diſciples thorow doores cloſed.

M. Harding ſeemeth not well to conſider what Plato meant.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Our proofes are grounded, not only vpon Naturall Reaſon, but alſo vpon the expreſſe, and knowen Will of God. And by ſuch Arguments the learned Fathers were wont in old times, to diſpute of Chriſts humanitie againſt Apollinarius, Manichæus, Eutyches, and other like Heretikes, without controlment. For Naturall Reaſon holden within her bands, is not the enemie, but the daughter of Gods Truth. And therefore hee muſt be verie vnreaſonable, that will thus without cauſe be angrie with reaſon. But it appeareth, that M. Harding, as he is vtterly without Scriptures and Doctours in theſe caſes, ſo is he alſo void of Reaſon. As touching Plato, it ſeemeth there was hard hold, when a Naturall Philoſopher muſt ſtand forth, to proue Chriſts Myſteries. This matter, within theſe few hundred yeares, hath beene attempted many waies: by Logike: by Philoſophie: by the Metaphyſikes: and by the names of Old Fathers. But when none of all theſe helpes would ſerue, they imagined, and brought forth Animoſam Fidem, a Faith without any word of God, bold to beleeue they knew not what. In the end finding their want and weakeneſſe herein, for that this Faith had no ground, they deuiſed Miracles, and fires now, and ioined them with it: Then was the matter ſufficiently and fully proued.

But Plato ſaith: Natura eſt, quod Deus vult: Nature is that thing, that God will. Firſt, what if M. Harding vnderſtand not what Plato meant? And what if Plato neuer vnderſtood what M. Harding meaneth? Yet muſt Platoes name ſerue to proue all M. Hardings fantaſies? Plato ſaith: Nature is whatſoeuer God will. Muſt was therefore concluded, That Cold is Hot: White is Blacke: Accident without Subiect: Subiect without Accident: a Body is no Body: a Nature Finite is Infinite? What a ſtrange kinde of Philoſophie hath M. Harding found out? It is a ſimple weapon that theſe men will refuſe, to ſerue their turne.

The Philoſophers called Epicuræi, held this fantaſie, that God ſitteth in Heauen idlely, and at eaſe, neuer incombring or troubling himſelfe with the rule of the world: and that therefore Nature ruleth it ſelfe only by chance, and at aduenture, without any certain direction of Gods gouernment: and that whatſoeuer is done therein, is no part of Gods doing. Contrariwiſe, the Philoſophers called Stoici, held another fantaſie, that God himſelfe is nothing elſe but Nature, and that therefore all things are wrought by neceſſitie, and force of Deſtinie, and that God is able to worke no Miracle, nor to doe any thing contrary to the common courſe of Nature. Both theſe follies Plato repreſſed by this ſhort anſwer, Natura eſt, quod Deus vult. His meaning is, that Nature is ſubiect, and obedient vnto God, and that there is, neither Chance, nor Neceſſitie in the courſe of Nature: but all things are ordered by Gods appointment, and Naturall

Cauſes

Christ in his owne hands.

Causes are onely the instruments of Gods will. And therefore some compare Nature to the horse, and God to the horseman, that bridleth her, and turneth her whither he listeth. And for the same cause Origen saith: Anima mundi est, Virtus Dei: The Soule of the World is the power of God. And S. Basil saith: The World is the Schoole of our soules, to leade us to know God. Therefore God was able by his power to diuide the Sea: to pull backe, and stay the Sunne: to open the Earth: to make the water of Iordan to stand as a wall: to stay the Fire from burning, and the Water from drowning. If any man list to know the cause hereof, there is none other, but Gods will. In this sense the Philosopher Simonides was wont to say, Solus Deus est Metaphysicus: God alone is Supernaturall. And Pindarus for the same called God Ἀριστέτυκον, The best or skilfullest Artificer. Likewise S. Augustine saith: Quomodo est contra Naturam, quod Dei fit voluntate, cùm voluntas tanti Conditoris sit cuiuscunque rei Natura? How is it against Nature, that is done by Gods Will, seeing the Will of so Noble a Creator is the Nature of euery thing? This vndoubtedly was Platoes meaning. Now let vs examine M. Hardings reasons.

Origen. περὶ ἀρχῶν. lib. 2. c. 1.
Basil. Hexameron. homil. 1.
Ψυχῶν διδασκαλεῖον, καὶ θεογνωσίας παιδωτήριον.
Aug. de Ciuit. Dei. li. 21. c. 8.

Nature is whatsoeuer God will: Elias, and Enoch are yet aliue in their Bodies. Abacuc was caught, and carried to Babylon: S. Peter walked vpon the Sea: Ergo, Christs Body is at one time in a thousand places. These arguments hold à posse, ad Esse, and might haue stood the Heretikes Manichæus, and Eutyches in some good stead: but in Catholike Schooles they haue no place.

But how is M. Harding so well assured of Gods will? How knoweth he, that God will haue Christs Bodie to be in a thousand places at one time: to be euery where: to be infinite: to be no Body? Verily, the Ancient Fathers, for any thing that may appeare, neuer knew it. Contrarywise, he might haue said, Gods holy Will was, that Christ should take the Naturall Substance of a mans Body: and, that in all things he should be like vnto his brethren: and, that his Bodie should be a Creature: and as S. Augustine saith, should be in one place. This is Gods knowen and expresse Will: therefore by Platoes iudgement, this is Nature. Certainly S. August. saith, as it is before alleaged: Christus Corpori suo Immortalitatem dedit: Naturam non abstulit: Christ gaue Immortalitie to his Bodie: but he tooke not from it the former Nature of a Bodie. Thus much hath M. Harding gotten by the authoritie of Plato.

Hebræ. 2.
August. De Consec. Dist. 2. prima.
Aug. epist. 57.

M. Harding. The 13. Diuision.

Christ at his last Supper according to Nature sate downe with his twelue Disciples, and among them occupied a place at the Table visibly, by his diuine power there hee held his Bodie in his hands inuisibly. (152) for (as S. Augustine saith) Ferebatur manibus suis, hee was borne in his owne hands: where Nature gaue place, and his owne Body was in moe places than one. Verily, Non est abbreuiata manus Domini, the hand of our Lord is not shortned, his power is as great as euer it was. And therefore let vs not doubt, but he is able to vse nature finite, infinitely: specially now, the nature of his Body being glorified after his Resurrection from the dead. And as the liuing is not to be sought among the dead, so the things that be done by the power of God aboue nature, are not to be tried by the rules of Nature.

In expositione Psal. 33.

The 152. Vntruth, standing in vnsufficient reporting, and misconstruing S. Augustines words.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

S. Augustine saith: Christus ferebatur in manibus suis: Christ was borne in his owne hands. These words are often alleaged, and seeme at the view to sound somewhat of M. Hardings side. But being well weighed and considered, they discharge themselues, and are soone answered. First it is knowen, and confessed, that S. Augustine in reporting these words, either by meane of the Translation, or by some other errour, was much ouerseene, and alleaged that for Scripture, that indeed neither is any portion of the Scripture, nor elsewhere to be found. For where he saith, Dauid was borne in his owne hands, the very Text is this, Collabebatur in manibus eorum: He went reeling in their hands. And so S. Basil alleageth, and expounded the same place: Διαφέρεται ἐν τῶν χερσὶ τῶν διωκόντων, Caried along in the seruants hands. And thus S. Augustine being deceiued in the Text, was faine to force the same to some violent construction.

1. Sam. 21.
Basil. in Psa. 33

Yet saith M. Harding, S. Augustines words be plaine, Christ was borne in his owne hands. It is neither indifferent, nor true dealing, thus to nip, and to poyne the Doctours sayings: and alleaging a few words, to leaue out the rest, and especially such words, as be materiall, and able to giue light vnto the whole. For S. Augustine saith not, Christ bare himselfe Really, Substantially, and indeed in his owne hands, as it is here vntruly supposed: neither as Master Harding hath added of his owne, By his Diuine power, or Inuisibly. But contrariwise he expounded himselfe by these words: Ipse se quodammodò portabat: In a manner, and after a sort, he carried himselfe. This word, Quodammodò, in the Schooles is called, Terminus diminuens: which often times in reasoning breedeth errour. For these words, Quodammodò, After a sort, and, Verè, Verily, or indeed, are euer contrary.

Quodammodo.

contrary. So ſaith S. Auguſtine: Sacramentum Corporis Chriſti, ſecundùm quendam modum Corpus Chriſti eſt: The Sacrament of Chriſts Bodie, in a certaine ſort, is the Bodie of Chriſt. And this ſort or maner he expoundeth thus: Niſi enim Sacramenta ſimilitudinem quandam earum rerum, quarum Sacramenta ſunt, haberent, omnino Sacramenta non eſſent: Vnleſſe Sacraments had ſome likeneſſe of thoſe things, whereof they be Sacraments, they ſhould vtterly be no Sacraments.

Likewiſe ſaith Bertramus: Secundùm quendam modum Corpus Chriſti eſt. Modus hic in Figura eſt, & in Imagine: The Sacrament after a certaine maner is the Bodie of Chriſt: This maner ſtandeth in a Figure, and in a Repreſentation. So likewiſe the very Barbarous Gloſſe vpon the Decrées expoundeth the ſame: Cœleſte Sacramentum, quod verè repræſentat Corpus Chriſti, dicitur Corpus Chriſti, ſed impropriè. Vnde dicitur, Suo modo: ſed non rei veritate, ſed ſignificante Myſterio: vt ſit ſenſus, Vocatur Corpus Chriſti: id eſt, Significat Corpus Chriſti: The Heauenly Sacrament, which verily doth repreſent the Fleſh of Chriſt, is called Chriſts Body: but not in plaine kinde of ſpeech. Therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith: Suo modo, After a ſort: which is, not in the very truth of the matter, but by a Myſterie ſignifying: that the meaning be thus, It is called the Body of Chriſt, becauſe it ſignifieth the Body of Chriſt. Touching the thing, that Chriſt held in his hand, S. Auguſtine confeſſeth it was Bread: for thus he writeth: Quamuis Panem, quem Dominus geſtauit in manibus, oculis ſuis non aſpexerint: Albeit they neuer ſaw with their eies the Bread, that the Lord held in his hands. Yet the ſame Bread, becauſe it is a Sacrament of Chriſts Body, after a ſort, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, is alſo called Chriſts Bodie. Thus doth S. Auguſtine often times vſe this word, Quodammodò. For example, he writeth thus: Eccleſia, quos lucrata fuerit aliquo modo, eos manducat quodammodò: The Church after a ſort eateth them, whom by any meane ſhee hath gotten. And againe vpon the ſame Pſalme: Quid eſt hærere Cornibus, niſi quodammodò Crucifigi? Figura eſt iſta de Chriſto: What was it elſe, that the Weather was tied by the hornes, but after a ſort to be Crucified? Therefore this is a Figure of Chriſt. In this ſenſe S. Auguſtine ſaith, Chriſt, Quodammodò, After a ſort, not Verily, or indéed, but in a Sacrament, or in a Figure, bare himſelfe in his hands.

Chriſt in his owne hands.

Auguſt. Epiſt. 23. ad Bonifa.

Ibidem.

Bertramus de Sacramen. Eu.

De Conſecra. Diſt. 2. Hoc eſt. In Gloſſa.

Auguſtin. De verbis Domini in Euangel. Matth. Serm. 33.

Auguſtin. in Pſalm. 30.

But M. Harding will reply: S. Auguſtine ſaith thus: Hoc quomodò intelligatur in ipſo Dauide ſecundùm Literam, non inuenimus: in Chriſto autem inuenimus: How this may be taken in Dauid himſelfe, according to the Letter, we finde not: but in Chriſt we finde it. Therefore he will ſay, this muſt be verified in Chriſt, euen according to the Letter. This errour riſeth of the miſunderſtanding of theſe words of S. Auguſtine, Secundùm literam. Which ſometime are vſed for the Literall Senſe, or the very ſound of the bare words: ſometime for the Hiſtoricall Senſe, that is to ſay, for the courſe and tenor of the ſtorie. Now ſaith S. Auguſtine, that Dauid ſhould any way beare himſelfe, Secundùm literam, According to the Storie written of him, it doth not appeare: but that Chriſt, After a ſort, that is, by way of a Sacrament, thus carried himſelfe, euen in the Storie of the Goſpell, which is to ſay, Secundùm literam, it doth appeare. And that theſe words, Secundùm literam, be often times thus vſed, any man may ſone perceiue, that ſhall diligently note and conſider the Ancient Fathers. Firſt, S. Auguſtine in the place alleaged, vttereth this matter of Dauid, in this ſort: In regnorum libris, vbi omnia nobis ſcripta ſunt, quæ pertinent ad res geſtas Dauidis non inuenimus hoc: In the Bookes of the Kings, whereas all things are written to vs, that pertaine to the doings of Dauid, this thing wee finde not. And againe in the ſame place: Chriſtus cùm commendaret Corpus, & Sanguinem ſuum, Humilitatem ſuam commendauit, in eo, quod in ipſa Hiſtoria Scriptum eſt in illo quaſi furore Dauidis: When Chriſt recommended vnto vs his Body, and Blood, hee recommended vnto vs his Humilitie, in that thing, that is written in the very Storie touching that madneſſe of Dauid. This is that S. Auguſtine meant by theſe words, Secundum literam. Now that this word, Litera, is often taken for the Storie, it doth many waies appeare. S. Auguſtine ſaith thus: Ambroſius cùm tractaret hunc locum, ait: Nec Hiſtoria, nec Litera docet, Mariam gladio finiuiſſe vitam: Ambroſe writing hereof, ſaith thus: Neither the Storie, nor the Letter doth teach vs, that Mary was ſlaine with a ſword. So S. Hierome: Eſcam dedit timentibus ſe: He gaue food to them that feare him. In the time of hunger he fed Elias: in the wildernesſe he rained Manna vnto the Iewes: he addeth, Et hoc ſecundùm Literam: And this according to the Letter: which is, according to the Storie. So likewiſe S. Gregorie: Subditur, quod de eo minimè ſcriptum legitur: Effudit in terram viſcera mea: Ex qua re neceſſe eſt, vt, dum hæc Iuxta Literam inuenire non poſſumus, ea, quæ in verbis eius Secundum hiſtoriam ſonant, iuxta Spiritum inquiramus: Thus S. Auguſtine vſeth theſe words, Secundùm Literam, not for the Literall Senſe, as theſe Men would faine haue it, but for the Record, and knowledge of the Storie written of Dauid. M. Harding ſhould haue remembred, that miſunderſtanding of his Doctour maketh no ſufficient proofe. Howbeit, it is much to be feared, Secundùm Literam.

Auguſtin. in Pſalm. 33.

Auguſtin. in Pſalm. 33.

Ibidem. Concion. 2.

Auguſtin. De Sanctis, Sermone 35.

Hieronym. in Pſal. 110. & 111.

Gregorius in Iohan. lib. 13. ca. 6.

Being in a Myſtery.

feared, that M. Harding of purpoſe left out this word, Quodammodò: and not of ignorance, but wittingly, and willingly miſreported, and falſified S. Auguſtines meaning. Certainly S. Auguſtine hath not one of all theſe words, neither, by Diuine Power: nor, Inuiſibly: nor, Nature gaue place: nor, Chriſts Body was in moe places than one.

M. Harding. The 14. Diuiſion.

Being in a Myſterie requireth no Corporall, or Reall Preſence. The 153. Vntruth. For theſe words of Auguſtine, and Gregorie pertaine nothing to the Sacrament.

And that all abſurdities, and carnall groſneſſe be ſeuered from our thoughts, where true Chriſtian people beleeue Chriſts Body to be in many places at once, they vnderſtand it ſo to be in a Myſterie. Now to be in a Myſterie, is not to be comprehended in a place, but by the power of God to be made preſent in ſort and maner as he himſelfe knoweth, verily ſo as no reaſon of man can attaine it, and ſo, as it may be ſhewed by no examples in Nature. Whereof that notable ſaying of S. Auguſtine may very well bee reported: O homo, ſi rationem à me poſcis, non erit mirabile: exemplum queritur, non erit ſingulare: That is, O Man, if (153) (herein) thou require reaſon, it ſhall not be maruellous: ſeeke for the like example, and then it ſhall not be ſingular. If Gods working be comprehended by reaſon (ſaith holy Gregorie) it is not wonderous: neither Faith hath meede, whereto mans reaſon giueth prooſe.

Auguſt. in l. pſal. Vindicem. Item Serm. 33. De tempor.

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

Being in a Myſterie, as it is before anſwered, like as it requireth no Circumſtance, or neceſſitie of place, ſo it requireth no Bodily, or Reall Preſence. Contrariwiſe, if Chriſts Body were preſent indeed, and that in ſuch groſſe, and fleſhly ſort, as is here conceiued, then were it no Myſterie. For, to be preſent in a Myſterie, and to bee Bodily, and fleſhly preſent, are taken for contraries. And therefore the Gloſſe ſaith, as is before alleged: Sacramentum dicitur Corpus Chriſti, non rei Veritate, ſed ſignificante Myſterio: The Sacrament of Chriſts Body is called Chriſts Bodie, not in truth of the matter, but by a myſterie ſignifying.

De Conſe. diſt. 2. Hoc eſt. in Gloſſa.

But, whereas it is further ſaid, that this myſticall preſence is knowen onely vnto God, and, I trow, to M. Harding, and to no man beſide, all this is nothing elſe, but Religicus Follie, imagined only to aſtonne and amaze the ſimple. For the Scriptures, and holy Fathers are acquainted with no ſuch Myſterie. The Sacrament of Baptiſme is a Myſterie, euen as is the Sacrament of Chriſts Bodie: and as Chriſt is preſent in the one, ſo is hee alſo preſent in the other: that is to ſay, Truly, Verily, Effectually, and indeede: howbeit, not in this groſſe maner of M. Hardings Fleſhly Preſence. The places of S. Auguſtine, and S. Gregorie, concerne onely Chriſts Incarnation, the Union of the Diuinitie, and the Humanitie, and other ſuch Articles, and grounds of Chriſtian Religion, wherein Nature, and Reaſon vtterly haue no place: and therefore being ſpoken of one thing, are applied by M. Harding vnto another. Neither is M. Harding able truly to ſay, that in any of all thoſe places, there is either mention once made, or one word ſpoken of the Sacrament. Wherefore it ſeemeth, M. Harding would purpoſely miſlead his Reader, and teach him to reaſon in this ſort:

Chriſt was miraculouſly incarnate of the Bleſſed Virgin:

Ergo, Chriſts Body is Really and Fleſhly in the Sacrament.

True it is, that the faith of our Religion cannot be proued by diſcourſe of reaſon. But euery fantaſie may not goe for Chriſtian faith. S. Paul ſaith: Fides ex auditu: Auditus ex verbo Dei: Faith commeth by hearing: Hearing commeth by the word of God. Certainly M. Hardings new faith, or fantaſie, in the time of the old Catholike fathers, was neither Chriſtned, nor knowen in the world: as may appeare by their owne witneſſe of good record. For beſides others, whom in this Treatiſe I haue touched vpon occaſion by the way, S. Auguſtine writeth purpoſely hereof vnto Dardanus in this wiſe: Noli dubitare, ibi nunc eſſe Hominem Chriſtum Ieſum, vnde venturus eſt, &c. Doubt thou not, but Chriſt Ieſus, as man, is there, from whence he ſhall come: and haue thou in remembrance, and faithfully hold the Chriſtian confeſſion, that he is riſen from the dead: that he is aſcended into heauen: that he ſitteth at the right hand of his Father: & that from thence, and from no where els, he ſhall come to iudge the quicke and the dead, euen as he was ſeene going into heauen: that is, in the ſame forme, and ſubſtance of his Body: To which Body vndoubtedly he hath giuen Immortalitie, but hath not taken from the ſame the Nature of a Bodie. According to this forme (of Man) we may not thinke, that Chriſt is powred abroad into all places. For we muſt beware, we doe not ſo defend the Godhead of the Man, that we deſtroy the truth of his Body. Againe: Vnus Chriſtus Ieſus: vbique per id, quod Deus eſt: in Cœlo autem per id, quod homo: Chriſt Ieſus is one Perſon, and the ſame euery where in that he is God: but he is in heauen, in that he is Man. Againe he ſaith: Semper quidem Diuinitate nobiſcum eſt: Sed, niſi Corporaliter abiret a nobis, ſemper eius corpus carnaliter videremus: Chriſt by his Godhead is euer with vs: but vnleſſe he had departed away bodily from vs, we ſhould euermore carnally ſee his body. Theſe words are ſpecially to be noted. If Chriſt were Bodily here, he ſhould carnally bee ſeene: Therefore, by S. Auguſtines iudgement, if Chriſt

Roman. 10.

Auguſtin. Epiſt. 57. Cui profectò Immortalitatem dedit: Naturam non abſtulit. Cauendum eſt, ne ita Diuinitatem aſtruamus hominis, vt veritatem Corporis auferamus. Auguſt. de verbis Domini in Euangel. ſecundùm Iohan. Sermo. 60.

Christ were Bodily present in the Sacrament, we should see him Carnally in the Sacrament. Againe: Et abijt, & hic est: & rodijt, & nos non deseruit. Corpus enim suum intulit Cœlo: Maiestatem autem non abstulit mundo: Hee is gone, and yet is heere. Hee is returned to his Father, and yet hath not forsaken vs. For he hath carried his Bodie into Heauen: but he hath not taken his Maiesty from the World. Againe: Pauperes semper habebitis vobiscum, &c. The poore yee shall haue euermore with you, but mee yee shall not haue. Let good men heare this, and not be carefull. For this he spake of the Presence of his Bodie. For according to his Maiesty, according to his Prouidence, according to his vnspeakable and Inuisible Grace, it is fulfilled, that he said, I am with you alwaies, vntill the Consummation of the World. But according to the Flesh, that the Word receiued: according to that, he was borne of the Virgin: according to that, he was taken of the Iewes: according to that, he was nailed to the Crosse: according to that, he was taken downe, and lapt in a shrowd, and laid in the Graue, and rose againe, and shewed himselfe: in this respect, it is true, that he said, ye shall not euermore haue me with you.

Christs Body in one place.

Augustin. in Iohan. tract. 50.

Ibidem.

Likewise againe: Dominus consolatur nos, qui ipsum iam in Cœlo sedentem manu contrectare non possumus, sed Fide contingere: The Lord doth comfort vs, that cannot touch him with our hand sitting now in Heauen: but may touch him notwithstanding with our Faith. And againe: Si illi propterià crediderunt, quia tenuerunt, & palpauerunt, nos quid facimus? Iam Christus Ascendit in Cœlum, & non est venturus, nisi in fine, vt iudicet de viuis, & mortuis: If they therefore beleeued in Christ, because they held him, and touched him what do we then? For Christ is now Ascended into Heauen, and will not come againe, but in the end, to iudge the quicke and the dead. So saith Origen: Christus secundum Diuinitatis suæ Naturam non peregrinatur à nobis: Sed peregrinatur secundùm dispensationem Corporis, quod suscepit: Christ according to the Nature of his Godhead is not a stranger vnto vs: but he is a stranger to vs, touching the dispensation of the Body, which he hath receiued. Againe: Nec est Homo qui est, vbicunque duo vel tres in eius nomine fuerint congregati, &c. It is not Christ as Man, that is whersoeuer two or three bee gathered in his name: neither is Christ, as Man, with vs alwaies vntill the Consummation of the World. So likewise saith S. Hierome: Christus non est Corporaliter in Ecclesia: Surgens enim à mortuis, Ascendit in Cœlum: Christ is not now Bodily in the Church: for being risen from the dead, he is Ascended into Heauen.

Augustin. in Epist. Iohan. tract. 2.

Augustin. in Epist. Iohan. tract. 2.

Origen. in Matth. tract. 33.

Origen. in eadem homil.

Hieronym. in Prouerb. li. 1. cap. 8.

I passe ouer S. Ambrose, S. Gregory, S. Cyril, S. Basil, Vigilius, Fulgentius, Didymus, Beda, and other like ancient Fathers. Thus were they then resolued of Christs Body: and this they toke to be the Catholike Faith.

Yet neither were they therefore Condemned for New Masters: nor followed they only the iudgement of Nature, nor led they the World with pæuish Reasons: nor touching Christs Body, had they forgotten whose Body it was: nor were they counted the enemies of Gods Omnipotent Power: nor were they then thought to fight against the Church. But M. Harding with his new deuised fantasie, is a Patron, and a maintainer of the Manichees, of the Apollinarists, of the Eutychians, and other moe horrible and old condemned Heretikes.

OF ELEVATION.

The Seuenth Article.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR that the Priest did then hold vp the Sacrament ouer his head.

M. Harding.

Of what weight this ceremony is to be accounted, Catholike Christian men, whom you call your Aduersaries, M. Iewel, know no lesse than you Verily, whereas it pleaseth you thus to iest, and like a Lucian, to scoffe at the Sacraments of the Church, and the reuerent vse of the same, calling all these Articles in generall the highest Mysteries and greatest Keies of our Religion, without which our doctrine cannot bee maintained, and stand vpright: vnderstand you, that this, as sundrie other Articles, which you denie, and require proofe of, is not ſuch, ne neuer was ſo eſteemed. *The Prieſts lifting vp, or ſhewing of the Sacrament, is not one of the higeſt Myſteries, or greateſt Keies of our Religion: and the doctrine of the Catholike Church may right well be maintained, and ſtand without it. But it appeareth, you regard not ſo much what you ſay, as how you ſay ſomewhat for colour of defacing the Church; which whiles you goe about to doe, you deface your ſelfe more, than you ſeeme to be ware of, and doe that thing, whereby among good Chriſtian men, ſpecially the learned, you may be aſhamed to ſhew your face. For as you haue ouer-rathly, yea, I may ſay, wickedly affirmed the Negatiue of ſundry other Articles, and ſtoutly craked of your aſſurance thereof, ſo you haue likewiſe of this. For peruſing the ancient Fathers writings, we find record of this Ceremonie vſed euen (152) from the Apoſtles time forward. S. Dionyſe that was S. Pauls Scholar, ſheweth, that the Prieſt at his time after the Conſecration, was wont to (155) hold vp the dreadfull Myſteries, ſo as the people might behold them. His words bee theſe according to the Greeke: Pontifex diuina munera laude proſecutus, ſacroſancta & auguſtiſſima Myſteria conficit & celebrata in conſpectum agit per ſymbola ſacrè propoſita: The Biſhop after that he hath done his ſeruice of praiſing the diuine gifts, conſecrateth the holy and moſt worthy myſteries, and bringeth them ſo praiſed into the ſight of the people, by the tokens ſet foorth for that holy purpoſe. On which place the ancient Greeke Writer of the Scholies vpon that worke, ſaith thus: τὸν κουφισμὸν, ἢ τὴν ὕψωσιν τῆς μιᾶς εὐλογίας τὸ δι' ἐκ ἄρτα φησὶ, ὃν ὑψοῖ ἱερεὺς λέγων, τὰ ἅγια τοῖς ἁγίοις: Loquitur de vnius benedictionis, nimirum panis diuini, eleuatione, quem Pontifex (156) in ſublime attollit, dicens, Sancta Sanctis. This Father ſpeaketh in this place, of the lifting vp of the one Bleſſing (that is to ſay, of the one forme or kinde of the Sacrament) euen of that diuine Bread which the Biſhop lifteth vp on high, ſaying, Holy things for the Holy. *In S. Baſils and Chryſoſtome Maſſe, we find theſe words; Sacerdos eleuans Sacrum Panem, dicit, Sancta Sanctis: The Prieſt holding vp that ſacred Bread, ſaith; Holy things for the Holy. In S. Chryſoſtomes Maſſe we read, that as the people is kneeling downe after the example of the Prieſt, and of th. Deacon, the Deacon ſeeing the Prieſt ſtretching foorth his hands, and taking vp that holy Bread, πρὸς τὸ πνεῦμα τὴν ἀχραν ὕψωσιν, ἐκφωνεῖ προσέχωμεν, Ad ſacram Eleuationem peragendam palam edicit, Attendamus, To do the holy Eleuation, ſpeaketh out aloud, Let vs be attent; and (then) the Prieſt ſaith (as he holdeth vp the Sacrament) Holy things for the Holy.

Amphilochius, of whom mention is made before in the life of S. Baſil, ſpeaking of his wonderous celebrating the Maſſe, among other things ſaith thus: Et poſt finem orationum, exaltauit Panem, ſine intermiſſione orans, & dicens: Reſpice Domine Ieſu Chriſte, &c. And after that he had done the praiers of Conſecration, he lifted vp the Bread, without ceaſing praying, and ſaying, Looke vpon vs Lord Ieſus Chriſt, &c. The ſame S. Baſil meant likewiſe of the Eleuation and holding vp of the Sacrament after the cuſtome of the Occidentall Church, in his Booke De Spiritu Sancto, where he ſaith thus; Inuocationis verba, dum oſtenditur Panis Euchariſtiæ, & Calix benedictionis, quis Sanctorum nobis ſcripto reliquit? Which of the Saints hath left vnto vs in writing the words of Inuocation, whiles the Bread of Euchariſtia (157) (that is to wit, the bleſſed Sacrament, in forme of Bread) and the Conſecrated Chalice, is ſhewed in ſight? He ſpeaketh there of many things that be of great authoritie and weight in the Church, which we haue by Tradition only, and cannot be auouched by holy Scripture. Of ſhewing the holy Myſteries to them that be preſent in the Sacrifice, the old Doctours make mention not ſeldome.

S. Chryſoſtome declareth the maner of it, ſaying, that ſuch as were accounted vnworthy and heinous ſinners, were put foorth of the Church, whiles the Sacrifice was offered, whiles Chriſt, and that Lambe of our Lord was Sacrificed. Which being put out of the Church, then were the Vailes (of the Altar) taken away, to the intent the holy Myſteries might be ſhewed in ſight, doubtleſſe to ſtirre the people to more deuotion, reuerence, (158) and to the Adoration of Chriſts Body in them preſent. And thus for the Eleuation or holding vp of the Sacrament, we haue ſaid enough.

* The eleuation of the Sacramẽt is now no Article of Religion, yet in the late time of Tyranny it was more looked vnto, than any one Article of the Trinity.

The 154. vntruth, as ſhall appeare.

The 155. vntruth: for Dionyſius hath no ſuch words.

The 156. vntruth, ſtanding in falſe tranſlation. He meaneth, lifting vp a little from the Table. Not ouer the Head Chryſoſt. ſaith, Modicum.

* Heere is no mention of lifting ouer the Head. M. Harding miſtaketh one thing for another.

The 157. vntruth, ſtanding in falſe Conſtruction.

The 158. vntruth. For the Grecians knew neither this kind of Adoration, nor Reall Preſence.

Eccleſ. Hiſtor. ca. 3.

Cap. 27.

Inchiſt. ad Xtum Ser. 3. in Matt.

A Fable.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

M. Harding ſeemeth, in part to diſclaime this Article, as a matter of ſmall weight, and none of the Principall Keies of his Religion: wherein I ſee not, but I may ſafely and eaſily grant vnto him: adding notwithſtanding thus much withall, That the leſſe it is, the leſſe hurt is in it. Yet notwithſtanding, of late daies it was otherwiſe eſteemed, and moſt ſeuerely exacted, as the thing wherein ſtood their Adoration, which was the whole price and beautie of their Maſſe. The Prieſt was wicked that would not vſe it: The people was wicked, that would not allow it: Their greateſt Doctors haue trauelled painfully to know the cauſe and ſignification of this Myſterie, and yet cannot finde it. All this notwithſtanding, it is now confeſſed to be a ſmall matter, of no great weight, and ſuch as the Church may well ſpare without hinderance. But as M. Harding here ſaith, his Doctrine may ſufficiently be maintained, and ſtand vpright without this Ceremonie of Eleuation: euen ſo may we truly and iuſtly ſay, That the Heauenly and infallible Doctrine of the Goſpell of Chriſt, may likewiſe ſtand vpright, and be maintained, not only without this new Ceremony, but alſo without their Priuate Maſſe, without their Halfe Communion, without their ſtrange vnknowen Prayers, without their Supremacy of Rome, without their Tranſubſtantiation, and other like fantaſies by them deuiſed.

Gerardus Lorichius, li. 3. Durandus, lib. 4. de ſexta parte Canonis. Titulmannus, De officio Miſſæ.

Yet are not they all of that ſide hitherto fully reſolued, touching their owne Eleuation, neither when, nor where, nor wherefore it firſt came in vſe, nor what it meaneth. Some of them ſay, The lifting vp of the Sacramentall Bread, ſignifieth Chriſts Incarnation: Some of them ſay, It ſignifieth Chriſt hanging vpon the Croſſe: Some of them, That it ſignifieth the taking downe of his Bodie from the Croſſe: Some, his Reſurrection: Some, his Aſcenſion into Heauen: Some, That it ſignifieth a Sacrifice ſpeciall, aboue all Sacrifices: Some others ſay, That the Prieſt lifteth vp the Chalice, to ſignifie, That Chriſt crying out with a loud voice, gaue vp the Spirit. M. Harding ſaith, It is lifted vp doubtleſſe, doubtlesse, to the intent the people may Adore. Thus many and moe Mysteries they haue imagined in one thing, and yet the same, as it is confessed, no key of their Religion. Disagreement euermore argueth ignorance. S. Augustine saith: Si vix, aut omnino nunquam inueniri possint causæ, quas in istis rebus instituendis homines sequuti sunt, vbi facultas tribuitur, sine vlla dubitatione resecanda existimo: If the causes which men followed in deuising such things, can hardly or neuer be found, I thinke it best, when opportunity and occasition is giuen, they be abolished, and put away without scruple or staggering. August. ad Ianua. epist. 119.

They haue assayed earnestly, to proue this Ceremony by the warrant of Gods Word, as if God himselfe had commanded it. Gerardus Lorichius saith: Hunc ritum Dauid videtur Præuidisse in Spiritu: Dauid seemeth to haue foreseene this order in the Spirit. And to this purpose he alleggeth the authority of Rabbi Iohai, whom I marueil M. Harding had forgotten. Durandus for the same, alleggeth the Words of Christ: Ego si exaltatus fuero à Terra, omnia traham ad meipsum: If I be once lifted vp from the Earth, I shall draw all things to my selfe. And to spred the matter the better forward, Linwood saith: The Pope hath giuen liberall doale of Pardons: And the more to astonne the simple people, Alexander of Hales saith: They haue of themselues inuented and deuised many strange Miracles. They haue earnestly and sadly disputed, whether the Cup should be holden vp open, or couered. They say, It is a matter of speciall meed, and able to confound Heresies, They haue wrested and corrupted the Scriptures, and falsified the Rabbines for the same. M. Harding also would seeme to allege a multitude of Old Doctours, and long continuance, euen from the Apostles time. To be short, they haue holden them for Heritikes, and burned them that durst to speake against it. Yet now in the end M. Harding saith: It is but a small matter, and the rest of their Religion may well stand without it. I wonder he proceedeth not herein with as good courage, as in the rest. Gerard. Lorichius, li. 3. Rab. Iohai. Durand. li. 4. de sexta parte Canonis. Iohan. 12. Linwood De Celebra. Missarum. Altissimus. Alexan. de Hales, 4. q. 53. m. 4. art. 3. Durand. li. 4. Gerard. Lorichius, li. 3.

Neither did I scoffe hereat, as a Lucian, as it pleaseth M. Harding in his choler to report, but reuerently, and soberly spake the truth, euen as in the presence of God. It pitied me to see Gods people so deceiued, and that euen by such, as had taken vpon them to be the Fathers and Guiders of the people. But, O mercifull God, What Religion may this be, that no man may touch or truly report of it, without surmise or suspicion of scoffing? And whereas M. Harding, as a man somewhat ouermuch subiect to his Passions, saith further, I may be ashamed to shew my face among learned men. If he meane the learned of his owne side, verily, it can be no great glory for me to behold those faces, that haue bene so often turned. O M. Harding we haue no cause to be ashamed of the Gospell of Christ: It is the mighty power of God vnto Saluation. I pray God, that both you and I, may leaue these worldly respects, and faces of men: and so vse the gifts that God hath lent vs, and so freely discharge our consciences in this life, that Christ be not ashamed of vs before his Father: but we may come to see God face to face. Touching the matter it selfe, M. Harding thinketh it best, to claime his Elenation euen from the Apostles time. So the Romanes in old times, because they knew not from whence their Ancilia came vnto them, they thought it not amisse, for the more credit of the matter, to say they were sent to them from Heauen, Roman. 1. Luc. 9. Titus Liuius, lib. 1.

So Romulus and Theseus, because they were base borne, and no man knew their Fathers, therefore were reckened to be the Children of the Goddes. Dionysius, Chrysostomus, and Basil, as they are worthy of much credit for their Antiquity, so in this case they say nothing, that of our part is denied. The Question is, Whether the Priest did then hold vp the Sacrament ouer his Head, or no. This thing M. Harding dissembleth, and passeth by: and turneth his whole proose to another thing, that neither is doubted of nor denied. First, whereas Dionisius saith: In conspectum agit: He bringeth the Misteries into sight: this maketh very small proose of M. Hardings side, except happily he will say, No man can bring a thing to sight, vnlesse he hold it ouer his Head. But that thou maist thoroughly and fully see both the very ground and sense of these words of Dionysius, and also M. Hardings peruerse and strange Construction touching the same, it may please thee, gentle Reader, to vnderstand, that in those daies the maner was, that the Sacrament, being all in one whole Loafe or Cake, vndiuided, should remaine still vpon the Holy Table, couered vnder a faire cloth, vntill the time of the Distribution thereof vnto the people. Touching which Cerimony, Pachymeres the Greeke Paraphrast writeth thus: Ἀποκαλυπτομένων τῶν παναγίων, δίχα μὲν τῶν ἐυχῶν, μενόντων δὲ κεκαλυμμένων ἕως χειρὸς μεταλήψεως: The Holy Gifts being opened after the Praiers or Consecration, and yet remaining still couered vntill the time of the Distribution, &c. Solikewise saith Maximus in his Scholie vpon the same place. And addeth further: Not only the Holy Bread was set forth couered, but also the holy Cup, which thing, he saith, now is not done. Pachimeres in tertium caput Eccles. Hierar Maximus: ὅτι κεκαλυμμένον ἔμενε τὸ θεῖον δῶρον ἕως χειρὸς μεταλήψεως.

This order of cerimony to the Church then well considered, Dionysius is plain enough of himselfe without other Commentary. For thus stand his words: Profert ea, quæ laudauit, in conspectum, per Symbola reuerenter proposita: & dona Sacrificiorum communstrans, ad Sacram illorum Communionem & ipse accedit, & hortatur alios: The Priest bringeth foorth the things that he hath praised, into sight, by the tokens reuerently set before him: and shewing foorth the giftes of the Misteries, both he himselfe draweth neere to the holy Communion of the same, and also exhorteth others. This shewing and bringing into sight, was nothing else, but the vncouering and laying abread of the Misteries.

Dionys. Eccles Hierar. ca. 3. ἐις ὄψιν ἄγει.

If M. Harding will say, This exposition is wrested or violent, let him then heare Dionysius expound himselfe: Thus he writeth afterward in the Speculation or Exposition of the same: In conspectum profert, &c. He bringeth foorth the things that he hath praised, into sight, &c. It followeth: Nam opertum, & Indiuisum Panem aperiens, & in multas Partes diuidens, & Vnitatem Poculi omnibus impertiens, Symbolicè implet Vnitatem: For vncouering the Bread that was couered, and stood whole, and vndiuided, and cutting it into many parts, and parting the vnity of the Cup vnto all the people, by way of a Sacrament, he fulfilleth Vnity. If all this will not content M. Harding, yet Dionysius saith againe in plainer sort: τὰ μεν ἐκκαλυμμένα δῶρα ἐις τὸ φανερὸν ἄγει: Munera quæ tecta fuerant, in apertum profert: He bringeth foorth into open sight, the Gifts or Sacraments, that before were couered. This vndoubtedly was the meaning of these words: vnlesse perhaps M. Harding will say, Dionisius vnderstood not his owne meaning. Verily Pachymeres the Paraphrast expoundeth it thus: profert in conspectum, ostendens hæc esse Christi Symbola: He bringeth these things into sight, shewing, that they be Tokens and Signes of Christ. Hitherto there is no maner mention of holding the Sacrament ouer the Head.

τὸν γὰρ ἐγκαλυμμένον, καὶ ἀδιαίρετον ἄρτον ἀνακαλύψας, καὶ ἐις πολλὰ διελὼν. ἐις τὸ μέρος ἄγει.

Pachymeres. σφραγίζων ὡς χειρὶ εἰσὶ τὰ τιθέμενα σύμβολα.

But M. Harding replieth, Maximus saith, Dionysius meant the holding vp of the one part of the Sacrament. This may easily be granted. But the same Maximus, whatsoeuer he were, or whensoeuer he liued, saith not, The same one part was holden ouer the Priests Head: and therefore M. Harding is but weakly relæued by his authority. And againe, the same Maximus, as a man not very certaine what to say, deuiseth two other expositions of Dionysius words besides this. But let this Exposition of Maximus stand for good. The Priest held vp from the Table, and shewed forth the Sacrament, to declare, that the holy Communion was ready, that the people might prepare themselues, and draw neare. And therefore he spake aloud: Holy things for the Holy. Which words Chrysostome expoundeth thus: Quando Sacerdos dicit, Sancta Sanctis, Hoc dicit: Si quis non est Sanctus, non accedat: When the Priest saith, Holy things vnto the Holy, thus he saith: If any man be not Holy, let him not come neere. So likewise Nicolaus Cabasilas, a Greeke Writer of late daies: Sacerdos clamat; Sancta Sanctis, propemodum dicens, Ecce panis vitæ: accurrite participes futuri: sed non omnes: verum, si quis est Sanctus: The Priest speaketh aloud, Holy things for the holy: As though hee should say, Behold the Bread of life: come neere and take part: howbeit not all, but if any man be holy. And lest he should seeme to discourage any man in respect of his vnworthinesse, he saith further: Sanctos autem vocat, non virtute perfectos, sed quicunque ad illam tendunt perfectionem: Hee calleth them holy, not, that be full perfect in virtue, but that be inclined to perfection. To this end therefore the Minister shewed forth the Bread, that the people might prepare themselues to the Distribution: And therefore it is written thus in Chrysostomes Liturgie: Sacerdos ostendit Calicem populo, dicens, Cum timore Dei, & Fide, & dilectione accedite: The Priest sheweth the Cup vnto the people, saying vnto them, Draw neere with the feare of God, and with Faith and loue, And the people answereth, Blessed is he, that commeth in the name of the Lord. This same was S. Basils meaning, in his Booke, De Spiritu Sancto. The words of Inuocation, that there are spoken of, were of such authority in the Church, and of such weight, that neither M. Harding, nor I beleeue, any other of that side, is able now to shew vs what they were. In the Liturgie, that beareth S. Basils name, it is only noted thus: When the Priest saith, Sancta Sanctis, the people answereth, Vnus Sanctus: Vnus Pater: Vnus Filius. The vere same was Chrysostomes meaning vpon the Epistle to the Ephesians. The Courtaines of the holy Communion Table were drawen, that the Misteries prepared for the people might be seene vpon the Table, not, that the Priest should lift them vp ouer his head. The vaine fable of M. Hardings Amphilochius, so often repeated, is not worth the answering.

Sancta Sanctis. Chrysost. in Epist ad Hebræos homil. 17.

Nicolaus Cabasilas.

Basil. de Spirit. Sanct. cap. 27.

Liturgia Basilij.

Chrysostom. in Epist. ad Ephesios, hom. 3.

All this notwithstanding, M. Harding doubteth not to make vs beleeue, That all these Fathers spake plainly of the Eleuation of the Sacrament ouer the Priests head: and that, as he saith, according to the custome of the Occidentall Church. And to that end he hath prettily falsified the words of Maximus. For whereas Maximus in the Greeke writeth thus: ὃν ἄρτον ὑψοῖ ὁ ἱερεὺς M. Harding hath translated it in this wise: Quem panem pontifex

pontifex in ſublime attollit : Which Bread the Biſhop liſteth on high. And ſo it were eaſie to deceiue the ſimple, vnleſſe the Fathers had otherwiſe declared their owne meaning. Pachymeres expoundeth that word thus : ἀνατείνων, ἤγουν ἀνυψοῖ, Hee ſheweth or liſteth vp. He ſaith not, The Prieſt lifted the Sacrament aboue his Head, or on High, as M. Harding hath turned it : but hee ſhewed the Sacrament a little vp from the Table, that it might be ſeene of the people. And ſo ſaith Chryſoſtome touching the ſame : Sacerdos modicum tollens portionem, quæ eſt in ſancta patena, dicit, Sancta Sanctis : The Prieſt a little lifting vp the portion, that is in the holy Diſh, ſaith, Holy things for the holy. And ſo likewiſe Claudius du Sainctes readeth it. And in S. Baſils Liturgie it is thus noted in the Margin : Hic Sacerdos Hoſtiam fractam in patena iacentem, vnà cum Patena ſubleuat, & oſtendit populo : Heere the Prieſt liſteth vp the Hoſt, or Sacrament lying broken in the Diſh, and together with the Diſh ſheweth it vnto the people. Yet muſt all theſe bee brought forth to proue this new maner of Eleuation now vſed in the Church of Rome. So bold is M. Harding of the ſimplicitie of the people.

Pachymeres.

Chryſoſt. in Liturgia. Modicum.

Claudius du Sainctes.

Caſſander.

But one ſtrange thing, among others, I note by the way in M. Hardings anſwer; that being demanded of this late deuiſed Ceremonie in the Church of Rome, hee ſoundeth his whole anſwer vpon the Eaſt Church of Græcia, and sheweth not one example, nor moueth one word of the Church of Rome; and yet notwithſtanding, hee knoweth right well, that this kinde of Eleuation from the beginning vntill this day, was neuer vſed in the Church of Græcia.

It ſeemeth likely, that as well this vſage, as alſo ſundrie others, of Apparell, of Dile, &c. grew firſt from the imitation of the ceremonies of the Iewes: among whom the Prieſt in the time of their Sacrifices, held vp the oblation before his breaſt. So in the Primitiue Church, whatſoeuer was offered by any man to the releefe of the poore, it was taken by the Prieſt, and holden vp, and preſented in the Church, as a pleaſant Sacrifice before God. So Chryſoſtome ſaith : The Prieſt in the time of the holy Miniſtration lifted vp the Goſpell. His words be theſe : Sacerdos in altum tollit Euangelium. And Nicolas Cabaſilas likewiſe ſaith : His peractis, Sacerdos ſtans ſuper Altare, in altum tollit Euangelium, & oſtendit: Theſe things being done, the Prieſt ſtanding ouer the Altar, liſteth the Goſpell on high, and ſheweth it.

Tertmali.

In Liturgia. Nicolas Cabaſilas in expoſitione Liturgia.

But, that the holding vp of the Sacrament ſhould import Adoration to the ſame, as M. Harding ſurmiſeth, neither is it thought true by all others of that ſide, nor hath it any good ſauor or ſhew of truth. Indeed great Pardons and Chartars haue bene liberally giuen of late yeares for the better maintenance thereof. And Durandus ſaith : Therefore Eleuation is made, Vt populus intelligat, Chriſtum veniſſe ſuper Altare : That the people may vnderſtand, that Chriſt is come downe vpon the Altar. But the old learned Fathers, both Greekes and Latines, when they held vp a little, or ſhewed the Sacrament, euermore they called the people to draw neere, to receiue, to be partakers of the holy Myſteries, and to lift vp their hearts : but in the time of the ſame Ceremonie, they neuer ſpake one word of Adoration. Pachymeres ſaith : Sacerdos oſtendit, hæc eſſe Chriſti Symbola : The Prieſt ſheweth, that theſe be Tokens or Signes of Chriſt. He ſaith not, The Sacraments be Chriſt himſelfe : but Tokens and Signes of Chriſt. Maximus ſaith : ὅτι σύμβολα ταῦτα, καὶ οὐκ ἀλήθεια· Symbola iſta ſunt : non autem Veritas : Theſe be Tokens (of the Truth) but not the Truth it ſelfe. And perhaps vpon this occaſion, Beguinæ, and Beguardi held, That no man ought to riſe vp, or to giue reuerence at the Eleuation of the Sacrament.

Durandus li. 4.

Pachymeres in Eccleſ. Hierar. cap. 3.

Maximus in Scholijs.

Clemen. lib. 5.

To conclude, Gerardus Lorichius in his Booke that hee writeth in the Defenſe of the Priuate Maſſe, hath theſe words : Ex hoc ritu Eleuationis inferimus, Miſſam neutiquam ritè celebrari, niſi in vſum publicum Eccleſiæ, hoc eſt, propter populum, vel Sacramentum Euchariſtiæ ſumentem, vel Sacrificium laudis votis & encomijs celebrantem. Siquidem propter eum vſum Hoſtia eleuatur. Miſſæ igitur priuatæ, quæ abſente populo Catholico fiunt, Abominatio verius, quàm Oblatio, dicendæ ſunt : By this very vſage of Elenation, we conclude, that no Maſſe is rightly ſaid, but for the publike vſe of the Church, that is to ſay, for the people, either receiuing the Sacrament, or elſe aduancing the Sacrifice of praiſe with heart and deuotion. For to this end (and not to be Adored) the Sacrament is holden vp. Therefore Priuate Maſſes, which are ſaid without Catholike people being preſent, may rather be called an Abomination, than an Oblation. Thus much Gerardus Lorichius, a Doctour of M. Hardings owne ſide.

Ad noſtrum. Gerard. Lorichium, li. 3.

OF ADORATION.

THE EIGHTH ARTICLE.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR, that the People did then fall downe, and worship the Sacrament with Godly Honour.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuision.

If the Blessed Sacrament of the Alter were no other, than M. Iewel, and the rest of the Sacramentaries thinke of it, then were it not well done the people to bow downe to it, and to worship it with godly honour. (159) For then were it but Bare Bread and Wine, how honourably soeuer they speake of it, calling it Simbolicall, that is, tokening, and Sacramentall Bread and Wine.

The 159. vntruth, ioined with a slander.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

M. Harding as a man ouermuch obedient vnto his affections, in the beginning hereof calleth vs Sacramentaries: by which word he vnderstandeth Schismatikes, Heretikes, and the enemies of God: and so breaketh vp his way into this Treatise with vnsauorie and bitter talke: and as a Cocke, that is well pampered with Garlicke before the fight, he saketh to ouermatch his fellow, rather with rankenesse of breath, than with might of Body.

And forasmuch as he striueth to make the World thinke, our Doctrine is iniurious to the Godhead and glory of Christ: First we protest, That as we beleeue, that Christ is the Lambe of God, that hath taken away the Sinnes of the World: and that there is none other Name vnder Heauen, whereby wee can bee saued: and that, as the Prophet Esay saith, He is the mighty God the Father of the World, that was to come: and that, as S. Paul saith: Hee is God reuealed in the Flesh: euen so we yeld vnto him the very honour that is due vnto God: and that not only to his Godhead alone, but also to his Humanity inseparably ioined with his Godhead in one Person, sitting now at the right hand of God. Thus wee teach the people: That God hath aduanced him into all heighth, and hath giuen him a Name aboue all Names, that at the name of Iesus euery knee shall bee bowed, all things in Heauen, in the Earth, and vnder the Earth: and that euery tongue shall confesse, that Iesus Christ is the Lord in the glory of God the Father.

Iohan. 1. Actor. 4. Esai. 9. 2. Tim. 3. Philippen. 2.

Neither doe we onely Adore Christ, as very God, but also we worship and reuerence the Sacrament, and holy Mistery of Christs Body: and, as S. Augustine teacheth vs: Baptismum Christi, vbicunque est, veneramur: We worship the Baptisme of Christ, whersoeuer it be. Wee worship the Word of God, according to this Counsell of Anastasius: Dominica Verba attentè audiant, & fideliter Adorent: Let them diligently heare, and faithfully Worship the Words of God. Briefly, we worship all other like things, in such Religions wise vnto Christ belonging. But these things wee vse and reuerence as holy and appointed or commanded by Christ: but we Adore them not with godly honour, as Christ himselfe. S. Ambrose saith of the Wise men: Cognouerent, hanc stellam esse, quæ Hominem, Deumq; signabat: sed Adorauerunt Paruulum: They knew, this was the Starre that signified him vnto them, that was both Man and God: but they Adored the little one, (and not the Starre.)

Augustin. epist. 146. De Cons. Dist. 1. Apostolica. Ambros. in Lucam, li. 2. ca. 2.

And whereas M. Harding, as well herein, as also in the rest, vntruly and vnskilfully diffameth vs, as making the Sacraments of Christ nothing else but Bare Tokens, let him well vnderstand, that we doe both thinke and speake soberly, and reuerently of Christs Sacraments, as knowing them to bee the Testimonies of Gods Promises, and the Instruments of the Holy Ghost. And, as we make not the Sacrament of Baptisme, Bare Water, notwithstanding the Nature and Substance of Water remaine still: so wee make not the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood, Bare Bread and Wine. We vse the same Words and Definitions, that S. Augustine, and other ancient Fathers, and Peter Lombard, and Gratian, M. Hardings owne Doctours, haue vsed before vs: Sacramentum est Signum rei Sacræ: Sacramentum est inuisibilis Gratiæ visibilis forma: A Sacrament

De Consecrat. Dist. 2 Sacrif. Pet. Lombard. li. 4. Dist. 1. Samaritanus.

crament is a Token of a Holy thing: A Sacrament is a Forme Visible of Grace Invisible. Neither doe wæ hæreof make a Bare, or naked Token, as M. Harding imagineth: but we say, as S. Paul saith: It is a perfect Seale, and a sufficient Warrant of Gods Promises, whereby God bindeth himselfe vnto vs, and we likewise stand bounden vnto God so as God is our God, and we are his people. This, I reckon, is no Bare or Naked Token. And touching this word, Signum, what it meaneth, S. Augustine thewеth in this sort: Signum est, quod præter speciem, quam ingerit sensibus, aliud quiddam facit ex se in cognitionem venire: A Signe is a thing, that besides the forme, or sight, that it offereth to our senses, causeth of it selfe some other thing to come to our knowledge. And hæreof it is called a Mysterie, or a Holy Secresie: for that our eie beholdeth one thing, and our Faith another. For example, In Baptisme our bodily eie seeth Water: but our Faith, which is the eie of our mind, seeth the Blod of Christ, which, as S. Iohn saith, hath washed vs from all our sinnes. Therefore Chrysostome saith: Incredulus, cùm Baptismatis lauacrum audit, persuadet sibi, Simpliciter esse Aquam. Ego verò non simpliciter video, quod video, sed animæ per Spiritum purgationem: & Sepulturam, Resurrectionem, Sanctificationem, Iustitiam, Redemptionem, Adoptionem, Hæreditatem, Regnum Cœlorum, Spiritus Satietatem considero. Non enim aspectu iudico ea, quæ videntur, sed Mentis oculis: The Infidell, when hee heareth of the Water of Baptisme, thinketh it to bee onely plaine water: but I, that beleeue in Christ, doe not only, and simply see Water, but I see the cleansing of the Soule by the Spirit of God: I consider Christs Burial, his Resurrection, our Sanctification, our Righteousnesse, our Redemption, our Adoption, our Inheritance, the Kingdome of heauen, and the fulnesse of the Spirit. For the things that I see, I iudge not with my bodily eies, but with the eies of my Minde. Now, will M. Harding say, that Chrysostome only for a countenance, speaketh thus honourably of the Sacrament of Baptisme, meaning notwithstanding, it is nothing else, but Bare Water? Certainly S. Augustine saith: In Sacramentis videndum est, non, quid sint, sed, quid Significent: In Sacraments we must consider, not, what they be indeed, but, what they Signifie. If that euery thing, according to M. Hardings iudgement, must nœds be accounted Bare, wherein Christs Bodie is not Really Present, then is the Sacrament of Baptisme a Bare Sacrament: and M. Hardings Boke must likewise of necessitie seme a very Bare Boke: vnlesse perhaps he will say, Christs Body is Really inclosed in it. Plato saith, It is the greatest part of Wisedome, to discerne, Aliud, and Idem, One, and the same thing, from another thing. For of errour herein euermore riseth all Confusion. But S. Augustine saith, Aliud est Sacramentum, aliud res Sacramenti: The Sacrament is One thing: and the Substance of the Sacrament, which is Christs Body, is another thing. And lest M. Harding should shift off this matter, and say, as his maner is, that the Sacrament is nothing else, but the Outward Forme, and Appearance, or shew of Bread and Wine, Rabanus Maurus hath preuented him in this wise: Sacramentum in alimentum Corporis redigitur: The Sacrament is turned into the nourishment of the Body. Therefore these two things being diuers and sundry, the one the Token, the other the thing tokened: The one Christs Bodie, and the other the Sacrament of the same Body: The one Naturally feeding the Body, the other Supernaturally feeding the Soule: It were great Confusion, either to make them both one, or else by errour to take the one for the other. And for that cause Saint Augustine saith, as it is before alleged: Ea demum est miserabilis Animæ seruitus, Signa pro rebus accipere: That indeed is a Miserable Sernitude of the Soule, to take Signes in stead of the things that be signified.

Sacrament. Signe.

Roma. 4. Signaculum Iustitiæ Fidei.

Augustin. De Doctrin. Christian. li. 2. c. 1.

De Conse. dist. 2. Signum.

1. Iohan. 1.

Chrysost. in 1. epist. ad Corin. Homil. 7.

August. contra Maximinum. lib. 3. ca. 22.

Plato.

August. in Iohan. tract. 26.

Raban. Maurus, li. 1. ca. 31.

Augustin. De Doctr. Christi. lib. 3. ca. 5.

Now touching the Adoration of the Sacrament, M. Harding is not able to shew, neither any Commandement of Christ, nor any Word, or Example of the Apostles, or Ancient Fathers concerning the same. It is a thing very lately deuised by Pope Honorius, about the yere of our Lord 1226. Afterward increased by the New solemne Feast of Corpus Christi day, by Pope Vrbanus, Anno 1264. And last of all confirmed for euer by multitudes of Pardons in the Councell of Vienna by Pope Clement the fift, Anno 1310. The Church of Asia, and Græcia neuer receiued it vntill this day. The matter is great, and cannot be attempted without great danger. To giue the Honour of God to a Creature, that is no God, it is manifest Idolatrie. And all Idolaters, as S Iohn saith, shall haue their portion in the lake burning with Fire and Brimstone, which is the second death.

Extr. de Celebra. Missar. Clem. l. 3. ti. 16 Ca. Si Dominum.

Apocal. 21.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuision.

Iohan. 6. But now this being that very Bread, which God the Father gaue vs from Heauen, as Christ saith: This Bread being the Flesh of Christ, which he gaue for the life of the world.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

M. Harding would seme to haue trained all the Ancient Doctours vnto his side, and to that end hath mustred them here in an army all together. Howbeit, of them all, there is not not one, that teacheth vs one word of the Adoration of the Sacrament. Wherefore, if he bring them forth only for a Shew, they are too many: but if he bring them, as Witnesses, they are too few: for, touching the case, they say nothing. Yet M. Harding, as a man much doubting his Readers memorie, whatsoeuer he hath shortly alleged here, hath elsewhere repeated, and doubled the same in other places of his Booke: so that, if I would answer all in particular, I should be ouer tedious. For auoiding whereof, it shall be sufficient, to referre my selfe ouer to such places, where as these authorities are answered seuerally more at large.

First, as I haue said before, there is not one of all these Fathers, that willeth vs to adore the Sacrament with godly honour. Which thing notwithstanding they were able to haue written, if it had bene then either vsed, or thought conuenient: and M. Harding was able to haue found it, if it had bene written. The Bread of the Sacrament is not that Bread, of which Christ speaketh in the sixth of S. Iohn: but very materiall bread indeed, and as S. Cyprian saith, Ex multorum granorum adunatione congestus, Moulded together of the mingling of many cornes; and a Sacrament of that Bread, that came from Heauen. But this matter is answered in the fifth Article, and in the first, second, and third Diuision.

Cypr. l. 1. ep. 6.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuision.

This being that Bread, and that Cuppe, whereof whosoeuer eateth, or drinketh vnworthily, shall be guiltie of the Body and Blood of our Lord.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

S. Hierome saith: Dum Sacramenta violantur, ipse, cuius Sacramenta sunt, violatur: When the Sacraments be misused, God himselfe, whose Sacraments they be, is misused. And the greatest abuse, and villany, that can happen to any Sacrament, is, contrary to Christs Institution and the nature of a Sacrament, to be honoured in stead of God. And S. Augustine saith: Qui indignè accipit Baptisma, Iudicium accipit, non Salutem: Whoso receiueth Baptisme vnworthily, receiueth his Iudgement, and not his Health. Wherefore, if M. Harding thinke this warrant sufficient to proue Adoration, then must he also adore the Water of Baptisme.

Hieronym. in Malach. ca. 1.

Augustin. contra Fulgentium, ca. 6.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuision.

(160) In this Sacrament being contained the very Reall, and Substantiall Bodie, and Blood of Christ, as himselfe saith expresly, in the three first Euangelists, and in S. Paul.

The 160. Vntruth, fiue together, in the report of foure words.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

It is a bold enterprise, in the report of these foure plaine words of Christ, Hoc est corpus meum, to commit fiue manifest vntruths, and that all together with one breath. Certainly M. Harding well knoweth, that neither Christ, nor Paul, nor any of the Euangelists; I adde further, nor any of the Catholike Doctours, in this case of the Sacrament, euer vsed any of these termes, either Carnally contained, or Erpresly, or Verily, or Realll, or Substantiall. Only they say, This is my Body: which words the ancient Father Tertullian expoundeth thus: This is a Figure of my Bodie.

Tertull. contra Marcion, li. 4.

M. Harding. The 5. Diuision.

The 161. Vntruth. For Irenæus meaneth not the Formes, or Shewes of Bread, but the substance of very Bread it selfe.

This being that holy Eucharistia, which Ignatius calleth the flesh of our Sauiour Iesus Christ, that hath suffered for our sinnes, which the Father by his goodnesse hath raised vp to life againe: This being, not Common Bread, but the Eucharistia, after Consecration consisting of two things, Earthly and Heauenly, as Irenæus saith, meaning by the one, (161) the outward Forme: by the other, the very Body and Blood of Christ, who partly for the Godhead inseparably thereto vnited, and partly for that they were conceiued of the Holy Ghost, in the most holy Virgin Mary, are worthily called Heauenly.

In Epistola quadam ad Smyrnæos, vt citatur a Theodoreto in Polymorph. li. 4. contra Hæres. ca. 34.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

What Theodoretus thought in this behalfe, it is plaine by his owne words. For thus he writeth: Signa Mystica post Sanctificationem non recedunt à Natura sua: The Mysticall tokens after the Sanctification, or consecration, goe not from their owne Nature: that is to say, remaine in Substance, and Nature, as they were before. By these words we may plainly see Theodoretus iudgement. Howbeit, in all Sacraments two things must be considered, whereof, as Irenæus saith, they doe consist. The one is Earthly, the other is Heauenly: The one we see with our bodily eies, the other we see with the eies of our faith: The one is in the Earth, the other is in Heauen. These parts because they are ioined in one Mystery, therefore often times they scorce names, the one enterchangeably with the other.

Theodoret. Dialogo. 2.

other. For as Christs very Body is called Bread, although indeed it be not Bread: So the Sacrament all Bread is called Christs body, although indeed, it be not Christs Body. Therefore as the Sacrament is called Christs Body, euen so, according to the saying of Ignatius, it is the flesh of Christ, euen the same, that hath suffered for our Sinnes, and that the Father hath raised againe to life: that is to say, A Sacrament of that flesh. In like sort S. Chrysostome writeth of the Sacrament of Baptisme: Ostendit hoc loco, idem esse Sanguinem, & Aquam. Baptisma enim eius, etiam Passio eius est: S. Paul sheweth in this place, that the Blood (of Christ) and the water (of Baptisme) are both one. For Christs Baptisme, is Christs Passion. He saith, The water and the Blood of Christ are both one thing, and that he saith, was S. Pauls meaning. Yet notwithstanding, neither is the Water Christs Blood indeed: neither is Christs Blood indeed Materiall Water. But thus they borrow each of them the others name, because they are ioyned together in one Mystery. So is the Blood of Christ called Water, because it cleanseth: so is the Water called Christs Blood, because it is a Sacrament of that Blood. And as S. Chrysostome saith, The Water of Baptisme is Christs Blood: euen so Ignatius saith, The Bread is the flesh, and none otherwise. These things are plaine, and without cauill.

Theodoret. in Polymorpho.

Chrysostom. in Epist. ad Hebræ. Homil. 16.

Therefore S. Augustine saith: Sacramenta ex Similitudine plerunque etiam rerum ipsarum nomina accipiunt. Ergò secundùm quendam Modum Sacramentum Corporis Christi, Corpus Christi est: & Sacramentum Sanguinis Christi, Sanguis Christi est: Sacraments because of a certaine likenesse, often times receiue the names of the things themselues (whereof they be Sacraments). And therefore the Sacrament of Christs Body after a certaine maner (of speech) is the Body of Christ: And the Sacrament of Christs Blood, is likewise (after a certaine maner) the Blood of Christ.

Augustin. Epist. 23.

Secundùm quendam Modum.

But here hath M. Harding taken great paines, to wrest, and to falsifie the plaine words of that holy Father Irenæus. For that part of the Mistery, that Irenæus calleth, Rem terrenam, an Earthly thing, that is to say, Bread, the same M. Harding contrary to his Authors meaning, calleth Formes, or Accidents, or Shewes of Bread. For this fond and Heathenish kind of speech was not heard of in the Church in that holy Fathers daies: but was brought in well nere a thousand yeares afterward, to accompany Transubstantiation. But Irenæus in plaine wise calleth it a Creature. Thus he saith: Sanctificamus Creaturam: We doe sanctifie a Creature. Offerimus ei ex Creatura eius: We offer vp vnto him of his Creature. And that he meaneth, not a miraculous Creature, as is Accidens sine subiecto: the like whereof was neuer seene: but he saith simply, Creaturam, quæ est secundùm nos: Such a Creature, as we haue in common vse: Such as we sée: Such as we féele: Such as we eate: Such as we drinke: and, vtterly to cut off M. Hardings shifts, he saith: Ex illa augetur, & consistit Carnis nostræ Substantia: Of the same the Substance of our Flesh is increased, and standeth. Therefore it is certaine and most manifest by Irenæus, that, as Christs body is the one part of the Sacrament, so is Materiall Bread the other. Likewise in Baptisme, as the one part of that holy Mystery is Christs blood, so is the other part the Materiall Water. Neither are these parts ioyned together in place, but in Mystery: and therefore they be often times seuered, and the one is receiued without the other. And for that cause S. Augustine saith: Qui discordat à Christo, nec Panem eius manducat, nec Sanguinem bibit: etiam si tantæ rei Sacramentum ad iudicium suæ præsumptionis quotidie indifferenter accipiat: Who so disagreeth from Christ, neither eateth his Bread, nor drinketh his Blood: although he daily receiue the Sacrament of so great a thing without difference to the iudgement of his presumption.

Irenæus li. 4. ca. 34.

Irenæus eodem loco.

Ibidem.

Secundum nos. κατὰ ἡμᾶς.

Irenæus li. 5.

Augustin. in libro Sententiarum. senten. 338. Et in Iohan. tract. 26.

If any man thinke it strange, that the Sacrament is called the Body, and the Flesh of Christ, being not so indeed, let him vnderstand, That the written Word of God is likewise called Christs Body, and Christs Flesh, euen the same, that was borne of the Virgin, and that the Father raised againe to life: although indeed it be not so. So saith S. Hierome: Quando dicit, Qui non comederit Carnem meam, & biberit Sanguinem meum, &c. Licèt in Misterio possit intelligi, tamen verius Corpus Christi, & Sanguis eius Sermo Scripturarum est: When Christ saith, He that eateth not my Flesh, and drinketh not my Blood, &c. Notwithstanding it may be taken of the Mystery, Yet the Word of God is more truely the Body of Christ, and his Blood. Here note, good Reader, That by these words of S. Hierome, the Word of God is the Body, and Blood of Christ, and that more truely, than is the Sacrament.

Hieronym in Psalm. 147.

In Serm. de Cœna Domini.

Verius.

M. Harding. The 6. Diuision.

This being that Bread, which of our Lord giuen to his Disciples, not in shape, but in Nature changed, by the Almighty power of the Word is made Flesh, as S. Cyprian termeth it.

The

The Biſhop of Sarisburie.

This authority is anſwered more at large in the tenth Article, and in the ſecond Diuiſion.

M. Harding. The 7. Diuiſion.

This being that Holy Myſtery, wherein the Inuiſible Prieſt turneth the Viſible Creatures (of Bread, and Wine) into the Subſtance of his Body, and Blood, by his word, with ſecret power, as Euſebius Emiſſenus reporteth. Homil. 5. De Paſcha

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

This authority is anſwered in the tenth Article, and in the firſt Diuiſion.

M. Harding. The 8. Diuiſion.

* This being that Holy Food, by worthy receiuing whereof Chriſt dwelleth in vs Naturally, that is to wit, in vs by truth of Nature, and not by Concord of Will only, as Hilarius affirmeth.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

*So S. Hilary ſaith, Chriſt dwelleth in vs Naturally by the water of Baptiſme. De Trinit. li. 8.

This authority is anſwered before in the fift Article, and the Tenth Diuiſion. Lib. 8. De Trinitate.

M. Harding. The 9. Diuiſion.

Againe this being that Table, whereat in our Lords meat we receiue the Word truly made Fleſh of the moſt holy Virgin Mary, as the ſame Hilary ſaith.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

This authority as it nothing hinderth vs, ſo it nothing furthereth M. Harding. We ſay, that at that Holy Table our Faith is directed, not vnto a fantaſie, but vnto the very Body, and Blood of Chriſt, and taſteth it, and feedeth on it: and that as verily, and as effectually, as our Body feedeth vpon materiall food. And we adde further, That, whoſoeuer eateth not Chriſts Fleſh, nor drinketh his Blood, ſhall not haue euerlaſting life. Iohan. 6. But the thing, that we receiue with our mouth, is not the ſame thing, that we receiue with our Faith. For, as it is before alleged out of S. Auguſtine: Aliud eſt Sacramentum, aliud res Sacramenti: The Sacrament is one thing, & the Matter, or Subſtance of the Sacrament (which is Chriſts very body) is another thing. Auguſt. in Iohan. Tractatu 26.

But being granted, that Chriſts Body is verily, and really in the Sacrament: Yet cannot M. Harding thereof conclude his purpoſe. His argument ſtandeth thus:

Chriſts Body ought to be Adored with Godly honour:
Chriſts Body is in the Sacrament:
Ergo, The Sacrament ought to be Adored with Godly honour.

This argument is made vp of foure termes: and therfore in the Scholes would be counted childiſh. The error whereof will the better appeare by the like.

Chriſts Body ought to be Adored with Godly honour:
Chriſts Body is in Heauen.
Ergo, Heauen ought to be Adored with Godly honour.

M. Harding. The 10. Diuiſion.

This being that Bread which neither Earing, nor Sowing, nor worke of Tillers hath brought foorth, but that Earth, which remained vntouched, and was full of the ſame, that is, the Bleſſed Virgin Mary, as Gregory Nyſſene deſcribeth.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Gregorie Nyſſene in this whole place ſpeaketh not one word, neither of any Adoration, nor of the Sacrament: but only of Chriſts Birth of the Bleſſed Virgin. Theſe words are alleged, and anſwered before in the fift Article, and tenth Diuiſion. Yet ſhortly, and by the way, theſe words yéeld vs one good reaſon againſt M. Harding. For, whereas Gregory Nyſſene ſaith, The Bread of Chriſts Body commeth not of the labour of Tillers, that is to ſay, of Materiall Corne: and neuertheleſſe S. Cyprian, and S. Auguſtine ſay, the Sacrament is wrought of many Cornes. Of theſe Fathers thus conſidered together, we may conclude, That Chriſts Body, and the Sacrament are ſundry things. Cyprian. lib. 1. Epiſt. 6. Auguſtin. in Iohan. tract. 26. The argument that M. Harding can gather hereof ſtandeth thus:

Chriſt was borne of the Bleſſed Virgin:
Ergo, We ought to Adore the Sacrament. For other neceſſity of ſequell out of theſe words there is none.

M. Harding

M. Harding. The 12. Diuision.

This being that Supper, in the which Christ Sacrificed himselfe, as Clemens Romanus, and as Hesychius declareth: who furthermore in another place writeth most plainly, that these Mysteries, meaning the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, are Sancta Sanctorum, the Holiest of all Holy things, because it is the Body of himselfe, of whom Gabriel said to the Virgin, The Holy Ghost shall come vpon thee, and the power of the Highest shall ouershaddow thee: therefore that Holy thing, which shall be borne of thee, shal be called the Sonne of God: and of whom also Esay spake, Holy is our Lord, and dwelleth on high, verily in the bosome of the Father.

Hesychius speaketh these words, not of the Sacrament, but of Christ himselfe.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

Christ, as he had shewed his Disciples before, that he must goe vp to Hierusalem, and there be Crucified, so being at that his last mournfull Supper, he ordeined a Sacrament of his Death, and toke Bread, and brake it, and described, and expressed before their eies the whole order, and maner of his Passion: As if he should haue said, Thus shall my Bodie be broken, thus shall my Blood be shed. This description of Christs Death so plaine, and so liuely, Hesychius calleth a Sacrifice, that is to say an Examplar, or Resemblance of that Sacrifice, which he had to offer the day following vpon the Crosse. And indeed, as the Bread was Christs Body, so the breaking of the same was Christs Passion. And in this maner of speech the Ancient Fathers seeme to call Baptisme a Sacrifice. Chrysostome saith: Baptisma Christi, Passio Christi est. The Baptisme of Christ, is Christs Passion. So Tertullian: Tingimur in Passione Domini: We be washt in the Passion of our Lord. So likewise againe Chrysostome saith: Quod Crux, & Sepulchrum fuit Christo, id nobis Baptismus factus est: That is Baptisme vnto vs, that the Crosse, and Graue was vnto Christ. In this sense Hesychius saith, Christ offered himselfe at his last Supper: that is to say, by way of a Sacrament, and in a Mystery, but not indeed: to take away the sinnes of the World. In like sense the same Hesychius calleth the Birth of Christ a Sacrifice: These be his words: Sacrificium coctum Christi appellat Incarnationem: The bakte Sacrifice he calleth the Incarnation of Christ.

Chrysost. in Epist. ad Hebr. Homi. 16. Tertullian. de Baptismo. Chrisostom. in Epist. ad Roma. Homi. 10. Hesychius in Leui. li. 1. ca. 2.

Touching this word, Sancta Sanctorum, it is not the outward Sacrament, that Hesychius calleth by that name, but the very Body of Christ it selfe: which, as S. Augustine saith, is Res Sacramenti, The Substance and Matter of the Sacrament. So writteth Origen vpon Leuiticus: Quæ est Hostia, quæ pro peccatis offertur, & est Sancta Sanctorum, nisi vnigenitus Filius Dei, Dominus meus Iesus Christus? Ipse solus est Hostia pro peccatis, & ipse est Hostia, Sancta Sanctorum: What is that Sacrifice, that is offered vp for Sinne, and is the Holy of the Holy, but the onely begotten Sonne of God my Lord Iesus Christ? He onely is the Sacrifice for Sinne: and he is the Sacrifice, of Holy things the most Holy. And this he speaketh of the Sacrifice, that Christ made vpon the Crosse. And therefore he added thus: Quod vno verbo Apostolus explicauit, cùm dicit, Qui seipsum obtulit Deo: Which thing the Apostle expressed in one word, saying thus, Which hath offered vp himselfe vnto God.

Augustin. in Iohan. tracta. 26. Origen. in Leui. Homi. 7.

Howbeit, not onely the Sacrament, but also other things appointed vnto godly vse, may be called, Sancta Sanctorum. So it is written, and determined by Bonifacius the first: Omne, quod Domino Consecratur, siue fuerit homo, siue animal, siue ager, vel quicquid fuerit semel consecratum. Sanctum Sanctorum erit Domino: Euery thing, that is Consecrate vnto the Lord, be it man, or beast, or lands, or what soeuer, being Consecrate, it is Holy of the Holy vnto the Lord. Neither doth he call the holy Mysteries, Sancta Sanctorum, in that sense, that M. Harding meaneth, for that they are the holiest of all holy things, but because they are appointed for Holy People. For thus he expoundeth it himselfe: Panis iste, & Calix, Sancta Sanctorum sunt. Vides, quomodo non dixerit, Sancta tantummodo, sed Sancta Sanctorum. Ac si diceret, Panis iste non est communis omnium, nec cuiusque indigni, sed Sanctorum est. Quantò magis hoc & de Verbo Dei dicemus, Hic Sermo non est omnium, nec cuiuscunque, sed Sanctorum est? This Bread, and this Cuppe, are the Holy things of the Holy. You see, That he saith not only, They are Holy things: but he addeth besides, Of the Holy. As if he would say, This Bread is not common to all men, nor to euery vnworthy: but it is the Bread of the Holy. How much more may we say the same of Gods word, This Word is not of all men, or of euery Body, but of the Holy? Therefore S. Chrysostome saith, The Priest was wont to shew forth the Bread in the time of the Holy Mysteries, and to say, Sancta Sanctis: Holy things for the Holy. And this is the meaning of, Sancta Sanctorum.

Inter Decre. Bonifac. 1. Decre. 3. 12. Quæst. 2. Nulli licuit. Leui. 27. Origen. in Leuiticum, homi. 13.

As for Clemens of Rome, the Apostles Fellow, as M. Harding euery where calleth him, he saith not, That Christ offered himselfe at his last Supper: but rather farre otherwise. Thus he saith: Propter nos Homo factus, & Spirituale Sacrificium offerens Deo:

Christ

Conſtancie.

Li.8.ca.13.

Theodoret.in Pſalm.110.

Chriſt being made Man for vs, and offering vnto God a Spirituall Sacrifice. And in plainer ſort, he maketh this prayer vnto God, touching the ſame: Offerimus tibi Regi, & Deo, iuxta Chriſti inſtitutionem hunc panem, & hoc Poculum: Wee offer vp vnto thee, O King and God, this Bread, and this Cuppe. He ſaith not we offer vp Really the Body of thy Sonne: but this Bread, and this Cuppe. Which alſo he calleth Antitypa, that is to ſay, Signa Corporis, & Sanguinis Chriſti: The Tokens, or Pledges of Chriſts Body, and Blood. And ſo Theodorerus writeth hereof: Eccleſia offert Corporis, & Sanguinis eius Symbola: The Church offereth the Tokens, or Signes of his Body, and Blood.

M. Harding. The 12. Diuiſion.

On the holy Table, where theſe Myſteries are celebrated, the Lambe of God being laied, and Sacrificed of Prieſts vnbloodily, as that moſt Ancient, and worthy Councel of Nice reporteth.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

As the Councell of Nice ſaith, The Lambe is laid vpon the Altar, alluding vnto the Sacrifices of the Old Law, euen ſo doth S. Auguſtine ſay vnto the people, Vos eſtis in Menſa: vos eſtis in Calice: You are vpon the Table: you are in the Cuppe. As the people is laid vpon the Table, ſo is Chriſt laid vpon the Table, But this authoritie is anſwered more at large in the fift Article, and the eight Diuiſion.

Auguſtin. in Sermone ad Infantes. Citatur à Beda-1. Corinth.10.

M. Harding. The 13. Diuiſion.

Briefly, in this higheſt Sacrament vnder viſible ſhape inuiſible things, ſoothly the verie true, Reall, Liuely, Naturall, and Subſtantiall Bodie, and Blood of our Sauiour Chriſt being contained, as (162) the Scriptures, Doctors, Councels, yea, and the beſt learned of Martin Luthers Schoole, doe moſt plainly, and aſſuredly affirme.

The 162. vntruth: Miſreporting the Scriptures, the Counſels and Ancient Fathers.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

Now ſoothly, if M. Harding could haue found any of all theſe Termes, Reall, Liuely, Naturall, or Subſtantiall, either in the Scriptures, or in the Doctors, or in any Councell, he would not haue ſpared the aliegation. But thus auouching theſe Termes, and ſo conſtantly aſſuring vs thereof by theſe authorities, being neuertheleſſe not able any where to find the ſame, we muſt néeds thinke, he miſreporteth the Scriptures, the Doctors, and the Councels, and much abuſeth the ſimple credulitie of the people.

M. Harding. The 14. Diuiſion.

This (I ſay in concluſion) being ſo, as it is vndoubtedly ſo: we that remaine in the Catholique Church, and can by no perſecution be remooued from the Catholique Faith, whom it liketh M. Iewell, and his fellowes to call Papiſts, beleeue verily, that it is our bounden dutie to adore the Sacrament, and to worſhip it with all godly honour. By which word, Sacrament, notwithſtanding in this reſpect we meane not the outward Formes, (163) that properly are called the Sacrament, but the thing of the Sacrament, the inuiſible Grace and Vertue therein contained, euen the very Body and Blood of Chriſt.

The 163. vntruth. For theſe ſpeeches were neuer known, nor heard of in any time of the Ancient Fathers.

And when we adore and worſhip this bleſſed Sacrament, we doe not adore and worſhip the Subſtance it ſelfe of Bread and Wine, (164) becauſe after Conſecration none at all remaineth. Neither do we adore the outward Shapes, and Formes of Bread, and Wine, which remaine: for they be but Creatures, that ought not to be Adored. But the Body it ſelfe and Blood of Chriſt, (165) vnder thoſe Formes Verily, and Really contained, lowly, and deuoutly do we Adore. And therefore, to ſpeake more properly, and according to skill, leſt our Aduerſaries might take aduantage againſt vs through occaſion of termes, where right ſenſe only is meant; we proteſt, and ſay, that we do, and ought to Adore and worſhip the Body, and Blood of Chriſt in the Sacrament.

The 164. vntruth. For the Bread and Wine remain ſtill, as ſhall appeare in the tenth. Article.

The 165. vntruth. As may more largely appeare by the Firſt, and Sixt Article.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

If M. Harding be perſecuted, as he ſaith, verily it ſéemeth a delicate kinde of perſecution. They of his ſide did not ſo perſecute others. But Salomon ſaith, There be certaine that flee, when no man followeth them. Thus did Arius the Heretique ſometimes complaine of his Perſecutors: ἀρὸς ὁ Διωκόμενος ἀδίκως διὰ πᾶν πάντα νικῶσαν ἀλήθειαν: Arius that wrongfully ſuffereth Perſecution for the Truths ſake, that conquereth all things.

Prouerb.28. Epiphan. li.2. De Arionitis.

As for M. Hardings Conſtancy, which is here brought in, as in ſtead of ſome proofe, I will ſay nothing. Howbeit his friends thinke, So many, ſo light, and ſo ſuddaine changes, can ſcarſely ſtand well with the title of Conſtancy. Certainly the mainteinance of open, and knowen error, ſhould rather haue ſome other name. The Prophet Zacharie ſaith: Poſuerunt vt Adamantem Cor ſuum: They haue ſet their hearts, as the Adament ſtone. Iob ſaith. Sterit cor eius ſicut incus: His heart ſtood as a ſteady. Yet might not they therefore be called conſtant. S Hilarie ſaith: Grauis, & periculoſus eſt lapſus in multis. Etſi enim ſe intelligant, intelligant, tamen pudor exurgendi authoritatem sibi præsumit: vt, quòd errant, prudentiam velint existimari: quòd cum multis errant, intelligentiam esse asserant Veritatis: Falling from God in many men is grieuous and dangerous. For albeit they vnderstand themselues, yet for that they are ashamed to rise againe, they therfore take vpon them some authority, and will haue their errour counted wisdome: and that they are deceiued with many, they call it the vnderstanding of the Truth. Touching the purpose, it appeareth, this matter cannot stand without the disordering and confounding of the Naturall course and sound of words. Sometimes the Accidents and Shewes of Bread must be the Sacrament: Sometimes Christs Body, which, as M. Harding confesseth, indeed is not the Sacrament, yet to maintaine this new Adoration, must néeds become the Sacrament. And thus now wée haue two Sacraments together in one Sacrament. And yet in the Conclusion, wée may not worship the very Sacrament, but only Christs Body in the Sacrament. And this, as M. Harding telleth vs, is a Proper, Plaine, Familiar kinde of speech, and according vnto skill. Thus he teacheth vs to lift vp our hearts, and to worship God in Spirit and Truth. Vnlesse the simple people goe to the Vniuersities, and learne this new skill, what is, Accidens absque subiecto: Corpus sine Loco: Locus sine Corpore: Quantitas sine modo quanti, they cannot skilfully worship Christs Body. Or if they worship without this skill, they worship one thing for another, and become Idolaters.

Zacha.7. Iob.41. Hilarius de Trinitate, li.6. ca.84.

M. Harding. The 15. Diuision.

And heere thus much is further to be said, that in the Sacrament of the Altar the Body of Christ is not Adored by thought of minde sundred from the Word, but being inseperably vnited to the Word. For this is specially to be considered, that in the most Holy Sacrament, the Body and Blood of Christ are not present by themselues alone, as being separated from his Soule, and from the Godhead: but that there is (166) heere his true and liuing Flesh and Blood ioined together with his Godhead inseperably, and that they be as himselfe is, perfect, whole, and inseparable. Which is sufficiently confirmed by sundry his own words in S. Iohn. I am (said he) the Bread of life. Againe: This is Bread comming downe from Heauen, that if any eat of it he die not. I am the liuely Bread that came downe from Heauen: If any eat of this Bread hee shall liue euerlastingly. And to shew what Bread hee meant, he concludeth with these words: And the Bread which I shall giue is my Flesh, which I shall giue for the life of the World. By which words he assureth vs plainly, that his Flesh which he giueth vs to eat is full of life, and ioined with his Godhead, which bringeth to the worthy receiuers thereof immortallity, aswell of Body as of Soule. Which thing Flesh and Blood of it selfe could not performe, as our Lord himselfe declareth plainely, where hee saith, as there it followeth: It is the Spirit that quickneth or giueth life, the Flesh profiteth nothing. The words which I haue spoken to you be Spirit and life. As though he had said thus: The Flesh of it selfe profiteth nothing, but my Flesh, which is full of Godhead and Spirit, bringeth and worketh immortality and life euerlasting to them * that receiue it worthily. Thus we vnderstand in this blessed Sacrament, not only the Body and Blood of Christ, but all and whole Christ, God and Man, to be present in substance, and that for the inseparable vnity of the person of Christ: and for this cause we acknowledge our selues bounden to Adore him, as verie true God and Man.

For a clearer declaration heereof, I will not let to recite a notable sentence out of S. Augustine, where he expoundeth these words of Christ: Then, if yee see the Sonne of Man goe vp, where hee was before. There had beene no question (saith he) if hee had thus said: If yee see the Sonne of God goe vp where hee was before. But whereas he said, The Sonne of Man goe vp where he was before, what was the Sonne of Man in Heauen, before that he began to be in Earth? Verily heere he said, where he was before, as though then he were not there when he spake these words. And in another place he saith: No man hath ascended into Heauen, but hee that descended from Heauen, the Sonne of Man which is in Heauen. Hee said not, Was, but the Sonne of Man (saith hee) which is in Heauen. In Earth he spake, and said himselfe to bee in Heauen. To what pertaineth this, but that wee vnderstand Christ to bee one person, God and Man, not two: lest our Faith be not a Trinitie, but a quaternitie? Wherefore Christ is one, the Word, the Soule and the Flesh, one Christ: The Sonne of God, and the Sonne of Man, one Christ. The Sonne of God euer, the Sonne of Man in time. Yet one Christ, according to the Vnitie of person was in Heauen, when he spake in Earth. So was the Son of Man in Heauen, as the Son of God was in Earth. The Son of God in Earth in Flesh taken, the Son of Man in Heauen in vnitie of person. Thus farre S. Augustine.

(166) The 166. vntruth, often auouched, & neuer prooued. For these words pertaine only to Christ himselfe: and nothing at all vnto the Sacrament.

* A vaine addition. For S. Augustine saith, The Body of Christ it selfe is receiued of all men vnto life, and of no man vnto iudgement.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

It is true, that Christs Body and his Godhead are ioined inseparably, and therefore must bee Adored both together. For wee may not diuide the Godhead from the Manhead, and so imagine two sundry Christs, the one to bee honoured, the other to stand without honour, as did the Heretike Nestorius. But as the Bodie and Soule of Man, being ioined both in one, are honoured both together: So must the Humanity and Diuinity of Christ, being ioined both in one, likewise bee honoured both together. Otherwise to say, as the Heretike Nestorius said, Thomas touched him, that was risen againe: and honoured him that raised him vp, it were great blasphemy. Neuertheless, notwithstanding the Bodie and Godhead of Christ bee ioined in one Person, yet are they distinct and sundry Natures: The one Finite, the other Infinite: The one in place, the other incomprehensible without place: The one a Creature, the other the Creator. Neither is there any godly honour due vnto the Bodie of Christ in respect of it ſelfe: but only, for that it is ioined in one perſon with the Diuinitie. All theſe things be true, and out of queſtion.

Cyrillus in Apologetico. In edicto Imperatoris Iusti. Inter Decreta Iohan. 2. Concil. Chalcedon. Act. 1.

Likewiſe, the words that Chriſt ſpake in the ſixth Chapter of S. Iohn, and are here alleged by M. Harding, are vndoubtedly true: howbeit, not according to the ſimple ſound and tenour of the letter: For that, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, were, Flagitium & facinus: An Heinous wickednesse: And as Origen ſaith: It would kill the ſoule. And therefore Chriſt himſelfe expoundeth his owne meaning touching the ſame: It is the Spirit that giueth Life: the Flesh profiteth nothing. The words that I haue ſpoken, bee Spirit and Life. Which words S. Auguſtine expoundeth thus: Spiritualiter intelligere, quæ locutus ſum. Non hoc corpus quod videtis, manducaturi eſtis: Vnderſtand yee Spiritually the things that I haue ſpoken. Yee ſhall not Eat this body that yee ſee. Likewiſe Chryſoſtome: Secundum Spiritum verba mea audienda ſunt: qui ſecundùm Carnem audit, nihil lucratur, nihil vtilitatis accipit: My words muſt be heard Spiritually: Who ſo heareth them Carnally, or according to the Fleſh, getteth nothing, nor hath any profit by them. He ſaith further by way of obiection againſt himſelfe: Quid ergo eſt Carnaliter intelligere? Simpliciter, vt res dicuntur: neque aliud quicquam cogitare: And what is meant by theſe words, To vnderſtand according to the Fleſh? He anſwereth: It is to vnderſtand ſimply and plainly, euen as things be ſpoken, and to thinke vpon nothing elſe. Thus therefore Chriſt ſaid, to cut off their Carnall cogitations: The words that I ſpake are Spirit and Life. As if he ſhould ſay, Neither is my Fleſh meat, nor my Blood drinke, to enter into your mouthes, and to feed your bodies. But if your ſoules bee hungrie, I am Spirituall meat to feed you: If your Soules be thirſtie, I am Spirituall drinke to refreſh you. To this purpoſe S. Chryſoſtome ſaith thus: Omnia tibi Chriſtus factus eſt: Menſa, Veſtimentum, Domus, Caput, & Radix, &c. Chriſt is become all things vnto thee: thy Table, thy Apparell, thy Houſe, thy Head, and thy Root, &c. S. Paul ſaith, As many of you as are Baptized in Chriſt, ye haue put on Chriſt: behold, how Chriſt is made thy Apparell. And wilt thou learne, how hee is become thy Table? He ſaith, Whoſo eateth me, ſhall liue through me: And that hee is thy Houſe, he ſaith, Whoſo eateth my Fleſh, dwelleth in me, and I in him: And that hee is thy Root, againe he ſaith, I am the Vine, and you are the Branches. So ſaith Gregorius Nyſſenus: Chriſt vnto the ſtrong is ſtrong meat: vnto the weaker ſort he is herbes: and vnto Infants hee is milke. So ſaith Origen: Ne mireris: quia Verbum Dei & Caro dicitur, & Panis, & Lac, & Olera, & pro menſura credentium, vel poſſibilitate ſumentium diuersè nominatur: Marueil not: for the word of God is called both Fleſh, and Bread, and Milke, and Herbes: and, according to the meaſure of the beleeuers, and the poſſibility of the receiuers, is diuerſly named. And likewiſe Gregorie Nazianzene: Quemadmodum Dominus noſter Ieſus Chriſtus appellatur Vita, Via, Panis, Vitis, Lux vera, & mille alia, ſic etiam appellatur Gladius: Like as our Lord Ieſus Chriſt is called the Life, the Way, the Bread, the Wine, the true Light, and a thouſand things elſe, ſo is hee alſo called the Sword. Now as Chriſt is Bread, euen ſo, in like maner of ſpeech hee is a Sword, and none otherwiſe. Thus is Chriſt vnto vs a Spirituall Table, a Spirituall Apparell, a Spirituall Houſe, a Spirituall Head, a Spirituall Root, Spirituall Meat, Spirituall Herbes, Spirituall Milke, Spirituall Fleſh, Life, Way, Bread, Wine, and Light. And to this end Chriſt ſaith: My Words bee Spirit and Life.

Hitherto the words of Chriſt that be here alleged, weigh very little of M. Hardings ſide.

Beſides all this, he ſaith, that whole Chriſt both God and Man, is Really, Subſtantially, and Carnally in the Sacrament. This thing, becauſe hee is not able any way to proue, he preſumeth of himſelfe by authority, as though it were already proued. It ſhall be good, to giue him a day to conſider the matter, and to proue it better. In the meane ſeaſon the ſubſtance of his reaſon ſtandeth thus:

The Humanitie and Diuinitie of Chriſt are ioined together in one Perſon:
Ergo, We muſt Adore the Sacrament with godly Honour.

Auguſt. de doctrina Chriſtiana, li. 3. ca. 16.
Origen. in Leuit. homil. 7.
Auguſt. in Pſalm. 98.
Chryſoſt. in Iohan. hom. 46.
Chryſoſt. ad popul. Antiochen. hom. 21.
Galat. 3.
Iohan. 6.
Iohan. 15.
Gregor. Nyſſen. In vita Moſis.
Origē in Exod. ca. 15. homil. 7.
Nazianzen. in Pſalm. 44.

M. Harding. The 16. Diuiſion.

Heereupon hee expoundeth theſe words, It is the ſpirit that quickeneth or giueth life, the fleſh auaileth nothing, thus: The fleſh profiteth nothing, but the only fleſh. Come the ſpirit to the fleſh, and it profiteth very much. For if the fleſh ſhould profit nothing, the word ſhould not be made fleſh to dwell among vs. For this vnity of perſon to bee vnderſtanded in both natures (ſaith the great learned Father Leo) wee read that both the Sonne of Man came downe from heauen, when as the Sonne of God tooke fleſh of that Virgin, of whom he was borne: and againe, it is ſaid that the Sonne of God was crucified and buried, where as he ſuffered theſe things not in the Godhead it ſelfe, in which the only begotten is coeuerlaſting and conſubſtantiall with the Father, but in the infirmity of humane nature. Wherefore we confeſſe all in the Creed alſo, the only begotten Sonne of God crucified and buried, according to that ſaying of the Apoſtle: for if they had knowen, they would neuer haue Crucified the Lord of Maieſty. 1. Cor. 2.

Epiſt. ad Flauianum Conſtantinopolitanum Epiſt. 65.

According

According to this Doctrine, Cyrillus writing vpon S. Iohn 6ith, He that eateth the Flesh of Christ, hath life euerlasting. For this Flesh hath the word of God, which naturally is life. Therefore he saith: I will raise him againe in the last day. For I, said he, that is, my Body, which shall be eaten, will raise him againe. For he is not other than his flesh. I say not this because by nature hee is not other, but because after incarnation, he suffereth not himselfe to be diuided into two sonnes. By which words he reproueth the Heresie of wicked Nestorius, that went about to diuide Christ, and of Christ to make two sonnes; the one, the sonne of God, the other, the sonne of Mary, and so two persons. For which Nestorius was condemned in the first Ephesine Councell, and also specially for that he said (167) wee receiue in this Sacrament onely the flesh of Christ in the Bread, and his Blood onely in the wine, without the Godhead, because Christ said, He that eateth my Flesh, and said not, He that eateth or drinketh my Godhead, because his Godhead cannot be eaten, but his flesh onely. Which Hereticall cauill Cyrillus doth thus auoid. Although (saith he) the nature of the Godhead be not eaten, yet wee eat the Body of Christ, which verily may be eaten. But this Body is the words owne proper Body, which quickneth all things, and inasmuch as it is the Body of life, it is quickning or lifegiuing. Now hee quickneth vs, or giueth vs life, as God, the onely fountaine of life. Wherefore such speeches vttered in the Scriptures of Christ, whereby that appeareth to be attributed to the one nature, which appertaineth to the other, and contrariwise, according to that incomprehensible and vnspeakable coniunction and vnion of the diuine and humane nature in one person, are to be taken of him inseparably, inasmuch as he is both God and Man; and not of this or that other nature only, as being seuered from the other. For through cause of this inseparable vnion, whatsoeuer is appertaining or peculiar to either nature, it is rightly ascribed, yea, and it ought to be ascribed to the whole person. And this done, as the learned Diuines terme it, Per communicationem idiomatum. And thus Cyrillus teacheth, how Christ may be eaten, not according to the diuine, but humane nature, which hee tooke of vs; and so likewise he is of Christian people adored in the Sacrament according to his diuine nature. And yet not according to his diuine nature only, as though that were seperated from his humane nature, but his whole person together God and Man. And his pretious flesh and blood are adored for the inseparable coniunction of both natures into one person, which is Iesus Christ God and Man. Whom God hath exalted (as S. Paul saith) and hath giuen him a name, which is aboue all names, that at the name of Iesus euery knee bee bowed, of the Heauenly and the Earthly things, and of things beneath, and that euery tongue confesse, that our Lord Iesus Christ is in glorie of God the Father, that is, of equall glorie with the Father. And when God (saith S. Paul) bringeth his first begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the Angels of God Adore him. S. Iohn writeth in his Reuelation, that he heard all Creatures say, Blessing, Honour, Glory, and Power, be to him which sitteth in the Throne, and to the Lambe for euer. And the foure and twenty Elders fell downe on their faces, and Adored him that liueth vntill worlds of worlds.

The 167. vntruth. For neither was there any such error defended by Nestorius, nor any such Canon euer moditied in that Councell.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

I marueil M. Harding would bestow so many waste words to so small purpose. These Authorities be all true, and, sauing only that of the Councell of Chalcedon, touching Nestorius, all truly alleged. But euery thing that is true, maketh not by and by prowe sufficient in euery case. Pliny the Second giueth good sad counsell, that whosoeuer will take in hand to write a Booke, haue euermore a good eie vnto his Title, or to the purpose, whereof he writeth, lest he happen to wander, and to run at random. As now M. Harding seemeth to shoote faire, although a great way from the marke. For in all these words there is no maner mention, neither of the Sacrament, nor of the Adoration thereof, nor of any other thing thereto belonging. Whiles M. Harding vpon occasion of these words will reason thus:

Plin. Sepe respiciendum est ad Titulum.

The Sonne of Man came downe from Heauen:
Ergo, We must Adore the Sacrament.

The words of Cyrillus be likewise true. Christs Flesh is ioined with the Godhead, and therfore it naturally giueth life. And when Christ said, I will raise him vp at the last day, he meant, euen as Cyrillus saith, that his Flesh, that wee eat, shall raise vs vp at the last day. For, whatsoeuer fauour or mercy wee haue from God, wee haue it only by the Flesh of Christ. S. Augustine saith: Mortalis factus est Immortalis, vt, peracta sua Morte, nos faceret Immortalis: He that is Immortall, became Mortall, that through his Death he might make vs Immortall. Againe he saith: Nos non efficeremur participes Diuinitatis eius, nisi ipse factus fuisset particeps Mortalitatis nostræ: Wee could not be partakers of his Godhead, vnlesse he had beene partaker of our Mortalitie. All these words be true, as conteining nothing else, but the exposition of these words of Christ: He that eateth my Flesh, and drinketh my Blood, shall liue for euer.

Iohan. 6.

Augustin. in Psalm. 109.

Augustin. in Psalm. 118.

But M. Harding, to make these words of Cyrillus to serue his turne, hath imagined two great errours: The one is: That Christs Body cannot bee Eaten, but onely in the Sacrament: The other is: That vnlesse wee receiue Christs Body with our mouth, and swallow it downe into our belly, wee Eat it not: As though either Christ, or these holy Fathers had meant a Carnall or Fleshly Eating. This whole Doctrine is horrible, and full of Desperation. For M. Hardings position being true, What no man shall be partaker of that blessed Resurrection, but only such as haue eaten Christs Body in the Sacrament, what then shall become of Christian Children, that haue departed this life, neuer hauing receiued the Sacrament? Who shall raise them vp againe at the last day? Or doth M. Harding beleeue, that such little ones being baptized, and so the Members of Christ, shall neuer rise againe, but lie damned for euer, onely because they haue not receiued the Sacrament.

Spirituall Eating.

Verily, Christ in these words, as it is witnessed by all the holy Fathers, speaketh not of the Sacrament, but of the spirituall Eating with our Faith: and in this behalfe vtterly excludeth the Corporall office of our Body. Therefore S. Augustine saith: Crede, & manducasti: Beleeue, and thou hast eaten. And againe: Illud manducare, refici est: Illud bibere, quid est, nisi viuere? That eating is to bee refreshed: and that drinking, what is it else, but to liue? Likewise S. Basil saith: Est spirituale os Interni hominis, quo recipitur Verbum vitæ, quod est Panis, qui de Cœlo descendit: There is a Spirituall mouth of the Inner Man, wherewith is receiued the Word of Life, which is that Bread that came downe from Heauen.

August. in ser. Caput Iohānis. Augustin. De Verbis Apostoli, Serm 2.

Basil. in Psa. 33

Basilius in exhortatione ad Sanctū Baptis.

And touching our rising againe from the dead, he saith: τὸ βάπτισμα Νίκαυς ἐστι πρὸς ἀνάστασιν: Our Baptisme is a strength or power to Resurrection. So S. Augustine: Nemini dubitandum est, &c. No man may doubt, but euery man is then made partaker of the Body and Blood of Christ, when in Baptisme he is made the member of Christs Body. Likewise S. Chrysostome: In Baptisme we are incorporate vnto Christ, and made Flesh of his Flesh, and Bone of his Bones. Thus by Faith we eat the Body of Christ, and that, not by way of Imagination or Fantasie, but effectually, verily and indeed, and therefore Christ shall raise vs vp againe at the last day.

Augustin. est citatur à Beda, in 1. Cor. 10.

Chrysost. in Epist. ad Ephes. hom. 20.

M. Hardings errour, as I haue said, resteth herein, that he imagineth, That Christs Body cannot be eaten, but only in the Sacrament, and that by meane and office of our bodily mouth. But, as it is before alleged out of Rabanus Maurus: The Sacrament is receiued outwardly with the Mouth of our Body: But the Body of Christ is receiued into the Inner man, and that with the Spirituall mouth of our Soule. And thus both may the Sacrament be receiued without Christs Body, and also the Body of Christ may be receiued without the Sacrament.

Rabanus Maurus, li. 1. ca. 31.

Hitherto M. Harding hath not once touched one word of Adoration.

Concerning Nestorius, M. Harding in the drift of his tale hath handsomely touched in a great vntruth. For whereas he saith, Nestorius held this opinion, That in the Sacrament of the Bread, we receiue only Christs Body without his Blood: and in the Cuppe, the Blood of Christ alone without the Body: neither did Nestorius notwithstanding he were an Heretike, euer hold this pœuish errour, nor is there any such record either in the Councell of Ephesus, that here vntruly is alleged, or in any other old Councell or ancient Father.

M. Harding vntruly alleggeth the Councell of Ephesus.

But the right of M. Hardings cause hangeth of such euidence, as neuer was found in any record. If there be any such Canon to be found in that whole Councell, or any mention thereof made in any of all the ancient Doctours, let M. Harding shew it, that we may beleaue him. If, hauing alleged it so constantly and so often, he be able vtterly to shew nothing, let him giue men leaue to thinke, that he abuseth the World with vaine Titles, and meaneth no truth.

Although he might be bold fréely to deuise matter against Nestorius, as being an Heretike, yet he should not thus report vntruth of a Generall Councell.

But Cyrillus saith further: We cannot Eat the Godhead of Christ: It is his Manhood only, that is Eaten. Hereby M. Harding thinketh, he is able to ouerthrow our whole Doctrine of Spirituall Eating, that is wrought by Faith. For thus he will reason:

By your Doctrine, Eating of Christs Body is beleeuing.
But Cyrillus saith, we cannot Eat God:
Ergo, By your Doctrine we cannot beleeue in God.

Thus he thinketh we are driuen to confesse a great inconuenience. This reason séemeth to haue some shew. And therefore I beséech thee, good Reader, to consider both the parts thereof, and also the answer.

Eating, in common vse of speech, is the receiuing of food and sustenance, and the turning of the same into the substance of our Bodies, and by a Metaphor, or an extraordinary kinde of speech, is often vsed for the Spirituall eating, and turning of Heauenly food to the refreshing and nourishing of our Soules. By neither of these waies it can rightly be said, That we eat the Godhead. For neither can we receiue the Maiesty of Gods diuine Nature, neither turne the same into the Substance of our Nature. But we may Receiue and Eat, and feed vpon the Humanity and Body of Christ, and become Bone of his Bones, and Flesh of his Flesh, so as he may dwell in vs, and we in him. Wherefore notwithstanding Christ be both God and Man, yet we haue not our feeding and life of Christ in respect of his Godhead alone, but first and principally, in respect of his Humanity, in that he was made Man, and became partaker of Flesh and Blood, and was Crucified cified, and shed his Blood, and yelded vp his Spirit vpon the Crosse. This is our Spirituall feeding: herein standeth our whole life. Therefore S. Paul saith: Quòd nunc viuo in Carne, in Fide viuo Filij Dei, qui dedit semetipsum pro me: That I liue now in the Flesh, I liue in the Faith of the Sonne of God, that hath giuen himselfe for me. And againe: God forbid, that I should reioice in any thing, sauing only in the Crosse of Iesus Christ. Likewise S. Peter: There is none other name giuen vnto men vnder Heauen, whereby they may be saued, but onely the name of Christ Iesus. Thus as Cyrillus saith, We haue our life and feeding, not of the Godhead, but of the Manhood of Christ.

Ephes. 5.

Hebr. 2.

To Eat God.
Galat. 2.
Galat. 6.
Actor. 4.

And therefore it is very well noted vpon the Decrées: Christus per hoc est factus noster Panis, & Sustentatio, & Vita: quia assumpsit Carnem nostram: Christ in this is become our Bread, and our Sustenance, and our Life, because he hath taken our Flesh.

De Con. dist. 2. Christus. In Margine.

But M. Harding will say, according to the iudgement of Cyrillus, We cannot Eat the Godhead: yet neuertheless we do beleeue in God: Ergo, Contrary to your doctrine, Beleeuing and Eating are not both one. Verily, it appeareth both by Cyrillus himselfe, and also by a generall consent of other old learned Fathers, that we cannot neither know God nor beleeue in God, nor call vpon God, as he is in himselfe, in his diuine Maiesty, but only, as it pleased him to become like vnto vs, and to take vpon him our mortall Nature. S. Chrysostome saith: Illum, si in nuda Deitate venisset, non Cœlum, non Terra, non Maria, non vlla Creatura sustinere potuisset: If God had come in his manifest Diuinity, neither the Heauen, nor the Earth, nor the Sea, nor any Creature could haue borne his Presence. So S. Hilary: Cognitus fieri Deus homini, nisi Assumpto Homine non potuit. Quia incognoscibilem cognoscere, nisi per Naturam nostram, Natura nostra non potuit: Vnlesse God had taken Man, he could neuer haue beene knowen vnto Man. For him, that cannot be knowen, our Nature, sauing only by meane of our owne Nature, could neuer haue knowen. Likewise saith Cyrillus: Christus non aliter erit Adorabilis, nisi credamus, quòd ipsum Verbum Caro factum sit: Christ is not otherwise to be Adored, vnlesse wee beleeue, that the very Word was made Flesh. Likewise saith S. Augustine: Respice altitudinem ipsius: In principio erat Verbum, &c. Behold the highnesse of him: In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and God was that Word. Behold the Euerlasting Meat: But the Angels and high Powers, and the Heauenly Spiries feed vpon it. But what Man can attaine vnto that Meat? What heart can bee meet for it? Therefore it was necessary that the Meat should turne into Milke, and so should come vnto vs little ones. It followeth: Quomodo ergo de ipso Pane pauit nos Sapientia Dei? Quia Verbum Caro factum est, & habitauit in nobis: How then did the wisedome of God feed vs with that Bread? He answereth: Beeause the Word was made Flesh, and dwelled in vs. Againe he saith: Ita Verbum Incarnatum factum est nobis receptibile: Quod recipere non valeremus, si Filius æqualis Deo non se exinaniret Formam Serui accipiens: Thus were wee able to receiue the word Incarnate, which we could not receiue. vnlesse the Sonne being equall vnto the Father, had abased himselfe, receiuing the forme of a Seruant. I passe ouer other allegations to like purpose. This therefore is the meaning of Cyrillus: We are not able neither to receiue, nor to know, nor to beleeue in, nor to Adore, nor to eat, not to feed vpon the Diuine maiesty of God, being pure and simple in it selfe: But our knowledge, our Faith, our Food, and our Life is in this, That Christ hath taken our mortall Nature, and ioined the same inseparably in one Person to his Godhead.

Cyrillus ad Reginas.
August. in Psalm. 33.
Iohan. 1.
August. in Psal. 109.

M. Harding. The 17. Diuision.

But it shall be more tedious than needfull, to recite places out of the Scriptures for proofe of the Adoration of Christ: there may of them be found so great plenty, Yet, because Luther was either so blind, or rather so Diuelish, as to denie the Adoration, where notwithstanding he confessed the Presence of Christs true, and Naturall Body in the Sacrament: I will heere recite what the Sacramentaries of Zurich haue written against him therefore. What (say they) is the Bread the true, and naturall Body of Christ, and is Christ in the Supper (as the Pope and Luther do teach) present? Wherefore then ought not the Lord there to bee Adored, where yee say him to bee present? Why shall wee bee forbidden to Adore that, which is not onely Sacramently, but also Corporally, the Body of Christ? Thomas toucheth the true Body of Christ raised vp from the dead, and falling downe on his knees, Adoreth, saying: My God, and my Lord. The Disciples Adore the Lord, aswell before, as after his Ascention, Matt. 28. Act. 1. And the Lord in S. Iohn saith to the blinde man, Beleeuest thou in the Sonne of God? and hee answereth him saying: Lord, who is he, that I may beleeue in him? And Iesus said to him: Thou hast both seene him, and who speaketh with thee, he it is. Then hee saith, Lord I beleeue, and he Adored him. Now if wee were taught, our Lords Bread to be the Naturall Body of Christ, verily wee would adore it also faithfully with the Papists. Thus much the Zuinglians against Luther. Whereby they prooue sufficiently the Adoration of Christs Body in the Sacrament, and so consequently of Christ himselfe God and Man, because of the inseperable Coniunction of his Diuine and Humane Nature in Vnity of person, so as, where his Body is, there it is ioined, and vnited also vnto his Godhead: and so there Christ is present perfectly, wholly, and substantially, very God and Man.

Iohan. 9.

For the clearer vnderstanding wherof the better to ba attained, the Scholasticall Diuines haue profitably deuised the terme Concomitantia, plainly and truly teaching, that in this Sacrament after Consecration, Diſſenſion.

The 168. vntruth: For there was no ſuch doctrine moued in the Councell of Epheſus. Tranſubſtantiation was but lately found, in the Councell of Lateran in Rome. An. 1215.

vnder the forme of Bread is preſent the Body of Chriſt; and vnder the Forme of Wine, his Blood, Ex vi Sacramenti: and with the Body vnder Forme of Bread, alſo the Blood, the Soule and Godhead of Chriſt; and likewiſe with the Blood, vnder the Forme of Wine, the Body, Soule, and Godhead, Ex Concomitantia, as they terme it, in ſhorter and plainer wiſe vttering the ſame Doctrine of Faith, (168) which the Holy Fathers did in the Epheſine Councell againſt Neſtorius. Whereby they meane, that where the Body of Chriſt is preſent, by neceſſary ſequell, becauſe of the indiuiſible Copulation of both Natures in the Vnity of Perſon (foraſmuch as the Word made Fleſh, neuer left the Humane Nature) there is alſo his Blood, his Soule, his Godhead, and ſo whole and perfect Chriſt, God and Man. And in this reſpect, the terme is not to be miſliked of any godly learned man, though ſome New Maſters ſcoffe at it, who fill the meaſure of their Predeceſſours, that likewiſe haue beene offended with termes for the after declaration of certaine neceſſary Articles of our Faith, by Holy and Learned Fathers in Generall Councels holeſomely deuiſed. Of which ſort beene theſe; Homouſion, Humanatio, Incarnatio, Tranſubſtantiatio. &c. Now heere is to be noted, how the Zuinglians, whom M. Iewel followeth in the Article of Adoration, confute the Lutherans; as on the other ſide, the Lutherans in the Article of the Preſence, confute the Zuinglians. As though it were by Gods ſpeciall prouidence, for the better ſtay of his Church, ſo wrought, that both the truth ſhould be confeſſed by the enemies of truth, and alſo for vttering of vntruth, the one ſhould bee condemned of the other, that by the warre of Heretikes the peace of the Church might bee eſtabliſhed, and by their diſcord the Catholike people might the faſter grow together in concord.

Now hauing ſufficiently prooued by the Scriptures, and that with the Zuinglians alſo, Adoration and godly Honour to be due vnto Chriſts Body, whereſoeuer it pleaſe his Diuine Maieſty to exhibite the ſame preſent; let vs ſee whether we can finde the ſame Doctrine affirmed by the holy and ancient Fathers.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Whereas M. Harding thus checketh vs with ſome diſſenſion that hath béne betwéne Doctour Luther, and Doctour Zuinglius, touching this matter of Adoration, I may iuſtly ſay vnto him, as one ſometime ſaid vnto Philippus the King of Macedony, intreating a peace betwéne Peloponneſus, and the reſt of Græcia: Go firſt and conclude a peace in thine owne houſe at home. For at the ſame time his owne wife Olympias, and his owne ſonne Alexander, were knowen to liue in deadly diſſenſion: and therefore he ſéemed no fit inſtrument to conclude a peace betwéne others.

Demaratus.

M. Harding ſhould haue remembred, that the greateſt Buttreſſes and Pillars of his Goſpel, ſithence the firſt beginning of his new Doctrine, haue euermore lined in Contradiction, and could neuer yet be reconciled. He ſhould haue remembred, that his owne Doctours, and chiefeſt Doctours, Pope Innocentius and Scotus, teach contrary Doctrines: That Scotus is againſt Thomas: Ockam, againſt Scotus: Petrus de Alliaco, againſt Ockam: and the Nominals againſt the Reals: and not only thus, but alſo Scotiſts againſt Scotiſts, and Thomiſts againſt Thomiſts, at Ciuill Warre within one band: and that touching the very words of Conſecration, and other like matters both great and many: whereof to ſhew the Particulars, it would be tedious. But the matters hang ſtill in mortall enmity, and are neuer like to be reconciled. Hauing ſuch Bloody fields at home, M. Harding ſhould not be ſo ready to reproach others, for ſome one or other matter of diſſenſion.

It were much to be wiſhed, and God of his mercy ſo grant it, if it be his holy will, that the Goſpell of Chriſt may paſſe forth freely, without any ſuch occaſion of offence or hinderance. Howbeit, from the beginning it hath béne otherwiſe. For euen at the firſt planting of the Goſpell, whiles the Martyrs blood was yet warme, there were ſome that ſaid, I hold of Paul: ſome others that ſaid, I hold of Peter: and thus were they diuided among themſelues. S. Paul withſtood, and gainſaid Peter vnto his face. S. Hierome chargeth S. Auguſtine with Hereſie: S. Auguſtine willeth S. Hierome to recant: S. Hierome deſpiſeth S. Ambroſe, and findeth fault with S. Baſil: S. Cyprian in iudgement is contrary to S. Cornelius: Pope Sabinianus would haue burned all S. Gregories his predeceſſors bookes. Hereby it appeareth, That Saints haue béne againſt Saints: and Martyrs againſt Martyrs, euen in matters and caſes of Religion.

1. Corin. 1. Galat. 2. Aug. epiſt. 9.

And hereof Heretikes, and other wicked and godleſſe people haue euermore taken occaſion to ſlander the Goſpell. Marcion the Heretike thought he had found Contrarieties betwéne the New Teſtament and the Old: and therefore ſaid, He was able to proue falſhood in the Scriptures. S Hierome ſaith: Hunc locum nobis obiecit Iulianus Auguſtus, de diſſonantia Euangeliſtarum: This place of the diſagreeing of the Euangeliſts, the Heathen Emperour Iulianus charged vs withall. Againe he ſaith: Sceleratus Porphyrius, in primo libro, quem ſcripſit aduerſus nos, obiecit, Petrum à Paulo eſſe reprehenſum, quòd non recto pede incederet ad Euangelium: That wicked man Porphyrius, in the firſt Booke that hee wrote againſt vs, laid to our charge, that Peter was rebuked of Paul, for that he walked not vprightly towards the Goſpell. So Socrates and Sozomenus ſay, That the Chriſtians, becauſe of their diſſenſions, were ſcorned at of the Infidels in open aſſemblies and market places, and pointed at with their Fingers.

Tertullian. li. 4 contra Marcion.
Hieronym. in Matt. li. 1. c. 1.
Hieronym. in Proœmio in Epiſt. ad Galatas.
Socr. li. 1 ca. 6.
Sozo. li. 1. c. 16.

Notwithſtanding,

Notwithstanding, such diuersity of iudgement, as it is an offence vnto the weake, and an occasion of ill vnto the wicked, that seeke occasions against God: euen so vnto the Godly, it is occasion of much good. For vnto them, that God hath called according to his purpose, all things help, and further vnto good. Nicholas Lyra saith: Expositorum diuersitas excitat attentionem. The diuersity of Expositors stirreth vp attention in the hearers, and causeth them to consider, that men be men, and see vnperfitly, as in a Glasse, as hauing receiued Faith only by measure: and therefore to search, and examine the Scriptures, and not to glory in men: that whoso will glory, may glory in the Lord.

Dissesion. Concomitantia.

2. Corin. 11. Rom. 8.

Ni. Lyra in Prologo in Genesim.

These two worthy members of Gods Church, whom it liketh M. Harding thus to controll, neuer differed, or dissented in any Foundation, or Principle of the Christian Faith: but only of one certaine conclusion, and phrase of the Scriptures.

Either of them knew, and confessed, that Christs Body ought to be adored with godly honour, for that it is ioyned in one person with the Diuinity. But the one of them saith, Notwithstanding Christs Body be present in the Sacrament, yet it is not there, to that vse, and purpose, to be honored: neither haue we any warrant of Gods word, so to honour it. So is Christs Body in vs Naturally, Really, Corporally, Carnally, Substantially, and indeed. Yet may we not therefore one knéele downe to another, so to adore Christ being there present with godly honour. Thus the whole disagréement of these two learned Fathers, stood only in this one point, of the maner of Christs presence. Otherwise their whole harts were ioined, and bent together to the disclosing of Falsehood, and Hypocrisie, and to the aduancing of Gods Glory.

1. Corin. 13. 2. Corin. 10. 1. Corin. 3. 1. Corin. 10.

We wonder not, as M. Harding thinketh, at his strange terme, Concomitantia, which he hath héere brought in, as a speciall stay of his ruinous Doctrine: notwithstanding S. Paul hath charged vs, to beware of such new Fangled wicked words: But we wonder, to sée the same terme so childishly applied to so vaine a purpose. Indéed these termes, Homousios, Humanatio, Incarnatio, are not found expressed in the Scriptures. Yet is the sense, and meaning of the same termes, as Epiphanius saith, easie euery where to be found.

1. Timoth. 6. Profanas verborum nouitates. βεβήλους κενοφωνίας. Epiphanius contra Semiarian. Lib. 3. ὁ δὲ τοῖς παλαιοῖς.

Neither was that name first deuised in the Councell of Nice. For long before the time of that Councell, is was vsed by Origen, and by other Ancient learned Bishops: as appeareth well by Socrates, whose words be these: Doctos quosdam ex veteribus, & illustres Episcopos, Homousij dictione vsos esse cognouimus; We know, that of the Old writers, certaine Learned men, and notable Bishops haue vsed this word, Homousion. And therefore S. Augustine saith not, This name, Homousios, was inuented, or deuised, but, This name was Confirmed, and stablished in the Councell of Nice. Therefore M. Harding aswell herein, as also elsewhere, hath reported vntruth.

Socrat. li. 1. c. 8. Augustin. contra Maximinum, li. 3. c. 14.

As for Transubstantiation, it is numbred héere among these words, Homousios, Humanatio, and Incarnatio, as Iudas is numbred among the Apostles. God wot, a very yong name, newly brought at last into the world, about twelue hundred yéeres after the Birth of Christ, at what time King Iohn was King of England: neither had it any maner Face, or Foundation in the Word of God. Yet was the same name giuen a long while, before any such Child was thorowly borne. For, as it appeareth by the Councell of Florence, the East Church of Grecia, and Asia, receiued it not, nor neuer would receiue it vntill this day: neither be the first Inuenters and Deuisers of it fully resolued vpon the same.

Firmatum est.

Conci. Florent. Sessione vltima.

For this word, Transubstantiatio, signifieth a passing, or turning of one Substance into another. But that, they thinke, were not tolerable to say, That the Substance of Bread is changed into the Substance of Christs Body. And therefore Duns himselfe vtterly refuseth, and shunneth it: and thinketh it better, to hold, That the Bread departeth, and getteth it selfe away, and that then in place of it succéedeth Christs Body. And this is now the common opinion of the Schooles. But this kind of change cannot in any wise be called, Transubstantiatio: but rather Cessio, Annihilatio, Successio, or Substitutio. Therefore M. Harding must goe, and séeke a new name: for Transubstantiation will not serue so well. Thus after twelue hundred yéeres study, they haue found out a thing: and yet cannot hitherto tell, what to make of it. Yet must their determination héerein be compared euen with the Councell of Nice. Verily Cardinall Beno, that was then aliue, saith, That Pope Gregorie the seuenth appointed three daies Fast, and a solemne Procession, to the end he might haue some signe from Heauen, for the certainty héereof: and yet in the end concluded without any reuelation at all.

Beno in vita Hildebrandi.

Now, touching this new Fantasie of Concomitantia, after they had once deuised a new Religion, it was necessary, for aide of the same, to deuise also new words. Where as Christ saith, This is my Body: They say, This is my Body, and my Blood. Where Christ saith, ſaith, This is my Blood, They ſay, This is my Blood, and my Body: And in either part, they ſay, is whole Chriſt, God, and Man. If ye demand how they know it, they ſay, not by the Word of God, but by this new imagination of Concomitantia. So likewiſe M. Harding here confeſſeth, that he cannot proue the Adoration of the Sacrament by any warrant of the Scriptures, but only, I trow, by his Concomitantia.

M. Harding. The 18. Diuiſion.

What the Apoſtles taught in their time concerning this article, we may iudge by that we read in Dionyſius, that was S. Pauls ſcholar, and for that it is to beleeued. He adoreth and worſhippeth this holy Myſtery, with theſe very words: Sed O diuinum penitus Sanctumque Myſterium, &c. But ô diuine & holy Myſtery which vouchſafeſt to open the couerings of ſignes laid ouer thee, vtter thy light to vs openly, and plainly, and fill our ſpirituall eies with the ſingular and euident brightneſſe of thy light. Eccleſiaſt. hierarch. ca 3.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

I maruell, M. Harding would euer allege this place, for the Adoration of the Sacrament. For doth he thinke, that whatſoeuer thing is ſo called vpon, is therefore Adored with godly honour? Or hath he forgotten, that in his Church of Rome they vſe thus to ſalute the holy Oyle, Aue Sanctum Oleum? All haile ô Holy Oyle? Or hath he forgotten that he himſelfe, in his Church, thus ſaluteth a Croſſe of Wood: Aue Rex noſter? All haile our King? Or that he maketh his praier, and petition to the ſame materiall Wodden Croſſe in this wiſe, O Crux, aue, ſpes vnica, hoc Paſſionis tempore: auge pijs iuſtitiam, reiſque dona veniam: All haile O Croſſe, our only hope, in this time of the Paſſion: giue thou increaſe of righteouſneſſe vnto the godly: and giue thou pardon vnto ſinners. Or ſhall we thinke therefore, either, that he giueth godly honour vnto a corruptible creature, or that Chriſt is there preſent hidden vnder the forme of wood? This might ſuffice, to anſwer this place of Dionyſius. I thinke M. Harding doth remember, that Epiphanius ſaith: The Sacrament is a thing Vnſenſible, that can neither ſee vs, nor heare our praier: And he knoweth that Pachymeres the Greeke Paraphraſt in this ſenſe expoundeth the words of Dionyſius: O-Diuinum, & Sacrum Myſterium. Affatur illud, tanquam rem animatam &c. He ſpeaketh vnto the Sacrament, as if it were a thing indued with ſenſe, and life. And well. For ſo Gregorie the great Diuine ſaith: O magnum, & Sanctum Paſcha: O great, and holy Paſſeouer. For our Lord Ieſus Chriſt as he is our Paſſeouer, ſo is he that holy Myſtery. And vnto him the Biſhop directeth his ſpeech. Vnto him being in Heauen, not vnto the thing that preſently lieth before him vpon the Table. And that this was Dionyſius very meaning, it appeareth by that immediatly went before. Ingrediamur ab effectis ad cauſas: Let vs enter from theſe outward effects into the cauſes: that is to ſay, Let vs withdraw our eies from the Viſible Sacraments, and ſpiritually let vs behold Chriſt, whoſe Sacraments they be, and who by the ſame is repreſented. In like maner Dionyſius ſpeaketh of the Conſecration of the Vile: Adducamus vela, &c. Let vs remoue the veiles, and behold that Spirituall Brightneſſe it ſelfe, &c. By which Spirituall Brightneſſe, doubtleſſe he meant Chriſt. Thus he teacheth vs, with our Bodily eies to ſee one thing, and with our Spirituall eies to ſee another: with our Bodily eies, the things that be preſent: with our Spirituall eies, the things that be abſent. For the more likelihood hereof let vs conſider, what words S. Andrew vſeth to the very Materiall Wodden Croſſe of his Execution. Salue Crux, &c. All haile thou Croſſe, that here ſtandeſt, thus long looking for me. I come meerely vnto thee. For I know thy Secrecie: I know thy Myſterie, I ſee in thee the things, that are promiſed vnto me of my Lord. Receiue thou me, O thou choſen Croſſe, that am thus humble for my God, and helpe the poore ſeruant vnto his Maſter. Here are plaine words of Inuocation: Here is manifeſt adoration. Yet, may the force of theſe words make vs beleeue, that S. Andrew indeed gaue Godly honor to a Croſſe of tree?

Epiphanius in Anchorato.

Pachymeres: ὡς ἐμψύχῳ αὐτῷ διαλέγεται.

Abdias in Andrea.

But, becauſe M. Harding ſeemeth, to make ſome account of this place of Dionyſius, let vs anſwer one Myſtery by another. S. Ambroſe ſpeaketh thus to the Water of Baptiſme: O Aqua, quæ humano aſperſum ſanguine, &c. O thou Water that haſt waſhed the World, ſtained with mans Blood. O thou Water, that deſerueſt to be a Sacrament of Chriſt. Thou beginneſt, thou fulfilleſt the perfit Myſteries, &c. Muſt we needs thinke, becauſe S. Ambroſe thus ſpeaketh vnto, and calleth vpon the Water, that therefore either the Water had eares, and heard him: or Chriſt himſelfe was there Corporally preſent in the Water? Doubtleſſe, both Bread and water are Materiall Elements, and voide of life: Therefore as S. Ambroſe ſpake vnto the one, euen ſo, and none otherwiſe, did Dionyſius ſpeake vnto the other. But foraſmuch as M. Harding ſeemeth, for Amphilochius ſake, to bring well all Newes, that come from Verona, let vs ſee, with what deuotion they teach vs there to call vpon our Ladies girdle. The words of the praier are theſe: O Veneranda Zona, Fac nos hæredes æternæ, & Beatæ vitæ: Et hanc noſtram vitam ab interitu conſerua. Tuam Hæreditatem, tuum populum ô Intemeratæ Zona intemerata conſerua. Habeamus te Ambroſius in Lucam, li. 10. ca. 22.

Vires,

Vires & Auxilium: Murum, & Propugnaculum: Portum & ſalutare Refugium: O bleſſed Girdle, Make vs the Inheritors of Euerlaſting, and Bleſſed life: and keepe our preſent Life from deſtruction. O vnſpotted Girdle of the vnſpotted Virgin, Saue thine Inheritance, ô Saue thy people. Be thou our Strength, our Helpe, our Wall, our Fort, our Hauen, our Refuge. This prayer beareth the name of one Euthymius, as it is ſuppoſed, an Ancient learned Greek Father, ſet forth this laſt yere by Aloyſius Lipomanus the Biſhop of Verona, and Printed both in Venice, and in Louaine in two great huge volumes of like ſtuffe. And leſt the matter ſhould ſeeme to want earneſt, the good Catholique Father, and learned Biſhop of Verona Lipomanus hath ſpecially marked the place in the Margin in this ſort: O quàm magna, & mira petit à Veneranda Zona! O how great, and how marueilous things he deſireth of this Bleſſed Girdle! All this notwithſtanding, I trow, M. Harding will not ſay, that either Euthymius, or Lipomanus would haue vs to worſhip our Ladies Girdle with Godly Honour.

M. Harding. The 19. Diuiſion.

Hom. 5. in Diuerſos Euangel. locos. Origen teacheth vs how to Adore and worſhip Chriſt in the Sacrament, before we receiue it, after this forme of words. Quando Sanctum cibum &c. When thou receiueſt the holy Meat, and that vncorrupt banket, when thou enioieſt the Bread, and Cup of life, thou eateſt, and drinkeſt the Body and Blood of our Lord: then our Lord entreth in vnder thy roofe. And therefore thou alſo humbling thy ſelfe, follow this Centurion or Captaine, and ſay, Lord I am not worthy that thou enter vnder my roofe. For where he entreth in vnworthily, there he entreth into the condemnation of the receiuer.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

O how eaſie a matter it is, to deceiue the ignorant! Origen in that whole place ſpeaketh not one word, neither of Worſhipping the Sacrament, nor of Chriſts Reall, or Corporall being therein, nor of Materiall entring into our Bodies. But taking occaſion of the Centurion, that thought himſelfe vnworthy to receiue Chriſt into his houſe, he ſheweth, by what waies and meanes Chriſt vſeth to enter into the faithfull. And two ſpeciall waies he expreſſly nameth in that place: The one, When any Godly man commeth to vs: The other, When we receiue the holy Communion. His words be theſe: Quando Sancti, & Deo acceptabilis Eccleſiarum Antiſtites &c. When holy Biſhops, acceptable vnto God, enter into thy houſe, then by them the Lord doth enter. And be thou perſwaded, that thou receiueſt God himſelfe. Another meane is, when thou receiueſt that Incorruptible, and holy Banket. Thus by this holy Fathers iudgement, as Chriſt entreth into vs by a Biſhop, or holy man, euen ſo he entreth into vs by the receiuing of the holy Myſteries. And ſo likewiſe he ſaith in the firſt Homily of the ſame Booke: Per Euangeliſtarum, & Apoſtolorum prædicationem, &c. God is with vs by the preaching of the Euangeliſts, and Apoſtles: by the Sacrament of his holy Body, and Blood: and by the Signe of the glorious Croſſe. By all theſe things God commeth to vs, and is in vs: as he himſelfe ſaith, Behold I am with you all daies, vntill the Conſummation of the world. Thus in the Old Teſtament, when the Arke of God was lifted vp, it ſeemed, God himſelfe was lifted vp. And therefore in lifting vp thereof, the Prieſtes ſaid, Exurgat Deus: Let the Lord ariſe: and when the Arke was brought into the Campe, they ſaid, God himſelfe was come: And when the Arke was taken, they ſaid, The Glory of Iſrael was taken.

Matth. 8. Luke 7.

Origen. in diuerſos Euangelij locos, homi. 1. Commeth to vs. Matth. 28. Numeri 10. 1. Regum 4.

Neither may we thinke, that Origen meant any Corporall, or Reall entring of Chriſt into our houſes. His owne words, and expoſition are to the contrary. For thus he writeth in the ſame place: Tantùm dic verbo: Tantùm veni verbo: verbum aſpectus tuus eſt, opuſque eſt conſummatum: Oſtende Abſens Corpore, quod Præſens ſpiritu conſummare potes: Only (O Lord) ſpeake thou the word: Only come by the word: thy word is thy ſight, and a perfite worke: Being Abſent in thy Body, ſhew, that thou art able to make perfit, being preſent in ſpirit. So ſaith Chriſt, I and my Father will come vnto him, and will make our abode in him. In which words we may not conceiue any Materiall, or Corporall comming. Therefore, whenſoeuer Chriſt entreth thus into our houſe, whether it be by ſome Holy Man, or by the Sacrament of his Body, or by the Signe of the Croſſe, or as S. Auguſtine ſaith, by Faith, or by the Sacrament of Baptiſme, Origen, teacheth vs to humble our hearts, and to ſay at euery ſuch comming, or preſence, O Lord, I am not worthy that thou ſhouldeſt thus enter into my houſe. If M. Harding will gather hereof, that Origen teacheth vs, to Adore the Sacrament: then muſt he alſo ſay, that Origen likewiſe teacheth vs to adore the Biſhop, or any other Godly man, and that euen as God, and with Godly honour.

Origen. in diuerſos Euang. locos, homi. 5. Abſens Corpore. Luk. 14.

Auguſtin. in Iohan. tractatu 50.

M. Harding. The 20. Diuiſion.

What can be thought of S Cyprian, but that he adored the inuiſible thing of this Sacrament, which is the Body, and Blood of Chriſt: ſeeing that he confeſſeth the Godhead to be in the ſame, no leſſe, then it was

The Inuiſible thing of the Sacrament is the Body, and Blood of Chriſt being in Heauen.

in

in the perſon of Chriſt, which he vttereth by theſe words? Panis iſte quem Dominus diſcipulis porrigebat, &c. This Bread which our Lord gaue to his Diſciples, changed not in ſhape, but in nature, by the almighty power of God is made Fleſh. And as in the perſon of Chriſt the Manhood was ſeene, and the Godhead was hidden, euen ſo the Diuine eſſence hath vnſpeakably infuſed it ſelfe into the viſible Sacrament. In Sermone de Cœna Domini.

The Biſhop of Sarisbury.

This place of S. Cyprian is often alleged by M. Harding, as matter inuincible: and to anſwer it ſeuerally in euery place it would be tedious. Wherefore I thought it good to referre thee, gentle Reader, to the ſecond Diuiſion of the tenth Article, and to the Fourth Diuiſion of the 21. Article, where it ſhall be anſwered more at large. Howbeit, thus much we may note by the way, that S. Cyprian in this place ſpeaketh not one word of the Adoration of the Sacrament. As for M. Hardings ghoſtes, they import no proofe. By the way, as S. Cyprian ſaith, The Diuine Eſſence, as M. Harding turneth it, infuſeth it ſelfe into the Viſible Sacrament, ſo doth Paulinus ſay of the Water of Baptiſme: Concipit vnda Deum: The Water conceiueth, or receiueth God. And S. Auguſtine, ſpeaking likewiſe of Baptiſme: Sacramento ſuo Diuina Virtus aſſiſtit: The Diuine power of God is aſſiſtant vnto the Sacrament. Auguſt. contra Donatiſt. li. 3. ca. 10.

M. Harding. The 21. Diuiſion.

The 169. vntruth. For S. Chryſoſtome affirmeth no Reall preſence: but only aduanceth our minds into Heauen.

Chryſoſtome hath a notable place for the Adoration of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, in his Commentaries vpon S. Paul, where he affirmeth alſo the (169) Reall preſence, and the Sacrifice. Let vs not, let vs not (ſaith he) be willing impudently to kill our ſelues. And when thou ſeeſt that Body ſet foorth, ſay with thy ſelfe, For cauſe of this Body, I am no longer earth and aſhes, no longer captiue, but free. This Body faſtned (on the Croſſe) and beaten, was not ouercome with Death. After this, he exhorteth all to adore and worſhip our Lords Body in the Sacrament. * This Body (ſaith he) the Wiſe men worſhipped in the ſtall, and hauing taken a long iourney, being both wicked, and aliants, with verie great feare, and trembling adored him. Wherefore let vs follow at leaſt thoſe aliants, vs, I ſay, that are Citizens of Heauen. For they, whereas they ſaw but that ſtall, and Cabben only, and none of all the things thou ſeeſt now, came notwithſtanding with the greateſt reuerence, and feare, that was poſſible. But thou ſeeſt it not in a ſtall of beaſts, but on the Altar: not a woman to hold it in her armes, but a prieſt preſent, and the holy Ghoſt plentifully ſpread vpon the ſacrifice. This Father in his Maſſe maketh a praier in preſence of the bleſſed Sacrament, almoſt with the ſame words, that S. Baſil did. Attende Domine Ieſu Chriſte Deus noſter, &c. Looke vpon vs O Lord Ieſus Chriſt, our God, from thy holy habitacle, and from the Throne of the Glory of thy kingdome, and come to ſanctifie vs: who ſitteſt on high with the Father, and art heere inuiſibly with vs: and make vs worthy by thy mightie hand, that wee may be partakers of thy vnſpotted Body, and pretious Blood, and through vs, all the people. In 10. cap. prioris ad Corinth.

In the ſame Chryſoſtomes Liturgy, or Maſſe, a moſt euident teſtimonie of Adoration of the Sacrament is thus vttered: Sacerdos adorat, & Diaconus in eo quo eſt loco, ter ſecretò dicentes: Deus propitius eſto, &c. The Prieſt adoreth, and the Deacon likewiſe in the place he ſtandeth in, ſaying three times ſecretly: God be mercifull to me a ſinner. So the people, and likewiſe all, make their Adoration deuoutly, and reuerently.

In the ſame Father is another praier, which the Greeke Prieſts do vſe to this day at their Adoration of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, and it is expreſſed in theſe words, * Domine non ſum dignus, &c. Lord I am not worthy, that thou enter vnder the filthy roofe of my Soule. But as thou tookeſt in good part to lie in the denne, and ſtall of brute beaſts, and in the houſe of Simon the Leprous, receiuedſt alſo a harlot, and a ſinner like me comming vnto thee: Vouchſafe alſo to enter into the ſtall of my Soule void of reaſon, * and into my filthy Body being dead and Leprous. And as thou didſt not abhorre the foule mouth of a harlot, kiſſing thine vndefiled feet: So my Lord God, abhorre not me though a ſinner, but vouchſafe of thy goodneſſe, and benignitie, that I may be made partaker of thy moſt holy Body and Blood.

The 169. vntruth. For S. Chryſoſtome affirmeth no Reall preſence: but only aduanceth our minds into Heauen.
* This Body heere repreſented by this Sacrament.
In the preſence of the Sacrament, but not to the Sacrament.
* This Praier is directed vnto Chriſt himſelfe: not vnto the Sacrament, nor to any thing Really contrined in the Sacrament.
* By a Myſticall maner of ſpeech Chriſt entreth into our Bodies, when we receiue the Sacrament of Chriſt into our Bodies.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

The anſwer, that is already made vnto Dionyſius, and Origen, may alſo ſerue to that, is here alleged of Chryſoſtome. Yet for ſome further declaration of Chryſoſtomes meaning, it may pleaſe thee, good Chriſtian Reader, to vnderſtand, that Chryſoſtome in the very ſame Homily here alleged, writeth thus: Quid Significat Panis? Corpus Chriſti: What doth the Bread ſignifie? The Body of Chriſt. And in his Homilies vpon S. Matthew he writeth thus: In iſtis vaſis, non eſt Verum Corpus Chriſti, ſed Myſterium Corporis eius continetur: In theſe veſſels is not the very Body of Chriſt, but a Myſtery of his Body is therein contained. And therefore in the ſame Homily vpon the Epiſtle to the Corinthians, he withdraweth the minds of the people from the Senſible Elements of the Bread, and the Wine, and lifteth them vp by Spirituall cogitations into Heauen. Thus he ſpeaketh vnto the people: Vbi Cadauer, ibi Aquilæ. Cadauer eſt Domini Corpus propter Mortem. Aquilas autem appellat, vt oſtendat, ad alta eum oportere contendere, qui ad hoc Corpus accedit: Where as the Carkaſſe is, there are the Eagles. The Carkaſſe is the Lords Body, becauſe of his Death. But Eagles he nameth, to ſhew, that he muſt flee on high, that will come neere to that Body. Afterward he addeth thus: Aſcende ergo ad Cœli portas, & diligenter attende: imò non Cœli, ſed Cœli Cœlorum: & tunc, quod dicimus, intueberis: Therefore goe vp vnto the gates of Heauen, and marke diligently: Nay, I ſay not to the gates of Heauen, but of the Heauen of Chryſoſtom. in 1. Corin. hom. 24.

Chryſoſt. in Opere Imperfecto, hom. 11.
Chryſoſtom. in 1. Corin. homi. 24.

of Heauens: then ſhalt thou ſee the things, that I ſpeake of. Thus therefore that Godly Father Chryſoſtome dealeth with his people, as if they were already in Heauen, and willeth them to behold, not the Bread, and Wine, which are things corruptible, but the very Body, and Blood of Chriſt: not the outward Sacrament, but the Subſtance of the Sacrament: not the things that lie preſent before them, but the things, that, touching Bodily preſence, are away. For in the holy Communion there is none other ſight laid before vs, but only the Croſſe, and Death of Chriſt, and that Lambe of God, that taketh away the ſinnes of the world. And the very cogitation hereof, ſaith S. Auguſtine, ſo mooueth our hearts, as if we ſaw Chriſt hanging preſently before vs vpon his Croſſe. De Conſ. Diſt. 2. Semel mortuus.

In this wiſe therefore, hauing remoued the peoples hearts into Heauen, and placed them euen in the ſight of Chriſt, he ſaith further vnto them: For this Bodies ſake thou art no longer duſt and aſhes: This Body hath made thee free: This Body was broken for thee vpon the Croſſe: This Body muſt we Adore, as the Wiſe men did: This Body not now vpon the Earth, but at the Right hand of God in Heauen: This Body, that thou ſeeſt with thy Spirit, and touchest with thy Faith, whereof the Sacrament that thou receiueſt, is a Myſtery. So ſaith Emiſſenus: Sacrum Dei tui Corpus Fide reſpice, mente continge, Cordis manu ſuſpice: With thy Faith behold the holy Body of thy God, touch it with thy mind, receiue it with the hand of thy Heart. De Conſ. Diſt. 2. Quia Corpus.

But M. Harding will reply, Chryſoſtome ſaith, As Chriſt was in the ſtall, ſo he is now vpon the Altar: and, as he was ſometimes in the Womans Armes, ſo he is now in the Prieſts hands. True it is, Chriſt was there: and Chriſt is here: but not in one, or like ſort of Being. For he was in the ſtall by Bodily Preſence: vpon the holy Table he is by way of a Sacrament. The woman in her armes held him Really: the Prieſt in his hands holdeth him only in a Myſtery. So ſaith S. Paul, Chriſt dwelleth in our harts: and no doubt, the ſame Chriſt, that lay in the ſtall. It is one, and the ſame Chriſt: but the difference ſtandeth in the maner of his Being there. For in the ſtall he lay by preſence of his Body: in our harts he lieth by preſence of Faith. Ephe. 3.

If this expoſition ſeme to M. Harding ouer exquiſite, or curious, then will I ſay further: Chriſt is ſo vpon the Table, as the Faithfull people is vpon the Table. S. Auguſtine ſpeaking to the people ſaith thus: Vos eſtis in Menſa, vos eſtis in Calice: You are vpon the Table: you are in the Cuppe. But the people is not there Groſſely, Really, and indeed, but in a Myſtery. Euen ſo is Chriſts Body vpon the Table, not Groſſely, not Really, or indeed, but in a Myſtery. And as Chryſoſtome ſaith, The Prieſt holdeth Chriſt in his hand, euen ſo S Gregorie ſaith, Abel held Chriſt in his hand, and that feure thouſand yeres before Chriſt was borne: and yet, not a bare ſigne, or a naked token, but the very ſame Chriſt, that Eſay ſaw, and that Iohn Baptiſt pointed with his finger. For thus ſtand his words: Quem Iohannes in oſtenſione, quem Eſaias in locutione, hunc Abel ſignificando in manibus tenuit. Thus Chryſoſtome ſaith, the Prieſt holdeth Chriſt in his hand, as Iohn Baptiſt held him: as Eſay held him: as Abel held him. Auguſtin. Citatur à Beda in 1. Corin. 10. Gregori. in Iohum. li. 29. ca. 38.

And, that this was Chryſoſtomes meaning, it appeareth by the very forme, and order of his words. For he ſaith, Thou ſeeſt the holy Ghoſt: Thou Seeſt, and Toucheſt that princely Body. Thus he ſpeaketh of a Spirituall ſeing, and touching, wherewith we ſee, and touch things, be they neuer ſo farre abſent from vs. For otherwiſe, touching bodily ſight, M. Harding knoweth, the Holy Ghoſt cannot be ſeene: and by his owne Doctrine, the Body of Chriſt is there Inuiſible.

But leſt M. Harding take occaſion hereof, to ſay, This is a Fantaſticall, and a vaine kind of ſeeing; Let him remember the words that S. Hierome writeth to Paula, and Euſtochium touching their abode at Bethleem: Magos tria deferentes munera in viſione beatis oculis vidiſti. Ipſa eadem munera Fide Deo obtuliſti: Cum iiſdem Magis Deum Puerum in Præſepio adoraſti: Thou ſaweſt with thy happie eies the Wiſe men carrying their three ſorts of preſents: Thou tookeſt the ſame preſents, and offereſt them vnto God by Faith: with the ſame Wiſe men thou Adoreſt God being a Child in the Manger. She ſaw the Wiſe men, and yet ſaw them not: She receiued their Preſents, and yet receiued them not: She adored the Child in the Manger, and yet the child was not there. Thus ſhe did, not verily, or indeed: and yet not vainly, nor by way of Fantaſie notwithſtanding: but truely, and effectually, by Preſence of Faith. Hieronym. ad Paulum & Euſtochium.

Thus did the Wiſe men ſee Chriſt: thus doe we now ſee Chriſt. Thus did they worſhip him: thus doe we worſhip him. They ſaw him, and worſhipped him being in Earth: we ſee him, and worſhip him being in Heauen. They had him Bodily preſent: we haue him Bodily Abſent, and Preſent only to our Faith.

And in this behalfe S. Ambroſe ſaith: Magis videtur, quòd non videtur: It is beſt ſeene, that is not ſeene. That is to ſay, We ſee more certainely with our Faith, then we can ſee with Ambroſ. de his qui initiantur Myſteriis. ca. 3.

with the eies of our Body. For our Bodily eie may deceiue vs: But the eie of our Soule, which is Faith, cannot deceiue vs.

M. Hardings reason hereof standeth thus: The Priest at the time of the holy Ministration said, O God be mercifull to me being a sinner. And, Looke vpon vs, O Lord Iesus Christ our God, from thy holy Tabernacle, and from the Throne of thy Glory: Ergo, he made his praiers, and gaue Adoration to the Sacrament. Of the same premisses he might much better conclude the contrary: The Priest withdrew his mind from these Sensible, and Corruptible Elements, and Adored Christ being in Heauen in his Tabernacle, and in the Throne of his Glory, Ergo, he did not Adore the Sacrament.

M. Harding. The 22. Diuision.

S. Ambrose after long search and discussion, how that saying of the Prophet might be vnderstanded, Adore and worship yee his footstoole, because it is holy: at length concludeth so, as by the footstoole he vnderstandeth the Earth, because it is written, Heauen is my seat, and the Earth is my foorstoole: And because the Earth is not to be Adored, for that it is a creature, by this Earth, he vnderstandeth that Earth, which our Lord Iesus tooke in the Assumption of his Flesh of the Virgin Mary, and hereupon he vttereth those plaine words for testimony of the Adoration: Itaque per Scabellum Terra intelligitur, per Terram autem Caro Christi, quam hodie quoque in Mysteriis Adoramus: & quam Apostoli in Domino Iesu Adorarunt. And thus by the Footstoole Earth may be vnderstanded, and by Earth, the Flesh of Christ, which euen now adaies also we Adore in the Mysteries, and the Apostles Adored in our Lord Iesus. De Spiritu Sancto li. 3. ca. 12. Psal. 96. Esai. 66.

S. Augustines learned handling of this place of the Psalme, Adore ye his Footstoole, because it is Holy, maketh so euidently for this purpose, that of all other authorities, which in great number might be brought for proofe of the same, it ought least to be omitted. The place being long, I will recite it in English only. His words be these: Adore ye his Footstoole: because it is Holy. See ye Brethren, what that is, he biddeth vs to Adore. In an other place the Scripture saith: Heauen is my Seat, and the Earth is my Footstoole. What doth he then bid vs, Adore, and worship the Earth, because he said in an other place, that it is the Footstoole of God? And how shall we Adore the Earth, whereas the Scripture saith plainly, Thou shalt Adore thy Lord thy God; and here he saith, Adore ye his footstoole? But he expoundeth to me, what his footstoole is, and saith: and the Earth is my Footstoole. I am made doubtfull; afraid I am to adore the Earth, lest he damne me, that made Heauen and Earth. Againe, I am afraid to adore the footstoole of my Lord, because the Psalme saith to me, Adore ye his Footstoole. I seeke, what thing is his Footstoole, and the Scripture telleth me, The Earth is my Footstoole. Being thus wauering, I turne me to Christ, because him I seeke here, and I find, how without impiety the Earth may be adored. For he tooke of Earth, Earth, because Flesh is of Earth, and of the Flesh of Mary he tooke Flesh. And because he walked here in Flesh, and that very Flesh he gaue vs to eat to Saluation, and no man eateth that Flesh, except first he adore it: it is found out how such a Footstoole of our Lord may be adored, and how we not only sinne not by adoring, but sinne by not adoring. Doth not the Flesh quicken, and giue life? Our Lord himselfe said, when he spake of the condemnation of it selfe of that Earth: It is the spirit that quickneth, but the Flesh profiteth nothing. Therefore, when thou bowest thy selfe, and fallest downe to euery such Earth, behold it not as Earth, but that holy One, whose footstoole it is, that thou dost adore, for because of him thou dost adore. And therefore here he added: Adore ye his Footstoole, because it is Holy. Who is holy? He for whose loue thou adorest his footstoole. And when thou adorest him, remaine not by cogitation in Flesh, that thou be not quickned of the Spirit. For the Spirit, saith he, quickneth, and the Flesh profiteth nothing. And then, when our Lord commended this vnto vs, he had spoken of his Flesh, and had said: Except a man eat my Flesh, he shall not haue in him life Euerlasting. In Psal. 98. Esai. 66. Deut 6.10. Matth. 4. Iohan. 6.

We eat Christ sitting in Heauen: And so we Adore him, not lying vnder Accidents, but sitting in Heauen.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

S. Ambrose, and S. Augustine, as they agree together for the exposition of the Psalme, so, touching the matter it selfe, neither doe they any wise disagree from vs, nor any wise agree with M. Harding. They teach vs humbly to Adore Christs Flesh: but they teach vs not to Adore the Sacrament of Christs Flesh. Thus M. Harding hath taken a needlesse labour, to proue a matter, that is already proued: but the thing, that he should haue proued, he toucheth not. This is too bold abusing of the simple Reader, to beare him in hand, that these godly Fathers teach vs to Adore the Sacrament, that spake not one word of Adoring the Sacrament.

But M. Harding will say, We must Adore the Flesh of Christ. We grant: we beleeue it: it is our Faith: we teach the people, as the old learned Fathers did, that no man eateth that Flesh, but first he Adoreth it: and that he deadly offendeth God, and is wicked, and guilty of the Lords Body, that Adoreth it not. Ambrose. in Sermone 58. De Maria Magdalena.

But as we Eat it, so we Adore it. We eat it sitting in Heauen at the Right hand of God: Thither we lift vp our hearts, and there we Adore it. S. Ambrose saith, Stephanus in terris positus, Christum tangit in Cœlo: Steuen standing in the Earth, toucheth Christ being in Heauen. Againe he saith: Non Corporali tactu Christum, sed Fide tangimus: We touch Christ by Faith, and not by Corporall touching. And as we touch Christ, so we see him: that is, with the Spirituall eies of our Faith: and not otherwise. So S. Ambrose saith in the place before alleged: Stephanus intra Cœlos Dominum cernit absentem: Steuen seeth Christ being absent within the Heauens. And for proofe hereof, that all that Glorious sight was meere Spirituall, and not offered to the Corporall eie of the Bodie, S. Augustine Ambrose. in Sermone 58. De Maria Magdalena. Ambrose. in Lucam, li. 10. ca. 24.

saith,

ſaith, that S. Steuen ſtod then vnder a roſe before the Iudges, & ſaw the Heauens open, when with his Bodily eies he was not able to loke vp, and to ſee the Heauens. There, we ſee Chriſts Body: there we approch vnto it: there we touch it: there we taſte it: there we eat it: there we adore it. And doth M. Harding thinke, that the Religion of Chriſt is ſo groſſe, and ſo ſenſible, that we cannot eat or adore his Body, vnleſſe it lie Corporally Preſent before our eies? Verily S. Auguſtine ſaith: Si Reſurrexiſtis cum Chriſto, dicit fidelibus, dicit Corpus, & Sanguinem Domini accipientibus, ſi Reſurrexiſtis cum Chriſto, quæ ſurſum ſunt ſapite, vbi Chriſtus eſt in dextra Dei ſedens: quæ ſurſum ſunt quærite, non quæ ſuper Terram: If ye be riſen againe with Chriſt, S. Paul ſaith vnto the faithfull, and vnto them that receiue the Body and Blood of Chriſt, If ye be riſen againe with Chriſt, ſauour the things that be aboue, where Chriſt is ſitting at the right hand of God: Seeke the things that be aboue, and not the things that be vpon the Earth. And in this very place by M. Harding alleged he ſaith: Spiritualiter intelligite, quod locutus ſum. Non hoc Corpus, quod videtis, manducaturi eſtis: Vnderſtand you Spiritually that I haue ſaid vnto you. You ſhall not eat (with your bodily Mouthes) this Body of mine that ye ſee. Thus S. Auguſtine in the ſame place expoundeth, and openeth his owne meaning. Doubtleſſe, as the wicked may diſhonor Chriſt, ſo may the godly honor him. But the wicked, as S. Paul ſaith, doe crucifie the Son of God being in Heauen: and Chriſt being in Heauen, ſaith vnto Paul being in the Earth beneath: Saul, Saul, Why doeſt thou perſecute me? Therefore the godly being in Earth, may likewiſe adore and honour Chriſt being in Heauen. But they will replie, S. Ambroſe ſaith, We doe adore Chriſts Fleſh in the Miſteries. Hereof groweth their whole error. For S. Ambroſe ſaith not, We doe adore the Miſteries, or the Fleſh of Chriſt Really Preſent, or Materially contained in the Miſteries, as it is ſuppoſed by M. Harding. Onely he ſaith: We adore Chriſts Fleſh in the Myſteries: that is to ſay, In the miniſtration of the Miſteries. And doubtleſſe, it is our duty to adore the Body of Chriſt in the Word of God: in the Sacrament of Baptiſme: in the Myſteries of Chriſts Body and Blod: and whereſoeuer we ſee any ſtep or token of it: but ſpecially in the holy Myſteries, for that there is liuely laid forth before vs the whole ſtory of Chriſts Converſation in the Fleſh. But this adoration, as it is ſaid before, neither is directed to the Sacraments, nor requireth any Corporall or Reall Preſence. So S. Hierome ſaith: Paula Adored Chriſt in the Stall And, That he himſelfe Adored Chriſt in the Graue. And S. Chryſoſtome teacheth vs, To adore Chriſts Body in the Sacrament of Baptiſme. Yet neither was Chriſts body then Really preſent in the Stall or Graue: nor is it now preſent in the Water of Baptiſme. Thus S. Ambroſe ſaith, We adore the Fleſh of Chriſt in the Myſteries.

Auguſt. De cognitione veræ vitæ, cap. 42.

Auguſt. in Pſalm. 39.

Coloſſ. 3.

Auguſtin. in Pſalm. 98.

Hebræ. 6. Actor. 9.

Hieronym. ad Paulam & Euſtochi, Chryſoſt. in Marcum Homil. 14.

M. Harding. The 23. Deuiſion.

Againe, S. Auguſtine ſheweth the maner and cuſtome of his time touching the Adoration of Chriſt in the Sacrament, writing thus ad Honoratum, vpon the verſe of the 21. Pſalme: Edent Pauperes, & ſaturabuntur, that is, the poore ſhall eat, and be filled: and vpon that other: Manducauerunt & adorauerunt omnes diuites terræ, All the rich of the earth haue eaten and adored. It is not without cauſe (ſaith hee) that the rich and the poore be ſo diſtincted, that of the poore it was ſaid before, The poore ſhall eat and be filled: and heere (of the rich) they haue eaten and adored all that bee the rich of the earth. For they haue beene brought to the Table of Chriſt, and do take of his Body and Blood, but they doe adore only, and be not alſo filled, foraſmuch as they do not follow him.

Pſal. 118. ſ. 21.

Likewiſe in his Expoſition vpon that Pſalme; All the rich alſo (ſaith hee there) of the earth haue eaten the Body of the humbleneſſe of their Lord, neither haue they beene filled as the poore, vntill the following. But yet they haue adored and worſhipped (170) It, that is, by adoration they haue acknowledged Chriſt their Lord there preſent.

Pſal. 21.

The 170. Vntrueth, Standing in vntrue interpretation. M. Harding addeth (It) of his owne.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

This place may be paſſed ouer with the former anſwer. S. Auguſtine heere ſpeaketh of the Adoring of Chriſt, & not one word of the Adoring of the Sacrament. The whole drift of his talke ſtandeth in an Allegory of Hungring, Eating, Filling and Adoring. We hunger Chriſt: we eat Chriſt: we be filled with Chriſt ſitting in Heauen: and likewiſe we adore and worſhip Chriſt ſitting in Heauen.

But S. Auguſtine ſaith: Comedunt Pauperem: They eat Chriſt being poore. We know, that Chriſt is now no longer in the diſpenſation of his pouerty. God hath exalted him, and giuen him a Name aboue all Names, and made all things ſubiect to his feet. But S. Auguſtine calleth him Poore, for that he ſo humbled himſelfe, and became obedient vnto the Death, euen vnto the Death of the Croſſe. In this reſpect of his Croſſe, of his Death, of his Pouerty we embrace him: we liue by that Body that was broken for vs: we be refreſhed by that Blod, that was ſhed for vs. And thus we Eat Chriſt, and be releaued, and haue our life by him, only in reſpect of his Blodſhedding, and of his Pouerty.

Philippen. 2. Hebræ. 2. Epheſ. 1.

The Poore that haue refuſed and forſaken themſelues, Eat Chriſt ſitting in Heauen, and are filled with him. But the Rich eat him and adore him likewise sitting in Heauen: but they are not filled. They see, that Christ is the very true Messias, that was loked for: they see, that all things are fulfilled that were written of him in the Prophets, and that his name is published vnto the ends of the world: they beleeue that there is none other name vnder Heauen, whereby they can be saued. Therefore they professe his name: they beleeue in him: they eat him and adore him. But they make some account of the World: they forsake not themselues: they follow not Christ: and therefore they are not filled with him. Thus doth S. Augustine expound his owne meaning: Inde erat Piscator, &c.

Actor. 13. Roman. 10. Actor. 4.

Of those poore was Peter, and Iohn, and Iames, and Matthew the Publican. They did eat and were filled: for they suffered the same things that they had eaten. Christ gaue to them his Supper: he gaue to them his passion: he is filled that followeth the same. Hitherto S. Augustine speaketh not one word of adoration, either of the Sacrament, or of Christs Body, as being Really present in the Sacrament. Therefore M. Harding was the more blame worthy, thus to adde words of his own vnto S. Augustine, and so vtterly to falsifie and to corrupt his meaning. It is no good Catholike point, so to vse the old Fathers. Verily, whereas S. Augustine writeth thus: Nec sicut pauperes saturati sunt vsque ad imitationem: sed tamen Adorauerunt:

Augustin. in eundem Psalm.

Neither were they filled as the poore, euen vnto the following: and yet notwithstanding they Adored.

M. Harding addeth thereto of his owne, a prety little (it) which he found not in S. Augustine: and so maketh it vp thus, But yet they haue Adored and worshipped it? and, as if it were good text of S. Augustine, afterward he furnisheth it out with this Exposition or Commentary of his owne: that is, They haue acknowledged by adoration Christ their Lord there present. His friends will hardly thinke, there is so much cunning in his dealing. He cannot lightly lacke authorities, as long as he can thus shape them of his own. But S. Augustine knoweth not neither this Commentary, nor this Text: nor euer gaue M. Harding to vnderstand of this Corporall Presence, As it is said, and proued before, we see Christ, and worship Christ sitting in Heauen. Certainly S. Augustine, who best knew his owne minde, saith thus: Habes aurum: sed nondum tenes præsentem Christum: Thou hast gold, but thou holdest not yet Christ present. S. Augustine saith: Christ is not heere present. M. Hardings commentary saith: Christ is heere present. Now let the Reader consider, whether of these two he will beleeue.

It.

Augustin. Domini, quinta post Trinita. Sermo. 1.

M. Harding. The 24. Diuision.

Furthermore writing against Faustus the Heretike of the Manichees sect, amongst other things he sheweth how the Ethnickes thought that Christian people for the honor they did before the blessed Sacrament, that is, of Bread and Wine Consecrated, did honor Bacchus and Ceres, which were false Gods honored of the Genules for the inuention of Wine & Corn. Wherof may iustly be gathered an argument, that in those daies faithfull people worshipped the Body and Blood of Christ in the Sacrament, vnder the formes of Bread and Wine. For els the Infidels could not haue suspected them of doing Idolatry to Bacchus & Ceres.

This conclusion is not wel considered. For the Heathens neuer worthipped Bacchus and Ceres, vnder the forms of Bread and Wine.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

This gheese hath neither sense nor sauor in it: and therefore I maruell, that M. Harding being learned, and hauing, as he saith, such store and choice of other, would euer vse this for an argument. For the very children in Grammer Schools can tell him, that the Heathens, that Adored Bacchus and Ceres, as their Gods, yet notwithstanding neuer gaue godly honor to Bread and Wine. And Cicero himselfe, being an Heathen, was able to say, Quis tam stultus est, vt id quo vescitur, credat esse Deum? Who is so very a foole, that will beleeue the thing that he eateth, to be his God? And in like sort Iuuenal an Heathen Poet, scorneth at this folly: O sanctas gentes, quibus hæc nascuntur in agris Numina! O happy is that people, that hath Gods growing in their fields! The Heathens in their rude Gentility thought that Bacchus and Ceres had first found out, and taught them the vse of Bread and Wine: whereas before they fed of Akecornes, and dranke water: and therefore in remembrance, and witnesse of so great a benefit, they honoured the one with Bread, and the other with Wine. But that they euer honored the Elements of Bread & Wine, I thinke M. Harding is not able well to shew: Therefore he might haue formed his argument in this sort: The Christians were thought to honour their Sacraments, as the Heathens honoured Bread and Wine: But the Heathens neuer honoured Bread and Wine with godly honour:

Cicero de Natura Deorum. Iuuenalis.

Ergo, The Christians neuer honoured their Sacraments with godly honour.

M. Harding. The 25. Diuision.

One other most euident place touching this honor and adoration, we find in him rehearsed by Gratian, Li. Sanctæ. Presb. We do honor (saith he) *in forme of Bread and Wine, which we see, things inuisible, that is to say, flesh and blood. *Neither take we likewise these two forms, as we tooke them before Consecration. Sith that we do faithfully grant, that before Consecration it is Bread & Wine, which Nature hath shapte; but after Consecration, flesh and blood of Christ, which the blessing (of the Priest) hath Consecrated.

De Consecr. dist. 2. can. Nos autē.

*By this word Forme S Augustine meaneth the Substance and kinde of Bread.
*The Accidents of the Bread are after Consecration, as they were before.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

First, this authority here alleged, is not to be found, neither in S. Augustine, in whose name it is brought, nor in the sentences of Prosper. As for Gratian, M. Harding knoweth he

he is a common falſifier of the Doctors, therefore his credit in ſuch caſes cannot be great. Notwithſtanding touching the matter, we know, that Bread, Wine & Water, of themſelues be nothing els, but corruptible and ſimple creatures. If we conceiue none otherwiſe of them, than they be of themſelues, then all our Sacraments be in vaine. Therefore the godly Fathers labour euermore, to draw vs from the outward viſible Creatures, to the meaning and ſubſtance of the Sacraments. And to that end S. Auguſtine ſaith: In Sacramentis videndum eſt, non quid ſint, ſed quid ſignificent. In Sacraments we muſt conſider, not what they be indeed, but what they ſignifie. So it is written in the Councell of Nice: Vides Aquam? Cogita Diuinam Vim quæ in Aqua latet: Seeſt thou the Water of Baptiſme? (it is not that, it was before) Conſider thou that Heauenly Power, that lieth hidden in the Water. So Chryſoſtome ſaith: Antequam Sanctificetur Panis, panem nominamus: Diuina autem Sanctificante illum Gratia, mediante Sacerdote, liberatus eſt quidem ab appellatione Panis: dignus autem habitus eſt Dominici Corporis appellatione: etiamſi Natura Panis in illo remanſerit: The Bread before it is Sanctified, is called Bread: but being Sanctified by the Heauenly Grace, by meane of the Prieſt, it is deliuered from the name of Bread, and thought worthy of the name of the Lords Body: notwithſtanding the nature of Bread remaine in it ſtill. Thus, as Chryſoſtome ſaith: The Bread remaineth ſtill Bread, in his former Kind & Subſtance, without any ſuch Tranſubſtantiation or change of nature, as is now imagined. The words be plaine: M. Harding cannot denie them. And yet notwithſtanding, it is not the thing it was before, becauſe it is alſo called the Lords Body. So likewiſe ſaith S. Auguſtine: Quicunque in Manna Chriſtum intellexerunt, eundem, quem nos Spiritualem Cibum manducarunt: As many as in Manna vnderſtood Chriſt, they did eat the ſame Spirituall Meate, that we eat (that is, the holy Body of Chriſt.) And ſo vnto them Manna was Chriſts Body, and not the ſame thing it was before. And for better Declaration hereof, Bertramus ſaith: Chriſtus vt nunc Panem conuertit in Corpus ſuum, ita tum Manna de Cœlo datum ſuum Corpus Inuiſibiliter operatus eſt: Chriſt, as he now turneth the Bread into his Body, euen ſo then in like ſort the Manna that fell from Heauen, inuiſibly hee made his Body. Thus, as the Bread is Chriſts Body, euen ſo was Manna Chriſts Body: and that inuiſibly, and by the omnipotent Power of God. Thus are the elements of Manna, of the Bread, of the Wine, and of the Water, changed, and are not as they were before: and therefore in euery of the ſame we honor the Body of Chriſt Inuiſible, not as Really and Fleſhly preſent, but as being in Heauen. This whole matter, and the cauſes therof, S. Auguſtine ſeemeth to open in this wiſe: Signacula quidem rerum Diuinarum eſſe Viſibilia, &c. Let the new Chriſtned man be taught, that Sacraments be Viſible ſignes of Heauenly things, & that the things themſelues that he ſeeth not, muſt be honored in them, and that the ſame kind and element (Bread, Wine, or Water) is not ſo to be taken, as it is in daily vſe. Let him alſo be taught what the words mean, that he hath heard, and what is hidden (and to be beleeued) in Chriſt, whoſe Image or Likenes that thing (that is, that Sacrament) beareth. Headdeth further: Deinde monendus eſt, ex hac occaſione, vt ſi quid etiam in Scripturis audiat, quod Carnaliter ſonet, etiamſi non intelligat, credat tamen Spirituale aliquid ſignificari: Moreouer, vpon occaſion heere of he muſt be taught, that if he heare any thing euen in the Scriptures, that ſound Carnally, yet hee thinke, there is ſome Spirituall thing meant by it.

Auguſt. contra Maximinum, li. 3. Concil. Nicen. κρυπτομένην. Chryſ. ad Ceſarium Monachum.

Auguſt. de Vtilitate Pœnitentia. 1. Corin. 10.

Bertramus, de Sacramen. Euchariſtiæ.

Auguſt. de Catechizandis Rudibus, ca. 26.

M. Harding. The 26. Diuiſion.

Leauing a number of places that might be alleged out of the ancient Fathers for the confirmation of this matter, to auoid tediouſneſſe, I will conclude with that moſt plaine place of Theodoretus, who ſpeaking of the outward ſignes of the Sacrament, ſaith, that notwithſtanding they remaine after the Myſticall bleſſing (171) in the propriety of their former Nature, as thoſe that may be ſeene and felt, no leſſe than before: yet they are vnderſtanded and beleeued to be the things which they are made by vertue of Conſecration, and are worſhipped with godly honor. His words be theſe: Intelligantur ea eſſe, quæ facta ſunt, & credantur, & adorentur, vt quæ illa ſint, quæ creduntur: Theſe myſticall Signes (ſaith he, are vnderſtanded to be thoſe things which they are made, and ſo they are beleeued, and are adored, as being the things which they are beleeued to be. With which words Theodoretus affirmeth both the Reall Preſence, and alſo the Adoration. The Reall Preſence, in that he ſaith, theſe outward ſignes or tokens after Conſecration to be made things which are not ſeene, but vnderſtanded and beleeued, whereby he ſignifieth the Inuiſible thing of this Sacrament, the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Adoration he teacheth with expreſſe termes, and that becauſe through power of the Myſticall bleſſing, the ſignes be in exiſtence, and indeed the things which they are beleeued to be, ſoothly, the Body & Blood of Chriſt. For otherwiſe God forbid, that Chriſtian people ſhould be taught to adore and worſhip the inſenſible Creatures, Bread and Wine. Of which he ſaith, that they are adored, not as ſignes, not ſo in no wiſe, but as being the things which they are beleeued to be. Now I report me to the Chriſtian Reader, whether this Adoration of the Sacrament, whereby we meane the godly worſhip of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, bee a new deuice, or no, brought into the Church but lately, about three hundred yeeres paſt, as M. Iewel maketh himſelfe ſure of it in his Sermon.

Reg. 2.

171. vntruth: for Theodoretus ſaith, Manent in priori Subſtantia. By M. Hardings conſtruction, the outward ſignes are Chriſts Body and muſt be worſhipped with godly honour.

The Biſhop of Sariſbury.

By theſe words of Theodoret, M. Harding thinketh himſelfe able to proue both Reall Preſence, and alſo Adoration of the Sacrament: and I doubt not, but the diſcreet Reader ſhall ſone perceiue, he hath proued aſwell the one as the other. Touching Reall Preſence Theodoretus ſpeaketh nothing, no not one word. His maner of ſpeach ſeemeth rather to incline to Tranſubſtantiation: wherunto notwithſtanding Theodoretus is an enemy, and thinketh it a great folly proceeding of ignorance, as it ſhall appeare. And whereas Theodoretus imagineth two men to reaſon together by way of a Dialogue, a Catholike man, and an Heretike, M. Harding is faine for defenſe of his Doctrine, to take part with the Heritike, and to vſe his arguments, as if they were Catholike. For thus the Heritike there ſaith, euen as M. Harding now ſaith: Symbola Dominici Corporis, & Sanguinis, alia quidem ſunt ante Inuocationem Sacerdotis: Sed poſt Inuocationem mutantur, & alia ſiunt: The Sacraments or Signes of Chriſts Body and Blood, are one thing before the Bleſſing of the Prieſt: But after the Bleſſing they are changed, and made other things. And he ſpeaketh of the change of Subſtance, as M. Harding doth. The Catholike man maketh anſwer: Signa Myſtica poſt Sanctificationem non recedunt à Natura ſua. Manent enim in Priori Subſtantia, & Figura, & Forma: Nay mary. The Myſticall Signes after the Bleſſing (of the Prieſt) depart not from their owne Nature. For they remaine in their former Subſtance, and Figure, and Forme. He ſaith further: Yet the ſame Bread and Wine remaining as they were before, are vnderſtanded and Beleeued, and Adored, as the things, that they are Beleeued.

Theodoret. Dialogo 2. Inconfuſus.

Vt quæ ſint illa quæ creduntur.

Here good Chriſtian Reader, note by the way: M. Harding ſaith, The Nature and Subſtance of the Bread and Waine, is vtterly aboliſhed, and done away: But the Catholike man ſaith: The ſame Nature and Subſtance remaineth ſtill, as it was before. If the Catholike mans ſaying be Catholike, then M. Hardings ſaying is not Catholike.

M. Harding will replie, But theſe Signes are honoured. Euen ſo S. Auguſtine ſaith: Baptiſma, vbicunque eſt, veneramur: We honour Baptiſme, whereſoeuer it be. But for anſwer herto, vnderſtand thou good Reader, that Theodoret was a Greek Biſhop, and that the Grecians neuer vſed to giue godly honour to the Sacrament vntill this day. Further vnderſtand thou, that S. Ambroſe touching the Sacrament, writeth thus: Veniſti ad Altare: vidiſti Sacramenta poſita ſuper Altare: &, ipſam quidem miratus es Creaturam. Tamen Creatura ſolennis, & nota: Thou cameſt to the Altar: thou ſaweſt the Sacraments laid vpon the ſame: and diddeſt marueil at the very Creature. Yet is it a Creature vſed and knowen.

Auguſt. epiſt. 164.

Ambroſ. de Sacrament. li. 4. c. 3.

Here S. Ambroſe calleth the Sacrament a Creature, and that twice together in one place. I thinke, M. Harding will not haue vs beleeue, that Theodoretus, being ſo godly a man, gaue godly honour vnto a Creature.

But Theodoretus ſaith, They are honoured. This is already anſwered in the laſt Obiection. For as S. Auguſtine teacheth vs, In Sacraments we muſt conſider, not what they be indeed, but what they Signifie. And in this ſenſe they are vnderſtanded, and beleeued & adored, as by ſignification being, or repreſenting the things that are beleeued. S. Auguſtine ſaith: Sacramenta ſunt verba Viſibilia: Sacraments be viſible Words. But Words are often times put for the things that are ſignified by the Words. So ſaith S. Hilary: Verba Dei ſunt illa quæ enuntiant: The Words of God be the very things that they vtter or ſignifie. So Chriſt ſaith: My Words be Spirit and Life, becauſe they be Inſtruments of Spirit and Life. And ſo Origen ſaith: Hoc quod modò loquimur, ſunt carnes Chriſti: The very words that I now ſpeake, are the fleſh of Chriſt. Euen in this ſort the Sacraments are the Fleſh of Chriſt, and are ſo Vnderſtanded, and Beleeued and Adored. But the whole honour reſteth not in them, but is paſſed ouer from them to the things that be ſignified.

Auguſt. contra Maximin. l. 3.

Auguſtin. contra Fauſtum Manichæ. lib. 19. ca. 15.

Hilar. de Trin. li. 6.

Iohan. 6.

Origen. in Numer. homil. 23.

M. Harding will ſay, By this Conſtruction, Adorantur, is as much to ſay, as Non Adorantur: They are honoured, that is, They are not honoured: but onely lead vs to thoſe things that muſt be honoured. Herein is none inconuenience. For ſo it appeareth, Theodoretus expounded his owne meaning. His words immediatly following are theſe: Confer ergo Imaginem cum exemplari, & videbis ſimilitudinem. Oportet enim Figuram eſſe Veritati ſimilem: Compare therefore the Image (that is, the Sacrament) with the patern (that is, with Chriſts Body.) For the Figure muſt be like vnto the truth. Theodoretus calleth the Sacrament, an Image, a Reſemblance, and a Figure. I thinke M. Harding will not ſay, that Images, Reſemblances and Figures be worthy of godly honour. And hereunto very aptly agreeth S. Auguſtines Leſſon touching the ſame: Qui Adorat vtile ſignum diuinitùs inſtitutum, cuius Vim. Significationemq; intelligit, non hoc veneratur, quod videtur, & tranſit: ſed illud potius, quò talia cuncta referenda ſunt.: He that worſhipeth a profitable Signe appointed by God, and vnderſtandeth the Power and Signification of the ſame, doth not worſhip that thing that is ſeene with the eie, and paſſeth away: but rather hee worſhipeth that thing, vnto which all ſuch things haue relation. Here S. Auguſtine thinketh it no inconuenience to ſay, We worſhip the Signe, & yet worſhip it not. And this he ſpeaketh, not only of the Sacrament of Chriſts Body, but alſo of the Sacrament of Baptiſme. For ſo he ſaith further in the ſame place: Sicuti eſt Baptiſmi Sacramentum, &c. As is the Sacrament of Baptiſme and the Celebration of the Body and Blood of the Lord. Which Sacraments euery man, when he

Auguſt. de doctrina Chriſtiana, li. 3. ca. 9.

Auguſt. in eodem Capite.

he receiueth them, being instructed, knoweth whereto they belong, that hee may worship them, not with carnal bondage, but with the freedome of the Spirit. I might adde hereto the words of that most fond & leaud 2 Councell of Nice: Venerandas Imagines Perfecte Adoramus: & eos, qui secùs confitentur, Anathematizamus: We do perfectly Adore the reuerend Images, and doe accurse them that professe otherwise. And yet afterward they say: Honor Imagini exhibitus refertur ad Prototypum: The honor giuen to the Image, redoundeth vnto the Patterne. Thus that Councell saith: Images are honoured: That is to say, They are not honoured. To worship Baptisme.

Now let vs examine, what Construction M. Harding maketh vpon these words:

Theodoretus saith: The Bread and the Wine leaue not, or be not changed from their Former Nature: That is to say, by this new exposition, They vtterly leaue their Former Nature. 1

They remaine still in their Substance: that is to say (saith M. Harding) they remaine not in their Substance. Further M. Harding saith: 2

The Accidents of Bread and Wine, be the Signes of Christs Body: The Bread and the Wine be no Signes. 3

The visible Accidents, are made the Inuisible Body and Blod of Christ: The Bread and Wine are made nothing. 4

The Signes be made the very selfe thing, that is signified, and that in existence, and indeed. And so one thing, at one time, and in one respect, is Substance, and Accident: Visible and Inuisible: and as they terme it in the Schooles, Fundamentum, and Terminus: which was euer wont to be called a Monster in Nature. So many Errours are scarcely sufficient to maintaine one Errour. 5

Now, I trust, the Christian Reader will some consider how soundly M. Harding hath discharged his promise, and proued the Adoration of the Sacrament. Verily of all these Doctours, that he hath here alleged (Theodoretus only excepted, in whom he would seeme to haue some colour of aid, who also is already clerely answered) there is not one, that any way may be thought to touch, either the worshipping of the outward Sacrament it selfe, or of Christ, as Present in the Sacrament.

Anno Domini, 1215.

The greatest Doctours of that side say, that vnlesse Transubstantiation be concluded, the people cannot fraly worship the Sacrament, without occasion of Idolatrie. Now it is knowen, that Transubstantiation is a new Fantasie, newly deuised in the Councell of Lateran in Rome. And D. Tonstall saith, that before that time it was free and lawfull for any man to hold the contrary. Wherefore it is likely, that before that time there was no such Adoration. Otherwise, it must needs haue bene with great danger of Idolatrie. But after that, as it is said before, Pope Honorius toke order, and gaue commandement, that the people should Adore: Pope Vrbanus added thereto a new solemne Feast of Corpus Christi day: And Pope Clement confirmed the same with great store of Pardons. This is the Antiquity and Petite Degree, of this kinde of Adoration.

Tonst. lib. 1 de Sacramẽ. Eucharistie fo 46. Extra de Celebratione Missarum. Clemen. li. 3. tit. 16. Si Dominum.

M. Harding. The 27. Deuision.

And whereas vtterly to abolish this Adoration, he allegeth great danger of Idolatry, in case the Priest doe not truely Consecrate: thereto may be answered, that Iacob stood in no danger of conscience, for that by the procurement of Laban, he lay with Lea in stead of Rachel: neither for the same was hee to bee charged with aduoutery, because he meant good Faith, and thought himselfe to haue had the company of his wife Rachel. So Idolatry is not to be imputed vnto him, that worshippeth Christ with godly honor in the Bread not Consecrate, which of good Faith he thinketh to be Consecrate. Touching this case, S. Augustine hath this notable saying: We haue need (saith he) to put a difference in our iudgement, & to know good from euill, forasmuch as Satan changing his shape, sheweth himselfe as an Angel of light, lest through deceit he lead vs aside to some pernicious things. For when he deceiueth the senses of the Body, and remoueth not the mind from true and right meaning, wherein each man leadeth a faithfull life, there is no perill in Religion. Or if, when he faineth himselfe good, & doth or saith those things, that of congruence pertaine to good Angels, although he be thought to be good, this is not a perilous or tickly error of Christian faith. But when as by these things he beginneth to bring vs to things quite contrary, then to know him from the good spirit, & not to go after him, it standeth vs much vpon, diligently to watch and take heed. Thus S. Augustine. Thus much for the Adoration of the Sacrament, or rather of Christ in the Sacrament, may suffice.

Gene. 9.

Exod. 32.

A very simple defense of manifest Idolatry. Euen so the Idolaters thought their Idoll of good Faith to be very god.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

The great danger and horrour of Idolatry that hereof riseth, M. Harding thinketh may easily be saued by the example of Rachel and Lea: and thus he bringeth in Gods Mystical prouidence for defense of open error: and thus teacheth vs in stead of Rachel, to take Lea, & to honor a Creature in stead of God. Wherein it shall be necessary briefly to touch, how many waies, euen by their owne Doctrine, the poore simple people may be deceiued, and yeld the honour of God to that thing, that in their own iudgement is no God.

Thom. par. 3. q. 83. Iohan. De Burgo. Pupilla oculi, cap. 3.

Thus therefore they say, If the Priest chance to forget to put Wine into the Cup, and so passe ouer the Consecration without Wine:

Idem.

Or, if the Bread be made of any other, than wheaten floure, which may possibly happen:

Idem.

Or, if there be so much Water in quantity that it ouercome & alter the nature of ỹ wine:

Doubts touching Conſecration.

Or, if the Wine be changed into Vineger, and therefore cannot ſerue to conſecration:

Or, if there be viii. Cakes vpon the Table, and the Prieſt for his Conſecration determine only vpon vii. in which caſe they ſay, Not one of them all is Conſecrate:

Or, if the Prieſt diſſemble, or leaue out the Words of Conſecration: or, if he forget it, or minde it not, or thinke not of it: In euery of theſe, and other like defects, there is nothing Conſecrate, and therefore the people in theſe caſes, honouring the Sacrament, by their owne Doctrine giueth the glory of God to a Creature: which is vndoubted Idolatry.

Gerſon. contra Floretum, li. 4. Extra. de Celebra. Miſſa. de Homine. Summa Euangelica. Euchariſtia, 26.

And that the follie hereof may the better appeare, one of them writeth thus: Quod ſi Sacerdos, &c. If the Prieſt hauing before him ſundry Cakes at the time of Conſecration, do mind only and preciſely to Conſecrate that only Cake, that hee holdeth in his hand, ſome ſay, the reſt bee not Conſecrate: but ſay thou, as Duns ſaith, They be all Conſecrate. Yea further he ſaith: If the Prieſt doe preciſely determine to Conſecrate only the one halfe part of the Cake, and not likewiſe the other halfe, that then the Cake being whole, that one part onely is Conſecrate, and not the other.

Diſt. 81. Si qui.

Pope Gregorie ſaith: If the Prieſt be a knowen adulterer, or Fornicator, and continue ſtill in the ſame, that his Bleſſing ſhall be turned into Curſing: and that the people obeying not this moſt holeſome precept commit Idolatry.

In this caſe ſtandeth the ſimple people: ſo many waies, and ſo eaſily they may be deceiued. For notwithſtanding they may in ſome part know the Prieſts life, and open dealing, yet how can they be aſſured of his ſecret Words, of his Intention, of his Minde, and of his Will? Or if they cannot, how can they ſafely Adore the Sacrament, without doubt and danger of Idolatrie?

Thom. in lib. 3. Senten. Diſt. 9. Thom. Sariſburienſ. de Arte prædicandi, cap. 25.

But they themſelues ſee well, it cannot be: and therefore haue deuiſed a ſimple poore helpe of their owne. They ſay, We may not Adore the Sacrament, but vnder a Condition, that is to ſay, If it be Conſecrate. And ſo ſaith Thomas Sarisburienſis: Nullus quantumcunque ſit ſimplex, vel quantumcunque ſit diſcretus, debet præciſè credere, hoc eſſe Corpus Domini: Sed cum hac conditione, ſi in Conſecratione rite ſint acta omnia. Aliter enim aſſeret de Creatura, quod ipſa ſit Creator: & ita eſſet Idololatria: No man, be he neuer ſo ſimple, or neuer ſo wiſe, ought preciſely to beleeue, that this is the Body of our Lord, that the Prieſt hath Conſecrate, but only vnder this condition, if all things concerning the Conſecration be done as appertaineth. For otherwiſe hee ſhall auouch a Creature to bee the Creater: which were Idolatrie. By this Doctrine M. Harding teacheth the people thus to knéle downe, and to Adore the Sacrament: If thou bee God indeed, then I worſhip thee: But if thou bee not God, then I will not worſhip thee. Thus, Arnobius ſaith, The Heathens in old time were wont to call vpon Iupiter: Siue tu Deus es, ſiue tu Dea es: Whether thou be a God or a Goddeſſe, we call vpon thee. Thus Gods people is led to giue the honour of God, they cannot tell vnto what, and to honour a Creature in ſtead of God.

Arnob. li. 3.

Gen. 29.

Yet muſt all this be excuſed by the example of Rachel, & Lea. As if M. Harding would reaſon thus: Iacob by Gods ſpeciall prouidence, knew Lea in ſtead of Rachel:

Ergo, We may ſafely Adore a bare Creature with godly honor: and ſay vnto it: Thou art our God: Thou madeſt Heauen and Earth: we haue none other God but thée: and all this without perill of Idolatrie. He would not thus daily, if he knew, what it were to beſtow Gods glory vpon that thing, that is no God. Certainly, this is not the worſhipping of God in Spirit and Truth.

Iohan. 6.

S. Martin was much more circumſpect in this caſe, as may well appeare by that is written of him. For when the Diuell came vnto him, and toke vpon him to be Chriſt, and therefore required him to bow downe, and to giue him honour: No, ſaid S. Martin: I cannot tell whether thou be Chriſt or no. Vnleſſe I ſee Chriſt in the ſame ſhape and forme, that he was Crucified in vpon the Croſſe, I will not Adore him in any wiſe. S. Auguſtine ſaith:

Sulpitius in vita Martini. Auguſt. in Iohan. tract. 7.

Audiſtis quia Meſſias Chriſtus eſt: audiſtis quia Chriſtus vnctus eſt. Non ſic poſuit Iacob Lapidem vnctum, vt veniret, & Adoraret: alioqui Idololatria eſt, non Significatio Chriſti: Ye haue heard that Meſſias is Chriſt: ye haue heard that Chriſt is the Anointed. Iacob did not erect the Anointed ſtone, to the intent to come, and to Adore it. Otherwiſe, it is Idolatrie, and not a Signification of Chriſt. Theophilus being ſometime demanded, wherefore he would not Adore the Emperour, as the maner then was, with godly honour, made anſwer thus: Quia non ad hoc inſtitutus eſt Imperator, vt Adoretur, ſed vt legitimo honore honoretur: Becauſe the Emperour is not appointed, to the end we ſhould honour him, as God: but that we ſhould giue him that honour that vnto him appertaineth. So if M. Harding will likewiſe demand, wherefore we Adore not the Sacrament with godly honor, the godly ſimple man may make him this Anſwer: Becauſe it was ordained reuerently to be receiued, and not to be Adored: as a Sacrament, and not as God. For in all the Scriptures, and holy Fathers, we haue neither Commandement to force vs hereto, nor Example to lead vs hereto. We Adore the Body of Christ, not only for the turning of an hand, while the Priest is able to hold vp the Sacrament, and that with doubt of our selues, whether we do well, or no, which thing is vtterly vncomfortable, and dangerous, and full of terror to the conscience: But we worship that Blessed, and Glorious Body, as that blessed Martyr S. Steuen did, being in Heauen at the Right hand of the Power of God, and therefore without doubt, and danger: and that at all times, and for euer: and we beleeue, and confesse, that Iesus Christ, euen in the Nature, and Substance of our Flesh, is the Lord in the Glory of God the Father.

Theophilus contra Autolycum, lib 1.

not

Reseruation.

OF THE CANOPIE.

The Ninth Article.

The Bishop of Sarisburie.

OR that the Sacrament, was then, or now ought to be hanged vp vnder a Canopie.

M. Harding. The 1. Diuision.

If M. Iewel would in plaine termes deny the reseruation and keeping of the blessed Sacrament, for which purpose the Pix and Canopy serued in the Churches of England, as of the professors of this new Gospel it is both in word, and also in deed denied: it were easie to prooue the same by no small number of authorities, such as himselfe cannot but allow for good and sufficient. But he knowing that right well, guilefully refraineth from mention of that principall matter, and the better to make vp his heape of Articles for some shew against the Sacrament, by deniall reproueth the hanging vp of it vnder the Canopie: thereby shewing himselfe like to Momus, who espying nothing reproueable in faire Venus, found fault with her Slipper.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

This Article, as it is small of it selfe, and therefore might the better be dissembled, and past ouer, were it not accessory to Idolatry, so it is warranted of M. Hardings side, by very simple, and slender proofes, as shall appeare. It liketh M. Harding for his entry, to solace himselfe, and his friends withall, to call vs new Doctors: himselfe being not able hitherto to allege any one of all the Old Doctors without force, and fraud, plainly, and directly to serue his purpose. But these New Doctors are, neither so new, nor so much destitute of Antiquity, as these men would faine haue the world to beleeue. For, touching the abolishing of the Reseruation of the Sacrament, which M. Harding hath here drawen in, to helpe out the matter, being otherwise not necessarily incident vnto this Article, they haue the Authorities, and Examples of good Ancient Old Catholique Fathers for their warrant in that behalfe. For S. Cyprian saith: Panis iste recipitur, non includitur: The Bread is receiued, and not shut vp. Clemens, who, as M. Harding saith, was the Apostles Fellow, writeth thus: Tanta in Altario Holocausta offerantur, quanta populo sufficere debeant: quòd si remanserint, in crastinum non reseruentur: Let there be so many Hostes, or so much Bread offered at the Altar, as may be sufficient for the people. If any thing remaine, let it not be kept vntill the morning. Origen or Cyrillus saith, for one Booke beareth both their names: Dominus Panem, quem Discipulis suis dabat, non distulit, nec iussit seruari in crastinum: The Bread, that our Lord gaue to his Disciples, he lingred it not, nor bad it to be kept vntill the morning. His reason is grounded vpon the order of Christs Institution: for that Christ said not, Take, and keepe, but, Take, and Eat. S. Hierome saith: Post Communionem, quæcunque de Sacrificijs superfuissent, illic in Ecclesia Communem Cœnam comedentes pariter consumebant: After the Communion was done, whatsoeuer portion of the Sacrifices remained, they spent it there together in the Church eating their common Supper. S. Augustine likewise seemeth to say the same: The Bread made to this purpose, is spent in receiuing the Sacrament. Hesychius saith: That the Remanents of the Sacrament were burnt immediately in the fire. Nicephorus saith: The same Remanents in some places were giuen to Children, that went to Schoole to be eaten by them presently in the Church: The like whereof is also decreed in the Councel of Matiscon. So saith Gabriel Biel, a new Doctor of M. Hardings

Cyprianus de Cœna Domin. Clemens Epist. 2.

Origen in Leui. Cyril. in Leui. ho. 5. Hieronym. 1. Corin. 11. Augustin. de Trinitate, lib. 3. cap. 10. Hesychius in Leui. li. 2. ca. 8. Nicephorus lib. 17. ca. 25. Concil. Matisc. con 2. ca. 6. Gabriel Biel, lectione. 26.

Reseruation.

dings company: Non dedit Discipulis, vt ipsum honorificè Conseruarent: sed dedit in sui vsum, dicens, Accipite, & Manducate: Christ gaue not (the Sacrament) to his Disciples, that they should reuerently reserue it: but he gaue it for their vse, saying, Take and Eat.

Thus many old Doctors, and yet many moe we haue on our side. Therefore M. Harding was somewhat ouerséene, for following of them, to call vs new Doctors.

Cypr. de lapsis Serm. 5. Tertullian. ad Vxorem. Hieronym. ad Rusticum. Basilius ad Cæsariam. Euseb. lib. 6. cap. 44. Ambr. de obitu Satyri.

I know, the Sacrament in old times in some places was reserued, as it may appeare by Tertullian, S. Cyprian, S. Hierome, S. Basil, Eusebius, and others. S. Cyprian saith, women vsed to kéepe it at home in their Chests: Tertullian saith, The Faithfull vsed then to haue it in their priuate houses, and to eat it before other meates: S. Hierome saith, that Exuperius the Bishop of Tolouse vsed to carry it abroad in a basket: S. Basil saith, That in Egipt, and specially about Alexandria, euery man for the most part had the Sacrament in his house: Eusebius séemeth to say, The Priest had it in his Chamber: S. Ambrose saith, Men vsed then to carry it about them, not only by Land, but also by Sea in their Napkins. All these were abuses of the holy Mysteries: and therefore afterward were abolished. Thus was then the Sacrament reserued: In priuate houses, in Chests, in Baskets, and in Napkins. Now, if M. Harding be able, truly to shew any such like Ancient authority for his Canopy, then may he say, he holdeth vp the Old Catholique Fathers. But, forasmuch as M. Harding hath leisure, to call to mind his Old Fable, of Momus, Venus, and such like: Indéed they say, Momus was wont to espy faults, and to controll all the Gods without exception, euen the great Iupiter himselfe, that sate in Rome in the Capitol: and therefore his office oft times was not so thankfull, as some others. But one great fault he found with Vulcan, for the making of man, for that he had not set a grate, or a window at his Breast, that others might piere in, and espy some part of his secret thoughts. If M. Harding had such a grate, or window at his breast, and men might loke in, and sée his conscience, I doubt not, but they should sée many moe sparkes of Gods truth, then as now outwardly doe appeare.

As for his faire Lady Venus, whereby he meaneth his Church of Rome, the world séeth, and he himselfe knoweth, she hath bén taken in open aduoutrie: and Phebus the Son of God, with the heauenly beames of his holy Word hath reuciled it. O, Would to God we had no cause iustly to say with the Prophet Esay: Quomodo facta est Meretrix Ciuitas Fidelis! O how is that Faithfull Cuie become an Harlot! Verily Momus shall not néed now to reproue her Slipper. Ye shall rather haue cause to say: A planta pedis, vsque ad verticem capitis, non est in ea sanitas: From the sole of the foot, to the top of the head, there is no whole part in her.

Esai. 1.

Esai. 1.

For so S. Bernard complaineth of her miserable state in his time.

Bernardus de Conuersione Pauli.

M. Harding. The 2. Diuision.

Whereto we say, that if he, with the rest of the Sacramentaries, would agree to the keeping of the Sacrament, then would wee demand, why that maner of keeping were not to be liked. And heere vpon proofs made of default in this behalfe, and a better way shewed, in so small a matter, conformitie to the better would soone be perswaded. In other Christian Countries (wee grant) it is kept otherwise, vnder locke and key, in some places at the one end or side of the Altar, in some places in a chappell builded for that purpose, in some places in the Vestrie, or in some inward and secret roome of the Church, as it was in the time of Chrysostome at Constantinople. In some other places we reade, that it was kept in the Bishops Palace neere to the Church, and in the holy daies brought reuerently to the Church, and set vpon the Altar, which for abuses committed, was by order of Councels abrogated.

In Epist. ad Innocentium.

De Consecr. Distinct. 3. Can. 5.

Thus in diuers places diuersly it hath beene kept, euery where reuerently, and surely, so as it might be safe from iniurie, and villanie of miscreants, and despisers of it. The hanging vp of it on high, hath beene the maner of England, as Lindwood noteth vpon the Constitutions prouinciall: on high, that wicked despight might not reach to it: vnder a Canopie, for shew of reuerence and honour.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

Héere M. Harding sheweth, that this Reseruation of the Sacrament, in diuers Countries, hath bene diuersly vsed: Vnder locke and key: At the Altars end: In a Chapell: In the Vestry: In the Bishops Palace. And all this of the vsage of late yéres: for Antiquitie, sauing only the Epistle of Chrysostome to Innocentius, which also, as it shall appeare, maketh much against him, hée toucheth nothing. But amongst all these diuersities of kéeping, hée hath not yet found out his Canopie. And touching, that he alleged of the Reseruation of the Sacrament in the Bishops Palace, it séemeth very little to further his purpose. For, whereas the Sacrament was reserued onely in the Bishops Custodie, it followeth necessarily, that there, in other Parish-churches and Chapels, was no such Reseruation. Chrysostomes Epistle to Innocentius is good witnesse, that the Sacrament was Reserued to be receiued of the people, at the Communion the next day, or in very short time after. For it was Reserued in both Kindes, as it appeareth plainly by his Chrysostom. ad Innocentium.

his wordes. But it is cleare, both by the iudgement of reason, and also by their owne Canons in that behalfe, that the Wine in such sort, and quantity cannot be kept any long time without sowring. And the maner in Grecia was, during the time of Lent, to Consecrate only vpon the Saturdaies, and Sundaies, and yet nevertheless to Communicate of the same vpon the other worke daies. For the end of this Reseruation in old times was, not that the Sacrament should be Adored, but that it should be receiued of the people; and specially that persons Excommunicate, for whose sake it was reserued, being suddenly called out of this life, vpon their repentance might at all times receiue the Communion, and depart with comfort, as the Members of the Church of God.

Canopie not commendable.

De Con. Dist. 2. Presbyter. In Glossa. In sexta Synodo Constantinop. ca. 52. Διὰ παντὸς τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ τὰ μυστήρια προσφέρεσθαι.

But, me thinketh, M. Harding doth herein, as Apelles the Painter somtime did, in setting out King Antigonus physnomy. For vnderstanding, that Antigonus was blind of the one side, he thought it best to paint him out only with halfe face, and so he cunningly shadowed the deformity of the other eie. Euen so M. Harding sheweth vs certaine variety of keeping the Sacrament, and other smal matters of like weight: but the danger of Idolatry, and other like horrible deformities he dissembleth cunningly and turneth from vs. Loth I am, to vse the comparison: But S. Hierome saith it: Diabolus nunquam se prodit aperta facie: The Diuell neuer sheweth himselfe openly with his whole face.

Hieronym. in vita Malchi.

In the old times, when the Sacrament was kept in Chests, in Napkins, in Baskets, and in priuate Houses, there was no danger of Adoration. But vnder the Canopy we see, not only, that the effect hath fallen out farre otherwise, but also that the very cause thereof was at the first to the contrary. For so saith Linwood himselfe, Citius repræsentatur nostris aspectibus Adoranda: It is the rather offered vnto our sights to be worshipped. If there were no cause els, yet is this it selfe cause sufficient, to abolish this new order, of hanging vp the Sacrament vnder a Canopy. For therefore the King Ezechias toke downe the Brasen Serpent, and brake it in peces, notwithstanding God had specially commanded Moses to erect it vp: because he saw it abused to Idolatry.

Guliel. Linwood, li. 3. de custodia Eucharistiæ, &c. 2. Regum. 18.

Againe, they themselues, vpon smaller considerations, haue vtterly abolished the maner of Reseruation, that was vsed in the Primitiue Church. For they will not now suffer, neither Lay people, nor Women to keepe it in their houses: nor Boyes to carry it to the sicke, as then the Boy did to Serapion; nor Infidels, or men not Christned, to weare it about them, as then did S. Ambroses brother Satyrus. I leaue the Rust, the Mould, the Canker, and the breeding of wormes: whereby that holy, and reuerend Mystery of Christs Death is often times made loathsome, and brought into contempt. They themselues doe testifie, that such things, not only may happen; but also haue often happened. It is said, that Alphonsus the King of Arragon, for the preseruation of his honor, and safetie, so long kept the Sacrament about him, that at last it putrified, and bred wormes: which, when they had eaten vp, and consumed one another, in the end there remained only one great worme, that was the last, and had eaten all his fellowes. In such cases they command, that the wormes be burnt, and the ashes buried in the Altar. The Glosse it selfe vpon the Decrees saith thus: It is not necessary to keepe the wine. And the Reason is this: Quia opus esset nimia cautela: Because we should need to haue too much adoe with the keeping of it.

Euseb. li. 6. ca. 43. Ambros. de Obitu Satyri. Gerson contra Florentum, li. 4. Concil. Aurelian. De Conse. Dist. 2. Presbyter. in Glossa. Concil. Lateranen. sub Innocentio. 3. Can. 20. Concil. Bracaren. 3. ca. 5. Extra de Celebratio. Missarum. Sane. Guliel. Linwood. li. 3. de Custodia Eucharistiæ.

In the Councel of Laterane it is confessed, that the Sacrament so kept hath bin abused Ad horribilia, & nefaria facinora, To worke horrible, and wicked deeds. And M. Harding himselfe confesseth, that, for certaine like abuses, the same Reseruation was in some part abolished in the Councel of Bracara.

To be short, touching the Canopie, Linwood himselfe findeth fault with it, as it appeareth in the Prouincial. For thus he writeth: Dicitur, quòd in loco Mundo, & singulari debet seruari: It is said, The Sacrament ought to be kept in a cleane seuerall place sequestred from other. Whereunto he addeth thus: Ex hoc videtur, quòd vsus obseruatus in Anglia, vt in Canopæo pendeat, non est commendabilis: Hereby it appeareth, That the order, that is vsed in England, of hanging vp the Sacrament in a Canopy, is not commendable. Here M. Harding hath causes, both in generall, why all maner such Reseruation ought to be misliked, and also in speciall, why the Canopie can not be liked.

M. Harding. The 3. Diuision.

If Princes be honored with cloth of Estate, Bishops with solmne thrones in their Churches, and Deanes with Canopies of Tapistry, Silke, and Arras, (as we see in sundry Cathedrall Churches) and no man find fault with it: why should M. Iewel mislike the Canopie, that is vsed for honor of that Blessed Sacrament (172) wherein is contained the very Body of Christ, and through the in separable ioyning together of both Natures in Vnity of person, Christ himselfe, very God, and very Man? With what face speaketh he against the Canopy vsed to the honor of Christ in the Sacrament, that sitting in the Bishops seat at Sarisbury, can abide the sight of a solemne Canopie made of Painted boords spread ouer his head? If he had had been of Councel with Moſes, Dauid, and Salomon, it is like he would haue reprooued their iudgements, for the great honor they vſed, and cauſed to be continued towards the Arke, wherein was contained nothing but the Tables of the Law, Aarons rodde, and a pot full of Manna. King Dauid thought it very vnfitting, and felt great remorſe in heart, that he dwelt in a houſe of Cedars, and the Arke of God was put in the mids of skins, that is, of the Tabernacle, whoſe outward parts were couered with beaſts skins.

The 172. Vntruth. For Chrysostome saith, In Vasis Sanctis, non verum

Corpus Chriſti, Sed Myſterium Corporis Chriſti continetur.

And now there is one found among other* monſtrous and ſtrange formes of Creatures, maners, and Doctrines, who being but duſt and aſhes, as Abraham ſaid of himſelfe, promoted to the name of a Biſhop, and not Choſen (I weene) to doe high ſeruice of a Man according to Gods owne heart, as Dauid was: thinketh not himſelfe vnworthy to ſit in a Biſhops Chaire vnder a Gorgeous Teſture or Canopy of gilted boords, and can not ſuffer the pretious Body of Chriſt, whereby we are redeemed, to haue for remembrance of Honor done of our part, ſo much as a little Canopie, a thing of ſmall price. (173) Yet was the Arke but a ſhadow, and this the Body: that the figure, this the truth: that the Type, or ſigne, this the very thing it ſelfe. As I doe not enuy M. Iewel that honor, by what right ſoeuer he enioyeth it, ſo I can not but blame him for* bereauing Chriſt of his honour, in this bleſſed Sacrament.

* Let your modeſty be knowen to all men. Philip. 4.

The 173. Vntruth: for both are Figures? both Types, both Signes. Nazian. ſaith, Figura Figura, De Paſchate.

* Chriſt will ſay, In vaine ye worſhip me, &c. Matthæ. 15.

The Biſhop of Sariſburie.

Princes vſe to ſit vnder a Cloth of Eſtate: Biſhops, and Deanes vnder painted Thrones, or cloth of Arras: Ergo (ſaith M. Harding) The Sacrament ought to be hanged vp vnder a Canopie. I trow, It is not lawfull for all men, to vſe ſuch arguments. In ſuch ſort Durandus reaſoneth: The Arke of the Couenant was caried by the Leuites: Ergo, The Pope muſt be caried aloft vpon the Deacons ſhoulders. And againe, they ſeeme by practiſe, further to reaſon thus: The Pope is carried vpon mens ſhoulders: Ergo, The Sacrament muſt be caried before him, whither ſoeuer he goe, vpon a faire white Iannet.

Durand. li. 2.

And, whereas it liketh M. Harding thus merily to ſport himſelfe with Biſhops ſitting vnder Painted Boords, Certainly, I reckon it much fitter for the Church of God, to haue Painted Boords, then painted Biſhops, ſuch as he is, that claimeth to be the Biſhop of all Biſhops: and yet doth not indeed any part of the office of one Biſhop. The Biſhops Chaire, or Stall, was appointed at the firſt, as a place moſt conuenient for him to read, and to preach in. But what needeth more? Such vanity of words ſhould not be anſwered.

For the reſt, God himſelfe commanded Moſes to make the Tabernacle, and alſo ſhewed him in the Mount, in what order and forme it ſhould be made. Neither durſt Moſes, or his workmen, to adde, or to minish, or to alter any one thing of their deuice: or to do any thing more, or leſſe, otherwiſe then God had appointed him. When Dauid of his Deuotion, would haue built a Temple vnto God, God forbad him by the mouth of his Prophet Nathan, and ſaid, Thou ſhalt build me no Temple. Afterward Salomon ſet vpon to build the Temple: not, when he would himſelfe, but only, when God had ſo willed him. Neither followed he therein any part of his owne fantaſie, but only that ſelfe ſame plat and proportion, that God had giuen to his Father. For ſo ſaith Dauid himſelfe: All this paterne was ſent to me in writing, by the hand of the Lord, which made me vnderſtand all the workmanſhip of the paterne.

Exod. 25. & 27.

2. Sam. 7.

1. Paralipomen. 28.

Heere marke, good Chriſtian Reader: In euery of theſe examples, God hath bridled our Deuotion, and hath taught vs to worſhip him, not in ſuch ſort, as may ſeeme good in our eies, but only as he hath commanded vs. Yet can M. Harding by his cunning, apply euery of theſe ſame Examples, to proue thereby, that we may honour God in ſuch ſort, as we of our ſelues can beſt deuiſe.

This was euermore the very rot of all Superſtition. And therefore Almighty God ſaith: My thoughts bee not as your thoughts: nor my waies, as your waies. Who euer required theſe things at your hands? M. Harding would faine, in all that he taketh in hand, be called Catholike: and yet neuertheleſſe maintaineth a meere particular Deuotion, onely vſed within this Realme, and that onely within theſe few late yeeres, and neuer either vſed or knowen in any other Chriſtian Country elſe: and therefore ſuch, as can in no wiſe be called Catholike.

Eſa. 55.

But he ſaith: There is now found one among other monſtrous and ſtrange formes, &c. This, I trow, is not that Sobriety and modeſty, that was promiſed at the beginning. Such Eloquence would better become ſome other perſon, then a man profeſſing Learning and Grauity, Heerein I will gladly giue place to M. Harding. It is rather a teſtimony of his impatience, and in ordinate choler, than good proofe of the cauſe.

Certainly, if the Sacrament be both God and Man, as heere, I know not how godly, it is auouched, then is this but a very ſimple honour for ſo great a Maieſty. Undoubtedly, this is a very ſtrange and monſtrous Doctrine, to teach the people, that Chriſt being both God and Man, and now Immortall and Glorious, may Canker and Putrifie, and breed wormes. The time was, when whoſo had uttered ſuch words of Blaſphemy, had beene reckoned a monſter among the Faithfull. But this is the iuſt iudgement of God. He giueth men vp into a reprobate minde, to turne Gods Truth into a Lie, and to worship, & serue a Creature, forsaking the Creator, which is God blessed for euer.

Rom. 1.

and

I trust, our Doctrine abridgeth not any part of Christs Glory. We adore him, as he hath commanded vs, sitting in Heauen at the Right hand of the Power of God. And therefore, M. Harding, ye haue burnt your brethren, and scattered their bones vpon the face of the Earth, and wrought vpon them, what your pleasure was, only because they would not be traitors vnto God, and giue his Glory vnto a Creature.

Chrysostome expounding the complaint of Laban against Iacob, for stealing away of his Gods, writeth thus: Quare Deos meos furatus es? O excellentem insipientiam! Tales sunt Dij tui, vt quis eos furari queat? Non erubescis dicere, Quare furatus es Deos meos? Wherefore hast thou stollen away my Gods? O what a passing Folly is this! Be thy Gods such ones, that a man may steale them? And art thou not ashamed to say, Wherefore hast thou stollen away my Gods? This matter needeth no farther application. Verily, the thing, that M. Harding calleth God, and Man, may soone be stollen away with Pix, and Canopie, and all together. If Chrysostome were now aliue, he would say to M. Harding, as he said to Laban: Art thou not ashamed &c. And, touching the honoring of Christ, he saith, Discamus Christum, prout ipse vult, venerari. Honorato namque iucundissimus est honor, quem ipse vult, non quem nos putamus. Nam & Petrus eum honorare putabat, cum sibi pedes eum lauare prohibebat: Sed non erat honor, quod agebat, sed contrarium. Let vs learne to honor Christ, as he hath willed vs. For to him, that is honored, that honor is most pleasant, that he himselfe would haue, not that we imagine. For Peter thought to honor Christ, when he forbad him to wash his feet. Howbeit, that was no honour vnto Christ, but contrariwise, it was dishonour.

Gene. 31. Chrysostom in Genes. hom. 57.

Chrysostom. ad Populum Antiochenum. hom. 60.

To conclude, whereas M. Harding, in the impatience of his heat, demandeth of vs, With What face we can find fault with the hanging vp of the Sacrament vnder a Canopie: We may easily answer him thus: Euen with the Same face, wherewith Linwood found fault with the same: and with the Same face, wherewith all Christendom, England only excepted, hath euermore refused, to doe the same.

M. Harding. The 4. Diuision.

Now concerning this Article it selfe, if it may be called an article, wherein M Iewel thinketh to haue great aduantage against vs, as though nothing could be brought for it * (though it be not one of the greatest Keies, nor of the highest mysteries of our Religeon, as he reporteth it to be, the more to deface it) of the Canopie, what may be found, I leaue to others, neither it forceth greatly. But of the hanging vp of the Sacrament ouer the Alter, we find plaine mention in S. Basils life, written by Amphilochius that worthy Bishop of Iconium. Who telleth that S. Basil at his Masse hauing deuided the Sacrament in three parts, did put the one into the golden Doue (after which forme the Pix was then commonly made) hanging ouer the Alter. His words be these: Imposuerunt Columbã auream pendentem super Altare. And for further euidence, that such Pixes made in forme of a Doue in remembrance of the holy Ghost, that appeared like a Doue, were hanged vp ouer the Alter, we find in the Acts of the Generall Councell holden at Constantinople, that the Clergie of Antioch accused one Severus an Heretike, before Iohn the Patriarke and the Councell there, that he had riffled and spoiled the holy Alters, and molted the Consecrated vessels, and had made away with some of them to his companions, Præsumpsisset etiam Columbas aureas, & argenteas in formam Spiritus Sancti, super diuina lauacra, & altaria appensas vna cum alijs sibi appropriare, dicens, non oportere in specie Columbæ Spiritum Sanctum nominare. Which is to say, that he had presumed also to conuert to his owne vse, beside other things, the golden and siluer Doues made to represent the holy Ghost, that were hanged vp ouer the holy Fonts and Alters, saying, that no man ought to speake of the holy Ghost in the shape of a Doue

*Before it was the honoring of God: Now it is no great Key of Religeon.

A vaine childish Fable vnder the name of Amphilochius

Heere be Doues indeed: but no mention of any Sacrament.

Neither hath the Sacrament beene kept in all places, and in all times, in one maner of Vessels. So it bee reuerently kept for the viage prouision for the sicke, no Catholike man will maintaine strife, for the maner and order of keeping. Symmachus a very worthy Bishop of Rome, in the time of Anastasius the Emperor, as it is written in his life, made two vessels of Siluer to reserue the Sacrament in and set them on the Altars of two Churches in Rome, of S. Syluester, and of S. Andrew. These vessels they call commonly, Ciboria. Wee finde likewise in the life of S. Gregory, that hee also like Symmachus made such a Vessel, which they call, Ciborium, for the Sacrament, with foure pillars of pure Siluer, and set it on the Altar at S. Peters in Rome.

In a worke of Gregorius Turonensis, this Vessel is called, Turris in qua Mysterium Dominici Corporis habebatur. A Tower wherein (174) our Lords Body was kept. In an old Booke, De Pœnitentia, of Theodorus the Greeke of Tarsus in Cilicia, sometime Archbishop of Canturbury, before Beda his time, it is called, Pixis cum Corpore Domini ad viaticum pro infirmis: The Pix with our Lords Body for the viage prouision for the sicke. In that booke, in an admonition of a Bishop to his Clergy in a Synod, warning is giuen, that nothing be put vpon the Altar in time of the Sacrfice, but the Coffer of Reliks, the Booke of the foure Euangelists, and the Pix with our Lords Body.

The 174. vntruth, standing in vntrue translation.

Thus we find, that the blessed Sacrament hath alwaies beene kept, in some places in a Pix hanged vp ouer the Altar, in some other places otherwise, euery where, and in all times, safely, and reuerently, as is declared, to be alwaies in a readinesse for the viage prouision of the sicke. Which keeping of it for that godly purpose, and with like due reuerence, if M. Iewel and the Sacramentaries would admit, no man would bee either so scrupulous, or so contentious, as to striue with them either for the hanging vp of it, or for the Canopie

In the fable of Amphilochius, and no where else.

The Bishop of Sarisbury.

It is maruell, that M. Harding, in so short a tale cannot auoid manifest contradiction. He holdeth and teacheth, that this is the honouring of Christ, God, and Man: and yet he saith, saith, It is no great Key of his Religion. Verily, whatsoeuer Key he now make of it, great or small, he bringeth in very small authorities and proues to make it good.

Doue.

